The second of the specific details in the TRC recommendations pertains to the issue of amnesty. A critical trade-off contained in the TRC process was between "normal" judicial processes on the one hand, and establishment of the truth, reparations and amnesty on the other.

Besides the imperatives of managing the transition, an important consideration that had to be addressed when the TRC was set up, was the extent to which the new democratic state could pursue legal cases against perpetrators of human rights violations, given the resources that would have to be allocated to this, the complexities of establishing the facts beyond reasonable doubt, the time it would take to deal with all the cases, as well as the bitterness and instability that such a process would wreak on society.

The balance that the TRC Act struck among these competing demands was reflected in the national consensus around provision of amnesty – in instances where perpetrators had provided the true facts about particular incidents – and restorative justice which would be effected in the form of reparations. Given that a significant number of people did not apply for amnesty, what approach does government place before the national legislature and the nation on this matter?

Let us start off by reiterating that there shall be no general amnesty. Any such approach, whether applied to specific categories of people or regions of the country, would fly in the face of the TRC process and subtract from the principle of accountability which is vital not only in dealing with the past, but also in the creation of a new ethos within our society.

TP

Yet we also have to deal with the reality that many of the participants in the conflict of the past did not take part in the TRC process. Among these are individuals who were misled by their leadership to treat the process with disdain. Others themselves calculated that they would not be found out, either due to poor TRC investigations or what they believed and still believe is too complex a web of concealment for anyone to unravel. Yet other operatives expected the political leadership of the state institutions to which they belonged to provide the overall context against which they could present their cases; and this was not to be.

This reality cannot be avoided.

Government is of the firm conviction that we cannot resolve this matter by setting up yet another amnesty process, which in effect would mean suspending constitutional rights of those who were at the receiving end of gross human right violations.

We have therefore left this matter in the hands of the National Directorate of Public Prosecutions, for it to pursue any cases that, as is normal practice, it believes deserve prosecution and can be prosecuted. This work is continuing.

However, as part of this process and in the national interest, the National Directorate of Public Prosecutions, working with our intelligence agencies, will leave its doors open for those who are prepared to divulge information at their disposal and to co-operate in unearthing the truth, for them to enter into arrangements that are standard in the normal execution of justice, and which are accommodated in our legislation.

This is not a desire for vengeance; nor would it compromise the rights of citizens who may wish to seek justice in our courts.

It is critically important that, as a government, we should continue to establish the truth about networks that operated against the people. This is an obligation that attaches to the nation's security today; for, some of these networks still pose a real or latent danger against our democracy. In some instances, caches of arms have been retained which lend themselves to employment in criminal activity.

This approach leaves open the possibility for individual citizens to take up any grievance related to human rights violations with the courts.

Thirdly, in each instance where any legal arrangements are entered into between the NDPP and particular perpetrators as proposed above, the involvement of the victims will be crucial in determining the appropriate course of action.

Relevant Departments are examining the practical modalities of dealing with this matter; and they will also establish whether specific legislation is required in this regard.

We shall also endeavour to explain South Africa's approach on these matters to sister-governments across the world. Our response to any judicial matters from these countries will be handled in this spirit and through the legal system. In this regard, we wish to reiterate our call to governments that continue to do so, that the maltreatment of former anti-apartheid fighters, based on the legal definitions of an illegal regime characterised by the United Nations as a crime against humanity, should cease.

In the recent past, the issue of litigation and civil suits against corporations that benefited from the apartheid system has sharply arisen. In this regard, we wish to reiterate that the South African Government is not and will not be party to such litigation.

TP

V.P.

In addition, we consider it completely unacceptable that matters that are central to the future of our country should be adjudicated in foreign courts which bear no responsibility for the well-being of our country and the observance of the perspective contained in our constitution of the promotion of national reconciliation.

While Government recognises the right of citizens to institute legal action, its own approach is informed by the desire to involve all South Africans, including corporate citizens, in a co-operative and voluntary partnership to reconstruct and develop South African society. Accordingly, we do not believe that it would be correct for us to impose the once-off wealth tax on corporations proposed by the TRC.

Consultations are continuing with the business community to examine additional ways in which they can contribute to the task of the reconstruction and development of our society, proceeding from the premise that this is in their own self-interest. In addition to intensifying work with regard to such tasks as poverty eradication, and programmes such as Black Economic Empowerment, encouraging better individual corporate social responsibility projects, implementation of equity legislation and the Skills Training Levy, we intend to improve the work of the Business Trust.

In this context, we must emphasise that our response to the TRC has to be integrated within the totality of the enormous effort in which we are engaged, to ensure the fundamental social transformation of our country. This requires that at all times, we attain the necessary balance among the various goals we have to pursue.

The TRC also recommends that what it describes as the beneficiaries of apartheid should also make contributions to a reparation fund. The government believes that all South Africans should make such contributions. In the pursuit of the goal of a non-racial society, in which all South Africans would be inspired by a common patriotism, we believe that we should begin to learn to work together, uniting to address the common national challenges, such as responding to the consequences of the gross violations of human rights of which the TRC was seized.

In this regard, I am certain that members of our government will be among the first to make their contributions to the reparation fund, despite the fact that they stood on one side of the barricades as we engaged in struggle to end the apartheid system.

Many in our country have called for a National Day of Prayer and Traditional Sacrifice to pay tribute to those who sacrificed their lives and suffered during the difficult period of oppression and repression whose legacy remains with us. The government accepts this suggestion and will consult as widely as possible to determine the date and form of such prayer and traditional sacrifice. This is consistent with and would be an appropriate response to the proposals made by the TRC for conferences to heal the memory and honour those who were executed.

We shall also continue to work in partnership with countries of the sub-continent, jointly to take part in the massive reconstruction and development effort that SADC has identified as critical to building a better life for all. The peoples of Southern Africa, including the majority in South Africa endured untold privations and were subjected to destabilisation and destruction of property and infrastructure. They all deserve the speeding up of programmes of integration, reconstruction and development that governments of the region have agreed upon.

Madame Speaker;
The Truth and Reconciliation Commission has made many detailed observations and recommendations on structures and systems, which will be dealt with by relevant Ministers and Departments.

For the purpose of reparations, the government has already established the President's Fund, which is now operational, and has, as we earlier indicated, successfully dealt with the matter of urgent reparations. Like the TRC, we do hope that citizens from all sectors will find it within themselves to make a contribution to this Fund. Most of the resources that have been allocated for individual and community reparations that we referred to above will be sourced from this Fund, over and above the normal work of the relevant Departments.

TP M

V.P

We concur with the TRC that intensive work should be undertaken on the matter of monuments as well as geographic and place names. A Trust with the requisite infrastructure, headed by Mongane Wally Serote has been set up to implement the main project in this regard, which is the construction of the Freedom Park whose constituent parts are the Memorial, the Garden of Remembrance and the Museum. This should start by the tenth anniversary of freedom in 2004.

The National Directorate of Public Prosecutions and relevant Departments will be requested to deal with matters relating to people who were unaccounted for, post mortem records and policy with regard to burials of unidentified persons. We would like to encourage all persons who might have any knowledge of people still unaccounted for to approach the National Directorate of Public Prosecutions, the South African Police Service and other relevant departments.

The Department of Justice and Constitutional Development will monitor the implementation of all these programmes, and it will report to Cabinet on an on-going basis.

What we have identified today, arising out of the report of the TRC, forms part of the panoply of programmes that define the first steps in a journey that has truly begun. South African society is changing for the better. The tide has turned and the people's contract for a better tomorrow is taking shape.
The goals we defined for ourselves a decade ago, as we adopted the Interim Constitution, to pursue national unity, to secure peace and the well-being of all South African citizens, to achieve national reconciliation and the reconstruction of our society, have not fully been realised, despite the progress we have made.

The situation we face demands that none of us should succumb to the false comfort that now we live in a normal society that has overcome the legacy of the past, and which permits us to consider our social tasks as mere business as usual.

Rather, it demands that we continue to be inspired by the determination and vision that enabled us to achieve the transition from apartheid rule to a democratic order in the manner that we did. It demands that we act together as one people to address what are truly national tasks.

We have to ask ourselves and honestly answer simple questions.
Have we succeeded to create a non-racial society! The answer to this question is no!
Have we succeeded to build a non-sexist society! The answer to that question is no!
Have we succeeded to eradicate poverty! Once more the answer to that question is no!
Have we succeeded fully to address the needs of the most vulnerable in our society, the children, the youth, people with disabilities and the elderly! Once again the answer to this question is no!

Without all this, it is impossible for us to claim that we have met our goals of national reconciliation and reconstruction and development. It is not possible for us to make the assertion that we have secured the well-being of all South African citizens.

The road we have travelled and the advances we have made convey the firm message that we are moving towards the accomplishment of the objectives we set ourselves. They tell us that, in the end, however long the road we still have to travel, we will win.

In the larger sense, we were all victims of the system of apartheid, both black and white. Some among us suffered because of oppression, exploitation, repression and exclusion. Others among us suffered because we were imprisoned behind prison walls of fear, paralysed by inhuman beliefs in our racial superiority, and called upon to despise and abuse other human beings. Those who do such things cannot but diminish their own humanity.

TP

V.P.

To be true to ourselves as human beings demands that we act together to overcome the legacy of this common and terrible past. It demands that we do indeed enter into a people's contract for a better tomorrow,

Together we must confront the challenge of steering through a complex transition that demands that we manage the historical fault-lines, without papering over the cracks, moved by a new and common patriotism.

It says to all of us that we must honour those who shed their blood so that we can sit together in this Chamber by doing all the things that will make it possible for us to say, this South Africa that we have rebuilt together, truly belongs to all who live in it.

I am honoured to commend the Report of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission to our National Houses of Parliament and the nation.

Thank you.

VPP 2

MINISTRY: JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT
REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA

Private Bag X276 Pretoria 0001 Tel: (012) 315 1761/2/3 Fax: (012) 315 1748
Private Bag X258 Cape Town 8000 Tel: (021) 467 1700 Fax: (021) 467 1750

Adv Vusi Pikoli
National Director of Public Prosecutions
Private Bag X752
PRETORIA
0001

8 February 2007

Dear Adv Pikoli

RE: TRC MATTERS

Our discussion in the above matter on Tuesday 6 February 2007 refers.

I must advise you at the outset that the media articles alleging that the National Prosecuting Authority will go ahead with prosecutions have caught me by surprise. In our discussions you briefly mentioned to me that the NPA will not be going ahead with the prosecutions. As you had undertaken to advise me in writing, I will appreciate it if you could advise me urgently on the matter so that there can be certainty.

I trust that you find the above in order.

With warm regards

MRS B S MABANDLA MINISTER

NATIONAL DIRECTOR
9/2/07
NATIONAL PROSECUTING AUTHORITY

V.P

VPP 3

News24 archives
Breaking News First

Cops up for apartheid crimes

2007-02-07 07:15

Jan-Jan Joubert and Willem Jordaan

Cape Town - The national prosecuting authority (NPA) has informed three security policemen that they are to be prosecuted for apartheid crimes.

These will be the first prosecutions since the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC).

The case is related to attempts to poison the Rev Frank Chikane, who is now the director-general of the presidency.

Beeld has the names of the three security police officers and has established that they have been informed by their legal representative that the NPA intends to go ahead with prosecutions.

The move paves the way for prosecution of former minister of law and order Adriaan Vlok and former chief of police General Johan van der Merwe, who are both fully aware of, and prepared for, what will follow, according to sources.

Address to the nation

The NPA did not want to confirm or deny that the prosecutions were to begin.

In political circles, speculation is rife that the planned prosecutions could open a hornet's nest in the week of President Thabo Mbeki's address to the nation.

The question of prosecuting apartheid-era crimes is politically loaded, as some believe that they're necessary to conclude the TRC process, while others feel they could destroy reconciliation.

It appears that members of the latter group could use high-level political pressure to try to prevent prosecutions.

In terms of policy and the constitution, the decision to prosecute lies with the national director of prosecutions, advocate Vusi Pikoli, and not with the government.

Questions already have been asked in high circles about the equanimity of the NPA, and if well-known African National Congress figures who did not get amnesty, would be prosecuted.

One of the ANC members whose amnesty application was turned down was Thabo Mbeki, who applied with a number of other ANC members.

Vlok was in the news recently when he washed Chikane's feet to atone for the attempt to poison him while he was general secretary of the South African Council of Churches.

The three security policemen were connected to the same plot to kill Chikane.

Vlok's step was lauded last year by Mbeki, who added that South Africans should learn to listen more closely to each other across the boundaries of apartheid.

Vlok did not want to respond to rumours that he could be prosecuted. Van der Merwe also remained silent.

V.P.

Johan Wagener, legal representative of the three security policemen, said the NPA informed him of their decision at the end of last month.

He did not want to comment on any particulars.

The latest events follow the tabling in parliament last January of a new prosecution policy on apartheid crimes, among other things.

The victim has a say

It includes a clause that gives the NPA discretion on whether or not to prosecute, if it is not in "the national interest".

One of the factors that must be taken into account is whether the apartheid victim wants the prosecution to go ahead.

In Chikane's case, he has indicated that he is not interested in prosecution, but that he wants full disclosure on the attempt on his life.

He has also indicated that the government is not interested in time-consuming prosecutions.

The NPA has indicated, nevertheless, that prosecution will go ahead.

Beeld

VPP 4

Dossiere oor leiers se vergrype lê al jare in kluis ANC-lêers 'verdwyn'

Sonja CarstensPretoria

Die polisie het nog niks gedoen om meer bewyse en getuienis te kry vir die moontlike vervolging van 37 destydse leiers van die ANC aan wie amnestie vir apartheidsmisdade geweier is nie.
Rapport het die afgelope week uit onberispelike bronne verneem die polisiedossiere wat twee afgetrede polisielede vroeër saamgestel het, is al jare toegesluit by die hoofkantoor van die polisie se speurdienste. Die bronne se name word op versoek verswyg weens die sensitiewe poste wat hulle beklee.
Volgens die bronne is geen verdere ondersoekwerk na die inligting in die dossiere gedoen nie.
Die dossiere is vroeër verwyder uit 'n kluis in die kantore van die direkteur van openbare vervolgings (DOV) in Pretoria waar adv. Paul Fick, SC, hoof van die vervolgingspan wat die vermeende Boeremaglede aankla, die hoof was van 'n span wat verder ondersoek ingestel het met die oog op moontlike vervolging.
Die nasionale vervolgingsgesag (NV) het die ondersoeke jare gelede weggeneem van Fick. Hy wou die afgelope week glad nie op vrae reageer nie.
Rapport verneem sedert dit uit Fick se kantoor verwyder is, is dit toevertrou aan 'n span by die NV wat dit verder moes ondersoek, maar wat weinig aan die ondersoeke gedoen het.
Hierna is adv. Anton Ackermann, SC, in Junie 2003 aangestel as hoof van 'n eenheid wat onder meer misdade teen die staat moes ondersoek. Ackermann was die aanklaer in die Vlok-Van der Merwe-verhoor.
Genl. Johan van der Merwe, voormalige polisiehoof, het Vrydag gesê "oorgenoeg getuienis" bestaan teen die ANC-leierskorps oor hul betrokkenheid by die landmynontploffing in 1995 waarin verskeie lede van die Van Eck- en De Necker-gesin gesterf het.
In Junie 2004 het mnr. Sipho Ngwema, destydse woordvoerder van die NV, gesê nie een van die 37 leiers, onder wie pres. Thabo Mbeki, mnr. Jacob Zuma, komm. Jackie Selebi, polisiehoof, mnr. Linda Mti, vorige kommissaris van korrektiewe dienste, en min. Essop Pahad kan vervolg word nie omdat "daar eenvoudig nie genoeg getuienis is om 'n klagstaat op te stel nie".
Ngwema het destyds gesê die NV weet nie wié het wát gedoen of wie die opdragte gegee het nie.
"Indien die NV dit met die getuienis tot sy beskikking sou doen, is dit net so goed die vervolger besluit oudpres. PW Botha of oudpres. FW de Klerk moet teregstaan weens voorvalle in die apartheidsjare waarvoor niemand anders verantwoordelikheid aanvaar het nie," was Ngwema se woorde.
Mnr. Dirk van Eck het reeds aangedui hy is gereed om 'n klag in te dien teen ANC-leiers wat nie amnestie ontvang het nie vir die aanval wat meer as die helfte van sy gesin uitgewis het.
Die politieke omstredenheid oor vervolgings vir misdade uit die verlede sal uitbrei as die NV 'n vervolging instel teen genl. Basie Smit, 'n voormalige hoof van die polisie se speur- en veiligheidstak.
Een van die klousules in Vlok en Van der Merwe se pleitooreenkoms dwing hulle om in 'n moontlike verhoor teen Smit te getuig.
Rapport verneem Ackermann het vroeër skriftelik opdrag gegee dat die polisie nog getuienis in die ondersoeke na die ANC-leiers moet versamel met die oog op moontlike vervolging. Maar die afgelope week het die polisie geweier om te sê of die opdrag nagekom is en wat die vordering daarmee is.
Dir. Sally de Beer, Selebi se woordvoerder, het navrae na dir. Phuti Setati, woordvoerder van nasionale speurdiens, verwys.
"Die polisie wil sy kommentaar oor die saak voorbehou," het Setati gesê.

TP

scarstenss@rapport.co.za
) Vlok en Van der Merwe vra Mbeki en De Klerk om in te gryp – bl. 14

Google translate:

Dossiers on leaders' abuses lay for years in safe ANC files' disappear '
Sonja CarstensPretoria

The police have done nothing to get more evidence and testimony for the possible prosecution of 37 former leaders of the ANC who amnesty for apartheid crimes were refused.
Report this week from impeccable sources learned that the police dockets that two retired police officers have made earlier, for years locked up at the headquarters of the police's detective services.
The sources' names are withheld at the request because of the sensitive positions that they hold.
According to the sources, no further investigation into the information taken in the case files.
The dossiers were earlier removed from a safe in the office of the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP) in Pretoria Advocate. Paul Fick, SC, head of the prosecution team who accuse the alleged Boer force members, the head of a team that further investigation instituted with a view to possible prosecution.
The National Prosecuting Authority (NPA) has taken the examinations years ago Fick. He wanted the past week did not respond at all to questions.
Butchery since it was removed from Fick's office, it was entrusted to a team at the NA that it had investigated further, but that did little to investigations.
After this, Adv. Anton Ackermann, SC, was appointed in June 2003 as head of a unit that had investigated include crimes against the state. Ackermann was the prosecutor in the Vlok Van der Merwe trial.
Gen. Johan van der Merwe, a former police chief, said Friday "ample evidence" exists against the ANC leadership over their involvement in the landmine explosion in 1995 in which several members of the Van Eck- and the Necker family died.
In June 2004, Mr. Sipho Ngwema former spokesperson of the NPA, said none of the 37 leaders, including President. Thabo Mbeki, Mr. Jacob Zuma, Comm. Jackie Selebi, the police chief, Mr. Linda Mti, former commissioner of correctional services, and more. Essop Pahad can be prosecuted because "there is simply not enough evidence for an indictment to prepare,".
Ngwema said then that the NPA do not know who has what or who did not give the orders.
"If the SA would do this with the evidence at its disposal, it is as well the prosecutor decides former president. PW Botha or former president. FW de Klerk arraigned because of incidents in the apartheid years for which no one has accepted responsibility, "was Ngwema's words.
Mr. Dirk van Eck has indicated he is ready to file a complaint against ANC leaders not yet received amnesty for the attack that wiped out more than half of his family.
The political controversy over prosecutions for crimes of the past will expand as the NPA a prosecution against Gen. institute. Basie Smit, a former head of the police detective and security branch. One of the clauses of Vlok and Van der Merwe's plea agreement forcing them into a possible trial to testify against Smith.
Butchery Ackermann had earlier instructed in writing that the police have evidence in the investigation of the ANC leaders have gathered with a view to possible prosecution. But last week, the police refused to say whether the assignment is carried out and the progress it.
Dir. Sally de Beer, Selebi's spokesperson, referred questions to Dir. Phuti RAF spokesman national detective refers.
"The police want his comments on the case reserved," the RAF said.
scarstenss@rapport.co.za
) Vlok and Van der Merwe asked Mbeki and De Klerk to intervene - p. 14

http://www.gov.za/national-prosecuting-authority-rapport-article-ackermann

National Prosecuting Authority on Rapport article on A Ackermann

21 Aug 2007

Response to article in rapport
21 August 2007

With reference to the statements attributed to Anton Ackermann SC in the rapport of 19 August 2007, the National Prosecuting Authority (NPA) wishes to place on record the following:

* In May 2004, Bulelani Ngcuka, the then National Director of Public Prosecutions, declined to prosecute the African National Congress (ANC) leadership in connection with the conflicts of the past. A press statement confirming this was released on 15 May 2004.
* Since that press release the National Prosecuting Authority and in particular Ackermann has not directed any further investigation into this matter.
* Subsequent to the media report by the Rapport on 19 August 2007, and on request by the National Prosecuting Authority, the South African Police Service (SAPS) provided a copy of letter purporting to be written by Ackermann on 26 June 2006, to the National Prosecuting Authority. The NPA regards this letter as a forgery and has authorised an immediate investigation into the matter.

Contact person:
Tlali Tlali
Cell: 082 333 3880

v.f

TP

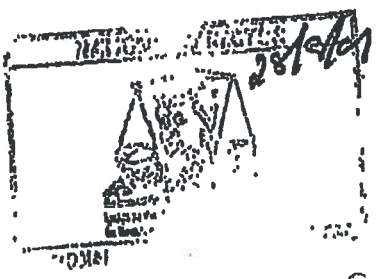
MINISTRY
JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT
REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA
Private Bag X 276, Pretoria, 0001, Tel (012) 315 1535, Fax (012) 315 1748
Private Bag X 256, Cape Town, 8000, Tel (021) 467 1700, Fax (021) 467 1750

Our ref: 2/3/6
Enq: Adv. M Sibiselane

Adv V P Pikoli
National Director of Public Prosecutions
Office of the National Director of Public Prosecutions
Private Bag X 752
PRETORIA
0001

Dear Adv Pikoli

MEETING OF THE SUB COMMITTEE OF THE JCPS CABINET COMMITTEE ON POST TRC MATTERS



1. I refer to the discussions in the above meeting of 23 August 2007.
2. You will recall that both you and the National Commissioner, Mr. J Selebi, provided the sub-committee with different facts on the Rapport article regarding an alleged forgery of certain NPA documents.
3. You further confirmed that you have instituted a thorough investigation into the alleged forgery. I was however not advised of this decision and the basis thereof.
4. In the course of the discussion, it became clear that Mr. J Selebi was of the view that there is no truth in the Rapport article, and he produced documents to support his argument that indeed there is an investigation by the NPA on certain political office bearers.
5. It was suggested at the meeting then that it would be useful if you could respond to the allegation that there is an investigation as mentioned above.

Your urgent response would be highly appreciated. Any information that could shed light to the issues will also be welcome.

I trust that you find the above in order.

Yours sincerely

MS B S MABANDLA, MP
Minister for Justice and Constitutional Development
Date: 28.08.07

TP

V.P.

VPP7

Ref: NDPP/kp

Minister B. Mabandla
Minister of Justice and Constitutional Development Momentum Building cnr Prinsloo and Pretorius Streets
PRETORIA

29 August 2007

Dear Minister

MEETING OF THE SUB-COMMITTEE OF THE JCPS CABINET COMMITTEE ON POST TRC MATTERS

1. I refer to your fax of 28 August 2007.

2. I refer to the meeting of the sub-committee of 23 August 2007, which I considered to be most unpleasant. Despite the information I put before the committee, I am both surprised and disappointed to see that I now stand accused of misleading alternatively having lied to the sub-committee members.

3. I confirm that I stand by what I said about the National Commissioner of Police and the South African Police Service (SAPS).

4. I confirm and repeat the following:

4.1 That I have instructed that an investigation be carried out in respect of the forgery of the memo by Adv. Ackermann SC.

4.2 As borne by the attached annexure and the numerous communications to the Minister, there is no investigation by the NPA or any of its officials against the 37 ANC leaders including the President of this country, contrary to the assertions of the National Commissioner of Police. I give the Minister the assurance that no investigations or decisions to prosecute in these matters are done without my express authorization as per the prosecution guidelines as they pertain to the post TRC matters.

5. While I am not certain as to what the meaning of paragraph 4 of your letter is, it is, however, clear that my account of the position as it relates to the NPA's handling of the post TRC matters has been completely ignored.

6. Arising from allegations made by two police officers, as well as a threat by a lawyer representing former Security Branch members who were facing prosecution, my predecessor had the material relating to the ANC leadership perused and satisfied himself that there was no basis for the leadership to be investigated. He also briefed your predecessor, as well as members of the Office of the Presidency to this effect. In my presence and in my capacity as the then Director General of the Department of Justice & Constitutional Development, all the police dockets stored at the Office of the Director of Prosecutions: Pretoria were handed over to the police. These events all took place in early and mid-2004. I confirm as well that the Minister was made aware of all these facts as far back as December 2004 and I am surprised that this issue is now resurfacing.

7. In view of all that is transpiring now, I request an urgent meeting with the Minister, my Deputies and myself. Further, I request an opportunity to appear before the National Security Council to give a true account of this issue.

Kind regards

Adv. VP Pikoli
National Director of Public Prosecutions
Date:

V.P.

TP

"TN8"
217

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA
GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

Case Number:

In the matter between:

THEMBISILE PHUMELELE NKADIMENG	Applicant
And
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	First Respondent
THE NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE	Second Respondent
THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CORRECTIONAL SERVICES	Third Respondent
THE NATIONAL MINISTER OF POLICE	Fourth Respondent
WILLEM HELM COETZEE	Fifth Respondent
ANTON PRETORIUS	Sixth Respondent
FREDERICK BARNARD MONG	Seventh Respondent
MSEBENZI TIMOTHY RADEBE	Eighth Respondent

TP

WILLEM SCHOON Ninth Respondent

AFFIDAVIT

I, the undersigned

ANTON ROSSOUW ACKERMANN

state under oath as follows:

INTRODUCTION

1. I am a senior counsel, a former Special Director of Public Prosecutions in the Office of the National Director of Public Prosecutions (the first respondent in this matter, hereinafter referred to as the "first respondent" or the "NDPP"). I am currently retired.

2. In terms of section 13(1)(c) of the National Prosecuting Act No. 32 of 1998 ("the Act") I was appointed by President T M Mbeki, under a Presidential Proclamation dated 24 March 2003, to head the Priority Crimes Litigation Unit ("PCLU"). A copy of this proclamation is annexed to the founding affidavit marked "TN28". I served as head of the PCLU between 2003 and 31 March 2013. I retired from the National Prosecuting Authority on 31 March 2013.

TP 9

3. Save where appears from the context, the facts contained in this affidavit are within my own personal knowledge and are to the best of my knowledge and belief both true and correct. As I have not studied all the relevant official documentation I stand to be corrected on certain details, such as dates.

4. I depose to this affidavit at the request of the applicant's legal representatives and in order to ensure that all the relevant facts are placed before this Court.

EXPERIENCE

5. I have worked as a prosecutor for more than 40 years. I have prosecuted several high profile cases in South Africa. I set out hereunder an outline of my professional career:

5.1. Joined the Department of Justice in 1970.

5.2. Graduated from the University of Potchefstroom with the degrees of B Juris and LLB in 1975.

5.3. Admitted as an advocate in 1976.

5.4. Served with the office of the Attorney-General in Pietermaritzburg between 1977 and 1989.

5.5. Appointed Deputy Attorney General: Transvaal in 1989 and served in this post until 2003.

TP 87

5.6. Senior Counsel status was conferred on me in 1993.

5.7. Appointed head of the Priority Crimes Litigation Unit (PCLU) in March 2003.

5.8. I retired in 2013.

CONFIRMATION

6. I confirm the contents of the founding affidavit of Thembisile Phumelele Nkadimeng ("the applicant") and the supporting affidavit of Vusumzi Patrick Pikoli insofar as they relate to me.

7. Although I was not specifically aware of an official policy or decision to stop, obstruct or hold back the investigation and possible prosecution of the cases recommended for prosecution by the Truth and Reconciliation Commission ("TRC"), including the kidnapping, assault and murder of Nokuthula Aurelia Simelane, ("Nokuthula") in the case: Priority Investigation: JV Plein: 1469/02/1996, I can confirm that I was effectively stopped from pursuing the investigation and prosecution of the so-called political cases arising from South Africa's past ("the TRC cases").

8. In this affidavit I set out my experiences in trying to pursue the prosecution of the TRC cases and how I was effectively stopped from carrying out this work.

BACKGROUND

9. If my memory serves me correctly, in 1998 the investigation dockets held by the Unit headed up by Transvaal Attorney General Dr. Jan D'Oliveira Unit were transferred to the National Prosecuting Authority ("NPA"). In terms of a directive issued in 1999 by the then National Director of Public Prosecutions ("NDPP"), the TRC related cases were transferred from the then Directorate of Special Operations ("DSO"), and from the various offices of the Directors of Public Prosecutions ("DPP") and the South African Police Service ("SAPS") to the office of the NDPP.

10. In 1999, a working group called the Human Rights Investigative Unit ("HRIU") was established within the NPA by the then National Director of Public Prosecutions ("NDPP"), Bulelani Ngcuka, on the initiative of the then Minister of Justice, Dullah Omar. The head of the Unit was Vincent Saldanha. It was mandated to review, investigate and prosecute cases in which perpetrators had been denied amnesty or in which perpetrators had not applied for amnesty. The HRIU continued operations until 2000, however it instituted no prosecutions.

11. In 2000, the dockets held by the HRIU were transferred to the Directorate of Special Operations ("DSO"), more widely known as the Scorpions. An entity was established within the DSO to handle the TRC cases known as the Special National Projects Unit ("SNPU"), which was headed by Advocate Chris Macadam. The SNPU operated until 2003, but it too instituted no prosecutions.

12. On 24 March 2003 I was appointed to head up the newly established PCLU. The mandate of the PCLU is to manage and direct investigations and prosecutions in relation to various priority crimes, including serious national and international crimes, such as terrorism, sabotage, high treason, sedition, foreign military crimes and other priority crimes as determined by the NDPP.

13. On 15 April 2003, the TRC Report was tabled before Parliament by President Thabo Mbeki who directed that the NDPP must institute prosecutions where appropriate.

14. In May 2003 the then NDPP, Advocate Bulelani Ngcuka, made a determination that all TRC-related cases, in which amnesty had been denied or not applied for, were 'priority crimes' in terms of the proclamation. This resulted in more than 400 investigation dockets being transferred to my office. Advocate Chris Macadam, attached to my office, and I conducted the initial audit and identified 21 cases as worthy of further investigation.

15. During 2004 and 2005 the PCLU identified 16 cases for further investigation and possible prosecution. The Simelane case was one of the cases earmarked for further investigation.

TP

16. In relation to post-TRC prosecutions conducted by the PCLU, only the following cases have been instituted: S v Terre'blanche, S v Blani and S v Nieuwoudt & 2 Others.

16.1. In 2003, the late Eugene Terre' Blanche, former leader of the Afrikaner Weerstandsbeweging, (Afrikaner Resistance Movement), who had been charged with various acts of terrorism during the 1990s, entered into a 'plea agreement' with the PCLU in terms of 105A of the Criminal Procedure Act. Terre' Blanche pleaded guilty to five counts of terrorism in contravention of the Internal Security Act and was sentenced to six years of imprisonment, which was wholly suspended. He had not applied for amnesty. This was the first TRC related case taken up by the PCLU.

16.2. During 2004 I came across the docket of Buyile Roni Blani, an ANC member, who was implicated in the mob killing of two people in 1985. Blani was charged with the killings in 1985 but managed to flee to Angola where he remained in exile until his return in 1992. He did not apply for amnesty. Since the evidence was clear and compelling and the case was already fully investigated I instructed that it should proceed. Blani was arrested and granted bail. On 25 April 2005, following a plea and sentence agreement, he was convicted on all charges and sentenced to five years imprisonment, four of which were suspended for five years.

TP

16.3. In 2004, Gideon Nieuwoudt (who died in 2005), Johannes Martin van Zyl, and Johannes Koole were each charged with abduction, assault and murder of the 3 anti-apartheid activists, known as the PEBCO 3.

16.3.1. This was the first case that the PCLU brought in respect of perpetrators who had been denied amnesty. Their applications for amnesty had been denied in 1999.

16.3.2. Shortly after their bail hearings in 2004, Nieuwoudt and van Zyl applied to court to review the decisions to refuse them amnesty. The review was delayed by some 5 years because of the failure of the Department of Justice to file its answering papers. Eventually in 2009 the High Court ruled that an Amnesty Committee be convened to rehear the application of van Zyl.

16.3.3. The case against the three former security policemen was provisionally withdrawn in 2009. The NPA submitted to the High Court that the prosecution could not proceed while there was an amnesty proceeding pending. The Department of Justice filed an affidavit recommending the provisional withdrawal of the criminal charges against the surviving Johannes Koole, and Martin Van Zyl, who was seriously ill. The Amnesty Committee was never reconvened and the case against Van Zyl and Koole was never reinstated.

17. On the morning of 11 November 2004 the police was on the verge of effecting the arrests of three former officers of the Security Police on charges which related to the attempted murder of the Rev. Frank Chikane, the former head of the South African Council of Churches in 1989 by poisoning. The three former policemen were former Major-General Christoffel Smith, Colonels Gert Otto and Johannes 'Manie' van Staden. None had applied for amnesty for this crime.

17.1. On the same morning I received a phone call from Jan Wagenaar, the attorney for the abovenamed suspects. He told me that I would receive a phone call from the Ministry of Justice and I would be advised that the case against his clients must be placed on hold.

17.2. Shortly thereafter I received a phone call from an official in the then Ministry of Justice. I was informed by the said official that a decision had been taken that the Chikane matter should be put on hold pending the development of guidelines to deal with the TRC cases. I told him that that only the NDPP could give me such an instruction.

17.3. A few minutes later the NDPP contacted me and instructed me not to proceed with the arrests. I believe that it can be safely assumed that the NDPP was instructed at a political level to suspend these cases.

18. All TRC related investigations and prosecutions were accordingly placed on hold pending the formulation of guidelines in relation to the so-called political cases of the past. These were to be incorporated as amendments to the Prosecution Policy (hereinafter referred to as "the amendments" or "the guidelines"). I was instructed by the NDPP to stop working on all the TRC cases.

19. At least two legal opinions were prepared by my office regarding the constitutionality of the proposed amendments to the Prosecution Policy and submitted to the NDPP. The opinions pointed out that the amendments amounted to a rerun of the TRC's amnesty process and would not survive constitutional scrutiny. At a number of meetings I voiced my opposition to the proposed amendments. I recall that I had numerous consultations with Gerard Nel, the legal adviser to the NDPP, who was playing a leading role in formulating the proposed amendments.

20. This suspension of prosecutions amounted to an effective moratorium on the pursuit of TRC related cases.

21. During 2005 I met with representatives of the Simelane family. They raised a number of requests, including that the PCLU should:

TP

21.1. Investigate with a view to prosecuting Detective Inspector Msebenzi Timothy Radebe, who played a role in the abduction and the torture of Simelane both at Norwood and Northham and who did not apply for amnesty.

21.2. Investigate with a view to bringing defeating the ends of justice charges against Coetzee and Pretorius for intimidating the late Sergeant Lengene into making a false statement and for attempting to coach Norman Mkhonza into making a false statement.

21.3. Follow up on the results of the examination of the micro cassette tape containing the conversation between Scotch, Pretorius and Coetzee; and follow up on the request for lists of unidentified bodies received by police mortuaries between 1980 and 1996.

21.4. Investigate the circumstances of the deaths of two key witnesses, Sergeant Mathibe and Sergeant Lengene.

22. I was not able to assist with these requests as at that stage my hands were tied with the effective moratorium in place pending the issuing of the new Prosecution Policy.

23. In December 2005 the amendments to the Prosecution Policy were issued. These amendments permitted the granting of effective indemnities to perpetrators in TRC related cases who did not make use of the erstwhile amnesty process.

23.1. The NDPP was authorised to apply the same amnesty criteria used by the TRC but could also decline to prosecute on other open-ended criteria such as the perpetrator's demonstration of remorse, level of indoctrination sustained, attitude towards reconciliation and/ or his willingness to abide by the Constitution.

23.2. These criteria would entitle the NDPP to decline to prosecute, even where there was adequate evidence to justify a prosecution in a serious case such as kidnapping or murder.

23.3. The PCLU was expected to act under the advisement of a multi-departmental committee which included the National Intelligence Agency and the South African Police Service. The entire process would be carried out behind closed doors.

24. As mentioned above, I was opposed to the amendments to the Prosecution Policy as I felt they violated the constitutional rights of the complainants and constituted unwarranted interference in the prosecutorial independence of the NPA. I again expressed my dissatisfaction with various officials, including the NDPP. In my view the amendments or guidelines were aimed solely at accommodating perpetrators and providing them with another avenue to escape justice.

25. Once the guidelines were issued in December 2005 I wanted to proceed with the 5 cases I had identified with good prosecution prospects and the 11 cases which required further investigation. These were identified as "major priorities" for the PCLU for the 2006 – 07 period. Moreover a press statement issued by the NDPP during 2006 led to additional requests from victims for further investigations in their cases. However, with the exception of the Chikane matter, during the course of 2006 and 2007, the PCLU was unable to pursue any of the TRC cases for various reasons. These included a lack of investigative capacity as well as difficulties encountered in convening the multi-departmental committee that was meant to advise the PCLU on what cases to pursue.

26. In March 2006 I again met with the representatives of the Simelane family. I had to advise them that I was unable to take the investigation forward as there were no investigators attached to the PCLU. Requests I had made to the SAPS and the DSO for competent and experiences investigators, in this matter and the other TRC cases, had fallen on deaf ears. The said representatives also supplied me with a legal opinion which recommended that those involved in the torture of Ms. Simelane be charged with torture, as a crime against humanity or war crime, in terms of customary international law, since such crimes never prescribe.

27. As a result of this meeting the said representatives wrote to the then NDPP, Adv.

Pikoli, requesting him to reach out to the SAPS and the DSO in order to secure competent investigators for the PCLU as a matter of urgency. These efforts were not successful. In subsequent interactions I advised the said representatives to pursue an inquest rather than a prosecution. I did so because I realized that there was no prospect of a serious investigation or prosecution taking place in the political context that prevailed at the time.

28. During 2006 the then NDPP, Adv Pikoli, appointed a team to review the representations made by the suspects in the Chikane matter who were seeking an indemnity under the amendments to the Prosecution Policy. The team was chaired by Dr. T. Pretorius. I refused to participate in this review as I regarded the said amendments as unconstitutional. After several months the review team concluded that no indemnities should be granted as the full truth had not been disclosed.

29. During 2007 the PCLU eventually returned to the Chikane attempted murder case and in June 2007 the three suspects, together with Adriaan Vlok, former Minister of Police, and Johan van der Merwe, former Commissioner of Police were charged with one count of attempted murder, alternatively conspiracy to murder Chikane. A plea and sentence agreement was agreed upon which the Court confirmed during August 2007. In terms of the plea and sentence agreement the accused all pleaded guilty to the charge of attempted murder. Vlok and van der Merwe were sentenced to ten years imprisonment, wholly suspended for five years on the condition that they are not convicted of a similar crime. Otto, Smith and van Staden were sentenced to five years imprisonment, wholly suspended for five years on the condition that that they are not convicted of a similar crime.

TP

30. This case ought to have opened the door to the prosecution of General Basie Smit, who succeeded Van der Merwe as Commander of the Security Branch in October 1988, as well as other senior officers of the both the SAPS and the former South African Defence Force (SADF). However no further cases were pursued which can be attributed to political interference in the work of the NPA.

31. In 2008 the High Court in Pretoria (Nkadimeng & Others v The National Director of Public Prosecutions & Others, TPD case no 32709/07) struck down the amendments to the Prosecution Policy as unconstitutional. The Court found that the amendments were a "copy-cat" of the TRC amnesty process; that many of the criteria were not relevant in deciding whether or not to prosecute; and that they were moreover "a recipe for conflict and absurdity".

POLITICAL INTERFERENCE

32. The first act of political interference which effectively stopped the work of the PCLU into the TRC cases was the suspension of such cases during 2004 pending the issuing of the new prosecution guidelines. This introduced the effective moratorium I referred to above.

TP

33. Once the guidelines had been issued, and the multi-departmental working committee (subsequently referred to as the Task Team) was established in 2006, it became clear that the SAPS and NIA representatives believed they were part of the prosecutorial decision making process.

33.1. On 6 December 2006, the PCLU received a letter from the head of the SAPS Legal Support section, Major General P C Jacobs, representing the view of the National Commissioner, which indicated that before any prosecutorial decision was made in respect of the TRC cases, the Task Team must submit a final recommendation to a Committee of Directors General in respect of each case, which in turn must advise the NDPP in respect of who to prosecute or not.

33.2. In respect of the interactions between the NDPP and other government departments and officials, I refer to the affidavit of Adv. Pikoli, which is filed evenly herewith.

34. The NDPP objected to this approach on the basis that it would constitute an unwarranted interference in the work of the NPA. The NDPP would be obliged to wait for the process to be completed and to receive a recommendation before he could make a decision, even where there were reasonable prospects of a successful prosecution.

TP

35. During 2007 an office note, purportedly written by me in 2006, was circulated in certain government circles in which it was reflected that I was investigating criminal charges against 37 ANC leaders, including the then President, Thabo Mbeki. This office note was a fabrication. I had written this office note in 2003 but the date of the note had been adjusted to give the false impression that it had been compiled in 2006. I believe it was aimed at discrediting me and ultimately stopping the investigations into the TRC cases. I am firmly of the view that the then National Commissioner, the late Mr. J Selebi, played a conspicuous role in claiming that I was pursuing the said leaders.

36. During this time I was informed by Adv. Pikoli that the then Director-General of the Department of Justice, Menze Simelane, had approached him and raised concerns about my handling of the prosecution of the TRC cases. He asked the NDPP to relieve me of my duties in this regard, which the NDPP declined to do. The NDPP advised me that senior people in the government wanted to fire me because I was still pursuing the TRC cases.

37. Adv. Vusi Pikoli was suspended from his duties as NDPP in September 2007. Shortly after his suspension I was summoned to the office of Adv. Mokotedi Mpshe, then acting NDPP. Adv. Mpshe advised me that I was relieved of my duties in relation to the TRC cases with immediate effect. I have no doubt that Adv. Mpshe received a political instruction to remove me from these cases. I advised Adv. Mpshe that removing me from the TRC cases would not make the cases go away.

TP

38. At the time, I believed that if I was being removed from the TRC cases, then nobody else would be permitted to pursue the cases boldly and fearlessly. It is no coincidence that there has not been a single further prosecution since I was relieved of my duties in this regard.

CONCLUSION

39. There is little doubt in my mind that the investigation and prosecution of the TRC cases have been effectively stopped by machinations that took place at a level above that of the NPA. Such interference serves to explain why the Simelane matter, as well the bulk of the TRC cases, have not been seriously investigated or prosecuted.

40. In so doing the rule of law has been undermined and a deep injustice has been committed against the family of the late Nokuthula Simelane, as well as the families of other victims of apartheid era crimes.

TP

A R ACKERMANN

I hereby certify that the deponent has acknowledged that he knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was signed and sworn to before me, Commissioner of Oaths, at PRETORIA on this the 07th day of MAY 2015 the regulations contained in Government Notice No R1258 of 21 July 1972, as amended, and Government Notice No R1648 of 19 August 1977, as amended, having been complied with.

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

"I certify that the DEPONENT has acknowledged that he/she knows and understands the contents of his affidavit, that he/she does not have an objection to taking the oath, and that he/she considers it to be binding on his/hers conscience, and which was sworn to and signed before me and that the administering oath complied with the regulations contained in Government Gazette No. R 1258 of 21 July 1972, as amended

SIGNATURE
Commissioner of Oaths

MAHMO FOSCH
FULL NAMES

Designation: Ex officio: Republic of South Africa Date: 07/05/2015

Place: WITBANK Business Adress: WOODMAN POST OFFICE

TP

"TN 9"

236

June 24, 1999

AMNESTY HEARING - WILLEM SCHOON

The Amnesty Committee of the TRC is to hear amnesty applications of Brigadier Willem Schoon - a part heard matter, on the abduction of Nokuthula Simelane, an ANC activist from Swaziland in 1982.

Four applicants, Willem Coetzee, Norman Mkhonza, Frederick Mong, Frederick Williams, Nomrod Veyi, Jacobus Ross with the exception of Lazarus Selamolela have already testified before the committee in May.

Peter Lengene who had applied for amnesty died three months ago. All the seven applicants were members of the Soweto Special Branch Unit under Coetzee.

They are applying for their role in the infiltration and killing of ANC underground activists in Soweto in the early eighties.

The Schoon hearing will take place on June 28, 1999 in Pretoria at the Idasa Center, cnr Visagie and Prinsloo Street.

For more information call Mbulelo Sompeta : 082 452 7870.

TP 9

237

AC/2001/185

TRUTH AND RECONCILIATION COMMISSION

AMNESTY COMMITTEE

APPLICATION IN TERMS OF SECTION 18 OF THE PROMOTION OF NATIONAL UNITY AND RECONCILIATION ACT, NO.34 OF 1995.

W H COETZEE 1ST APPLICANT

(AM4122/96)

A PRETORIUS 2ND APPLICANT

(AM4389/96)

J F WILLIAMS 3RD APPLICANT

(AM4375/96)

J E ROSS 4TH APPLICANT

(AM4377/96)

F B MONG 5TH APPLICANT

(AM4154/96)

N L MKHONZA 6TH APPLICANT

(AM5420/97)

M M VEYI 7TH APPLICANT

(AM5421/97)

M L SELAMOLELA 8TH APPLICANT

(AM5419/97)

DECISION

1. INTRODUCTION

TP 9

This is an application for amnesty in terms of the provisions of Section 18 of the Promotion of National Unity and Reconciliation Act No. 34 of 1995 ("the Act"). The matter relates to the abduction and subsequent treatment of Ms Nokuthula Aurella Simelane during or about the period August - September 1983. The sequence of events constituting the incident will be set out more fully later in this decision. All of the Applicants were to a greater or lesser extent involved in the incident. They were at all material times members of the Security Branch of the then South African Police attached to the Intelligence Unit stationed at Soweto in the present province of Gauteng. The Applicants fall into two categories in accordance with the extent of their respective participation in the incident. The participation of Applicants Williams, Ross and Mkhonza was limited to the abduction of Ms Simelane while the remainder of the Applicants participated throughout the duration of the incident, except for Veyi who joined in after the abduction. The latter group of Applicants engaged in an internecine war during the course of the hearing which was conducted between two camps. The one camp, consisting of Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong, was represented by Mr Visser and the other camp, consisting of Veyi and Selamolela, was represented by Mr Lamey. All of the Applicants testified in support of the applications. Their versions largely coincided in regard to the abduction of Ms Simelane while the respective versions of the two conflicting camps were mutually destructive in relation to the subsequent treatment of Ms Simelane. The interests of the next-of-kin of Ms Simelane were represented at the hearing by Mr van den Berg who indicated in argument that only the applications of Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong are being opposed. Mr van den Berg presented testimony of Gilbert Thwala in support of the case of the next-of-kin.

It is necessary to set out the material evidence in more detail. The summary of the relevant evidence will commence with the facts which are common cause, followed by the respective conflicting versions of the Applicants involved in the dispute of fact in regard to the treatment of Ms Simelane and will conclude with the version of Mr Thwala.

2. FACTS WHICH ARE COMMON CAUSE

Certain sources attached to the Soweto Intelligence Unit of the Security Police including Mkhonza, had infiltrated the ranks of the African National Congress ("ANC") and its military wing Umkhonto weSizwe ("MK") in Swaziland. The Soweto Intelligence Unit under the command of Coetzee, was alerted by these sources that a meeting was arranged between Mkhonza and an MK member at the Carlton Centre in Johannesburg during or about August - September 1983. Coetzee conveyed this information to the overall commander of the Soweto Security Police, the late Brigadier H Muller. After having considered various options, Muller ordered that the MK member should be abducted with a view to turning the member into an agent of the Security Police. Pursuant to this order, Coetzee gathered a group of Security Police officers, including the Applicants, and prepared them for the operation. On the day of the operation, the group monitored the movements of the MK member with a view to executing the planned abduction. It was only at that stage that it transpired that the MK member was a lady, Ms Simelane. She was young, attractive, soft-spoken and had a slender figure. She had also just completed a degree at the University of Swaziland. In accordance with the plan decided upon by the group of police officers, Mkhonza lured Ms Simelane to the basement of the Carlton Centre where she was apprehended and abducted. Ms Simelane was manhandled, placed in the boot of a police vehicle and transported to the Custodum Flats where the Security Police had an operational office in the cleaner's quarters on the roof of the building. Ms Simelane was left in one of the police vehicles out of sight of the general public. She was subsequently removed to the operational office where she was kept for a few days.

Throughout this period Ms Simelane was interrogated and continuously assaulted by a group of Security Police officers. The assaults were of a serious nature and Applicants accepted that this can be equated to torture. All of the Applicants save for Williams, Ross and Mkhonza were to a greater or lesser extent involved in her torture. The latter had ceased their participation in the incident after the abduction was executed at the Carlton Centre. Ms Simelane was subsequently transferred to a secluded premises on a farm in the district of Northam in the present North West Province. Here she was detained for a period of approximately 4 to 5 weeks. The interrogation and torture continued on the farm. The pith of the conflict between the versions of the relevant Applicants concerns the events surrounding the interrogation and torture of Ms Simelane on the farm. The respective versions in this regard will now be set out.

TP

3. VERSION OF COETZEE, PRETORIUS AND MONG

According to these Applicants, the assaults occurred only during the course of the first week of Ms Simelane's detention, whereafter it was effectively terminated apart from the odd occasion when she would be given a slap or a punch in order to secure her continued co-operation. After the first week of detention, Ms Simelane agreed to work as an agent of the Security Police. She gave her full co-operation to Coetzee who was leading the group of police officers. As she was concerned about her safety, Ms Simelane requested Coetzee not to let the black officers in the group know that she was in fact working with the police. This fact was accordingly not conveyed to either Veyi or Selamolela. Ms Simelane furnished information concerning the structures and operations of MK in Swaziland. In order to ensure Ms Simelane's continued credibility with the ANC and MK, certain targets were attacked by the Security Police under false flag operations. These attacks formed part of the orders which Ms Simelane had to convey to MK units inside South Africa. MK would have become suspicious of Ms Simelane should these attacks not have been launched which in turn would have compromised the continued operations of the Security Police agents who had infiltrated MK. Ms Simelane's recruitment occurred over a period of time and was finalised approximately two weeks prior to her departure from the farm. She was registered as an occasional source of the Soweto Security Police to be handled by Coetzee and Pretorius.

During the period of her stay on the farm, Ms Simelane's personal needs such as toiletries, food, clothing and the like were attended to. Throughout this period, her hands and legs were cuffed at night in order to stop her from escaping. After the necessary arrangements were made, steps were taken to return Ms Simelane to Swaziland. Only Coetzee, Pretorius, the late Sergeant Mothiba and one of the Security Police sources were involved in the arrangements concerning the handling of Ms Simelane as a Security Police source. Mothiba and the source eventually transported Ms Simelane to Swaziland. She subsequently failed to keep the pre-arranged appointments with her Security Police handlers. The Security Police never heard of Ms Simelane again. The Applicants vehemently denied that Ms Simelane's torture continued beyond her first week of detention or that she was so badly assaulted over the prolonged period of her detention that she was hardly recognisable towards the end of her stay on the farm. They likewise denied that electric shocks were administered to Ms Simelane during her detention on the farm or that her torture included her being thrown into the dam on the farm. They furthermore strenuously denied that Ms Simelane was killed by the Security Police and her body disposed of after she was removed from the farm.

4. VERSION OF VEYI AND SELAMOLELA

Only Selamolela was involved in the abduction, while both of them were involved in the subsequent detention of Ms Simelane at the Custodum Flats and on the farm in the Northam district. She was completely outnumbered by the members of the Security Police who were all male and physically superior to her. Throughout the period of her detention, Ms Simelane was interrogated and severely assaulted.

Both the interrogation and the assaults were led by the white officers, particularly Coetzee who was in overall command of the group of Security Police. Ms Simelane never co-operated Ms Simelane never co-operated with the police neither did she furnish any material information concerning MK as alleged by Coetzee and the other white officers. She persisted with this stance right up to the end of her stay on the farm and there was never any question of her being recruited as an agent of the Security Police. It is due to this attitude, that she was severely assaulted throughout her detention. Towards the end of her stay on the farm, her physical condition had deteriorated to such an extent as a result of the assaults, that she could hardly be recognised. She had great difficulty in walking and her physical condition had generally deteriorated quite badly. According to Selamolela she was also subjected to torture by electric shocks on the farm. She was, moreover, thrown into the dam on the farm. According to Veyi he last saw Ms Simelane lying in the boot of Coetzee's vehicle while she was still cuffed. He was under the impression that Selamolela accompanied him on this occasion. Selamolela on the other hand had no recollection of this incident. To their knowledge, no toiletries, medication or similar personal items were furnished to Ms Simelane during her detention on the farm. She was in fact dressed in a brown police overall throughout this period. They disputed the version of Coetzee and the other white officers that the information furnished by Ms Simelane led to the false flag attacks on the electrical power stations or was instrumental in the arrest of a number of persons linked to MK. Despite the sustained assaults and the other attempts to recruit her, Ms Simelane remained unco-operative to the end. According to Veyi, Mothiba informed him that Coetzee and Pretorius were involved in the subsequent killing of Ms Simelane and the disposal of her body.

5. VERSION OF GILBERT THWALA

At all material times he was the chief of staff of the Transvaal Urban Machinery of MK and was based in Swaziland. During 1982, Ms Simelane joined his unit and she was operating as a courier for one of the MK units within the Transvaal Urban Machinery. During September 1983, he deployed Ms Simelane on a mission to make contact with one of the other MK units within the Transvaal Urban Machinery at the Carlton Centre in Johannesburg. He had previously made the necessary arrangements with a member of that unit for the meeting with Ms Simelane. The arrangement was in fact that Ms Simelane would collect certain written arrangements in regard to lines of communication between the relevant MK unit and the MK command in Swaziland. She was only given the necessary information to enable her to complete the mission. She was specifically never given any information concerning the membership of the unit or in regard to operational issues such as the location of arms caches or targets for attack. After the necessary logistical arrangements had been made, Ms Simelane was briefed on the mission a few days before her actual departure from Swaziland for South Africa. Arrangements were made for her to be accommodated by an MK member, one Duma Nkosi.

She left Swaziland around the 8th September 1983 and the meeting at the Carlton Centre was arranged for Saturday, 11th September 1983. The arrangement was that Ms Simelane would communicate with him after the meeting at the Carlton Centre on the Saturday. By the Saturday evening, when Ms Simelane had not yet made contact with him, he realised that there was a problem. He made telephonic contact with Duma Nkosi and established that Ms Simelane had failed to return home after having left for a meeting in the morning. It transpired that Ms Simelane's clothing and other possessions were still at the home of Mr Nkosi. He also telephoned Ms Simelane's home to enquire whether she was possibly there. Her relatives indicated that to their knowledge, Ms Simelane was still in Swaziland and were surprised to hear that she would be collecting some items from home that she needed for the purposes of her imminent graduation. By the following evening, he realised that Ms Simelane had disappeared and he instituted the necessary precautions to ensure that the MK units or their operations would not be compromised by the disappearance of Ms Simelane. He ordered the MK unit to which Ms Simelane was attached as well as the unit of Mr Nkosi to immediately cease all operations until further notice. Steps were also taken in Swaziland to secure the MK premises which were known to Ms Simelane. He again communicated with Ms Simelane's family and indicated to them that she seemed to have disappeared in Johannesburg.

He denied that Ms Simelane had anything to do with the arrest of approximately 18 MK members during 1984. He indicated that apart from one member of the group that was arrested, Ms Simelane had never met any of the other arrestees and had no basis of possibly knowing that they were members of MK. He had taken steps to resolve the mystery surrounding the disappearance of Ms Simelane. He indicated that although he accepted, as one of the possibilities, that she was arrested by the South African Security Police he was puzzled by the fact that no action was taken by the latter against any of the units or the MK premises in Swaziland that were known to Ms Simelane. He had never seen Ms Simelane since her departure for South Africa and emphatically denied the suggestion that Ms Simelane was killed by MK after she was placed back in Swaziland by the Security Police. He indicated that if Ms Simelane had in fact returned to the ANC structures or MK in exile he would have been apprised of that fact and would have been central in any possible MK or ANC investigation into the situation of Ms Simelane.

6. EVALUATION OF THE EVIDENCE

It is apparent from a conspectus of the respective versions that the material matters in issue are :

6.1 The duration of Ms Simelane's torture;

6.2 Whether Ms Simelane co-operated with the Security Police and was recruited by them;

6.3 Ms Simelane's physical condition towards the end of her stay on the farm;

6.4 Ms Simelane's fate subsequent to having been removed from the farm.

Having carefully considered the matter, we are satisfied that in spite of some discrepancies in their versions, the evidence of Veyi and Selamolela is basically truthful. They have both made a very favourable impression upon us and their testimony has struck us as honest as well as a genuine attempt to convey all of the facts and circumstances concerning the incident to the best of their ability. We bear in mind that they have been called upon to recount events that occurred a very long time ago and in which they did not play a leading role. In the case of Selamolela he had to contend with the additional disadvantage of suffering from the effects of post-traumatic stress syndrome which, according to the medical evidence placed at our disposal, negatively affected his memory. There is, in our view, no merit in the submission made on behalf of Coetzee and the other white Applicants that Veyi and Selamolela adopted a hostile position towards their white superiors and were actuated by a desire to put the latter in as bad a light as possible while minimizing their own role in the incident. It is common cause that they made a public disclosure of the circumstances surrounding the Simelane incident after her disappearance was highlighted in a prominent article in the Sowetan newspaper. They subsequently made statements to the then Attorney-General of the Transvaal which were basically consistent with their versions at the amnesty hearing. These statements were deposed to prior to the date on which the first amnesty applications were made in respect of the Simelane incident and at a time when they had no indication whether or not on what basis any of their superiors may apply for amnesty.

There can be no doubt, in our view, that their principal motivation was to make a full disclosure of the entire incident and to lift the burden of guilt that they were carrying concerning their own role in what they experienced as an unwarranted and unjustifiable invasion of the basic human rights of Ms Simelane. It is inexplicable why they should falsely exaggerate the duration of Ms Simelane's torture when they have confessed their own complicity in that torture. We find it highly improbable that they would implicate themselves in an offence, the severity of which they falsely exaggerate.

We have not been similarly favourably impressed by the versions of either Coetzee, Pretorius or Mong. We have no doubt, that they have made common cause and orchestrated their testimony in an attempt to minimize their roles in the torture of Ms Simelane. They were evasive and resorted to prevarication and long-winded technical explanations whenever they sensed difficulties or shortcomings in their versions. They studiously failed to furnish direct answers to questions which they regarded as potentially damaging to their case. The record speaks for itself in this regard. Moreover, various aspects of their versions are inherently improbable. They failed to furnish a reasonable or acceptable explanation for the fact that Ms Simelane was kept in foot cuffs throughout the period of her stay on the farm in spite of having allegedly agreed to become a police informer. Their explanation that this was done as a precaution against Ms Simelane possibly fleeing, contradicts the allegation that she had in fact been recruited and registered as a police informer while staying on the farm. It is, furthermore, inherently improbable that they would have continued detaining Ms Simelane under primitive and extremely adverse conditions on a remote farm in the bushveld at a time when they in fact had her full co-operation as a newly recruited informer. The probabilities in this regard instead favour the version of Veyi and Selamolela that she was held under these circumstances and continuously assaulted precisely because of the fact that she had refused to co-operate with the police. The version that, on Ms Simelane's insistence, the fact of her recruitment was kept secret from the black members is, in our view, a clever but unpersuasive attempt to neutralise the effect of the contrary version of Veyi and Selamolela. It is beyond the realm of belief that Coetzee and the other white officers could keep up this facade for approximately one month on the farm while at the same time somehow managing to involve Mothiba in Ms Simelane's recruitment without raising the suspicion of the remaining black members. On the totality of the evidence before us, we have no doubt that the versions of Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong are untruthful where they conflict with those of Veyi and Selamolela on the issues in dispute. We are not persuaded that the criticisms levelled at the versions of Veyi and Selamolela in the argument submitted on behalf of Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong affect those versions in any material way even less does it warrant the total rejection of those versions.

Insofar as the evidence of Mr Gilbert Thwala is concerned, we are satisfied that his version is honest and truthful. We are not persuaded that the rancour that developed during cross-examination between Mr Thwala and Mr Visser is indicative of or only explicable on the basis of mendacity on the part of Mr Thwala. This factor does not detract from the gravamen of that version which in broad terms corroborate the evidence of Veyi and Selamolela that Ms Simelane never co-operated or furnished any material information to the police. It, moreover, constitutes a compelling basis for the conclusion that Ms Simelane never returned to Swaziland after she was abducted by the Security Police.

7. FINDINGS

In the circumstances, we are satisfied that Ms Simelane was abducted by members of the South African Security Police, including some of the Applicants, acting under the command of Coetzee on or about Saturday, 11 September 1983 at the Carlton Centre, Johannesburg. During her subsequent detention for a period of approximately five weeks, she was continuously and very seriously assaulted by the group of Security Police, under the command of Coetzee, who held her captive. All attempts to extract information concerning MK or its operations as well as attempts to recruit her to become a Security Police informer, were fruitless. Due to the prolonged and sustained assaults, Ms Simelane's physical condition deteriorated to the extent that she was hardly recognisable and could barely walk. Ms Simelane was last seen where she was lying with her hands and feet cuffed in the boot of Coetzee's vehicle. She never returned to her familiar environment in Swaziland after having been abducted by the South African Security Police and had disappeared since. It is not necessary for the purpose of this matter to make a definitive finding on the eventual fate of Ms Simelane.

TP

8. CONCLUSION

The abduction and subsequent situation of Ms Simelane will be dealt with separately.

8.1 Abduction

It is not in contention that the abduction of Ms Simelane was duly authorised by the then commander of the Soweto Security Branch. The facts and circumstances relating to this incident have been fully disclosed. The operation was directly linked to the political struggle being waged at the time against the ANC or MK which were regarded as the political enemies of the South African State and its Security Forces. We are accordingly satisfied that this incident constitutes an act associated with a political objective as envisaged by the Act. Amnesty is accordingly GRANTED to all of the Applicants, save for Veyi who was not involved, in respect of all offences or delicts arising from the abduction of Ms Simelane on or about Saturday 11 September 1983 at or near the Carlton Centre, Johannesburg. We have considered the position of Mkhonza and are satisfied that his actions contributed directly to the unlawful abduction. He is accordingly also entitled to amnesty in spite of the fact that he was under the initial impression that Ms Simelane would be lawfully arrested.

8.2 Torture

In the light of what is set out above, we conclude that the evidence of Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong is untruthful insofar as it concerns the duration and extent of Ms Simelane's torture whilst she was in the custody of the Security Police, especially on the farm. Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong have accordingly failed to make a full disclosure of all relevant facts in regard to this aspect of the matter as required by the provisions of Section 20 of the Act. Their applications are accordingly REFUSED on this aspect.

Insofar as the applications of Veyi and Selamolela are concerned, we are satisfied that they have made a full disclosure of all relevant facts. At all material times they were acting on the orders of their commander, Coetzee, who informed them that Ms Simelane was a member of MK. Their actions were accordingly directed against a perceived political enemy and as such constitute acts associated with a political objective as envisaged by the Act. Their applications accordingly comply with all of the requirements of the Act. In the circumstances, amnesty is hereby GRANTED to the Applicants Veyi and Selamolela in respect of all offences and delicts arising from the torture of Ms Simelane subsequent to her abduction as set out above.

TP

In our opinion Ms Nokuthula Aurella Simelane, alternatively her next-of-kin are victims in respect of the incidents for which amnesty is hereby granted and the matter is accordingly referred for consideration in terms of the provisions of Section 22 of the Act.

DATED AT CAPE TOWN THIS 23RD DAY OF MAY 2001

DENZIL POTGIETER, A-J

A-J CHRIS DE JAGER, A-J

ADV L GCABASHE

AC/2001/185

TRUTH AND RECONCILIATION COMMISSION

AMNESTY COMMITTEE

APPLICATION IN TERMS OF SECTION 18 OF THE PROMOTION OF NATIONAL UNITY AND RECONCILIATION ACT, NO.34 OF 1995.

W H COETZEE 1ST APPLICANT

(AM4122/96)

A PRETORIUS 2ND APPLICANT

(AM4389/96)

J F WILLIAMS 3RD APPLICANT

(AM4375/96)

J E ROSS 4TH APPLICANT

(AM4377/96)

F B MONG 5TH APPLICANT

(AM4154/96)

N L MKHONZA 6TH APPLICANT

(AM5420/97)

245

M M VEYI 7TH APPLICANT

(AM5421/97)

M L SELAMOLELA 8TH APPLICANT

(AM5419/97)

A D D E N D U M

I agree with the result but do not agree with some aspects and conclusions in paragraph 6 above. The Applicants Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong did not satisfy me that they've made a full disclosure of all relevant facts.

CHRIS DE JAGER, A-J

??

2

/...

_/...

23

/...

TP

This document was created with Win2PDF available at http://www.win2pdf.com.
The unregistered version of Win2PDF is for evaluation or non-commercial use only.
This page will not be added after purchasing Win2PDF.

TP

Mom's question: Where's my child?

by Sharon Chetty

...s elite fighting unit Barney Molokoane had help from a young woman — his ...ée Nokuthula Simelane — and had it been for her many of his missions may have been successful.

While a social science student at the University of Swaziland, Nokuthula Simelane hid their weapons, acted as courier, provided shelter and was the major communication link between their Swaziland base and South Africa.

And then she disappeared.

The last her parents, Matthew and Christina, saw of her was in June 1983 at their home in Mzinoni township, Bethal. She was 24.

"Nokuthula had finished her degree and had just come home because she was looking for a job," recalled her mother.

"The security police was harassing her a lot. She had a narrow escape after they came to our home one morning and we decided she should go back to Swaziland."

The Simelanes were confident that their daughter was all right as she lived with two uncles — Leonard and Richard Vilakazi.

Dual citizenship

Nokuthula had dual Swazi-SA citizenship. Her uncles were prominent educationists and her father a former mayor of Mzinoni township.

They were well known and respected in both Bethal and Swaziland, which helped her evade the police.

"Then one day Leonard phoned to ask if Nokuthula had arrived in Bethal.

"We did not know she was on her way because she did not say anything. Leonard said Nokuthula was going to stop at her friend Wendy Mpama in Mbabane.

"Wendy then pointed us to an MK cadre named Mpho Mpau".

Mpau, then chief of staff in Swaziland, had sent her on two missions to South Africa, the Simelane's found out.

She was apparently sent to Vereeniging and was successful in delivering a message to an operative there.

Her next stop was at a house in Senoane, Soweto, and that is where the trail ended.

MK man

"We found out that an ANC man named Thoma Nkosi lived in that house. Nkosi said on arriving from work, he found Nokuthula at the house and gave her directions to the Carlton Centre.

"No one knows what happened next," said Mrs Simelane.

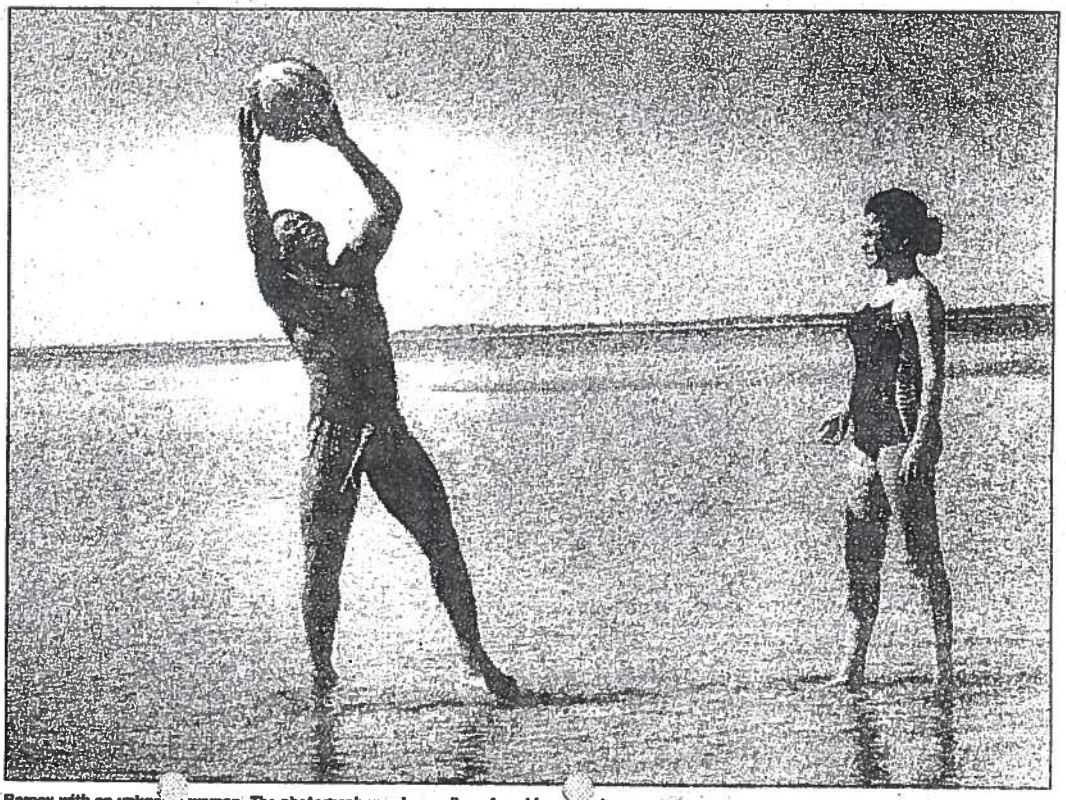
"The man Nokuthula was to meet was named Scotch.

"When he was called to Swaziland to account for her whereabouts, he disobeyed his MK bosses.

"Later they found out that he was a double agent and had been working for the police.

"For ten years we searched for our daughter but found nothing,' said Mr Simelane.

"Then in August 1993 Mpho Mpau came to us and explained that he had sent her on the two missions on September 9 1983.



"He confirmed that Scotch was a known police informer but they (MK) could not do anything until the ANC came into power and controlled the police force."

Mpau, now a pilot with the SAA, has not contacted them since.

The Simelanes say even the ANC refuses to accept liability for Nokuthula's disappearance ... they said she was "a mere sympathiser and not a member".

"How can they dismiss her in that way? on every major mission ... Barney came to the country, we would accommodate him," explained Simelane.

"The SAP put pressure on the Swazi police to deport her, but because of her dual citizenship she was left alone. Her uncle's house was attacked many times. A bomb was found there. They know that the last person to have contact with my daughter was an informer ... they control the police now, why can't they go and ask him what happened," a bitter Mr Simelane said.

Barney with an unknown woman. The photograph was in an album found in a safe house.

Missing since 1983 ... Nokuthula Simelane.

Share prices on the Johannesburg Stock Exchange

These were prices at the close of the market.
N.B.: The JSE does not operate on public holidays.
Prices courtesy of Frankel, Pollak, Vinderine Inc

Name	Buyer	Seller	Last	H	L
1. Nail	R1,25	R1,35	R1,35	R2,00	R1,30
2. Kilimanjaro	R3,00	R3,10	R3,00	R3,50	R3,00
3. African Life	R6,20	R6,40	R6,20	R7,35	R4,60
4. Metropolitan	R33,00	R34,50	R36,00	R37,00	25,75
5. Corp Africa	R1,10	R1,30	R1,20	R1,70	R1,00

Glossary:
Buyer: Price at which the share was bought. Seller: Price at which the share was sold. Last: Last traded price on the share. H: Highest level share reached this year. L: Lowest level the share reached this year.

AL'S MASSIVE WAREHOUSE CLEARANCE SALE
SUPER MENSWEAR AT HUGE DISCOUNTS
OFF OUR FANTASTIC FACTORY PRICES !

MENS YARN DYE LOUNGE SHIRTS - MANARI AND HALAN GREEN
WAS R20 SALE PRICE R15.00

ALL MENS T-SHIRTS AND SKIPPERS
LESS 20%

ALL SHORT SLEEVE AND LONG SLEEVE WOVEN SHIRTS
LESS 25%

ALL MENS TROUSERS
LESS 20%

MENS DENIM, COTTON & CORDUROY JEANS
LESS 20%

MENS BERMUDA SHORTS IN CHECKS AND PLAINS
LESS 25%

MENS KNITWEAR
LESS 20%

PRICES VALID WHILE STOCKS LAST. SO COME IN EARLY !

REMEMBER
We are a genuine factory shop your clothing comes direct to you from our factories.

AL's Factory Shop
"QUALITY CLOTHING AT FACTORY PRICES"

Johannesburg - 5th Floor Access City, 5 Beacon Street, New Doornfontein
Kwa N'debele - 286 Argentum Crescent, Ekonoustria
Mamelodi - Shop No D32, Metropolitan Life, Gateway Centre, Denneboom
Sturbie Hall - Shop 21, Wingrin Centre
Industria - 11a Newclare Road (opposite Industria Station)
Siyabuswa - Shop 4, Siyabuswa Shopping Centre
Witbank - C 14(c) OK Centre, Eadie Street

R3510
BRANDED MARKETING BM093

Sowetan

Building the Nation

Friday
January 27
1995
Late
Final

Price R1 (incl. VAT)

Was it OK with you?

When you bought your copy of Sowetan yesterday you may have found it somewhat different — your favourite paper was wrapped in an OK Bazaars advert. How do you, the reader, feel about this? We value your opinion and would like to hear from you. Share your views with us by phoning 011-474-9445 between 9am and 4pm today.

MK's Mata Hari still not found

Nokuthula Aurelia Simelane was sent on a mission in September 8 1983 but never reached her destination.

See pages 16 and 17.

Missing in action

By Sharon Chetty

A TRACING COMMITTEE set up by the ANC says there are more than 300 Umkhonto we Sizwe cadres who "disappeared" during the struggle for liberation.

Speculation is that many of these soldiers were killed in combat with the old South African security forces and buried in unmarked or falsely marked graves inside or outside the country.

A committee "for the bereaved" was set up in 1991 by Mr Nelson Mandela and then consisted of four returned exiles.

Its task was to inform the families of cadres who had died in exile.In 1992 another committee was set up by the ANC NEC to trace missing persons. A member of this committee, Patience Molekane, said yesterday a number of cadres had been traced, but no figures were available.

"For many of the people we just have names which they used in the camps. Their real names and families are hard to find," Molekane said.

She added that inquiries about missing cadres were still being regularly rec[illegible] at the ANC's Shell House in Johannesburg.

Molekane said her committee had sent a letter to outgoing police commissioner General Johan van der Merwe last April asking him to identify graves of MK soldiers who had died in action aga[illegible] the old South African regime.

V[illegible] der Merwe allegedly did not respond to the first letter according to Molekane and a second request was made in December.

Molekane blamed the slow progress being made by her committee and the committee for the bereaved on "a shortage of information". She said there were only two people left on the tracing committee — committee members had left to find jobs elsewhere.

Sources outside the ANC, like the Durban-based Recoc, have hinted that a number of ANC cadres may well have been "disposed of" by their own people.

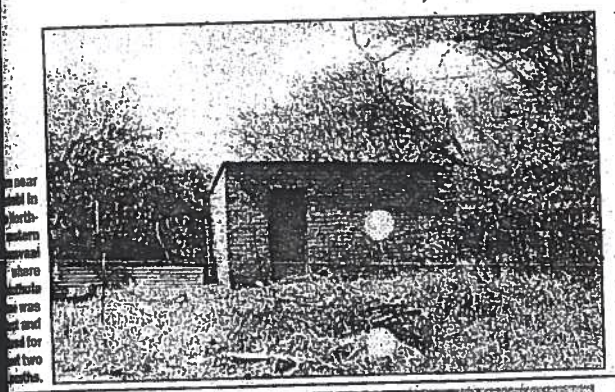
Meanwhile, Eastern Transvaal police have confirmed that three MK cadres responsible for the November 1985 attack on the Sasol plant were buried in falsely marked graves in Piet Retief.

Barney Molokoane, Victor Khayiyana and Vincent Sekete were killed in a firefight with security forces when they tried to enter Swaziland at the Houtkop border post.

Inside bumper Sowetan today

Our red-hot brand new weekend PULL OUT

- Dudu on Sex
- What's on — your weekend entertainment guide
- Your television guide



PLUS Your Spectacular pullout — Iwisa charity soccer feast in full: All the form, action and programme

PLUS Mashonisa — your racing guide

Sowetan
Monday
February 6
1995
Late
Final
Price R1 (incl. VAT)
Building the Nation

WIN
fs claw way to the 8 semis
Page 32

Cops trapped and killed MK cadre

By Sharon Chetty

POLICE ARRESTED AND KILLED an Umkhonto we Sizwe cadre 12 years ago and buried her without trace, a former security branch constable has admitted.

Nokuthula Simelane was on an MK mission in Johannesburg in September 1983 when she went missing.

It was later discovered that the man she was to meet at the Carlton Cen[illegible] Johannesburg was a police informer — but the trail died there and despite 12 years of searching by her parents, Matthew and Ernestina Simelane, everything remains a blank.

This weekend a member of a police security branch unit that operated out of Soweto, said Simelane had been ar[illegible]d when one of their informers set a trap for [illegible].

Simelane was taken to a farm near Thabazimbi in the Northwestern Transvaal and kept there for almost two months, he revealed.

He was part of a unit of nine men who gathered intelligence on activists.

They passed the information on to the C10 unit at the notorious Vlakplaas base which dealt with "terrorists".

'She was very beautiful'

Constable X, who prefers not to be named at this stage, said the black members of the unit guarded Simelane while the white members tortured her.

"She was very beautiful. But by the time they (the white officers) were 'finished' with her, she could not be recognised," he said.

Because Simelane was regarded as a "terrorist" she was kept in leg-irons and handcuffs and interrogated constantly, he said.

He described how one day the leader of the unit drove around with Simelane — in handcuffs and leg-irons — lying in the boot of his car.

"She was still alive, and lying crouched on the floor," he recalled.

Constable X had decided to speak about his unit's nefarious deeds, because, he was "haunted by the evils that were committed".

"My conscience says that this must be made public ... everyone should know about the past," he said. He is prepared to testify before the Truth Commission.

Shot dead and buried

When he saw a picture of Simelane and an article on her disappearance in the Sowetan last week, he had no doubt that she was the captive he guarded.

The last time he saw her she was still alive and being held on the farm. After he was sent back to Soweto, he inquired after the woman.

"Moenie baie vrae vra nie," was the reply he got from one of his superiors. Later he was told by a sergeant that the two white leaders of the unit had shot dead and buried Simelane in Rustenburg.

A Sowetan team accompanied Constable X to the farm in Northam, outside Thabazimbi, where he said Simelane was held.

The owners of the farm for 30 years, PC and Martie Welthagen, confirmed that they were related to the leader of the SB unit, but said they had lost contact with him.

However, they did confirm that the man, whom they knew worked as a speurder (detective) with the security branch, used to stay at the farm frequently in the 1980s and that at one stage a young black woman was made to stay there.

Mrs Welthagen said that they were told that the woman was learning to become a policewoman and that she needed to keep away from people.

The couple, who are in their 70s, said their memories were failing and they could not recall exactly who was taken there.

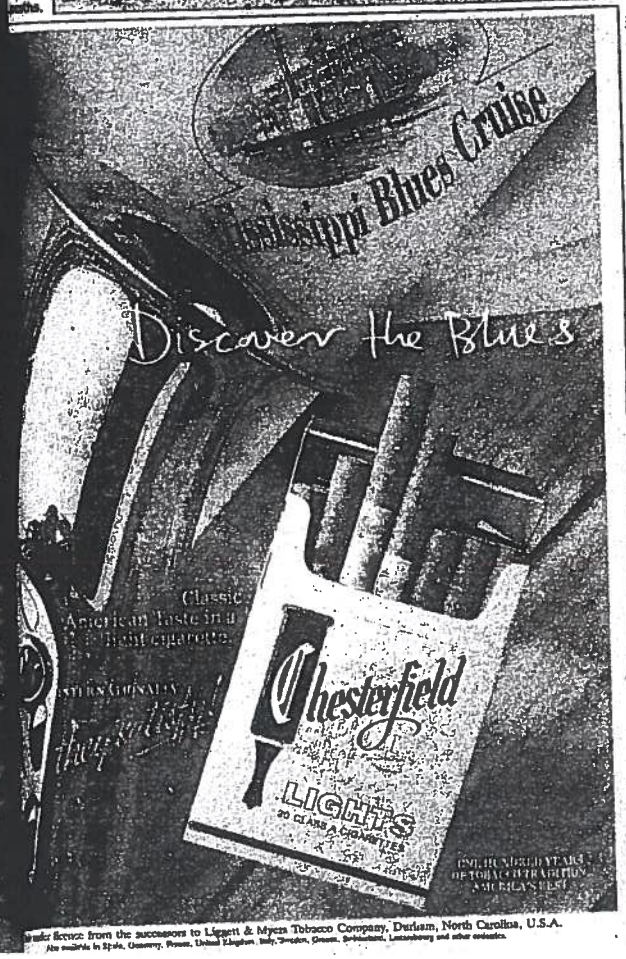
The outbuilding which Constable X said was used as the prison, is a short distance from the main farmhouse.

There is a road leading directly to that cottage and Constable X says a separate access road was used by the policemen.

"We slept in sleeping bags on the floor. We used to wash at the tap outside.

"There's the place where we used to have braais," he said, pointing to a fire-scorched section on one side.

Welthagen said that the stuffy, one-roomed abode was built more than 20 years ago to house farm labourers.



No one was living there because the Welthagen's had stopped farming their land.

The names of the policemen involved in the security branch unit are known to Sowetan.

At least two of the white officers appear on a controversial list of 3 500 people who applied for indemnity shortly before last April's elections.

MK cadre Nokuthula Simelane was killed by police 12 years ago and buried without a trace.

...ufactured by licence from the successors to Liggett & Myers Tobacco Company, Durham, North Carolina, U.S.A.
Also available in [illegible]

ANNEXURE "TN13": IN CAMERA AFFIDAVIT

(SEE ATTACHED FILE)

ANNEXURE "TN14": IN CAMERA AFFIDAVIT

(SEE ATTACHED FILE)

WAARSKUWINGSVERKLARING DEUR VERDAGTE

Om 14:30 op hierdie 6de dag van Julie 1998 te Pretoria
kantoornommer Hawkeyenest Area 7, voer ek 'n onderhoud met Willem Hetta Johannes Coetzee, hierna die verdagte genoem. In my kantoor is daar slegs ek, die verdagte en Justo Pretorius, wat as tolk in die _____ taal, wat deur die verdagte verstaan word, optree en niemand anders nie.
Die verdagte word meegedeel dat ek 'n Kaptein (rang) in die Suid-Afrikaanse Polisie (Diens) is en ampshalwe 'n Vrederegter / ~~Vredesbeampte~~ is. Ek toon aan hom / ~~haar~~ my aanstellingssertifikaat.
Sy / ~~Haar reaksie~~ daarop is: Ek verstaan

Ek deel die verdagte nou mee dat ek deel het aan die ondersoek van 'n saak van Menige Roof: Moord. Nokuthula Sigenjane wat gepleeg is op die — dag van Gedurende September 1993 om ongeveer — te (plek) Carltan Centrum Pta. en dat ek oor sekere inligting beskik wat daarop dui dat hy / sy in die pleging van die genoemde misdryf geïmpliseer is.

VRAAG: Verstaan en begryp u die beweringe teen u?

ANTWOORD: Ja.

DIE VERDAGTE WORD ONVERWYLD SOOS VOLG MET BETREKKING TOT DIE BEPALINGS VAN ARTIKEL 35 VAN DIE GRONDWET VAN DIE REPUBLIEK VAN SUID-AFRIKA, 1996 VERWITTIG:

1. Die rede vir sy/haar arrestasie/aanhouding;
2. Dat hy/sy die reg het om te swyg en dat hy/sy gewaarsku word dat enigiets wat hy/sy sê in 'n geregshof teen hom / haar gebruik mag word; en
3. Dat hy/sy die reg het om met 'n regsverteenwoordiger van sy/haar keuse te konsulteer en, waar dit andersins tot wesenlike onreg sou lei, om deur die staat van die dienste van 'n regspraktisyn voorsien te word;
4. Dat hy/sy nie verplig word om 'n bekentenis of 'n erkenning te doen wat as getuienis teen hom/haar gebruik kan word nie.

2/.....

TP 9

VRAAG: Verstaan u dit?

ANTWOORD: Ja.

VRAAG: Wil u/u regsverteenwoordiger skakel?

ANTWOORD: nee

VRAAG: Verlang u om deur die Staat van die dienste van 'n regsverteenwoordiger voorsien te word?

ANTWOORD: Ja.

HANDTEKENING/REGTERDUIMAFDRUK VAN VERDAGTE

EK GAAN SEKERE VRAE AAN U STEL EN DEUR DIE BEANTWOORDING DAARVAN, KAN U SEKERE PUNTE VERDUIDELIK WAARDEUR U MOONTLIK U ONSKULD KAN BEWYS:

VRAAG: Wat is u keuse: Wil u 'n verklaring maak, slegs op vrae antwoord of u swygreg uitoefen?

ANTWOORD: Geen verklaring maak nie.

HANDTEKENING/REGTERDUIMAFDRUK VAN VERDAGTE

VUL DIE VOLGENDE IN SLEGS INDIEN DIE VERDAGTE VERKIES OM IETS TE SE:

VERSOEK DIE VERDAGTE OM OP DIE VOLGENDE VRAE TE ANTWOORD:

1. Is u op enige wyse aangerand of gedreig?

   ANTWOORD: _____

2. Indien wel, deur wie, wanneer en waar?

   ANTWOORD: _____

Het die feit dat u aangerand of gedreig is enige invloed op die aflegging van hierdie verklaring/beantwoording van vrae?

ANTWOORD: _____

TP

Het u enige beserings?

ANTWOORD: _____

Is u op enige wyse beïnvloed om 'n verklaring af te lê en/of vrae te beantwoord?

ANTWOORD: _____

Is u tans onder die invloed van enige drank en/of dwelms?

ANTWOORD: _____

NA AFLOOP VAN DIE VERKLARING/BEANTWOORDING VAN DIE VRAE WORD DIE VERDAGTE SE VERKLARING/VRAE EN ANTWOORDE AAN HOM/HAAR VOORGELEES EN WEER GETOLK.

DIE VOLGENDE VRAE WORD NOU AAN HOM / HAAR GESTEL:

1. Is u tevrede dat wat u gesê het, korrek genotuleer is?

ANTWOORD: _____

2. Is u tevrede dat hierdie verklaring/antwoorde u weergawe van die gebeure noukeurig beskryf?

ANTWOORD: _____

3. Het u enige klagtes oor die wyse waarop hierdie verklaring afgeneem/vrae gestel is?

ANTWOORD: _____

4. Is u tevrede met die tolk?

ANTWOORD: _____

_____
HANDTEKENING/REGTERDUIMAFDRUK
VAN VERDAGTE

TP

BOSTAANDE VERKLARING DEUR MY AFGENEEM:

PLEK: Pretoria

DATUM: 98/7/6

TYD: 14:32

HANDTEKENING: BEAMPTE
SUID-AFRIKAANSE POLISIEDIENS

Ek _____ (naam), sertifiseer dat ek getrou en juis na die beste van my vermoë met betrekking tot die inhoud van die bostaande verklaring getolk het.

Naam + van (drukskrif): _____

Adres: _____

Telefoon: _____

HANDTEKENING VAN TOLK

OPMERKINGS: NOTULEER DIE VOLGENDE: HET DIE VERKLAARDER NORMAAL VOORGEKOM? DIE RAS, GESLAG, OUDERDOM, KLEREDRAG EN VOORKOMS VAN DIE VERKLAARDER.

TP

TN 1P

16

256

TRUTH AND RECONCILIATION COMMISSION

HUMAN RIGHTS VIOLATIONS

SUBMISSIONS - QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

DATE: 3 JUNE 1997

NAME: MATHEW SIMELANE

CASE: JB0280 - LEANDRA

DAY 1

CHAIRPERSON: Mr Simelane, can you hear me through your earphones?

MR SIMELANE: Yes, I can.

CHAIRPERSON: And could you please explain to us who is with you.

MR SIMELANE: The one seated by me is my wife.

CHAIRPERSON: Thank you. We would like to welcome you here. Please feel relaxed. Thank you very much for agreeing to come and also agreeing to be the first witness. It is always a difficult thing to do. Before I ask Tom Manthata to lead your evidence could I please ask you to stand and take the oath.

MATHEW SIMELANE: (Duly sworn in, states).

CHAIRPERSON: Thank you very much. Mr Simelane, you are here today to tell us the story of, particularly of your daughter, Nokuthula, and I would ask Tom Manthata, please, to lead your evidence. Thank you.

MR MANTHATA: Mr Simelane and Mrs Simelane, you are welcome and should you at any stage find yourself choked by emotions, please take your time and take your time to relate this story. Mr Simelane, are you working?

MR SIMELANE: Yes, I am working.

MR MANTHATA: You are working. And Mrs Simelane?

MR SIMELANE: We work together.

MR MANTHATA: You are working together as what?

MR SIMELANE: We have a business, we own a business.

MR MANTHATA: You have got a business. And the children, are they still at school?

T.D 1

MR SIMELANE: Only one is at school.

MR MANTHATA: Only one is at school. Thank you. As it has been said already by the Chairperson, can you please tell us the story of your missing daughter, Nokuthula Simelane.

MR SIMELANE: Nokuthula disappeared in 1983. She was attending at the University of Swaziland. Just when we were preparing to go and attend her graduation, that is when we discovered that she has disappeared and nowhere to be found. We searched all over for Nokuthula and we never found Nokuthula. Even at the border we went to enquire if she has crossed and to no avail. Some in Swaziland said the ANC people sent her to the Republic and we went to the ANC people and they denied any knowledge of Nokuthula. We searched everywhere. Even the neighbouring countries like Botswana, we went to search for Nokuthula. No one came to the surface to tell us about Nokuthula. Even the policemen could not help us in that regard.

In 1985 we decided to approach the press. Her picture appeared in the newspaper and one police contacted us after seeing her picture on the newspaper and said he knew that girl, because he kept guard at that girl in Vlakplaas Police Station and the last time that police saw Nokuthula, Nokuthula was ill and she was severely and brutally tortured. The investigation stated afresh now and the matter was under investigation. The Investigating Officer, Neville Toms, investigated the issue further and until the final part of it, but they still could not give us any sound matter in as far as Nokuthula's issue is concerned. All what we want now are her remains so we could bury Nokuthula in a decent way. In our culture we bury people decently and we would like to do that.

Finally, we found out that the policemen who arrested her, two of them were suspended. That they were suspended because they were investigating this matter. That is Coetzee and Pretorius and the ones that we do not know are the other three, because all of them were five in number. We found out that they have applied for amnesty. Still when I heard about their application, amnesty application I heard that they applied, that they had kidnapped Nokuthula and tortured Nokuthula and that was the end. They never mentioned any other thing beside that. I would like to know even more. What happened to my daughter and after the torture what was done to her.

MR MANTHATA: Yes. Do you mind telling us the name of the police who tipped you after seeing the press coverage about the whereabouts of Nokuthula?

MR SIMELANE: I will not disclose the other name. We called the other one Mr X. The ones that came to my house, the officers, was Neville Toms and Captain Lisk.

MR MANTHATA: Thank you and what was Nokuthula doing at the University of Swaziland, that is study-wise?

MR SIMELANE: She was studying and enroled for B.Admin.

MR MANTHATA: And you did not know that she could have affiliated to ANC at the time?

MR SIMELANE: I suspected that, but she never made mention of that fact to me.

MR MANTHATA: What did you suspect, Mr Simelane?

TP

MR SIMELANE: I suspected that the ANC was using her, because at one stage it was discovered in Swaziland that they were corresponding that were delivered at my brother-in-law's place. Those were in exile and the ANC members were using her to go to the Republic.

MR MANTHATA: When you approached ANC offices did they say they did not know where she had gone to or they said they did not know that she was a member of ANC?

MR SIMELANE: Often times than not it would be my wife going to the ANC offices and what she will tell me is that they will say we do not know, maybe her boyfriends know better. Some said she might be in Germany or West Germany. They never told us the truth.

MR MANTHATA: But finally, have they owned that she was in their camps, that is after all these press disclosures?

MR SIMELANE: After the newspaper issue some approached us and told us that they, she was there and she was being used and a very brave woman, but they never told us before the newspaper article.

MR MANTHATA: So you have said it that the torturers have since applied for amnesty and which means, what we need to know is where she was buried and, of course, how was she killed. Is this what you are saying?

MR SIMELANE: I want to know that.

MR MANTHATA: No further questions, Mr Simelane, back to the Chairperson.

CHAIRPERSON: Thank you, thank you Mr Manthata. I will ask the other Commissioners if they have any questions. Wynand.

MR MALAN: Thank you. Mr Simelane, just really one question and this relates to the suspended people in your statement. You say that two members of the police were suspended. You named them now as Coetzee and Pretorius.

MR SIMELANE: That is correct.

MR MALAN: You also gave us a copy of a news report in The Star of May five 1996 where reference is made to the suspension of these two people. The article quotes a spokesman of NCIS, Reg Crew and he says simply we have to treat them as suspects at this stage, referring to the two suspended people. Now this is a year and a month ago. Have you had any further information relating to developments here?

MR SIMELANE: No, all that I know is that they have applied for amnesty.

MR MALAN: Are you saying your information is that Coetzee and Pretorius applied for amnesty?

MR SIMELANE: Yes, those are the only two, they have applied for amnesty and the other three that I do not know their names.

T.P 07

MR MALAN: Were you informed that they applied for amnesty also in relation to Nokuthula's disappearance?

MR SIMELANE: Yes, they did notify me.

MR MALAN: Thank you.

CHAIRPERSON: Joyce. Mr Simelane and Mrs Simelane, I would like to just ask one more question. In the Sowetan story about Nokuthula they describe her as MK's Mata Hari. Do you have any doubts in your own mind that that was a description that fitted her and her activities?

MR SIMELANE: No, I do not have any doubts.

CHAIRPERSON: So that you do not yourself have any doubt as to who might have been responsible for her disappearance?

MR SIMELANE: Will you please repeat your question.

CHAIRPERSON: Do you have any doubt as to who was responsible for her disappearing?

MR SIMELANE: It is a little bit difficult to admit there, because I know she was being used and sent as a courier of ANC and suddenly thereafter she disappeared, but what hurts the most is that they never told me the truth and also that the never sent her, they pretended as if they did not know Nokuthula at all.

CHAIRPERSON: Mr Simelane, I think that we are in the position very much that you are at the moment and that is to watch and wait for the outcome of the amnesty applications which have been made. I understand that there have, as you indicate, that there are, in fact, five applications that have been made and we will hear from that, we hope, considerably more, because we understand very well the pain that you must have had all these years. It is a pain not only that of feeling that your daughter has disappeared and you cannot reach her, but also of not knowing what actually happened to her and finally not being able to know how she died, where she died and where she has been buried. We will certainly follow up, we will keep a very close link, close watch on the amnesty process. We will also see what we can do further about following up with the ANC, because they must have some information about her and then, as you know, there is a programme within the Commission for reburial of loved ones. So we will be in touch with you about all those three major points and I would like to thank you and your wife for having the courage to come today and tell us this story. We sympathise very much with you and we will do what we can to bring you the information that you require. Thank you very much for coming.

TP 17

FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS

POLICE DOCKET: PRIORITY INVESTIGATION: JV SQUARE: 1469/02/1996
COMPLAINANT: SIZAKELE ERNESTINAH SIMELANE

MEMORANDUM

INTRODUCTION

1. Consultant is the Foundation for Human Rights ("FHR").

2. FHR sought a memorandum on the police docket into the abduction, torture and disappearance of Nokhuthula Simelane ("Simelane") for purposes of briefing the Simelane family.

3. FHR seeks to bring justice to those responsible for the abduction, torture and disappearance of Simelane. Certain obstacles however stand in the way of a prosecution of those former South African Police (SAP) Security Branch members alleged to be responsible for these crimes.

3.1. All involved in the abduction of Simelane have been granted amnesty by way of a decision (AC/2001/185) of the Amnesty Committee of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission.

TP 17

3.2. Prosecutors state that they do not have sufficient evidence to proceed with murder charges against the suspected Security Branch officers. However, prosecutors state that there is ample evidence to proceed against the same officers on charges of assault or assault to do grievous bodily harm.

3.3. Prosecutors state however that they are prevented from proceeding with assault prosecutions as the right to prosecute such offences have prescribed by virtue of section 18 of the Criminal Procedure Act 51 of 1977. This law prevents the prosecution of certain offences after 20 years. Assault is not listed as one of the exceptions to the 20 year prescription period. As matters stand, the right to prosecute those responsible for this 1983 offence has lapsed.

4. FHR has requested Wim Trengove SC and myself to prepare an opinion setting out the prospects of success of a constitutional attack on the validity of section 18 of the Criminal Procedure Act 51 of 1977 (brief outstanding).

5. The purpose of this memorandum is to consider whether the police docket discloses sufficient evidence upon which a prosecution could proceed successfully. In my view there is considerable evidence available to support an assault or assault with intent to do grievous bodily harm prosecutions. This evidence will be summarized below.

TP M

6. The memorandum will also highlight other matters of concern arising from the police docket and propose recommendations going forward.

BACKGROUND

7. On the evidence contained in sworn statements in the police docket the following pertinent facts have been alleged by several deponents:

7.1. Nokhuthula Simelane ("Simelane"), a young woman who performed underground activities for the ANC as a courier, was lured into a trap at the Carlton Centre by members of the South African Security Branch in August or September 1983.

7.2. She was removed to the police barracks in Norwood where she was interrogated and repeatedly assaulted for one to three weeks.

7.3. Simelane was then removed to an isolated farm in Northam near Thabazimbi where her interrogations and torture continued. She was so badly assaulted that Simelane's face was barely recognizable and she could no longer walk.

TPM

7.4. Towards the end of the year Simelane was removed from the Northam farm by Security Branch members W H Coetzee, A Pretorius and F B Mong and never seen again. These policemen claimed at the time that they were returning her to Swaziland. Several of the police deponents to statements in the docket however suspect that Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong removed Simelane from the farm in order to murder her.

EVIDENCE OF ASSAULT AND TORTURE

8. Four Security Branch members stated under oath in their statements that they personally witnessed assaults perpetrated against Simelane or they saw clear evidence of assault marks on her face and body.

9. These four persons were members of the SAP's Security Branch at the time Simelane's ordeal. All worked under the direct command of W H Coetzee and A Pretorius. At the time Coetzee was a warrant officer and Pretorius was a sergeant.

Mzimkulu Nimrod Veyi

10. Sergeant MZIMKULU NIMROD VEYI stated that while at the farm in Northam, Simelane was interrogated by Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong. He personally observed the assaults and it seems he took part in the torture of

TPM

Simelane. According to Veyi, her hands and feet were cuffed. Her sleep was kept to a minimum. She was kicked and slapped. A bag was pulled over her head. At times she could no longer stand. He stated: "I was present and did what was expected of me".

11. The last time Veyi saw Simelane was close to the 4 way stop of Fochville/ Carltonville and the Johannesburg/ Potchefstroom roads. He saw Simelane in the boot of Coetzee's vehicle. Simelane was alive with her hands cuffed behind her back. Her feet were also cuffed. A few days later when he asked Pretorius where Simelane was Pretorius responded: "Moenie baie vrae vrag nie". (Don't ask so many questions). Veyi spoke to one of his colleagues, Sergeant Mathibe, who said that Coetzee and Pretorius had shot, killed and buried Simelane near Rustenburg. Mathibe has since died.

Mokone Sefuthi

12. MOKONE SEFUTHI, a former policeman, was posted to guard Simelane while she was held in a room on the roof of the Northam police barracks. He stated that one of the residents in the flats, a child, > "...discovered us detaining her there after she had been screaming from assaults".

13. While Simelane was held at the farm in Northam she was interrogated by Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong. She was hand and foot cuffed, severely beaten and tortured. At one stage she was unrecognizable. According to Sefuthi at one stage she was too badly injured to walk. He stated that Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong continuously threatened her with death during the interrogations.

TP

14. After Simelane had been removed, Sefuthi asked Pretorius what happened to her and he stated that he "would never see her again".

15. At paragraph 44 of Sefuthi's life history which he supplied to police investigators he explained how an attempt had been made on his life by white security policemen. Following an investigation he states that he was summoned by a state advocate to the office of the Attorney General in Johannesburg. He was advised by this advocate that there was "a strong case" but he could not allow it to proceed as the "attackers were state members acting under cover and he cannot hamper the image of the state." This anecdote tends to support the notion that apartheid era prosecutors were unlikely to proceed with politically sensitive prosecutions against persons aligned with the State.

Moleke Peter Lengene

16. Sergeant MOLEKE PETER LENGENE was forced under duress to make a false statement to the police. At the time of the police investigation in 1996 he was still under the direct command of Coetzee.

TP

17. However, even in his statement in which he concealed the full truth he conceded that Simelane "did have some bruises on her face". He said he also notice bruises on her hands. He claimed that Simelane explained to that this was because of the handcuffs.

18. In a subsequent interview with the investigating officer Lengene admitted that his "original statement was not the whole truth." Before making his statement he met with Coetzee and Pretorius who advised him that they would receive a copy of his statement and they told him:

"... that the case could not be proved because there is no proof."

19. Lengene stated that he feared Coetzee and Pretorius very much and "at no cost must they become aware of my statement ...." He was sent to guard her at the Norwood Police Barracks. The first time he saw her "she was already beaten up." She had bruises on her face, hands and feet. Her hands and legs were cuffed. He claimed that he was never present when she was interrogated at the police barracks.

20. It appears that Simelane was permanently handcuffed, and possibly foot cuffed as well. This appears from the statement of Lengene where he states that at the Northam farm Sergeant Sefuthi

"... was in possession of the keys for the cuffs. This was so he could untie her if she wished to relieve herself."

21. Lengene stated that on his arrival at the farm he found that "this lady was in a bad condition." Lengene said that Simelane told him that she was very afraid of Coetzee as he was "very hard on her during interrogation."

Mohapi Lazarus Selhmolela

22. Inspector MOHAPI LAZARUS SELHMOLELA stated that he was one Simelane's guards at the Norwood Police Barracks. He said that while in his presence nobody assaulted her at the barracks, but:

"... it was however clear to me that she had been assaulted. Her face was badly swollen."

23. Selhmolela stated that the interrogation at the farm was carried out by Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong. He said that Mathiba was also present. He stated that Simelane was assaulted by use of a bag over her head and the use of electrical shocks. According to Selhmolela:

"She became very weak and could no longer walk. Us black members always tried our best to nurse her but had to be careful not to be caught by our superiors."

24. He said that the assaults were the cause of her changing her physical appearance. He continued:

TPM

"She was treated very badly for a woman. ... One night this same lady was taken to the zinc dam where Radebe threw her in. She was thrown into the dam after interrogation bouts."

OTHER MATTERS ARISING FROM THE DOCKET

25. On 19 February 1996 the Head of Priority Crimes, Gauteng addressed a letter to the Secretariat of Safety and Security and the National Head of Priority Crimes. In this letter, which summed up the investigations to date, it was stated inter alia:

25.1. That Simelane was detained and tortured at the married quarters of the SAPS Norwood for about 2 weeks. She was then taken to a farm at Northham where she was further detained, tortured and interrogated. This lasted till the festive season, December 1983. This was the last time she was seen by the witnesses.

25.2. The actual interrogators were alleged to be Coetzee, Pretorius, Mong, Lengene and Radebe. Deceased witnesses or suspects are Sergeant Mathuba and Frank Langa "Big Boy".

25.3. On 17 February 1996 Sergeant Lengene was re-interviewed at his request. He said his first statement was not truthful. Lengene explained that Pretorius told him that "it was up to him and Norman "Scotch" to save their skins"; that Director Thoms (Head of Priority Crimes, Gauteng) would reveal all that he said in his statement; and that Captain Leask (the investigating officer) would not be able to prove any charges as "he had no proof of a body." After the first interview Lengene was taken to Coetzee who wanted to know what had been said in the interview. He was told to rewrite a statement which Pretorius okayed and told him to keep it in a safe place so that it could later be handed to their attorney as they were busy arranging this through the police.

TP

25.4. On 10 February 1996 Pretorius and Coetzee secretly met with Scotch and coached him into what his version should be if Captain Leask approached him. This discussion was secretly taped by the investigation team.

25.5. It has become "very clear" from the meeting with Sergeant Lengene on 17 February 1996 that the Simelane incident was: "

> "not a one off event but part of an extensive programme involving bombings, kidnapping and murder of numerous persons."

25.6. Lengene confessed his own part in a murder in which he shot someone with an AK47 given to him by Pretorius and Coetzee.

TP

270

25.7. It was of great concern that Coetzee and Pretorius were still in positions in the police where they could easily continue with intimidation and defeating the ends of justice because of their contacts with the CIS and its members. This could lead to the elimination of members. It was suggested that they be transferred to the Uniform pro-active division.

26. On 26 February 1996 the investigating officer requested the Electronics Unit of the Forensic Lab to "diminish the background noise" on the micro cassette tape which recorded the conversation between Coetzee, Pretorius and Scotch on 10 February 1996. It is not clear from the police docket whether the Electronics Unit was successful in this endeavour. A document titled "RESULT OF TRIAL: INVESTIGATION BY FORENSIC SCIENCE LAB. REF NO: 8625/96 (T1759)" was returned to Captain Leask but nothing was stated in the document.

27. According to the investigation diary the case was discussed with Deputy Attorney General Kevin Attwell and Advocate De Vries on 23 February 1996. .They recommended that the matter be discussed with Dr De Oliviera of the Third Force Investigations. A discussion was held with Dr de Oliviera. At this meeting it was decided that all possible evidence must be gathered and the investigation must proceed.

TP

271

28. On 6 March 1996, the Assistant Commissioner NCIS, L Van der Westhuizen, sent a letter to all Provincial Commissioners calling on SAPS mortuaries to supply lists of all unidentified bodies removed by the SAPS between 1980 and 1996, including setting out race and sex, place of discovery and cause of death, case or inquest number, fingerprints or photos on record. No responses were recorded in the police docket.

29. On 22 October 1996 the following entry was made in the investigation diary:

> "Saak word vir afwagting van PG terruggehou. Adv Ebrahim lees die stukke. Open n Ondersoek dag we..eus (?) boek - NW Thoms"

The matter was to be held back pending the instructions of the Attorney General. Advocate Ebrahim was reading the statements and exhibits. Captain Leask then filed the investigation notes in the "respective files". No instructions from Advocate Ebrahim were recorded in the investigation diary.

30. The final entry in the investigation diary was dated 10 February 1998 which stated: "amnesty hearings o/s". O/s presumably means "outstanding".

31. On 6 July 1998, Willem Coetzee was warned of his rights in terms of section 35 of the Constitution in respect of the "murder" of Nokuthula Simelane. He declined to make a statement.

TP

CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

32. There is more than sufficient evidence on hand to proceed with assault and assault with intent to do grievous bodily harm charges against Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong. This much has also been confirmed by the state advocate handling this matter. It should be noted that in the amnesty hearing, Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong conceded that on the "odd occasion" Simelane would be given "a slap or a punch in order to secure her co-operation".[1] (Another consultant is conducting a review of the Amnesty hearing).

33. FHR should proceed with its endeavours to challenge section 18 of Act 51 of 1977 which is preventing a prosecution of the perpetrators in this matter.

33.1. Counsel should also be requested to give an opinion on whether potential assault charges in this matter may be considered as crimes against humanity as contemplated in section 4 of the Implementation of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court Act, 2002. Crimes against humanity are listed as one of the exceptions to the 20 year prescription provision contained in section 18 of Act 51 of 1977.

---

[1] Page 3 of the Amnesty Decision, AC/2001/185

TP 07

33.2. Counsel should also be requested to provide an opinion on whether the Amnesty Committee misdirected itself in granting amnesty to Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong on the abduction of Ms Simelane. The Amnesty Committee rejected the evidence of Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong on several aspects, including in relation to the circumstances of Simelane's captivity. The Committee stated:

> "... we have no doubt that the versions of Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong are untruthful where they conflict with those of Veyi and Selamolela on the issues of dispute" [2]

Notwithstanding the manifest failure of Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong to disclose in full, the Amnesty Committee granted them indemnity against prosecution in respect of the abduction.[3] Counsel should be required to give an opinion as to the prospects of success of setting aside this decision before the High Court.

34. In terms of matters arising from the review of the police docket I would suggest that FHR meet with the investigation team to discuss the following aspects:

34.1. The bringing of defeating the ends of justice charges against Coetzee and Pretorius for intimidating Sergeant Lengene into making a false statement

---

[2] Page 6 of the Amnesty Decision, AC/2001/185

[3] Section 20(1)(c) of Act 34 of 1995 stipulated that amnesty may only be granted in respect of an act, omission of offence if "the applicant has made a full disclosure of all relevant facts."

TP 67

and for attempting to coach Norman Mkhonza (Scotch) into making a false statement.

274

34.2. The investigation of numerous acts of sabotage, murder and other false flag type operations carried out by the Security Branch as referred to by Sergeant Lengene. These include the booby trapping of limpet mines and the provision of such mines to unsuspecting recruits; the shooting of recruits; attacks on houses of councilors and other prominent persons; and the bombing of municipal offices and hostels.

34.3. The following up on the results of the examination of the micro cassette tape containing the conversation between Scotch, Pretorius and Coetzee; and the following up on the request for lists of unidentified bodies received by police mortuaries between 1980 and 1996.

34.4. Detective Inspector Msebenzi Timothy Radebe's sworn statement is inconsistent with the statements made by his colleagues in several respects. His statement is in all likelihood untruthful. He admits his participation in the removal of Simelane from the Carlton Centre to the SAP married quarters in Norwood. Other witnesses also place him at the farm in Northam. In particular, Inspector Selhmolela alleges that Radebe threw Simelane into the zinc dam. Radebe was not an applicant in the amnesty application in the matter of AC/2001/185 and accordingly he did not receive indemnity against prosecution in respect of the abduction or kidnapping of Simelane.

TP

34.5. Kidnapping is listed as one of the exceptions to the 20 year prescription rule in section 18 of Act 51 of 1977. While Radebe claims in his statement that he "arrested" Simelane it is clear from the facts that this was no arrest but rather a kidnapping or abduction. Simelane was not taken to a police station or ever brought before a Court. The facts accord with the essential elements of the crime of kidnapping, which are the unlawful and intentional depriving of a person of liberty of movement.[4] There appears to be nothing in the way of a kidnapping prosecution being brought against Detective Inspector Radebe. Prosecutors should be urged to prosecute him without delay.

HOWARD VARNEY

CHAMBERS
SANDTON
18 AUGUST 2005

[4] J Burchell & J Milton, Principles of Criminal Law, 3rd ed, Juta & Co., 2005 at 758.

TP

TN 18

18

276

NATIONS UNIES
DROITS DE L'HOMME
HAUT-COMMISSARIAT

UNITED NATIONS
HUMAN RIGHTS
OFFICE OF THE HIGH COMMISSIONER

HAUT-COMMISSARIAT AUX DROITS DE L'HOMME • OFFICE OF THE HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR HUMAN RIGHTS
PALAIS DES NATIONS • 1211 GENEVA 10, SWITZERLAND
www.ohchr.org • TEL: + 41 22 917 9199 • FAX: + 41 22 917 9006 • E-MAIL: wgeid@ohchr.org

MANDATE OF THE WORKING GROUP ON ENFORCED OR INVOLUNTARY DISAPPEARANCES

REFERENCE:

G/SO 217/1/South Africa

24 July 2014

Dear Mr. William Kerfoot,

I have the honour to write to you on behalf of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, which held its 103rd session from 7 to 16 May 2014, in Geneva, Switzerland. I would like to refer to the reported disappearance in South Africa which your organisation submitted regarding Ms. Nokulthula Aurelia Simelane (case No. 10004285).

The Working Group considered this case and transmitted it to the Government of South Africa in 13 June 2014. In transmitting this case, the Chair-Rapporteur of the Working Group expressed his hope that appropriate investigations would be carried out in order to clarify the fate and whereabouts of the disappeared person and to protect her rights. Any information received from the Government of South Africa concerning this case will be transmitted to you in due course. I wish to emphasize that, in view of the purely humanitarian character of the Working Group's action, any information given to you on this matter is exclusively destined for the relatives of the disappeared person.

I would like to take this opportunity to inform you that the Working Group shall hold its 104th session in Geneva from 15 to 19 September 2014. The Working Group would be grateful if any written information which your organisation wishes to submit for the Working Group's consideration at its 104th session could be received by 22 August 2014. I would like to bring to your attention that, however, information may be submitted at any time of the year and it will be reviewed by the Working Group during its forthcoming sessions as soon as it can be processed.

In conformity with its usual practice, the Working Group receives representatives of interested organizations and families of the persons reported disappeared during its sessions. Should your organisation wish to request a meeting with the experts of the Working Group at the 104th session, please contact the Secretariat at the United Nations Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights in Geneva (tel: 0041 (0)22 917 9286; fax: 0041 (0)22 917 9006; e-mail: wgeid@ohchr.org) by 22 August 2014, to

.../2

Mr. William Kerfoot
The Legal Resource Centre
3rd floor Greenmarket Place, 54 Shortmarket Street, Cape Town 8001, South Africa
Tel.: 2721 481 3000. Fax: 272121 423 0935
william@lrc.org.za

TP

schedule an appointment or for any additional information. Please note that unfortunately the Working Group will not be able to provide any financial assistance.

Ariel Dulitzky
Chair-Rapporteur
Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances

TP

Search... Search Archives

City Press

Navigation

JUST IN ANC

COLUMNISTS

My sister's heart

Thembi Nkadimeng @City_Press
26 December 2013 16:00

Like 233 Tweet 37 40

Thembi Nkadimeng, Nokuthula Simelane's sister, at her home in Wingate Park, Pretoria East. Picture: Bram Lammers

On the 30th anniversary of her sister's disappearance, Thembi Nkadimeng writes about the MK envoy who refused to turn her back on the cause

The story of my sister, Nokuthula Simelane, is about freedom and betrayal. My sister believed in freedom with every fibre of her being.

It was her unshakeable dedication to freedom that took her to the Carlton Centre in Johannesburg on the morning of September 8 1983.

TALKING POINT

Oscar Pistorius sobs as he is found not guilty of murder

Paralympian Oscar Pistorius is not guilty of murder but can still be found guilty of culpable homicide, Judge Thokozile Masipa said in the North Gauteng High Court in Pretoria today.

MORE TALKING POINTS

WE LIKE

1 SA won't look nice

TP 1

This year marks the 30th anniversary of her disappearance.

A 23-year-old university graduate at the time, she was a courier for Umkhonto weSizwe (MK), the ANC's armed wing, moving between Swaziland and South Africa. She was betrayed by one of her own.

Instead of a scheduled rendezvous with a comrade, she was met by members of South Africa's hated security police, who shoved her into the boot of a vehicle.

This betrayal was to condemn Nokuthula to a choice between life and death. An informant's life – a betrayal that would crush her spirit – or death with her dignity intact. In reality, there was no real choice for Nokuthula.

A photo of Nokuthula Simelane from the family archives

Her commitment to what she loved most dearly made the first option unthinkable.

My sister's death was not swift and it was not painless. The security police drove her to the police barracks in Johannesburg.

There, they tortured her.

After several days, she was moved to an isolated farm in the without white people – Julius Malema

2 Watch – Judge Masipa: 'No proof of premeditated murder'

3 SIU keeps Nkandla documents under lock and key

4 Oscar Pistorius trial in quotes

5 Brave Bafana settle for draw with Nigeria

VOTE

Bafana Bafana settled for a goalless draw with Nigeria in their Afcon qualifier. I think ...

○ Well done to Bafana. It was a good performance

○ It's disappointing. They should have won

○ It's a good sign. Bafana are improving under Shakes Mashaba

○ As always, Bafana's major problem is a lack of goals

VOTE VIEW RESULTS

Polls Archive

north of the then Transvaal, where her abuse intensified. It lasted for some three weeks.

Her torturers were convinced that with enough force this young, inexperienced woman would break and become an informant.

They believed that it was just a question of more violence and more fear: a few more vicious blows to her head, to her face and her body, or perhaps a few more near-drownings in an icy dam.

Maybe more days of solitary confinement shackled in handcuffs and leg irons in filthy conditions would push her over the edge.

The black police officers who testified before the Amnesty Committee of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC) reported that after weeks of torture, my sister was unrecognisable. H er face was an appalling mess of bruises and swelling. She was too weak to walk.

The last time they saw her was when she was being pushed into the boot of one of the white officer's vehicles.

My family and I have not rested since we learnt that my sister went missing. We know the most terrible things about what she suffered. But we don't know how she died and where her body is today. We have spent three decades looking for Nokuthula.

We even appointed private detectives to assist us. Until we find her remains, or get answers about what really happened to her, we remain trapped in the past.

We did not expect the former South African Police to investigate themselves. However, we firmly believed that the new democratic South Africa would take the necessary steps.

We were wrong. This was the second betrayal of Nokuthula and everything she stood for.

This betrayal cut the deepest. My father went to his grave without knowing what happened to Nokuthula. My mother, now sick and old, fears that she will die without knowing – and without burying Nokuthula's remains with the dignity she deserves.

The Amnesty Committee of the TRC concluded that the white officers had lied to the commission about the degree of torture as well as her ultimate fate. They, nevertheless, granted amnesty to those officers for Nokuthula's kidnapping.

TP

Nobody applied for amnesty for her murder. The committee betrayed its own law, which states that amnesty can only be granted in exchange for the truth and full disclosure.

How could they grant amnesty when they knew that the white officers had lied about what they did to Nokuthula during and after her kidnapping? The Amnesty Committee betrayed our faith in them and in the truth and reconciliation process.

The police and the prosecutors could have taken up the matter. However, they chose not to, though a police docket was opened in 1996.

After the amnesty decision in 2001, the matter was referred to the National Prosecuting Authority.

When I approached them, they advised me that their hands were tied as they were waiting for a new policy to deal with the so-called political cases. When the new prosecution policy emerged in late 2005, it essentially created a backdoor amnesty.

It gave perpetrators, like my sister's killers, a second opportunity to escape justice.

Together with the widows of the Cradock Four, the young freedom fighters murdered by a police hit squad in 1985, I went to court to challenge the policy. In 2008 a Pretoria High Court judge struck down the policy, declaring it to be absurd and unconstitutional.

We thought this meant that the path was eventually cleared for justice to take its course. Again, we were wrong.

This time the prosecutors claimed that the police were refusing to provide investigators. It took a high-level intervention for an investigating officer to eventually be appointed to the case in 2010 – but apparently the docket had gone "missing".

Three years later, even after finding the docket, there was no progress. It was clear to me that the authorities were not going to investigate the case seriously, let alone prosecute anyone.

They even refused to charge those police officers involved in the kidnapping who did not apply for amnesty. At the beginning of 2013, I instructed my lawyers to demand the holding of a judicial inquest into her death.

TP

This request was refused. After 17 years of idleness, the prosecutors advised us that their investigations were still not yet complete. We do not believe them.

We have lost all faith in the prosecutors and police. They have betrayed our trust.

They now claim that they are occupied with inquiries, which could conceivably drag on indefinitely while witnesses and suspects grow old and die. We do not know why the authorities in the new South Africa would turn their backs on one of their own.

Nokuthula's ultimate sacrifice helped to pave the way for the freedom and democracy we now enjoy.

We cannot bury her and we can find no peace. The betrayal of my sister, and what she stood for, is almost complete.

RELATED LINKS

» Two MK graves to be exhumed

» Body of MK leader found

» Alarm only raised hours after girl went missing

» Diary of a cadre who lived in the shadow of death

CONTRIBUTE TO THIS STORY: Send us a tip Suggest a correction

Like 233 Tweet 37

40

COMMENTS

TP

2 Comments City Press Login

Sort by Best Share Favorite

Join the discussion...

Jungle Jazz · 8 months ago

One day freedom will reign not this rainbow nation facade we are currently under

2 · Reply · Share ›

Umlilo ↛ Jungle Jazz · 8 months ago

Really sad.....and to think that this is what we were in the struggle for; not only the corruption and self-entitlement, but also the marginalisation of struggle comrades/cadres, many of whom made the supreme sacrifice.

In time, when the poor mother passes on, and Thembi too, Nokuthula will cease to exist. In African custom, however, the spirit will never rest and the curse of the ancestors will be on us all!

2 · Reply · Share ›

ALSO ON CITY PRESS WHAT'S THIS?

Please pay up so DA can get Zuma charges reinstated – Helen 5 comments • 9 hours ago

Mgadeni Ngubane — U must ask even ANC supporters im sure many will also like to c him go

Jacob Zuma especially committed to fighting corruption

26 comments • a day ago

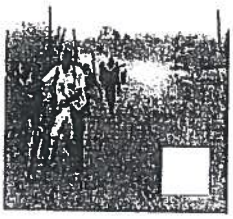
Luthando Lukhozi — I sometimes feel government, sorry - I mean the ANC, deliberately make

'Smile, Oscar,' say supporters, as judgment day arrives

EFF teaches Parliament 'a lesson'

HOT TOPICS OSCAR PISTORIUS THULI MADONSELA SPY TAPES JACOB ZUMA

POLITICS NEWS SPORT ENTERTAINM



TP 9

284

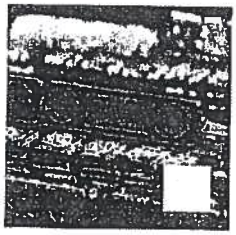
11 September 2014 17:04

'False tax clearance certificate used to secure lucrative contract'

11 September 2014 16:41

'No road, no school' protest costs Kuruman pupils a year

11 September 2014 16:02



Bafana's treatment of Khune annoys Chiefs coach Baxter

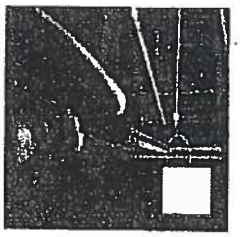
11 September 2014 11:12

Kanye West 'fine' after alleged seizure

HOW TO

7 September 2014 6:00

How to ... Buy gold as retail client



22 August 2014 12:51

The fine art of buying art

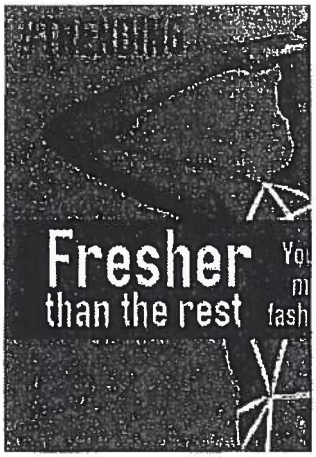
19 August 2014 11:45

How to ... cope with sending money home

17 August 2014 15:00

How to ... start trading on the JSE

TP 11



MOST POPULAR

- ANC's top 6 split over e-tolls
- We want to cut Mfundi Vundla to his size – Zwelinzima Vavi
- Jacob Zuma 'doesn't have powers to remove Buyelekhaya Dalindyebo'
- Khanyi Dhlomo's Luminance loan was not quite 'paid'
- SABC's Ellen

Tshabalala fails to prove she has varsity qualifications

MOST COMMENTED

- Affirmative action just got real
- Thuli Madonsela is on the CIA's payroll, says deputy minister
- Teach Jacob Zuma a lesson, vote DA – Helen Zille
- Madonsela spy saga: Maphatsoe's claims enrage US diplomats
- China 'thanks' SA over Dalai Lama visa

SUPERSPORT LIVE SCORING

JOBS On the market?

PROPERTY Find your dream home

TRAVEL Look, book, go!

TP

OLX CLASSIFIEDS Free classifieds

KALAHARI.COM Music, books and more

DATING

CAREERS AT CITY PRESS

ADVERTORIALS

PARTNERS

CONTACT US

TERMS & CONDITIONS

CALL US

How to get hold of City Press

RSS FEEDS

News delivered really simply

TP

ADVERTISE

Your brand in City Press

SUBSCRIBE

Subscribe to City Press

© 2014 City Press. All Rights Reserved.

TP 18

TN 20

20 289

THEMBISILE PHUMELELE NKADIMENG

OFFICE OF THE NATIONAL DIRECTOR
2013 -01- 30
MOTSWOMYANE S
NATIONAL PROSECUTING AUTHORITY

698 Umhlanga Street
Wingate Park
PRETORIA 0181

Tel: 012 421 3500
Fax: 012 4213516
Cell: 082 553 6680
Email: nkadimeng.thembi@gmail.com

29 January 2013

The Acting National Director of Public Prosecutions
National Prosecuting Authority
Private Bag X752
Pretoria
0001

BY HAND

Fax: (012) 845 6337

Dear Dr Silas Ramaite,

REQUEST FOR THE HOLDING OF A FORMAL INQUEST IN TERMS OF SECTION 5 OF THE INQUESTS ACT 58 OF 1959 IN RESPECT OF THE KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE (PRIORITY INVESTIGATION: JV PLEIN: 1469/02/1996)

I am the sister of Nokuthula Aurelia Simelane ("Nokuthula"). My identity number is 730210 0329 088. On behalf of my family, I seek the holding of a formal inquest in terms of Act 58 of 1959 in respect of the circumstances surrounding the murder and other offences perpetrated by members of the former South African Police Security Branch against Nokuthula.

Background

Nokuthula was the first child of Ernestina and the late Matthews Simelane. She was a member of Umkhonto we Sizwe (MK), the military wing of the African National Congress (ANC). My sister was a student at the University of Swaziland in the early 1980s. During this time, she acted as a go-between for the ANC and exiled leaders in

TP

Swaziland. In September 1983 shortly after completing her university studies, and whilst on an MK mission to South Africa, she was kidnapped by the Security Branch from the Carlton Centre in Johannesburg. She was then brutally tortured over a period of several weeks and then disappeared.

Most of the policemen who kidnapped and tortured her and then caused her disappearance applied to the TRC for amnesty. They received amnesty for her kidnapping even though they were found to have been untruthful about their treatment of my sister.[1] The senior officers were denied amnesty for her vicious assault. None of the police officers applied for amnesty for the murder of Nokuthula. The senior police officers, in whose presence she was last seen, have refused to disclose the whereabouts of the remains of Nokuthula. To this day her remains have not been found for a burial with dignity.

My family and I have constantly searched for the truth about what happened to my sister. Shortly after her disappearance we spoke with ANC members. We enquired at the South Africa / Swaziland border whether she had crossed into South Africa, but there was no record of her. We even made inquiries in neighbouring countries such as Botswana. Nokhuthula's disappearance was reported to the police, both in Swaziland and, subsequently, in South Africa.

All these efforts proved fruitless until early 1996 when the Sowetan newspaper published a story about Nokuthula's disappearance. The newspaper article appeared to finally spur the police into action. A police investigation under case number CAS1469/02/1996 was opened under the auspices of the Priority Crimes Unit based at John Vorster Square (now Johannesburg Central Police Station). The investigating officer was Captain Leask. During July 1998 one of the senior officers was warned of his rights in terms of section 35 of the Constitution in respect of the "murder" of Nokuthula Simelane. He declined to make a statement.

[1] Decision (AC/2001/185) of the Amnesty Committee of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission.

We raised her disappearance with the TRC. We have pleaded with prosecutors to take the case forward. I have even appointed private detectives. A documentary was made and screened on TV ("Betrayal", 2006). A statue was erected in her memory in Bethal. However we are still without answers.

We know from the TRC hearings that my sister suffered terribly at the hands of the South African security branch. We know that she refused to collaborate with the forces of Apartheid. For this she paid the ultimate price. My father died in 2001, without knowing what happened to his daughter. I refuse to give up the search for the truth and justice.

Attempts to seek justice

I have met police officers as well as prosecutors from the Priority Crimes Litigation Unit (PCLU) of the National Prosecuting Authority (NPA) on a few occasions. On each occasion various excuses were provided as to why this case could not go forward.

Initially the PCLU advised that there was sufficient evidence to proceed against certain of the officers on charges of assault to do grievous bodily harm in respect of the physical torture of Nokuthula. However, they advised us that they were prevented from proceeding with assault prosecutions as the right to prosecute such offences had prescribed by virtue of section 18 of the Criminal Procedure Act 51 of 1977.

The PCLU also advised that their hands were, in any event, tied by an effective moratorium against the prosecution of the so-called political cases of the past. They were not permitted to proceed until a standardized policy had been put in place to deal with such cases. Towards the end of 2005 the Prosecution Policy was duly amended. It provided for an effective back-door amnesty for those responsible for so-called political crimes and who had not previously applied for amnesty. Together with the wives of the Cradock 4 I applied to court to have this policy set aside as unconstitutional. The Pretoria High Court struck down the policy in the case of Nkadimeng & Others v The National Director of Public Prosecutions & Others (TPD case no 32709/07). In this matter the NPA had argued that the amended policy survived constitutional scrutiny as families could still bring private prosecutions in matters where the NDPP declined to prosecute. The court rejected this contention stating that it was the primary responsibility of the NPA to prosecute. The NPA was denied leave to appeal.

TP

Following the striking down of the amendments to the prosecution policy I was advised that the PCLU was still unable to take this matter forward because they lacked police detectives to carry out the necessary investigations.

During the course of 2006 one of my legal representatives presented the PCLU with a legal opinion in which it was concluded that the physical and mental abuse perpetrated against Nokhuthula constituted the international crime of torture. Torture was, by 1983, a prohibited and unlawful act in terms of customary international law. South Africa was obliged to investigate and prosecute transgressions of customary international law as well as violations of the Geneva Conventions. While the PCLU did not dispute the conclusions of this opinion they did not take the matter forward.

My legal representatives also proposed that those suspects who did not apply for amnesty be prosecuted for kidnapping. I am advised that kidnapping is listed as one of the exceptions to the 20 year prescription rule in section 18 of Act 51 of 1977. Notwithstanding that there was no legal impediment to the preferring of such charges this proposal was rejected. My legal representatives also proposed that charges of defeating the ends of justice be brought against two of the senior officers for intimidating a junior officer into making a false statement and for attempting to coach a witness into making a false statement. The PCLU declined to pursue such charges.

Other excuses include an apparent lack of evidence. In particular it has been claimed that none of the evidence that was led before the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC) may be used in subsequent legal proceedings. I am advised that this view is without merit. It is based on an erroneous reading of section 31 of the Promotion of

TP 07

National Unity and Reconciliation Act 34 of 1995 which, in any event, was not invoked in these particular proceedings before the TRC.

The need for a formal inquest

This matter is now urgent. Nearly 30 years has passed since Nokuthula's disappearance. Some 17 years has lapsed since the more recent police docket was opened. My mother is now elderly and sickly. Witnesses are also getting old. Some have died in suspicious circumstances.

The PCLU had previously suggested that an inquest be held in this matter. At that time my family and I preferred to see a prosecution taking place. Indeed we have been trying to launch a private prosecution, but we have been unable to raise sufficient funds to pay the security for costs, which we are advised will be a substantial sum of money. In the circumstances we now wish to have formal inquest held as speedily as possible.

If the authorities were going to prosecute this matter such prosecution would have taken place many years ago. This case has dragged on for way too long, and such delay has undermined the prospects for justice and played into the hands of the perpetrators. With every day that goes by without action being taken, the interests of justice are severely eroded. Moreover, and most regrettably, we have lost complete faith in the PCLU to run a successful prosecution.

Last week I met with the investigating officer, Captain Masehela. He advised me that he submitted his report to Advocate Chris Macadam at the PCLU during July 2011. In this report he proposed that this matter be dealt with in an inquest. I assume that this report was submitted in compliance with section 4 of the Inquest Act. I then spoke with Advocate Macadam who advised me to approach Madeleine Fullard, the Head of the Missing Persons Task Team at the National Prosecuting Authority of South Africa.

I met with Ms Fullard who advised that her Task Team had not been able to locate the remains of Nokuthula. She suggested that I approach the suspects and offer not to prosecute them if they disclose the location of Nokuthula's remains. I have discussed this suggestion with my family and we have decided not to do a deal with the suspects. The suspects have had more than ample time to come forward and disclose the whereabouts of the remains. They have chosen rather to cause me and my family untold pain and anguish by maintaining a wall of lies and deceit.

TP

Please advise me per return whether the statements and relevant documents have been submitted to a magistrate or judicial officer in terms of section 5 of the Inquest Act. If not, please advise why not. If the documents have been submitted, please advise which magistrate or judicial officer is dealing with this matter. I am advised that I am entitled to be given reasonable notice of the holding of an inquest in terms of section 7 of the Inquest Act. I further request that steps be taken to ensure that the inquest is a formal public inquest which includes the giving of oral evidence. Given the sensitivities of this matter I request that this inquest be held in the High Court of South Africa.

Should you at any point choose to institute criminal proceedings in this matter I request that you appoint a special prosecutor to lead the prosecution, in consultation with me and my family.

I accordingly ask that you treat this request with great urgency and advise me at your earliest convenience.

Yours sincerely,

Simelane

T P NKADIMENG

Copy to: Advocate Chris Macadam, Priority Crimes Litigation Unit

TP

ANNEXURE "TN 21": IN CAMERA AFFIDAVIT

(SEE ATTACHED FILE)

ON RESUMPTION ON 20 MAY 1999 - DAY 12

CHAIRPERSON: For the record, it is Thursday the 20th of May 1999, we are continuing with the amnesty applications of Coetzee & Others in respect of the Simelane matter.

Mr Lamey, you hadn't completed your evidence-in-chief?

MR LAMEY: Yes Mr Chairman.

CHAIRPERSON: Mr Veyi I remind you that you are still under oath.

NIMROD VEYI: (s.u.o)

EXAMINATION BY MR LAMEY: (cont)

Sorry Mr Chairman, my client just points out to me that he wants to change his headphones. Thank you Mr Chairman.

Mr Veyi, I just want to come back on one aspect, can you hear me, during the times that you were present during interrogation sessions at the farm in Northum, can you comment about, can you give any comment about the question whether the lady Simelane, about whether she was allowed to sleep and if so, how did it happen?

MR VEYI: As I have already said, she would sleep maybe for 30 minutes or an hour and then she would be woken up and questioned again.

MR LAMEY: Okay, now you say in your supplemented application in paragraph 9(a)(i) that you apply for amnesty for your involvement, participation and the kidnapping of this person and the assaults on her during interrogation, is that correct?

MR VEYI: That is correct.

MR LAMEY: So you also apply for amnesty for every other offence or delict which may be inferred from the facts of your participation and involvement, is that correct?

MR VEYI: That is correct.

MR LAMEY: Further you state that in so far as you have been informed by the late Sergeant Mothiba, this lady was shot and her body buried at Rustenburg, you also apply for amnesty for your omission to report this or for the possible offence of being an accessory after the fact, is that correct?

MR VEYI: That is correct.

MR LAMEY: In this regard, when Sergeant Mothiba told you this that she was shot and killed and buried at Rustenburg, can you comment as to why you did not report this to any authority?

MR VEYI: After I met with Mkhize at the four way stop ...

MR LAMEY: Is that now Coetzee, Mkhize? Who is Mkhize?

MR VEYI: It is Coetzee. At the four way stop I saw Nokuthula in the car boot, I didn't tell anybody, but I kept that to myself.

MR LAMEY: Right, perhaps can I just get back, when you saw her in the car boot, she was still alive, is that correct?

TP

MR VEYI: Yes, she was still alive. She was swollen, her face was swollen.

MR LAMEY: I am asking when Sergeant Mothiba told you that she was shot and killed and buried at Rustenburg, you didn't report that, or you didn't report this to any authorities?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct, I didn't report it.

MR LAMEY: Can you explain perhaps why you did not do that?

MR VEYI: I didn't report it because the situation at those times, it did not allow me to report it. If I would have reported this, I would be regarded, I don't know how to put this, I would be regarded as a sell-out, as somebody that cannot keep the government secrets.

MR LAMEY: And if you were being regarded as a sell-out, what in your mind, could something happen to you?

MR VEYI: Yes, I would be charged for revealing that sensitive information.

ADV GCABASHE : Explain that, you would be charged for revealing that information, just explain that?

MR VEYI: Everything that we did at those times, those things were secrets. If you joined the Police, you take an oath, especially at the Security Branch, that everything that would be said there, you won't reveal it to anybody. Everything that took place, you won't tell anybody. If it happened that they found out that you are selling out the information, you would be charged.

MR LAMEY: Now the secrecy aspect, what was the reason behind the secrecy aspect and the way the Security Police worked at that stage? The secrecy, you say that you worked under secret conditions during those times, is that correct?

MR VEYI: Yes.

MR LAMEY: In your mind, what was the reason behind all this secrecy among the Security Police members and their activities?

MR VEYI: I can put it this way, because at those times it was during the struggle, if the information, if I would give out the information, it might be possible that the enemy would get that kind of information.

MR LAMEY: Would the enemy then use that information to their advantage against the Security Police and the government at that stage?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR LAMEY: So in other words it was, the reason behind the secrecy if I may make an assumption from what you are saying, it was in order to protect the workings and activities of the Security Branch who actually had to combat the ANC and MK during the struggle and also to protect the government at large, is that correct?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR LAMEY: Now further on on this paragraph 9(a)(iii) you say, you refer also to the places is that correct, the Carlton Centre, Northum and so forth?

TP

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR LAMEY: You explained that she was seriously assaulted as to the nature of her injuries and she suffered injuries on her body, is that correct?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR LAMEY: And further on, if we get to the political objective, Mr Chairman, can I proceed just to lead the witness on this and to read it out to him and ask his confirmation on this?

CHAIRPERSON: Yes.

MR LAMEY: Thank you. The witness is saying he cannot hear me. Can you hear the Interpreter?

MR VEYI: No, I can't.

MR LAMEY: Which channel? 3? Can you hear me now, can you hear the interpretation?

MR VEYI: Yes.

MR LAMEY: You say under the paragraph, it is Exhibit S, page 8, yes, thank you.

MR VISSER: Paragraph 1.

MR LAMEY: Paragraph 1, you say one of the main tasks of the Security Police was to combat the armed struggle led by Umkhonto weSizwe, MK, being the military wing of the ANC, is that correct?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR LAMEY: And you were part of that Security Police, is that correct?

MR VEYI: That is correct.

MR LAMEY: You say further that this armed struggle posed a serious threat to the existence of the previous government, is that correct?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR LAMEY: "As a member of the Security Police at that stage, I regarded it as my duty to follow orders in combating the activities of the ANC and in particular the armed struggle?"

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR LAMEY: You say further that -

"... this particular lady was a member of MK who was intercepted as a result of the undercover work done by Norman Scotch Mkhonza and she was detained for the purposes of interrogation in order to obtain information from her."

MR VEYI: That is correct.

MR LAMEY: You say that the information which was mainly sought as far as you know, was the presence of other MK members or terrorists in the RSA, particularly in Johannesburg, Soweto area?

TP

MR VEYI: That is correct.

MR LAMEY: Further on, particulars on planned attacks or infiltration of MK insurgents from Swaziland, armed caches and the like information, is that correct?

MR VEYI: That is correct.

MR LAMEY: Further on in paragraph 3, page 9 you say the impression that you gained during the interrogation that she was not co-operative and refused to divulge information?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR LAMEY: She was assaulted in order to force her to divulge information which the Security Branch was interested in which you believed that she had?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR LAMEY: From your political own motivation, paragraph 10(b) you say your participation is motivated by the fact that you were at that stage a member of the Security Branch at Soweto and that you strongly believed that the armed struggle of the ANC in collaboration with the South African Communist Party, posed a serious revolutionary threat to the previous government and population, is that correct?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR LAMEY: You also followed orders from your superiors, is that correct?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR LAMEY: You also say that you kept quiet after you heard from the late Sergeant Mothiba that this lady was shot and killed by Coetzee and Pretorius as the disclosure or report would have placed your own life in danger?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR LAMEY: You worked as a Security Policemen under highly secret conditions? You have already actually said that, I am just reading this to you out.

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR LAMEY: Such a report would have been regarded as a serious breach of the secrecy, as a result you would have been regarded as a similar threat to the Security Police and be viewed in the same category as the enemy, is that correct?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR LAMEY: You referred previously also as a sell-out, is that correct?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR LAMEY: You received no any other remuneration as a result of your participation here, except that you received your normal salary?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

TP

MR LAMEY: Mr Chairman, that is the evidence in chief.

NO FURTHER QUESTIONS BY MR LAMEY

CHAIRPERSON: Thank you Mr Lamey. Mr Visser, any questions?

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR VISSER: Thank you Mr Chairman. Mr Veyi, I understand that you are still a member of the South African Police Service, is that correct?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: What is your rank at the moment?

MR VEYI: I am a Sergeant.

MR VISSER: Did you attend Police College and pass out from the Police College?

MR VEYI: Yes, I attended.

MR VISSER: I want to read something to you Mr Veyi, Chairperson, I will refer to Exhibit T, specifically to the newspaper reports, in my order it is the first ...

ADV DE JAGER: I don't know what is wrong with our system. There seems to be something wrong with the system, we receive constantly other noises on the system.

CHAIRPERSON: Yes, I know sometimes if people touch this when it is on, then of course it produces a disturbance, but I don't know ...

MR VISSER: (Microphone not on) Yes Chairperson, I am referring to the newspaper reports and unfortunately we did not paginate it, we should do that, Chairperson it is the one with the heading "Burden of Guilt lifted off Mr X", it is about the sixth page I think, from the front yes. It is dated February, 15, 1995, I just want to read something to the witness. Mr Veyi, would you please listen to what I read to you and I will ask you some questions about that. Under the heading "Time for Truth" it states, this newspaper report states "he knew" and that he refers to Mr X and we have heard that Mr X was you, is that correct?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: "He knew it was time to reveal the truth, the evil deeds of his Intelligence Unit and especially those of his white Commanders had remained hidden for long enough. Mr X thinks it is time they were brought out into the open, his conscience demanded that he do something about it." I skip a sentence and then the next paragraph "besides his getting on years and after almost two decades of serving in the Police Force, he remains a lowly Constable. His white bosses have climbed the ranks to Colonel and General." Now is that information which you gave the reporter?

MR VEYI: The information I gave was about the shooting of Nokuthula because after it appeared in the Sowetan ...

MR VISSER: ... can help you?

MR VEYI: The article that appeared in the Sowetan was this photo. The heading said "Missing in Action". This is what made me to go to the Sowetan and tell them about my story.

MR VISSER: My question to you is this, did you in fact give the information to the reporter, which I have just read to you?

TP

MR VEYI: Yes.

ADV GCABASHE : Can I just get clarity on that Mr Veyi, you are saying that you told the reporter that these evil deeds had to be divulged essentially and that your bosses had moved, climbed the ranks from Colonel to General, while you are still a lowly Constable, that is what Mr Visser read to you in essence, you say you gave that information to the Sowetan?

MR VEYI: I apologise, I didn't understand the question, I didn't say anything about the ranks, but what happened is after I saw this heading in the Sowetan, "Missing in Action" and this photo that I have already showed you, I then went to the Sowetan and then I told Sharon Chetty that I know about this story. She then made a follow up and she wanted to know what happened and then I told her from Carlton Centre, I told her what happened.

ADV GCABASHE : Mr Visser's question is specific, he actually read that passage to you in full and that is what he wants a comment on, not generally what you said to whom, he actually asked you a specific question.

MR VEYI: I didn't say that, I don't know anything about that.

MR VISSER: Are you saying that which I read to you is something which the reporter came up with and it is not based on anything you told her?

MR VEYI: Maybe she just wrote that, but what I told her is about the missing of Nokuthula.

MR VISSER: Yes, and that was after you saw her photograph in the Sowetan, is that right?

MR VEYI: Yes, it was after I saw the photo and then read the story.

MR VISSER: And you indicated, you showed the Committee members the photo that you were referring to, isn't that right?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: Is this the one that I am holding in my hand at the moment?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: Are you sure of that?

MR VEYI: Yes, I am sure.

MR VISSER: It is not true and I will tell you why not, because the article that I read to you from, is dated February, the 15th 1995 and the one that you showed the Committee is dated two years later, in May on the 22nd of May 1997. What you say, can't be true.

MR VEYI: The photo appeared in the Sowetan and the story you are referring to, I don't know anything about that. I saw this photo and the heading of that story was "Missing in Action".

MR VISSER: But would you agree with me that the reader of the portion which I read to you, might come to the conclusion that you resented your white co-Policemen? Would you agree with that? There is a resentment towards white Policemen that emanates from what I read to you, do you agree with that?

MR VEYI: It is the first time that I hear that I resented them, I don't agree with that.

MR VISSER: You don't agree with that, all right, now you told this Committee that Mkhonza came back from Swaziland and you said "we had a meeting". Do you remember saying that?

TP

MR VEYI: I said there was a meeting. I know about the meeting but I don't remember whether I was present at that meeting.

MR VISSER: Try to listen to the questions and answer them instead of trying to find out where we are going.

MR LAMEY: I don't think that is a reasonable conclusion to make by my learned friend.

MR VISSER: Chairperson, can he just answer the questions. Where was this meeting held?

MR VEYI: I have already said that I don't remember about the meeting, but I knew that we were supposed to go to the Carlton Centre.

MR VISSER: Mr Veyi, let's start again, you said "when Mr Mkhonza came back from Swaziland, we had a meeting", did you say that?

MR VEYI: I said there was a meeting but I don't remember whether I was present in that meeting, but I knew that there was, people were going to go to Carlton Centre.

MR VISSER: Are you saying you attended a meeting where it was said that people would go to Carlton Centre, is that what you are saying?

MR VEYI: I am saying because this happened at that time, I don't remember whether I was present in the meeting or not but I knew about what was going to happen.

MR VISSER: How did you know what was going to happen?

MR VEYI: First of all in the Unit, we were working like this, even if you were not present at the meeting, if there was going to be a meeting, we as members of the Unit, especially black members, if Lazarus attended the meeting, he would then report back to me about the discussion. Even if I attended the meeting, I would tell him. That is how we were working.

MR VISSER: Well, all right, we heard that there was a meeting and within an hour or two after that, the arrest was apparently carried out. Do you know anything about that space of time between the meeting and the arrest?

MR VEYI: Yes, I have already said that I knew that a lady from Swaziland was going to be arrested in Carlton Centre.

MR VISSER: I just want to put it to you that I am going to argue that you were present at the meeting which Coetzee and Pretorius and Mong and Williams and Ross testified about and that this was the meeting where you heard what the plan was in regard to the arrest of this lady. Do you want to make any comment on that?

MR VEYI: I have already said that I can't say I was there or not, but I knew about it.

MR VISSER: You see Mr Veyi, I want to put a few things to you and I want to suggest to you that what has happened here with what was put on your behalf to the witnesses which I have just mentioned, creates the impression that you opposed what they said basically just in principle, and let me tell you what I am talking about. You see on your behalf it was put by Mr Lamey to those applicants which I have just referred to that you did not attend the meeting where Coetzee informed those present, that the intention was to kidnap Simelane in order to recruit her as an informer. That was put, now ...

TP

MR LAMEY: Mr Chairman, if I remember correctly it was put specifically about a meeting about a "kop draai aksie", that he did not attend such a meeting where there was a specific discussion about the purpose of kidnapping for a "kop draai aksie."

MR VISSER: Mr Chairperson, I put it exactly correctly as I wrote it down, and I don't withdraw that question. I will repeat it then.

CHAIRPERSON: In whose cross-examination was that put Mr Visser?

MR VISSER: That was put to both Coetzee as well as Pretorius as well as to Mong that when Mong gave evidence Chairperson, I am not quite sure but I think in Mong's cross-examination it was conceded that he might have been there. To Coetzee and Pretorius it was specifically denied that he was present at any such meeting.

MR LAMEY: Mr Chairman, if I may come in here, in Exhibit T there is specific reference, I don't have it now in front of me Exhibit T, by Coetzee and also repeated by the other members about the meeting of the "kop draai aksie" and it was about the way in which they put it in a "kop draai aksie", in a meeting where that was specifically spelt out to the members present, but it was put to the witness, as far as I recall that he was not present at a meeting where specifically a "kop draai aksie", or - my learned friend put it in the way of recruitment, that is just perhaps another way of saying it, but that was the gist of I think if I remember correctly, what was put.

CHAIRPERSON: Just remind me Mr Lamey, is there a reference in the statements of Coetzee & Others to the effect that, or to the allegation that your client was present at a meeting where a "kop draai" was discussed, I don't want to search for that here, I am trying to look at Coetzee's ...

MR VISSER: Mr Chairman, page 5 of Exhibit T Chairperson, from paragraph 10 onwards.

CHAIRPERSON: (Microphone not on), paragraph 10 was about a "kop draai".

MR VISSER: Well, that was the evidence Chairperson, there was only one meeting at which all of this was discussed.

CHAIRPERSON: According to my colleague, drew my attention to paragraph 15 on page 7 of Exhibit T, the last sentence, it says -

"... that a kidnapping would take place."

And then paragraph 12, yes, this is Muller all right, then paragraph 13 says -

"... Muller decided on the second option 'ontvoering en kopdraai' ..."

so that seems to be what Exhibit T says.

MR VISSER: That is what those witnesses stated Chairperson and what was put to them was that Mr Veyi will say that he was not present at that meeting. That is what I am putting to him now. The record will speak for itself.

MR LAMEY: Mr Chairman, may I just come in here, in Exhibit W it could be that this was, I can't remember exactly to which witness it was put, but in paragraph 5 of Exhibit W Ross states that, paragraph 5 onwards, page 3 of Exhibit W Ross states that he was told beforehand that it was decided by Brigadier Muller to give approval for this turning action and that certain members were informed as such. Yes, he just makes mention of certain members ...

MR VISSER: No, no, he mentions them, he lists them Chairperson. My learned friend can't just say that he just makes mention of certain members.

TP

MR LAMEY: Sorry then, I was looking actually for that whether he was mentioning it specifically, but it could be that it was then specifically put to this witness, but I remember putting it in the context of a meeting where there was mention specifically made of a decision of kidnapping for purposes of the "kop draai aksie".

MR VISSER: That is what I was referring to. I don't understand the objection Chairperson.

MR LAMEY: Perhaps we are speaking then on cross purposes here, Mr Chairman.

CHAIRPERSON: Yes, the objection seems to be that Mr Lamey is of the view that what he had put to your witnesses, to your clients was that Mr Veyi was not present at a meeting where the "kop draai" of this intended arrestee or abductee was discussed, so it is in that context that he had put that Mr Veyi wasn't there. From there I understand, from that submission I understand that he is disputing that he had put on behalf of Mr Veyi that he was not present at a meeting in the sense that you have referred to in your cross-examination, a meeting where there was discussion about arresting and so on. This witness' position seems to be that he could have been there, I can't remember but he could have been there.

MR VISSER: Chairperson, I don't want to make this more involved than what it is, because really it is quite simple. The applicants whom you have heard up to now, have given you evidence about a meeting that was held where it was discussed that this person had come into the Republic, that she was going to meet Mkhonza, that she was an MK agent, that she was going to be grabbed and the purpose would be that she would be recruited to become an informer. Mr Lamey quite explicitly put that Mr Veyi wasn't present at that meeting and the only point that I am making now, is only when Mr Mong gave evidence did Mr Veyi concede that he might have been present at that meeting. That is as simple as that.

CHAIRPERSON: Yes, but except that on what Mr Lamey says, there seems to have been a lack of common ground as to what was discussed at this particular meeting. Mr Lamey says that what he had put to your clients was focused on the question of whether a "kop draai" was discussed beforehand or not. He says his client wasn't present at a meeting where that was discussed. His client seems to say that he knew about the arrest, he could possibly have been present at a meeting where that was discussed, he can't remember and he can't dispute it, so it seems to be that that is where you part company, you and Mr Lamey.

MR VISSER: I will put the question on this basis if I may then Chairperson, I put to you Mr Veyi, that on your behalf if was put that you did not attend any meeting at which the kidnapping of Simelane was discussed. I put to you that the evidence of Mr Mong, it was conceded on your behalf that you might have been present, but you had forgotten about it. In fact it was in your own evidence yesterday, you said that you might have been present, but you might had forgotten about that, is that correct?

MR VEYI: What I am saying is, it might be possible that I was there or not, but I knew that people would go to Carlton Centre.

MR VISSER: I am sorry, I didn't have my, I am sorry, could you just repeat for my benefit the answer, please.

MR VEYI: What I am saying is, it is possible that I was present or not, but I knew that people would go to Carlton Centre and arrest a lady from Swaziland.

MR VISSER: All right. Let's go on to the next thing. Do you agree that it was put on your behalf that your Unit, the Intelligence Unit, in 1983 had safe houses available which they used?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

TP 07

MR VISSER: Did I understand you correctly when you gave evidence yesterday to say that they came later than 1982?

MR VEYI: No.

MR VISSER: I see. Let's go on to the next point. You, it was put on your behalf, consistently, that you never knew that Simelane was being recruited while she was in your detention, is that correct?

MR VEYI: There is a question that I didn't answer, I thought that we were still continuing about the safe houses. Yesterday I said there were safe houses before 1983, at the time when Simelane was kidnapped, there were safe houses and I quoted about Peter Lengene. After Peter Lengene was kidnapped in Botswana, he was taken to Klipspruit. We then sometimes would be in Rustenburg.

MR VISSER: I am sorry, you know Mr Veyi, if you want to discuss that, we can do so, I have already stepped off that point, but let's discuss that. Were you involved in the kidnapping of Mr Lengene?

MR VEYI: No, I was not involved.

MR VISSER: Yes, so how do you know anything about it?

MR VEYI: But I was working in that Unit.

MR VISSER: How do you know where he was kept and where he was questioned?

MR VEYI: I was working with that Unit even though I didn't go when they went to kidnap him.

MR VISSER: So are you saying that you told the Committee something which you heard from someone else, is that what you are saying?

MR VEYI: When there would be an operation, for example, maybe there would be eight of us in the Unit and then six of us would go outside and there would be those who are left inside the country, those who would handle the sources inside the country and collect reports. In Lengene's case, that is what happened. Others went outside to kidnap and I was inside the country. That is why I didn't go, but when they brought him here, I was present. When we were recruiting him and turning him, convincing him to join us, I was there. I was one of the members who took part, we tried to turn him.

MR VISSER: ... while he was being assaulted?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct, he was assaulted and that didn't take a long time like in Nokuthula's case. It only took a short period and then after that he agreed to cooperate with us until he became a full member of the South African Police Force.

MR VISSER: And exactly where was he assaulted where you were present? In which place were you?

MR VEYI: In Klipspruit, as I have already said we had three safe houses and then we abandoned the two, we used one. It is where we were interrogating people in Klipspruit West.

MR VISSER: Yes, right, now let me tell you something which may come as a surprise to you. In Bundle 2 at page 382 and following the late Mr Lengene's application form for amnesty can be found. From page 395 onwards, from paragraph 22, he describes in great detail in the minutest detail in fact, how he was kidnapped and how the next day in paragraph 23, he regained consciousness while he was sprawling on a garage floor. If you turn to page 396 you will see at the bottom of paragraph 24, the names which he mentioned of the people who kidnapped him, Willem Coetzee, Anton Pretorius, Jan Martins(?) and in paragraph 26 he mentions Sergeant Mothiba. Coming back to the garage he says in paragraph 28 at page 397 that he later realised that that garage was in a house in Rustenburg, okay. He then goes on to say that he was assaulted, he was interrogated and he was brutally treated until suddenly on a specific day, there was a message over the radio he says in paragraph 30, there was an announcement over the radio about himself and the allegation was that he had been kidnapped by the South African Police and from there onwards, his treatment changed and a Major Schoeman came to see him, he says in paragraph 32 apparently only after he had agreed to work with the Police, that they brought him to Johannesburg, in paragraph 33 you see that. The evidence of Mr Coetzee before this hearing was that it was only after he was recruited, "sy kop gedraai gewees het", that he was brought to Klipspruit West where he was given a house in which to stay, where other Policemen also stayed. What do you say of what I have just put to you? First of all, you are not even mentioned sir, and secondly his version is in direct conflict with what you have just told us?

TP67

MR VEYI: I would like to tell this Committee that the way that the Internal Intelligence of the SA Police was working, you wouldn't understand how it was working. The story that you are reading to me, sometimes what you are reading, might not be what happened. I think that the people who are mentioned, you are saying that they kidnapped Peter, I would like to ask whether you have referred to David Djane and George Putukezi.

MR VISSER: Are you saying that Mr Lengene is not telling the truth in his affidavit, in his application for amnesty, is that what you are saying?

MR VEYI: I would like to know whether George and David Djane are written in that list of names that kidnapped him?

MR VISSER: Can you just answer my question please, are you saying that Mr Lengene is not telling the truth in what I have just put to you, he says?

MR VEYI: Before answering that question, I would like to ask about David Djane and George, whether their names are in that list?

CHAIRPERSON: No, their names are not. Yes Mr Visser, I don't know where it is going to take us.

MR VISSER: I am not going to waste time, I am merely recording that the witness is either unable or unwilling to answer the question. May I refer you to page 400 Chairperson, paragraph 36, just to - I wasn't even going to cross-examine him on this, but he brought it on. The last, second last sentence, he says - actually he refers to him being taken to Benoni after having been taken to Johannesburg and Protea Police station and Benoni, I don't want to go into detail, but he says he was then guarded by three people who were changing days, they were Sergeant Mothiba, Lazarus Selamolela and Manuel Oliphant. I just want to point out that this witness' name doesn't feature anywhere.

MR LAMEY: Mr Chairman, may I just come in here, I think in all fairness, the witness should be asked - I don't want to be prescriptive to Mr Visser, but I think the question should be asked first whether he had an opportunity to read the statement in total of Mr Lengene, in order to enable him to reply to the question whether he - the general question -whether what Mr Lengene is telling, is not the truth. It is a very general question and there is a whole lot of detailed facts, as Mr Visser has put it, in very detailed information. I mean it is such a general question and perhaps the witness should be asked whether he had an opportunity to read this, in order to comment where he agrees and where he does not agree, as it pleases you.

CHAIRPERSON: Yes, I think Mr Visser has indicated he has stepped off this. It is up to you if you want to deal with it in re-examination.

MR LAMEY: Thank you Mr Chairman.

MR VISSER: Let's come back to the question where we were, I put it to you that it was put on your behalf to the previous witnesses that you never knew that Simelane was being recruited "kop gedraai", if you want to use the word, as an informer of the Police. Do you agree with that?

MR VEYI: What I am saying is that I knew that people were going to go to Carlton Centre and arrest Nokuthula. What I was expecting to happen after her arrest, I expected her to be detained. The fact about "kop draai" and all that, I didn't know about that.

MR VISSER: You never knew about that until the last time you saw her, is that what you are saying?

MR VEYI: This happened when we were in Northum, that is where she was recruited. We were also present, but when initially she was going to be kidnapped in Carlton Centre, the idea was to arrest her.

MR VISSER: I am not talking about the Carlton Centre, I am talking about the farm, it was put on your behalf that you never realised that she was being recruited. Do you agree with that, on the farm?

MR VEYI: When we were with her at the farm, when she was interviewed, we would tell her about the advantages when she would agree being a Police, that was the way we were using to recruit her, that happened at the farm.

MR VISSER: I just want to put it to you your evidence is crystal clear that you knew very well that she was being recruited, even though there was an attempt made to hide that fact from the black members, you knew very well and that is very clear from your own evidence, because you told this Committee yesterday she was told "we will do this and that for you", those were your words and you said "I got the impression that we were trying to recruit her, but she would not cooperate" and statements such as that, but let's step off that. The fourth issue which I want to raise with you is it was specifically denied on your behalf that any toiletries were provided for Simelane from the beginning on the farm. Do you agree with that statement?

MR VEYI: I don't remember seeing toiletries.

MR VISSER: Yesterday you conceded that it may have happened. Do you agree with that?

MR VEYI: I don't remember yesterday toiletries being referred to.

MR VISSER: All right. You, it was denied on your behalf that Coetzee is truthful when he says that his modus operandi when he turns a person to an informer, was to use the method of assaulting, that person. That was for some reason or other, denied by you, do you remember that? It was put on your behalf?

MR VEYI: Coetzee would assault a person if he was trying to recruit that person, that was the way he used.

MR VISSER: Yes, well that is exactly the point, because that was his evidence, and that was denied through Mr Lamey when Mr Coetzee was cross-examined? Do you have any explanation for all of this? All right, you see, I am going to argue that you placed these matters in dispute because you have a resentment against the white Officers that gave evidence here, and it was for the mere sake of denying whatever they were asserting, that is what I am going to argue, if you want to make any comment on that, please do. If you don't, then perhaps we can go onto the next one. You said something strange yesterday ...

MR VEYI: It is the first time that I hear that I resented them.

MR VISSER: All right, you said something strange yesterday, you were asked about what you knew about Simelane and you said and I wrote it down "she could possibly be an MK member", did I hear you correctly or is that not what you intended to say?

MR VEYI: Can you please repeat your question?

MR VISSER: You said "she could possibly be an MK member", that is what you heard about Simelane, perhaps if one of the members would check my note, but I wrote it down exactly like that.

ADV GCABASHE : What were they discussing?

MR VISSER: The evidence, it was right in the beginning, Mkhonza came back from Swaziland and he told them about somebody that was coming in and then he said "she could possibly be an MK member" and because we haven't got a record, I want to be quite careful with my notes, they are notoriously bad. I am sorry for asking you to check for me, but that is what I wrote down.

ADV DE JAGER: In his evidence in chief?

MR VISSER: His evidence in chief, it was right at the beginning.

CHAIRPERSON: Yes, he said that he understood that this lady would be arrested, trapped and arrested because she might be a member of MK.

MR VISSER: Words to that effect yes, she might be, yes. That is the only point I want to raise with the witness now. Mr Veyi, could there have been any doubt in your mind at the time, that she was in fact an MK member?

MR VEYI: Because Scotch, Mr Mkhonza, in Swaziland, his contacts were MK members, so I took it for granted that this person who was coming this side, was also a member of MK.

MR VISSER: Yes. Just press your button, can you just keep your hands away from that then please, thank you. In other words you did not intend to convey to the Committee yesterday that you were uncertain about the fact that she was an MK member?

MR VEYI: At the time when she was coming to this country, I was not certain, but the way Mr Mkhonza was operating, I knew that he was operating with MK members, so I just assumed that she was also a member of MK.

MR VISSER: You know Mr Veyi, let me just tell you what you say in your own application, Exhibit S page 3, paragraph 3, you say is that right or is that wrong?

> - "... Scotch reported to his handler, Warrant Officer Coetzee, that there was an MK woman on her way from Swaziland to Johannesburg ..."

MR VEYI: As I have said, Scotch was dealing with MK in Swaziland, so it was possible that this one was also a member of MK, that was what I was trying to say.

MR VISSER: Look at page 8, paragraph 2 -

> "... this particular lady was a member of MK ..."

Why suddenly the doubt in your mind?

ADV GCABASHE : Page what was the last reference?

MR VISSER: I am sorry, page 8, paragraph 2 the first sentence. In any event, perhaps if we can try to cut this short, are you conceding today she was an MK member or are you saying you are still doubtful?

MR VEYI: I would like to look at my statement first that I made.

MR VISSER: Are you saying you cannot say today in your own mind as you sit there, whether Simelane was an MK member or not, is that what you are saying, without looking at your statement?

MR VEYI: At the time when I was making the statement, I knew that she was a member of MK, but when she was arrested, I didn't know.

ADV GCABASHE : And today, the question is today, what do you think today?

MR VEYI: She was a member of MK.

CHAIRPERSON: On what information do you base that? Why do you say that?

MR VEYI: When we were in Northum, when she was tortured, interviewed and all these things, it is where we got the information that she was trained and she was an MK member.

CHAIRPERSON: Is that what she told you under torture?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

CHAIRPERSON: Have you confirmed that independently?

MR VEYI: According to the reports that Coetzee found and the contacts in Swaziland, confirmed that she was a member.

CHAIRPERSON: So Coetzee confirmed this you say, independently from what she was saying under torture?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

CHAIRPERSON: Mr Visser?

MR VISSER: Thank you Mr Chairman. You went to visit Simelane's parents not too long ago, is that correct?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: Did you find out whether they did anything in the struggle?

MR VEYI: I was not interested of what they did in the struggle, I was concerned only about the child that was missing, the child that I knew about.

MR VISSER: You say that Simelane was kept at the Norwood flats for approximately a week, is that correct?

MR VEYI: That is correct.

MR VISSER: Are you quite sure of that, you are absolutely certain that it was a week, not one or two days?

MR VEYI: I can say it is a week because after she was taken to Norwood, I went there and I stayed something like three days guarding her and then I went back. I didn't know when she had arrived.

MR VISSER: I am sorry, I am not sure that you understood my question. My question to you is, how long was Simelane kept at the flats at Norwood?

MR VEYI: I think it was about a week.

TP

MR VISSER: When you made your statement, Exhibit S, did you - I am sorry - when was Exhibit S dated? I don't have a date on mine, the 7th of May 1999? When you made your statement on the 7th of May 1999, which was just the other day, did you say at page 4, in paragraph 5, with reference to the words -

> "...the day after her arrest, I was also posted to go to the farm to guard her"?

You made a footnote and in the footnote you say -

> "... the preceding two sentences appear in my initial statement which I made. After I had made the statement I remembered the lady was not taken immediately the day after her arrest, to the farm at Northum. She was first detained at Norwood Police quarters in Johannesburg for approximately a week where I also had to guard her with other members."

What this means in brief is in your original amnesty application you said she was taken to Northum the day after her arrest, do you agree with that?

MR VEYI: Yes, I agree with that.

MR VISSER: And this year, in May 1999, you changed that to a week, is that correct?

MR VEYI: There is nothing that I changed, I only added to what my initial statement was.

MR VISSER: Well, all right. Did you read Mr Selamolela's application at the time when you made your, when you completed your application, the first one?

MR VEYI: I don't remember reading it.

MR VISSER: Did you read it after you completed your original application form?

MR VEYI: No, I don't remember.

MR VISSER: Well, I want to suggest to you - well, did you speak to Mr Selamolela about the time that this lady was kept at Norwood?

MR VEYI: What I did when I was with Mr Lamey, he told me that Selamolela was also present, after taking my statement he would take Mr Selamolela's statement. Selamolela then came and I greeted him and we haven't been seeing each other for more than five years. We didn't discuss about Simelane's case.

MR VISSER: Did you listen while Mr Selamolela was telling Mr Lamey what he remembered about this incident?

MR VEYI: I was present, I was there.

MR VISSER: Yes, and you heard him say that Simelane was kept at Norwood for approximately a week, page 567 Chairperson, Bundle 3. Bundle 3, 567.

MR VEYI: Mr Lamey only wanted to know whether I know the story of Simelane and Selamolela, whether I was present in this case and I then agreed that I was present during the Nokuthula incident. Then I don't remember anything else.

MR VISSER: You are avoiding the question, did you hear Mr Selamolela tell Mr Lamey that this lady was kept at Norwood for approximately a week, it is a simple question?

TP

MR VEYI: No, I didn't hear him.

MR VISSER: Well, I suggest to you that that is exactly where you heard about the week and that is the reason why you changed your original statement from the - more or less the correct situation of one day, it was in fact two days, but one day after her arrest, to a week after her arrest. That is the reason why you changed it. I put it to you, what do you say to that?

MR VEYI: What I am saying is, I didn't change, I just added to what I have forgotten after I consulted with Mr Lamey.

MR VISSER: Did you tell this Committee yesterday that you visited Simelane twice during the time that she was at Norwood, did I hear you correctly?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: And on each occasion for how long did you spend time in her presence?

MR VEYI: When she was in Northum ...

MR VISSER: I am talking about Norwood, at the flats, I am not talking about the farm. I am not talking about the farm, at the flats in Norwood, in Custodum Flats, at the office.

MR VEYI: In Norwood I went there twice if I still remember well.

MR VISSER: Yes, all right, the next question is, on each occasion, how long time did you spend with her?

MR VEYI: I would sleep there, spend the night there or spend two days there and then you would go back.

MR VISSER: All right, so while she was at the flats in Norwood, you spent two nights there with her, guarding her I take it and you say that you also spent two days with her, is that what you are saying?

MR VEYI: Please repeat your question?

MR VISSER: Perhaps you must tell us, how long on each occasion did you spend with Simelane while she was at the flats at Norwood.

MR VEYI: I went there twice, I would go this day. In a week I would go twice.

ADV GCABASHE : Now come back to the first time you went to see Simelane at Norwood, how long did you spend with her that first time, then you went away. Then tell us about the second time, how long did you spend with her that second time, that is the gist of the question. Break it down for us, thank you.

MR VEYI: I can say that when I first saw her, I stayed for two days and then I went again after two days, for another two days.

ADV GCABASHE : And on these two days each time, you would spend one night or two nights at the flats, just break it down for us again.

MR VEYI: If I would go to Norwood, I would arrive maybe today, let's say on Monday and I would spend the night, Monday night and I would spend Tuesday night and then I would go back, and maybe a day would pass, after a day I would then go back, spend two days and then I would go back again.

MR VISSER: During the time that you spent with Simelane at the flats at Norwood, were you alone with her or was there another black Policeman with you?

TP

MR VEYI: I was not alone, in most cases I was with Selamolela.

MR VISSER: Well, we only know of two cases, was Selamolela with you on both those occasions that you have told us about?

MR VEYI: I don't remember whether the first day I went, I went with Selamolela the first day or the second day, I don't remember, I can't remember that.

MR VISSER: All right, are you saying you were not with him there on both occasions?

MR VEYI: I would not dispute the fact that I went with him the first time or the first day or second day, but I was there with him sometime.

MR VISSER: Are you saying you were not with him on both occasions, please it is a simple question? Is there a problem with the microphones again?

MR VEYI: The first, firstly I used to work with Selamolela and with Sefuti sometimes, I don't know whether the first time I went with Selamolela or Sefuti and I don't know the second occasion whether I went with either of them, which one of them I went with.

MR VISSER: All right. Let's come to the assaults of Ms Simelane. Why do you say at Norwood, I am just talking about Norwood at the flats, why do you say was she assaulted?

MR VEYI: She was assaulted because we wanted her to reveal about her activities and the contacts in South Africa and her mission in South Africa and the targets that were attacked during her presence in South Africa and the countries where she was trained and the people that she was trained with. That was the information that was needed from her. The reason that made her to be assaulted was because she was not willing to talk.

MR VISSER: Right. Coetzee and Pretorius said and Mong stated that they assaulted her by slapping her with the open hands, hitting her with the fists at Norwood in her back and in her ribs apparently, do you agree with that?

MR VEYI: Coetzee and Mong and Pretorius are not telling the truth, are not relating properly as to what happened. Some of the things did happen, but some of the things that they are saying are not true.

MR VISSER: What is not true about them saying that they slapped her and hit her with a fist on the body?

MR VEYI: First of all, if an MK member was caught or captured, an MK member used to be regarded as a most dangerous person, more than a criminal. The treatment would not be assaulted with open hand, the others would kick him, the others would strangle him or her, the others would even walk over his body or try to trample her body, something like that. The treatment was not soft at all.

MR VISSER: Okay, let's take that in turn. Did either Coetzee, Pretorius or Mong kick Simelane?

MR VEYI: They were kicking her, they were doing anything that you do to a person if she is captured, she was pulled roughly and hit against the wall and she would scream, that is why when she was in Norwood, she was later taken to Northum. It is because people were suspecting that something was going on at the penthouse.

MR VISSER: Mr Veyi, did Mr Coetzee kick Simelane?

TPM

MR VEYI: The way he was kicking her, he even told her or he would tell her that he himself was more dangerous than ANC, and if she was not willing to talk, he would kill her.

MR VISSER: I am sorry. Did Mr Coetzee kick Simelane?

MR VEYI: Yes, he was kicking her and doing everything and smacking her face and he would do anything.

MR VISSER: Thank you. Mr Veyi, do you have a problem with the Translator?

MR VEYI: No, I don't have a problem at all.

MR VISSER: Did Mr Pretorius kick Simelane, at Norwood at the flats?

MR VEYI: The two of them were doing that and even though we were there ourselves, we wouldn't stand up and fold our arms, we would try and do something, though we knew very well deep down from our hearts, that what was happening was not acceptable.

MR VISSER: I don't know what that means really. The question was whether Pretorius kicked Simelane, that was the question.

MR VEYI: They were having turns, if Pretorius was hitting her and the others would be standing there and push her to the other side and the other person would take a turn also.

MR VISSER: Mr Veyi, I think we must sort out the problem that we have, I asked you whether Pretorius kicked Simelane and you talk about others standing around and pushing and - don't you understand ...

ADV GCABASHE: I was going to say it is a language issue. It is expression because what they were doing, he also is agreeing with you as I understand Zulu, Xhosa, they were in fact doing exactly that, but they were actually exchanging, he is adding to what you are saying, so he is agreeing and adds, he agrees and adds. Maybe you need to agree one way or the other that he is either going to be more specific and not expansive in language or something, but that is what I think the problem is Mr Visser.

MR VISSER: Here I was thinking that he has a disagreeable way of agreeing with me. All right, Mr Veyi, I just want to put to you that - let me ask you this, did Mr Mong kick Simelane at Norwood at the flats?

MR VEYI: I cannot say, as I was saying the other members were also participating whenever she was beaten up. Maybe if she happened to run towards your direction, you would try and push her and say go away and the room was so small.

ADV DE JAGER: Can you perhaps try and take it step by step? I suppose Mr Visser would come to the slapping and the pushing, but at first can we only deal with kicking? Who did the kicking?

MR VEYI: I don't know how to explain this. I think Mr Visser does not understand the way that the Police were working. If the suspect is captured by five Policemen and the suspect is there in front of the Police, there would be no time to check or monitor who is doing what. All the people who are there in front of the suspect, if perhaps I smack her across the face, the other one is kicking and the other one is punching her, such things used to happen. That was happening, that is what was happening there, I can not say that so and so did this and that, but it is something that would happen there.

CHAIRPERSON: Would you just all attack this lady? You would smack, you would kick, you would push, you would strangle, you would step on her body, all those things that you described to us that would happen to people in your care at that time?

TP

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

CHAIRPERSON: So it wasn't a nice thing where you would not all kick for five minutes and then you would slap for five minutes and then you would strangle for five minutes?

MR VEYI: No, that was not the case.

CHAIRPERSON: Was that what happened there?

MR VEYI: Yes.

CHAIRPERSON: Yes Mr Visser?

MR VISSER: Are you saying that for the time that you were in the presence of Simelane, four or five people assaulted her continuously together, is that what you are saying?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is what I am trying to explain. This is exactly why I say the way she was assaulted, she didn't look the same, her appearance changed. Her physical condition had changed completely.

MR VISSER: I just want to put it to you that it is most unlikely that that could have happened. I put it to you that what you are telling this Committee about strangulations, about trampling on her body, was never put to Coetzee or Pretorius or Mong in regard to Norwood, nor was it ever put to them that any of them ever kicked Simelane and that means only one thing and that is that you never told Mr Lamey that.

MR LAMEY: I think it was conceded by the clients of Mr Visser that they each participated in one way or the other in the assault by hitting with fists, slapping and also possibly kicking, they also conceded in their own evidence.

MR VISSER: That is just not so.

MR VAN DEN BERG: I have a note in which Mr Coetzee conceded that it is possible that he might well have kicked the deceased, Simelane, it happened I think on the morning, the second morning whilst he was being asked questions by members of the panel. I have a note specifically to that effect.

CHAIRPERSON: Yes, well I think the record will eventually bear out what was the position. Mr Visser, you had put your recollection to him.

MR VISSER: Chairperson, then obviously I can't take it any further.

CHAIRPERSON: Yes.

MR VISSER: The record will speak for itself. I also want to put it to you that you never, it was never put to Pretorius that he would push Simelane against another person who would slap her, that made her fall to the ground. That is evidence which we only heard for the first time when you gave evidence.

MR VEYI: It is, you are supposed to hear that for the first time from me, because I mentioned it for the first time.

MR VISSER: Yes, but you were supposed to make a full disclosure in your application, you know, Mr Veyi. All right.

MR VEYI: Even if you are in court, if you give evidence in court, you do make your statement, but when you are in the dock or if you are in the podium there, you start revealing, you get into details and the things, some of the things that you mention in court, are the things that you did not write down. That is what I am saying that even if I did not write some other things in my statement, right now I am having an opportunity to spell it out in details.

MR VISSER: Fair enough. Fair enough, this is after all your application, I accept that. Let's talk about your participation in the assaults. Did you slap Simelane, listen carefully, did you slap Simelane with the open hand at Norwood?

MR VEYI: I said as you are working together, all of us, I was not supposed to stand there and fold my arms if the other people are busy, because if I would do that, I was going to be perceived the other way.

MR VISSER: About not just saying "yes I slapped her", if that is your evidence, or no, I didn't slap her.

MR LAMEY: I think Mr Chairman ...

MR VISSER: Is it a language problem again?

CHAIRPERSON: Mr Visser, it might very well just be a cultural issue here. Let's try, Mr Lamey?

MR LAMEY: I don't want to be at all - interrupt my learned friend's cross-examination, but I get the impression that he answers it by implication, what he is saying, it is a way of expression.

CHAIRPERSON: Well, that seems to be the position Mr Lamey. Counsel is trying to find out exactly what you did, if you can tell us, if you can remember exactly what you did to Ms Simelane, exactly what you did, if you can help us. The first question was did you slap her with an open hand, can you remember whether you slapped her?

MR VEYI: Yes, I did.

CHAIRPERSON: You slapped her. Mr Visser, what is the next...

MR VISSER: I must come for lessons from you Mr Chairman. Did you slap her in her face?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: Was it a hard slap?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: Did you slap her more than once?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct, I was participating, I was smacking her as she was being assaulted.

MR VISSER: Yes, all right. Did you slap her many times, let me ask you that, did you slap her in the face many times?

MR VEYI: I did, but when we realised that she was changing, her physical condition was changing, we withdrew, we did not participate.

MR VISSER: That is my next question, because of inter alia your slapping of her, did her face swell up and did she change her appearance? Is that what happened?

TP H

MR VEYI: As she was still in Norwood, she was better there, the condition deteriorated when she was in Northum.

MR VISSER: Did you hit Simelane with your fist?

MR VEYI: I cannot remember, I can only remember me slapping her.

MR VISSER: Did you kick Simelane at Norwood at the flats?

MR VEYI: Yes, I did kick her, but I was not kicking her because I wanted to kick her.

MR VISSER: Yes. Where did you kick her on her body?

MR VEYI: Just on her body.

MR VISSER: Where on her body? On her head, on her foot, on her stomach, where?

MR VEYI: I don't know how to explain that, according to us the body is from the waist up to the shoulders. We don't regard the head as the body and even the foot, we refer to them as feet. I was kicking her on her body.

MR VISSER: That means then from the waist to below the head, that is where you were kicking her, is that what you are saying?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct. It is not because I am the one who was kicking her, but because people were kicking her, I was not alone in kicking her, this was happening in Coetzee's presence only. During their absence, that is Coetzee and the others, nothing would happen.

MR VISSER: Now you said yesterday, you kept on referring to "we assaulted her", now what I want to ask you is this, did you participate in assaults on Ms Simelane on both the occasions when you say you spent time in her presence, on both those occasions at Norwood, I am just talking about Norwood?

MR VEYI: When she was assaulted at Norwood during my presence, I would participate during those two times.

MR VISSER: So, at least on one occasions Mr Selamolela was present while she was being assaulted by you at Norwood?

MR VEYI: As I have already said all the members including the black members, they would do what the others were doing, they were participating though we knew very well that what was happening was not acceptable, but we were forced by the situation prevailing at the time.

MR VISSER: Did you see Mr Selamolela assault Simelane?

MR VEYI: I am going to repeat this, I explained this, if a person is a captive and the people who are present there, they are hitting him or her, you don't watch what the others are doing, as she was there, everyone was taking part in assaulting her.

MR VISSER: I take that to be a "yes" to my question.

MR LAMEY: I take that not necessarily as a "yes".

ADV DE JAGER: He is saying everyone was taking part, he didn't say everyone was kicking, it was about an assault. Could you then perhaps tell us whether Mr Selamolela, whether he in fact kicked or slapped or pushed her, what did he do?

TP

MR VEYI: He was also assisting in assaulting her, but I cannot remember exactly what he did, because assaulting refers to various things or methods. If you are kicking or punching or slapping a person, that is assault. 317

MR VISSER: Do you know what he says, in Bundle 3 page 567, let me tell you, he says, he refers to the Norwood flats as the married quarters and he says "whilst in my presence at the married quarters, nobody assaulted her." What do you think of that?

MR VEYI: I am saying she was assaulted.

MR VISSER: And in fact you say he also helped assaulting her?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is what I am saying.

MR VISSER: All right, I am going to go over to the farm now Chairperson, might this be a convenient time to take the adjournment?

CHAIRPERSON: Yes, we will adjourn for 15 minutes.

COMMITTEE ADJOURNS

ON RESUMPTION

NIMROD VEYI: (s.u.o)

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR VISSER: (cont)

Thank you Mr Chairman. Mr Veyi, can we come to what transpired on the farm in Northum and may I say that all the questions that I am going to ask you now, will only relate to what happened on the farm, do you understand that?

MR VEYI: Yes, I do understand.

MR VISSER: To cut a long story short, were the assaults on Simelane on the farm the same as those at Norwood perpetrated by the same people that you testified to this morning?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: Except that on the farm, if I may remind you, there was evidence that a sack was also used to draw over Simelane's head to prevent her from breathing, is that correct?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct and when she was being put into the dam.

MR VISSER: All right, let's talk about the dam. What do you make of this, or what do you want us to understand about the putting into the dam of Simelane, what are you saying to us?

MR VEYI: As she was being put into the dam, she would be assaulted and later be put into the dam, I think that was part of the torture.

MR VISSER: That is not the impression that one gets when one looks at Bundle 3, page 567 of the evidence of Mr Selamolela, page 567. In paragraph 7 he says in the third sentence, "at night this same lady was taken to the zinc dam where Radebe threw her in, but hold her so that she could not drown." If I may stop there, do you agree with that?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct. When she was put into the dam, she would be put in there and be taken out, that was the procedure.

TP

MR VISSER: Right. And it was only done by Radebe? 318

MR VEYI: Yes, that was Radebe.

ADV GCABASHE : No the question was only done by Radebe? Only?

MR VEYI: Yes, it was himself and the others, Coetzee were present and that was an instruction from Coetzee.

MR VISSER: Well that was never put to Coetzee, I put it to you that he instructed Simelane to be put in the dam. That is a question for argument. I just want to continue reading to you - no, let me just make absolutely certain, you now say that putting her in the dam was part of her torture, is that what you are saying?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: And that was in order to obtain information from her?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: The next sentence of Mr Selamolela says this - and that seems to suggest that it was not part of her interrogation, but it came after that. Do you agree with my interpretation?

"... she was thrown into the dam after interrogation bouts ..."

MR VEYI: Perhaps that was not his perception, but I maintain that it was part of interrogation.

MR VISSER: You disagree with him, all right.

CHAIRPERSON: You in fact say you think it was part of the torture? That is what you said?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

CHAIRPERSON: As he refers to interrogation?

MR VEYI: I am saying it was torture.

CHAIRPERSON: Okay.

MR VISSER: But you also say it was part of the interrogation, to elicit information, Mr Veyi, you just said so just now.

MR VEYI: I said she would be interrogated and be tortured at the same time.

MR VISSER: And putting her into the dam was part of her interrogation?

MR VEYI: Maybe I made a mistake there.

MR VISSER: What is the mistake you made?

MR VEYI: I am saying torture and interrogation were all happening all at once and by her being put into the dam, it was part of torture while she was being interrogated.

MR VISSER: Thank you, that is what I understood you to say. When - first of all, I am not certain how long you visited the farm, can you remember today on how many occasions did you go to the farm, two or three or four or six, can you perhaps remember?

TP

MR VEYI: I think I would go there twice a week, twice or thrice a week, up to four weeks.

MR VISSER: Okay. So you would have gone then roughly eight times to the farm?

MR VEYI: Yes, that could be the case.

MR VISSER: And on those occasions, how long would you stay on the farm?

MR VEYI: If I go there let's say the distance between Johannesburg and Northum, it is about plus minus 300 kilometres, if I plan to go there, I know that I will be there for two days and after two days, I would come back again.

MR VISSER: Yes, but would it be two days and two nights or just two days and one night or what was your shift?

MR VEYI: I am going to calculate it like this, say for instance if I am there on a Friday, I would spend a night there, Friday and Saturday night and Sunday evening or during the day, I would go back to my place.

MR VISSER: So you would spend two nights there on each occasion?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: Did you always go to the farm in the company of another black Policeman?

MR VEYI: Yes, we were changing shifts. When I arrived there with someone else, we would find the others there and we would release them, they would go back and we would stay over.

MR VISSER: I don't think you understood, would you always go to the farm in the company of another black Policeman?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: And who would that have been?

MR VEYI: A person who used to be in my company was Selamolela or Sefuti.

MR VISSER: All right. I am sorry to ask you this but it is important, did you go there half the time with Selamolela and half the time with Sefuti or did you go to the farm with Sefuti more often than with Selamolela or the other way around?

MR VEYI: I cannot be certain about that.

MR VISSER: Were you used on the farm sometimes as an Interpreter?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: And I want to ask you just to explain again about this question of sleep.

ADV DE JAGER: What language was Simelane actually speaking?

MR VEYI: She was speaking in Zulu.

MR VISSER: I understood your evidence yesterday and stop me if I am wrong, that Coetzee would arrive during the day and he would start interrogating Simelane until late at night, ten o'clock at night?

TP

Is that what you said?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: And I understood you to say that if she became tired or sleepy, he would let her go to sleep?

MR VEYI: When she was getting sleepy, she would look tired, he would let her relax for something like an hour or 30 minutes and then he would later start questioning her thereafter.

MR VISSER: That is what I understood you to say, all right. So in other words, your evidence is when she got tired, she was allowed to sleep for a while, if I may sum it up.

MR VEYI: As I am saying her sleeping time was limited, she wouldn't sleep normally, her sleeping time was limited, she wouldn't sleep perhaps from eight o'clock and wake up the following day, that was not the case.

MR VISSER: Yes, I understand. Now was it only Coetzee when he was there, that would interrogate her? Let's try to role a few questions into one, when the white Officers came there, did they interrogate her together, whoever was there?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: They didn't take turns among themselves to interrogate her through the night for example?

MR VEYI: If it would be Pretorius and Coetzee, Pretorius would ask questions and then he would hand over to Coetzee to say something, that is what was happening.

MR VISSER: While they were both interrogating her?

MR VEYI: This is what they were doing there, this is what they would go there for.

MR VISSER: Now, in regard to the assaults on the farm, if I may refer to Exhibit S page 5, perhaps in fairness to you, I should read to you what you said so that you can remember, paragraph 6 at page 4, the sentence starting with the following:

> "... Nokuthula was interrogated by Coetzee, Pretorius, Mong ..."

and over the page -

> "... she was kept at the place for more than a month, she was both hand- and footcuffed, her sleep was kept to a minimum, she was kicked and slapped. A bag was pulled over her head ..."

and then the footnote says this -

> "... at times during her interrogation, I also participated by slapping the lady. If I remember correctly almost every one at a certain stage participated in one way or the other in the interrogation or assault."

Would that still be correct, is that still your evidence?

MR VEYI: Yes.

MR VISSER: Would Selamolela have assaulted her on the farm as far as you can remember?

TP 07

MR VEYI: At some stage it says if I remember correctly, it might happen that Selamolela did take part, that is why I have mentioned there that if I remembered very well, because we wouldn't go there, we wouldn't be there at the same time, we were changing shifts. I would be present and he would be absent or things would happen vice versa.

MR VISSER: I am not quite sure, is it your recollection that Selamolela also assaulted Simelane on the farm, yes or no?

MR VEYI: Yes.

MR VISSER: There weren't any luxuries on this farm if I understand it correctly, do you agree? There was a toilet?

MR VEYI: It was a back room at the main house.

MR VISSER: Did you hear the evidence that this room was quite a distance away from the main house?

MR VEYI: Yes, I heard that.

MR VISSER: Do you agree with that evidence?

MR VEYI: No, I disagree with him.

MR VISSER: Mr Mong said you couldn't see the one building when you were standing at the other because of the bush? Did you hear him say that?

MR VEYI: This incident took place some time ago and Mong was still new there, it might happen that he cannot remember or perhaps he was not there, the distance from the main house to that back room, is from this wall that I am facing to the other wall that is behind me, you could see the main house. Mong, if my memory serves me well, mentioned something like 100 meters.

MR VISSER: Yes, did you tell your Attorney that Mr Mong is mistaken in that evidence?

MR VEYI: I did not tell him because he did not ask me.

MR VISSER: I see. Do you agree or disagree that there was a washbasin, a blue washbasin in which water was poured for Simelane to wash with?

MR VEYI: I just heard that for the first time, there was no washing basin there.

MR VISSER: All right. Did you wash on the farm?

MR VEYI: No.

MR VISSER: You stayed there for two nights and two days and you didn't wash, is that what you are saying?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: Why didn't you wash on the farm?

MR VEYI: There were no facilities, there was no water, there was no time to wash.

MR VISSER: But there was a dam, I thought there was a dam with water in it?

TP

MR VEYI: The water was dirty and we wouldn't wash ourselves in dirty water or filthy water.

MR VISSER: I see. What was the purpose do you think, why Simelane was hand- and footcuffed?

MR VEYI: In those time's language, Simelane was referred to as a terrorist and a terrorist was a person who was regarded as a dangerous person, that is why she was cuffed because it was possible for her to escape any time.

MR VISSER: Yes, of course. And the whole point about foot or ankle cuffs is that one walks with difficulty when your feet are cuffed, isn't that correct?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: Did you sometimes help her when she had to go to the bush, to the toilet, help her to walk?

MR VEYI: She, as I have already explained that her physical condition had completely changed, she could barely walk, we were assisting her.

MR VISSER: Are you saying that she was unable to walk properly because she was injured, is that what you are saying?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: Where was she injured?

MR VEYI: She would be kicked on her body, I think that was a result, her condition was a result of her assault of her being assaulted.

MR VISSER: I am asking you the question Mr Veyi, can you tell us of any particular injury that caused her to walk with difficulty?

CHAIRPERSON: He seems to suggest that it was the condition, it was a result of the assaults Mr Visser. Does it help to take it any further than that?

MR VISSER: As it pleases you Mr Chairman. So this physical condition that you talk about, would that have been the result of the assault by all the people that you mentioned, on her?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: Mr Veyi, I want to refer you again to the newspaper reports, this time Mr Chairman, let me count the pages again, we really must paginate these now ...

ADV DE JAGER: If you could just continue, I think the last page is the typed page 15.

MR VISSER: I am referring to the newspaper clippings that were attached to Exhibit T, is that what you are also referring to?

ADV DE JAGER: (Microphone not on)

MR VISSER: Mine consists of 60, don't ask me how that happened. There may have been a page duplicated, but I am suggesting that we should mark them 15(a), etc.

ADV DE JAGER: 16, 17, carry on.

MR VISSER: Mr Chairman ...

TP

CHAIRPERSON: Mr Visser, do we have the same sequence of articles? Won't you just refer to them as ...

MR VISSER: Chairperson, yes, I will do so. The first one, page 16 will be "Families plead with TRC", 17 will be "MK Agent's Death", 18 will be "Mother's Agony", 19 will be "Hope for Daughter Lingers", 20 will be "NCIS Suspense to Officials", 21 "MK Heroes Are Forgotten", 22 "SAP Informers Spied on ANC", 23 "Burden of Guilt Lifted", 24 "Cops Trapped and Killed MK Cadre", 25 "Police Strike Hard at ANC", 26 is a follow up page on that, I think Chairperson, it just says "motivated and protection", 27 "18 Trained Terrorists Apprehended", 28 will be - oh no, that is it, that is it Chairperson. Thank you I am sorry about that, we should have done that before, it kept on slipping our minds. Mr Chairman, I just want to refer now to page 24 of Exhibit T, there is a heading in the middle of the page "she was very beautiful" and just to place you in the picture here, Mr Veyi, I want to start reading directly under the heading "Constable X, that is you who prefers not to be named at this stage, said the black members of the Unit, guarded Simelane while the white members tortured her." Do you understand what I have just read to you?

MR VEYI: Yes.

MR VISSER: Did you tell the reporter that?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: Why didn't you tell her the truth that all of you assaulted her?

MR VEYI: I am saying that today that all of us, we took part in assaulting her.

MR VISSER: But why didn't you tell the reporter that, this is a dishonest statement as it stands here, isn't it?

MR VEYI: I said when you are making a statement, you make a statement, but when the time to testify comes, that is where you get into the details of everything.

MR VISSER: And then the next paragraph appears to be a quotation of your own words which you told the reporter, it says-

> "... she was very beautiful, but by the time they (the white Officers) were finished with her, she could not be recognised ..."

he said, did you tell the reporter that?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: But why did you lie to her?

MR VEYI: I want you to explain where did I lie, how did I lie?

MR VISSER: Because you did not tell her that all of you assaulted her.

MR VEYI: As I am here in front of this Committee, that is the reason that made me to be here, is to come here and tell exactly what happened. This is what I am telling today.

MR VISSER: Yes, I just want to put to you what I put to you right in the beginning, it is because you resented your white Officers and you wanted to get back at them, and that is why you told the reporter that, isn't that so?

MR VEYI: Please explain how did I resent them.

TP

MR VISSER: Because you implicated them in this assault which you describe here, without telling her that you were also involved in it. 324

MR VEYI: I am telling about my role, I am saying that I also played a role in that.

MR VISSER: I am not talking about now, I am talking about then, what you told her, and this is something that went into the world Mr Veyi, this is a newspaper that is circulated. It is circulated in the country.

MR VEYI: I think as I am here before this Committee, saying what I am saying now, it can be published, because I know that there are media people around, they can also publish this and tell the people that this is the truth.

MR VISSER: Yes Mr Veyi, I think you are far cleverer than you pretend, you understand exactly what I am asking you, let's step off that. When the white Officers were away, Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong, from the farm, did Coetzee order you to interrogate Simelane?

MR VEYI: No, during their absence nothing was going on, except for her paging the album, photo album because she would be given the album and she would be given instructions to identify the people in the photo album and they would tell her that they will be coming back the following day to get the identity of the people who were in the photo album.

MR VISSER: But you say Coetzee never ordered you to interrogate Simelane to get information from her?

MR VEYI: I said she studied during his absence, we would stay there with her and she would page the album and she would tell us that she doesn't know anything and when they come, they would tell her that she was lying and they would assault her.

MR VISSER: Mr Veyi, I cannot believe that it is a language problem, that you can't understand a simple question or that you are quite incapable of giving a simple answer. Did Coetzee order you to extract information from Simelane while he was away from the farm?

MR VEYI: What he would tell us during his absence was that he would tell us to talk to her and tell her about the disadvantages and advantages of being a Policeman and let her page the photo album and try to identify the people.

MR VISSER: Forget about what Coetzee told you to do, did you ever interrogate Simelane when the whites were not there?

MR VEYI: No.

MR VISSER: Did you ever assault her while they were away?

MR VEYI: No.

MR VISSER: Now when - you told this Committee that after some time, you decided that what you were doing was wrong and you felt sorry for her, is that right?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: When did this happen, in the first week, second week, third week or fourth week or the fifth week while you were on the farm?

MR VEYI: I cannot remember clearly but during the first days, when she came, she started, she was assaulted first at Norwood and she came there after a week or two and her condition had changed.

TP

That is when we got this feeling.

MR VISSER: Somewhere in the middle perhaps, while she was being kept there?

MR VEYI: There were only white Officers who were assaulting her, and we just told ourselves that we are going to back off, we were not prepared to take part in assaulting her.

MR VISSER: You, please stop me if I am wrong, but didn't you say in your evidence that it took place in the latter part of her detention at the farm, in the fourth week, thereabouts?

MR VEYI: Maybe I made a mistake, I cannot say I did not say that, or I cannot say I said so.

MR VISSER: That is not the point, the point that I want to ask you is this, after you came to the conclusion that what you were doing, was wrong and you felt sorry for her, and the white Officers left, did you take off her shackles, her cuffs from her arms and from her legs to allow her to move freely because you felt sorry for her?

MR VEYI: We would take the cuffs off.

MR VISSER: Both the arms and the legs?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: Did you ever tell anybody that you did that? Did you tell your Attorney that you did that?

MR VEYI: I did not tell him because he did not ask me.

MR VISSER: You see, what surprises one with respect to you Mr Veyi, is at page 5 of Exhibit S, you dealt with this whole question of the cuffs and there you never made the qualification. You were addressing yourself to that and you never made the qualification to say that when the white people were not there, the cuffs were removed. At page 5 the top of the page, you simply say this -

> "... she was kept at this place for more than a month, she was both hand- and footcuffed."

That is it. Now I am putting it to you that if it were true that you decided and in fact did remove her cuffs, then it was the easiest thing in the world just to say so. Don't you agree?

MR VEYI: I can see that I did not write that, but I am saying it now. I don't know where the difference is.

MR VISSER: You don't see it, all right. Were the white people still interrogating Simelane at the last week, during the last week when you were there?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: Now at that stage, according to your evidence, she had now been interrogated for a month, a week in Norwood and three weeks on the farm, is that correct?

MR VEYI: That is correct, yes.

MR VISSER: And in all this time, she refused to cooperate?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

TP

MR VISSER: But what could possibly have been the point of continuing to interrogate a person who clearly doesn't want to cooperate and doing it for a month? What is the purpose of that, I mean it is rather stupid, isn't it? 326

MR VEYI: Mr Visser or Mr Venter is going to see this thing with his own eye because he doesn't understand the way the Police were operating, this was possible that this process could go on for more than a month because they would be hoping that this person might end up co-operating. That is the motivation behind that.

MR VISSER: Give us an example of another person that was interrogated for more than a month, who refused to participate right from the word go?

MR VEYI: As I am saying Nokuthula's case was different from the other cases because Joe who was from Angola, who was trained in Angola as an MK member, took two weeks and he co-operated. Peter Lengene who was from Botswana, he didn't take much, it was only less than a month and then he co-operated. During his first week of interrogation, he agreed immediately. The interrogation discontinued. With Nokuthula's case, she was totally refusing, it was something that was unusual to exceed two to three weeks, trying to turn a person without success. That is the reason why it took more than a month in her case.

MR VISSER: What you have just told us about Peter Lengene, is something that somebody else told you, is that right?

MR VEYI: I did not hear it from somebody else, I know him, I was in the Unit. When he was kidnapped, I was not present, but as part of my duty was to recruit the people, informers, giving them training, Peter Lengene was one of those people. I did not hear it from anyone else, I was working in that particular Unit.

MR VISSER: Mr Veyi, we have gone through this before, you were not present, you had nothing to do with the kidnapping and turning of Mr Peter Lengene, I put it to you before?

MR VEYI: Yes, I was not present during the kidnapping, but during the process of orientating him, telling him about the advantages and disadvantages of being a Policeman, not disadvantages, this is when he was staying at a safe house that was in Klipspruit and sometimes he would be at Mr Coetzee's in-laws in Rustenburg, he was staying there in a garage.

MR VISSER: Did you participate in the attacks on the power stations of either Bryanston or Fairlands or both?

MR VEYI: Yes, I was present at Fairlands and Bryanston.

MR VISSER: What was that about, why did you do that?

MR VEYI: It was part of my duties as a member of the Security Police.

MR VISSER: Mr Selamolela says that it was done to preserve the credibility of SAP agents in Swaziland, page 571 of Bundle 3 Chairperson, paragraph 2.

MR VEYI: Yes, I agree with you.

MR VISSER: You don't have to agree with me, do you agree with him that that was the purpose?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: It was a false flag operation?

TP

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: Do you know about the fact that a certain MK Mpho, was arrested while Simelane was held on the farm?

MR VEYI: I think Mpho's case is different to Simelane's case. Mpho's case is different from Nokuthula's case.

MR VISSER: Why don't you just answer the question?

MR VEYI: Will you please repeat your question?

MR VISSER: Please listen to the question then. Do you know about the fact that Mpho was arrested while Simelane was on the farm?

MR VEYI: He was not arrested because of Nokuthula.

ADV GCABASHE: The question was do you know of his arrest at the time that Nokuthula Simelane was at the farm, at that time?

MR VEYI: That was not the time of his arrest when Nokuthula was on the farm.

MR VISSER: Did you hear that Coetzee and Pretorius and Mong gave that evidence?

MR VEYI: Yes I heard so.

MR VISSER: Did you tell your Attorney that you disagree with them?

MR VEYI: He did not ask me about that.

MR VISSER: I didn't ask you whether he asked you, I asked you whether you told him.

MR VEYI: I did not tell him.

MR VISSER: Do you know about the arrest of some 17 other ANC members later?

MR VEYI: I was surprised to hear about the 17 people who were arrested.

MR VISSER: Do you find it impossible to answer a question? Did you hear of 17 people who were arrested later?

MR LAMEY: Later here at the proceedings or when exactly, can we just get clarity on that.

MR VISSER: They were arrested not at the proceedings Chairperson, my learned friend couldn't possibly think that I am saying that.

MR LAMEY: No, at the moment when he heard it. At the moment when he heard that.

CHAIRPERSON: Yes, will you try to specify Mr Visser.

MR VISSER: Do you know or did you hear that some 17 ANC or MK members were arrested towards the end of 1983 and in 1984?

MR VEYI: The people who were arrested were arrested in the beginning of 1984 if my memory serves me well, it was from 1984 upwards. They were not 18.

MR VISSER: All right. You see that is the point I tried to make right at the beginning, anything that is put to you on behalf of the white Officers in principle, you will oppose, but let's go on. Can you deny that those arrests were made possible from what was either directly or indirectly, learned from Simelane? 328

TP 97

MR VEYI: I dispute that. The people who were arrested were not arrested because of Nokuthula, they were arrested by SWT66, that is Nompumelelo. They were arrested because of SWT66. There was Cheche among them, Justice Ngedi.

MR VISSER: Yes, all right. Did you concede yesterday, did I hear you correctly to say that Simelane wrote down stuff on paper?

MR VEYI: I said I did not remember her writing down, but she was paging the photo album.

MR VISSER: Did you ever see her write anything on paper?

MR VEYI: No, I do not remember that.

MR VISSER: Can you deny that she wrote things down on paper when she was requested to do so by Coetzee?

MR VEYI: I cannot dispute that, perhaps she did during my absence, but I do not remember seeing her doing that.

MR VISSER: Do you recall Pretorius giving evidence that when they left, Coetzee told the black members who stayed behind with her to see to it that she writes down things on paper?

MR VEYI: Yes, I remember hearing that from him.

MR VISSER: Do you agree that that was correct? Is that evidence correct?

MR VEYI: I am saying during my presence, I do not remember that. Perhaps if he is referring to black members, he is also referring to the other people excluding myself. I was not the only black member there.

MR VISSER: Yes, we all know that. You stated in Exhibit S page 7, paragraph 9(b) right at the bottom of the page, you say -

> "... she was seriously assaulted and as a result suffered injuries on her body ..."

Now, we know what you are talking about when you refer to body, but later on and I am not quite sure where it was, but later on you stated that she was swollen, swollen over her whole body, did I hear you correctly, swollen all over I think you said? That was yesterday afternoon.

MR VEYI: I said her face was swollen, her body and she couldn't walk. I think the reason for that was because she was being kicked, but her face was swollen.

MR VISSER: And I think you also added her wrists I think Mr Chairperson, you pointed that out to me when I didn't hear the answer. I just wanted to make sure of that. What would have happened to you Mr Veyi, in 1983 if the ANC had suspected that you were a sell-out?

MR VEYI: If it happened that the ANC learned that I was a sell-out, the MK and the SAP Intelligence were working almost the same, but what was going to happen, the ANC would try to recruit me and let me go back to them and work there, work for them there and work here in South Africa.

MR VISSER: And are you naive enough to believe what you have just said?

T.P

INTERPRETER: Will the speaker please repeat the question.

MR VISSER: Let me rephrase the question. Were sell-outs not a legitimate target of MK?

MR LAMEY: Could we just get clarity, sell-outs as sell-outs from the Security Force's side, namely people that turned against the Security Force or sell-outs that turned against MK? From what area are we talking about? I think that is where the ...

CHAIRPERSON: Or was your client a Security Policeman?

MR LAMEY: Yes.

CHAIRPERSON: Your client was a Security Policeman all along?

MR LAMEY: Yes, I believe so.

CHAIRPERSON: Do you mean in that sense Mr Visser, what would happen to a Security Policeman?

MR VISSER: No, I mean sell-out in the sense that the ANC means it in their target selection. They talk about sell-outs, government stooges, meaning people whom they suspected of working with the system, with the government. Obviously Policemen fell under that.

CHAIRPERSON: They were the system, the Police were the system, people who worked with the system.

MR VISSER: They were the system, yes.

CHAIRPERSON: People who worked with the system, as I understood it, were members of the community who were assisting the system. So what is the ...

MR VISSER: Well, I understood this witness to be an undercover agent.

CHAIRPERSON: No, not him.

MR LAMEY: No.

MR VISSER: Oh well, all right, well then I can understand my learned friend's objection, all right, fair enough, I am sorry, then I withdraw that. I am sorry, then I withdraw that. Let me ask you this, if the ANC came to know that the Police had arrested Simelane and kept her on a farm for five weeks in seclusion, what do you think would their reaction have been if she were to be released thereafter?

MR VEYI: First of all Nokuthula Simelane was an MK member. Coetzee wouldn't take that risk of taking Nokuthula back to Swaziland knowing very well that he had kept her for that time. The ANC would know obviously that that person was sent, was on a mission. That was not possible.

MR VISSER: Why wouldn't Coetzee take her back to Swaziland after five weeks, what would happen to Simelane do you think?

MR VEYI: He wouldn't do that, first of all I do not remember since I started working for the Security Branch, I do not remember an MK member after being turned to work for the Police, and be taken back again. What used to happen was if the person works for the Police and if Coetzee does not want that person to work with him in the Unit, he would be taken, he or she would be taken to Pretoria, not for that person to be taken back again. That never happened, more especially with an MK member. If she did go back, she would go back there and there would be people who would be monitoring her movements in Swaziland, if she had co-operated with the system this side and she goes back to Swaziland, Coetzee would get a report that this person has changed her mind.

TP

MR VISSER: Bluntly Mr Veyi, I really don't know what your answer has to do with my question, but wouldn't she be killed in all probability by the ANC, if they suspected that she had become an informer?

MR VEYI: Because she was trained, it would be impossible for Coetzee to take her back. There was never a case like that before, a case whereby an MK member is taken back after being turned to work for the system and then be taken back again to Swaziland.

ADV GCABASHE : Mr Veyi, Mr Visser is asking you to speculate because you were part of the Security Branch. He is asking you to speculate on what you think might have happened to Nokuthula if indeed she had been put back, speculate, he wants your opinion?

MR VEYI: As a person who was working for the ANC, Nokuthula that is, I think the ANC would tell her that they were having suspicions about her and they would tell her to go back to South Africa as if she was there to give a report, and then she would be a person, she would pretend as if she was working for the Police, therefore she would be working for the ANC and for the Security Police at the same time.

CHAIRPERSON: Do you mean they would turn her into a double agent?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

CHAIRPERSON: And use her in turn against the Security Police?

MR VEYI: Yes.

CHAIRPERSON: Yes Mr Visser.

MR VISSER: And is that what you think would probably have happened?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: Yes. Can you deny that Simelane was in fact recruited as an informer? Can you deny that?

MR VEYI: What I didn't understand, if Nokuthula was recruited Selamolela and myself were working with those people, we knew about her and if she was recruited, we would know that she was recruited and she was working. Coetzee would tell us, that is why I was surprised when I heard him saying that she was already working.

MR VISSER: I understand that you are drawing inferences from what you know, but I ask you this, can you deny that in fact without you knowing it, Simelane had become an informer, can you deny that?

MR VEYI: Yes, I dispute that on the basis that during the last weeks of her being kept on the farm, she was still swollen and her condition was not changed and if she was really recruited and sent back to Swaziland with swollen face like that, what story would she give to the people in Swaziland.

MR VISSER: Yes, well of course, there is a conflict of the evidence you see, because the applicants whom I represent, disagree with you. They say that the assaults took place during the first week and thereafter only occasionally, you have a different story about that. Can you deny that she was registered as an informer in Soweto?

MR VEYI: I heard Superintendent Coetzee saying that. What my Attorney asked me or the family Attorney asked was the number, her number, but Coetzee could not tell her number. That is impossible for a person who is recruited, and I know Mr Coetzee is very, very brilliant, he will never ever forget that number.

T.P

MR VISSER: Can you deny it or can't you deny it, are you speculating that it didn't happen because he cannot remember the number?

MR VEYI: I dispute that, because he could not tell the Committee about her number.

MR VISSER: Is that the only reason why you deny it? I am sorry, that is an unfair question, I withdraw that. You - I want to come to the meeting at the Fochville/Potchefstroom roads. Was Selamolela present?

MR VEYI: I was with him.

ADV DE JAGER: I am not sure whether it was, whether the road the four way cross-roads was identified as the Fochville/Potchefstroom road.

MR VISSER: (Microphone not on)

ADV DE JAGER: Oh, was Fochville mentioned? I know Carltonville was mentioned.

MR VISSER: (Microphone not on), page 5, paragraph 7 of Exhibit S. Nothing turns on it, I just want to identify where I am going to now, nothing turns on Fochville or any of the other names. The day where you met Coetzee on his own with his blue XR6, Ford motor car on the road at the crossing, where you saw according to you, Simelane in the boot of the car, that is the incident I am referring to, do you understand?

MR VEYI: Yes.

MR VISSER: Thank you. Was Selamolela present?

MR VEYI: I was with Selamolela if my memory serves me well.

MR VISSER: Yes, you said it all over, you said it in your statements, etc, etc, you said it in your evidence. So he also saw Simelane in the boot of the car?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: And if he is talking the truth, he will come and confirm that as far as you are concerned?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: And when you saw Simelane in the car, the boot was closed and Coetzee told you to go back to Soweto?

MR VEYI: Coetzee opened the boot, when I saw him there, I want to explain this so that you know what happened, what led to those circumstances.

MR VISSER: I am sorry, you lost me completely. Would you please explain that.

MR VEYI: We were now at the office, there were guards that were at Northum.

MR VISSER: Mr Veyi, I am sorry ...

MR VEYI: We were to go back to Northum to guard her, but before going to Northum, we would stop at the office and get instructions because we would go to the office and get instructions, because Mr

T.P

Coetzee was not in the office, he was on the farm at the time, because when we saw him before that day, he had told us to go to the farm, but when we arrived at the office, the plan had changed. He said we should meet with him at Potchefstroom at the Security Branch office where Colonel Loots or Colonel Steyn was, who was involved with the Western Transvaal Security Branch. We drove to Potchefstroom to meet him in those offices. On our way on this Fochville crossing Carltonville, we saw an XR6 car approaching and then he flashed the lights, it was during the day, he stopped and we realised that that was him, Mr Coetzee that is. We went to his car and he got out of his car and he told us not to go to Northum because the guards were withdrawn. He instructed us to go back and then he said here is the lady, he opened the boot and then he told us that he was taking her back home. After that he closed the boot and then we went back. When I looked at her, she was cuffed on foot and her hands were at the back and they were also tied and then he closed the boot and then we went back to the office.

MR VISSER: I don't know how that is an answer to my question but you said something interesting, he opened the boot to show you the lady and he told you he was taking her home? That is what you have just said.

MR VEYI: That is correct.

MR VISSER: What did you understand by that?

MR VEYI: There was nothing else that I could think about because I was listening to what he was saying, he said he was taking her home.

MR VISSER: What did that mean to you, was he going to release her?

MR VEYI: Yes, I thought so because he was taking her home, it means he was releasing her.

MR VISSER: Now let's come back to my question, according to you, after you and Selamolela saw Simelane in the boot, Coetzee closed the boot and he told you to go back to Soweto?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VISSER: That is the question I asked. My question to you is on your evidence, why do you think did Coetzee let you come down to Potchefstroom to do what he did?

MR VEYI: This meeting here on the way, we were on our way to Potchefstroom but when we met her on the way, stopping us, we did not know why did he leave Potchefstroom because when we moved from the office, we were going to Potchefstroom but we met with him on the way to Potchefstroom.

MR VISSER: But he said nothing to you, he told you nothing, he gave you no orders, he just showed you Simelane in the boot and he told you to go back to Soweto?

MR VEYI: That is correct, yes.

MR VISSER: Do you have any idea why he would have done that?

MR VEYI: I don't know.

MR VISSER: Well, neither do I. I want to put it to you that this meeting where Simelane would have been shown to you, is a figment of your imagination. It never happened, there was no reason for it and you can't even give any kind of explanation of why it should have happened.

MR VEYI: It happened.

MR VISSER: And lastly, your version is not supported by Mr Selamolela.

T.P

ADV DE JAGER: Mr Veyi, did you have radio's at that time in the motor cars, the Police vehicles?

MR VEYI: The way we were operating, we were working like underground Policemen and our identity was not to be revealed because we were working with sensitive information and the informers were not supposed to know anything. Therefore we did not have radio communication.

ADV DE JAGER: Thank you.

MR VISSER: Mr Chairman, I see it is close to one o'clock, can I go on a little while longer. I want to refer you again to Exhibit S, page 6, paragraph 8 where you said that a few days later, that is now a few days after you saw her in the boot of the car, you spoke to Sergeant Mothiba who told you that Coetzee and Pretorius had shot, killed and buried Simelane at Rustenburg, is that still your evidence?

MR VEYI: Before talking to Sergeant Mothiba, I asked Mr Pretorius as to what happened to Nokuthula, and he said to me I must stop asking a lot of questions. I kept quiet. After a few days, after a day or two, as we were chatting in the office with Sergeant Mothiba, Mothiba told me and said to me Mchana, I am scared of these white men. I asked him why and then he said that they are very cruel. Then he said they shot her, killed her and buried her in Rustenburg.

MR VISSER: Yes. And if you have resentment for white Officers, that is a very nice story to tell, particularly because Mr Mothiba is dead and he can't come and tell what he says about this?

MR VEYI: It is the same, Mr Coetzee and Sergeant Mong's evidence, in their evidence they did not mention myself and Selamolela who are still alive, they were talking about SRA to Fred Langa who is no more and Sergeant Mothiba and I want to know, I am talking about Sergeant Mothiba who is no more and they mentioned Sergeant Mothiba who is no more, where is the difference now?

MR VISSER: Why would you think if Coetzee and Pretorius wanted to kill Simelane, why would you think would they tell Mothiba about it? One wouldn't expect that, would one?

MR VEYI: Will you please repeat your question?

MR VISSER: One wouldn't expect the murderers to spread the story around, would one, that they killed someone?

MR VEYI: The way he was telling me this, Sergeant Mothiba, it looked like he witnessed this incident.

MR VISSER: Oh, I see, so he was actually part of the killing of Simelane, as a witness or as an accomplice or whatever? Is that what you are saying?

MR VEYI: I think so because when he told me, it was not a hearsay, it is something that he was present when it was being done.

MR VISSER: Why would he have told you about this do you think? Is there any reason why you could think why he should come and tell you about that if he was involved?

MR VEYI: Perhaps he was not feeling good about it, so he decided to tell someone about it.

MR VISSER: Yes. Now when you spoke to the newspaper reporters about this alleged killing of Simelane, did you tell them that Mothiba told me this or did you state it as a fact that she was killed by Coetzee and Pretorius?

MR VEYI: I told them that Mothiba told me that Pretorius and Coetzee killed her.

MR VISSER: Well that takes care of that question Chairperson, it has just landed on the floor, all my papers. I see it is one o'clock, so the clock has come to my assistance. 334

TP 9

CHAIRPERSON: Yes, we will take the lunch adjournment, and we will reconvene in 30 minutes' time.

MR VISSER: (Microphone not on)

CHAIRPERSON: We will meet you, yes.

COMMITTEE ADJOURNS

ON RESUMPTION:

NIMROD VEYI: (s.u.o)

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR VISSER: (cont)

Thank you Mr Chairman. Mr Chairman, as promised, I did draft a new list of Exhibit to bring it up to date, I think it has been handed to you, it should have been handed to you. It now goes to AA2 and I am going to hand up an Exhibit straight away within a moment or so, which will be Exhibit BB. Thank you Mr Chair. Mr Veyi, I better get my headset on, just before we adjourned, I asked you whether you had told the reporters that you heard from Mr Mothiba that Simelane was killed by Coetzee and Pretorius, do you remember that?

MR VEYI: Yes, I do remember that.

MR VISSER: What was your answer, I don't remember your answer?

MR VEYI: I said I told the reporters that Coetzee and Pretorius killed Simelane and I was told by Sergeant Mothiba.

MR VISSER: Page 17 of Exhibit T, Chairperson, in the right hand column, the third paragraph I just want to read that -

> "... the Policeman, that is you, told the Sowetan that Simelane had been held captive by his Unit and tortured so badly her body was unrecognisable. He also claimed that Coetzee and Pretorius were responsible for Simelane's death."

Would that have been what you told the reporter Sharon Chetty?

MR LAMEY: Sorry, may I just give the article to him? Is it on page 17? Which column?

MR VISSER: My question is, is that a correct reflection of what you told the reporter?

MR VEYI: The heading about "MK agent/cop seeks amnesty", I would like you to go back to the one with the heading "Cops trapped and killed MK", that is what I said. I think this is a story that followed up from what I said.

MR VISSER: Which is this page?

MR LAMEY: It is pointed out, there are some loose leaflet pages that have also been distributed about articles in the Sowetan, there is a number 3, I don't know they are marked Exhibits, I know that they were distributed to the legal representatives. I think that is repeated in the Exhibit T, although the copy that we have before us on Exhibit T is not a good copy, the loose leaf copy in front of the witness is a better copy. I think he refers to what is on page 24.

TP

MR VISSER: What on page 24 are you referring to?

ADV DE JAGER: (Microphone not on)

MR VISSER: He was told by Sergeant - yes thank you Chairperson, thank you Mr Veyi, I missed that, I am indebted to you. The other reference which I could find was at page, yes, that is page 17 and then at page 18, just a short sentence in the right hand column, first, second, third paragraph, "he claimed that she was killed after held for about two months", but you have also pointed out the other one where reference is made to the Sergeant, yes. Thank you. Now, in Exhibit S, at page 4, you listed the names of those people that you could remember, who came to the farm at Northum, is that correct? Is that correct?

MR VEYI: That is correct.

MR VISSER: All right, then at page 6 in paragraph 8, the second last sentence, you stated -

> "... I just wish to mention that I had forgotten to mention that Constable Patrick Kobe was also used as a guard."

We are talking about the farm, is that evidence correct?

MR VEYI: No, I made a mistake here.

MR VISSER: Yes.

MR VEYI: After we discussed, the first heading of City Press, I made a mistake.

MR VISSER: Yes, and Mr Kobe was informed about what you said and he made a statement, Chairperson that was a statement that was handed to me by the Evidence Leader, it professes to be a statement under oath, but mine is not attested to, oh, I see, it is a retyped version of, yes, in fact, it is an affidavit, it is in fact an affidavit, and Chairperson, as I want to refer to one sentence of that, perhaps it should go in as Exhibit BB? BB1 and BB2? I remember it was placed on your table yesterday.

CHAIRPERSON: Yes, we have a hand-written statement by a Mr Kobe, yes and then somebody had retyped it for us, a typed version where he is referred to as Robe?

MR VISSER: Yes. Perhaps if you want to mark the manuscript BB1 and the typed version BB2. Thank you Chairperson. Now you say you made a mistake, all right. He says and I am referring to the last paragraph of BB2, the third last sentence, he says -

> "... I also said, it should read he also said, that is you, also said he once heard from the late Mothiba that Warrant Officer Coetzee and his team once arrested a lady ..."

I am not so sure whether this should be, perhaps I should refer to the hand-written portion Chairperson, it doesn't make sense, yes, it should be he.

ADV GCABASHE: Second last line.

MR VAN DEN BERG: "I also said I once heard from the late...",

so it is "I".

Thank you, I will read it again -

TP 17

"... I also said I once heard from the late Mothiba that Warrant Officer Coetzee and his team once arrested a lady whom he never mentioned the name to me and said the lady disappeared and was killed by his team."

It must clearly refer to the witness or Mothiba? I also said I once heard ...

ADV GCABASHE: He heard from Mothiba Mr Visser.

MR VISSER: He, being Kobe?

ADV GCABASHE: Yes.

MR VISSER: Chairperson, yes, then it doesn't make sense at all, because it starts off by saying "he told me that he knew about the lady, he explained to me that the lady was being arrested by our Branch. I also said I once heard ..."

MR LAMEY: In the context it would appear a conversation between him and Veyi.

MR VISSER: Arrested the lady, well, then there is no point to be made out of this and I leave it Chairperson. I just want to put it to you or let me rather ask you, Exhibits AA1 and AA2 do I understand correctly that that is a statement you made to the South African Police, Mr Veyi?

MR LAMEY: May we just have an opportunity just to get that portion.

MR VISSER: Don't you recognise the statement?

MR LAMEY: It has just been placed before the witness, I was trying to find it.

MR VISSER: I thought he handed it in.

MR LAMEY: Yes, he did hand it in but when the question was asked, I took it out from my pile here and just placed it before him.

CHAIRPERSON: Is Mr Veyi looking at Exhibit AA1?

MR LAMEY: Yes.

CHAIRPERSON: All right Mr Visser?

MR VISSER: Mr Veyi, is that the statement that you made to the Police?

MR VEYI: I haven't read the whole statement but this is my signature.

MR VISSER: Did the police give you indemnity against prosecution, Mr Veyi? - the Attorney-General.

MR LAMEY: Mr Chairman, I don't know whether the Attorney-Attorney can as a matter of law, give indemnity to any witness.

MR VISSER: Well, what is the purpose of Section 24?

MR LAMEY: It's for the court, as I understand, to give indemnity.

MR VISSER: Yes.

MR LAMEY: You asked about the Attorney-General.

TP

MR VISSER: Perhaps I should choose my words better then. Were you promised indemnity by, anyone, Mr Veyi? 337

MR VEYI: I can't remember.

MR VISSER: I see. You can't remember whether you were promised indemnity in case you gave satisfactory evidence against someone else in a case, in this particular case of Simelane?

MR VEYI: No, I don't remember, I can't remember.

MR VISSER: Thank you, Mr Chairman, I have no further questions.

NO FURTHER QUESTIONS BY MR VISSER

CHAIRPERSON: It looks like that kind of indemnity doesn't bear very much weight nowadays, Mr Visser.

MR VISSER: ...(indistinct)

CHAIRPERSON: Yes, Advocate Gcabashe?

ADV GCABASHE: Is it Gobe or Kobe?

MR VEYI: Kobe.

ADV GCABASHE: K-O, Kobe, thank you.

CHAIRPERSON: Yes, Mr van den Berg?

MR VAN DEN BERG: Mr Chairperson, I have a logistical difficulty at the moment. There is a person who might be a potential witness, but he has time constraints and he needs to leave fairly soon. Could I have a short adjournment, no more than five minutes, just to make those logistical arrangements? I apologise for the inconvenience. I know that we're running well behind schedule and at the rate we're going, it looks like we will battle to finish by the close of business tomorrow. So I apologise for that.

CHAIRPERSON: Yes.

MR VAN DEN BERG: Thank you, Mr Chairperson, I'm indebted.

CHAIRPERSON: Yes, we'll stand down for a few moments.

COMMITTEE ADJOURNS

ON RESUMPTION

CHAIRPERSON: Mr Veyi, you're still under oath. Mr van den Berg?

NIMROD VEYI: (s.u.o.)

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR VAN DEN BERG:

Mr Chairperson, I'm indebted for the short adjournment. I have been able to make other arrangements in respect of this particular witness.

Mr Veyi, can we just start with your relationship with the other members of the unit that you were part of. If we can just take them one by one. Sergeant Mothiba, what was your relationship with him? How long had you worked with him? That's the kind of information I'm looking for.

T.P

MR VEYI: Sergeant Mothiba, I knew him very well. I started working with him when I joined the Police Force in 1978. He was stationed in Meadowlands. I met him in Meadowlands in 1978, and then in 1981 I joined the Security Branch in Protea when I again met him. We then worked in the same unit until he died. I can't remember when he died, but it was the mid-'80s.

MR VAN DEN BERG: And this work that you did as a member of the Security Branch, this was fairly dangerous work, you were involved with the tracking down of information relating to MK cadres and to other members of the liberation movement. Would you agree with that assessment?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VAN DEN BERG: And it would be necessary that the people that you worked with were people that you trusted?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VAN DEN BERG: If we can move on. Sergeant Langa, RS269 I believe his code was, is that correct?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VAN DEN BERG: When did you first meet him?

MR VEYI: I can't remember well when he joined but when he joined the Police Force, I met him then for the first time. It was the early '80's. I think it was '81 or '82, I'm not sure, but it was the early 1980's. We were the people who were training him when he started at the police, until he died.

MR VAN DEN BERG: And what was his role in your unit?

MR VEYI: Langa was an undercover police. He was playing the same role as Mr Mkhonza's role.

MR VAN DEN BERG: Was he a person who reported to the same office as you did or was he a person who - ja, let me ask you that way, was he a person who reported to the same office as you did?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VAN DEN BERG: And he would report for duty regularly at Protea?

MR VEYI: No, those who were working undercover were not doing the same job as ours, they were not reporting at the office.

MR VAN DEN BERG: So where and when did he report?

MR VEYI: He would phone and then he would tell where he was and Mkhize would send Lazarus or myself to pick him up. We'd meet in a certain place and then he would interview him..

MR VAN DEN BERG: So your unit was the way in which both Langa and Mkhonza reported to the police, their reporting would be through your unit, is that correct? Do I understand you correctly?

MR VEYI: They were the police, but they were working undercover. They were reporting to Coetzee. Each and every report was reported to Coetzee.

MR VAN DEN BERG: Now what was the position in respect of Peter Lengene, when did you first meet him?

TP

MR VEYI: I met Peter Lengene, if I still remember well, in 1982.

MR VAN DEN BERG: And from the evidence we'd heard earlier today, this was after he had been abducted in Botswana and he had agreed to work for the South African Police, is that correct?

MR VEYI: That is correct.

MR VAN DEN BERG: What was your relationship like with him?

MR VEYI: I ...(indistinct) were working together with Peter Lengene after he was turned to be a police official. He worked the same way as us, together with Lazarus.

MR VAN DEN BERG: There's a policeman referred to in these papers, by the name of Sefuti. I understand he was a member of your unit, is that correct?

MR VEYI: That is correct.

MR VAN DEN BERG: What was his role in the unit?

MR VEYI: Sefuti was from the Police College. We were doing the same job, the normal police duties.

MR VAN DEN BERG: And then I presume the same goes for Radebe?

MR VEYI: Yes.

MR VAN DEN BERG: How did the RS programme work? What I'm really interested in is who reported to who? To whom did informers report, to whom did the undercover policemen report?

MR VEYI: RS programmes was operating this way; in Protea there was an office, a recruiting office where everybody who was joining the Police Force would be at that office. We would go to that office and then observe these people and if we could see that a particular person can be able to work with us, we would take that particular person to our office. And in our office that person would tell us whether he wants to be a police, and then after that, because there were a lot of them, there was a group of people, we would recruit that particular person and then Coetzee would tell him that there's a short way that he would use to help him to be a police, he won't take six weeks to be a police. We would then take his papers, his particulars and fill in the papers.

He would then give out a story at home to the people who saw him, that he's a police. He would say that he doesn't want to be a police anymore, he stopped being a police, he found a job somewhere else. And then after that he would be trained and we would tell him and explain all the ways of infiltration and then he would be sent to that particular organisation to infiltrate.

MR VAN DEN BERG: Is this - are we talking her about people like Mkhonza and Langa, is that who you referred to now? Are they examples of what you referred to?

MR VEYI: Yes, all those who were RS were police.

MR VAN DEN BERG: Now the informer network, to whom did the informers report? For example, SWT66? And I don't want you to mention her name.

MR VEYI: All of them they were reporting to Coetzee.

MR VAN DEN BERG: Did they report directly to an officer like Coetzee, or were there instances where they might report to somebody like Langa or Mkhonza?

MR VEYI: They were reporting directly to Coetzee.

TP

MR VAN DEN BERG: Was there ever a situation where an informer would report to an uncover policeman? - just by way of general.

MR VEYI: No, that didn't happen. I don't remember something like that happening. 340

MR VAN DEN BERG: Would there have been a reason why that didn't happen, or are you saying it simply didn't happen?

MR VEYI: I don't remember it happening.

MR VAN DEN BERG: When you last saw Nokuthula Simelane, your version is that she was in the boot of Coetzee's car. You remember giving that evidence?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VAN DEN BERG: Can you describe her condition at that time, what was she wearing and what did she look like?

MR VEYI: As I've already said, the last time I saw her at the farm when I was going back, she was swollen. The condition had not changed. Her face was swollen and she was wearing a brown overall, police overall.

MR VAN DEN BERG: Do you know a policeman by the name of Garibe? Does the name mean anything to you?

MR VEYI: Radebe we're talking about here?

MR VAN DEN BERG: Not Radebe, Garibe; G-A-R-I-B-E. Does that name mean anything to you?

MR VEYI: Yes, I do remember Garibe.

MR VAN DEN BERG: Was he involved in this incident at all?

MR VEYI: There were different units in Protea. We were in the Intelligence Unit and Garibe, if I remember well, was in the group that was under Captain Grobbelaar. When there was an information that there's a terrorist somewhere, that particular group would go there and arrest the terrorist.

MR VAN DEN BERG: So if I understand you correctly, this person was not involved in this incident at all? He was no involved in either guarding or the interrogation of Nokuthula Simelane?

MR VEYI: No, I don't remember him there, he was not there.

MR VAN DEN BERG: I want to show you a photograph. This is the photograph that was given to me, or put in my possession by Mr Wagener and Mr Visser, the photograph of what is described here as MK Mpho. Do you recognise this person at all?

I'm afraid, Mr Chairperson, there aren't copies of it, but I'll hand it up once he's had a look at it.

You will see that there is a person crouching, wearing dungarees. Do you recognise that person at all?

MR VEYI: I can't see this person clearly. I don't know him.

MR VAN DEN BERG: Sorry, I wasn't listening to the interpretation, what was the answer?

MR VEYI: I don't know him.

TP 97

ADV DE JAGER: Sorry, are there two people on the photo?

MR VAN DEN BERG: Mr Chairperson, the photo contains three individuals, two white persons who from the look of the photograph, appear to be policemen and then a person with his hands cuffed behind his back, kneeling. And then the designation on the back of the photograph is "MK Mpho", with the date "1983". Can I hand the photograph back to the Panel, Mr Chairperson?

CHAIRPERSON: Yes, it was handed to us at some stage and it drifted back to Mr Wagener. I'm not sure if that was handed in as an exhibit, not really.

MR VAN DEN BERG: My recollection is that it wasn't handed in as an exhibit and I don't think that anything particularly turns on it. It's certainly different from the Mpho who was the handler of Nokuthula Simelane, the person known as Gilbert Twala.

CHAIRPERSON: The Swaziland one, okay. Yes, no, we've got enough documents.

MR VISSER: We make no point that it's the same person as my learned friend's witness, not at all.

MR VAN DEN BERG: Thank you, Mr Chairperson. I'm indebted to Mr Wagener for the loan of his photograph, or his client's photograph.

The group of 18 ANC members who were arrested, reference is made to it in pages 25, 26 and 27 of Exhibit T, and from what I understand from the evidence of Messrs Coetzee and Pretorius, included the arrest of Cheche. What is your recollection as to when that occurred? Was it at the same time as the arrest or the detention of Simelane, was it before, was it after?

MR VEYI: I think it was the following year when Cheche was arrested. If I still remember well it's either 1984 or 1985, but it was after Nokuthula's arrest.

MR VAN DEN BERG: Now I put it to both Coetzee, and I think I put it to Pretorius as well, that Cheche is a person known as Justice Ngedi and that he was arrested on the 25th of May 1984. Can you confirm or deny that?

MR VEYI: That might be so.

MR VAN DEN BERG: In your opinion, what led to the arrest of Ngedi and the 18 other, or the 17 other people?

MR VEYI: I can't remember the 17 people, but Ngedi's arrest was after Frank and Scotch used to frequent in Swaziland, and they would come with the report and there was RS SWT66 was also in Swaziland, in Manzini. He was from Swaziland. He brought a report to Coetzee and then RS SWT66 was close to Cheche, he knew him.

According to the information I got, he had to recruit a person here in South Africa and take that person to Swaziland. So he told Coetzee, he gave this report to Coetzee and then he took Selamolela and said that he was the one who was supposed to be introduced to Cheche because Cheche was the one who was supposed to come to South Africa. Selamolela then went, they went to the border post in Oshoek. That is where Cheche was arrested.

They were together with Nompumelelo, and the three of them with Lazarus were arrested there. I still remember that when Coetzee came back, it was during the night. He came with Cheche because when he went to Swaziland, Nompumelelo phoned and said that they were on the way, together with Cheche and then Coetzee drove to the border post where he was arrested, where Cheche was arrested.

MR VAN DEN BERG: When you say "they" were on their way to the border post, you refer to Cheche and to - was it RS269, to Langa? Do I understand you correctly, that he was one of those people?

TP 01

MR VEYI: SWT66 and Selamolela and Cheche. There were three of them. SWT66 phoned, confirming that they found Cheche and they were on the way out.

MR VAN DEN BERG: Sorry, I misunderstood you. Thank you for correcting me.

ADV GCABASHE: Sorry, just for some clarity. All you are really - not all, but one of the things you are saying is that SWT66 was instrumental in Cheche's arrest?

MR VEYI: That is correct.

ADV GCABASHE: Thank you.

MR VAN DEN BERG: Did you have any dealings with SWT66? Did she pass information on to you? Did you handle her at all?

MR VEYI: As I've already said, SWT66 I knew her. According to the information she was from Swaziland, staying in Manzini. Most of the MK cadres that were in Swaziland would go and hide weapons in her home.

I remember one time when Coetzee sent us together with Selamolela to Swaziland, that SWT66 said that there were weapons. Her boyfriend was a cadre. We went there and then she gave us those weapons. We brought them back to the office, explosives and AKs.

MR VAN DEN BERG: I don't want to revisit the aspects of the interrogation which you testified to at some length during your cross-examination by Mr Visser, and I think that we have sufficient evidence insofar as that is concerned. I just want to ask you about the participation of Strongman, the Mozambican. Was he also involved in both the interrogations and the assaults?

MR VEYI: Strongman was working, was doing the same job as I was. He took part in interrogations, because sometimes when an informer was to be fetched or an RS, Coetzee would send him to go and pick up that particular person, together with Malung(?).

MR VAN DEN BERG: Sorry, I want to return to the aspect of SWT66.

ADV DE JAGER: Could we just have clearance here. Did Strongman participate in this interrogation?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct, he took part, he participated. As I've already said, the black members also took part. The fact that he was guarding the farm is not true.

ADV DE JAGER: But what language did he speak, what did he ask her? Do you remember anything about what his role was in the interrogation?

MR VEYI: For example, if she was assaulted he would take part as any other person who was there, and he was speaking English and Zulu. He knew Zulu, a little bit of Zulu.

CHAIRPERSON: Yes, carry on, Mr van den Berg.

MR VAN DEN BERG: Sorry, I want to return to the, one or two further aspects surrounding SWT66. Do you know if she was ever withdrawn from Swaziland?

MR VEYI: I can't remember that. When I was still working at the Security Branch - I left there in 1986 and I was ...(indistinct) to the CIDs in Cape Town, when I left she was still working.

MR VAN DEN BERG: And do you know if she had any contact with the person who has been referred to in these proceedings as Mpho, the handler of Nokuthula Simelane?

TP

MR VEYI: No, I can't remember. If I still remember well, I can connect Mpho and Cheche's case. I can connect her with Mpho and Cheche's case. After Cheche was arrested he came to South Africa and then when he arrived here in South Africa, he was together with the Investigation Team of Protea. They were taking him to John Vorster. On the way to John Vorster -they took him to John Vorster and then they brought him back. On the way, under the chair the police had placed weapons and then on the way he took one firearm and he pointed them and they jumped out of the car, they ran away, and then he drove the car and he abandoned the car in Diepkloof. That's when he managed to escape the first time.

After his escape, Mkhize sent Nompumelelo back to Swaziland to report because according to my understanding they were working under the command of Gabuza Sephiwe Nyanda. He was sent to tell him that this person had not escaped, he was working together with the police. And then if I still remember well he got a lift from Swaziland back to South Africa. On the way she arrived back here and then she was together with an informer. After some time he was then arrested again. Then she went back to Swaziland and Nompumelelo reported again.

MR VAN DEN BERG: If I understand - I could extract from what you've told us, the aspects which I believe are relevant, it would seem that this SWT66 was well placed and that she had access even to a person like Gabuza, who is, that was the MK name for Sephiwe Nyanda. Did I understand that correctly?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct. As I've already said, most of the MK cadres that were in Swaziland, they trusted her. Everything that she said they were listening to it, because when Cheche escaped Gabuza took Nompumelelo's story as the truth. He then sent her again so that she could be ... (indistinct) the second time.

To add on that, on the case of the 18 cadres who were arrested, after Cheche was arrested I remember we were going to Dube to SWT66's uncle. We were with her and we told her to call, to phone Swaziland because there were people who were supposed to pick her up, and we told her to tell them that everything was okay, she arrived and she is fine. Then Cheche would phone and the people would come to South Africa and then they would be arrested. There was nothing else you could do because we were there with him and then he was phoning.

MR VAN DEN BERG: This discussion that you had with Sergeant Mothiba, during which he apparently said that he was afraid of these white men and that they were very cruel. Can you just give us a bit more information about that? You said to us in-chief and in cross-examination, that this took place some few days after you last saw Nokuthula Simelane. Can you remember where the discussion took place, were at the offices, were you out on an assignment? Can you give us that sort of information?

MR VEYI: If we would be in the office we would just chat generally about the work and I think it was about a week when we had come back from Northum.

Usually what used to happen is Coetzee and them would then give us the feedback about what happened, but in this case we did not get any feedback, they kept quiet. It is when I then decided to ask Pretorius where this girl was, what happened to her. He then told me not to ask a lot of questions. Two days after that, after asking that question we were, I was together with Sergeant Mothiba and then he said to me: "Mchana, I'm very scared of these white policemen". I ask him why, he said: "They are very cruel", and I asked why, he said: "They shot her and they killed her, they buried her in Rustenburg". That was the end of the story.

MR VAN DEN BERG: Where did this discussion take place, in the office?

TPM

MR VEYI: We were on the premises, Protea premises.

MR VAN DEN BERG: Was anybody else present when this discussion took place?

MR VEYI: At the Security Branch you would not just talk anything, sensitive things, you would tell a person that you trusted, that you knew that he would keep the secret, because if that kind of information can be revealed, if it could be found out that you knew something that you were not supposed to know, that would place you in a dangerous situation.

MR VAN DEN BERG: I accept that it wouldn't have been discussed with other members of the police, would it have been discussed with other members of the unit, were there other members of your unit present when Mothiba, when you had this discussion with Mothiba or was it just the two of you?

MR VEYI: It was just the two of us.

MR VAN DEN BERG: Did you repeat the story that Mothiba had told you, to any of your other colleagues?

MR VEYI: No, I didn't repeat it to other colleagues, I first started talking about this, I think it was in 1995.

MR VAN DEN BERG: That was when you saw the newspaper story.

MR VEYI: That is correct.

MR VAN DEN BERG: Mr Chairperson, the original or the newspaper clipping which gave rise to this whole thing is not before you, so I'd like to hand it up to through this witness. I have made copies available to my learned friends, I think that only the Panel are not in possession of this. It's a series of three photostat copies. If I could hand a copy to the witness and then hand up copies to yourselves and I'll get him to identify it and to sort it out.

Mr Veyi, if you have a look - can we mark that, Mr Chairperson? There is some duplication between this and what is contained in the other bundles, but if perhaps we could mark it CC 1, 2 and 3. There should be a single copy of each page, 3 pages.

MR LAMEY: Which one will be 1, 2 and 3?

MR VAN DEN BERG: The first page ...(indistinct) - sorry, my microphone, I apologise, is a copy from the Sowetan and headed:

"Missing in Action"

... with a poor photograph on the left-hand side.

CHAIRPERSON: Is that with the 2 written on it, and "perpetrator"? Switch on, switch on your mike.

MR VAN DEN BERG: With the 2 at the top, yes.

CHAIRPERSON: Is that the first one?

MR VAN DEN BERG: That's the first one.

CHAIRPERSON: Is it a single page?

MR VAN DEN BERG: It's a single page and then later from the same edition of the Sowetan, a page headed: 345

TP

"Mom's question: Where is my child?"

CHAIRPERSON: Alright, so that's the second article?

MR VAN DEN BERG: That's the second article.

CHAIRPERSON: Now let's start marking them. The first one will be CC1, the one that you've just identified. And the second article in that same edition of the Sowetan, dated January 27, 1995, will be CC2. Which is the next article, Mr van den Berg?

MR VAN DEN BERG: The next article is, there's already a copy of this before you in Exhibit T, but that's the Sowetan of the 6th of February, Monday the 6th of February, headed:

"Cops trapped and killed MK cadre"

CHAIRPERSON: Yes, so you want that ...

MR VAN DEN BERG: As CC3.

CHAIRPERSON: Marked Exhibit CC3. Yes? What is the next one?

MR VAN DEN BERG: Those are the three that I handed up.

CHAIRPERSON: Oh, then this is just simply duplicates, extra copies.

MR VAN DEN BERG: Well, if I could retrieve those from you at the end of the hearing.

CHAIRPERSON: Yes, very well.

MR VAN DEN BERG: Thank you, Mr Chairperson.

CHAIRPERSON: Yes, I think we're no on board. Mr van den Berg?

MR VAN DEN BERG: Mr Veyi, can I refer you to CC1? Do you recognise that?

MR VEYI: Yes.

MR VAN DEN BERG: Is it correct that this is the article which caused you to go to the Sowetan to speak to the reporter, Sharon Chetty?

MR VEYI: That is correct.

MR VAN DEN BERG: And this is an article dated 27th of January 1995?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VAN DEN BERG: And then what you told the Sowetan is recorded in CC3, the article dated the 6th of February 1995, is that correct?

MR VEYI: That is correct.

MR VAN DEN BERG: And that's the article on which you've been cross-examined by Mr Visser earlier on today?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

TP 49

MR VAN DEN BERG: Now at a stage you were referred to Exhibit T and page 17 thereof, do you have that exhibit in front of you? Do you have it in front of you, Mr Veyi?

MR VEYI: Yes.

MR VAN DEN BERG: Would you agree with me that that photograph is the same photograph which appears on CC1?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VAN DEN BERG: And the newspaper seems to have used the same photograph continually throughout its reporting of this matter?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VAN DEN BERG: Obviously this is an article of a much later date, the 22nd of May 1997?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR VAN DEN BERG: No further questions, Mr Chairperson.

NO FURTHER QUESTIONS BY MR VAN DEN BERG

CHAIRPERSON: Thank you very much, Mr van den Berg. Ms Thabethe?

MS THABETHE: No questions, Mr Chair.

NO QUESTIONS BY MS THABETHE

ADV GCABASHE: I'm going back to the very beginning of the evidence-in-chief. You were talking about knowing that somebody was going to come to the Carlton Centre and meet Mr Mkhonza. Did you know it was a woman? That's the note I have here. It wasn't clear to me.

MR VEYI: I knew that there was a person who was going to come there. I didn't know what kind of a person.

ADV GCABASHE: Then my next note is about your role in the interrogation of Nokuthula. You said she was questioned about whether she was trained etc., etc., what answers did she give you? Just give us examples of the answers she gave you.

MR VEYI: I think that she did say that she was trained. I don't know where Coetzee got it, but we heard that this lady was trained. That is when we made a follow-up, asking her where she was trained and who were other people that she knew.

ADV GCABASHE: Now assist me, I just want you to tell us about what you heard, what you heard from Nokuthula herself, not what you might have heard from Coetzee or Pretorius, just what you yourself heard during that interrogation. Did you hear her say that?

MR VEYI: I don't remember hearing her saying that.

ADV GCABASHE: You then talked about going up to the farm, you were picked up at the police station. Who did you find on the farm the first time you went there?

MR VEYI: I can't - I don't remember clearly who we found there in the farm, but there were people that were there.

TP 67

ADV GCABASHE: White officers, black officers or just civilians?

MR VEYI: There were police. I think there were both black and white police. I can't remember clearly.

ADV GCABASHE: We have heard evidence about Mr Mothiba's involvement in recruiting Nokuthula, do you know anything at all about that, that he was this father figure and he would be explaining certain things to her? Do you know anything at all about that?

MR VEYI: No, I don't know anything about that.

ADV GCABASHE: Ah, you know when you were being cross-examined by Mr Visser I think it was, you were asked about Nokuthula's stay at the Norwood flats, and essentially what you were being asked about was that you said she had been there for a week before she was taken to the farm, alright? And then you were asked if you were sure and you said "yes", and my note may be incorrect, but what I've got here is:

> "Yes, because after she was taken to Norwood, I stayed three days at Norwood guarding her. I didn't know when she had arrived."

Now the "I didn't know when she had arrived", lost me a bit. Just help me through that one, - unless I recorded it incorrectly.

MR VEYI: I said I didn't know when she arrived there because that was my first time to go there after she was taken in Carlton Centre. I don't know whether she was taken from Carlton Centre to Norwood, but I first guarded her in Norwood. That is what I meant.

ADV GCABASHE: So you are simply explaining that you don't know if she went directly from Carlton Centre to Norwood? You went there three days after Saturday, is that correct? - three days after Saturday.

MR VEYI: That is correct.

ADV GCABASHE: Then you were asked about where you washed when you were at the farm, and you said you wouldn't wash in that dirty water in the tank, in the dam, remember that?

MR VEYI: Yes, we didn't wash.

ADV GCABASHE: Nokuthula, how did she wash? I mean you were there when she went to wash, what happened?

MR VEYI: I don't remember seeing her washing herself.

ADV GCABASHE: Nothing was made available for her to wash herself?

MR VEYI: I don't remember anything like that.

ADV GCABASHE: And on the occasions that she was thrown into the dam, she was thrown in fully clothed in that brown attire that she was wearing?

MR VEYI: Every time that she was there she was wearing that brown overall.

ADV GCABASHE: I understand that. So when Radebe threw her into the dam she was still in that brown overall?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct..

TP 17

ADV GCABASHE: And she would keep it on wet as it is, she wouldn't get a change of clothing or anything like that?

MR VEYI: It would dry, she would not change it.

ADV GCABASHE: Is Radebe still alive?

MR VEYI: Yes, I think he is in the Fraud Unit here in Johannesburg.

ADV GCABASHE: Do you have any idea why he hasn't applied for amnesty in this matter?

MR VEYI: I don't know.

ADV GCABASHE: Ah, my last question. SWT66, did she know Nokuthula, or did Nokuthula indicate that she knew SWT66, or both ways?

MR VEYI: No, they didn't know each other according to my knowledge.

ADV GCABASHE: Thank you. Thank you, Chair.

CHAIRPERSON: Mr Veyi, where did the white officers wash?

MR VEYI: I can't remember, I don't know where they will wash.

CHAIRPERSON: Now what kind of water was it in this tank? You say it was dirty water, but what was it, what was in the water?

MR VEYI: I don't know whether it was water that was used to, that was drunk by the cows because that was a farm.

CHAIRPERSON: Was it just an open dam, the top was open?

MR VEYI: It was a sink and then water inside.

CHAIRPERSON: And it was standing high on the ground, it wasn't sunk into the ground, it was on top?

MR VEYI: It was high.

CHAIRPERSON: If you stand on the ground outside, can you look into the dam or is it too high for you to look in? Must you get on or what?

MR VEYI: Yes, you were able to see inside.

CHAIRPERSON: But on what level would it be, would it be, would you have to stand on your toes for example or would you stand normally and be able to look over the top? What did you have to do to be able to look inside?

MR VEYI: If you just standing up normally you were able to see.

CHAIRPERSON: Over the top?

MR VEYI: Yes.

CHAIRPERSON: Now when Ms Simelane was taken to that dam, did she still have the foot-cuffs on?

MR VEYI: She was always foot-cuffed, there was no time when she was not cuffed. So yes, she was foot-cuffed. 349

TP

CHAIRPERSON: We don't have an idea as to how tall she was, now if she had to stand up straight outside the dam, would she be able to look inside?

MR VEYI: Yes, she was able to see.

CHAIRPERSON: If you had to go and wash in the dam, what would you have to do to be able to wash in the dam?

MR VEYI: You wouldn't be able to wash there because the water was dirty, there was fungus there. So you wouldn't be able to wash there.

CHAIRPERSON: Would you - assume the water was clean in the dam and you wanted to wash in the dam, what would you have to do?

MR VEYI: You were to jump inside the dam, to the dam.

CHAIRPERSON: So you'll have to - you must get over the side and into the water inside the dam?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

CHAIRPERSON: And you'd have to stand up there or whatever?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

CHAIRPERSON: Now you say that when Radebe put Ms Simelane into the dam he had to help her not to drown, did I understand that correctly or what?

MR VEYI: What I'm saying is, this dam was used when she was tortured. He would put her in and then take her out of the dam.

CHAIRPERSON: Would he hold onto her, put her in the water and hold onto her or what would he do?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is so.

CHAIRPERSON: Now if he left her, if he didn't hold onto her what would have happened to her?

MR VEYI: Maybe she would drown because she was hopeless.

ADV GCABASHE: Helpless or hopeless?

MR VEYI: She was cuffed.

ADV GCABASHE: Oh.

CHAIRPERSON: Yes, that's fine. Did you see the white policemen giving Ms Simelane painkillers?

MR VEYI: I don't remember seeing that when I was present.

CHAIRPERSON: Did you see anybody giving her medicine, medication?

MR VEYI: I didn't see anybody doing that.

CHAIRPERSON: Did she complain about pains or any discomfort or anything in that nature?

TP

MR VEYI: Yes, when she was with us she would complain.

CHAIRPERSON: About what?

MR VEYI: About pain and the fact that she wanted to go home.

CHAIRPERSON: And I assume you had nothing to give her, no medication to give her?

MR VEYI: No, we had nothing to give her.

CHAIRPERSON: Did you see any - inside this room, did you see any toiletries?

MR VEYI: No, there were not, I didn't see them. They're not there.

CHAIRPERSON: Did you ever see Ms Simelane using any toiletries?

MR VEYI: I don't remember seeing her.

CHAIRPERSON: No I think Mr Visser asked you about this and I wasn't sure what you were explaining. Was there a place where one could put toiletries or anything like that into a cupboard or whatever? Was there anything like that in the room?

MR VEYI: No, there was nothing like that.

CHAIRPERSON: Yes, thank you.

ADV DE JAGER: When she complained about pain and having nothing to take for the pain, didn't you think you should buy some disprins or aspros or whatever and take it with you next time you got to the farm?

MR VEYI: No, that did not occur to us.

ADV DE JAGER: Well you were - she complained and you said you were worried because she wasn't treated well, why didn't you do something about it?

MR VEYI: We did not think about it.

ADV DE JAGER: You said in answer to a question, that she was always foot-cuffed, is that correct?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

ADV DE JAGER: Didn't you tell us that when the whites left you took off her cuffs?

MR VEYI: Yes, we used to do that when they were not present.

ADV DE JAGER: Yes, so she wasn't - you answered here:

"She was always foot-cuffed. At no time was she not cuffed."

So that wasn't correct?

MR VEYI: When the whites were present she would be cuffed but when the whites were not there we would remove the cuffs.

ADV DE JAGER: So at times the whites weren't there, not one of them, is that correct?

MR VEYI: Yes, sometimes they would go and leave the black officers behind.

TP

ADV DE JAGER: For how long would they leave?

MR VEYI: They would be away, sometimes they would leave in the morning and come back late.

ADV DE JAGER: Yes, and sometimes did they stay away for a few nights?

MR VEYI: I do not remember them staying away for the night, but they used to leave the farm and come back again.

ADV DE JAGER: When these explosions at Bryanston, or is it Roodepoort, took place, Sandton, were they away or were they on the farm?

MR VEYI: The Bryanston incident had long passed. It's a different incident from this one.

ADV DE JAGER: Because I don't know whether I'm wrong, perhaps somebody could correct me, but I believe the bombing was round about the 9th and the 10th of September.

MR VEYI: It had nothing to do with this incident. Those are two different incidents.

ADV DE JAGER: Weren't those incidents while she was still on the farm?

MR VEYI: No, they did not take place when she was still on the farm.

ADV DE JAGER: Right. So for the whole four or five weeks while she was on the farm, did they whites return every day and were they present at night? - for the full period. Did they sleep there very night?

MR VEYI: Yes, I can say so, but the person who did not sleep there every day was Sergeant Mong, but Coetzee and Pretorius, even if they leave during the day or in the morning, they used to come late, even it's about eleven, the time is about eleven, but they used to spend all the nights there.

ADV DE JAGER: For the full four/five weeks, or at least when you were there?

MR VEYI: Yes, during my presence I used to see them spending nights there. I don't know during my absence, but when I was there they would be there also.

ADV DE JAGER: So did Simelane ever sleep without foot-cuffs or handcuffs?

MR VEYI: She was always cuffed.

ADV DE JAGER: And you people ...(intervention)

MR VEYI: If the handcuffs were removed, the foot-cuffs would remain.

ADV DE JAGER: Yes. So when did you take of the cuffs when they weren't there, only during daytime?

MR VEYI: Yes, we would remove them when they were not there.

ADV DE JAGER: And weren't you afraid they would come back and find that she's not cuffed?

MR VEYI: We knew that we would hear the car when they were coming and then we would put back the cuffs.

ADV DE JAGER: And at a stage you were told to tell her of the advantages that could come her way if she would join the police, is that correct?

TP M

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

ADV DE JAGER: Who did that, who told her about that? Who was her spokesman?

MR VEYI: Sometimes it would be myself, sometimes I would interpret or Sergeant Mothiba and Lazarus would do the job.

ADV DE JAGER: What language did Sergeant Mothiba speak?

MR VEYI: He was a Sotho-speaking person.

ADV DE JAGER: So he couldn't speak directly to her in Zulu?

MR VEYI: He was able to speak Zulu.

ADV DE JAGER: Now why did you have to interpret for him?

MR VEYI: We would only interpret from Afrikaans into Zulu.

ADV DE JAGER: No, but when he spoke to her and he told her about the advantages, why should you interpret between the two of them?

MR VEYI: There would be an interpreter if Pretorius or Coetzee were there.

ADV DE JAGER: And if they weren't there, there wasn't an interpreter?

MR VEYI: There would be no interpreter.

ADV DE JAGER: Now didn't Mr Mothiba speak to her about the advantages in the police and she should rather co-operate and so on, then she would be treated better when the police weren't there, the white people?

MR VEYI: We would talk to her, all of us, telling her as to what to do and what were the advantages.

ADV DE JAGER: Yes. And Sergeant Mothiba was the father figure, wasn't he? You addressed him as, what was it, Malume?

MR VEYI: Yes, he was older than us, that is correct.

ADV DE JAGER: And was he a fatherly figure? - the old man.

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct, we used to respect him.

ADV DE JAGER: And how did he treat Ms Simelane?

MR VEYI: We were - he was treating her the same as we were treating her.

ADV DE JAGER: So if the whites weren't there he was treating her nicely?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

ADV DE JAGER: Did you any soap there to wash with or any toiletries?

MR VEYI: No, we did not have that.

ADV DE JAGER: Did anybody have toiletries there, soap and...?

TP

MR VEYI: We did not wash ourselves, we would only go and wash ourselves at home. The same used to apply with him.

ADV DE JAGER: So do you say Ms Simelane never washed during the whole period of four/five weeks?

MR VEYI: I can say that is so.

ADV DE JAGER: And you told us that she even soiled herself.

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

ADV DE JAGER: And there was no washing thereafter?

MR VEYI: No, there was no time to wash. He would perhaps during their absence, if we were there she would try and clean herself. We used to do anything secretly. We used to, we tried to organise some water but we did not want the people to see us doing that.

ADV DE JAGER: Yes, okay you tried to organise the water, did you manage to organise water?

MR VEYI: That was done secretly when the whites were not there.

ADV DE JAGER: So secretly you organised water and she was able to wash herself, is that correct?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

ADV DE JAGER: Now can you give me one single reason why you denied all the time that she washed herself?

MR VEYI: What made me to say that is because it's something that was no allowed, we were doing it out of our own and we were doing it secretly.

ADV DE JAGER: Yes, and did you secretly give her medicine?

MR VEYI: No.

ADV DE JAGER: Why not?

MR VEYI: I do not have a reason for that.

ADV DE JAGER: Because according to you she was in need of medicine.

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

CHAIRPERSON: Just one other thing, what did she have to eat?

MR VEYI: There were takeaways that we would buy whenever we go outside. Sometimes we would buy food for her at the shop in Northum.

CHAIRPERSON: What kind of food did you buy?

MR VEYI: Fish and chips and some bread.

CHAIRPERSON: And did she eat that?

MR VEYI: Yes, she did.

TP

CHAIRPERSON: Yes. Mr Lamey, re-examination?

RE-EXAMINATION BY MR LAMEY: Thank you, Mr Chairman.

Just on the last question, the question was asked of you; "Did she get food to eat?", what do you understand by food in this regard?

MR VEYI: I'm talking about something that you eat.

MR LAMEY: Alright. You say that you, when the whites were not there you used to buy food for her at Northum, is that correct?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR LAMEY: Mr Coetzee testified, perhaps also Pretorius, I can't remember, they made mention of "rat-packs" that was given to her. Do you know anything about that?

MR VEYI: Yes. She used to rat-packs but if you eat that for a long time, it's not very nice. It's not nice at all.

MR LAMEY: I just want to clarify this, when the question was asked about the food you did not mention the rat-pack. Do you draw a distinction about a rat-pack and the food that is referred to?

INTERPRETER: Excuse me, Chairperson, the mistake was coming from the side of interpreter. I interpreted them as takeaways. He did mention the rat-pack.

CHAIRPERSON: ...(inaudible)

MR LAMEY: I hear the English and the interpreter apparently says now that she's made a mistake, she interpreted it as takeaways, but he in fact said rat-packs.

CHAIRPERSON: Yes, that's what I wanted to hear from you, whether you heard the explanation that the interpreter gave.

MR LAMEY: Yes.

CHAIRPERSON: Alright.

MR LAMEY: Okay, so what you mean is, to sum it up, she was given rat-packs as food, but at the times when the white policemen were not there and you also used to buy additional food at ... (intervention)

MR VISSER: That's not what he said, Chairperson. When did he ever say it was only at times when the white people were not there? He didn't say that.

CHAIRPERSON: Yes, just ask him, Mr Lamey.

MR LAMEY: Perhaps I made a wrong assumption, I thought that is what he said. I merely wanted to sum it up.

CHAIRPERSON: ...(indistinct)

MR LAMEY: At what times did you buy the food at Northum, the so-called takeaways?

MR VEYI: We would buy them when the whites were not there.

TP

MR LAMEY: Alright. And at the times - did she get food in any form when the whites were there?

MR VEYI: She would eat those rat-packs.

MR LAMEY: Okay.

CHAIRPERSON: I'm sorry to intervene. What is a rat-pack?

MR VEYI: It is a package of food in the box, soldiers' food in a box where you get a tin, tinned stuff, baked beans with biscuits in. The tin in the box with baked beans and biscuits and something called post toasties.

CHAIRPERSON: Is it a sort of a thing that you can, a provision that you can carry around with you and if you're on the move you can use it to eat, to feed yourself, like a soldier? I think you said "like a soldier".

MR VEYI: Yes, it was used by police and soldiers who were on border, who were performing border duties.

CHAIRPERSON: Alright.

MR LAMEY: Can I just ask you this, Mr Veyi ...(intervention)

ADV DE JAGER: So it was bully beef and post toasties and beans and biscuits and tinned mielies, that kind of thing?

MR VEYI: Yes.

MR LAMEY: Mr Veyi, from my own experience in the army, a rat-pack was not a thing that the Force members were very fond of, what was the situation in your case?

MR VEYI: I said it's not a very nice package, more especially if you eat for a very long time.

MR LAMEY: Now at the times when you went away to buy takeaways, food at Northum, was it for your, did you also buy food for yourself and for Simelane, or did you give some of your food to Simelane, or did you only buy food for Simelane or what was the situation?

MR VEYI: We used to buy food for ourselves and we would buy something for her and eat, all of us.

MR LAMEY: Okay. You testified that at times during interrogation she was also thrown into the dam, is that correct? - or put into the dam by Radebe.

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR LAMEY: Were the white police officers present during those stages?

MR VEYI: That was done per their instructions.

MR LAMEY: Now you also testified that she soiled herself during interrogation sessions, is that correct?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR LAMEY: Now the stages when she was thrown into the dam, was the throwing into the dam connected with the fact that she soiled herself or wet herself, or was it not connected with that?

TP 11

MR VEYI: Sometimes he would put ... into the dam without being soiled and that would take place as a result of being thrown into the dam. That used to be the case sometimes.

MR LAMEY: Do you say that as a result of the throwing into the dam she would soil, also soil herself? I don't really understand what you are saying there.

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR LAMEY: If she soiled herself during interrogation -well did it happen during interrogation that she soiled herself, but not at the stage when she was put into the dam?

MR VEYI: Yes, that used to happen also.

MR LAMEY: And when that happened was she put into the dam? - when she soiled herself.

MR VEYI: No.

MR LAMEY: So what you're saying is she was put into the dam at stages when it had nothing to do with the soiling of herself?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR LAMEY: But then she would sometimes perhaps soil her in the dam?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR LAMEY: Now you were asked questions by Mr Visser, and it was put to you that you resented the white policemen and he referred particularly to your white superiors in the police at that stage. What prompted you, what led you to make this statement or speak to the reporter of the Sowetan?

MR VEYI: I would like to rectify something first. This newspaper article that was shown to me, that was quoted, the one that he quoted, that I resented my superiors, I don't know where that comes from because it's not what I said in the report. I think he showed me the different newspaper.

MR LAMEY: Ja, initially Mr Visser showed you page 17 of Exhibit T. That is a report dated the 22nd of May 1997, was that report made as a result, well was that the report which was made, which you made to the Sowetan, which was published in the Sowetan, dated the 22nd of May 1997?

MR VEYI: No, I know nothing about that report, the one that he had.

MR LAMEY: Now I just want to bring you back. What caused you to report, to speak to the reporter of the Sowetan and to report what you know about the missing lady? What caused you to do that, why did you do it?

MR VEYI: After reading the article, the newspaper article something came to my mind. I remember that I know what happened and my conscience was bothering me and that made me to go to the newspaper.

MR LAMEY: Now the article that you have read, we have articles before us, could you point out the article which placed a burden on your conscience and which led you to speak to the reporter?

MR VEYI: It is the one that is referred to as CC1.

MR LAMEY: It's called:

"Missing in action"

TP 11

... with the photograph of Simelane, is that correct?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR LAMEY: Now before you were asked by Mr Visser about what you have purportedly stated to this reporter, Sharon Chetty, in the report published on Monday, February the 6th, which is marked Exhibit CC3, did you have an opportunity to look at that carefully before the questions were asked?

MR VEYI: Will you please repeat your question, it's not clear to me.

MR LAMEY: When Mr Visser asked you questions he quoted from the report published in the Sowetan, Monday, February 1996 and he put it to you that you have said that to the reporter, prior to this question coming up during cross-examination, did you have prior to that a careful look at the contents of that report in the newspaper?

MR VEYI: No, I did not get that opportunity.

MR LAMEY: Now I want to get back to this aspect which Mr Visser has pointed out. The report states here:

> "Constable X, who prefers not to be named at this stage ..."

Let us just stop there. Is it correct that you preferred not to be named at that stage?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR LAMEY: Now further reports said:

> "Constable X, who prefers ... said the black members of the unit guarded Simelane, while the white members tortured her."

Is that the totality of what you told her? In other words, that the black members merely guarded her - will you refer now, the report doesn't specify Norwood or Northum, it's general.

> "... said the black members of the unit guarded Simelane, while the white members tortured her."

Is that the totality of the involvement of the members of the unit, that you conveyed to her there?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR LAMEY: Okay. So what you her at that time when she says that the black members of the unit guarded Simelane, while the white members tortured her, you say that is, you told her that, but that is not correct. Do I understand you correctly?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR LAMEY: What is the correct version?

MR VEYI: Something that I did not mention here is this. Even us black officials we did play a role when she was being guarded. That is what I told the Committee here. That is what I did not mention initially.

MR LAMEY: So you didn't explain the participation of the black members in the assault to the reporter, is that correct?

TP 11

MR VEYI: Yes, I did not mention anything about the role that we played.

MR LAMEY: Now at that stage why did you not mention it to her?

MR VEYI: I do not have a reason.

MR LAMEY: Do you say you have not reason? But there must have been a reason in your mind. Can you just explain what your thinking was at that stage?

MR VEYI: There was no reason.

MR LAMEY: What was your rank at the stage of the abduction of Nokuthula Simelane?

MR VEYI: I was a Constable.

MR LAMEY: And at the stage when you, in 1995, when you made this report to the reporter of the Sowetan, what was your rank then?

MR VEYI: I was still a Constable.

MR LAMEY: Were you still a Constable?

MR VEYI: Yes.

MR LAMEY: When did you become a Sergeant?

MR VEYI: In September 1995.

MR LAMEY: Now if you say you had no reason why you said that to her, do I take it that it was not a result of resentment to the white members that you said that? You know that when you referred only to the white members involved in the torture and not the black members.

MR VEYI: No, that is not correct.

ADV GCABASHE: I'm sorry, Mr Lamey, I missed the question. I heard the answer but I actually missed the question.

MR LAMEY: Let me just repeat that. You said, at the time when you made the statement to the Sowetan, that while the white members tortured her, and you said only the black members guarded her and you did not make mention of the involvement in the assaults and so on of the black members, you said that you can't think of a reason why you told her that. But my question is, did you specifically mention the involvement of the white members, relating to the torture, because of resentment against the white members?

MR VEYI: No, that is not true.

MR LAMEY: Now you were also asked about your involvement in the Lengene incident, who was abducted. Did I understand your evidence correctly that you, the kidnapping part you were not involved in?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is what I said.

MR LAMEY: At what stage, where was Lengene or where was he at the time when you - let me ask you this first, what was your involvement during his, after he was abducted?

MR VEYI: I only interfered when we were recruiting him, as we wanted him to be a member of the

TP

Police Force.

MR LAMEY: Was it during the stage when the recruitment exercise was applied?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR LAMEY: Now where was he at that stage? - that is now Lengene.

MR VEYI: He was in Rustenburg with Superintendent Coetzee's in-laws. Sometimes he would be in Klipspruit West.

MR LAMEY: Were you also at Rustenburg?

MR VEYI: Yes, I used to go there.

MR LAMEY: Were you at Klipspruit?

MR VEYI: Yes, I would visit Klipspruit. There was a safe-house there.

MR LAMEY: This place in Rustenburg, what place was that?

MR VEYI: That was Mr Superintendent wife's home. Mr Superintendent - Mr Coetzee's wife's home.

MR LAMEY: Was that - did you regard that as, what you call a safe-house?

MR VEYI: No, that was not a safe-house, it was just a place because sometimes Coetzee, if he was leaving, if he wanted to go to his in-laws and work from there he would take people with him because he was working all the time. He was always working.

MR LAMEY: Now the place at Klipspruit, what was that? - when he was recruited or interrogated there?

MR VEYI: It was a safe-house where we used to - it was a safe-house where the informers, informants used to be interviewed.

MR LAMEY: What is a safe-house?

MR VEYI: If you work with an informant, he or she must not be seen by people. There should be a house that is secluded or a house that would be used secretly so that their identities could not be revealed.

MR LAMEY: Mr Chairman, I just want to point out that in the statement of Lengene, for what it may be worth, there is reference made to Rustenburg, and then in paragraph 34 thereof, page 339, there's also reference made that he was taken to a certain house, driven to a certain house in Klipspruit West.

MR VISSER: Well will my learned friend just tell you whether he thinks it was before or after he had been recruited, Chairperson. Let's get the correct facts on record.

MR LAMEY: Well perhaps Mr Veyi could comment on that. When he was taken to Klipspruit, how far was the development in this interrogation and recruitment process?

MR VEYI: It was still in process when he was taken to Klipspruit.

MR LAMEY: By that time was he already recruited? In other words, already turned or not yet?

MR VEYI: We were still busy with the process.

TP

MR LAMEY: Are you saying that it did not happen yet?

MR VEYI: Yes, it was not yet over, we were still busy with it. We were not trusting him yet. Sometimes he would be on leg-irons.

MR LAMEY: Now in paragraph 36, Lengene stated that he was, after that, after being at Klipspruit ... (intervention)

ADV DE JAGER: This last answer:

"We were still not trusting him".

So did you already recruit him, but you wanted to keep an eye on him, you were not trusting him, or why did you add "we were not trusting him yet"?

MR VEYI: We were still busy with the process of recruiting him. You won't just trust a person completely during that process. That is why I said so.

MR LAMEY: Perhaps I should ask you this, at that stage at Klipspruit was there positive signs about his recruitment, from his side? In other words, that is was different from the situation at Rustenburg.

MR VEYI: There were positive signs that he will change and he eventually changed and we could trust him.

MR LAMEY: Okay. When did he eventually change and when was the situation that you could trust him?

MR VEYI: After he had changed he used to be in the company of one person and if you happen to be with him, you even monitor his behaviour and you would even detect from what he says, whether he can escape or not and then you would go back to Coetzee and give a report. At some stage he would be sent, he would be given a mandate alone and then he would come back alone.

MR LAMEY: Ja, but what I want to ask specifically, that situation at the stage, when it reached the stage that he could be trusted, was that still while he was at Klipspruit or was he then somewhere else?

MR VEYI: He was in Klipspruit.

MR LAMEY: So when he was taken to Klipspruit he hadn't reached that stage, but during the time at Klipspruit the recruitment of him improved, is that what you're saying?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR LAMEY: Then in paragraph 36 he has stated that he was also taken to Benoni, do you know of that? Do you know anything about that?

MR VEYI: I do not remember anything about Benoni.

MR LAMEY: I want to take you back to the situation at Norwood. Perhaps I should just ask you in general, and I'm referring now to the situation at Norwood as well as at Northum. Let me rather leave that, I'll bring you back to Norwood. When you were - you testified that the first time that you got to Norwood was - in examination by the Commissioner Gcabashe, three days after the Saturday, in other words the third day after the Saturday that she was abducted you got to Norwood first, is that correct?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

ADV DE JAGER: So that would be the Tuesday?

TP

MR VEYI: I think that is so.

MR LAMEY: Okay. How long - did you stay there at Norwood, when you were there, continuously, in other words, the whole day or did you also come and go from there?

MR VEYI: I would spend a night there and I would go and spend two nights there and leave perhaps on the third day and we would change shifts.

MR LAMEY: How many nights in total did you spend at Norwood? Can you remember?

MR VEYI: I'm not certain about that, but I can say that maybe I spent four nights there.

MR LAMEY: When you spent nights there, did you only spend nights there or were you there also during daytime?

MR VEYI: If you arrive there during the day you wait and you spend the night there and you wake up there the following day.

MR LAMEY: Were you there - during the time that you were there, were you there 24 hours out of 24 hours of the day?

MR VEYI: Yes, that is correct.

MR LAMEY: Now, and the white policemen?

MR VEYI: Yes, they would be there for the whole day and go away and come back late in the evening because they were staying there.

MR LAMEY: Who also stayed at those quarters, if you talk about them or "they"?

MR VEYI: If I remember very well in those quarters, Block A and Block B, Coetzee was staying at another block and Pretorius was at the other block and even Pretorius was there. I think even Ross was staying there, if my memory serves me well. It was a place that was occupied by police.

MR LAMEY: Now the - during the interrogation sessions and the assaults during those interrogation sessions, did that happen at day, during day time or night time or both?

MR VISSER: Mr Chairman, I have been sitting here very patiently, listening to my learned fried starting a whole new case in re-examination, because that's what it boils down to. My learned friend is entitled, if this were a court of law, to deal with matters of clarification arising out of that which was asked of his witness by either the judge or other people. We know this is not a court of law and we know that we're here to try and establish the truth, but at some stage or other there's got to be some semblance of discipline, Chairperson.

I already find myself in a situation here where I'm now going to have to start asking you to recall my witnesses, to deal with matters which have not been raised, which we hadn't been aware of, which were never put to your witnesses. And Chairman, I don't want to restrict my learned friend unnecessarily, but there is a limit. My learned can't just now start leading evidence-in-chief afresh while he's in re-examination. And I would submit to you, Chairperson, he's exceeding the bound of what is reasonably permissible by way of re-examination.

CHAIRPERSON: Mr Lamey?

MR LAMEY: I'm not exactly clear. My learned friend's objection in very general terms. I don't know whether he's objecting to my questioning about the Norwood aspect only or whether he refers to the other aspects as well.

TP 07

MR VISSER: It's a general objection and it's just getting to the point now where it's becoming absurd. "Who lived in the flats?", etc., etc.

CHAIRPERSON: That's common cause, Mr Visser. In fact Coetzee and your people already told us who lived there, so it's really just, it's common cause. So I don't know where ...(intervention)

MR LAMEY: Can I just take ...(intervention)

CHAIRPERSON: Now the Norwood flats issue was part of what you cross-examined on and I assume that Mr Lamey is dealing with that.

MR LAMEY: Well my learned friend has said it's in general. What he's in fact saying to the Committee is, I am exceeding the bounds of re-examination in total, from the outset. Now if I need to take the time, I can take the Committee back step by step on each and every aspect which I started on re-examination. I started with the dam - well I mentioned the dam incident. That was clearly arising from questioning from the Committee. I also went further with the newspaper report. I went -I mean it is clear, I know that I, on this particular aspect about Norwood, it goes a bit slow at this stage, but I really want to get at an aspect which is important but also to clarify aspects regarding my position. And I must get to that and I must be very clear about this.

CHAIRPERSON: That's what I assumed.

ADV DE JAGER: But is it really of importance whether they stayed in Block A or Block B at Norwood? Could that assist us in coming to a finding in this thing?

MR LAMEY: That was perhaps a side issue that came unnecessarily in, Mr Chairman, but what I'm really aiming at is to get clarity on what really transpired at Norwood, as far as this witness is concerned, the involvement of other members etc., and it also ...(intervention)

CHAIRPERSON: Yes, I understand, I know exactly what you're saying and that's what I thought you were getting at. Unfortunately your client did refer to things which are already on the record, Block A and Block B. We know exactly where the people lived. So go ahead, please just ...(intervention)

MR VISSER: Mr Chairman, ...(intervention)

MR LAMEY: I see it's 4 o'clock.

MR VISSER: It's 4 o'clock. Can we be excused, unfortunately I've had to made certain arrangements and we had to assume that we could leave at 4 o'clock.

CHAIRPERSON: I assume you still have some way to go, Mr Lamey.

MR LAMEY: I'll have to unfortunately clarify certain aspects. It's for various reasons important.

CHAIRPERSON: Yes, yes. No, you must deal with the matter as you're instructed to. Now we're going to adjourn at this stage, but we have another matter on the role and that's the Mbali matter, where an interested party and the applicant, one of the applicants had to travel over some distance and had to go to some expense in order to attend.

This particular matter that we're hearing now is taking much, much longer than we had anticipated. We had worked on the assumption that we would be able to deal with the Mbali matter. We intend to do that in fact. We have one of the applicants who came up from Cape Town, we've got an interested party who came from Umtata.

We would like to deal with that matter tomorrow, as soon as it's convenient to do so. We have been informed that it is something that we in all likelihood would be able to dispose of in the course of the day tomorrow, and we would like to accommodate those parties in regard to that particular matter.

TP

We will adjourn at this stage and we'll reconvene at 09H30 tomorrow morning.

COMMITTEE ADJOURNS

TP

TN 23

364

Report for the Office of the National Director of Public Prosecutions

Since the meeting with the above office in early February 1999, the Commission has begun a process of establishing mechanisms for identifying potential cases. The following is a report on progress thus far.

A: Categories of violations

In discussing possible prosecutions, we have identified a range of categories and/or issues around which we believe prosecutions can be considered. We would recommend that there be some discussion around these categories to determine viability as well as prioritisation.

1. Torture:
   Much of the Commission's data on torture is to be found in HRV statements. However, the 'private' nature of torture and absence of witnesses frequently makes corroboration difficult. Bearing this in mind, the Commission has begun to draw up an initial list of all security force members implicated in torturing more than three victims. This list is extensive and includes many rural cases.

   Another possible approach is to look at amnesty applications and hearings where torture was conceded and to identify the names of co-perpetrators who have not applied for amnesty. Such a list could then be checked against our HRV statements for further evidence. This figure would considerably reduce the potential number of cases. It would however be more difficult to extract as few security force members applied specifically for torture. Rather, evidence of torture often only emerges during amnesty hearings and is thus embedded in transcripts rather than on the TRC database.

2. Post-Caprivi hitsquads:
   The Commission has a fairly rich seam of data and information on this category. It is also one which we believe would be relatively easy to proceed on immediately given that at least one case was previously prepared by the ITU but not prosecuted [also see KZN report].

3. Cases involving a cover-up by the security forces:
   There are a number of potential cases in KZN including the cover-up by senior policemen of the Trust Feeds massacre. Another potential case would be the cover up of the Ribeiro killings by senior military personnel, but this may already be an AG case.

4. Destruction of Documents
   The Commission conducted a lengthy enquiry and investigation, assisted by the National Archives and the Human Rights Commission, into the destruction of literally scores of tons of documentation relating to state security in the early 1990s. Much of this destruction, authorised by the former government and overseen by the National Intelligence Service, clearly constituted unlawful destruction. In the course of this investigation, much documentation was collected and an overall report was drawn up, as well as comprehensive reports dealing with the SAP, the SADF and the NIS. Verne

TP 9

Harris of the National Archives was centrally involved in this investigation and would be prepared to provide assistance.

5. Gun-running
The Commission conducted an investigation into gun-running and received several amnesty applications in this regard. While the investigation was inconclusive, a comprehensive report and other documentation is available. This area is seen to be significant in its capacity to begin to unravel networks involved in fomenting violence in the 1990s.

6. Assassinations
The Commission has received amnesty applications in respect of several of the high profile assassinations. Not all implicated persons applied in all of these cases and thus possible prosecutions could arise. In other cases such as the assassination of Joe Gqabi in Zimbabwe and Victoria Mxenge, no amnesty applications were received. We are currently assembling information on the Gqabi case.

7. Winnie Madikizela-Mandela
Extensive documentation has been collected around Mrs Madikizela-Mandela and the MUFC and a comprehensive investigative report was compiled. [We need to establish whether this is currently being pursued by the AG's office]

8. Samora Machel
Also a possible AG matter.

9. Target identification
The Commission investigated the process whereby the security forces identified targets the purpose of which included, inter alia, physical elimination. This included a range of structures, sometimes involving more than one arm of the security forces/ intelligence structures. Such evidence is primarily contained in amnesty applications and section 29 hearings. While there was insufficient time to conclude this investigation, there is evidence regarding the establishment in the mid-1980s of a target identification centre within, firstly military intelligence and subsequently the project section of Special Forces.

However, much of the evidence given to the TRC, while acknowledging the existence and purpose of such target identification groups, refers to planned but subsequently cancelled operations. In other words the gaps in our evidence are in directly linking specific processes of target identification with specific killings. One possible exception would be cross-border raids which are discussed below.

10. Cross-border raids
While difficulties clearly exist in bringing charges for the execution of cross-border activities, there are no doubt possibilities of conspiracy to murder charges relating to the planning of such operations, which invariably took place on SA soil.

The Commission did receive several amnesty applications relating to cross border activities from former Security Branch members, but virtually none from the SADF, although SADF members are cited in a number of the Security Branch applications.

TPN

Clearly, the possibilities of extradition to a large degree influenced the willingness to disclose involvement in such activities and would presumably be a factor to be considered.

B: Other Regional Cases

In addition to the above, we have asked personnel in regions to identify possible cases for prosecution. This process is logistically difficult owing to the fact that regional offices have closed and documentation has been transferred to the national office in Cape Town. Further, regional staff except for those servicing the Amnesty Committee are no longer in the employ of the Commission. Despite this, we have received some feedback:

1. KZN
The KZN region has begun to identify cases where people who did not apply for amnesty have been implicated. The KZN region also has a number of HRV statements implicating perpetrators where such information was not previously disclosed during investigations due to perceived police partiality.

This is a mammoth task and needs to weighed up in relation to:

- The likely unwillingness, given the current climate in KZN, of amnesty applicants to testify against their leadership
- The capacity of Chris McAdam's office to deal with new cases considering his involvement in Richmond;
- The mooted Commission of Inquiry into political violence in KZN.

Nonetheless, some preliminary work has been done and a report is attached.

2. Eastern Cape
A former researcher in this region has been approached to identify potential cases. Her report is attached and deals primarily with cases in East London and the western part of the Eastern Cape. A further report is awaited dealing with the eastern side of the Eastern Cape (primarily Ciskei and Transkei regions).

It should be noted that the list of cases drawn up here differs from the KZN one in the sense that it takes as its starting point HRV statements where specific concerns were raised by deponents regarding the failure of the criminal justice system in investigating and successfully prosecuting such cases. Given pressure on resources, a policy of low level corroboration was adopted for most HRV cases and thus most of such cases were not comprehensively investigated by the Commission. This would mean that such cases would still require extensive ground work and investigation. However, such cases may well be important in ensuring that justice is seen to be done in cases that are not well known and do not involve profiled people.

There is a need for some discussion around such issues before proceeding as a different and lengthier modus operandi is required to identify such cases more broadly.

3. Western Cape

A very preliminary list is attached.

TPN

4. Gauteng

Former and current investigators have similarly been approached and a report is awaited.

5. Free State

The former Orange Free State fell under the Commission's KZN office. There are a number of potential cases here, but given the pressure on time, KZN personnel have requested assurance that some capacity exists (or will be established) to deal with such cases before they proceed.

C: Section 30 notices and S29 investigative enquiries

A preliminary spreadsheet of section 30 notices sent out is available. This list only reflects Section 30 notices sent out during the preparation of the TRC Report and does not include all S30 notices arising from individual HRV statements or those sent out by the Amnesty Committee following an amnesty hearing.

Also available is a table of all Section 29 investigative enquiries that were held, reflecting person, issue and whether amnesty applications were received.

D: Analysis of indemnity and amnesty applicants

We are also currently engaged in a process of identifying whether perpetrators implicated either via HRV statements or in amnesty applications previously applied for indemnity. In this regard our IT department has devised a programme whereby lists of those on the various indemnity lists in the 1990 to 1994 period have been correlated with amnesty data. This spreadsheet is currently being analysed. The IT department are engaged in a similar exercise in relation to HRV data.

E: Further issues

1. It needs to be emphasised that the Commission has very limited resources at present. The Commission itself is in suspension; the remaining HRV component consists of one Commissioner and one researcher; regional offices have closed and documentation transferred to the national office; and the Amnesty Committee is hard-pressed to complete the amnesty process on schedule.

   Further, it needs to be understood that our HRV material is currently archived according to victims and not perpetrators. Similarly, amnesty material is filed according to applicant and information regarding co-perpetrators is thus potentially scattered across numerous files or embedded in transcripts of amnesty hearings. While our database provides an initial tool for identifying cases to which individual perpetrators may be linked, the task of retrieving all statements and documentation is a lengthy and painstaking one.

   Given this, it is suggested that a fairly limited focus is worked out that would enable existing staff to begin feeding cases/ material through, without engaging in what would virtually mean copying the entire TRC archive.

   We further propose that in determining a more limited focus, the resources of the TRC Task of the NDPP is taken into consideration. Thus, for example, if the current capacity in KZN is already stretched, it is questionable as to how productive it would be to involve already over-burdened TRC staff in assembling numerous dossiers around KZN cases.

TP 9

We recommend that a draft plan or framework that prioritises specific categories or regions is drawn up.

2. In view of the extremely limited resources, a line of communication needs to be developed that prevents potential duplication of tasks. Thus for instance, the request forwarded to Advocate Coetzee on 4 March 1999 in many respects duplicates work arising from the meeting in Cape Town.

3. We still urgently require a list of cases already being pursued by the various AG offices.

7 March 1999

TP

TN 24
369

VOLUME TWO

Truth and Reconciliation Commission of South Africa Report

TP 9

285 Other amnesty applicants disputed this version of events. The Port Elizabeth Security Branch applicants stated that Kondile was transferred to their region after interrogation in the Orange Free State. After two weeks of interrogation with assault at the Jeffrey's Bay police station, Kondile agreed to act as an informer. However, Major Du Plessis [AM4384/96] alleges that he then personally discovered a concealed note from Kondile to the ANC. Du Plessis realised that Kondile had deceived him. Kondile had been briefed about Du Plessis's informer network (including a person in the UNHCR who provided photographs of refugee applicants to the police) which would now be compromised. After discussions with his immediate superior Nick Janse van Rensburg and the Divisional Commander, then Colonel Gerrit Erasmus [AM4134/96], it was decided that Kondile should be killed.

286 Kondile was taken near Komatipoort where they met with Captain Dirk Coetzee. He was tied to a tree and shackled, given some food and cold drinks, after which he became unconscious. Sergeant Roy Otto (now deceased) then shot him through the head, after which his body was placed on a wood fire and burnt until morning.

Nokuthula Simelane

287 Acccording to amnesty applicant Lieutenant-Colonel Anton Pretorius [AM4389/96], the Soweto Intelligence Unit (SIU) had in 1983 succeeded in penetrating and infiltrating MK structures in Swaziland. Deep-cover agents RS269 and RS243 had succeeded in gaining information about arms caches, infiltration routes, lines of command and so on. Through a Soweto-based source, SWT 66, they had managed to establish the linkages between the Swaziland structures and MK's Transvaal military structures.

288 During 1983, they received information that a courier from Swaziland was expected in Johannesburg. The courier, Ms Nokuthula Aurelia Simelane (aka MK Sibongile), arrived in Johannesburg in September 1983 and was abducted by the SIU from the parking lot outside the Carlton Hotel where she had planned to meet her contact. She was initially taken to the Custodum police flats in Norwood and kept for several days in a tenth-floor storeroom. During this time she was intensively interrogated and, according to an amnesty applicant, badly beaten.

289 From Norwood, Simelane was taken to a farm near Thabazimbi, where she was apparently kept in an outbuilding for a month, possibly two.

290 According to amnesty applicants Anton Pretorius and Lieutenant Colonel Willem 'Timol' Coetzee, [AM4032/96] then head of the SIU, she agreed during her initial interrogation and torture to become an agent for the Security Branch and her removal to the farm had been organised to facilitate the necessary training. Coetzee claims that the arrangements surrounding this recruitment were discussed with his superior officer as well as with Section C at Security Branch headquarters. Pretorius and Coetzee said that, after three weeks, Simelane returned to Swaziland but that all subsequent pre-arranged contact and communication with her failed. These applicants said they believe that her defection was discovered by MK and that she was killed as a consequence.

TP 11

291 A number of other members of the unit involved in her abduction also applied for amnesty. At least one of these, however, disputes the Coetzee/Pretorius version. According to this applicant, Simelane continued to be tortured at the farm in Thabazimbi. After about two months, she was put in the boot of the car, handcuffed and in leg-irons, and driven away. This was the last that black members of the unit saw of her. Her physical state at the time was such that returning her to Swaziland would not have been possible. "She was very beautiful. But by the time they were finished with her, she could not be recognised."

292 The applicant indicated that, after he was back in Soweto, he asked one of his superiors about Simelane and was told not to ask questions. He subsequently heard that she had been shot and buried in Rustenburg.

Japie Maponya

293 Mr Japie Maponya [JB02090/03WR] was abducted by Vlakplaas askaris, interrogated and subsequently killed. Amnesty applicants included General JH le Roux [AM4148/96]; Colonel Eugene de Kock [AM0066/96] head of C1/Vlakplaas, Warrant Officer Willie A Nortjé [AM3764/96]; Constable TJ Mbelo [AM3785/96] and Sergeant DJ van der Walt [AM3769/96].

294 According to applicants, a request for assistance was submitted to security headquarters by Colonel Johan le Roux, head of the Krugersdorp Security Branch (later a general who commanded the Security Branch). On instructions from Security Branch headquarters, a team under Warrant Officer Willie Nortjé, with which De Kock later linked up, was deployed to Krugersdorp. Japie Maponya, a security guard, was abducted from Krugersdorp by Mbelo and two other askaris and taken to Vlakplaas for questioning about the activities of his brother, MK operative Odirile Maponya (MK Mainstay), who was suspected of involvement in the death of an SAP member, Warrant Officer Tswane.

TP 11

TRC Final Report

Page Number (Original) 234

Paragraph Numbers 278 to 292

Volume 2

Chapter 3

Subsection 31

Previous Subsection

Next Subsection

Abduction, interrogation and killing

278 This section deals with a different category of killings – where the primary purpose was to obtain information, and death followed, apparently in order to protect the information received. Victims in almost all of these cases were suspected of having links with underground military structures or with networks that provided support for such structures. The purpose of interrogation was to gather intelligence on issues such as modi operandi, guerrilla infiltration routes and possible planned operations. This information was considered vital, not only to enable countermeasures to be taken, but for the ongoing and effective penetration of such structures by agents or askaris.

279 Amnesty applicants suggested that such intelligence had value only for as long as the 'enemy' was not aware that the information had been uncovered. Detainees – even those kept in solitary confinement – sometimes managed to smuggle out information about their detention and interrogation. Moreover, in the nature of clandestine work, once a detention was known about, old routines, codes and meeting places would be regarded as compromised and therefore changed. It was for this reason, the Security Branch argued, that it was preferable to abduct rather than officially detain, and to kill the abductee once information had been extracted. In some instances, the Security Branch attempted to 'turn' (recruit) the individual; where this proved unsuccessful, killing was regarded as necessary.

280 This modus operandi allowed for greater freedom to torture without fear of consequences. It should also be noted, as is evident in some of the cases below, that confessions and admissions were sometimes obtained only after brutal torture. The possibility that a number of people so targeted had no real link to underground military structures cannot be excluded.

Gcinisizwe Kondile

281 Eastern Cape political activist Gcinisizwe Kondile [EC0021/96STK] was killed by the security police in August 1981. Mr Kondile was first detained by the security police in 1980 while a student at Fort Hare University. After his release, he fled to Lesotho where he continued to be politically active. In June 1981, he was apprehended by the security police after entering the country in a car owned by Chris Hani.

TP 7

282 Amnesty applicants have presented two different versions of the circumstances leading to Kondile's death. Captain Dirk Coetzee [AM0063196] says that Kondile was transferred to Jeffrey's Bay in the eastern Cape where he was held for two months and severely tortured. So serious was his condition that the police feared he would die. Deciding they could not afford "another Biko", the upper management of the Security Branch decided he should be killed and all evidence of his existence destroyed. This version is confirmed by a Sergeant Danster who guarded Kondile at the Jeffrey's Bay police station. Danster referred to the use of torture, including 'tubing', electric shock and assault.

283 To cover their tracks, the security police officially released Kondile from custody on 11 August 1981 and then immediately re-arrested and held him secretly in the 'white' quarters of the Jeffrey's Bay police station.

284 C section head, Brigadier W Schoon, ordered Dirk Coetzee to meet with Major Archie Flemington from the local security police office at Komatipoort. The Port Elizabeth Security Branch arrived at Komatipoort with Kondile, who was then taken by a group of security police members – including Coetzee, Flemington, Nick Janse van Rensburg, Sergeant JG Raath [AM4397/96], Captain Paul van Dyk and two others from Ermelo – to an isolated spot near Komatipoort. Here he was drugged with "knock-out" drops acquired from General Lothar Neethling's police forensic laboratory, shot and cremated over a log fire for seven hours until all traces of his body had been destroyed. During the cremation, the group drank and cooked meat at a separate 'braai'. Coetzee related:

The burning of a body to ashes takes about seven hours, and whilst that happened we were drinking and even having a braai next to the fire. Now, I don't say that to show our braveness, I just tell it to the Commission to show our callousness and to what extremes we have gone in those days … the chunks of meat, and especially the buttocks and the upper part of the legs, had to be turned frequently during the night to make sure that everything burnt to ashes. And the next morning, after raking through the rubble to make sure that there were no pieces of meat or bone left at all, we departed and all went our own way.

285 Other amnesty applicants disputed this version of events. The Port Elizabeth Security Branch applicants stated that Kondile was transferred to their region after interrogation in the Orange Free State. After two weeks of interrogation with assault at the Jeffrey's Bay police station, Kondile agreed to act as an informer. However, Major Du Plessis [AM4384/96] alleges that he then personally discovered a concealed note from Kondile to the ANC. Du Plessis realised that Kondile had deceived him. Kondile had been briefed about Du Plessis's informer network (including a person in the UNHCR who provided photographs of refugee applicants to the police) which would now be compromised. After discussions with his immediate superior Nick Janse van Rensburg and the Divisional Commander, then Colonel Gerrit Erasmus [AM4134/96], it was decided that Kondile should be killed.

286 Kondile was taken near Komatipoort where they met with Captain Dirk Coetzee. He was tied to a tree and shackled, given some food and cold drinks, after which he became unconscious. Sergeant Roy Otto (now deceased) then shot him through the head, after which his body was placed on a wood fire and burnt until morning.

TPN

287 Acccording to amnesty applicant Lieutenant-Colonel Anton Pretorius [AM4389/96], the Soweto Intelligence Unit (SIU) had in 1983 succeeded in penetrating and infiltrating MK structures in Swaziland. Deep-cover agents RS269 and RS243 had succeeded in gaining information about arms caches, infiltration routes, lines of command and so on. Through a Soweto-based source, SWT 66, they had managed to establish the linkages between the Swaziland structures and MK's Transvaal military structures.

288 During 1983, they received information that a courier from Swaziland was expected in Johannesburg. The courier, Ms Nokuthula Aurelia Simelane (aka MK Sibongile), arrived in Johannesburg in September 1983 and was abducted by the SIU from the parking lot outside the Carlton Hotel where she had planned to meet her contact. She was initially taken to the Custodum police flats in Norwood and kept for several days in a tenth-floor storeroom. During this time she was intensively interrogated and, according to an amnesty applicant, badly beaten.

289 From Norwood, Simelane was taken to a farm near Thabazimbi, where she was apparently kept in an outbuilding for a month, possibly two.

290 According to amnesty applicants Anton Pretorius and Lieutenant Colonel Willem 'Timol' Coetzee, [AM4032/96] then head of the SIU, she agreed during her initial interrogation and torture to become an agent for the Security Branch and her removal to the farm had been organised to facilitate the necessary training. Coetzee claims that the arrangements surrounding this recruitment were discussed with his superior officer as well as with Section C at Security Branch headquarters. Pretorius and Coetzee said that, after three weeks, Simelane returned to Swaziland but that all subsequent pre-arranged contact and communication with her failed. These applicants said they believe that her defection was discovered by MK and that she was killed as a consequence.

291 A number of other members of the unit involved in her abduction also applied for amnesty. At least one of these, however, disputes the Coetzee/Pretorius version. According to this applicant, Simelane continued to be tortured at the farm in Thabazimbi. After about two months, she was put in the boot of the car, handcuffed and in leg-irons, and driven away. This was the last that black members of the unit saw of her. Her physical state at the time was such that returning her to Swaziland would not have been possible. "She was very beautiful. But by the time they were finished with her, she could not be recognised."

292 The applicant indicated that, after he was back in Soweto, he asked one of his superiors about Simelane and was told not to ask questions. He subsequently heard that she had been shot and buried in Rustenburg.

TP

TRC Final Report

Page Number (Original) 224

Paragraph Numbers 194 to 208

Volume 6

Section 3

Chapter 1

Subsection 19

Previous Subsection Next Subsection

Soweto Security Branch

194. A key component of the Soweto Security Branch was the SIU[75], which ran a number of covert agents and sources both inside and outside the country.

195. Twenty-two members of the Soweto Security Branch, including three divisional commanders and at least eleven members of the SIU, applied for amnesty for twenty-nine incidents committed between 1980 and 1992. These incidents involved at least twenty-two killings, two abductions/torture and approximately fourteen sabotage and/or credibility operations.

196. Four of the killings resulted from Soweto Security Branch operations. Soweto Security Branch members either provided intelligence for or participated directly in the other operations.

197. Most of the incidents applied for were so-called 'credibility operations', conducted by members of the SIU in order to build up the credibility of sources or to facilitate infiltration by deep-cover agents. These operations covered a range of activities such as the establishment of arms caches, the sabotage of offices and installations and attacks on homes and hostels.

74 With regard to target identification for the Gaborone Raid, applicants were granted amnesty for the targets in respect of which they specifically remembered supplying information. 75 Soweto Intelligence Unit.

198. Amnesty was granted in seventy-six instances, refused in four, conditionally granted in five and granted/refused in three. No decision was handed down in one instance, in which the applicant had died.

199. During the hearing concerning the abduction of Ms Nokuthula Simelane, aka Sibongile, a 23-year-old University of Swaziland student and member of MK's Transvaal Urban Machinery, sharp differences emerged between the various applicants as black members of the SIU challenged the version of white applicants.

TP 9

200. The Amnesty Committee heard evidence that, in the early 1980s, two deep cover agents of the SIU, RS269 (Sergeant Langa, aka Frank or Big) and RS243 (Sergeant 'Terror' Mkhonza, aka Scotch) infiltrated MK's Transvaal machinery with the help of an informer, SWT66 (Nompumelelo).

201. Early in September 1983, Mkhonza was instructed by his MK contact to meet Sibongile (Ms Nokuthula Simelane) at the Carlton Centre, Johannesburg. After the meeting, Mkhonza led her to the basement parking area where they were seized by waiting SIU members and bundled into the boot of a car. Ms Simelane was, according to all applicants, severely assaulted and brutally beaten.

202. She was subsequently transferred to a farm near Northam in the current North West. Here she was held in a room in an outside building for a period of approximately four to five weeks. Lieutenant Willem 'Timol' Coetzee, Warrant Officer Anton Pretorius and Sergeant Frederick Barnard Mong were tasked with interrogating and recruiting Ms Simelane. When she was not being interrogated , Ms Simelane was under constant guard by black members of the SIU. At night, she was cuffed and chained to her bed with leg irons. The black members, who were responsible for guarding her, slept either in or outside her room .

203. Black SIU applicants, Constables Veyi and Selamolela, testified that she was repeatedly and brutally tortured throughout her stay on the farm, finally becoming ' unrecognisable'. The white applicants denied this vehemently.

204. According to their evidence, the victim had been severely assaulted during the first week and had, on more than one occasion, been put in a dam after soiling herself while being tortured. However, they alleged that, after the first week, she agreed to work for them and that they spent the remaining weeks of her 'detention' preparing her for her work as an agent. Thereafter, they claimed that they returned her to Swaziland with the help of Sergeants Mothiba and Langa, both since deceased. After that they lost contact with her.

205. This testimony was challenged by Veyi and Selamolela, who testified that the victim's physical state made it extremely unlikely that she could have been in a fit state to be returned to Swaziland. Constable Veyi testified that he had last seen Ms Simelane bound and in the boot of Lieutenant Coetzee's car and that Sergeant Mothiba had told him that she had been killed.

206. In refusing amnesty to applicants Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong, the Amnesty Committee said of Ms Simelane:

During her detention for a period of approximately five weeks, she was continuously and very seriously assaulted by the group of Security Police, under the command of Coetzee, who held her captive. All attempts to extract inform a t i o n c o n cerning MK or its operations as well as attempts to recruit her to become a Security Police inform e r, were fruitless. Due to the prolonged and sustained assaults, Ms Simelane's physical condition deteriorated to the extent that she was hardly recognisable and could barely walk. Ms Simelane was last seen w h e re she was lying with her hands and feet cuffed in the boot of Coetzee's vehicle. She never re turned to her familiar environment in Swaziland ... and has disappeared since. It is not necessary for the purpose of this matter to make a definitive finding on the eventual fate of Ms Simelane. [AC/2001/185.]

TP 9

TN 26

TRC Final Report

377

Page Number (Original) 623

Paragraph Numbers 50 to 71

Volume 6

Section 5

Chapter 2

Subsection 5

Previous Subsection

Next Subsection

Abductions

50. The Commission received fifty-seven amnesty applications for eighty incidents of abduction. The fifty-seven applications included the abduction of thirty-five Umkhonto we Sizwe (MK) operatives, eighteen of whom were abducted inside the country and seventeen outside South Africa.

51. Of the fifty-seven abductions, more than twenty-seven resulted in the death of the victim. This raises the possibility that targeted assassinations may have been the perpetrators' intention from the outset.

52. The Commission also received more than 1500 statements dealing with disappearances, including enforced disappearances.

53. The Commission stated in its Final Report that the former state's primary purpose in carrying out abductions was to obtain information. Abductees were often killed in a bid to protect the information that had been received.

54. The victims of these abductions either belonged to MK or supported the movement internally. Amnesty applicants testified that they found it preferable to abduct rather than detain officially. Once the information was obtained, the abducted person would be killed. In many other instances, applicants testified that they attempted to 'turn' or 'recruit' individuals into working for the state. The Commission also learnt that, where the attempt to turn the abductee failed, killing the individual became necessary – although many amnesty applicants denied this. However, in terms of international law, families merely have to prove that the abductee was last seen alive in the hands of an agent of the state for the obligation or onus to explain the deceased's whereabouts to fall on the state.

55. The Commission also stated in its Final Report that this modus operandi allowed for greater freedom to torture without fear of consequences. The testimony of many askaris at amnesty hearings was at odds with that of white members in their particular units. In their testimony, askaris highlighted the brutality of the torture and abuse that many abductees were subjected to. The cases of Nokuthula Simelane[32] and Moses Morodu[33] offer examples of this.

TP 17

56. It is also possible that operatives lost all sense of reality when dealing with abductees and became totally enmeshed in the brutality of the moment. Had the abductee been released or the body found, the heinous behaviour of the abductors and torturers would have been revealed. This was possibly an even more powerful motive to conceal the truth.

57. In its findings on extrajudicial killings, the Commission noted that a particular pattern was established: that is, political opponents were abducted, interrogated and then killed. In evidence that emerged through the amnesty process, another pattern emerged: that of abduction followed by torture or undue pressure to inform and/or become an informer or askaris. Those who did not succumb in this way were killed. Information was then leaked to MK that those who had been captured had been turned and had become askaris. The most devastating effect of this practice was that those who were abducted did not come home and that families had to live with the political stigma that their loved ones were perceived to be traitors.

58. These abductions must be distinguished from those incidents where the intention of the perpetrators at the outset was to assassinate political opponents. In such operations, the abduction itself was merely a means to capturing the person, and the interrogation and torture that followed were secondary to the intention to kill.

59. Thus the cases of Griffiths Mxenge, Topsy Madaka and Siphiwe Mthimkulu, the 'Pebco Three', the 'Cradock Four' and the Ribeiros should be classified as political assassinations rather than abductions. Here the intention of the perpetrators was to eliminate the individuals concerned and to silence them forever.

60. In the KwaNdebele group of cases, abduction was followed by interrogation, torture and beatings and the abductee was then returned. The intention of these abductions was to intimidate and silence opposition.

61. The principle of customary international law is to hold the state responsible in instances such as these on a strict liability basis. Thus, the former state must be held strictly responsible for the abductions, disappearances and deaths of the abductees. The state is held responsible even in those instances where the perpetrator may not have intended that the final consequence of the abduction would be the death of the abductee. The intention of the perpetrator is irrelevant; the fact of the matter is that death ensued.

62. In those instances where the purpose of the abduction was killing, the state incurs responsibility for both the killing and the abduction. In terms of the accepted principle, even where the perpetrator responsible for the abduction or the disappearance has not been identified, it simply needs to be established that forced disappearance was committed by a police agent. In such an instance, the state is held responsible for accounting for the disappearance.

63. International human rights law places the burden on the state to account for the actions of its agents. Thus it is not sufficient for the state to allege (as it did in the cases of Nokuthula Simelane[34] and the four MK members abducted from Lesotho (namely Nomasonto Mashiya, Joyce Keokanyetswe 'Betty' Boom, Tax Sejamane and Mbulelo Ngono)[35] that they recruited or turned these agents and that were returned to exile in order to infiltrate the movement.

TP 17

64. In all of these cases, using the strict liability test, it is likely that the state would be held criminally liable for their disappearances. In the case of Kurt v Turkey, the European court of human rights held that, once the applicant was in the custody of the security forces, the responsibility to account for the victim's subsequent fate shifted to the authorities.

65. In terms of international law and a state's responsibility to guarantee human rights, a state can be held responsible for failing to prevent or respond to a violation. As early as the 1980s, the former state was aware of the fact that disappearances were taking place. Allegations were mounting against the security forces as being responsible.

66. The question is: what did the state do to investigate the allegations being made or what action did the state take against those alleged to be involved in such practices?

67. Although it has been shown that agents in the employ of the state were responsible for the abductions of many political activists, that a pattern had been established and that this had become part of an orchestrated grand plan, the leadership of the former state continued to deny its responsibility for these gross human rights violations. Indeed, in the light of the above, Mr de Klerk might want to reconsider his theory of 'bad apples and mavericks'[36]. There is no doubt that the apartheid state must be held responsible for the actions and deeds of its agents and that the state's failure to investigate or to take action created a climate of impunity and criminality in the security forces .

68. A key factor when deciding whether a state is responsible is whether the violation has taken place with the support or tolerance of the authority or the state has allowed the violation to go unpunished. In this instance, the state allowed the death squads to act with impunity and abduct, interrogate, torture and kill. Nothing was done to stop them, even when the disappearances became public.

69. Instead the state continued to claim innocence and chose rather to sully the reputations of those who had been abducted and killed. As a result, the minds and memories of family members and loved ones have been haunted by uncertainty, suspicion and mistrust as they continue to wonder whether the loved one was a spy and why the loved one has not returned home.

70. The amnesty cases and the evidence of the victims before the Commission have been sufficient to establish a pattern and an assumption that these victims must have died at the hands of the forces that abducted them. In this regard , efforts must be made to restore their dignity and true reputations as patriots who paid the price and were killed in the violence of the past.

71. The law must also take its course in dealing with those who came forward with half-truths and lies. Efforts must be made to integrate and ease the lot of those who became askaris. In most instances, their testimony was at considerable variance with that of their white colleagues and superiors. We may never know what pressure was placed on them to 'turn'. What we do know is that, in those instances where they did not succumb or refused to do so, they were killed horribly. The cases of Simelane and Masiya are examples of this.

TP 4

32 Amnesty hearings, Pretoria , 28–30 June 1999 and 29–30 May 2000; AC/2001/185. 33 Amnesty hearing, 26 October 1999; AC/2000/010. 34 Amnesty hearings, Pretoria, 28–30 June 1999 and 29–30 May 2000. See also AC/2001/185. 35 See amnesty hearings, Johannesburg , 10–13 October 2000 and Bloemfontein 13–15 November 2000. 36 Evidence by Mr FW de Klerk on behalf of the National Party to the TRC, 14 May 1997.

TPN

SIMAYILE, Code (46), was detained in Sasolburg, OFS, on 11 July 1986 and held for six months under emergency regulations. In detention, he was severely assaulted and tortured by members of the SAP. Mr Simayile had been involved in a protracted strike at Karbochem in Sasolburg, and police accused him of politicising a labour dispute.

SIMAYILE, David Nkosivumile (25), an ANC supporter, was shot and fatally wounded in the chest by KwaZulu Police members and Inkatha supporters in Durban North on 9 February 1986, allegedly in a targeted killing.

SIMBINE, Jeronimo V Icente (22), a Mozambican citizen, was abducted from his home in Namaacha, Mozambique, by SADF Special Forces members on 23 August 1982. He was taken to Phalaborwa army base where, after severe interrogation and torture, he agreed to become a member of the SADF. Prior to this abduction, the SADF had raided and bombed Namaacha because they suspected the village of housing ANC members in transit. During this raid, two Mozambican and one Portugese citizen were killed. Mr Simbine escaped after three years and, upon his return home, was detained by the Mozambican authorities for six months.

SIMELA, Namkoni Selinah (47), had her home burnt down on 16 June 1986 in Mathyzensloop, KwaNdebele, during a night vigil for 'comrades' killed by Imbokodo vigilantes and KwaNdebele Defence Force members. Mathyzensloop residents reportedly fled to the hills to escape the violence.

SIMELANE Sbusiso Carol (19), an ANC supporter, was stabbed and axed to death by unidentified people at a taxi rank in Pietermaritzburg during ongoing conflict between ANC and IFP supporters on 3 February 1993. Three others were killed; he was the only survivor.

SIMELANE, Alfison Msuvukela (42), an IFP supporter, was shot dead in an attack on his home in Ondondolo, KwaZulu, near Empangeni, Natal, on 10 July 1992, in ongoing conflict between ANC and IFP supporters. The attackers reportedly wanted guns, which they believed the family had received from Ulundi. His wife was severely beaten during the attack.

SIMELANE, Bheki (19), was shot dead in Katlehong, Tvl, on 2 February 1992 during conflict between hostel-dwellers and residents. Hostel-dwellers were allegedly coerced into IFP membership, and relations between residents and hostel-dwellers became increasingly strained.

SIMELANE, Bhekuyise Simon (29), an ANC supporter, was stoned and stabbed to death by IFP supporters in Ezakheni, KwaZulu, near Ladysmith, Natal, on 13 March 1994, in the run-up to the April 1994 elections.

SIMELANE, Buti Peter , was stabbed and shot to death by IFP supporters in Dube, Soweto, Johannesburg, on 8 September 1991. The perpetrators were returning from a funeral at the Jabulani stadium in Soweto.

SIMELANE, Eunice (53), an IFP supporter, was severely beaten in an attack on her home in Ondondolo, KwaZulu, near Empangeni, Natal, on 10 July 1992, in ongoing conflict between the ANC and IFP. The attackers reportedly wanted guns, which they believed the family had received from Ulundi. Her husband was killed in the attack.

SIMELANE, Gcinwayinkosi Petrus (27), an ANC supporter, was tortured, stabbed and shot dead by members of an ANC-aligned self-defence unit on 30 August 1993 in Katlehong, Tvl, because he refused to patrol with them.

SIMELANE, Gwete Enock (52), was shot and severely injured while travelling in a taxi in Meadowlands, Soweto, Johannesburg, on 3 June 1992 during conflict between IFP-aligned Mzimhlophe hostel-dwellers and residents.

SIMELANE, Jabulani Korn (42), lost his house in an arson attack in Ondondolo, KwaZulu, near Empangeni, Natal, on 6 August 1993 in continuing conflict between IFP and ANC supporters in the area.

SIMELANE, Joe Johannes (23), was shot and arrested by members of the SAP in May 1985 in Tsakane, Brakpan, Tvl, after he attended the funeral of someone killed by hostel-dwellers. A group of mourners attempted to storm the hostel and police intervened.

SIMELANE, Johannes Meleni (23), an ANC supporter, died after he was stabbed and shot by members of the IFP-aligned Khumalo gang on 4 August 1993 in Tokoza, Alberton, Tvl.

SIMELANE, Johannes Zwelibanzi (24), a member of the SAP, was injured in a limpet mine explosion at the Newcastle magistrate's court, Natal, on 23 November 1986. Two MK operatives were granted amnesty (AC/2001/139).

SIMELANE, Linah Silulezi (24), had her home damaged in an arson attack by Imbokodo vigilantes in Mathyzensloop, KwaNdebele, on 27 June 1986 during violent conflict over KwaNdebele independence.

SIMELANE, Miles Simon , an IFP supporter, was killed by members of an ANC self-defence unit (SDU) in Katlehong, Tvl, on 7 December 1993. Eleven people were killed, nine execution-style, during conflict between the local ANCYL and SDU members. Thirteen SDU members were refused amnesty (AC/1998/0013).

SIMELANE, Mpembe Amos (46), an IFP supporter, had his home in Inanda, near KwaMashu, Durban, destroyed in an arson attack by ANC supporters on 19 June 1991.

SIMELANE, Nokuthula Aurelia (aka 'Sibongile') (23), a courier for MK from Bethal, Tvl, was abducted from the Carlton Centre in Johannesburg by members of the Soweto Security Branch on 8 September 1983 and held initially at the Norwood Police flats. She was later taken to a farm near Thabazimbi, Tvl, and held for several weeks, during which time she was severely tortured. She subsequently disappeared and is presumed dead. Eight Soweto Security Branch operatives applied for amnesty for the detention and torture only. Three applications were refused and five were granted (AC/2001/185).

SIMELANE, Nonozana Anna (53), an ANC supporter, had her house burnt down by IFP supporters in Sonkombo, Ndwedwe, KwaZulu, near Durban, on 16 March 1994. See Sonkombo arson attacks.

TP

TN 28

382/0 28

MINISTRY OF JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT
CAPE TOWN
2003 -03- 25
KAAPSTAD
MINISTERIE VAN JUSTISIE EN STAATKUNDIGE ONTWIKKELING

PROCLAMATION
BY THE
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA

No. ....., 2003

NATIONAL PROSECUTING AUTHORITY ACT, 1998

Determination of Powers, Duties and Functions of a Special Director of Public Prosecutions

Under section 13(1)(c) of the National Prosecuting Authority Act, 1998(Act No. 32 of 1998), I, hereby confer, impose and assign the following powers, duties and functions on or to Advocate ANTON ROSSOUW ACKERMAN SC, a Special Director of Public Prosecutions, appointed in terms of the said provisions:

To exercise the powers, carry out the duties and perform the functions necessary, within the Office of the National Director of Public Prosecutions as directed by the National Director and—

(a) in particular, to head the Priority Crimes Litigation Unit and to manage and direct the investigation and prosecution of crimes contemplated in the implementation of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court Act, 2002(Act No. 27 of 2002), and serious national and international crimes, which include acts of terrorism and sabotage committed under the Internal Security Act, 1982(Act No. 74 of 1982), high treason, sedition, foreign military crimes committed by mercenaries, or such other priority crimes to be determined by the National Director; and

(b) generally, giving such advice or rendering such assistance to the National Director as may be required to exercise the powers, carry out the duties and perform the functions which are conferred or imposed on or assigned to him by the Constitution or any other law.

Given under my Hand and the Seal of the Republic of South Africa at PRETORIA on this 24th day of MARCH Two Thousand and Three.

T. M. MBEKI
President

P. M. MADUNA
Minister of the Cabinet

JA
NW

TP

TN 29

383

29

PRIORITY CRIMES LITIGATION UNIT (PCLU)

1. INTRODUCTION

The Priority Crimes Litigation Unit (PCLU) was created by Presidential proclamation[1] on 23 March 2003 and is located in the office of the National Director of Public Prosecutions. This unit has no investigative capacity and is reliant on SAPS and the DSO in this regard.

Mandate:
To manage and direct investigations and prosecutions relating to the following matters:

- Criminal prosecutions arising from the Rome Statute; [Implementation of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court Act, Act No 27 0f 2002] This relates to the serious crimes of:
  - a. Genocide,
  - b. Crimes against humanity and
  - c. War crimes.

- Crimes against the State, including national and international terrorism; [Inter alia prosecutions under the Protection of Constitutional Democracy Against Terrorist and Related Activities Act, No 33 of 2004 - the POCDATARA Act]

- Contraventions of:
  - The Regulation of Foreign Military Assistance Act; [Act No 15 of 1998]
  - Non-Proliferation of Weapons of Mass Destruction Act (nuclear, chemical and biological warfare proliferation); [Act No 87 of 1993]
  - The National Conventional Arms Control Act; [Act No 41 of 2002]
  - The Nuclear Energy Act [Act No 46 of 1999]
  - The Intelligence Services Act [Act No 65 of 2002]

- Matters emanating from the TRC process:
  - Prosecutions
  - Missing persons

- Any other priority crimes as determined by the National Director.

---

[1] Cf attached copy of Presidential Mandate.
http://www.npa.gov.za/UploadedFiles/About PCLU signedoff.doc

TP 7

2. FOCUS AREAS

The unit's focus areas are:

(i) NUCLEAR NON-PROLIFERATION

(ii) NON-PROLIFERATION OF CHEMICAL AND BIOLOGICAL WARFARE AGENTS

The PCLU instituted a prosecution for this category of offence. The matter was finalized with a plea of guilty and a fine of R100 000 was imposed on the corporate entity prosecuted. Further dockets relating to controlled chemicals of Crest and Amla were decided by this Unit.

(iii) FOREIGN MILITARY ASSISTANCE

- In response to the arrest of South African citizens in Zimbabwe and Equatorial Guinea, the PCLU managed and directed an investigation into the involvement of other role players. This led to the arrest of three South African citizens and a UK citizen (Mark Thatcher). All four pleaded guilty in terms of section 105A of the Criminal Procedure Act.

- Following the release of the South African citizens detained in Zimbabwe in connection with the coup in Equatorial Guinea, eleven of them were arrested in South Africa and charged with contravention of section 3(b) of the Regulation of Foreign Military Assistance Act, No 15 of 1988. Two of the said accused pleaded guilty and were sentenced. The trial of the remaining nine accused is due to proceed in February 2007. It is anticipated that the outstanding prosecutions relating to the Equatorial Guinea attempted coup d'etat will be finalized in 2007.

- A matter of concern to Government was the participation of South African citizens acting as security guards in the conflict in Iraq. A number of enquiries conducted by SAPS were evaluated by the PCLU, but it was found that such conduct did not fall within the ambit of the existing FMA legislation. The PCLU prepared a detailed opinion recommending an amendment of the Act, which was submitted to all relevant role players.

TP 9

- Government accepted the need to amend the Foreign Military Assistance legislation in order to take effective action in Iraq. A revised Act was placed before the Defence Portfolio Committee. However, the Minister of Defence recognized that the Act still contained several shortcomings.

- It is hoped that the revised legislation will shortly come into effect, since the PCLU would like to address Government's concerns relating to the number of South Africans performing security services in Iraq.

(iv) NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL TERRORISM

The PCLU closely interacted with State departments having an interest in such affairs. In several matters, the PCLU furnished opinions to SAPS, NIA and DFA. Although no prosecutions arose from such interventions, the PCLU's involvement meant that the matters were properly attended to.

(v) STATUTE OF ROME

A number of enquiries were carried out at the request of the International Criminal Court and a complaint relating to the seizure of farms in Zimbabwe was investigated. No prosecutions arising from the Statute of Rome were instituted.

(vi) CONVENTIONAL ARMS

- After a lengthy trial in the Regional Court, Germiston, a former employee of an arms manufacturer was acquitted on charges of supplying his company's technology to a foreign state's military structure. The charges related to highly technical contraventions of the Armscor Act, the Protection of Information Act, the Copyright Act and theft. The court found that the instrumentation that was built, did not comply with a specific military standard (as required by the Act) and that the accused did not have the required knowledge of unlawfulness relating to these specialized legislation.

- A number of complex and intricate dockets pertaining to alleged irregularities committed at Armscor and the Directorate of Conventional Arms Control Committee were submitted to the unit for decision. A number of these matters are under investigation.

TPM

(vii) MATTERS IMPACTING ON STATE SECURITY

- The PCLU offers opinions and other advice to various State departments on matters impacting on State security and other sensitive matters. The PCLU also addressed a standing committee of the United Nations' Security Council as far as the country's capacity to prosecute international terrorism.

(viii) TRC PROSECUTIONS

- The PCLU conducted an audit of around 300 cases which had been submitted by the DSO, DPP's and SAPS in 1999 in terms of a direction by the then NDPP. 167 of these cases were finalized on the basis that no prosecutions could be instituted.

- As a result of various representations received, the PCLU has identified five cases, which potentially can be prosecuted, as well as approximately 10 other cases warranting investigation. The following steps must be taken:

  (i) The representatives of the State departments which are required to assist the PCLU in the execution of its duties must be identified and involve themselves in the process;

  (ii) The issue of the investigations must be resolved with SAPS and the DSO and thereafter the necessary investigations completed;

  (iii) The close involvement of the process by Justice is necessary in cases where prosecutions are instituted where amnesty was refused, since the applicants may take the validity of the refusal to grant amnesty on review to the High Court;

TPN

3. MISSING PERSONS

Due to the fact that the President had in 2003 directed the NDPP to give attention to the cases of some 500 persons who had been reported missing by the TRC, a small Task Team was established to evaluate the TRC report and to identify cases for investigation. Approximately 150 cases were identified for immediate investigation.

➢ Investigations and Exhumations

Investigations commenced into 150 missing persons that were identified as priority cases in an audit, with the aim of obtaining (a) information as to the fate of the missing person and (b) locating, exhuming and identifying human remains where possible.

Thus far the burial sites of thirty-two persons were located and these human remains were exhumed. Forensic analysis was conducted and identities confirmed in twelve cases. The remaining twenty are still undergoing DNA testing.

➢ Handover of remains and reburials

Five identified remains were handed to the affected families at a special national ceremony in July 2005 at Freedom Park. Reburials have taken place in all of these cases, with these families receiving assistance from the Department of Justice and Constitutional Development towards reburial costs. Further handovers will take place during 2006.

➢ Memorialisation

A key component of the work on Missing Persons is ensuring the necessary connection with existing structures engaged in memorialisation processes. Liaison with structures such as the South African Heritage Resource Agency (SAHRA), Freedom Park, and the SANDF was established to address matters such as tombstones for those exhumed and reburied. The outcome of Missing Persons investigations will be closely coordinated with other related bodies working on memorialisation, monuments and tombstones.

➢ International expertise

A partnership was built with the Argentine Forensic Anthropology Team (EAAF), the world leaders in this work, in order to ensure that missing persons' work in South Africa is in line with best international practices as developed by inter alia the UN and International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) in such human rights cases.

TP M

- Local capacity building

  Local South African experts and several post-graduate students in the fields of archaeology, anthropology and anatomy were also drawn into the work on a collaborative basis with the Argentine team, building local capacity.

- DNA analysis

  A partnership was established with the Human Identification Laboratory (HID) at the University of the Western Cape (UWC) for DNA analysis work. This lab is developing specialization in "ancient DNA" work, which works with difficult cases of old and damaged bone material, as is the norm in missing persons' exhumations. The development of the capacity to conduct mitochondrial DNA tests (as opposed to only nuclear DNA tests) will be an important contribution to capacity building in Africa.

- Partnerships with civil society

  The Missing Persons Task Team developed excellent working relationships with civil society groups and NGO's working in the field of missing persons and disappearances, including the Center for the Study of Violence and Reconciliation (CSVR) and Khulumani Support Group (KSG).

- Namibia

  After the November 2005 discoveries of mass graves in Namibia, the Namibian President requested the assistance of South African expertise. The Missing Persons Task Team sent a delegation to review the situation and make recommendations accordingly. The Namibian authorities warmly received the delegation's report and recommendations. The report included the offer of assistance to Namibia in the form of establishing a national co-ordination structure, as well as research, investigation and DNA analysis support. As a key role player in the past Namibian conflict, South Africa has a particular historical responsibility in this regard.

  Assistance to the Namibian authorities will form a key component of the work of the Missing Persons Task Team in future. This will take the form of research, investigation and co-ordination assistance, pending the approval of the relevant South African government structures.

- Cases outside the South African borders

  While thus far investigations and exhumations have focused on cases inside South Africa's borders, groundwork will be laid for the examining of cases of South African persons missing outside the countries borders.

TPM

- Integration with the new TRC Unit established in the Department of Justice and Constitutional Development

  As these missing persons investigations are the result of the TRC's recommendations, the Missing Persons' Task Team serves on the Steering committee of this new TRC Unit.

- Co-operation with other Government Departments

  Missing Persons investigations require the co-operation of other Departments such as Home Affairs, Foreign Affairs and Health. Protocols with these Departments will be required via the Minister of Justice and Constitutional Development. In particular, the initial collaboration with certain SAPS investigations will be strengthened and formalized.

The PCLU strives to maintain a high standard of efficiency in dealing with complex matters emanating from its mandate and which impact on the Rome Statute and State security.

TPM

TN 30

390

APPENDIX A

PROSECUTING POLICY AND DIRECTIVES RELATING TO THE PROSECUTION OF OFFENCES EMANATING FROM CONFLICTS OF THE PAST AND WHICH WERE COMMITTED ON OR BEFORE 11 MAY 1994

A. INTRODUCTION

1. In his statement to the National Houses of Parliament and the Nation, on 15 April 2003, President Thabo Mbeki, among others, gave Government's response to the final report of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC). The essential features of the response for the purpose of this new policy, are the following:

   (a) It was recognized that not all persons who qualified for amnesty availed themselves of the TRC process, for a variety of reasons, ranging from incorrect advice (legally or politically) or undue influence to a deliberate rejection of the process.

   (b) A continuation of the amnesty process of the TRC cannot be considered as this would constitute an infringement of the Constitution, especially as it would amount to a suspension of victims' rights and would fly in the face of the objectives of the TRC process. The question as to the prosecution or not of persons, who did not take part in the TRC process, is left in the hands of the National Prosecuting Authority (NPA) as is normal practice.

   (c) As part of the normal legal processes and in the national interest, the NPA, working with the Intelligence Agencies, will be accessible to those persons who are prepared to unearthing the truth of the conflicts of the past and who wish to enter into agreements that are standard in the normal execution of justice and the prosecuting mandate, and are accommodated in our legislation.

   (d) Therefore, persons who had committed crimes, before 11 May 1994, which emanate from conflicts of the past, could enter into agreements with the prosecuting authority in accordance with existing legislation. This was stated in the context of the recognition of the need to gain a full understanding of the networks which operated at the relevant time since, in certain instances, these networks still operated and posed a threat to current security. Particular reference was made to un-recovered arms caches.

2. In view of the above, prosecuting policy, directives and guidelines are required to reflect and attach due weight to the following:

   (a) The Human Rights culture which underscores the Constitution and the status accorded to victims in terms of the TRC and other legislation.

   (b) The constitutional right to life.

TP M

8A. PROSECUTORIAL POLICY AND DIRECTIVES RELATING TO SPECIFIED MATTERS

The National Director may supplement or amend this Policy to determine prosecutorial policy and directives in respect of specific matters, for example, in respect of new legislation and matters of national interest.

The Prosecutorial Policy and Directives, in Appendix A, relating to the prosecution of cases arising from conflicts of the past and which were committed before 11 May 1994, are hereby determined in terms of section 179(5) of the Constitution, with effect from 1 December 2005.

9. CONCLUSION

The Prosecuting Authority is a public, representative service, which should be effective and respected. Prosecutors should adhere to the highest ethical and professional standards in prosecuting crime and should conduct themselves in a manner which will maintain, promote and defend the interests of justice.

This Prosecution Policy is designed to make sure that everyone knows the principles that prosecutors apply when they do their work.

Applying these principles consistently will help those involved in the criminal justice system to treat victims fairly and prosecute offenders effectively.

The Prosecution Policy is not an end in itself.

The challenge which faces the Prosecuting Authority is to implement this Policy in a manner that will increase the sense of security of all people in South Africa.

TP

(c) The non-prescriptivity of the crime of murder.

(d) The recognition that the process of transformation to democracy recognized the need to create a mechanism where persons who had committed politically motivated crimes, linked to the conflicts of the past, could receive indemnity or amnesty from prosecution.

(e) The dicta of the Constitutional Court justifying the constitutionality of the above process, inter alia, on the basis that it did not absolutely deprive victims of the right to prosecution in cases where amnesty had been refused. (See Azanian Peoples Organisation v The President of the RSA, 1996 (8) BCLR 1015 CC).

(f) The recommendation by the TRC that the NPA should consider prosecutions for persons who failed to apply for amnesty or who were refused amnesty.

(g) Government's response to the final Report of the TRC as set out in paragraphs 1(a) to (d) above.

(h) The dicta of the Constitutional Court to the effect that the NPA represents the community and is under an international obligation to prosecute crimes of apartheid. (See The State v Wouter Basson CCT 30/03.).

(i) The constitutional obligation on the NPA to exercise its functions without fear, favour or prejudice (section 179 of the Constitution).

(j) The legal obligations placed on the NPA in terms of its enabling legislation, in particular the provisions relating to the formulation of prosecuting criteria and the right of persons affected by decisions of the NPA to make representations, and for them to be dealt with.

(k) The existing prosecuting policy and general directives or guidelines issued by the National Director of Public Prosecutions (NDPP) to assist prosecutors in arriving at a decision to prosecute or not.

(l) The terms and conditions under which the Amnesty Committee of the TRC could consider applications for amnesty and the criteria for granting of amnesty for gross violation of human rights.

3. Government did not intend to mandate the NDPP to, under the auspice of his or her own office, perpetuate the TRC amnesty process. The existing legislation and normal process referred to by the President, include the following:

(a) Section 204 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1977 (Act No. 51 of 1977), which provides that a person who is guilty of criminal conduct may testify on behalf of the State against his or her co-conspirators and if the Court trying the matter finds that he or she testified in a satisfactory manner, grant him or her indemnity from prosecution.

TP 67

(b) Section 105A of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1977, which makes provision for a person who has committed a criminal offence to enter into a mutually acceptable guilty plea and sentence agreement with the NPA.

(c) Section 179(5) of the Constitution in terms of which the NDPP, among others—

(i) must determine, in consultation with the Minister and after consultation with the Directors of Public Prosecutions, prosecution policy to be observed in the prosecution process;

(ii) must issue policy directives to be observed in the prosecution process; and

(iii) may review a decision to prosecute or not to prosecute.

(d) The above process would not indemnify such a person from private prosecution or civil liability.

4. The NPA has a general discretion not to prosecute in cases where a prima facie case has been established and where it is of the view that such a prosecution would not be in the public interest. The factors to be considered include the following:

(a) The fact that the victim does not desire prosecution.

(b) The severity of the crime in question.

(c) The strength of the case.

(d) The cost of the prosecution weighed against the sentence likely to be imposed.

(e) The interests of the community and the public interest.

In the event of the NPA declining to prosecute in such an instance, such a person is not protected against a private prosecution.

5. Therefore, following Government's response, and the equality provisions in our Constitution and the equality legislation, and taking into account the above factors regarding the handling of cases arising from conflicts of the past, which were committed prior to 11 May 1994, it is important to deal with these matters on a rational, uniform, effective and reconciliatory basis in terms of specifically defined prosecutorial policies, directives and guidelines.

TP 01

B. PROCEDURAL ARRANGEMENTS WHICH MUST BE ADHERED TO IN THE PROSECUTION PROCESS IN RESPECT OF CRIMES ARISING FROM CONFLICTS OF THE PAST

The following procedure must be strictly adhered to in respect of persons wanting to make representations to the NDPP, and in respect of those cases already received by the Office of the NDPP, relating to alleged offences arising from conflicts of the past and which were committed before 11 May 1994:

1. A person who faces possible prosecution and who wishes to enter into arrangements with the NPA, as contemplated in paragraph A1 above (the Applicant), must submit a written sworn affidavit or solemn affirmation to the NDPP containing such representations.

2. The NDPP must confirm receipt of the affidavit or affirmation and may request further particulars by way of a written sworn affidavit or solemn affirmation from the Applicant. The Applicant may also mero moto submit a further written sworn affidavit or solemn affirmation to the NDPP containing representations.

3. All such representations must contain a full disclosure of all the facts, factors or circumstances surrounding the commission of the alleged offence, including all information which may uncover any network, person or thing, which posed a threat to our security at any stage or may pose a threat to our current security.

4. The Priority Crimes Litigation Unit (PCLU) in the Office of the NDPP shall be responsible for overseeing investigations and instituting prosecutions in all such matters.

5. The regional Directors of Public Prosecutions must refer all prosecutions arising from the conflicts of the past, which were committed before 11 May 1994, and with which they are or may be seized, immediately to the Office of the NDPP.

6. The PCLU shall be assisted in the execution of its duties by a senior designated official from the following State departments or other components of the NPA:

   (a) The National Intelligence Agency.

   (b) The Detective Division of the South African Police Service.

   (c) The Department of Justice & Constitutional Development.

   (d) The Directorate of Special Operations.

7. The NDPP must approve all decisions to continue an investigation or prosecution or not, or to prosecute or not to prosecute.

TP 07

8. The NDPP must also be consulted in respect of and approve any offer to a perpetrator relating to the bestowing of the status of a section 204 witness and all section 105A plea and sentence agreements.

9. The NDPP may obtain the views of any private or public person or institution, our intelligence agencies and the Commissioner of the South African Police Service, and must obtain the views of any victims, as far as is reasonably possible, before arriving at a decision.

10. A decision of the NDPP not to prosecute and the reasons for that decision must be made public.

11. In accordance with section 179 (6) of the Constitution, the NDPP must inform the Minister for Justice & Constitutional Development of all decisions taken or intended to be taken in respect of this prosecuting policy relating to conflicts of the past.

12. The NDPP may make public statements on any matter arising from this policy relating to conflicts of the past, where such statements are necessary in the interests of good governance and transparency, but only after informing the Minister for Justice and Constitutional Development thereof.

13. The institution of any prosecution in terms of this policy relating to conflicts of the past would not deprive the accused from making further representations to the NDPP requesting the NDPP to withdraw the charges against him or her. These representations would be considered according to the NPA prosecuting policy, directives, guidelines and established practice. The victims must, as far as reasonably possible, be consulted in any such further process and be informed, should the accused's representations be successful.

14. The NDPP may provide for any additional procedures.

15. All state agencies, in particular those dealing with the prosecution of alleged offenders and those responsible for the investigation of offences, must be requested not to use any information obtained from an alleged accused person during this process in any subsequent criminal trial against such a person. Whatever the response of such agencies may be to this request, the NPA records that its policy in this regard is not to make use of such information at any stage of the prosecuting process, especially not to present it in evidence in any subsequent criminal trial against such person.

TP 07

C. CRITERIA GOVERNING THE DECISION TO PROSECUTE OR NOT TO PROSECUTE IN CASES RELATING TO CONFLICTS OF THE PAST

Apart from the general criteria set out in paragraph 4 of the Prosecuting Policy of the NPA, the following criteria are determined for the prosecution of cases arising from conflicts of the past:

1. The alleged offence must have been committed on or before 11 May 1994.

2. Whether a prosecution can be instituted on the strength of adequate evidence after applying the general criteria set out in paragraph 4 of the said Prosecuting Policy of the NPA.

3. If the answers to paragraphs 1 and 2 above are in the affirmative, then the further criteria in paragraphs (a) to (j) hereunder, must, in a balanced way, be applied by the NDPP before reaching a decision whether to prosecute or not:

   (a) Whether the alleged offender has made a full disclosure of all relevant facts, factors or circumstances to the alleged act, omission or offence.

   (b) Whether the alleged act, omission or offence is an act associated with a political objective committed in the course of conflicts of the past. In reaching a decision in this regard the following factors must be considered:

      (i) The motive of the person who committed the act, commission or offence.

      (ii) The object or objective of the act, omission or offence, and in particular whether the act, omission or offence was primarily directed at a political opponent or State property or personnel or against private property or individuals.

      (iii) Whether the act, omission or offence was committed in the execution of an order of, or on behalf of, or with the approval of, the organisation, institution, liberation movement or body of which the person who committed the act was a member, agent or a supporter.

      (iv) The relationship between the act, omission or offence and the political objective pursued, and in particular the directness and proximity of the relationship and the proportionality of the act, omission or offence to the objective pursued, but does not include any act, omission or offence committed—

         (aa) for personal gain; or

         (bb) out of personal malice, ill-will or spite, directed against the victim of the act or offence committed.

TP 97

(c) The degree of co-operation on the part of the alleged offender, including the alleged offenders endeavours to expose—

(i) the truth of the conflicts of the past, including the location of the remains of victims; or

(ii) possible clandestine operations during the past years of conflict, including exposure of networks that operated or are operating against the people, especially if such networks still pose a real or latent danger against our democracy.

(d) The personal circumstances of the alleged offender, in particular—

(i) whether the ill-health of or other humanitarian consideration relating to the alleged offender may justify the non-prosecution of the case;

(ii) the credibility of the alleged offender;

(iii) the alleged offender's sensitivity to the need for restitution;

(iv) the degree of remorse shown by the alleged offender and his or her attitude towards reconciliation;

(v) renunciation of violence and willingness to abide by the Constitution on the part of the alleged offender; and

(vi) the degree of indoctrination to which the alleged offender was subjected.

(e) Whether the offence in question is serious.

(f) The extent to which the prosecution or non-prosecution of the alleged offender may contribute, facilitate or undermine our national project of nation-building through transformation, reconciliation, development and reconstruction within and of our society.

(g) Whether the prosecution may lead to the further or renewed traumatisation of victims and conflicts in areas where reconciliation has already taken place.

(h) If relevant, the alleged offender's role during the TRC process, namely, in respect of co-operation, full disclosure and assisting the process in general.

(i) Consideration of any views obtained for purposes of reaching a decision.

(j) Any further criteria, which might be deemed necessary by the prosecuting authority for reaching a decision.

TP 17

TN31

398

LRC

LEGAL RESOURCES CENTRE

PBO No. 930003292

Constitutional Litigation Unit • 16th Floor Bram Fischer Towers • 20 Albert Street • Marshalltown, Johannesburg 2001 • South Africa • www.lrc.org.za

PO Box 9495 • Johannesburg 2000 • South Africa • Tel: (011) 836 9831 • Fax: (011) 834 4273

31

Your Ref:

Our Ref: B Sibiya

The Acting National Director of Public Prosecutions
National Prosecuting Authority
Private Bag X752
Pretoria
0001

By fax: 012 845 7291; and
By hand

31 July 2013

Dear Advocate Nomgcobo Jiba,

KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE (PRIORITY INVESTIGATION: JV PLEIN: 1469/02/1996)

1. We act for Thembisile Phumelele Nkadimeng, the sister of the late Nokuthula Aurelia Simelane (Simelane), who was kidnapped and tortured by the former Security Police of the South African Police in 1983 and disappeared while in their hands.

2. We refer to the earlier correspondence in this matter between our client and your office. We also refer to the various communications and meetings held with your Advocate Chris Macadam from the Priority Crimes Litigation Unit (PCLU) earlier this year and in previous years. We attach for your easy reference a copy of our client's letter dated 29 January 2013 addressed to your colleague, Dr Silas Ramaite, the then Acting National Director of Public Prosecutions. This letter sets out the background to the case of our client's late sister.

3. Our client and her family have been seeking justice, truth and accountability for nearly 30 years. September this year will be the 30th anniversary of the disappearance of Simelane. It has been some 17 years since an investigation docket was opened into her disappearance. Simelane's case was one of the cases referred to National Prosecuting Authority (NPA) by the erstwhile Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC) in 2001 and was in turn referred to the PCLU

National Office: J Love (National Director), K Reinecke (Director: Finance)
Cape Town: S Magardie (Director), A Andrews, S Kahanovitz, WR Kerfoot, C May, M Mudarikwa, HJ Smith
Durban: MR Chetty (Director), EJ Broster, FB Mahomed, AJ Richard Grahamstown: S Sephton (Director), C McConnachie
Johannesburg: N Fakir (Director), T Mbhense, Y van Leeve
Constitutional Litigation Unit: T Ngcukaitobi (Head of CLU), M Bishop, G Bizos SC, J Brickhill, S Ndidi, B Sibiya, W Wicomb in 2003. This matter has been in the hands of the NPA for 13 years and has been with the PCLU for more than 10 years.

TP 17

4. Most of the responsible perpetrators have received amnesty for the kidnapping of Simelane, while some also received amnesty for her torture. The crimes of assault and assault GBH have prescribed in terms of section 18 of Act 51 of 1977. No explanation has been provided for the failure to charge those perpetrators who were denied amnesty for the brutal torture of Simelane. None of the perpetrators applied for amnesty for her murder and some did not even apply for her kidnapping, even though the evidence firmly implicates them. In terms of section 18 of the said Act the crimes of kidnapping and murder never prescribe.

5. As appears from the correspondence, my client has engaged in extensive and strenuous endeavours to persuade the authorities to take action over many years. Her pleas have fallen on deaf ears. Ultimately an undertaking was provided by your Adv Macadam to make a final decision on whether to prosecute or refer this matter to an inquest by no later than the end of May 2013. At the end of May no such decision was taken and Adv Macadam advised that he required more time to finalize his investigations. Towards the end of June the said Macadam indicated that he could provide no date on when the investigations would be completed.

6. Our client has understandably lost all faith in the ability and/ or willingness of the NPA to ever conclude its investigations. Our client is of the view that if the suspects in this matter could not be prosecuted, it should have been referred to a judicial inquest years ago, if not decades ago.

7. Should your Adv Macadam be of the view that there are still outstanding lines of investigation that are critical and necessary for purposes of making a decision whether to prosecute or refer to an inquest, and that such investigation cannot be completed within the month of August he is invited to advise us per return. Should no such advice be forthcoming we will assume that there is no further inquiry that cannot be concluded within the next four weeks for purposes of making the said decision and we will act in accordance with our instructions as set out below.

TP

8. Our instructions are as follows:

8.1 The National Prosecuting Authority (NPA) has had more than sufficient time to complete its investigations;

8.2 There is more than sufficient evidence upon which to take a decision to prosecute or to refer to an inquest;

8.3 Even if there are unresolved lines of inquiry, the nature thereof are unlikely to be resolved by further investigation; and can in any event be concluded prior to the launch of a prosecution; or prior to, or during the course of an inquest;

8.4 The excessive delay in finalizing this investigation has severely prejudiced the right of my client and her family to justice and violated their constitutional right to human dignity; and

8.5 The prolonged delay constitutes disgraceful neglect by the criminal justice system; is deeply offensive to the rule of law and is contemptuous of the sacrifices made by Simelane in her struggle for the freedom of South Africa.

9. We are accordingly instructed to demand that you make a decision to charge the perpetrators responsible for Ms Simelane's kidnapping and / or murder and / or other offences by no later than close of business on Friday, 30 August 2013, alternatively; should you decline to prosecute anyone that you refer this matter to a formal judicial inquest. Should you decline or fail to make such a decision our instructions are to apply to the High Court for an order that the matter be referred to a judicial inquest.

TP

Yours sincerely

PP M Mowane.

Legal Resources Centre, Constitutional Litigation Unit, Johannesburg
Bongumusa Sibiya

COPY TO: Minister for Justice and Constitutional Development
By fax: 012 406 4680

AND TO: Advocate Chris Macadam
Priority Crimes Litigation Unit
By fax: 012 845 6337; and
By email: cmacadam@npa.gov.za or hzwart@npa.gov.za

AND TO: Captain Masegela,
South African Police Service
By hand

TP

THEMBISILE PHUMELELE NKADIMENG

OFFICE OF THE NATIONAL DIRECTOR
2013 -01- 30
NATIONAL PROSECUTING AUTHORITY

698 Umhlanga Street
Wingate Park
PRETORIA 0181

Tel: 012 421 3500
Fax: 012 4213516
Cell: 082 553 6680
Email: nkadimeng.thembi@gmail.com

29 January 2013

The Acting National Director of Public Prosecutions
National Prosecuting Authority
Private Bag X752
Pretoria
0001

BY HAND

Fax: (012) 845 6337

Dear Dr Silas Ramaife,

REQUEST FOR THE HOLDING OF A FORMAL INQUEST IN TERMS OF SECTION 5 OF THE INQUESTS ACT 58 OF 1959 IN RESPECT OF THE KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE (PRIORITY INVESTIGATION: JV PLEIN: 1469/02/1996)

I am the sister of Nokuthula Aurelia Simelane ("Nokuthula"). My identity number is 730210 0329 088. On behalf of my family, I seek the holding of a formal inquest in terms of Act 58 of 1959 in respect of the circumstances surrounding the murder and other offences perpetrated by members of the former South African Police Security Branch against Nokuthula.

Background

Nokuthula was the first child of Ernestina and the late Matthews Simelane. She was a member of Umkhonto we Sizwe (MK), the military wing of the African National Congress (ANC). My sister was a student at the University of Swaziland in the early 1980s. During this time, she acted as a go-between for the ANC and exiled leaders in

TPN

Swaziland. In September 1983 shortly after completing her university studies, and whilst on an MK mission to South Africa, she was kidnapped by the Security Branch from the Carlton Centre in Johannesburg. She was then brutally tortured over a period of several weeks and then disappeared.

Most of the policemen who kidnapped and tortured her and then caused her disappearance applied to the TRC for amnesty. They received amnesty for her kidnapping even though they were found to have been untruthful about their treatment of my sister.[1] The senior officers were denied amnesty for her vicious assault. None of the police officers applied for amnesty for the murder of Nokuthula. The senior police officers, in whose presence she was last seen, have refused to disclose the whereabouts of the remains of Nokuthula. To this day her remains have not been found for a burial with dignity.

My family and I have constantly searched for the truth about what happened to my sister. Shortly after her disappearance we spoke with ANC members. We enquired at the South Africa / Swaziland border whether she had crossed into South Africa, but there was no record of her. We even made inquiries in neighbouring countries such as Botswana. Nokhuthula's disappearance was reported to the police, both in Swaziland and, subsequently, in South Africa.

All these efforts proved fruitless until early 1996 when the Sowetan newspaper published a story about Nokuthula's disappearance. The newspaper article appeared to finally spur the police into action. A police investigation under case number CAS1469/02/1996 was opened under the auspices of the Priority Crimes Unit based at John Vorster Square (now Johannesburg Central Police Station). The investigating officer was Captain Leask. During July 1998 one of the senior officers was warned of his rights in terms of section 35 of the Constitution in respect of the "murder" of Nokuthula Simelane. He declined to make a statement.

[1] Decision (AC/2001/185) of the Amnesty Committee of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission.

TPN

We raised her disappearance with the TRC. We have pleaded with prosecutors to take the case forward. I have even appointed private detectives. A documentary was made and screened on TV ("Betrayal", 2006). A statue was erected in her memory in Bethal. However we are still without answers.

We know from the TRC hearings that my sister suffered terribly at the hands of the South African security branch. We know that she refused to collaborate with the forces of Apartheid. For this she paid the ultimate price. My father died in 2001, without knowing what happened to his daughter. I refuse to give up the search for the truth and justice.

Attempts to seek justice

I have met police officers as well as prosecutors from the Priority Crimes Litigation Unit (PCLU) of the National Prosecuting Authority (NPA) on a few occasions. On each occasion various excuses were provided as to why this case could not go forward.

Initially the PCLU advised that there was sufficient evidence to proceed against certain of the officers on charges of assault to do grievous bodily harm in respect of the physical torture of Nokuthula. However, they advised us that they were prevented from proceeding with assault prosecutions as the right to prosecute such offences had prescribed by virtue of section 18 of the Criminal Procedure Act 51 of 1977.

The PCLU also advised that their hands were, in any event, tied by an effective moratorium against the prosecution of the so-called political cases of the past. They were not permitted to proceed until a standardized policy had been put in place to deal with such cases. Towards the end of 2005 the Prosecution Policy was duly amended. It provided for an effective back-door amnesty for those responsible for so-called political crimes and who had not previously applied for amnesty. Together with the wives of the Cradock 4 I applied to court to have this policy set aside as unconstitutional. The Pretoria High Court struck down the policy in the case of Nkadimeng & Others v The National Director of Public Prosecutions & Others (TPD case no 32709/07). In this matter the NPA had argued that the amended policy survived constitutional scrutiny as families could still bring private prosecutions in matters where the NDPP declined to prosecute. The court rejected this contention stating that it was the primary responsibility of the NPA to prosecute. The NPA was denied leave to appeal.

TP 07

Following the striking down of the amendments to the prosecution policy I was advised that the PCLU was still unable to take this matter forward because they lacked police detectives to carry out the necessary investigations.

During the course of 2006 one of my legal representatives presented the PCLU with a legal opinion in which it was concluded that the physical and mental abuse perpetrated against Nokhuthula constituted the international crime of torture. Torture was, by 1983, a prohibited and unlawful act in terms of customary international law. South Africa was obliged to investigate and prosecute transgressions of customary international law as well as violations of the Geneva Conventions. While the PCLU did not dispute the conclusions of this opinion they did not take the matter forward.

My legal representatives also proposed that those suspects who did not apply for amnesty be prosecuted for kidnapping. I am advised that kidnapping is listed as one of the exceptions to the 20 year prescription rule in section 18 of Act 51 of 1977. Notwithstanding that there was no legal impediment to the preferring of such charges this proposal was rejected. My legal representatives also proposed that charges of defeating the ends of justice be brought against two of the senior officers for intimidating a junior officer into making a false statement and for attempting to coach a witness into making a false statement. The PCLU declined to pursue such charges.

Other excuses include an apparent lack of evidence. In particular it has been claimed that none of the evidence that was led before the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC) may be used in subsequent legal proceedings. I am advised that this view is without merit. It is based on an erroneous reading of section 31 of the Promotion of

TPM

National Unity and Reconciliation Act 34 of 1995 which, in any event, was not invoked in these particular proceedings before the TRC.

The need for a formal inquest

This matter is now urgent. Nearly 30 years has passed since Nokuthula's disappearance. Some 17 years has lapsed since the more recent police docket was opened. My mother is now elderly and sickly. Witnesses are also getting old. Some have died in suspicious circumstances.

The PCLU had previously suggested that an inquest be held in this matter. At that time my family and I preferred to see a prosecution taking place. Indeed we have been trying to launch a private prosecution, but we have been unable to raise sufficient funds to pay the security for costs, which we are advised will be a substantial sum of money. In the circumstances we now wish to have formal inquest held as speedily as possible.

If the authorities were going to prosecute this matter such prosecution would have taken place many years ago. This case has dragged on for way too long, and such delay has undermined the prospects for justice and played into the hands of the perpetrators. With every day that goes by without action being taken, the interests of justice are severely eroded. Moreover, and most regrettably, we have lost complete faith in the PCLU to run a successful prosecution.

Last week I met with the investigating officer, Captain Masehela. He advised me that he submitted his report to Advocate Chris Macadam at the PCLU during July 2011. In this report he proposed that this matter be dealt with in an inquest. I assume that this report was submitted in compliance with section 4 of the Inquest Act. I then spoke with Advocate Macadam who advised me to approach Madeleine Fullard, the Head of the Missing Persons Task Team at the National Prosecuting Authority of South Africa.

I met with Ms Fullard who advised that her Task Team had not been able to locate the remains of Nokuthula. She suggested that I approach the suspects and offer not to prosecute them if they disclose the location of Nokuthula's remains. I have discussed this suggestion with my family and we have decided not to do a deal with the suspects. The suspects have had more than ample time to come forward and disclose the whereabouts of the remains. They have chosen rather to cause me and my family untold pain and anguish by maintaining a wall of lies and deceit.

TP

Please advise me per return whether the statements and relevant documents have been submitted to a magistrate or judicial officer in terms of section 5 of the Inquest Act. If not, please advise why not. If the documents have been submitted, please advise which magistrate or judicial officer is dealing with this matter. I am advised that I am entitled to be given reasonable notice of the holding of an inquest in terms of section 7 of the Inquest Act. I further request that steps be taken to ensure that the inquest is a formal public inquest which includes the giving of oral evidence. Given the sensitivities of this matter I request that this inquest be held in the High Court of South Africa.

Should you at any point choose to institute criminal proceedings in this matter I request that you appoint a special prosecutor to lead the prosecution, in consultation with me and my family.

I accordingly ask that you treat this request with great urgency and advise me at your earliest convenience.

Yours sincerely,

T P NKADIMENG

Copy to: Advocate Chris Macadam, Priority Crimes Litigation Unit

TPN

TN 32

408

32

LRC

LEGAL RESOURCES CENTRE

PBO No. 930003292

Constitutional Litigation Unit • 16th Floor Bram Fischer Towers • 20 Albert Street • Marshalltown, Johannesburg 2001 • South Africa • www.lrc.org.za

PO Box 9495 • Johannesburg 2000 • South Africa • Tel: (011) 836 9831 • Fax: (011) 834 4273

Your Ref:
Our Ref: B Sibiya

The Acting National Director of Public Prosecutions
National Prosecuting Authority
Private Bag X752
Pretoria
0001

By fax: 012 845 7291; and
By hand

5 August 2013

Dear Advocate Nomgcobo Jiba,

KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE (PRIORITY INVESTIGATION; JV PLEIN: 1469/02/1996)

1. We refer to your Advocate Macadam's email dated 31 July 2013.

2. Our letter invited Advocate Macadam to identity lines of inquiry that he believed could not be completed during the next 4 weeks. In the abovementioned email, besides a general claim that he has further lines of inquiry he did not identify any specific outstanding investigations nor did he state that these are unlikely to be finalized during August. We again invite Advocate Macadam to indicate what the outstanding investigations are and why he is of the view that 4 weeks is insufficient. Should such an explanation be forthcoming our client is prepared to review her instructions.

3. We note that Advocate Macadam advised our Adv Palmer during April this year that a number of key aspects had been dealt with and that the remaining investigations would be "finalised within a reasonable period of time." We are of the respectful view that an end of August deadline, which amounts to an additional 4 months, constitutes more than a reasonable period of time. This is particularly so when seen in the light of the fact that the docket has been open for some 17 years and has been in the hands of the PCLU for more than 10 years.

National Office:
Cape Town:
Durban:
Grahamstown:
Johannesburg:
Constitutional Litigation Unit:

J Love (National Director), K Reinecke (Director: Finance)
S Magardie (Director), A Andrews, S Kahanovitz, WR Kerfoot, C May, M Mudarikwa, HJ Smith
MR Chetty (Director), ED Broster, FB Mahomed, AJ Richard
S Sephton (Director), C McConnachie
N Fakir (Director), T Mbhense, Y van Leeve
T Ngcukaitobi (Head of CLU), M Bishop, G Bizos SC, J Brickhill, S Ndidi, B Sibiya, W Wicomb

TPM

4. In respect of the alleged communications between Advocate Macadam and members of our team we note that this amounted to a meeting held on 18 February 2013, three or four subsequent telephone discussions and a few email exchanges. We are advised that virtually all these communications were initiated by our client's representatives. This is notwithstanding his undertaking made at the 18 February meeting to provide our client's representatives with regular updates following his weekly updates from the investigation team. We are further advised that in none of these communications was any indication provided; approximate or otherwise, as to when the investigations would be concluded.

5. Our client declined the proposal for a meeting towards the end of August, which she viewed as further delaying the finalizing of the investigation. In the circumstances if there are matters for Advocate Macadam to report we request that he does so now.

6. Our client was advised not to take any action when the agreed deadline for completing the investigation at the end of May expired. Two more months have now passed since that deadline. We are now providing Advocate Macadam with a further month to finalize his inquiries. We are instructed to advise that a general and vague claim as to why Advocate Macadam cannot complete his investigation by the end of August will not suffice. Unless he provide specifics, as referred to above, we must assume that there is no reasonable explanation for this untenable delay.

Yours sincerely

Legal Resources Centre, Constitutional Litigation Unit, Johannesburg
Bongumusa Sibiya

COPY TO: Advocate Chris Macadam
Priority Crimes Litigation Unit
By fax: 012 845 6337; and
By email: cmacadam@npa.gov.za or hzwart@npa.gov.za

TP

x x x Communication Result Report (5. Aug. 2013 18:25) x x x 410

1) LEGAL RESOURCE CENTER
2)

Date/Time: 5. Aug. 2013 18:23

File No.	Mode	Destination	Pg(s)	Result	Page Not Sent
1185	Memory TX Bongumusa	0128457291 0128456337	P. 2	OK OK

Reason for error
E. 1) Hang up or line fail
E. 2) Busy
E. 3) No answer
E. 4) No facsimile connection
E. 5) Exceeded max. E-mail size

LRC

LEGAL RESOURCES CENTRE

Your Ref:
Our Ref: B Sibiya

The Acting National Director of Public Prosecutions
National Prosecuting Authority
Private Bag X752
Pretoria
0001

By fax: 012 845 7291; and
By hand

5 August 2013

Dear Advocate Nenqcabo Jiba,

KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE (PRIORITY INVESTIGATION: JV PLEIN: 1483/07/1998)

1. We refer to your Advocate Macadam's email dated 31 July 2013.

2. Our letter invited Advocate Macadam to identify lines of inquiry that he believed could not be completed during the next 4 weeks. In the abovementioned email, besides a general claim that he has further lines of inquiry he did not identify any specific outstanding investigations nor did he state that these are unlikely to be finalised during August. We again invite Advocate Macadam to indicate what the outstanding investigations are and why he is of the view that 4 weeks is insufficient. Should such an explanation be forthcoming our client is prepared to review her instructions.

3. We note that Advocate Macadam advised our Adv Pahner during April this year that a number of key aspects had been dealt with and that the remaining investigations would be "finalised within a reasonable period of time." We are of the respectful view that an end of August deadline, which amounts to an additional 4 months, constitutes more than a reasonable period of time. This is particularly so when seen in the light of the fact that the docket has been open for some 17 years and has been in the hands of the PCLU for more than 10 years.

TP

TN 33

411

33

Johannesburg Office

15th Floor Bram Fischer Towers • 20 Albert Street • Marshalltown • Johannesburg 2001 • South Africa
PO Box 9495 • Johannesburg 2000 • South Africa
Tel: (011) 836 9831 • Fax: (011) 836 8680 • Website www.lrc.org.za
PBO No. 930003292
NPO No. 023-004

LRC
Legal Resources Centre

10 July 2014

The National Director of Public Prosecutions
National Prosecuting Authority
Private Bag X752
Pretoria
0001

By Fax: (012) 845-7291

Dear Mr. Nxasana,

KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE (PRIORITY INVESTIGATION: JV PLEIN: 1469/02/1996)

1. We refer to our letter to you dated 14 January 2014, which was copied to Adv. S K Abrahams. Acting Director of the Priority Crimes Litigation Unit (PCLU) and Adv C Macadam.

2. We have received no response to this letter. After a lapse of some 6 months we must assume that you have no response to the contents of the aforesaid letter and that you are not willing to meet with our client and her legal representatives.

3. Contrary to earlier promises made by the PCLU we have received no monthly reports on progress, or the lack thereof. In the circumstances we must assume that no progress has been made.

4. Our client has only been contacted once by the investigating officer during the past 6 months. During the month of May, Captain Masegela phoned our client and indicated that she would soon be advised of the DNA test results. She then expected to hear from him or the PCLU but has regrettably been kept in the dark.

National Office:
Cape Town:
Durban:
Grahamstown:
Johannesburg:
Constitutional Litigation Unit:

J Love (National Director), K Reinecke (Director: Finance), EJ Broster
S Magardie (Director), A Andrews, S Kahanovitz, WR Kerfoot, C May, N Mudarikwa, HJ Smith
FB Mahomed (Acting Director), A Turpin
S Sephton (Director), C McConnachie
N Fakir (Director), T Mbhense, C van der Linde,
J Brickhill (Head of CLU), M Bishop, G Bizos SC, T Ngcukaitobi, S Nindi, M Wheeldon , W Wicomb

TP

5. In the light of the continued inaction in this matter we must assume that there is no real intention to make a decision to prosecute or not; and moreover that there is no intention to refer this case to an inquest.

6. Our client's rights are accordingly reserved.

Yours faithfully,

LEGAL RESOURCES CENTRE
Per: CARIEN VAN DER LINDE

CC TO: Adv S K Abrahams, Acting Head: Priority Crimes Litigation Unit -- Fax: (012) 845 6337;

Adv. C Macadam, Priority Crimes Litigation Unit: Fax: (012) 845 6337 cmacadam@npa.gov.za / hzwart@npa.gov.za

National Office:
Cape Town:
Durban:
Grahamstown:
Johannesburg:
Constitutional Litigation Unit:

J Love (National Director), K Reinecke (Director: Finance), EJ Broster
S Magardie (Director), A Andrews, S Kahanovitz, WR Kerfoot, C May, M Mudarikwa, HJ Smith
FB Mahomed (Acting Director), A Turpin
S Sephton (Director), C McConnachie
N Fakir (Director), T Mbhense, C van der Linde,
J Brickhill (Head of CLU), M Bishop, G Bizos SC, T Ngcukaitobi, S Nindi, M Wheeldon , W Wicomb

* * * COMMUNICATION RESULT REPORT (11. JUL. 2014 15:09) * * *

FAX HEADER: LEGAL RESOURCES CENTRE

TRANSMITTED/STORED : 11. JUL. 2014 14:48 FILE MODE	OPTION	ADDRESS	RESULT	PAGE
048 MEMORY TX		0128457291	E-1) 1) 1) 1) 1)	0/2

REASON FOR ERROR
E-1) HANG UP OR LINE FAIL
E-2) BUSY
E-3) NO ANSWER
E-4) NO FACSIMILE CONNECTION

Johannesburg Office
15th Floor Bram Fischer Towers • 20 Albert Street • Marshalltown • Johannesburg 2001 • South Africa
PO Box 9495 • Johannesburg 2000 • South Africa
Tel: (011) 836 9831 • Fax: (011) 836 8680 • Website www.lrc.org.za
PBO No. 930003293
NPO No. 023-004

LRC

10 July 2014

The National Director of Public Prosecutions
National Prosecuting Authority
Private Bag X752
Pretoria
0001

By Fax: (012) 845-7291

Dear Mr. Nxasana,

KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE (PRIORITY INVESTIGATION: JV PLEIN: 1469/03/1996)

1. We refer to our letter to you dated 14 January 2014, which was copied to Adv. S K Abrahams, Acting Director of the Priority Crimes Litigation Unit (PCLU) and Adv G Macadam.

2. We have received no response to this letter. After a lapse of some 6 months we must assume that you have no response to the contents of the aforesaid letter and that you are not willing to meet with our client and her legal representatives.

3. Contrary to earlier promises made by the PCLU we have received no monthly reports on progress, or the lack thereof. In the circumstances we must assume that no progress has been made.

4. Our client has only been contacted once by the investigating officer during the past 6 months. During the month of May, Captain Masegela phoned our client and indicated that she would soon be advised of the DNA test results. She then expected to hear from him or the PCLU but has regrettably been kept in the dark.

National Offices
Cape Town
Durban
Grahamstown
Johannesburg
Constitutional Litigation Unit

J Love (National Director), K Reinecke (Director: Finance), EJ Broster
S Magardie (Director), A Andrews, S Kahanovitz, WR Kerfoot, C May, M Nudelman, HJ Smith
FB Mahomed (Acting Director), A Turpin
S Seshan (Director), C McConnachie
N Fakir (Director), T Hlahlane, C van der Linde,
J Brickhill (Head of CLU), M Bishop, G Bizos SC, T Ngcukaitobi, S Nindi, M Wesdon, W Wicomb

TP

Carien van der Linde

From:	Carien van der Linde <carien@lrc.org.za>
Sent:	11 July 2014 03:06 PM
To:	'cmacadam@npa.gov.za'; 'hzwart@npa.gov.za'
Subject:	KIDNAPPING TORNTURE DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE / PRIORITY INVESTIGATION JV PLEIN 1469/1996
Attachments:	LETTER TO NPA 10 JULY 2014.pdf

Herewith correspondence for your kind further attention.

Carien van der Linde
Attorney

| Tel: 011 836 9831 | Fax: 011 836 8680 | Email: carien@lrc.org.za |
| Mobile: 060 346 9577 |
Physical : 15th Floor	Bram Fischer Towers	20 Albert street	Marshalltown
Johannesburg	South Africa
Postal: P.O Box 9495	Johannesburg 2000
Website: www.lrc.org.za
Johannesburg	Cape Town	Durban	Grahamstown

MAKE A SECURE DONATION

LRC
Legal Resources Centre

TP

TN 34
415
34.

Johannesburg Office

15th Floor Bram Fischer Towers • 20 Albert Street • Marshalltown • Johannesburg 2001 • South Africa
PO Box 9495 • Johannesburg 2000 • South Africa
Tel: (011) 836 9831 • Fax: (011) 836 8680 • Website www.lrc.org.za
PBO No. 930003292
NPO No. 023-004

LRC
Legal Resources Centre

Your ref: JB/ CAS:1469/02/1996
Our ref:

10 July 2014

Lieutenant-General A Dramat
National Head: Directorate for Priority Crimes Investigation
Private Bag X1500
SILVERTON
0127

Attention: Brigadier Kadwa
By Fax: (012) 846-4400
Email: kadwaE@saps.gov.za

Dear General Dramat,

KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE (PRIORITY INVESTIGATION: JV PLEIN: 1469/02/1996)

1. We refer to our letter to you dated 24 February 2014.

2. We have received no response to this letter. After a lapse of some 5 months we must assume that you have no response to the contents of the aforesaid letter. In the circumstances, we must also assume also that no real progress has been made in this investigation.

3. Our client has only been contacted once by the investigating officer during the past 6 months. During the month of May, Captain Masegela phoned our client and indicated that she would soon be advised of the DNA test results. She has since then been kept in the dark.

4. If the DNA tests are available please advise when the test results were supplied. Please provide us with a copy of the said results and advise us what the test results reveal.

National Office:
Cape Town:
Durban:
Grahamstown:
Johannesburg:
Constitutional Litigation Unit:

J Love (National Director), K Reinecke (Director: Finance), EJ Broster
S Magardie (Director), A Andrews, S Kahanovitz, WR Kerfoot, C May, M Mudarikwa, HJ Smith
FB Mahomed (Acting Director), A Turpin
S Sephton (Director), C McConnachie
N Fakir (Director), T Mbhense, C van der Linde,
J Brickhill (Head of CLU), M Bishop, G Bizos SC, T Ngcukaitobi, S Nindi, M Wheeldon , W Wicomb

TP 97

5. In the light of the continued inaction in this matter we must assume that there is no real intention to finalise this matter expeditiously, or at all.

6. Our client's rights are accordingly reserved.

Yours faithfully,

LEGAL RESOURCES CENTRE
Per: CARIEN VAN DER LINDE

CC TO: Adv S K Abrahams, Acting Head: Priority Crimes Litigation Unit -- Fax: (012) 845 6337;
Adv. C Macadam, Priority Crimes Litigation Unit: Fax: (012) 845 6337 cmacadam@npa.gov.za / hzwart@npa.gov.za

National Office:
Cape Town:
Durban:
Grahamstown:
Johannesburg:
Constitutional Litigation Unit

J Love (National Director), K Reinecke (Director: Finance), EJ Broster
S Magardie (Director), A Andrews, S Kahanovitz, WR Kerfoot, C May, M Mudarikwa, HJ Smith
FB Mahomed (Acting Director), A Turpin
S Sephton (Director), C McConnachie
N Fakir (Director), T Mbhense, C van der Linde,
J Brickhill (Head of CLU), M Bishop, G Bizos SC, T Ngcukaitobi, S Nindi, M Wheeldon , W Wicomb

TPA

* * * COMMUNICATION RESULT REPORT (11. JUL. 2014 14:43) * * *

FAX HEADER: LEGAL RESOURCES CENTRE

TRANSMITTED/STORED : 11. JUL. 2014 14:42

FILE	MODE	OPTION	ADDRESS	RESULT	PAGE
044	MEMORY TX		0128464400	OK	2/2

REASON FOR ERROR
E-1) HANG UP OR LINE FAIL
E-2) BUSY
E-3) NO ANSWER
E-4) NO FACSIMILE CONNECTION

Johannesburg Office
15th Floor Bram Fischer Towers • 20 Albert Street • Marshalltown • Johannesburg 2001 • South Africa
PO Box 9495 • Johannesburg 2000 • South Africa
Tel: (011) 836 9831 • Faxi (011) 836-8680 • Website www.lrc.org.za
PBO No. 930003292
NPO No. 023-004

LRC

Your ref: JB/ CAS:1469/02/1996
Our ref:

10 July 2014

Lieutenant-General A Dramat
National Head: Directorate for Priority Crimes Investigation
Private Bag X1500
SILVERTON
0127

Attention: Brigadier Kadwa
By Faxi (012) 846-4400
Email: kadwaE@saps.gov.za

Dear General Dramat,

KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE (PRIORITY INVESTIGATION: JV PLEIN: 1469/02/1996)

1. We refer to our letter to you dated 24 February 2014.

2. We have received no response to this letter. After a lapse of some 5 months we must assume that you have no response to the contents of the aforesaid letter. In the circumstances, we must also assume also that no real progress has been made in this investigation.

3. Our client has only been contacted once by the investigating officer during the past 5 months. During the month of May, Captain Masegela phoned our client and indicated that she would soon be advised of the DNA test results. She has since then been kept in the dark.

4. If the DNA tests are available please advise when the test results were supplied. Please provide us with a copy of the said results and advise us what the test results reveal.

National Office
Cape Town
Durban
Grahamstown
Johannesburg
Constitutional Litigation Unit

J Love (National Director), K Reineke (Director: Finance), ED Broster
S Magardie (Director), A Andrews, S Kabamovitz, WH Kerfoot, C May, M Mudarikwa, HJ Smith
FS Mahomed (Acting Director), A Turpin
S Saphion (Director), C McCormack
H Fikir (Director), T Mbulawa, C Van Der Linde,
J Brickhill (Head of CLU), M Bishop, G Bizos SC, T Ngcukaitobi, S Nindi, M Wheeldon , W Wicomb

TP 17

* * * COMMUNICATION RESULT REPORT (11. JUL. 2014 14:44) * * * 413

FAX HEADER: LEGAL RESOURCES CENTRE

TRANSMITTED/STORED : 11. JUL. 2014 14:43

FILE MODE	OPTION	ADDRESS	RESULT	PAGE
045 MEMORY TX		0128456337	OK	2/2

REASON FOR ERROR
E-1) HANG UP OR LINE FAIL
E-2) BUSY
E-3) NO ANSWER
E-4) NO FACSIMILE CONNECTION

Johannesburg Office
15th Floor Bram Fischer Towers • 20 Albert Street • Marshalltown • Johannesburg 2001 • South Africa
PO Box 9495 • Johannesburg 2000 • South Africa
Tel: (011) 836 9831 • Fax (011) 838 6680 • Website www.lrc.org.za
PBO No. 930003282
NPO No. 023-004

LRC
Legal Resources Centre

Your ref: JB/ CAS:1469/02/1998
Our ref:

10 July 2014

Lieutenant-General A Dramat
National Head: Directorate for Priority Crimes Investigation
Private Bag X1500
SILVERTON
0127

Attention: Brigadier Kadwa
By Fax: (012) 846-4400
Email: kadwaE@saps.gov.za

Dear General Dramat,

KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE (PRIORITY INVESTIGATION: JV PLEIN: 1469/02/1998)

1. We refer to our letter to you dated 24 February 2014.

2. We have received no response to this letter. After a lapse of some 6 months we must assume that you have no response to the contents of the aforesaid letter. In the circumstances, we must also assume also that no real progress has been made in this investigation.

3. Our client has only been contacted once by the investigating officer during the past 6 months. During the month of May, Captain Masegela phoned our client and indicated that she would soon be advised of the DNA test results. She has since then been kept in the dark.

4. If the DNA tests are available please advise when the test results were supplied. Please provide us with a copy of the said results and advise us what the test results reveal.

National Office:
Cape Town
Durban
Grahamstown
Johannesburg
Constitutional Litigation Unit

J Love (National Director), K Reinecke (Director: Finance), EJ Broster,
B Mejerdis (Director), A Andrews, B Kahanovitz, WR Kerfoot, C May, M Mudarikwa, HJ Smith
FB Mahomed (Acting Director), A Turpin
B Stephen (Director), C McConnachie
N Feltz (Director), T Mbhense, C van der Linde,
J Brickhill (Head of CLU), M Bishop, G Bizos SC, T Ngcukaitobi, B Ntuli, M Wheeldon, W Wicomb

TP

TN 35 419
35

SUID-AFRIKAANSE POLISIEDIENS

SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE

Privaatsak/Private Bag x1500 Silverton 0127

Verwysing Reference	JV Plein 1469/02/1996
Navrae Enquiries	Col N Xaba
Telefoon Telephone	012 401 3276 079 889 9582
Faksnommer Fax number	012 401 3235

THE COMMANDER
CRIMES AGAINST THE STATE
DIRECTORATE FOR PRIORITY CRIME INVESTIGATION
SILVERTON
0127

2014-08-11

Legal Resources Centre
P O Box 9495
JOHANNESBURG
2000

KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE: JV PLEIN 1469/02/1996

1. As you are aware, your client appointed a private investigator, Mr Frank Dutton, to investigate the disappearance of MS Simelane.

2. In fact, certain of the state witnesses have advised the Investigating Officer that they had been contacted by Mr Dutton.

3. It is imperative that the DPCI conduct a full investigation into this matter and the issue of what previous statements have been made at various stages by the State witnesses at various stages is of critical importance when assessing the credibility.

4. In this regard, you are kindly requested to arrange for Mr Dutton to provide the Investigating Officer with an affidavit, outlining what investigation he conducted, with whom he had contact and if in fact these persons were State witnesses and what was conveyed to him by them.

COLONEL
COMMANDER: CRIMES AGAINST THE STATE
DIRECTORATE FOR PRIORITY CRIME INVESTIGATION
ORGANISED CRIME
N XABA
2014-08-11

Col Xaba/brlowe33(s)

TP

TN 36 420

Carien van der Linde

From: Carien van der Linde <carien@lrc.org.za>
Sent: 09 September 2014 10:01 AM
To: 'kadwaE@saps.gov.za'
Cc: 'cmacadam@npa.gov.za'; 'hzwart@npa.gov.za'
Subject: KIDNAPPING TORTURE DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKHUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE / PRIORITY INVESTIGATION: JV PLEIN 1469/02/1996
Attachments: LETTER COL XABA 9 9 2014.pdf

Dear Col Xaba,

I attach correspondence for your attention.

Kind regards

Carien van der Linde
Attorney

| Tel: 011 836 9831 | Fax: 011 836 8680 | Email: carien@lrc.org.za |
| Mobile: 060 346 9577 |
Physical : 15th Floor	Bram Fischer Towers	20 Albert street	Marshalltown
Johannesburg	South Africa
Postal: P.O Box 9495	Johannesburg 2000
Website: www.lrc.org.za
Johannesburg	Cape Town	Durban	Grahamstown

MAKE A SECURE DONATION

LRC
Legal Resources Centre

TP 97

* * * COMMUNICATION RESULT REPORT (9. SEP. 2014 9:54) * * * 421

FAX HEADER: LEGAL RESOURCES CENTRE

TRANSMITTED/STORED : 9. SEP. 2014 9:53 FILE MODE	OPTION	ADDRESS	RESULT	PAGE
308 MEMORY TX		0128456337	OK	2/2

REASON FOR ERROR
E-1) HANG UP OR LINE FAIL
E-2) BUSY
E-3) NO ANSWER
E-4) NO FACSIMILE CONNECTION

Johannesburg Office
2nd Floor Bram Fischer Towers • 20 Albert Street • Marshalltown • Johannesburg 2001 • South Africa
PO Box 9495 • Johannesburg 2000 • South Africa
Tel: (011) 836 9831 • Faxi (011) 836 8680 • Website www.lrc.org.za
PBO No. 930003292
NPO No. 023-004

LRC

Your ref: JB/ CAS: 1469/02/1998

9 September 2014

Colonel N Xaba
Commander: Crimes Against the State
Directorate for Priority Crimes Investigation
Private Bag X1500
SILVERTON
0127

By Fax and email: (012) 401-3235/ kadwaE@saps.gov.za

Dear Colonel Xaba,

KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE (PRIORITY INVESTIGATION: JV PLEIN: 1469/02/1998)

1. We refer to your letter dated 11 August 2014.
2. We wish to advise you that the affidavit of Frank Dutton, the family's private investigator, is under preparation and will be filed in due course.
3. We should state at this stage that Mr. Dutton did not take any statements from any witness or person. There can accordingly be no credibility issues arising.
4. The real issue in relation to credibility will be the inordinate and extended time period that this investigation has taken. The only reason why Mr. Dutton was appointed by the family was because of the many years of inaction of the SAPS and the NPA. This step was entirely reasonable in the circumstances and was taken out of great frustration on the part of my clients.

National Office
Cape Town
Durban
Grahamstown
Johannesburg
Constitutional Litigation Unit

J Love (National Director), K Reinecke (Director: Finance), EJ Broster
S Magardie (Director), A Andrews, S Kahanovitz, WR Kerfoot, C May, M Muderikwa, HJ Smith
FB Mahomed (Acting Director), A Turpin
S Sephton (Director), C McConnachie
N Feldr (Director), T Mbhense, C van der Linde,
J Brickhill (Head of CLU), M Bishop, G Bizos SC, T Ngcukaitobi, S Ntsebeza, M Wheeldon, W Witcomb

* * * COMMUNICATION RESULT REPORT (9. SEP. 2014 9:49) * * *

FAX HEADER: LEGAL RESOURCES CENTRE

TRANSMITTED/STORED : 9. SEP. 2014 9:49 FILE MODE	OPTION	ADDRESS	RESULT	PAGE
306 MEMORY TX		0124013235	OK	2/2

REASON FOR ERROR
E-1) HANG UP OR LINE FAIL
E-2) BUSY
E-3) NO ANSWER
E-4) NO FACSIMILE CONNECTION

Johannesburg Office
Floor Brem Fischer Towers • 20 Albert Street • Marshalltown • Johannesburg 2001 • South Africa
P O Box 9495 • Johannesburg 2000 • South Africa
Tel: (011) 836 9831 • Fax (011) 836 8680 • Website www.lrc.org.za
PBO No. 930003292
NPO No. 023-004

LRC

Your ref: JB/ CAS: 1469/02/1998

9 September 2014

Colonel N Xaba
Commander: Crimes Against the State
Directorate for Priority Crimes Investigation
Private Bag X1500
SILVERTON
0127

By Fax and email: (012) 401-3238/ kadwaE@saps.gov.za

Dear Colonel Xaba,

KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE (PRIORITY INVESTIGATION: JV PLEIN: 1469/02/1998)

1. We refer to your letter dated 11 August 2014.

2. We wish to advise you that the affidavit of Frank Dutton, the family's private investigator, is under preparation and will be filed in due course.

3. We should state at this stage that Mr. Dutton did not take any statements from any witness or person. There can accordingly be no credibility issues arising.

4. The real issue in relation to credibility will be the inordinate and extended time period that this investigation has taken. The only reason why Mr. Dutton was appointed by the family was because of the many years of inaction of the SAPS and the NPA. This step was entirely reasonable in the circumstances and was taken out of great frustration on the part of my clients.

National Office:
Cape Town
Durban
Grahamstown
Johannesburg
Constitutional Litigation Unit

J Love (National Director), K Reinecke (Director: Finance), EI Broster
S Magardie (Director), A Andrews, S Kahanovitz, WR Kerfoot, C May, M Mudarikwa, HJ Smith
FB Mahomed (Acting Director), A Turpin
S Sephton (Director), C McConnachie
N Fakir (Director), T Mbhense, C van der Linde,
J Brickhill (Head of CLU), M Bishop, G Bizos SC, T Ngcukaitobi, S Nindi, M Wheeldon, W Wicomb

Johannesburg Office

15th Floor Bram Fischer Towers • 20 Albert Street • Marshalltown • Johannesburg 2001 • South Africa
PO Box 9495 • Johannesburg 2000 • South Africa
Tel: (011) 836 9831 • Fax: (011) 836 8680 • Website www.lrc.org.za
PBO No. 930003292
NPO No. 023-004

LRC
Legal Resources Centre

Your ref: JB/ CAS: 1469/02/1996

9 September 2014

Colonel N Xaba
Commander: Crimes Against the State
Directorate for Priority Crimes Investigation
Private Bag X1500
SILVERTON
0127

By Fax and email: (012) 401-3235/ kadwaE@saps.gov.za

Dear Colonel Xaba,

KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE (PRIORITY INVESTIGATION: JV PLEIN: 1469/02/1996)

1. We refer to your letter dated 11 August 2014.

2. We wish to advise you that the affidavit of Frank Dutton, the family's private investigator, is under preparation and will be filed in due course.

3. We should state at this stage that Mr. Dutton did not take any statements from any witness or person. There can accordingly be no credibility issues arising.

4. The real issue in relation to credibility will be the inordinate and extended time period that this investigation has taken. The only reason why Mr. Dutton was appointed by the family was because of the many years of inaction of the SAPS and the NPA. This step was entirely reasonable in the circumstances and was taken out of great frustration on the part of my clients.

National Office:
Cape Town:
Durban:
Grahamstown:
Johannesburg:
Constitutional Litigation Unit:

J Love (National Director), K Reinecke (Director: Finance), EJ Broster
S Magardie (Director), A Andrews, S Kahanovitz, WR Kerfoot, C May, M Mudarikwa, HJ Smith
FB Mahomed (Acting Director), A Turpin
S Sephton (Director), C McConnachie
N Fakir (Director), T Mbhense, C van der Linde,
J Brickhill (Head of CLU), M Bishop, G Bizos SC, T Ngcukaitobi, S Nindi, M Wheeldon , W Wicomb

TPM

5. Since we have not heard from further you or the NPA we assume that you have not received any further communications or instructions from the PCLU.

Yours faithfully,

CARIEN VAN DER LINDE
LEGAL RESOURCES CENTRE

Copy to: Adv. S K Abrahams, Acting Head: Priority Crimes Litigation Unit -- Fax: (012) 845 6337;

Adv. C Macadam, Priority Crimes Litigation Unit: -- Fax: (012) 845 6337
Email: cmacadam@npa.gov.za / hzwart@npa.gov.za

TP

SUID-AFRIKAANSE POLISIEDIENS

SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE

Privaatsak/Private Bag x1500 Silverton 0127

Verwysing Reference	JV Plein 1469/02/1996
Navrae Enquiries	Capt TP Masegela
Telefoon Telephone	012 401 3262 082 779 8543
Faksnommer Fax number	012 401 3235

THE COMMANDER
CRIMES AGAINST THE STATE
DIRECTORATE FOR PRIORITY CRIME INVESTIGATION
SILVERTON
0127

2014-09-10

Legal Resources Centre
P O Box 9495
JOHANNESBURG
2000

Attention: Angela

KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE: JV PLEIN 1469/02/1996

This office is still waiting response to our letter dated 2014/08/11.

The National Prosecution Authority could not make decision without the required affidavit.

COLONEL
COMMANDER: CRIMES AGAINST THE STATE
DIRECTORATE FOR PRIORITY CRIME INVESTIGATION
ORGANISED CRIME
N XABA
2014-09-10

Capt Masegela/bricwe35(s)

TP M

TN38

3826

SUID-AFRIKAANSE POLISIEDIENS

SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE

Privaatsak/Private Bag x1500 Silverton 0127

Verwysing Reference	JV Plein 1469/02/1996
Navrae Enquiries	Col N Xaba Capt TP Masegela
Telefoon	012 401 3276 012 401 3262
Telephone	079 889 9582 082 779 8543
Faksnommer Fax number	012 401 3235

THE COMMANDER
CRIMES AGAINST THE STATE
DIRECTORATE FOR PRIORITY CRIME INVESTIGATION
SILVERTON
0127

2014-09-25

Legal Resources Centre
P O Box 9495
JOHANNESBURG
2000

Attention: Angela

KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE: JV PLEIN 1469/02/1996

Please be informed that the docket has been returned to the investigating officer for further instructions to comply with emanating from Frank Dutton's affidavit.

Could Thembi furnish us with particulars of the family members who were studying with the deceased in the University of Swaziland.

Your office will be informed about the progress in this matter.

COLONEL
COMMANDER: CRIMES AGAINST THE STATE
DIRECTORATE FOR PRIORITY CRIME INVESTIGATION
ORGANISED CRIME
N XABA
2014-09-25

Capt Masegela/briewe35(s)

TPM

TN 39

427
39

SUID-AFRIKAANSE POLISIEDIENS

SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE

Privaatsak/Private Bag x1500 Silverton 0127

Verwysing Reference	JV Plein 1469/02/1996
Navrae Enquiries	Capt TP Masegela
Telefoon Telephone	012 401 3262 082 779 8543
Faksnommer Fax number	012 401 3235

THE COMMANDER
CRIMES AGAINST THE STATE
DIRECTORATE FOR PRIORITY CRIME INVESTIGATION
SILVERTON
0127

2014-10-22

Legal Resources Centre
P O Box 9495
JOHANNESBURG
2000

Attention: Angela

KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE: JV PLEIN 1469/02/1996

Firstly I would like to inform you that the investigation is still ongoing and statements of witnesses are obtained but not all of them have been traced.

Can your client, Mrs Thembi Nkadimeng provide us with the particulars of family members who were studying with Nokuthula at Swaziland University.

One of the outstanding statements is of your client, Mrs Thembi Nkadimeng.

Can she please provide us with a affidavit stating the following aspects:

- When did Nokuthula go to Swaziland to complete her studies
- When last did she made contact with Nokuthula prior to her disappearance
- Was she aware of any activities in the ANC and what were those activities
- It would also be relevant to indicate if she know any steps that the ANC took to locate Nokuthula

COLONEL
COMMANDER: CRIMES AGAINST THE STATE
DIRECTORATE FOR PRIORITY CRIME INVESTIGATION
ORGANISED CRIME
N XABA

Capt Masegela/briewe l 1(s)

TPM

TN 40

40428

Carien van der Linde

From: DPCI:CATS Masegela Tlou - Captain <MasegelaT@saps.gov.za>
Sent: 26 February 2015 07:21 AM
To: carien@lrc.org.za
Cc: Angela Mudukuti; Xaba N - Colonel
Subject: KIDNAPING,TORTURE,DISAPPERRANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE

Good Morning.

Please be advised that the above matter is still under investigation and will soon be handed over to the National Prosecuting Authority for their decision.

The investigating officer must still obtain the last few statements from outstanding witnesses .

Kind regards.

Capt TP Masegela
Crimes Against the State
Organised Crime
Directorate for Priority Crime Investigation
Tel 012-4013262
082 779 8543
Fax 012-4013235

HAWKS

TP

TN 41 429

SUID-AFRIKAANSE POLISIEDIENS

SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE

Privaatsak/Private Bag x1500 Silverton 0127

Verwysing Reference	JV Plein 1469/02/1996
Navrae Enquiries	Lt Col MS Mahlangu
Telefoon Telephone	012 401 3264
Faksnommer Fax number	012 401 3235

THE COMMANDER
CRIMES AGAINST THE STATE
DIRECTORATE FOR PRIORITY CRIME INVESTIGATION
SILVERTON
0127

2015/04/09

Legal Resources Centre
P O Box 9495
JOHANNESBURG
2000

Attention: Carien

KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE: JV PLEIN 1469/02/1996

Please be informed that the above mentioned case docket has been forwarded to the National Prosecution Authority for decision.

Your office will be informed about the progress in this matter.

Kind regards.

LIEUTENANT COLONEL
f/COMMANDER: CRIMES AGAINST THE STATE
DIRECTORATE FOR PRIORITY CRIME INVESTIGATION
ORGANISED CRIME
MS MAHLANGU

Capt Masegela/briewel 13(s)

TP 17

TN 42

SECRET

REPORT
AMNESTY TASK TEAM

SECRET

431

Secret

REPORT: AMNESTY TASK TEAM

1. Background

1.1 A Director-General's Forum, under the chairpersonship of the Director-General: Justice and Constitutional Development on 23 February 2004, appointed a Task Team to consider and report on the following:

"1. Consideration of the nature of the 'arrangements that are standard in the normal execution of justice, and which are accommodated in our legislation' that the NPA and intelligence agencies may come up with in assisting persons who divulge information relating to offences committed during the conflicts of the past.

2. Consideration of a process of amnesty on the basis of full disclosure of the offence committed during the conflicts of the past.

3. Bearing the above-mentioned in mind, whether legislative enactments are required.".

1.2 The Task Team comprises the following members:

Deon Rudman (Chairperson):		Department of Justice and Constitutional Development
Yvonne Mabule	:	National Intelligence Agency
Vincent Mogotloane	:	National Intelligence Agency
Gerhard Nel	:	National Prosecuting Authority
Lungisa Dyosi	:	National Prosecuting Authority
Ray Lalla	:	South African Police Service
Joy Rathebe	:	Department of Defence

1.3 The Task Team was requested to submit its report to the Director-General's Forum by close of business on 1 March 2004. The Task Team met for the first time on 26 February 2004 and again on 1 March 2004. Commissioner Ray Lalla could unfortunately not attend the first meeting. He did, however, submit his proposals to the Task Team for its consideration.

2. Terms of reference

2.1 At the outset the Task Team discussed its terms of reference in detail. It came to the conclusion that it had to perform its task within the framework laid down by the President in his statement to the National Houses of Parliament and the Nation on the occasion of the Tabling of the Report of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission on 15 April 2003. The President provided the following guidelines:

(a) There shall be no general amnesty, because it would fly in the face of the TRC process and detract from the principle of accountability which is vital, not only in dealing with the past, but also in the creation of a new ethos within our society.

(b) Yet we also have to deal with the reality that many of the participants in the conflicts of the past did not take part in the TRC process. Among these are—

- individuals who were misled by their leadership to treat the process with disdain;
- others who calculated that they would not be found out, either due to poor TRC investigations or what they believed and still believe is too complex a web of concealment for anyone to unravel;
- others who expected the political leadership of the state institutions to which they belonged to provide the overall context against which they could present their cases, which did not happen.

TP 9

433

Secret

(c) "Government is of the firm conviction that we cannot resolve this matter by setting up yet another amnesty process, which in effect would mean suspending constitutional rights of those who were at the receiving end of gross human right violations.".

(d) "We have therefore left this matter in the hands of the National Directorate of Public Prosecutions, for it to pursue any cases that, as is normal practice, it believes deserve prosecution and can be prosecuted. This work is continuing.".

(e) "However, as part of this process and in the national interest, the National Directorate of Public Prosecutions, working with our intelligence agencies, will leave its doors open for those who are prepared to divulge information at their disposal and to co-operate in unearthing the truth, for them to enter into arrangements that are standard in the normal execution of justice, and which are accommodated in our legislation.".

(f) "This is not a desire for vengeance; nor would it compromise the rights of citizens who may wish to seek justice in our courts.".

(g) "It is critically important that, as a government, we should continue to establish the truth about networks that operated against the people. This is an obligation that attaches to the nation's security today; for, some of these networks still pose a real or latent danger against our democracy. In some instances, caches of arms have been retained which lend themselves to employment in criminal activity.".

(h) "This approach leaves open the possibility for individual citizens to take up any grievance related to human rights violations with the courts.".

(i) "Thirdly, in each instance where any legal arrangements are entered into between the NDPP and particular perpetrators as proposed above, the involvement of the victims will be crucial in determining the appropriate course of action.".

(j) "Relevant Departments are examining the practical modalities of dealing with this matter; and they will also establish whether specific legislation is required in this regard.".

(k) "The National Directorate of Public Prosecutions and relevant Departments will be requested to deal with matters relating to people who were unaccounted for, post mortem records and policy with regard to burials of unidentified persons. We would like to encourage all persons who might have any knowledge of people still unaccounted for to approach the National Directorate of Public Prosecutions, the South African Police Service and other relevant departments.".

2.2 Paragraph 1 of the Task Team's terms of reference relates directly to the abovementioned framework determined by the President. Paragraphs 2 and 3 were added to the Task Team's terms of reference in order to enable it to pursue alternative routes in order to address the concerns expressed by the President should the Task Team deem it necessary.

3. Discussion

3.1 In its deliberations the Task Team also took cognisance of the following factors:

(a) In terms of section 179(1) and (2) of the Constitution the National Prosecuting Authority (NPA) is an independent constitutional institution and the National Director of Public Prosecutions (NDPP) has full discretion on whether a particular prosecution should or should not be instituted. The Task Team's recommendations should therefore be consistent with this constitutional requirement.

TP

(b) Any recommendations relating to the granting or refusing of amnesty should be in line with the TRC process which was constitutionally entrenched as a trade-off between the individual's right to seek justice in a court of law, on the one hand, and the imperatives of reconciliation and reparation, on the other.

3.2 Ad paragraph 1 of terms of reference

3.2.1 In order to give effect to the "arrangements" contemplated in the President's statement as reflected in paragraph 1 of the Task Team's terms of reference, it is recommended that a Departmental Task Team be appointed comprising members of the following Departments or institutions:

- The Department of Justice and Constitutional Development
- The Intelligence Agencies
- The South African National Defence Force
- The South African Police Service
- Correctional Services
- The National Prosecuting Authority
- Office of the President

3.2.2 The functions of the proposed Task Team should be the following:

(a) Before the institution of any criminal proceedings for an offence committed during the conflicts of the past, to consider the advisability of the institution of such criminal proceedings and make recommendations to the National Director of Public Prosecutions in this regard.

(b) To consider applications received from convicted persons alleging that they had been convicted of political offences committed during the conflicts of the past and to make recommendations to—

(i) the President, through the Minister for Justice and Constitutional Development, to pardon the alleged offender in terms of section 84(1)(k) of the Constitution;

(ii) the Commissioner of Correctional Services regarding the possible release of the applicant on parole or the conversion of the sentence to correctional supervision.

(c) To—

- receive information or representations from victims, perpetrators, legal representatives or any other person or institution regarding any specific matter;
- gather intelligence information;
- investigate the matter;
- consult victims.

(d) To consider the following factors when carrying out its mandate:

(i) The general criteria governing a decision to prosecute as determined by the NDPP in the Policy Manual attached hereto as Annexure "A".

(ii) The following specific criteria:

- Whether the alleged offence is associated with a political objective committed in the course of the conflicts of the past.

TP

- Whether a prosecution can be instituted on the strength of adequate evidence.
- Whether the case, geographically and politically, reflects the aims and objectives set out in the Promotion of National Unity and Reconciliation, 1995(Act 34 of 1995), and is not in conflict with the requirements of objectivity in prosecutions specified in the Constitution.
- Whether the offence in question is serious.
- Whether the ill health of or other humanitarian consideration relating to the accused may justify the non-prosecution of the case.
- Whether the prosecution will lead to the traumatisation of victims and conflicts in areas where reconciliation has already taken place.
- The degree of co-operation on the part of the alleged offender.
- The credibility of the alleged offender.
- The alleged offender's sensitivity to the need for restitution.
- The alleged offender's further endeavours to expose possible further clandestine operations during the past years of conflict.
- The degree of remorse shown by the alleged offender and his or her attitude towards reconciliation.
- The degree of indoctrination to which the alleged offender was subjected.
- The extent to which the alleged offender carried out instructions or perceived instructions.
- The disclosure of organisations/individuals, if any, under whose instructions the alleged offender operated.

- The alleged offender's role during the TRC process – co-operation, full disclosure and assisting the process in general (if relevant).
- Renunciation of violence and willingness to abide by the Constitution on the part of the alleged offender.
- Whether the alleged offender fully disclosed the alleged offences.
- The views of the NPA.
- If the accused is in custody, the views of the presiding judge or magistrate.
- Any other criteria for deciding whether a political offence was committed as set out in the TRC Act.
- Any further criteria, which the Task Team might deem necessary.

(e) To consider—

(i) the provisions of section 105A of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1977(Act 51 of 1977), relating to plea and sentence agreements and the directives issued by the NDPP in terms of section 105A(11) of the said Act;

(ii) the provisions of sections 7 of the Criminal Procedure Act relating to the issuing of a nolle prosequi certificate and the right of a private person to institute criminal proceedings in terms of the section 8 of the said Act;

(iii) the provisions of section 18 of the Criminal Procedure Act relating to the lapsing of the right to institute a prosecution for any offence after the expiration of a period of 20 years from the time when the offence was committed, other than the offences of murder; treason committed when the Republic is in a state of war; robbery, if aggravating circumstances were present; kidnapping; child-stealing; rape; or the crime of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes, as contemplated in section 4 of the Implementation of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court Act, 2002;

TP

(iv) the possibility of diversion in the case of juvenile offenders;

(v) possible arrangements settling the matter out of court;

(vi) the provisions of section 204(2) of the Criminal Procedure Act relating to the discharge of the alleged offender from prosecution for the alleged offence if such offender testified as a state witness and answered all questions frankly and honestly.

3.2.3 If the above proposals are acceptable, it is recommended that the President announces the proposed process and invites full participation by those who may benefit from the process.

3.2.4 The Task Team realises that the proposed process will have the following shortcomings/concerns:

(a) A possible negation of the constitutional rights of victims, the public at large and alleged offenders.

(b) The possibility of the institution of private prosecutions.

(c) The absence of any guarantee that alleged offenders will not be prosecuted. This might mean that they will be reluctant to approach the Task Team and make full disclosure. The concerns relating to persons who have disappeared, the arms caches that have not yet been discovered and the Kwazulu-Natal problem will not be solved.

440 446

(d) Public perception regarding the participation in a further amnesty process by the security services as the public may regard them as perpetrators in the conflicts of the past.

3.3 Ad paragraph 2 of terms of reference

3.3.1 The Task Team is of the view that the only way to address the above concerns adequately would be to provide for a further amnesty process similar to that of the TRC process. This possibility elicited much debate within the Task Team. On the one hand, there were those who rejected this possibility out of hand. They argued that such a process would undermine and discredit the TRC process, further undermine the reconciliation process and not necessarily achieve the desired objectives. They argued that there is no reason why offenders who previously refused to participate in the TRC process will now all of a sudden decide otherwise. Some members of the Task Team, however, placed emphasis on the need to create a further effective opportunity for full disclosure in order to address the concerns referred to in paragraph 3.2.4(c) above. They argued that a substantial number of those individuals who were in the past misled by their leadership and others who expected their political leadership to provide the overall context against which they could present their cases, may make use of a further amnesty process.

3.3.2 In the light of the views expressed by the President regarding a further amnesty process, the Task Team decided not to make a recommendation in this regard and to leave this decision in the hands of Government. Should Government, however, decide to proceed with such a further process, a draft Indemnity Bill is attached as Annexure "B" for consideration.

3.4 Ad paragraph 3 of terms of reference

TP 87

03/12 2007 16:13 FAX

The recommendations under paragraph 1 of the terms of reference do not require any legislation. Should Government, however, decide on a further amnesty process as discussed in paragraph 3.3, legislation will be required since the mechanisms and procedures of the TRC Act have run their course and can no longer be applied. If it is decided to follow the latter route, an amendment of the Constitution is also proposed in order to enable such legislation being adopted and to pass muster in the Constitutional Court.

ANNEXURE "A"

GENERAL CRITERIA GOVERNING A DECISION TO PROSECUTE

1. General

(a) The process of establishing whether or not to prosecute usually starts when the investigating officer presents a docket to the prosecutor. The case needs to be studied carefully to make sure that it is properly investigated. In this regard the prosecutor may—

- request the police to investigate the case further;
- decide to institute a prosecution;
- decline to prosecute and to opt for pre-trial diversion or other non-criminal resolution; or
- decline to prosecute without taking any other action.

(b) The decision whether or not to prosecute must be taken with care, because it may have profound consequences for victims, witnesses, accused and their families. A wrong decision may also undermine the community's confidence in the prosecution system.

(c) Resources should not be wasted pursuing inappropriate cases, but must be used to act vigorously in those cases worthy of prosecution.

(d) In deciding whether or not to institute criminal proceedings against an accused person, prosecutors should assess whether there is sufficient and admissible evidence to provide a reasonable prospect of a successful prosecution. There must indeed be a reasonable prospect of a conviction, otherwise the prosecution should not be commenced or continued. This assessment may be difficult, because it is never certain whether or not a prosecution will succeed. In borderline cases, prosecutors should probe deeper than the surface of written statements. Where the prospects of success are difficult to assess, prosecutors should consult with prospective witnesses in order to evaluate their reliability. The version or the defence of an accused must also be considered, before a decision is made. This test of a reasonable prospect must be applied objectively after careful deliberation, to avoid an unjustified prosecution. However, prosecutors should not make unfounded assumptions about the potential credibility of witnesses.

(e) The review of a case is a continuing process. Prosecutors should take into account changing circumstances and fresh facts, which may come to light after an initial decision to prosecute has been made. This may occur after having heard and considered the version of the accused person and representations made on his or her behalf. Prosecutors may therefore withdraw charges before the accused has pleaded in spite of an initial decision to institute a prosecution.

TP

2. Factors to be considered when evaluating evidence

When evaluating the evidence prosecutors should take into account all relevant factors, including—

(a) How strong is the case for the State?

- Is the evidence strong enough to prove all the elements of an offence?
- Is the evidential material sufficient to meet other issues in dispute?

(b) Will the evidence be admissible?

Will the evidence be excluded because of the way in which it was acquired or because it is irrelevant or because of some other reason?

(c) Will the state witnesses be credible?

- What sort of impression is the witness likely to make?
- Are there any matters that might properly be put by the defence to attack the credibility of the witness?
- If there are contradictions in the accounts of witnesses, do they go beyond the ordinary and expected, thus materially weakening the prosecution case?

(d) Will the evidence be reliable?

If, for example, the identity of the alleged offender is likely to be an issue, will the evidence of those who purport to identify him or her be regarded as honest and reliable?

(e) Is the evidence available?

Are the necessary witnesses available, competent, willing and, if necessary, compellable to testify, including those who are out of the country?

(f) How strong is the case for the defence?

Is the probable defence of the accused likely to lead to his or her acquittal in the light of the facts of the case?

3. Prosecution in the public interest

Once a prosecutor is satisfied that there is sufficient evidence to provide a reasonable prospect of a conviction, a prosecution should normally follow, unless public interest demands otherwise. There is no rule in law, which states that all the provable cases brought to the attention of the NPA must be prosecuted. On the contrary, any such rule would be too harsh and impose an impossible burden on the prosecutor and on a society interested in the fair administration of justice. When considering whether or not it will be in the public interest to prosecute, prosecutors should consider all relevant factors, including:

(a) The nature and seriousness of the offence:

- The seriousness of the offence, taking into account the effect of the crime on the victim, the manner in which it was committed, the motivation for the act and the relationship between the accused and the victim.
- The nature of the offence, its prevalence and recurrence, and its effect on public order and morale.
- The economic impact of the offence on the community, its threat to people or damage to public property, and its effect on the peace of mind and sense of security of the public.
- The likely outcome in the event of a conviction, having regard to sentencing options available to the court.

(b) The interests of the victim and the broader community

- The attitude of the victim of the offence towards a prosecution and the potential effects of discontinuing it. Care should be taken when considering this factor, since public interest may demand that certain crimes should be prosecuted - regardless of a complainant's wish not to proceed.
- The need for individual and general deterrence, and the necessity of maintaining public confidence in the criminal justice system.
- Prosecution priorities as determined from time to time, the likely length and expense of a trial and whether or not a prosecution would be deemed counter-productive.

TP 97

(c) The circumstances of the offender

- The previous convictions of the accused, his or her criminal history, background, culpability and personal circumstances, as well as other mitigating or aggravating factors.
- Whether the accused has admitted guilt, shown repentance, made restitution or expressed a willingness to co-operate with the authorities in the investigation or prosecution of others. (In this regard the degree of culpability of the accused and the extent to which reliable evidence from the said accused is considered necessary to secure a conviction against others, will be crucial).
- Whether the objectives of criminal justice would be better served by implementing non-criminal alternatives to prosecution, particularly in the case of juvenile offenders and less serious matters.
- Whether there has been an unreasonably long delay between the date when the crime was committed, the date on which the prosecution was instituted and the trial date, taking into account the complexity of the offence and the role of the accused in the delay.

The above factors and the weight to be attached to them will depend upon the particular circumstances of each case. It is important that the prosecution process is seen to be transparent and that justice is seen to be done.

TN 43

EXTRACTS FROM THE AFFIDAVIT OF ADVOCATE VUSUMZI PATRICK PIKOLI BEFORE THE GINWALA COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

TP 11

shortly thereafter. The first time this alleged complaint was brought to my attention was in the original submission.

259. I am also surprised that the Minister has gone on oath to state that the NPA reflected in its annual report for 2006/2007 that a request was made to National Treasury for the separate listing of the NPA. It is clear from annexure "VP51" hereto that no such request for the listing of the NPA was made to National Treasury and I also attach as annexure "VP52", a copy of the relevant extract from the NPA's annual report for 2006/7 from which it is clear that there is no reference to the listing of the NPA.

POST TRC LITIGATION

260. In this section I will deal with the allegations set out in paragraphs 114 to 124 of the Government's original submission as amplified by the Minister in paragraph 62 of her affidavit and in the affidavit of the DG (paragraphs 31 to 35) and the affidavit of Assistant Commissioner Jacobs. I have not considered there to be an "area of difference" between the Minister and me in regard to the handling of what is referred to as the post –TRC litigation. As will appear from what is stated below, the Minister was kept informed of relevant developments in regard to the process as it evolved and she provided her support as required from time to time. The only request for guidance not responded to was that flowing from the dispute relating to the implementation of the prosecution policy guidelines which arose between me and Mr Selebi and the Directors General of Justice and Constitutional Development and NIA. That request for guidance addressed to the Minister in February 2007 remained unanswered at the time of my suspension. I did not in any way regard the issues in respect of which guidance has been sought as any difference between the Minister and myself as she had not been involved in the matter at all.

TPN

261. I do not intend to restate my response to the Government's underlying contention that the effect of Section 179(6) of the Constitution is that the NDPP may not act without the concurrence of the Minister who:

> "Exercises the final responsibility over the prosecuting authority" (para 117 of the Government submission)

That proposition is dealt with fully earlier in this affidavit.

TP

262. A history of the problems encountered by the NPA in applying the "PROSECUTING POLICY AND DIRECTIVES RELATING TO THE PROSECUTION OF OFFENCES EMANATING FROM CONFLICTS OF THE PAST AND WHICH WERE COMMITTED ON OR BEFORE 11 MAY 1994" ("the Prosecution Policy") is set out in my memorandum to the Minister dated 15 February 2007 (annexure TRC1). This sets out my detailed analysis of the background which gave rise to the notion of inter-departmental collaboration in the form ultimately expressed in paragraph B6 of the Prosecution Policy – i.e. that the PCLU should be assisted in the execution of its duties (defined in B4 as overseeing investigations and instituting prosecutions) by a senior designated official from the following State departments or other components of the NPA:

262.1. The National Intelligence Agency;

262.2. The Detective Division of the South African Police Service;

262.3. The Department of Justice and Constitutional Development; and 262.4. The Directorate of Special Operations.

TP

263. It is not my intention to repeat the content of my memorandum in this affidavit and I ask that it be regarded as incorporated herein. I will expand on some aspects of the matter in the following paragraphs.

264. The foundation for the development of the Prosecution Policy is the statement by President Mbeki in April 2003 following receipt of the final TRC report. This is canvassed in paragraph 3 of TRC1. The President required that the prosecution of persons who did not take part in the TRC process was to be left in the hands of the NPA. As part of the "normal legal processes" the NPA, working with the National Intelligence Agency, was to be accessible to persons who were prepared to unearth the truth and who wished to enter into agreements that are standard in the normal execution of Justice and the prosecuting mandate, and are accommodated in existing legislation.

265. Prior to the adoption of the Prosecution Policy and in my then capacity as DG, I had chaired a Director-General's Forum which appointed a Task Team to report on a mechanism to give effect to the President's objectives. The matter is dealt with in paragraph 2 of TRC1. It is important to note that the recommendation of the establishment of an interdepartmental Task Team and of a two stage process including the requirement of a recommendation from such Task Team before the NDPP instituted any criminal proceedings in relevant matters was rejected. This was because of the view that such functions would be unconstitutional and against the concept of prosecutorial independence enshrined in Section 179 of the Constitution.

TP

266. The rejection of this proposal led to the determination of the Prosecution Policy in agreement with the Minister and after consultation with the Directors of Public Prosecutions as required by the NPA Act. The policy was tabled in Parliament and became effective on 1 December 2005.

267. In January 2006 I wrote letters to Mr Selebi and the DGs of Justice and the NIA and to the DSO requesting them to nominate a senior official to assist the PCLU in accordance with the Prosecution Policy guidelines.

268. Almost from inception the process was bedevilled by the failure of SAPS to provide the necessary support to enable the PCLU to conduct its investigations. These difficulties are dealt with in paragraph 4 of TRC1.

TP

269. I was advised by Mr Selebi that Advocate Ackermann should not participate in the process. The distrust between SAPS and Advocate Ackermann stemmed from allegations and counter-allegations in regard to the latter's supposed intention to launch criminal proceedings against the leadership of the ANC. These contentions had surfaced from time to time notwithstanding the issue of a press release by the NPA in 2004 confirming that a decision had been taken that no such prosecution would take place (annexure TRC2).

270. I informed Mr Selebi that Advocate Ackermann was the head of the PCLU by Presidential proclamation and that it was appointed not for SAPS to determine who should discharge the mandate given to the PCLU under the Guideline.

271. Faced with this lack of co-operation I sought the assistance of the Presidency in securing the collaboration necessary to apply the Prosecution Policy Guidelines.

272. In mid 2006 Reverend Chikane organised a meeting at the Presidency which was attended by himself, the DGs of Justice and NIA, Mr Selebi, the Secretary of the Defence Secretariat, Mr Jafta from the Presidency and I. This first meeting dealt in general terms with the question of developing a spirit of co-operation amongst the agencies as contemplated in the guideline process. Reverend Chikane supported the notion that there should be collaboration in assisting the NPA to fulfil its functions. At this meeting there was again a complaint by Mr Selebi in regard to Advocate Ackermann's involvement in the process. My recollection is that there was no discussion of the formation of a working committee at this meeting.

273. Some time later a meeting was convened at the home of Minister Skweyiya, the Minister of Social Development. The meeting was attended by the Ministers of Safety and Security and Defence, Minister Thoko Didiza (Acting Minister of Justice and Constitutional Development representing Minister Mabandla who was indisposed) and Mr Jafta. The meeting was called by Acting Minister Didiza and I was told that it related to the prosecution in the Chikane matter. It was originally suggested that Advocate Ackermann accompany me to the meeting but I elected to go on my own in order to establish what the concerns were.

274. It transpired at the meeting that:

TP

274.1. The Minister of Safety and Security was concerned about the decision to proceed with the prosecution and with Advocate Ackermann's involvement in the process and the issue of whether it was Advocate Ackermann or me who was behind the decision to prosecute.

274.2. The Minister of Social Development was concerned about the impact of the decision to prosecute on the ranks of ANC cadres who were worried that a decision to prosecute in the Chikane matter would then give rise to a call for prosecution of the ANC cadres themselves arising out of their activities pre-1994.

274.3. The Minister of Defence had concerns about where the decision to prosecute rested – did it rest with me or did it rest with Advocate Ackermann.

275. I explained to the Ministers that the decision to proceed with the prosecution rested with me as did all other decisions in regard to post-TRC prosecutions being considered by the PCLU. I assured them that no prosecution would be undertaken without my specific direction and reiterated my concern about the delay in the process particularly in view of the requirement that I report to parliament on these matters. My recollection is that there was no discussion about the formation of a working group or Task Team at this meeting. The Minister of Defence appeared satisfied with my explanation that I would exercise the decision as to whether there was a prosecution or not. The Minister of Safety and Security appeared to continue to be worried about the involvement of Advocate Ackermann. I have no recollection of a particular position adopted by the Acting Minister of Justice.

TP

276. It was following this meeting that a meeting took place at the office of the Presidency which is dealt with in paragraph 4.2 of my memo TRC1. My understanding and recollection of the meeting was that the role of the working group was that set out in paragraph 4.3 of TRC1 – i.e. the working committee or Task Team would not make recommendations on a decision as to whether to prosecute or not but would be responsible for ensuring that the NPA obtained the necessary information or such inputs as were appropriate from the various departments so as to assist and enable me to reach a well considered decision whether to institute proceedings or not. The Task Team would deal with all relevant matters identified by the PCLU and SAPS.

TP

277. I have no recollection whatsoever of any suggestion at this meeting of the establishment of a separate committee of DG's which would receive reports from the Task Team. Had there been any suggestion that the Task Team members would report back to the DG's who would in turn make recommendations to me in regard to the question of whether to prosecute or not, I would have objected to this as it would have amounted to falling back to the position originally suggested before the guidelines were established and which had been rejected by all parties as unconstitutional.

278. At this meeting I proposed that Dr Ramaite should chair the Task Team. I suggested this in order to deal with the complaints in regard to Advocate Ackermann's position and as a concession to get the Task Team working. The proposal was accepted by those at the meeting. Dr Ramaite is the Deputy National Director of Prosecutions to whom the PCLU reports.

279. Subsequent to this meeting there was a further meeting of Ministers in the security cluster at the office of the Minister of Safety and Security. This was attended by the Minister for Safety and Security, the Minister of Social Development, Acting Minister Didiza, Mr Selebi, various DGs and Mr Jafta. The proposal for the establishment of a working group was put to the Ministers. It was agreed that the proposed working committee would proceed. Once again I have no recollection of any suggestion of a separate committee of Directors General or that the Task Team would be reporting to such a committee.

TP

280. After this meeting letters were again written to the various Directors General, Mr Selebi and the DSO in early October 2006 inviting them to nominate a senior official to perform the functions set out in paragraph B6 of the guidelines. (An example of such letter appears as annexure A to the affidavit of Assistant Commissioner Jacobs). The letters were in the same format as those sent out in January 2006 at the time of my first attempt to secure assistance. The letters were drafted for me and referred to the appointment of Dr Ramaite to "head and supervise the prosecution processes of all TRC-related matters".

281. The Task Team met for the first team on 12 October 2006. The minutes of the meetings of what became referred to as the "Task Team on TRC cases" are annexed to the affidavit of Commissioner Jacobs save for the minutes of its meeting on 8 August 2007, a copy of which is annexure TRC3 hereto. As is commented on by various parties, the minutes of these meetings are not a full record of all of the issues canvassed. As the minutes reflect I attended the opening session of the first meeting together with Ms Pillay, the Directors General of the NIA and Justice and Mr Jafta from the Presidency. The details of my address to the Task Team are set out in paragraph 4.3 of TRC1. I recollect dealing expressly with a question by a representative of the NIA who raised the issue of whether it was the function of the team to make recommendations on a decision whether to prosecute or not. I indicated clearly that the decision as to whether to launch a prosecution rested with me and not with the committee.

TP 91

282. I have noted the terms of the final sentence of paragraph 1 of the minutes of this meeting stipulating that:

> "The role of the committee will be to make recommendations to the NDPP on each case".

It was indeed the responsibility of the Task Team to assist in the process of obtaining the requisite information or assistance from the various departments so as to enable me to reach a decision as to whether to prosecute or not. There was, however, definitely not any suggestion that a recommendation by the Task Team on whether to prosecute was a pre-requisite for any decision that I might take. To the extent that the terminology referring to the making of recommendations by the Task Team in this and other TRC related documentation is interpreted to support that contention this is both regrettable and wrong.

TP M

283. I did not participate further in the activities of the Task Team which was conducted under the chairmanship of Dr Ramaite. I received reports from time to time on their activities. It was certainly my understanding that the committee was functioning and securing the requisite co-operation from the other agencies which had previously been missing. I refer in this regard to the affidavit of Dr Ramaite.

284. In December 2006 Dr Ramaite reported to me in regard to the contention raised by Mr Selebi through Commissioner Jacobs that it was the function of the Task Team that it should make a final recommendation to a body identified as the "Committee of Directors General" which would in turn make recommendations to me. The developments in this regard are dealt with in paragraphs 4.4.1 to 4.6 of TRC1. In essence the proposal made by Mr Selebi and subsequently supported by the Directors General of Justice and NIA amounted to a reversion to a two stage process in which my decision on any prosecution would be dependent upon a prior recommendation by an intervening committee of directors general which would be subject to the same constitutional challenge as had led to the rejection of this proposal in 2004.

TP M

285. It became clear to me that there was a material misunderstanding in regard to the role of the Task Team and that unless this was resolved, I would not be able to carry out my functions within the contemplation of the relevant legislation and as envisaged by the Government.

286. In the circumstances I informed Mr Selebi and the Directors General that there was this misunderstanding and I wrote my very detailed letter to the Minister on 15 February and requested her guidance. As at the date of my suspension I had received no response from the Minister. Pending such response the functioning of the Task Team was compromised by the uncertainty as to its mandate although it did meet again on 8 August as appears from the minutes being TRC3 hereto.

TP M

Reverend Chikane matter

287. The decision to prosecute those involved in the poisoning of Reverend Chikane became the central issue around which the dispute in regard to the functioning of the Task Team revolved. After I made the final decision to proceed with the prosecution on 25 January 2007 I prepared a report for the Minister which is dated 7 February but which was signed by me on 15 February 2007. A copy is annexure TRC4. I do not intend to repeat the content set out in that memorandum in this affidavit and I ask that it be regarded as incorporated herein. Once again I will expand on some aspects of the matter.

288. As appears from the history set out in paragraph 2 of TRC4, the decision to prosecute the three Security Branch members involved in the poisoning of Reverend Chikane (Otto, Smith and van Staden) was taken in November 2004, before my appointment as NDPP. Dr Ramaite SC, in his capacity as Acting National Director, however instructed that the matter hold over pending the development of the Prosecution Policy and the guidelines.

TPM

289. When the Prosecution Policy became effective in December 2005 I reviewed the available evidence implicating the three suspects which was, in my opinion, clearly sufficient to justify a prosecution. I therefore gave the initial instruction to proceed with the prosecution in February 2006. In response to this notification the three suspects made representations to me in terms of the Guidelines in support of their contention that they should not be subject to prosecution. The position was reviewed by a team within the NPA under the leadership of Advocate Pretorius who reported to me that the representation did not comply with the requirements set out in the guidelines. After reviewing the report and the underlying documentation I wrote to the legal representative of the suspects in July 2006 informing him of my intention not to accede to the representations and to pursue the prosecution.

290. In response I received further representations contending that the suspects had received indemnity in respect of the threatened prosecution in terms of the original Indemnity Act of 1990. I caused an independent opinion to be obtained from senior counsel concerning the validity of this claim of indemnity. The opinion was received in November 2006.

TPN

291. At its meeting on 25 October the Task Team had received an audit report on all cases in the possession of the PCLU. A copy of that report was forwarded to me by Dr Ramaite and this confirmed that in the prosecution of Otto and others my direction to Advocate Ackermann SC to proceed with the prosecution had been put on hold in early October pending receipt of an opinion from counsel.

292. The Chikane matter was discussed within the Task Team for the first time at its meeting on 6 November where Mr J Lekalakala of SAPS for the first time raised the contention that the recommendations of the Task Team are necessary because:

> "The National Commissioner is of the view that Rev Chikane is not interested in prosecution of the matter. He suggested that contact has to be made with Rev Chikane to ascertain his attitude."

The minutes record that:

> "According to Adv Ackermann the complainant (Rev) indicated that he leaves the matter in the hands of the NPA. It was then decided that the latter's attitude be ascertained and the matter was therefore closed pending a feedback on his attitude."

TP

293. In early December I was informed of the renewed contention by Mr Selebi that Reverend Chikane had not been consulted.

294. Reverend Chikane had in fact been extensively consulted in relation to the proposed prosecution. I personally held a number of discussions with him during the course of the many meetings we held over an extended period. These were one on one meetings of which no particular record was kept. I did, however, discuss the decision to prosecute with him on several occasions. I was intimately involved in the establishment of the guidelines and was aware of the requirement that there should be a consultation with the victim before any prosecution proceeded.

295. Even before the guidelines had been published, I was aware of Reverend Chikane's general attitude towards the issue of a prosecution – namely that whilst he might have his own personal decisions in regard to whether he forgave the perpetrators or not, insofar as the application of the laws of the land was concerned, the matter must take its ordinary course. If a decision was made by the prosecuting authorities he would accept that.

296. After the guidelines were published I had various meetings with Reverend Chikane. These were mostly at his office at the Presidency save for a meeting held in my office in December 2006 which had been called to discuss some draft cabinet memos in regard to the implementation of the findings of the Khampepe Commission. Because the matter had been raised by Mr Selebi, I again discussed the prosecution with Reverend Chikane and updated him on the current status of the prosecution of Messrs Otto, Smith and van Staden. His attitude to me remained unchanged.

297. In December and after the developments in regard to this matter within the Task Team were reported to me I instructed Advocate Ackermann to once again visit Rev Chikane to confirm his position. I knew that Ackermann had discussed the matter with him as far back as 2004.

298. Towards the end of January 2007 Advocate Ackermann and Advocate Mhaga reported to me that they had met with Reverend Chikane on 22 January and that he had reaffirmed his consistent attitude – namely that he was not against a prosecution and that the matter should take its ordinary course. In the light of this confirmation I wrote to the legal representatives of Messrs Otto, Smith and van Staden on 25 January 2007 and informed them that the matter would now proceed and I instructed the PCLU to act accordingly.

TP M

299. As appears from TRC4 the decision at that time was to proceed against the three individuals against whom a prosecutable case had been established. As my report TRC4 indicates in paragraph 3 thereof, the former Minister of Police, Adriaan Vlok and the former head of SAPS, General van der Merwe, had both made representations to me as contemplated in the guidelines. In essence, they both admitted authorising the murder of Reverend Chikane and required of me not to prosecute them in the light of this disclosure. They would not make full disclosure in response to requests for information and I declined to accede to their request that they be given immunity from prosecution.

300. During the course of the next few months the legal representative of Messrs Otto, Smith and van Staden, who was also the representative of Messrs Vlok and van der Merwe, held detailed negotiations with Advocate Ackermann and members of the PCLU in regard to a plea bargain and sentencing agreement. These prosecution had been set down for hearing on 17 August 2007 and that all accused had indicated their intention to plead guilty to a charge of attempting to kill Reverend Chikane by means of poisoning. It informed her of the fact that plea and sentencing agreements had been entered into. I signed this letter on 10 July 2007 and almost immediately thereafter I went off on compassionate leave because of the illness and the subsequent death of my mother. In my absence, on 17 July 2007, Dr Ramaite and Advocate Ackermann were summonsed to a meeting with the Minister and reported to her as described in Dr Ramaite's affidavit. At the time of that meeting the Minister did not appear to have read my letter dated 6 July.

TPN

303. Because of the allegations relating to the attitude of Reverend Chikane it is perhaps illustrative to attach an article written by him and published in the City Press on 18 August 2007 immediately following the court hearing (annexure TRC5). He records, inter alia,:

> "Yet I believe the Vlok trial is of national importance for reasons other than my personal interests.

TPM

The outcome of the court process gives practical expression to the spirit of the 2005 NPA guidelines that regulate the handling of outstanding TRC–related matters. ... also significant is the outcome of the court in re-affirming the importance of dealing with TRC-related matters within the confines of the law.

Hopefully, the outcome of the court will serve to renew our collective trust in the integrity of our legal system, particularly in its proven capacity to handle sensitive and complicated political matters in an unbiased manner.

The evidence that NPA guidelines can facilitate a win-win outcome is there for all to see. One can only hope that the wisdom of working within the law is recognised widely.

The uniqueness of our jurisprudence – however imperfect – to deal with conflicts of the past is a marvel for most of the world. I suspect the manner in which we have handled the case related to Vlok and others will have important lessons inside and outside our country.

This, I hope, will further serve correctly to project ours as a country of people who have demonstrated that it is possible to make the law advance national unity and reconciliation."

TP

The article stressed that Chikane is Director General in the Presidency and Secretary of the Cabinet but that he was writing in his personal capacity.

304. In summary the successful prosecution of the parties involved in the poisoning of Reverend Chikane:

304.1. Was initiated prior to my appointment as NDPP and thereafter pursued on my instructions and in complete conformity with the Prosecution Policy and guidelines including the receiving of representations from the accused person.

304.2. The requirement of the consultation with the victim was fully discharged over an extended period and, in particular, in personal discussions which I had with Reverend Chikane and in discussions with members of the PCLU conducted in accordance with my express instruction.

304.3. I enclose as TRC6 a media statement released by me following the conclusion of the proceedings and I adhere to the sentiments expressed in that.

TP

KHAMPEPE COMMISSION

305. Government alleges that during the hearings of the Khampepe Commission of Enquiry ("Khampepe Commission") I made "a false submission that the Ministerial Coordinating Committee ("MCC") established in terms of Section 31 of the NPA Act never met".

306. This complaint is not supported by affidavit and it is not clear who is alleging that I made a false submission to the Khampepe Commission. I do not recall that I made any such submission.

307. Pursuant to a letter written to Government's attorney, my attorneys were provided with copies of the transcripts of the evidence given at the Khampepe Commission. My attorneys have perused the transcripts and have been unable to find a reference to me saying that the MCC never met.

308. Consequently my attorneys requested, in writing (a copy of which is attached hereto as annexure "VP53"), the Minister to attach the relevant extracts from the transcripts that Government relies upon

TP

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

REGISTRAR OF THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA
PRIVATE BAG/PRIVAAT SAK X67
PRETORIA 0001
2015 -05- 20
T. MALELE
REGISTRAR'S CLERK
GRIFFIER VAN DIE HOË HOF VAN
SUID AFRIKA GAUTENG AFDELING, PRETORIA

Case Number:

In the matter between:

THEMBISILE PHUMELELE NKADIMENG	Applicant
And
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	First Respondent
THE NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE	Second Respondent
THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CORRECTIONAL SERVICES	Third Respondent
THE NATIONAL MINISTER OF POLICE	Fourth Respondent
WILLEM HELM COETZEE	Fifth Respondent
ANTON PRETORIUS	Sixth Respondent
FREDERICK BARNARD MONG	Seventh Respondent
MSEBENZI TIMOTHY RADEBE	Eighth Respondent
WILLEM SCHOON	Ninth Respondent

IN CAMERA FOUNDING AFFIDAVIT

TP

I, the undersigned

THEMBISILE PHUMELELE NKADIMENG

state under oath as follows:

INTRODUCTION

1. I am the applicant herein. In my founding affidavit I attach certain correspondence which should remain confidential at this stage. These include annexes TN13 to TN14 which are letters from the investigating officer to various officials. Under the heading "Attempts to seek justice" I set out a timeline which provided an overview of the steps taken so far, including some of the interactions between myself, my representatives and the authorities.

2. Since several of the documents referred to in the timeline include correspondence between my attorneys and the NPA and SAPS, as well as extracts from the police docket, I have not attached these annexes to my open court affidavit. They are attached to this affidavit. The investigative timeline is reproduced below. The documents which are attached to this affidavit are numbered TN21.1 to TN21.23. They appear in the rows in the table below shaded grey.

3. This affidavit will only be served on the first respondent as it is already in possession of the documents attached to this affidavit. The registrar will be requested to hold this affidavit and its annexes as part of an in camera record, which is not to be released to the public, unless authorised by this Honourable Court.

Investigative Timeline

Date	Action	Reference
11 September 1983	Nokuthula Simelane is kidnapped by member of the Security Branch of the South African Police.	TRC Amnesty Committee Finding AC/2001/185 Abduction and Torture of Nokuthula Simelane. (Annex TN10)

TP

11 Sept. to about mid-October 1983	Nokuthula Simelane is secretly kept captive in a store room on a farm at Northam where she is persistently tortured by members of the Security Branch.	TRC Amnesty Committee Finding AC/2001/185 Abduction and Torture of Nokuthula Simelane.
About mid- October 1983	Nokuthula Simelane is secretly taken from the farm at Northam by members of the Security Branch and has not been seen again.	TRC Amnesty Committee Finding AC/2001/185 Abduction and Torture of Nokuthula Simelane.
27 January 1996	Sowetan newspaper published a story about Nokuthula's disappearance and made an appeal for information.	Sowetan newspaper dated 27 January 1996 (Annex TN11)
January/ February 1996	Former Security Branch policeman Sergeant M M Veyi provided evidence to the TRC Amnesty Committee about the abduction, torture and disappearance of Ms. Simelane	1. TRC Amnesty Hearing AC/2001/185 – 2. Evidence of former Sergeant Veyi. (Annex TN22) 3. Sowetan news report.
February 1996	In consequence to the disclosures by former Sergeant Veyi CAS1469/02/1996 Murder case docket was opened and investigated by "Priority Crimes Unit" based at John Vorster Square (now Johannesburg Central Police Station). The case was assigned to Captain Leask. Initial investigation made progress but before its conclusion the case was transferred to the D'Oliviera Team towards the end of 1996. Little or no further investigation is undertaken by the D'Oliviera Team until matter is taken over by the TRC.	1. Extracts from docket. (Annex TN21.1) 2. Letter from PCLU, 5 December 2013 (Para 5.1.6) (Annex TN21.2)
1996 - 1997	Police (D'Oliviera Team) investigation put on hold pending the TRC process.	Letter from Dr. Ramaite Acting NDPP dated 31 January 2013, paragraph 3. (Annex TN21.3)
3 June 1997	Commencement of Amnesty Hearing of TRC into the disappearance of Nokuthula Simelane. Following persons make applications for amnesty for abduction, torture and other related crimes. None of the applicants applied for amnesty in	TRC Amnesty Hearing AC/2001/185

TP

	respect of the murder of Ms Simelane. W H Coetzee (TRC ref. AM4122/96) A Pretorius (TRC ref. AM4389/96) J F Williams (TRC ref. AM4375/96) J E Ross (TRC ref. AM4377/96) F B Mong (TRC ref. AM4154/96) N L Mkhonza (TRC ref. AM5420/97) M M Veyi (TRC ref. AM5421/97) M L Selamolela (TRC ref. AM5419/97)
1998	NDPP Ngcuka establishes TRC component within NPA Head Office to attend to prosecution matters arising from TRC.	Letter from PCLU, 5 December 2013. Para 5.1.6 (Annex TN21.2)
February 1999	Meeting between TRC and NPA to discuss a process of establishing mechanisms for identifying potential cases.	"Report for the Office of the National Director of Public Prosecutions dated 7 March 1999. (Annex TN23)
11 March 1999	TRC commences referrals for potential prosecution to NPA – alerting them to sources of evidence to crimes. Correspondence does not specify any particular cases.	"Report for the Office of the National Director of Public Prosecutions dated 7 March 1999. (Annex TN23)
30 June 2000	Final session of Amnesty Hearing of TRC into the disappearance of Nokuthula Simelane	TRC Amnesty Hearing AC/2001/185
23 May 2001	TRC Decision issued in this Simelane matter. All applicants are granted amnesty for the abduction of Ms Simelane; applicants W.H Coetzee, A Pretorius and F B Mong are refused amnesty for torture; applicants M M Veyi and M L Selamolela are granted amnesty for the torture of Ms Simelane.	TRC Amnesty Hearing Decision AC/2001/185 (Annex TN10)
29 August 2001	The TRC Amnesty Committee decision in the Simelane matter is gazetted.	Proc 31. Justice 29/08/2001
12 March 2003	Volumes 6 and 7 of the TRC Report are published.	TRC Report

TP

12 March 2003	Specific mention is made in the TRC Report on Nokuthula Simelane's abduction, torture and disappearance. Volume 2, Chapter 3 para 278 - 280; 287 – 292 Volume 6, Chapter 1 para 194 – 206 Volume 6, Chapter 2 para 50 – 71 Volume 7, Victims list	TRC report . (Extracts annexed as TN24 - 27)
23 March 2003	PCLU is created by Presidential Proclamation. Officials assume duty July/ August.	1. Presidential Proclamation (Annex TN28) 2. Letter from PCLU, 5 December 2013. (Annex TN21.2)
2003	The South African President directed the NDPP to give attention to the cases of 500 persons who had been reported missing by the TRC. NPA established a Task Team to evaluate the TRC report and to identify cases for investigation. 150 cases were identified for immediate investigation.	About PCLU (Annex TN29)
2003	NPA TRC Unit is converted into Priority Crimes Litigation Unit (PCLU)	Letter from PCLU, 5 December 2013. (Annex TN21.2)
2003	The NDPP give attention to the cases of some 500 persons who had been reported missing by the TRC. A Task Team evaluates the TRC Report to identify cases for investigation. Approximately 150 cases were identified for immediate investigation. The disappearance of Nokuthula Simelane is one of these cases.	About PCLU (Annex TN29)
2003	The PCLU requests all outstanding cases to be referred to it.	Letter from PCLU, 5 December 2013 (Annex TN21.2)
2003	NPA and PCLU place TRC cases "on hold" awaiting formation of policy on the TRC cases.	Letter from Dr. Ramaite Acting NDPP dated 31 January 2013, paragraph 6. ((Annex TN21.3)
November 2004	Foundation for Human Rights make submission on behalf of family re prosecutions of persons refused amnesty.	Letter from PCLU, 5 December 2013, para 5.1.4. (Annex TN21.2)

TP

2004 and 2005	Several discussions between FHR and PCLU (Advocate Anton Ackerman) about charges arising from the alleged torture of Ms Simelane (in terms of International Law); the prosecution of Sergeant Radebe on kidnapping charges and the possibility of holding an Inquest into this matter.	Letter from PCLU, 5 December 2013, para 5.1.5. (Annex TN21.2)
1 December 2005	NPA issues Guidelines for TRC cases in terms of National Prosecution Policy sec.179(5) of the Constitution	Appendix A, National Prosecution Policy dated 1 December 2005. (Annex TN30)
23rd September 2007	Establishment of Ginwala Enquiry into the fitness of Advocate Pikoli to hold the office of NDPP	Ginwala Enquiry Report dated 4 November 2008 (Available on request)
2007/8	Decision by the SAPS not to investigate TRC cases pending conclusion of Ginwala Commission.	Letter from Dr. Ramaite, Acting NDPP, 31 January 2013, para 8. (Annex TN21.3)
4 November 2008	Ginwala Enquiry into NDPP finalised and issues report.	Ginwala Enquiry Report dated 4 November 2008 (Available on request)
2 December 2008	Amendments to Prosecution Policy struck down	Judgment, Nkadimeng & Others v The National Director of Public Prosecutions & Others, T.P.D. Case no. 32709/07. (Available on request)
Early 2010	Advocate Macadam appointed by Acting NDPP to take over TRC matters and to liaise with the General Dramat Commander of DPCI.	Letter from Dr. Ramaite Acting NDPP dated 31 January 2013 paragraph 10. (Annex TN21.3)
March 2010	Duplicate Docket and TRC material requested from State Archives and made available to PCLU.	Letter from Acting NDPP, Adv Jiba, 13 August 2013, p3 (Annex TN21.4)
25 March 2010	1. Duplicate Case Docket forwarded to Superintendent Bester of DPCI by PCLU requesting investigation to determine availability of witnesses; confirmation of statements; and to determine the position of Timothy Radebe	1. Letter from Advocate Macadam of NPA, Deputy Director of Public Prosecutions and Deputy Head of PCLU to Senior Superintendent Louis Bester, dated 25 March 2010

TP

	(whether he is a witness or a suspect) 2. Police Captain Masegela of DPCI was appointed to investigate matter	(Annex TN21.5) 2. Letter from Dr. Ramaite Acting NDPP dated 31 January 2013 paragraph 12. (Annex TN21.3)
October 2010	Captain Masegela of DPCI returns duplicate docket and other files and material to Advocate Macadam	Letter from Dr. Ramaite Acting NDPP dated 31 January 2013 paragraph 12. (Annex TN21.3)
27 October 2010	Letter from Advocate Macadam to Captain Masegela (together with duplicate case docket; other files and material) with a directive for extensive further investigations. These are inter alia: • Various administrative tasks related to case files. • Checking the alibi of Sergeant Radebe and circumstances of his original statement. • Investigation concerning an undercover operation involving a tape recording. • Statements from identified witnesses. • Establish circumstances of deaths of certain witnesses. • Draw crime scene maps and plot points of relevance. • Establish the circumstances of the arrests of the 18 MK Operatives. • Establish the circumstances and facts of the "false flag" operations. • Trace and interview Brigadier Schoon. • Identify members of Eastern Transvaal Security Branch at relevant time. • Interview Siphiwe Nyanda – MK Commander in Swaziland. • Establish whether there is any relevant information from the Swaziland authorities.	Letter from Advocate Macadam of NPA, Deputy Director of Prosecutions and Deputy Head of PCLU dated 27 October 2010 (Annex TN21.6)

TP TJ

	• Investigations concerning Motsoanyame Commission and its findings. • Explore the possibility of an exhumation at Northam farm. • Investigations concerning safe houses and other properties with a view to conducting exhumations. • Witnesses who have already made statements to confirm these and be re-interviewed.
October 2010 (date not specified)	Missing Persons Task Team (MPTT) requested to explore the farm at Northam for possible exhumation and to check mortuary records for possible leads in respect of remains of Ms Simelane.	Letter from Dr. Ramaite Acting NDPP dated 31 January 2013 paragraph 17.3 (Annex TN21.3)
Late 2010 (date not specified)	Original docket located	Letter from NPA, Acting NDPP, Advocate Jiba dated13 August 2013 page 3 sub paragraph vii. (Annex TN21.4)
July 2011	The investigating officer, Captain Masehela, submitted his report to Adv Macadam recommending an inquest.	Thembi Nkadimeng discussion with Captain Masegela
October 2012 (date not specified)	Exploration by MPTT of farm at Northam completed and they conclude there is no possibility of an exhumation in the absence of specific evidence of a burial site. MPTT report issued on 25 January 2013.	Letter from Dr. Ramaite Acting NDPP dated 31 January 2013 paragraph 17.5 (Annex TN21.3)
22 January 2013	1. Captain Masegela returns docket and provides report in terms of Sec. 4 of the Inquest Act to Adv. Macadam 2. NPA denies that the docket was returned with the required certificate for an Inquest and claims that docket was returned with a substantial amount of the original investigations incomplete, and no evidence establishing that Ms. Simelane had been murdered.	1. Information supplied by Captain Masegela to Thembi at a meeting 2. Letter from Dr. Ramaite Acting NDPP dated 31 January 2013, para 16 (Annex TN21.3).

25 January 2013	Letter from NPA claiming matter has been diligently attended to and investigations are continuing.	Letter from Dr. Ramaite Acting NDPP dated 31 January 2013, paragraph 17.5 (Annex TN21.3)
25 January 2013	Letter from NPA claiming matter has been diligently attended to and investigations are continuing. MPTT report made available to PCLU on exploration of Northam farm and finding that exhumation is not possible unless there is specific evidence of the precise burial place.	Letter from Dr. Ramaite Acting NDPP dated 31 January 2013, paragraph 17.5 (Annex TN21.3)
29 January 2013	The holding of an inquest is requested by family as authorities are not making progress in their investigation into determining circumstances of death.	Inquest Request – letter from T.P. Nkadimeng to NPA dated 29 January 2013 (Annex TN20)
31 January 2013	NDPP says that Macadam is perusing docket and resubmit to investigating officer.	Letter from Dr. Ramaite Acting NDPP dated 31 January 2013 (Annex TN21.3)
11 February 2013	Letter from the applicant pointing out that this matter has not been diligently attended to and calling for a prosecution or an inquest. To this end a meeting has been arranged between family representatives and Adv. Macadam to discuss and determine how the investigation can be completed and to set a reasonable deadline for this work to be completed.	Inquest Request – copy of letter from T.P. Nkadimeng to NPA dated 11 February 2013 (Annex TN21.7)
12 February 2013	NDPP reasserts that a decision can only be taken once investigation has been completed and refers to the upcoming meeting on 18 February 2013 between members of his staff and families representatives to discuss the investigative steps that are being taken.	Letter from Dr. Ramaite Acting NDPP dated 12 February 2013 (Annex TN21.8)
13 February 2013	Macadam of PCLU instructs Col Xaba of DPCI to undertake following investigations: • Trace and interview Nompumelelo Zakade who was a SB informant. • Locate "safe houses" to determine if exhumations are feasible.	Letter from Adv. Macadam to Colonel Xaba of DPCI dated 13 February 2013 (Annex TN21.9)

TP

	• Locate safe house that was used by Strongman Bambo to determine if exhumations are feasible. • Interview Siphiwe Nyanda
18 February 2013	Meeting between Adv. Macadam (PCLU) Susanne Bukau (PCLU) Colonel Xaba (Hawks) Captain Masagela (DPCI) and Adv. Palmer, Alan Wallis (SALC) (the last two mentioned representing family). Agreement that investigative tasks as set out in PCLU letter to DPCI dated 27 October 2010 is incomplete but there will be an endeavour to conclude investigation by end of May 2013.	1. Letter from NPA, 13 August 2013 (Annex TN21.4) 2. Minutes of Meeting (Annex TN21.10)
6 March 2013	Again pointing out the considerable delays that have occurred in this matter by providing a timeline; raising concerns about some of the investigative tasks mentioned at the meeting of 18 February 2013 and in the letter to Colonel Xaba – also that not all tasks agreed to at the meeting have been included in the letter. Emphasizing those outstanding investigations are concluded as agreed by 30 May 2013.	Letter from Thembi Nkadimeng to NPA dated 6 March 2013 (Annex TN21.11)
13 March 2013	Adv. Macadam notes concerns about serious inaccuracies and unreasonable demands made in the letter of 6 March 2013 from Thembi Nkadimeng. He undertakes to do his best to finalise investigation by 30 May 2013.	Email from Adv. Macadam to Adv. Robin Palmer dated 13 March 2013. (Annex TN21.12)
27 March 2013	Captain Masegela informs Thembi Nkadimeng telephonically that the skeletal remain of a young woman has recently been found by construction workers at the site of new mall in Brits.
6 April 2013	Response by Adv. Palmer to Adv. Macadam concerning the issues he raised in his email of 13 March 2013.	Email from Adv. Robin Palmer to Adv. Macadam dated 6 April 2013. (Annex TN21.13)

TP 17

15 April 2013	Raising concern that the contents of some communications between the family's legal representatives and NPA have been disclosed to the Sunday Times. Investigation into Sergeant Radebe's alibi is continuing. Checks are also being conducted on the mortuaries in areas relevant to the investigation for any records which might correspond with the missing person.	Email from Adv. Macadam to Adv. Robin Palmer dated 15 April 2013. (Annex TN21.14)
2 May 2013	Adv. Palmer asked for an update on the current status of the investigation to which Adv. Macadam replied that there were no new developments.	Email from Adv. Macadam to Adv. Palmer dated 2 May 2013. (Annex TN21.15)
17 May 2013	Adv. Macadam informs Adv. Palmer that investigation will not be concluded by end of May 2013 and reports: • The safe houses in use by the Soweto Security Branch have all been identified and been eliminated as having exhumation potential, except for the smallholding at Westonaria where consideration is being given to the feasibility of a probe • Radebe's alibi investigation concluded and it has been determined that he was a member of the SB at relevant time and not at Vehicle staff as he had claimed. • Mortuary checks are on-going; • The tracing of 18 MK members which is central to the defence of the white SB members is on-going. The case file relating to the arrest of Justice Ngidi has been found.	Emails between Adv. Macadam and Adv. Palmer 17 May 2013 (Annex TN21.16)

TP

26 June 2013	Canvasses the following issues: • Whereas it was indicated that a decision would be made by the end of May 2013 on this matter -this date has now passed and there is still no indication on what further investigative steps are envisaged before the NPA will be in a position to either make a decision to prosecute, or to refer the matter for a formal inquest. • The emotional toll the delays are having on the family and friends of Nokuthula Simelane • Request specific indications of remaining investigative steps together with target dates.	Letter attached to email from Adv. Robin Palmer to Adv. Macadam dated 26 June 2013. (Annex TN21.17)
13 August 2013	Skeletal remains have been found and DNA testing is being conducted. • Mortuaries records have been checked and four records have been found that could be relevant. These records are illegible and efforts are being made to obtain photos of the deceased. • MPTT have identified several "safe houses" that were in use by Security Branch and all of these except for a plot at Westonaria having been excluded as possible burial sites. An exploration to see whether an exclamation is feasible at the Westonaria plot is to be undertaken. • The key aspect of the 18 MK Operatives is on-going.	Letter from NPA, Acting NDPP, Advocate Jiba dated13 August 2013 page 3 sub paragraph vii. (Annex TN21.4)
31 July 2013	This letter expresses frustration at the lengthy delay in completing the investigation and demands that this matter be urgently resolved by means of a prosecution or an inquest.	Letter from Legal Resource Centre (LRC) (representing family) to NPA dated 31 July 2013 (Annex TN31)

5 August 2013	Letter from LRC to Acting NDPP disputing further reasons for delay	Letter dated 5 August 2013 responding to Adv Macadam email dated 31 July (Annex TN32)
5 December 2013	• DNA sample from Brits skeletal remains did not contain sufficient material for DNA extraction. A second sample to be obtained and sent to a specialist DNA Laboratory in Bosnia. • Facial reconstruction is being done in an effort to identify the remains. • The plot at Westonaria to be inspected by an anthropologist to determine feasibility of exhumations. • Four mortuary entries fit the criteria set these entries are however illegible. SAP Recovery Unit has been directed to find these graves and obtain a DNA sample from each for comparison purposes. • Plan and map to be submitted. • Additional TRC statements found and these need to be investigated. • 18 MK Operatives to be traced and interviewed.	Letter from PCLU, 5 December 2013. (Annex TN21.2)
16 January 2014	The family feels no closer to resolution despite the elapse of yet another year. The protracted delays with no action prior to 2010 are again pointed out. Family not satisfied with investigation progress since 2010 either. DNA and Exhumations – queries link between skeletal and other remains with Ms. Simelane and requests specifically what the links are to exclude "shots in the dark" as delaying tactics. Westonaria Plot- a possible exhumation of this plot should not cause delays in finalisation - unless there is specific evidence of a burial	Letter from Legal Resources Centre (representing family) to NPA dated 16 January 2014 (Annex TN21.18)

	site. Requests a meeting with the acting NDPP to discuss these issues
16 January 2014	Acknowledges letter dated 25 September 2013 and will provide a comprehensive report on investigations into DNA of skeletal remains found at Brits by end of January 2014.	Letter from General Dramat, National Head of DPCI dated 16 January 2014 (Annex TN21.19)
10 February 2014	In respect of DNA comparisons of skeletal remain found at Brits the testing has to be done at a specialist laboratory abroad which is expensive – procurement policies have to be followed for the authorisation of the expense. Such authorisation is awaited before proceeding with further sampling and testing. An expert in craniofacial superimposition was unable to make an identification. The Forensic Science Laboratory will follow up on the four remains identified in mortuary records and with a determination of possible exhumations at the Westonaria plot. Pending forensic results the investigator will continue the investigations identified by Adv. Macadam.	Letter from General Dramat, National Head of DPCI dated 16 January 2014 (Annex TN21.19)
26 February 2014	Family is concerned to note that DPCI do not accept responsibility of investigation delays over the past four years. It is also noted that investigation has not been prioritised by DPCI and the end of investigation is not yet in sight. The nexus between the skeletal remains and mortuary remains are queried and do not provide a reason to delay finalisation of case. Two questions are posed: 1. Have investigation been conducted diligently? 2. Did the discovery of the skeletal remains halt or delay investigations?	Letter from Legal Resources Centre (representing family) to General Dramat of DPCI dated 26 February 2014 (Annex TN21.20)
February to July 2014	No responses received to LRC letters to NPA dated 16 January 2014 and to the DPCI dated 26 February 2014. No other reports received.

TP

10 July 2014	Letter from LRC to the NDPP (copied to Adv. Abrahams and Macadam) noting that: • No response had been received to LRC's letter of 14 January 2014 and assuming that the NDPP did not wish to meet with the applicant and her legal representatives; • No monthly progress reports had been supplied by the PCLU as previously promised; • Applicant had not been advised of the DNA test results. The letter assumed that there was no real intention to make a decision to prosecute or not; and moreover that there is no intention to refer this case to an inquest. It accordingly reserved the rights of the applicant. No response was received from the NDPP.	Letter from LRC to the NDPP dated 10 July 2014 (Annex TN33)
10 July 2014	Letter from LRC to Lt-Gen. A Dramat, National Head: Directorate for Priority Crimes Investigation (DPCI), SAPS noting that: • No response had been received to LRC's letter of 24 February 2014 and assuming that the DPCI has no response and that no progress has been made in this investigation; • Applicant had been promised notification of the DNA test results but heard nothing; • There was no intention to finalize this matter expeditiously or at all and reserving rights of the applicant.	Letter from LRC to National Head: DPCI dated 10 July 2014 (Annex TN34)

17 July 2014	Letter from National Head: DPCI to LRC disputing contents of LRC letter dated 10 July 2014 and: • alleging contact between applicant and investigating officer (IO); • notifying that the laboratory in Bosnia had completed the DNA tests and that the IO had been advised on 14 July 2014 that the results were negative; • alleging that extensive investigations had been conducted and the docket had been submitted to the NDPP for consideration and further instructions, if necessary; • Suggesting a meeting with the investigating officer's commanding officer Col Xaba to resolve any outstanding issues.	Letter of 17 July 2014 from National Head: DPCI to LRC disputing contents of LRC letter dated 10 July 2014 (Annex TN21.21)
31 July 2014	Meeting attended by Colonel Xaba (Director, Directorate for Priority Crime Investigation –SAPS), Captain Masegela (Investigating Officer), Thembi Nkadimeng, Frank Dutton (the family's private investigator); Carien Van Der Linde (instructing attorney, LRC) and Angela Mudukuti (Southern African Litigation Centre). The meeting followed mostly a question and answer format with Frank Dutton asking for details about the investigation. The docket was handed to the PCLU of the NPA on 14 July 2014 and Captain Masegela and Colonel Xaba are of the opinion that investigations are complete.	Minutes of meeting dated 31 July 2014 (Annex TN21.22)
11 August 2014	Letter from Colonel Xaba , Commander, Crimes Against the State, DPCI to LRC seeking an affidavit from the family's private investigator affidavit setting out what investigation he had conducted.	Letter from Colonel Xaba , Commander, Crimes Against the State, DPCI to LRC dated 11 August 2014. (Annex TN35)

TP

9 September 2014	In a letter dated 9 September 2014 the LRC advised Col Xaba that Frank Dutton took no statements.	Letter from the LRC to Col Xaba dated 9 September 2014 (Annex TN36)
10 September 2014	Col Xaba indicated that the National Prosecuting Authority (NPA) claimed it could not make a decision without the requested affidavit from Frank Dutton.	Letter from Col Xaba to the LRC dated 10 September 2014 (Annex TN37)
16 September 2014	Frank Dutton supplied the requested affidavit to Col Xaba	Email with attachment from LRC (on behalf of Frank Dutton) to Col Xaba (Annex TN21.23)
25 September 2014	Col Xaba requests information on Thembi's family members who were studying in Swaziland	Letter from Col Xaba to the LRC dated 25 September 2014 (Annex TN38)
22 October 2014	Col Xaba requested further information and an affidavit from the applicant	Email from Col Xaba to the LRC (Annex TN39)
20 January 2015	The applicant hands her affidavit to Captain Masegela	Email from the applicant
26 February 2015	Col Xaba indicated that investigations are ongoing.	Email sent from Col Xaba to the LRC and SALC (Annex TN40)

THEMBISILE PHUMELELE NKADIMENG

I hereby certify that the deponent has acknowledged that he knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was signed and sworn to before me, Commissioner of Oaths, at JOHANNESBURG on this the 18TH day of MAY 2015 the regulations contained in Government Notice No R1258 of 21 July 1972, as amended, and Government Notice No R1648 of 19 August 1977, as amended, having been complied with.

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

TREVOR BAILEY ATTORNEY
82 KILKENNY ROAD
PARKVIEW 2193
JOHANNESBURG
RSA.

ANNEXURES to IN CAMERA AFFIDAVIT

TN #	Description of Annexure	Paragraph(s) Cited
21.1	Extracts from of Police docket	Investigative Timeline
21.2	Letter from PCLU, dated 5 December 2013	Investigative Timeline
21.3	Letter from Dr. Ramaite, Acting NDPP, dated 31 January 2013	Investigative Timeline
21.4	Letter from NPA, Acting NDPP, Advocate Jiba re: PCLU's request for Duplicate Docket and TRC material, dated 13 August 2013	Investigative Timeline
21.5	Letter from Advocate Macadam of NPA, Deputy Director of Public Prosecutions and Deputy Head of PCLU to Senior Superintendent Louis Bester, dated 25 March 2010	Investigative Timeline
21.6	Letter from Advocate Macadam of NPA, Deputy Director of Prosecutions and Deputy Head of PCLU, to Captain Masegela, dated 27 October 2010	Investigative Timeline
21.7	Inquest Request – letter from T.P. Nkadimeng to NPA dated 11 February 2013	Investigative Timeline
21.8	Letter from Dr. Ramaite, Acting NDPP to T.P. Nkadimeng , dated 12 February 2013	Investigative Timeline
21.9	Letter from Adv. Macadam to Colonel Xaba of DPCI, dated 13 February 2013	Investigative Timeline
21.10	Minutes of meeting between Adv. Macadam (PCLU) Susanne Bukau (PCLU) Colonel Xaba (Hawks) Captain Masagela (DPCI) and Adv. Palmer, Alan Wallis (SALC), dated 18 February 2013	Investigative Timeline
21.11	Letter from Thembi Nkadimeng to NPA, dated 6 March 2013	Investigative Timeline
21.12	Email from Adv. Macadam to Adv. Robin Palmer, dated 13 March 2013	Investigative Timeline
21.13	Email from Adv. Robin Palmer to Adv. Macadam, dated 6 April	Investigative Timeline
21.14	Email from Adv. Macadam to Adv. Robin Palmer, dated 15 April 2013	Investigative Timeline
21.15	Email between Adv. Macadam and Adv. Palmer, dated 2 May 2013	Investigative Timeline
21.16	Emails between Adv. Macadam and Adv. Palmer, dated 17 May 2013	Investigative Timeline
21.17	Email from Adv. Robin Palmer to Adv. Macadam, dated 26 June	Investigative Timeline
21.18	Letter from Legal Resources Centre (representing family) to General Dramat of DPCI, dated 16 January 2014	Investigative Timeline
21.19	Fax from General Dramat of DPCI to LRC dated 16 January 2014	Investigative Timeline
21.20	Letter from Legal Resources Centre (representing family) to General Dramat of DPCI, dated 26 February 2014	Investigative Timeline

TP

TN #	Description of Annexure	Paragraph(s) Cited
21.21	Letter from National Head: DPCI to LRC disputing contents of LRC letter dated 10 July 2014, dated 17 July 2014	Investigative Timeline
21.22	Minutes of meeting attended by Colonel Xaba (Director, Directorate for Priority Crime Investigation –SAPS), Captain Masegela (Investigating Officer), Thembi Nkadimeng, Frank Dutton (the family's private investigator); Carien Van Der Linde (instructing attorney, LRC) and Angela Mudukuti (Southern African Litigation Centre)	Investigative Timeline
21.23	Email dated 16 September 2014 with attachment – Frank Dutton affidavit from LRC to Col Xaba	Investigative Timeline

John Vorster Square CAS 1469/02/96 TN 13

South African Police Service Suid-Afrikaanse Polisiediens

Private Bag 5
Privaatsak

Your reference / U verwysing

My reference / My verwysing 29/36/2

Enquiries / Navrae Direct Thoms / Capt Leask

Tel (011) 407-0152

Fax / Faks (011) 407-0150

HEAD NATIONAL CRIME INVESTIGATION SERVICE
HOOF NASIONALE MISDAADONDERSOEKDIENS

GAUTENG

JOHANNESBURG

2000

1996-02-19

A. The Secretariat for Safety and Security
Mr A Cachalia
Private Bag X463
PRETORIA

B. The National Head
Priority Crime
PRETORIA

INVESTIGATION INTO THE ALLEGED KIDNAPPING AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA SIMELANE DURING SEPTEMBER 1983 - MEMBERS OF THE SECURITY POLICE PROTEA, SOWETO - HEAD OFFICE REFERENCE 54/1/2(668) REFERS

1. The investigation into this matter has received priority attention and the necessary statements obtained where possible.

2. The following persons have given sworn statements:

2.1 Mrs Simelane - Mother of missing person Nokuthula Simelane.

2.2 Sgt Mzimkulu Nimrod Veyi - Members of the South African Police Service and source of revelations made to Sowetan and published on 1995-02-06.

TP

2.3 Constable Malosela Patrick Kobe - Member of the South African Police Service and ex member of the Security Police.

2.4 Constable Mokone Matsebetse Edward Sefuthi - ex member of Security Police, now retired.

2.5 Mr Petrus Cornelius Welthagen - owner of farm at Northarn where part of alledged crimes were to have taken place.

2.6 Sgt Moleke Peter Lengene - member of the South African Police Service and presently still working under the direct command of Superintendent Anton Pretorius.

2.7 Mr Norman Lungile Mkhonza, alias "Scotch" - ex covert agent for security Police, Protea, Soweto.

2.8 Inspector Mokapi Lazarus Selamolela - member of the South African Police Service and ex-member of the Security Police, Protea Soweto.

3. Very briefly, the persons interviewed scretch the facts leading to the disappearance of Nokuthula Simelane as follows:

3.1 She was an MK agent for the ANC and conducted courier services from Swaziland to South Africa and visa versa.

3.2 She worked under the command of a "Mpho" who during September 1983 sent her to South Africa where she was to meet agent "Scotch".

3.3 Before meeting "Scotch" she stopped over at an ANC Safehouse where Mr Duma Nkosi assisted her with directions to get to the Carlton Centre.

3.4 Nokuthula Simelane met with Scotch (covert agent) who had already informed the then Warrant Officer W H J Coetzee and Sgt A Pretorius who organised the arrest of Nokuthula Simelane in a basement at the Carlton Centre.

TP 9

3.5 After her arrest she was taken to a room in the married quarters of the SAPS Norwood where she was detained and tortured for about one to two weeks. Hereafter she was taken to a farm at Northarn in the Northen Transvaal, where she was further detained, tortured and interrogated. This lasted up and until the festive season, December 1983. It was at this stage that she was last seen by the witnesses interviewed.

4. The actual interrogators are alleged to be

W H J Coetzee now Superintendent
A Pretorius do
F B Mong now Inspector
P Lengene now Sergeant
Radebe now retired

5. Witnesses/suspect that are alleged to be deceased are Sgt Mathuba and ex covert agent Frank Langa "Big Boy"!

6. On 1996-02-15 an interview was held with Mr D Nkosi in Cape Town.

6.1 He knew about the meeting which was to take place, also that he had provided safety for Nokuthula in Soweto and after giving directions to her to reach the Carlton Centre, Nokuthula was never seen again.

6.2 Upon his return from Cape Town Mr Nkosi will assist and facilitate a meeting where "Mpho" will also then be interviewed and their full statements obtained.

7. On 1996-02-17 on the request of Sgt Lengene I re-interviewed him in which he passed on the following information:

7.1 He had not told the truth on the day he gave me his statement for the following reasons:

TP

7.1.1 He is presently serving under the command of Superintendent A Pretorius who also brought him for the interview on the day of him giving his statement.

7.1.2 He had been told that it was up to him and Norman "Scotch" to save their skins.

7.1.3 That Director Thoms would reveal all that he had said to them after taking his statement.

7.1.4 The Captain Leask would not be able to prove any charges as he had no proof of a body,

7.2 After the interview the following took place:

7.2.1 He was taken to Superintendent Coetzee's office where he was asked what had been said during the interview.

7.2.2 He was led into an argument because he had mentioned Scotch's name.

7.2.3 He was told to rewrite a statement which Superintendent Pretorius then first read and after okaying it, told him to keep it in a safe place so that it could later be handed to their attorney as they were busy arranging this through the Police.

8. On 1996-02-07 Superintendent Coetzee promised Captain Leask, the investigating officer to make available the witness/suspect "scotch" which up and until now has not been honoured.

8.1 The investigating officer however on 1996-02-09 found Scotch, on own accord and obtained his statement.

8.2 On 1995-02-10 Superintendent Pretorius and Coetzee secretly met with Scotch and coached him into what his version and manner should be if Captain Leask was to approach him. This discussion was secretly taped by the investigation team.

TP

9. It has become further very clear from the meeting with Sgt Lengene on 1996-02-17 that the incident regarding Nokuthala was not a once off incident but part of an extensive conduct which has lead directly to the planting of bombs, kidnapping of and murdering of numerous other persons.

9.1 Lengene confesses his own part in the murder of a person whom he had shot with an AK 47 rifle given to him by Superintendent Pretorius/Coetzee after the person had been told to plant a limpet bomb in Soweto.

10. A detailed statement will be obtained from Sgt Lengene on 1996-02-19 at a secret rendevouz upon which he has firmly stated he wishes to reveal all the "dirty tricks" which had taken place during his career in the Security Police as of 1982 up and until now.

11. It is of great concern to this office that both Superintendent Coetzee and Pretorius are presently employed in positions where they can easily continue with intimidation, defeating the ends of justice because of their contacts with the CIS and its members. This could also lead to the elimination of witnesses.

12. The investigating team has to go to great lenghts to keep the investigation, witnesses and information from the very persons attached to the priority crimes division of Gauteng. It is suggested that they be re-transferred to a post in the Uniform Pro-active division.

13. All further information will be brought to your attention.

14. An offical murder and kidnapping investigation has been launched under registered case docket John Vorster Square CAS 1469/02/96.

DIRECTOR
HEAD : PRIORITY CRIME : GAUTENG
N W THOMS

/MH/LIB/1/108

TP

John Vorster Square CAS 1469/02/96 IN 14

14

South African Police Service Suid-Afrikaanse Polisiediens

Private Bag 5
Privaatsak

Your reference / U verwysing

My reference / My verwysing 29/36/2

Enquiries / Navrae Direct Thoms / Capt Leask

Tel (011) 407-0152

Fax / Faks (011) 407-0150

HEAD NATIONAL CRIME INVESTIGATION SERVICE
HOOF NASIONALE MISDAADONDERSOEKDIENS

GAUTENG

JOHANNESBURG

2000

1996-02-26

A. The Divisional Chief
National Crime Investigation Services
PRETORIA

B. The Head
National Priority Crime Investigation Services
PRETORIA

INVESTIGATION INTO THE ALLEGED KIDNAPPING AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA SIMELANE DURING SEPTEMBER 1983 - MEMBERS OF THE SECURITY POLICE PROTEA, SOWETO - HEAD OFFICE REFERENCE 54/1/2(668) REFERS

1. The investigation into this matter has received priority attention and the necessary statements obtained where possible.

2. The following persons have given sworn statements:

2.1 Mrs Simelane - Mother of missing person Nokuthula Simelane.

2.1.1 She states that Nokulhula was last seen in June 1983 - she was always travelling between S.A. and Swaziland as she was working for the ANC. Her disappearance was strange as she was to have graduated during October 1983 - Her personal belongings were found at Duma's place in Soweto as he was the last person of the ANC to see her.

TP

John Vorster Square CAS 469/02/96 26 B1

2.2 Sgt Mzimkulu Nimrod Veyi - Member of the South African Police Service and source of revelations made to Sowetan and published on 1995-02-06.

2.2.1 He states that he guarded Nokuthula as he worked under the command of Nokuthula's captors Superintendent Coetzee en Pretorius - His guard duties took place at the farm in Northam - he witnessed torture of Nokuthula - last saw her alive in the boot of Superintendent Coetzee's state vehicle on Potch/Johannesburg road near Fochville.

2.3 Constable Malosela Patrick Kobe - Member of the South African Police Service and ex member of the Security Police.

2.3.1 He states entirely hearsay evidence - he never knew or saw Nokuthula - he worked covertly on the AZAPO line - only heard numours that Superintendent Pretorius, Coetzee and Inspector Mong were responsible for the alleged murder of Nokuthula.

2.4 Constable Mokone Matsebetse Edward Sefuthi - ex member of Security Police, now retired.

2.4.1 He states that he was a guard who on instructions of Superintendent Coetzee and Pretorius assisted in arresting Nokuthula at the Carlton Centre, taking her then to Norwood SAPS flats where she was detained for ± one to two weeks, then taken to Northam where she was kept for ± 2 months - he also witnessed torturing and last saw her at the farm.

2.5 Mr Petrus Cornelius Welthagen - owner of the farm at Northam where part of alledged crimes were to have taken place.

2.5.1 He states that Superintendent Coetzee a family member had requested the use of the outbuilding for training of police recruits - he cannot identify Nokuthula but states that two women were brought to the farm over a period of two months.

2.6 Sgt Moleke Peter Lengene - member of the South African Police Service and presently still working under the direct command of Superintendent Anton Pretorius.

TP

John Vorster Square CAS 469/02/96 27 By

2.6.1 He in his first statement corroborates Sefuthi but denies ever having seen any torture taking place - he further states that Superintendent Coetzee and Pretorius gave Nokuthula clothing and money during December and released her to return to Swaziland.

2.6.2 In his second statement he alleges his first statement was made under duress from Superintendent Pretorius and Coetzee - he was told to rewrite a statement which he did and Superintendent Pretorius first checked it (Now as exhibit with Investigating officer) - he further states and corroborates the other witnesses that Nokuthula was trapped, tortured and adds that she was taken to Westonaria where she was further detained by Superintendent Coetzee and Pretorius at the private dwelling of Coetzee's brother - he then also states that he was part of a force under Coetzee and Pretorius in which he and other security Policemen and/or Askaris murdered ANC recruits after letting them place limpet bombs at railway points in Soweto - further that they also blew up and threw handgranades at councillers houses and municipal buildings in Soweto - he also has exposed the names of the other members involved.

2.7 Mr Norman Lungile Mkhonza, alias "Scotch" - ex covert agent for security Police, Protea, Soweto.

2.7.1 He states that he was a covert agent and set up the trap for Superintendnet Coetzee and Pretorius to capture Nokuthula - he was taken to a clinic after her arrest where he was placed in plaster of paris and a false message was sent to Swaziland by covert agent Frank Langa, that he had never met Nokuthula because he was involved in a car accident.

2.8 Inspector Mokapi Lazarus Selamolela - member of the South African Police Service and ex-member of the Security Police, Protea Soweto.

2.8.1 He corroborates all the other witnesses with regards to the trap, detaining and torture of Nokuthula - he however does not corroborate Veyi in that they were together when Veyi alleges he last saw Nokuthula alive in the boot of Coetzee's vehicle.

TP 07

2.9 Gilbert Thwala alias "Mpho" - Nokuthula's Commander in Swaziland.

2.9.1 He states she was sent to meet Scotch and Frank at the Carlton Centre - she was last seen or heard of after this meeting - she was expected back because she had to graduate - complete denial that the ANC had killed her as she was very valuable to them.

2.10 Duma Nkosi - owner of ANC Safehouse in Senoane Soweto.

2.10.1 He states that she stayed at his place whilst in Johannesburg 1983 - he gave her directions to get to the Carlton Centre on her request - she never returned - her personal belongings were removed from his place by her parents.

3. The actual interrogators are alleged to be

W H J Coetzee now Superintendent
A Pretorius do
F B Mong now Inspector
P Lengene now Sergeant
Radebe now retired

4. Witnesses/suspect that are alleged to be deceased are Sgt Mathuba and ex covert agent Frank Langa "Big Boy"!

5. On 1996-02-07 Superintendent Coetzee promised Captain Leask, the investigating officer to make available the witness/suspect "scotch" which up and until now has not been honoured.

5.1 The investigating officer however on 1996-02-09 found Scotch, on own accord and obtained his statement.

5.2 On 1995-02-10 Superintendent Pretorius and Coetzee secreatly met with Scotch and coached him into what his version and manner should be if Captain Leask was to approach him. This discussion was secretly taped by the investigation team.

TP

John Vorster Square CAS 1469/02/96.

6. It has become further very clear from the meeting with Sgt Lengene on 1996-02-17 that the incident regarding Nokuthula was not a once off incident but part of an extensive conduct which has lead directly to the planting of bombs, kidnapping of and murdering of numerous other persons.

6.1 Lengene confesses his own part in the murder of a person whom he had shot with an AK 47 rifle given to him by Superintendent Pretorius/Coetzee after the person had been told to plant a limpet bomb in Soweto.

7. It is of great concern to this office that both Superintendent Coetzee and Pretorius are presently employed in positions where they can easily continue with intimidation, defeating the ends of justice because of their contacts with the CIS and its members. This could also lead to the ellumination of witnesses.

8. The investigating team has to go to great lenghts to keep the investigation, witnesses and information from the very persons attached to the priority crimes division of Gauteng. It is suggested that they be re-transferred to a post in the Uniform Pro-active division.

9. An offical murder and kidnapping investigation has been launched under registered case docket John Vorster Square CAS 1469/02/96.

****

B.1. For your information

DIRECTOR
HEAD : PRIORITY CRIME : GAUTENG
N W THOMS

/MH/LB11/118

TP 17

POLICE DOCKET:

PRIORITY INVESTIGATION: JV PLEIN: 1469/02/1996

Complainant: Sizakele Ernestinah Simelane

Offences: Murder: Method: unknown: Injuries: unknown
Kidnapping: falsely arrested during September 1983 at Carlton Centre.

Record of documentary and other exhibits: JVR(A)197/96: Cassette tape

STATEMENTS

SIZAKELE ERNESTINAH SIMELANE: Krugersdorp CAS 1263/01/96 – A3

A2 – Photograph of Nokhuthula

Press Clippings: Sowetan articles by Sharon Chetty – 27/1/95 and 6/2/95

MZIMKULU NIMROD VEYI: Krugersdorp CAS 1263\01\96 – A3
Sergeant in SAPS, Vehicle Theft Unit, Soweto

Wishes to make statement even though it may incriminate me. In 1981 joined SB at Protea in Soweto. Served in SB until 1985. On 27/1/95 read an article in the Sowetan in relation to Nokuthula Simelane who was reported missing as of 8/9/83. Approached Sharon Chetty and gave her story which was published on 6/2/95.

Duties: act as conveyer of information between handler and informer. Also had to recruit informers.

Scotch: Norman Mkhonza, covert policeman of security branch at Protea. Joined the ANC undercover and worked in Swaziland where he infiltrated the ANC. He reported to his handler: Warrant Officer WHJ Coetzee (now a Colonel with SAPS in Braamfontein). He advised Coetzee of the rendezvous at the Carlton. Arranged for her to be arrested. Both arrested so that cover of Scotch would not be blown. Policemen who went to Carlton included:

W/O Coetzee, Sgt Anton Pretorius (Col in Midrand), Sgt Radebe (discharged), Constable Lazarus Selamolela (Sgt at Sanab, Sandton), Late Sgt Mathiba.

Taken to a farm at Northam. The day after arrest he was posted to the farm to guard her. Persons who guarded her were:

TP 17

Constable Lazarus Selamolela, Const Edmond Sefuthi, Sgt Radebe, Sgt Mathiba, Adriaan Bambo (a recruit from Mozambique who is deceased), Manual from Mozambique, Const Patrick Kobe (taxi unit, Heidelberg).

Assault
She was kept in an outbuilding. She was interrogated by Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong. (Mong is in Soweto). Kept there for more than a month. Hands and feet were cuffed. Sleep was kept to a minimum. She was kicked and slapped. Bag was pulled over her head. At times she could no longer stand. "I was present and did what was expected of me".

Disappearance
One day myself and Lazarus were instructed to go to the SB at Potchefstroom and meet with Coetzee. We drove 1982 beige Honda Ballade. Close to 4 way stop of Fochville and Carltonville with the Joburg/ Potch road we saw a XR6 flashing lights. It was WO Coetzee. Coetzee who was on his own opened the boot and I saw Nokhuthula lying there with her hands (behind her back) and feet cuffed. She was alive. Coetzee told us to return to Soweto.

A few days later I asked Sgt Pretorius where she was as all the guards had been withdrawn. His response: "Moenie baie vrae vrag nie". Spoke to Mathibe who said that Coetzee and Pretorius had shot, killed and buried her at Rustenburg.

Signed at Jhb on 96/02/02 at 14:30
Before Capt Leask, Krugersdorp

MALOSELA PATRIC KOBE: Krugersdorp CAS 1263/01/96 – A7

Detective Constable with National Crime Investigation Unit, Priority crimes, Taxi Conflict – Heidelberg.

During 1982 I joined the SAP I was deployed by Internal Security covertly against Azapo.

Knows nothing of the Simelane woman. Did not see her at the farm and denies meeting her. In 95 Const Veyi telephoned me about this woman. Said I did not know her but heard that she had been arrested and she had been seriously assaulted. Got the info from Sgt Mathibe. He is however dead.

Everything I know is hearsay. I heard that Sgt Anton Pretorius, WO Coetzee, and Sgt Mong killed her Although I was handled by these people I did not see anything.

Signed at Jhb on 96.02.05 at 13.30 before N W Thomas.

TP 9

MOKONE MATSEBETSEBE EDWARD SEFUTHI: Krugersdorp CAS 1263/01/96 – A8

Was a SA Policeman. Presently medically unfit. Handed a copy of his life history to the investigation team. Started duties with SB, Protea, Soweto in 1982. First gave driving lessons then did covert work which included transport of members to border posts. Recognized photo of deceased. Aware that SP under handling by WO Coetzee made use of Scotch to lure her to the Carlton. Scotch is Norman Mthanza, a covert policman.

Persons present at time of arrest included: Coetzee, Sgt Pretorius, Sgt Mong, Lazerus Selapomela, Scotch. He himself was not present. Got the information through Scotch. After the arrest I know that she was taken to the Block B Flats at Norwood Police Station.

I had to guard her in the room on the roof of the building. She was kept there for about 3 weeks. One of the residents in the flats, a child, "discovered us detaining her there after she had been screaming from assaults".

We then took her to a farm in Northam in a cream white E20 Panelvan. The farm belonged to "Oom Piet". His house was very close to the building in which she was kept. She was held here for about 2 months. During this time she was interrogated by Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong. She was hand and foot cuffed, severely beaten and tortured. At one stage she was unrecognizable. At the farm she was guarded by myself, Peter Lengene and Veyi.

I was at the farm for at least one month. At a stage I asked Pretorius what happened to her and he said to me that "I would never see her again". Coetzee and Mong were present when this was said.

At one stage during the detention of the woman at the farm I had wanted to release her. "She was however too badly injured and could not walk".

"I strongly suspect that Nokhuthula has been murdered by Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong. They continuously threatened her with death during the interrogation. I had told Nokuthula never to give the information as they would then kill her".

96/02/06 Before Leask

MOKONE MATSEBETSEBE EDWARD SEFUTHI: Life History – A8

…I was transferred to SA Intelligence in Soweto Protea that is where I was completely exploited. ….i saw injustice ….ANC members were captured, tortured brutally both men and women ..

See para 44: Attempted murder of black policeman, Sefuthi: Sefuthi says summonded by AG in Jhb who says strong case but cannot allow it to proceed attackers were state members acting under cover and he cannot hamper the image of the state

TP

PETRUS CORNELIUS WELTHAGEN: Krugersdorp CAS 1263/01/96 – A9

Lives on farm in east Northam. In early 95 his farm was visited by Sowetan reporters who took photos. A family member, Willem Coetzee, who was in the SAP asked if he could use the outside building for training of persons in the underground. I agreed.

They stayed on the farm for about 3 months. While they were there I did not go to the building. I was aware that 2 black women received training. One followed the other. They were young about 18 years. I will not recognise them.

There was no noise or screaming. The building is about 300 m from my house.

Have not seen Willem Coetzee in 3 years.

96-02-08 - Leask

MOLEKE PETER LENGENE: Made under duress. Krugersdorp CAS 1263/01/96 - A10

Sergeant in SAPS attached to Crime Intelligence Unit, Jhb. He was a "returned exile" and in 1983 was stationed with the Security Police at Protea in Soweto. His task was to train new recruits. His commanders were Capt Coetzee and Lt Pretorius.

In relation to Nokuthula his task was to explain to her "how we worked". This was when she was detained in "a room at the back of the farm". He does not know how she got there.

One morning, Capt Coetzee, Lt Pretorius and Sgt Mony arrived at the farm with new clothing for her. She was told that she was being taken back to Swaziland. They took her away in Ford XR6. I never saw her again. Other policemen involved "with this lady" were Sgt Sefuthi and Norman Mkhonza.

"When I last saw her she was in good health". Denies assaulting her. When he saw her for the first time she was in "good health", "however she did have some bruises on her face" There were also bruises on her hands. She explained to him that this was because of the handcuffs.

96/02/09 at 10.03 at Jhb before Leask

NORMAN LUNGILE MKHONZA – A11 (also known as Scotch) - Krugersdorp CAS 1263/01/96 – A11

Employed by Old Mutual. Claims he is bound by the Secrecy Act and cannot give information to anyone.

TP

During 83 was stationed at Protea Security Branch. Task was to work as an undercover agent in Swaziland. He had infiltrated the ANC. Commander was "Willem Coetzee 'Mkhize'".

He passed on information to Coetzee that an MK agent female was to meet with him at the Carlton Centre. The instruction from Swaziland was to wear a yellow shirt and brown trousers. She found me sting at a table at the "Fun Foods Restaurant".

Coetzee, Pretorius and Mony were present. One was taking photographs. On the way to car we were both arrested. We were taken in separate cars and I did not see her again. I was released the same day.

My code name was Dan. I was taken to East Rand where I had plaster of paris applied to my leg and arm. This was my cover why I did not meet her. "Big boy" Frank Langa took this message back to Swaziland. He worked at the security police. Protea.

About 2 weeks later I asked Coetzee where the lady was and he replied: "Moenie baire vrae vra nie". A few months later I asked the same question and he gave the same answer.

Coetzee gave me money to entertain her so that she could be photographed. It was about R100. I has signed for the money at Norwood where Coetzee was staying.

PETRUS MOKEBE MADIBO: Krugersdorp CAS 1263/01/96 – A12

Sergeant in SAP and attached to the West Rand Murder and Robbery Unit, Krugersdorp. On 96/02/10 upon the request of Capt Leask I proceeded to Vereneeging where I handed over to "Scotch" a tape recording device with a clean tape in it.

This device was hidden on the body of Scotch and we monitored Scotch in the presence of 2 white men at the Wimpy in Vereeniging. After the meeting I recovered the device from Scotch which I then gave to Capt Leask. I do not know what was said during this discussion. The white men drove in a white Opel Kadet CA 553 781.

MOHAPI LAZARUS SELHMOLELA: Krugersdorp CAS 1263/01/96 – A13

Inspector in the SAPS and attached to the Organised Crime Investigation Unit, Gauteng. In 1983 Coetzee was my commander. He instructed me to accompany him to the Carlton Centre. Those present included Coetzee, Pretorius, Sgt Mathuba, Sgt Radebe. It is possible that Sefuthi and Mong were also there.

Scotch was followed by our team to the Juicy Luicy in the Carlton Centre. We followed them to the basement where they were arrested and split up. Radebe was in the back of Coetzee's car with the lady. We followed them to the Norwood married quarters of the SAP. At the top of the building was a room used by the security police. She was interrogated there by Coetzee and Pretorius. The team was all present.

TP

She was kept there for about a week. She was guarded 24 hours by the team. Sgt Vezi also joined us during this period. Whilst in my presence at the married quarters nobody assaulted her. It was however clear to me that she had been assaulted. Her face was badly swollen.

When she was originally arrested she was wearing jeans. During her detention she wore overalls. I did not see her other injuries.

After a while we were instructed by Coetzee to follow them to a farm in Northam. I was driving with Vezi. She was put in a small outbuilding at the back of the farm. We erected a tent behind the room where we slept. She was kept on the farm for more than a month. She was interrogated here which was done by Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong. Mathiba was also present.

She was assaulted by use of a bag over her head, use of electrical shocks. She became very weak and could no longer walk. Us black members always tried our best to nurse her but had to be careful not to be caught by our superiors.

During her detention, the assaults were the cause of her changing her physical appearance. She was treated very badly for a woman.

One night this same lady was taken to the zinc dam where Radebe threw her in. She was thrown into the dam after interrogation bouts.

At the farm, Peter Lengene was also present.

She at this stage could no longer walk and we had to even take her to the toilet.

One day we were all withdrawn from the farm. That is the last time I saw her. I do remember Pretorius saying he was just going to lock her up. I thought they were going to take her to a police station.

I do not know who took her away from the farm as I was one of the first to leave. Coetzee, Pretorius and Radebe were still with her when we left.

I never asked questions after last seeing the body.

96.02.11 at 12.08 before Leask

TP

Interview of Sgt PETER LENGENE at Grasmere 1 Stop N1 at 19:24 – 21:45 on 96/02/19 by Leask, Madibo and Badirwang: John Vorster Square CAS 1469/02/96 – A14

In 1982 I was in exile in Gaberone, Botswana where I was kidnapped by Coetzee and Pretorius. I was beaten and tied during the kidnap. I was taken to a house in Rustenberg. This house belonged to Coetzee's in-laws.

Under duress I worked for the security police. My work was to train their recruits about politics and life in exile. I would go to Durban and elsewhere to assist in recruiting people. I was made a policeman but I never went to college.

First I wish to state that my original statement was not the whole truth. The reasons are:

1. I was taken to the interview by Supt Pretorius. We first met with Supt Coetzee.
2. Pretorius told that I should not worry as Director Thoms was going to help us in this matter.
3. That Director Thoms would later show them the files. I was therefore feeling uncomfortable to make a statement as I knew they would be reading it later.

After making the original statement the following took place:

1. I was told to report to Coetzee's office.
2. I was asked to tell them what I had said in my statement. I told them and they questioned me .. for talking to Scotch. They insisted he was not there. The same about Sgt Sefuthi. They said Mathiba was present.
3. Pretorius told me that I must rethink my statement and bring it to him so that he can file it and later show it to our lawyers. I did this.
4. Pretorius was given my statement which he read and gave it back to me. He told me to keep it safe because if he it they could say he was interfering with witnesses. He said that him and Coetzee were the accused.
5. Pretorius asked me if I was shown the photo in the file. He asked me if it was the same woman and I said yes.

Before I made my original statement, Pretorius had told me that the case could not be proved because there is no proof. They suspected Veyi of giving the information to the press.

I fear Supt Coetzee and Pretorius very much and at no cost must they become aware of my statement to you.

Gives an account of abduction and removal to Norwood. The first time I saw her when I went to guard her. She was already beaten up.

She had bruises on her face, hands and feet. She was wearing a brown overall. Her hands and legs were cuffed. I was never present when she was interrogated at the flats.

TP 9

She was transferred one or 2 weeks later to Northam Farm near Thabazimbi. I went to the farm in December 1983 with Sgt Sefuthi. He was in possession of the keys for the cuffs. This was so he could untie her if she wished to relieve herself.

During my stay Coetzee and Pretorius never came. On my arrival at the farm this lady was in a bad condition. She told me that she was very afraid of Coetzee as he was very hard on her during interrogation. She told me she had been promised to be taken to back to Swaziland.

On New Year's eve, Pretorius came with Coetzee and Mong. They had brought new clothes with them for her. Coetzee told her to wash and put the new clothes on. They said they were taking her to Swaziland. The lady was put into the back of our panel van and we followed Coetzee and the others to Westonaria. Here we took her to a certain house where she was placed in the servant's quarters.

Here she was left in the company of Sefuthi, Pretorius and Coetzee. Mong was instructed to take me back to Jhb, which he did. This was the last time I saw this woman. One day after this Sefuthi, Mong and myself were in a vehicle. Sefuthi asked what had happened to her and he said that if we wished to survive in this department you should not ask questions.

I wish to give details on other activities I had taken part in on instruction from Pretorius and Coetzee starting with a murder I was directly involved in.

Not sure of exact year, I think it was 1988. We had a source who had infiltrated the ANC youth in Soweto. This was Max Maukhanzane. He is now a policeman at Jabulani SAP. Then proceeds to explain his role in booby trapping limpet mines and his shooting of a recruit at the behest of Pretorius; and the burning of the bodies, Also gives accounts of involvement of attacks on house of a councilor, and the rector of Vista College, and the bombing of municipal offices in White City and Mzimhlophe Hostel.

96/02/17 before Leask

GILBERT ZAKHELE THWALA: John Vorster Square CAS 1469/02/96 – A15

Inspector General, SA Airforce, HQ Pretoria.

During 1983 I was a commander in the ANC armed wing based in Mbabane. I knew Nokhuthla from 1977. During 1983 she was under my direct command. She was a courier for the units serving in SA. During August or September I instructed her to go to Jhb to meet members of another unit. She was to stay at Duma's place in Soweto. The persons she was to meet were known to me as Frank and Scotch.

TP

She reported her safe arrival. After her meeting she was supposed to return to Duma's place with the communications then proceed to her parents in Bethal and then return to Swaziland.

She never reported back to me. Duma said she never returned. Her parents had no information. The very same weekend of her disappearance either Frank or Scotch was in Swaziland. This was against strict instructions of the ANC that they were never to come to Swaziland. He claimed he had come to Swaziland cos he was scared.

Scotch and Frank had instructions to attack a substation in Randburg. I had confirmation of such an attack in the news.

After this incident neither Frank nor Scotch ever came back to us. I received a visit from the parents of Nokhuthula and I explained to them.

The persons under my command who had specifically spoken to Scotch or Frank in Swaziland would have been Mafa Ngidi Hlonuka (Mayor of Alex/ Sandton) or John June, staying in Phefeni, Soweto. My codename in 83 was Mpho.

She was not kidnapped or murdered by my men. She was of great value to my unit.

96/02/24 before Leask.

DUMA NKHOSI: John Vorster Square CAS 1469/02/96 – A16

In August and September 1983 was attached to a MK unit operating from Swaziland and working in Soweto. Mr Mpho, based in Swaziland, was his commander and would send him instructions.

Was advised that a courier, the late Simelane, would visit and to give her assistance and residence. She stayed with me and I directed her to the Carlton. She left and never returned. Reported this to Mpho who said she never arrived back in Swaziland. Her parents came to investigate.

96/02/24 at Braamfontein before Thoms

THEMBI VILAKATI: John Vorster Square CAS 1469/02/96 –A17

Aunt of the deceased. During 1983 Nokhuthula stayed with deponent. She had just completed her degree and was about to graduate in October 1983. In September she said she was going home to get clothes for her graduation. She never returned. Nokhuthula normally kept in close contact with me and her family. She never made contact.

06/02/29 at Manzini before Leask

TP

JAN STEFANUS FOURIE : John Vorster Square MAS 1469/02/96 - A18

Forensic analyst in the SAPS. Leask gave him "mikrokassetband" to examine. "Daar is n poging aangewend om die spraak verstaanbaarheid op die heropname te verbeter. Ek het geen byvoegings gemaak tot, of geen deel verwyder vanaf die oorsponklike opname nie."

1996 -03 -05 at Silverton

J VAN ZYL – A19

During 1982 -83 he was a member of the SAP stationed at Norwood and served as caretaker (opstigter) of the Police Flats in Norwood.

One Coetzee, a member of the old security branch, together with his staff members, used a storeroom on the 10th floor of the building as an office for interrogation. I cannot remember who gave permission for this use.

96/03/28 before Leask

JOHAN HENDRIK PRETORIUS: Krugersdorp CAS 1263/01/96: PR NO: 107/96 – A20

Inspector in official photography service of the SAPS stationed at the Criminal Record Centre in Rustenberg. On 96-02-08 at 12:15 I photographed points at the farm Uitsig as pointed out by Sgt Weyi. Photos attached.

JUSTICE MAFA HLOMUKA NGIDI: John Vorster Square CAS 1469/02/96 - A21

Mayor of Sandton City. In response to claim by Gilbert (A15) that I spoke to Scotch or Frank I deny this. Instructions were clear that after training Mpho would give instructions to Scotch and Frank so I did not have communications with them.

96/7/03

MSEBENZI TIMOTHY RADEBE –A22 (untruthful statement)

Detective Inspector with the Kwa Mhlanga Motor Vehicle Theft Unit, Mpumalanga.

In 1982 I was transferred from Murder and Robbery to Soweto Internal Security Services. I worked under Superintendent Willem Coetzee, who was a warrant officer and Senior Superintendent Pretorius who was a sergeant at the time.

TP

One Saturday, Coetzee told me there was work to do at the Carlton Centre. He asked me to meet him at the Norwood barracks and told me to proceed to a certain restaurant to meet an informer by the name of Scotch who was on observation.

While in the restaurant I noticed a certain lady come to the informer and sat with him for about 20 minutes. She was in a chicken licken uniform. They left the restaurant and Scotch signaled us by taking out a white handkerchief.

Outside the restaurant I introduced myself and I told her that I was arresting her. She was very co-operative and we went to the basement where our car was parked. I proceeded with Coetzee and Lazrus.

She was kept at Norwood barracks for about a week. Myself, Lazrus and N.... and a certain female guarded her.

I last saw her the day I guarded her. I then asked for a transfer. I asked Coetzee why I should guard a person for 24 hours and he did not give me an answer. He said that in the security branch you must no complain you must comply with instructions. I was then transferred to John Vorster Vehicle Branch.

96-07-26 before Capt Ndlovu

WARNING AGAINST W H J COETZEE ITO S35 OF THE CONSTITUTION: at 14h30 on 6-07-1998 at Pretoria – A23

In the case of murder of Nokhuthula Simelane – during September 1983 at about Carlton Jhb. Declined to make a statement.

3 PHOTOGRAPHS OF THE WELTHAGEN FARM

CORRESPONDENCE

LETTER FROM N W THOMS, HEAD PRIORITY CRIMES, GAUTENG TO A CACHALIA, SECRETIRIAT FOR SAFETY & SECURITY AND NATIONAL HEAD, PRIORITY CRIMES DATED 96-02-19 – B1

Reference 29/36/2 Director Thoms/ Capt Leask

Investigation has received priority attention. Listed people who have given statements.

Pointed out that Sgt Moleke Peter Lengene still works under direct command of Superintendent Anton Pretorius.

TP

Sketched the facts as given by the persons interviewed.

In paragraph 3.5 she was taken to a room in the married quarters of SAPS Norwood where she was detained and tortured for about 2 weeks. Then taken to a farm at Northham where she was further detained, tortured and interrogated. This lasted till the festive season, December 1983. This was the last time she was seen by the witnesses.

Par 4: the actual interrogators are alleged to be: Coetzee, Pretorius, Mong, Lengene and Radebe.

Par 5: Witnesess/ suspects believed to be deceased are Sgt Mathuba and Frank Langa "Big Boy".

Par 7: On 1996-02-17 on the request of Sgt Lengene I (Capt Leask) re-interviewed him. He said his first statement was not truthful. Because he was serving under Pretorius. Pretorius told him that "it was up to him and Norman "Scotch" to save their skins". That Director Thoms would reveal all that he said in his statement. That Capt Leask would not be able to prove any charges as he had no proof of a body.

After the interview he was taken to the Coetzee who wanted to know what had been said in the interview. He was led into an argument because he had mentioned the name of Scotch. He was told to rewrite a statement which Pretorius okayed and told him to keep it in a safe place so that it could later be handed to their attorney as they were busy arranging this through the police.

On 96-02-07 Coetzee promised Leask to make the suspect Scotch available which he never did. Leask however found him.

Par 8.2: On 95-02-10 Pretorius and Coetzee secretly met with Scotch and coached him into what his version should be if Capt Leask approached him. This discussion was secretly taped by the investigation team.

Par 9: It has become very clear from the meeting with Sgt Lengene on 96-02-17 that Nokhuthula's incident was not a one off event but part of an extensive programme involving bombings, kidnapping and murder of numerous persons.

Lengene confesses his own part in a murder in which he shot someone with an AK47 given to him by Pretorius and Coetzee.

A detailed statement will be obtained from Sgt Lengene on 96-02-19 at a secret rendezvous at which he will reveal all the dirty tricks he was involved in.

Par11: It is of great concern that Coetzee and Pretorius are still in positions in the police where they can easily continue with intimidation, defeating the ends of justice because of their contacts with the CIS and its members. This could lead to the elimination of members. It is suggested that they be transferred to the Uniform pro-active division.

TP

An official murder and kidnapping investigation has been launched - John Vorster Square CAS 1469/02/96.

TELEFAX FROM CAPT LEASK TO MINISTER MUFAMADI, DATED 96/02/22 –B2

LETTER FROM CAPT LEASK TO CO, ELECTRONICS UNIT, FORENSIC LAB, DATED 96-02-26 – B3

Attached one micro cassette tape properly sealed with no 224. Conversation with three parties in a busy restaurant. As a result of background noise this impaired to a certain extent the proper hearing of the discussion.

Seeks assistance to diminish background noise but to maintain authenticity.

LETTER FROM N W THOMS, HEAD PRIORITY CRIMES, GAUTENG TO DIVISIONAL CHIEF, NATIONAL CRIME INVESTIGATION SERVICES AND HEAD, NATIONAL PRIORITY CRIMES DATED 96-02-19 – B4

Same letter as B1

TELEFAX TO DUMA NKOSI FROM CAPT LEASK DATED 96/03/05 – B5

Attached statement of Duma. Advised that he (Leask) had made contact with Steven Markowitz and believe that we will be getting all the necessary assistance. States that the Director and myself have already been to Swaziland and all went well there.

LETTER FROM J S FOURIE, FORENSIC SCIENCES LAB TO CO SAP, JOHN VORSTER SQUARE DATED 96-03-04 – B6

Returns evidential items to Capt Leask with seal number 1815

RESULT OF TRIAL: INVESTIGATION BY FORENSIC SCIENCE LAB. REF NO: 8625/96 (T1759)

Nothing stated in the document.

LETTER FROM ASST COMMISSIONER L VAN DER WESTHUIZEN, NCIS, GAUTENG TO PROVINCIAL COMMISSIONERS – NORTHERN PROVINCE, NORTH WEST, MPUMALANGA, GAUTENG, FREE STATE, EASTERN CAPE, WESTERN CAPE, KWAZULU NATAL, NORTHERN CAPE DATED 96-03-06 – B7

TP

Re: Missing persons period 1980 to 1996. Unidentified bodies recovered by the SAPS. Requests assistance of all SAPS Govt mortuaries to supply list of all unidentified bodies removed by the SAPS, race and sex, place of discovery and cause of death, case or inquest number, fingerprints or photos on record.

INVESTIGATION DIARY

INVESTIGATION DIARY: Krugersdorp 1263/01/96: 96/01/30 – 98/02/10: C1 –12

Selected extracts: 96/02/07: 16.00 Const Selomolela interviewed. Knows the woman but wishes to first seek advice and clear his thoughts before making statements. Appointment made for the next day at Nandos Krugersdorp.

96/02/08: 08.30: he is willing to give a statement as he fully intends to approach the TRC. He will first approach his attorney and then make a new appointment.

96/02/14: meeting with Thoms at office Azar Cachalia.

96/02/26 Case discussed with Deputy Attorney General Adv Kevin Attwell and Adv De Vries on 96/02/23. Recommendation that the matter be discussed with Dr De Oliviera of the 3rd Force Investigations. Discussion was held with de Oliviera. All possible evidence must be gathered and investigation must proceed.

96/02/28: Linda Moni contacted at his home. Represented by Wynand Louw of Joubert & Cornelius. Wished to consult with client before statements.

96/08/05: correspondence forwarded to Duma Nkosi as per B5. Mr Steve Markowitz of New Vision productions was interviewed.

96-10-22: Saak word vir afwagting van PG terruggehou. Adv Ebrahim lees die stukke. Open n Ondersoek dag we..eus (?) boek - NW Thoms

96/10/23 Noted. Investigation notes are filed in respective files – Leask

98/02/10 – amnesty hearings o/s.

TP 07

Priority Crimes Litigation Unit

The National Prosecuting Authority of South Africa
Igunya Jikelele Labetshutshisi baMzantsi Afrika
Die Nasionale Vervolgingsgesag van Suid-Afrika

HEAD OFFICE

Tel: +27 12 845-6000
Fax: +27 12 845-6337

Victoria & Griffiths
Mxenge Building
123 Westlake Avenue
Weavind Park
Pretoria
0184

P/Bag X752
Pretoria
0001
South Africa

Docex:
DX207
Pretoria

www.npa.gov.za

5 December 2013

Your Ref: B Sibiya

Legal Resources Centre
Constitutional Litigation Unit
P O Box 9495
JOHANNESBURG
2000

Fax: (011) 834 4273

Dear Sir/Madam

KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA SIMELANE

1. I acknowledge receipt of your letter, addressed to the Acting National Director, dated 28 November 2013, which was brought to my attention on 4 December 2013.

2. I must however apologise to you for not forwarding a reply to you in response to your letter of 20 September 2013. A reply and a progress report were prepared, but due to other pressing commitments, were not forwarded to you prior to the arrival of your latest letter.

3. Due to the contents of your latest letter, I deem it unnecessary to respond to the issues raised in the letter of 20 September 2013, but my failure to respond should not be construed as an admission of any of the facts stated therein.

4. I wish to correct your claim that the police docket was referred to the PCLU in 2001. The PCLU was only created by Presidential Proclamation in March 2003 and officials only assumed duty in either July or August of that year. The investigation initiated by then Captain Leask was not referred by SAPS to the PCLU. It is also not correct that little or no action was taken in this matter until earlier this year. This issue was comprehensively dealt with by Dr Ramaite SC in his communications with your client earlier this year.

5. I respond to your queries raised in para 4 of your letter as follows:

5.1 Ad para 4.1: Failure to hold an inquest between 2001 and 2010

5.1.1 Shortly after his appointment in late 1998, Mr Ngcuka, the then National Director, established a TRC component within his Head Office to attend to prosecution-related matters arising from the TRC. The majority of the amnesty judgments had not been delivered at that time (including the case of your client) and the unit was disbanded in 2001. Captain Leask was instructed by his superiors to suspend his investigation and surrender his docket to Captain Holmes so that the matter could be investigated as part of a larger case against former SAPS General Engelbrecht. Captain Holmes appears not to have investigated your client's case further and his unit was thereafter disbanded and he subsequently died of cancer.

5.1.2 In 2003, the work of the TRC Amnesty Committee was concluded and once the PCLU had become operational, Mr Ngcuka referred the TRC cases to it.

5.1.3 Your client's case was not referred to the PCLU by the authorities who had previously been responsible for the investigation and prosecution of TRC matters, despite a request by the PCLU that all outstanding cases requiring decisions whether or not to prosecute should be referred to it.

5.1.4 It would appear that this matter was brought to the attention of the PCLU in November 2004 when a submission was made by the Foundation for Human Rights (who at that stage represented your client) that the persons who were refused amnesty should be prosecuted. This was taken forward by way of a recommendation in March 2006 that consideration be given to the customary international law crime of torture.

TP 07

5.1.5 I have been advised that several discussions took place between Adv Ackermann SC, the then Head of the PCLU and representatives of the Foundation. In this regard I have been further advised that although at one stage Adv Ackermann SC raised the issue of holding an inquest, this was resisted by the Foundation who then proposed that Sergeant Radebe be prosecuted for kidnapping.

5.1.6 Obviously, consideration to the institution of a prosecution could only be conducted on the basis of a fully investigated police docket. It is clear that Captain Leask had not concluded his investigation and that no further investigations were conducted thereafter. The NPA had no role to play in these decisions. Dr Ramaite SC has explained in his letters to your client why the necessary investigations were not conducted by the relevant law enforcement agencies once the PCLU had become seized with the matter.

5.1.7 As is clear from the instructions given by Adv Macadam when he became seized with the matter, he required the matter to be properly investigated, including the issue of Sergeant Radebe's role in the kidnapping. These investigations have been in progress since October 2010. The holding of an inquest would only be appropriate once a decision whether or not to prosecute had first been taken.

5.2 Ad para 4.2: DNA analysis

A DNA sample was retrieved from the skeletal remains found in the Brits area in April 2013 for comparison with the sample provided by your client. In June 2013, the SAPS laboratory indicated that the sample retrieved from the remains contained inadequate DNA material for comparison purposes. The Head of the SAPS laboratory has however indicated that a second sample will be obtained and submitted to a specialist DNA laboratory in Bosnia, which specialises in DNA analysis relating to bones which are of archaeological significance. The results of the second analysis are still awaited.

5.3 Ad para 4.3: Exhumation-related issues

During the course of a routine excavation in the Brits area, the skeletal remains were found by contractors. In the opinion of the investigating officer and his commander, the remains could be those of Nokuthula Simelane due to the proximity of the site to the farm where she was detained and tortured. The remains were submitted to an anthropologist who made certain findings which may be consistent with the missing person. However, SAPS has been requested to provide a more comprehensive case history in order to establish whether the anthropologist can make more specific findings. In addition, photographs of Nokuthula Simelane taken shortly before her disappearance have been provided to a facial reconstruction expert for forensic investigation. The PCLU has requested a meeting with the Head of the SAPS Forensic Laboratory in order to determine when all the outstanding examinations may be concluded.

TP

5.4 Ad paras 4.5 and 4.6: Westonaria Plot

The plot in question was pointed out by a former police under-cover agent, who was involved in your client's case. Certain investigations were conducted by the NPA's Missing Persons' Task Team (MPTT). A recommendation has been made that the plot be inspected by a specialist anthropologist to determine the feasibility of an exhumation. This aspect must be taken up further by the SAPS Victim Recovery Unit and the necessary direction given to SAPS in this regard.

5.5 Ad para 4.7: Mortuary Records

The MPTT was requested to peruse the records of all mortuaries in areas which have relevance to your client's case. The criteria applied were unidentified females (corresponding with the race, gender and age of the missing person) who had been admitted to the mortuaries during the period of her disappearance and detention. Only the Krugersdorp mortuary (located midway between other key areas, e.g. Westonaria, Soweto, Northam, etc) revealed entries consistent with the criteria set. The records however do not have police reference numbers and the post mortems are illegible. An enquiry directed to the Police Photographic Units established that no photographs were taken at that mortuary at that time. A request has however been made to the SAPS Victim Recovery Unit to canvas the possibility of being able to locate the graves in question and if this is possible, to take a DNA sample from each grave. If a positive connection was made with the sample provided by your client, then obviously that grave will be exhumed.

TP

5.6 Ad para 4.8: Monthly reports

I have already explained why the October report was not provided. I have no record of Legal Resources Centre acting on behalf of your client from February 2013. Adv Macadam was contacted by Adv Palmer, who informed him that he represented your client. From that date, there were ongoing meetings, email communications and telecoms between the two advocates where progress with your client's case was reported on and discussed.

5.7 Ad para 4.9: Reasons for not holding an inquest

I will respond to these issues hereunder.

6. I am prepared to meet with you and would request you to provide me with proposed dates so as to enable me to decide when I can accommodate you. My view is that the outstanding investigations should be concluded in early 2014 and that the holding of an inquest should be held over until the decision whether to prosecute or not has been taken. In terms of the Inquests Act, an inquest is only held when a prosecution on a charge relating to the death of a person is not instituted. I am of the view that the following factors would indicate the inappropriateness of holding an inquest prior to the conclusion of the investigations and the decision being taken:

6.1 A judicial officer would not be inclined to hold an inquest in the absence of a decision not to prosecute and on the basis of an affidavit by the investigating officer that there are key outstanding investigations. Section 4 of the Inquests Act in any event requires that a prosecutor request further information if he/she is not satisfied with the police investigation.

6.2 All the persons (including those who submitted witness statements), who were involved in the kidnapping and torture are entitled to legal representation and to decline to answer incriminating questions. It is only to be expected that their lawyers would object to the commencement of the inquest prior to the investigation being concluded.

6.3 The investigating officer would be seized with the inquest and be unable to continue with his investigations.

6.4 Were an inquest to commence, there would be frequent postponements due to all the outstanding issues.

TP

6.5 Were a prosecution to be instituted, the witnesses would be prejudiced, as they would then be subject to cross-examination in two fora on the same issues.

7. I provide the following further information by way of a progress report covering the period October to December 2013:

7.1 I have already dealt with the issues relating to the skeletal remains found in Brits, the mortuary entries and the Westonaria plot. The SAPS has been requested to address and expedite the outstanding issues relating to these matters. If positive, these investigations could establish that the missing person never returned to Swaziland and would have a serious impact on the version of certain of the amnesty applicants.

7.2 The archive records relating to the persons, whom certain of the applicants claim were arrested as a result of the information provided by the missing person, have been retrieved and carefully perused. The investigating officer has been requested to trace the relevant persons and to obtain comprehensive statements relating to this issue. Where the persons' versions can be verified by the authors of the State documentation retrieved, then those former State officials should also be traced and affidavits obtained from them.

7.3 Additional statements have been requested from certain of the State witnesses arising from material now obtained.

7.4 Photograph albums and maps of the relevant scenes have also been requested.

7.5 A proper search of the State Archives has revealed that documentation referred to during the course of the amnesty hearing cannot be located. However, additional statements taken either by the TRC or SAPS, which appear not to have been before the committee, have been found and the contents of those statements require investigation.

8. As indicated, key evidence relating to the amnesty hearing is no longer available. The records reflect that an Adv van den Berg represented your client at the hearing. If your client is in possession of any of the records relating to the amnesty hearing, it would be appreciated if these could be made available to the investigating officer in order to establish whether the missing documents can be traced. Further evidence available to the investigating officer is that your client's family collected Nokuthula Simelane's passport from Mr Duma after her disappearance. If the family is still in possession of the passport, it would be appreciated if this could be made available to the investigating officer, as it contains highly relevant information.

TP

9. I therefore await your communication regarding a meeting.

Yours sincerely

9/12/2013

ADV SK ABRAHAMS
ACTING SPECIAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS
AND ACTING HEAD: PRIORITY CRIMES LITIGATION UNIT
OFFICE OF THE NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

TPD

"TN 21.3"

51

Office of the National Director of Public Prosecutions

The National Prosecuting Authority of South Africa
Igunya Jikelele Labetshutshisi boMzantsi Afrika
Die Nasionale Vervolgingsgesag van Suid-Afrika

Victoria & Griffiths
Mxenge Building
23 Westlake Avenue
Weavind Park
Silverton

P/Bag X752
Pretoria
0001
Tel: (012) 845-6000
Fax: (012) 845-7291
www.npa.gov.za

31 January 2013

Ms TP Nkadimeng
698 Umhlanga Street
Wingate Park
Pretoria
0181

Fax: (012) 421 3516
Email: nkadimeng.thembi@gmail.com

Dear Ms Nkadimeng

REQUEST FOR THE HOLDING OF A FORMAL INQUEST IN TERMS OF SECTION 5 OF THE INQUESTS ACT 58 OF 1959 IN RESPECT OF THE KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE (PRIORITY INVESTIGATION: JV PLEIN: 1469/02/1996)

1. I acknowledge receipt of your letter, dated 29 January 2013 and at the outset express my extreme sympathy for the suffering you and your family have experienced due to the unresolved disappearance of your sister. The purpose of my communicating with you is to explain fully all the relevant facts relating to your sister's disappearance so as to allay your criticisms levelled at the PCLU. Your case has and will continue to receive diligent attention by the NPA. As will be explained hereunder, it is not possible to hold an inquest prior to the conclusion of the outstanding investigations, which must be conducted by the DPCI.

2. Although your sister disappeared in September 1983, the first information identifying suspects was only received by SAPS in 1996.

3. When the TRC was established, SAPS elected to put on hold all investigations where amnesty application had been lodged. Your sister's matter was one such case.

4. The judgment of the Amnesty Committee was only released in May 2001.

TP

5. When the PCLU was established in 2003, the National Director referred all TRC cases to it.

6. It is correct that the TRC cases were temporarily put on hold pending the formulation of guidelines. This was because it was deemed important that special considerations applied to these cases.

7. Your application to have the provisions (which you state constituted a second amnesty process) set aside, resulted in the Court declaring the whole guidelines unconstitutional, including the mechanisms creating structures for the investigation of such cases.

8. When the President established the Ginwala Commission, SAPS declined to further investigate the matters, pending the conclusion of the Commission. One of the matters falling within the terms of reference of the Commission was the manner in which TRC cases were dealt with by the NPA.

9. The dissolution of the DSO, the establishment of the DPCI and the redefining of the mandate of the detective service did unfortunately hamper efforts to have your case investigated.

10. In early 2010, Adv Macadam was appointed by the Acting National Director to take over all the matters and to liaise directly with the DPCI, following an agreement reached between the NPA and General Dramat.

11. I enclose a copy of Adv Macadam's letter of 25 March 2010, addressed to the Unit Commander of the DPCI, who had been mandated to investigate TRC cases. As emerges from the letter, Adv Macadam did specifically request that the issue of prosecuting Detective Inspector Radebe be investigated. As is also clear from the letter, the NPA at that stage merely had a duplicate docket and it was obviously essential that the original docket and other evidence be located.

12. Captain Masegela was appointed to investigate the matter and in late 2010 submitted a docket to Adv Macadam. I enclose a copy of a letter, dated 27 October 2010, written by Adv Macadam to Captain Masegela, requesting an extensive number of all-embracing investigations. Yet again, the role of Detective Inspector Radebe was emphasised. As is evident from the investigations requested, your sister's case had obviously not been fully investigated, either by the TRC or by SAPS. It is also clear that it would not be possible to quickly finalise the investigation, because of the issues required to be canvassed.

13. It is correct that the PCLU declined to institute a prosecution on the Customary International Law crime of torture and on a charge of attempting to defeat the ends of justice. The two letters, written by Adv Macadam, however demonstrate that the request that consideration be given to the prosecution of Detective Inspector Radebe, was acceded to.

TP

14. It is the view of John Dugard, one of the world's leading experts in the field of International Law, that international crimes require domestic legislation before they can become enforceable in South Africa. The Constitutional Court, in the Wouter Basson matter, also specifically refrained from directing that he be charged for Geneva Convention crimes and in fact limited his potential prosecution only to offences under the Riotous Assemblies Act. The domestic Rome Statute, which criminalises certain international crimes, specifically prohibits prosecutions for such offences committed prior to the enactment of the Statute. The Torture Convention Bill also makes no provision for retrospective criminalisation. The PCLU's decision not to institute a prosecution on a charge of torture was correct. Only a charge of assault with intent to do grievous bodily harm could have been considered, but such crime had prescribed in 2003.

15. The person who alleged that he had been influenced to change his version was deceased even prior to the amnesty hearing. The tape recordings were lost while in police custody. There could therefore be no basis for a prosecution and in addition, charges of defeating the ends of justice would have prescribed in 2006.

16. The docket was not submitted to the PCLU in July 2011 under cover of a report, let alone one as required in terms of Section 4 of the Inquests Act. In fact, the docket was re-submitted with a substantial number of the original investigations not having been conducted and no evidence establishing that your sister was murdered.

Report referred to in the letter

→ Which of those in the 2010 letter

17. Rather than requesting that the outstanding investigations be conducted at that stage, Adv Macadam explored a number of other options, aimed at trying to establish that your sister was in fact murdered by the Security Branch:

    17.1 In a statement, dated May 2011, the original investigating officer indicated that he had been instructed to hand over the docket to Captain Holmes so that it could be part of an investigation against General Engelbrecht. The original docket when located contained no statements taken by Captain Holmes and it was established that he had passed away many years previously. A perusal of the D'Oliveira material failed to reveal any record of investigations conducted by him into your sister's case. It was established that an investigation into General Engelbrecht was conducted, but that the Director of Public Prosecutions: Pretoria declined to prosecute and the National Director concurred with this decision. That investigation contained no evidence referring to your sister's disappearance and murder.

TP 87

17.2 A matter completely overlooked by both the TRC and SAPS was the claim by three of the suspects that bombings of two power stations and a railway line and the arrest of Justice Ngidi confirmed their version. After an extensive search, the dockets relating to the bombings were located and in fact found to contain evidence which would have been materially relevant at the time of the amnesty application. It was however further established that a separate committee of the TRC granted the persons involved in the bombings amnesty. The docket relating to Justice Ngidi could not be located; however, other evidence was obtained which indicated that he was arrested at a different time as alleged by the suspects.

17.3 The discovery of this additional evidence led Adv Macadam to conclude that your sister may have been in fact murdered on the farm. He requested the Missing Persons' Task Team (MPTT) to look into the possibility of conducting an exhumation. A senior international forensic anthropologist however advised that an exploration of the farm should only take place in spring before the summer re-growth of vegetation, but when the ground was again moist after spring rains.

17.4 As an interim measure, the MPTT commenced inspecting mortuary records with the aim of locating cases which matched the description of your sister. This has led to a process of retrieving various inquest records relating to unidentified persons. Once all the records have been obtained, they will be placed before Adv Macadam in order for him to decide whether any of them relate to your sister.

17.5 Although the exploration of the farm was conducted in October 2012, the report from the MPTT was only made available on 25 January 2013. This was because the MPTT explored every possible option which could lead to the identification of the burial site. All these options however were too of no avail and the MPTT has concluded that no exhumation is feasible in the absence of clear evidence as to a specific burial site.

18. The docket was only resubmitted to the PCLU late last week, again containing no further statements, save for the report of the MPTT. The allegation that Ms Fullard advised you to approach the suspects is disputed by her. In any event, I would not authorise any such conduct, as this would not be conducive to the interests of justice.

19. The docket has been carefully perused by Adv Macadam and a Senior State Advocate and is in the process of being re-submitted to the investigating officer with an instruction that all outstanding investigations be concluded without further delay.

20. Only after the matter has fully been investigated can Adv Macadam, in consultation with the relevant Directors of Public Prosecutions, make a properly informed recommendation as to whether a prosecution can be instituted or not. The decision rests with me.

21. The placing of the existing statements before a Magistrate would not serve any useful purpose, because the Magistrate would be constrained not to hold an inquest until the matter has been properly investigated

22. Insofar as you request that the inquest be held in the High Court is concerned, the Inquests Act requires that the Minister approach the Judge President of the relevant division to appoint a Judge. I cannot request the Minister to exercise these powers in the absence of a fully investigated case.

23. As the evidence currently stands, there is confusion as to where your sister was last seen alive and consequently, Section 6(3) of the Inquests Act may apply, which requires that the Minister appoint a specially designated Magistrate. This provision also could not be invoked in the absence of a fully investigated case.

24. Insofar as you also request the appointment of a special prosecutor in consultation with your family, I am of the view that this would impede on the independence of the NPA, because in certain cases, the Courts have set aside appointments of prosecutors where there is a connection to the complainant.

25. I trust that the above reassures you that the matter is receiving proper attention. You will be informed when the matter has been investigated and a decision taken. In the event of the decision being taken to hold an inquest, the various provisions of the Inquests Act will be invoked to ensure that it will be a formal one.

Yours sincerely

DR MS RAMAITE SC
ACTING NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

56

Office of the National Director of Public Prosecutions

NATIONAL PROSECUTING AUTHORITY
South Africa

Victoria & Griffiths
Mxenge Building
123 Westlake Avenue
Weavind Park
Silverton

P/Bag X752
Pretoria
0001
Tel: (012) 845-6000
Fax: (012) 804 9529
www.npa.gov.za

13 August 2013

Your Ref: B Sibiya

Legal Resources Centre
Constitutional Litigation Unit
P O Box 9495
JOHANNESBURG
2000

Fax: (011) 834 4273

Dear Sir/Madam

KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA SIMELANE

Your letters dated 31 July 2013 and 5 August 2013 have reference.

I must at the outset express my understanding of your client's anguish and frustration at the unresolved investigation into the disappearance of her sister.

I am however constrained to respond to the issues raised in your letters.

In response to your client's letter of 29 January 2013, Dr Ramaite SC in detail on 31 January 2013 explained why, although regrettable, no investigations were conducted into the disappearance of your client's sister from 2001 until March 2010.

It must be emphasised that the National Prosecuting Authority (NPA) is not an investigative agency and the mandate of conducting investigations into your clients matter rests with the Directorate for Priority Crime Investigations (DPCI) of the South African Police Service (SAPS).

TP

Since its inception in March 2003, the Priority Crimes Litigation Unit (PCLU) in my office, in addition to conducting and managing prosecutions, has been mandated solely to manage and direct investigations which are conducted by other law enforcement agencies.

It is therefore not correct, as you claim in your letter of 31 July 2013, that it is the NPA (and more specifically the PCLU and/or Adv Macadam of my staff), which is conducting the instant investigation.

During a meeting on 18 February 2013 between your client's then legal representative (Adv Palmer), Adv Macadam, the investigating officer (Captain Ali Masigela) and his commander (Colonel Xaba), the latter endeavoured to conclude the investigation by the end of May 2013.

During May 2013 the DPCI advised the PCLU that its investigation into your client's sister's disappearance would not be concluded by the end of that month. As a result Adv Macadam informed Adv Palmer in writing, on 17 May 2013, that the investigations would not be finished by the end of May 2013, and requested him to indicate his availability for a meeting to discuss the issues as it had previously been agreed that the parties would have a progress meeting at the end of May 2013. Although Adv Palmer was unavailable to attend such a meeting as he was abroad, he was nevertheless informed in writing of what further investigations were being carried out by the DPCI.

On 27 June 2013, Adv Palmer was again provided with written feedback as to the status of the further investigations which had to be conducted. In this regard, he was specifically informed at the time that an exact date for the conclusion of such investigations could not be given.

I have been advised that in addition to the written communications between Adv Macadam and Adv Palmer, there were several telephonic communications where the issue of the progress and investigations was discussed.

Towards the end of July 2013 Adv Macadam was contacted telephonically by Adv Palmer, phoning from abroad, who requested a meeting which was consequently scheduled for 20 August 2013. This was the earliest date that Adv Palmer was available.

TP 07

Your client's contention that the investigation can be finalised by 30 August 2013 is unfortunately practically impossible and hence entirely misplaced. I am constrained to point out the following:

i. Ms Nokuthula Simelane disappeared in 1983.

ii. The first information relating to her disappearance came to light in 1996, resulting in a police docket being opened.

iii. The investigating officer at that time was instructed by his superiors not to continue with the investigation.

iv. An amnesty hearing of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC) produced a series of contradictory versions from the witnesses who testified.

v. The judgment of the Amnesty Committee was only handed down in May 2001.

vi. In March 2010 a duplicate docket as well as TRC material which had been requested from the State Archives was available.

vii. The original docket was only located later the same year, which resulted in the investigating officer being directed to conduct a number of extensive and complex investigations on 27 October 2010.

viii. What transpired further has been dealt with extensively in Dr Ramaite SC's letter referred to above.

I have been advised that the following aspects are under investigation by the DPCI:

i. Skeletal remains were found during the course of an exhumation, which are currently undergoing full forensic and DNA analysis. The DPCI has indicated that the outcome of these examinations will determine the nature of further investigations which are necessary. I have been advised that the results of the analysis are only expected within the next four to five months.

ii. The Missing Persons' Task Team (MPTT) has examined the mortuary records of all mortuaries which have relevance to the disappearance of your client's sister. Four mortuary entries have been shortlisted. However, the records do not contain legible post mortem reports and in certain instances the relevant police station and docket particulars are not reflected. As an interim measure enquiries are being conducted with the local fingerprint bureaus in order to establish whether photographs were taken prior to the post mortems and whether such albums are currently still in existence.

TP

iii. The various safe houses in use by the Soweto Security Branch were inspected by the MPTT in order to establish whether human remains could have been buried there. The examinations produced negative results. However, in respect of a small holding in Westonaria, enquiries are being conducted to assess the feasibility of an exhumation. Obviously the outcome of all the other exhumation-related issues will determine whether an exhumation should be conducted at this site.

iv. It was a key submission by several of the amnesty applicants that the arrest of a number of MK operatives supported their version that Ms Simelane had not been tortured for a month, as alleged by other applicants. Extensive efforts are being made, via the SAPS, Justice and other State Archive systems, to locate the relevant dockets, court records and other relevant documentation so that not only properly informed consultations may be conducted with these persons, but also so that corroboration from former State officials may be forthcoming. It is an extremely time consuming process to request and retrieve such information which has to be followed up carefully.

In your letter of 31 July 2013, you demand that I make a decision to prosecute the alleged perpetrators or refer the matter for the holding of an inquest by no later than 30 August 2013. In your letter of 5 August 2013, you infer that your client would review her instruction should no decision be forthcoming on the premise that a reasonable explanation for the delay in the finalisation of the investigation is provided.

In light of the nature of the investigations, I am not persuaded that the DPCI would be able to conclude same by the end of August 2013.

In terms of the NPA Policy, a decision whether or not to prosecute must be carefully considered and may only be taken once all the relevant issues have been properly investigated. In the event that I decide to institute a prosecution, I must, inter alia, be satisfied that there are reasonable prospects of a successful prosecution.

TP

Similarly, an inquest may only be held once a case has been fully investigated and where a prosecutor has declined to prosecute. The holding of an inquest before the issues set out above have been investigated would in all probability result in the presiding officer declining to hold an inquest.

The amnesty hearing demonstrated serious legal challenges to the conflicting versions of witnesses and applicants. Any attempts made to hold an inquest without all the relevant issues having been investigated would result in objections from the lawyers representing the implicated parties causing an untenable delay.

Once the matter has been fully investigated, the evidence must be carefully evaluated by the PCLU, which must also canvas the views of the Directors of Prosecution of the South and North Gauteng High Courts where key elements of the offences were committed. I will thereafter be provided with a recommendation on whether or not to prosecute. I will thereafter advise you of my decision herein once I have fully applied my mind to the relevant material.

I wish to reassure your client that the PCLU is doing its level best to ensure the DPCI speedily and efficiently conclude the investigation into the kidnapping, torture, disappearance and murder of her sister, Ms Nokuthula Simelane.

The PCLU will also advise your client, through you, on any progress with the outstanding investigation on a monthly basis up until the finalisation of the investigation.

I therefore advise you to consult carefully with your client on the contents of this letter. Should you nevertheless proceed with a court application, same will be opposed and an appropriate order of cost sought.

I trust you find the above in order.

Yours sincerely

ADV N JIBA
ACTING NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

TP

TN 21.5

61

Priority Crimes Litigation Unit

HEAD OFFICE

Tel: +27 12 845-6000
Fax: +27 12 845-6337

Victoria & Griffiths
Mxenge Building
Westlake Avenue
Weavind Park
Pretoria
0184

P/Bag X752
Pretoria
0001
South Africa

Docex:
DX207
Pretoria

www.npa.gov.za

25 March 2010

Senior Superintendent Louis Bester
Directorate for Priority Crimes Investigations
PRETORIA
0001

By hand

Dear Superintendent Bester

INVESTIGATION: NOKUTHULA SIMELANE; JOHN VORSTER PLEIN CR 1469/02/1998

In this case, the deceased disappeared from the Carlton Centre in 1983 and to date, her body has not been recovered.

An investigation by the D'Oliveira Unit obtained evidence to the effect that she was kidnapped from the Carlton Centre, taken to the Norwood Police Barracks and thereafter, to a farm in the North West Province, where she was assaulted by Security Branch members.

Several former Security Branch members, including Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong received amnesty for her kidnapping, but not for her assault. The assault crime prescribed in 2003 and consequently at this stage, consideration can only be given to an investigation into her murder. At present, there is no evidence indicating where and when she was killed and what was done with her body.

The family are represented by Adv Howard Varney (Cell: 0716720122 and 0832617062) and have requested that consideration by given to prosecuting former Detective Inspector Msebenzi Timothy Radebe, who was involved in the kidnapping at the Carlton Centre and Norwood Police Station. He had submitted a witness statement, "A22" in the docket.

TP M

It must be established whether the witnesses are still available and whether they confirm their statements in the docket, as well as their testimony before the Truth Commission. They should also indicate whether there is anything in addition which they would like at this stage to indicate.

The version of Radebe differs from that of the other persons, who were State witnesses. The decision to treat Radebe as a witness and to obtain an affidavit from him rather than warning him, appears strange. The former investigating officer must be approached and requested to explain why a witness statement was taken from Radebe. If he was made a witness, it would be difficult at this stage to justify now charging him.

In the event of the National Director declining to prosecute in this matter, then an inquest would have to be held and it must be established in which Magisterial District the farm where the deceased was last seen alive is located.

The NPA was only provided with a duplicate docket. It is only to be anticipated that it may be difficult to locate the original, as this was opened by the D'Oliveira Unit, which closed down 10 years ago. However, the witnesses can confirm that the statements in the duplicate docket properly reflect their versions as provided to the D'Oliveira Investigation Unit.

The duplicate docket and four other files are attached herewith and must be returned once the investigation has been completed.

Kind regards

RC MACADAM
DEPUTY DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS
AND DEPUTY HEAD: PRIORITY CRIMES LITIGATION UNIT

TP

TN 21.6

63

Priority Crimes Litigation Unit

HEAD OFFICE

Tel: +27 12 845-6000
Fax: +27 12 845-6337

Victoria & Griffiths
Mxenge Building
Nesllake Avenue
Weavind Park
Pretoria
0184

P/Bag X752
Pretoria
0001
South Africa

Docex:
DX207
Pretoria

www.npa.gov.za

27 October 2010

Captain TP Masegela
Crimes Against the State
PRETORIA
0001

Email: BesterL@saps.org.za

Dear Captain Masegela

NOKUTHULA SIMELANE
JOHN VORSTER SQUARE CAS 1469/02/96
CATS 01/082010

In this matter no person has as yet been arrested or prosecuted. No corpse has been found which matches that of the missing person. In the event of a prosecution not being conducted, an inquest would have to be held. Having regard to the facts of the case, were an inquest to be held, it would be desirable that a formal one be held.

The material placed before me consists of the following:

(a) A duplicate John Vorster Plein docket missing certain statements;

(b) An original investigation diary;

(c) Loose photographs;

(d) Extracts from the Amnesty application.

I have added the judgment of the Amnesty Committee to the TRC documents.

Both the initial investigation and the amnesty hearing require further investigations, which are set out hereunder. In the event of a prosecution, only the police investigation and the statements and evidence of the State witnesses, who applied for amnesty, may form part of the docket. The amnesty statements and evidence of the accused could not form part of the docket.

TP 07

In the event of an inquest, all the relevant facts would have to be placed before the inquest Magistrate, in which case all the amnesty material would have to be included.

It is therefore recommended that the docket be compiled in three separate sections:

1. The police investigation and all investigations carried out thereon;
2. All the material which was placed before the Amnesty Committee;
3. All investigations carried out as a result of the evidence before the Amnesty Committee.

A complete set of all the evidential material (testimony applications and documents) placed before the Amnesty Committee must be obtained. A bundle would have been compiled by the TRC of all the relevant documentary evidence, placed before the Committee. (This may have included the police docket.)

The applicants completed application forms and attached thereto statements and other documents.

The applicants and witnesses then testified and the transcripts of their evidence are necessary, as well as any documents which may have been introduced during their testimony.

Documentation currently missing includes:

- The testimony of Duma Nkosi;
- Portions of the cross-examination of Veyi;
- Statement made by Veyi, which accompanied his amnesty application.

As far as the police investigation is concerned, the following further investigations are necessary:

TP 87

- ✓ Although the original "C"-clip is in the docket, the "B"-clip and the original "A"-clip are missing. There is a duplicate docket, but certain statements are missing, certain statements have not been allocated an "A"-clip number and certain statements have not been signed, nor commissioned.

- ✓ A portion of another docket Krugersdorp CAS 1263/01/96 has been included in the John Vorster docket, but the whole Krugersdorp docket is required.

- ✓ The original investigating officer is required to submit a statement, setting out all the steps taken in the investigation and indicating when last he had the original docket in his possession. He should also assist in reconstructing the docket and addressing issues relating to the unsigned statements, etc.

- ✓ According to the investigation diary, in 1996 the Rustenburg LCRC compiled a photograph album and sketch plan of the farm where the missing person was detained. This album and plan should be obtained, as at present, there are only loose photographs. If the original album cannot be located, then the farm must be revisited with the relevant witnesses and a new album and sketch plan compiled.

- ✓ It must be established whether all the original witnesses are available and if so, they must be requested to comment on whether they stand by their original statements and if they testified before the TRC, their TRC versions. Any contradictions or retractions should be properly explained.

- ✓ In several of the statements reference is made to persons who are claimed to be dead. Confirmation of these deaths must be obtained.

- ✓ The issue of "A22" (MT Radebe) is puzzling and must be clarified:

    - The first witness to come forward was Vayi, who indicated that Radebe participated in the torture at the farm. The statement of Radebe is however to the effect that he only guarded the missing person at the Norwood flat for a week and was then transferred to the John Vorster Vehicle Branch. Another witness, Selamolela, also alleges that Radebe was at the farm and in fact claims that the missing person was last seen in Radebe's company, together with two other persons, namely Coetzee and Pretorius. All the witnesses involved in the kidnapping and assault of the missing person made statements to Captain Leask, who warned them of their right against self-incrimination.

- In the case of Radebe, we only have an unsigned and unattested statement, purportedly taken by Captain Ndlovu of the Braamfontein Police. Radebe was not warned of his right against self-incrimination according to the statement. The circumstances under which the statement was obtained must be properly established and in particular, it must be established whether at any stage, Radebe signed an affidavit.

- If Veyi and Selamolela are telling the truth about Radebe's involvement at the farm, then his statement to the effect that he was never there must be a lie. Conversely, if in fact he was transferred to the Vehicle Branch, then a question mark hangs over the veracity and the reliability of Veyi and Selamolela as witnesses.

- Whether Radebe is being truthful or not could easily have been verified by establishing whether in fact he was transferred to the Vehicle Branch in early September 1983. The original investigating officer must indicate whether any investigations in this regard were conducted and if so, what the outcome thereof was. If this was not properly established at the time of the initial investigation, then this aspect must be now investigated. I assume that the SAPS personnel registers could provide relevant information. According to the private investigator, Radebe is still a serving member of SAPS.

- Radebe never applied for amnesty and the family of the missing person have made representations that he should be prosecuted. Whether he can at this stage be prosecuted would depend on whether he was given the status of a witness at the time of the initial investigation. The investigating officer must be requested to fully explain this issue.

- Once all of the above has been investigated, Radebe should be approached, warned of his rights and requested to indicate if he wishes to make a statement at this stage.

✓ Although it is alleged that Peter Lengene is dead, he made various statements in the docket. He alleges that there was an attempt by Pretorius and Coetzee involving Director Thoms, to induce him to make a false statement. The docket shows that the original investigators and other police officers were involved in arranging for the under-cover policeman, Norman Mkonza (Scotch) to have a taped conversation with either Pretorius or Coetzee. Various entries have been made in the investigation diary and reference is made to a tape being kept as an exhibit. The investigating officer must explain what the outcome of all of this was and Director Thoms must also be approached to indicate whether he has any knowledge of this matter.

TP

- ✓ According to Patrick Kobe ("A7"), he heard that Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong had killed the missing person. He must indicate from whom he received this information.

- ✓ A further statement must be taken from Duma Nkosi, providing the further additional detail:

    - o Whether the missing person was known to him prior to her being sent to him by Mpho;
    - o How he received instructions from Mpho;
    - o What the missing person exactly was to do;
    - o To whom he made enquiries to trace the missing person's whereabouts;
    - o Whether he suspected that the missing person had been detained by the Security Branch and if so, whether he adopted any counter-measures.

- ✓ A further statement from Justice Ngidi must be obtained covering the following:

    - o What the nature of his dealings with the missing person were;
    - o When last he saw her before she disappeared;
    - o Whether he was aware of what duties she was performing on behalf of Mpho;
    - o What missions Mpho gave to Scotch and Frank;
    - o What training was given to these persons and how well were they known to Mpho;
    - o Since it appears that he was based in Swaziland at the time, he should comment on what structures were in place in Swaziland at the time. Lengene said that Coetzee and others were taking the missing person to Swaziland. The witness must be requested to indicate what structures would have been in place on the Swaziland side of the border post and what would have happened had the missing person presented herself at that point.

TP 87

- ✓ It must be established how far from the Oshoek Border Post the University where the missing person was studying at, the premises from which Gilbert Twala operated and the home of Thembi Vilakatim are.
- ✓ The person referred to as John June in paragraph 9 of Gilbert Twala's affidavit must be traced and requested to submit a statement regarding his knowledge of the matter.
- ✓ According to Veyi, Manuel from Mozambique was also involved. Efforts should be made to identify him and obtain a statement from him.
- ✓ There is also reference to an Adrian Bambo, who is also referred to as "Strongman". It must be established whether in fact he is now deceased.
- ✓ According to the witness statements, the following premises and intersections have relevance:
    - The Norwood Flats;
    - The farm at Northam;
    - The Potchefstroom Security Branch office;
    - The intersection referred to by Veyi;

  A map should be obtained where all these points are marked and the distances between them indicated.
- ✓ At the end of the police investigation, the following emerges:
    - Veyi says that he was in the company of Selamolela when he saw the missing person in the boot of Coetzee's car after she had left the farm and at a four-way stop.
    - Selamolela however claims that he last saw her at the farm in the company of Coetzee, Pretorius and Radebe.

TP 07

- Lengene says that the missing person was told to wash and put on new clothes, because she was being taken to Swaziland. He claims he drove her in a van to the servants' quarters in a certain house in Westonaria where she was left in the company of Sefuthi, Pretorius and Coetzee.

- Sefuthi merely mentions being at the farm, does not indicate when he last saw her and in whose company she was, but claims that he suspects that she was killed by Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong, because they threatened her with death during the interrogation. He does not mention Radebe as being present at the farm.

- It would appear that Pretorius, Coetzee and Mong were not informed of the allegations and invited to respond.

✓ The versions referred to above are all contradictory and on the very points where corroboration should be obtained, the witnesses contradict each other, e.g. Selamolela makes no mention of being at the intersection with Veyi and Sefuthi makes no mention of being at the house in Westonaria. Lengene's version of the missing person being prepared to return to Swaziland and leaving in his van is not supported by the other witnesses. It must be established whether there are other members of the Security Branch Unit to which all these persons belonged, who could possibly at this stage shed light on the various allegations.

✓ The confusion continues at the amnesty application where for example Selamolela is emphatic that he did not accompany Veyi to the intersection and suggests that this was Sefuthi. Sefuthi never testified at the amnesty application and as is clear from his statement to the police, last saw the missing person at the farm.

✓ Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong all testified at the amnesty application and denied that the missing person was as severely assaulted as claimed by the other witnesses. They also claimed that she agreed to become a police informer and was handed over to two under-cover police officers (whom they claimed were now dead), who dropped her off at the Oshoek Border Post. This contradicts the version of the other witnesses to the effect that the missing person at no stage agreed to cooperate and being an informer.

✓ Coetzee was cross-examined on the basis of information which Lengene provided to Fanie Malapo. A statement must be obtained from Mr Malapo in which he sets out what he knows about this matter and what exactly was conveyed to him by Lengene and any other person whom he may have interviewed.

TP

- ✓ It was a key feature of Mong, Pretorius and Coetzee's amnesty applications that they could not have participated in the protracted assaults as alleged, because at that time they were involved in the investigation of certain terrorist cases and carried out arrests. Efforts should be made to trace these cases in order to confirm whether there is objective proof that he was performing duties outside the farm at Northam at the relevant time. A Mr Brits was at one stage in charge of all the dockets opened by the Security Branch and I believe that these dockets are currently being stored at CATS.

- ✓ It was also a feature of the applications that they claimed that they planted certain explosive devices at power stations and a railway line in order to create the impression that these attacks had been carried out by MK. This was ostensibly to deceive the ANC into believing that these attacks had been carried out as a result of the missing person's information. Again with reference to the dockets and other records (e.g. Bomb Disposal Unit records) held by SAPS, it must be established whether these explosions in fact took place and whether there is evidence showing that it was these persons who carried out these attacks.

- ✓ Finally, it was also alleged that as a result of the information provided by the missing person that certain MK members were arrested and prosecuted. This issue also surfaced in the cross-examination of Gilbert Twala, who admitted that certain persons had been arrested, but alleged that this had taken place before the disappearance of the missing person and on the basis of the information of an informer. Again, efforts must be made to establish the relevant details regarding the arrest of these persons in order to establish which of the two versions is correct. In this regard, the Department of Justice & Constitutional Development still retains records relating to the detention of various people and these should also be checked.

- ✓ Coetzee, Mong and Pretorius place reliance on various people who they allege are now dead. In addition to the two under-cover police officers referred to above, reference is also made to Brigadier Muller, Coetzee's commanding officer, as well as to "Strongman" Mbombo. It must be established whether these persons did in fact hold the positions as alleged and when they died. This is important, because it will have to be decided whether they were implicated specifically because it was known that they were dead and could not refute the allegations.

TP

✓ Coetzee claims that Brigadier Muller briefed Brigadier Schoon about the plan to use the missing person as an informer. It must be established whether Brigadier Schoon is alive and if he can comment on this allegation.

✓ Coetzee also claims that the Eastern Transvaal Security Branch had a file on the missing person, who had been identified as a MK member. Efforts should be made to identify the members of this branch at that time to see if anyone can confirm or deny this allegation.

✓ The version of how the missing person was tortured, became an informer, was dropped off at the border post and then no inquiries made when she disappeared, appears to me to be implausible. Efforts should be made to establish whether there is a reliable senior member of the Security Branch who could indicate whether the process followed by Coetzee was in fact appropriate in the light of the procedures and practices of the Security Branch of that time.

✓ According to Veyi, he met with the Divisional Head of the Security Branch at Potchefstroom after leaving the farm. (See pages 105 and 106.) It must be established who the Divisional Head was at the time and if he is available, a statement must be obtained from him.

✓ It was common cause that Veyi first approached The Sowetan and in particular a journalist, Sharon Chetty. Veyi was cross-examined about the fact that the journalist reported that he had decided to come forward, because Coetzee and the others had been promoted and not himself. He denied having said this. The journalist also reported that the ANC only contacted the missing person's family 10 years after she had disappeared, which was also disputed by Gilbert Twala. The journalist must be traced and asked to comment on these allegations.

✓ Selamolela alleges that there was only one entrance to the Norwood Flats, which was disputed by Coetzee. It must be established which version is true. If the building has been unaltered, then current photographs can be taken. If however it has subsequently changed, then efforts must be made to establish whether there are plans or photographs of it as it existed in 1983.

TP 97

- ✓ There were major disputes between the witnesses surrounding the dam, the outbuilding, the main farm house and the washing facilities available. If the premises have not been altered in the interim, they should be photographed to obtain clarity on all these issues.

- ✓ In his evidence, Gilbert Twala mentioned a number of persons who might have knowledge of the events, e.g. Wally and Wendy Mbana. Efforts must be made to trace these people to obtain statements from them.

- ✓ Gilbert Twala was called to refute the allegation that the missing person had returned to Swaziland and been murdered by the ANC. Under cross-examination he however alleged that he could not talk about ANC structures in Swaziland, but only knew about the Transvaal Unit located in Soweto. Efforts would have to be made to identify the relevant structures in Swaziland at the time, who can comment on the allegation made by Coetzee and others. Twala alleged that Siphiwe Nyanda, currently the Minister of Communications, may well be placed to assist in this regard. It was specifically alleged that the missing person had meetings with the current Minister. The Minister would have to be approached to provide a statement.

- ✓ Under cross-examination of Mr Twala, it was put to him that there was an intelligence unit which killed MK members, who were traitors. It was also alleged that the Motsoanyane Commission also made a finding concerning a person who had the same MK name as the missing person. These aspects would have to be investigated and if necessary, statements obtained.

- ✓ Swaziland is a SADC member and consequently, the SADC policing protocol applies. Contact should be made with the Swaziland authorities to establish whether it is at all feasible that records would exist showing that a body matching that of the missing person was ever found. It is highly unlikely that such a search of police dockets and inquests could be conducted, but it would have to be explained to a Court that this avenue was explored.

- ✓ It is clear that there are considerable disputes regarding how and under what circumstances the missing person left the farm. This raises the possibility as to whether she was not in fact killed and buried on the farm. A suitably qualified exhumation expert should be requested to visit the farm in order to establish whether any exhumation is at all possible. An exhumation under forensic procedures should be carried out if the response is positive.

TP 67

- ✓ According to Lengene, the missing person was taken to a private residence in Westonaria. Under cross-examination, Coetzee admitted that he had a brother who lived in Westonaria and worked on a mine. This avenue should be properly investigated.

- ✓ According to Veyi, he was told by a former police officer who subsequently died, that Coetzee and Pretorius had shot the missing person and buried her in Rustenburg. It should be established whether Coetzee and Pretorius had safe houses in the Rustenburg area or friends or relatives who had plots or farms in Rustenburg. If any premises are identified, consideration should be given to whether an exhumation is feasible.

- ✓ As I have already indicated, the witnesses who gave statements must be requested to confirm what has already been said. It would appear that Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong have never cooperated with the investigation and it would be appropriate, once all the investigations have been concluded, to approach them via their attorney, Mr Wagener, to comment on the allegations.

- ✓ As I have also already indicated, the situation relating to Radebe is strange. It may well be that he could hold the key to explaining what really happened on the farm and he should be approached in this light.

The duplicate docket and four blue files may be collected from my office, but must be returned to me once the investigations have been concluded.

Kind regards

RC MACADAM
DEPUTY DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS
AND DEPUTY HEAD: PRIORITY CRIMES LITIGATION UNIT

TP

TN 21.7

74

THEMBISILE PHUMELELE NKADIMENG

698 Umhlanga Street
Wingate Park
PRETORIA 0181

Tel: 012 421 3500
Fax: 012 4213516
Cell: 082 553 6680
Email: nkadimeng.thembi@gmail.com

11 February 2013

The Acting National Director of Public Prosecutions
National Prosecuting Authority
Private Bag X752
Pretoria
0001

Fax: (012) 845 6337

BY HAND

Dear Dr Silas Ramaite,

REQUEST FOR THE HOLDING OF A FORMAL INQUEST IN TERMS OF SECTION 5 OF THE INQUESTS ACT 58 OF 1959 IN RESPECT OF THE KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE (PRIORITY INVESTIGATION: JV PLEIN: 1469/02/1996)

I thank you for your letter dated 29 January 2013. The purpose of this letter is to respond to your letter and secondly to consider the most appropriate way forward.

I acknowledge and appreciate your expression of sympathy for me and my family. Regrettably, I am unable to accept your contention that the murder of my sister has received the "diligent attention of the NPA". Very little has happened in this matter since a docket was opened in the mid-1990s and not much more has transpired since the matter was referred to the PCLU in 2003. I find it very difficult to understand how a murder investigation can proceed for nearly 2 decades with no progress or conclusion one way or another. Either a prosecution or an inquest should have taken place by now. The failure to resolve this matter, and other outstanding cases from the past, has done a great disservice to me and my family, as well as many other families and communities, and indeed to the country.

I am also advised that an inquest may not be unreasonably delayed simply because every last aspect has not been completed. The holding of an inquest and even the making of an inquest finding does not prevent further investigation from taking place. If one had to wait until every last aspect of an investigation is completed a neglectful official or one acting in bad faith may delay or prevent a public inquiry into a death by never completing the investigation.

I note that in your paragraph 12 you state that by late 2010 the case had "not been fully investigated by the TRC or by (the) SAPS". I agree with this conclusion but would state further that more than 2 years later the same situation pertains. I would also suggest that the responsibility for this dire state of affairs cannot be laid exclusively at the door of the SAPS. The

TP

NPA must also bear some responsibility as it oversees and directs investigations of the police and as from 2003 was directly responsible for the "TRC cases", including this matter.

I have been advised to respond to certain matters raised in your letter. I do not intend to deal with every matter raised in your letter and the attached correspondence and such failure should not be construed as acceptance of the contentions made therein. For the moment I will confine my response to those matters which are simply incorrect and cannot stand uncontested.

At paragraph 2 of your letter you state that the first information identifying the suspects was only received by the SAPS in 1996. This assertion is not consistent with the facts. The culprits were the police themselves. My sister was kidnapped, tortured and murdered by the police. These crimes were authorized at the highest level of the organisation. Not only did the police know who the suspects were they also colluded in the cover-up of the crimes. It is possible that up to the present day elements in the police are still colluding in this cover-up.

I note that in paragraph 6 you concede that the "TRC cases were temporarily put on hold pending the formulation of the guidelines" since "it was deemed important that special considerations" applied to them. You do not state how long the TRC cases were put on hold or what special considerations warranted their holding back and differentiation from other cases. It is clear that this case, as well as other serious cases, were held back for several years. During this time many crimes that ought to have been prosecuted prescribed in terms of the statute of limitations. This, in my view, was unforgiveable. The formulation of the so-called guidelines in no way justified the suspension of investigations into murder and other serious crimes. Such suspension grossly undermined the rule of law as well as our rights to justice, equality and human dignity, In striking down the guidelines, (the amendments to the National Prosecution Policy dated 1 December 2005 made in terms of s 179(5) of the Constitution) ("the amendments") the High Court found that they amounted to a "copy-cat" of the TRC amnesty process.[1] Far from the guidelines constituting "important" or "special considerations" the High Court found such considerations to be irrelevant for purposes of taking prosecutorial decisions and that they were "a recipe for conflict and absurdity".[2]

In your paragraph 7 you state that the court case which struck down the amendments to the Prosecution Policy also disabled the "structures for the investigation of such cases." Presumably this was stated in order to give the impression that the investigative capacity had to be rebuilt thereby causing further delay. I am advised that the striking down of the amendments had no such effect. In terms of paragraph B4 of the amendments responsibility for oversight of investigations and institution of prosecutions of such cases remained with the PCLU. Under paragraph B6 the PCLU was to be "assisted" by "senior designated officials" from the National Intelligence Agency, the Department of Justice, the SAPS and the then Directorate of Special Operations. This so-called assistance was presumably to advise the PCLU on who should receive immunity under the amendments. The then Director of the PCLU complained bitterly, in a meeting attended by my legal representatives, that the so called "senior designated officials" were never available to meet and as a result the process had ground to a halt. If anything the striking down of the amendments removed the investigatory constraints as well as the unlawful interference of other bodies in the constitutional duties of the NPA.

---

[1] Judgment, par 15.4.3.1, Thembisile Nkadimeng and Others vs. The National Director of Public Prosecutions and Another (TPD case no 32709/07)

[2] Judgment, par 15.5.3

TP 9

I am advised that the content of your paragraph 14 is not a correct interpretation of the applicable international criminal law. The suggestion that the Constitutional Court in S v Basson 'specifically refrained from directly that he be charged for Geneva Conventions crimes' because 'international crimes require domestic legislation before they can become enforceable in South Africa' is wrong. In fact the Constitutional Court explicitly refrained from addressing the question of whether prosecutions can be brought directly under customary international law, noting: "We have not found it necessary to consider whether customary international law could be used either as the basis in itself for a prosecution under the common law, or, alternatively, as an aid to the interpretation of section 18(2)(a) of the Riotous Assemblies Act."[3] On the question of whether South African law allows for prosecutions under customary international law directly through the common law (in the absence of implementing legislation) I am advised that section 232 of the Constitution supports such prosecutions. In any event Parliament has recently settled this question with the adoption of the Implementation of the Geneva Conventions Act 8 of 2012, which contains a provision stating:[4]

> "Nothing in this Act must be construed as precluding the prosecution of any person accused of having committed a breach under customary international law before this Act took effect".

In light of this, the references to a temporal limitation on the Implementation of the Rome Statute Act 12 of 2002 and the Torture Convention Bill are misplaced, as specific legislation is not required in order to prosecute a crime that was "an offence under ... international law at the time it was committed ...".

The factual claim in your paragraph 15 that the person who alleged he had been influenced to change his version is deceased is incorrect. That person is Norman "Scotch" Mkhonza. He is not deceased as claimed. Moreover your assertion that the charge of 'defeating the ends of justice' would have prescribed in 2006 cannot be correct. The conversation in question took place on 10 February 1996. Section 18 of the Criminal Procedure Act provides for the lapsing of the right to prosecute after 20 years which means that such a charge would only prescribe in 2016.

The claim made in your paragraph 17.2 that the explosions at the power stations and railway lines on 10 September 1983 was "completely overlooked" by the TRC is not correct. Since those explosions occurred shortly before Nokuthula was kidnapped these facts were put before the TRC's Amnesty Commission as it established the falsity of the version of the white Security Branch officers. The officers claimed that the explosions were instigated as a result of information provided to them by Nokuthula. This version is false if the explosions occurred before Nokuthula's kidnapping on 11 September 1983. In relation to the arrest of Justice Ngidi, the former Mayor of Sandton, I am advised that there was nothing stopping the police from carrying out elementary inquiries that would have easily demonstrated that Ngidi's capture did not remotely coincide with the period that Nokuthula was held captive. Accordingly she could not have provided the information that led to Ngidi's arrest as the white officers so forcefully claimed. It took the NPA and the police some 10 years to establish this crucial evidence notwithstanding the fact that the obvious flaw in this version was conspicuously highlighted during the Amnesty proceedings in the late 1990s.

I am advised that the tasks referred to in your paragraphs 17.3 to 17.5 are not good reasons for the delay in the investigation. These are basic tasks that should have occurred many years previously.

---

[3] Footnote 147.
[4] Section 7(4), ICC Act.

TP

I am advised that your assertion in paragraph 21 that it would be pointless placing existing information before an inquest court since the presiding officer would be "constrained not to hold inquest until the matter has been properly investigated" is not correct. In the first place this matter has never been properly investigated. Pursuing a few inquiries at the last moment is not going to remedy this state of affairs. An inquest has primarily an investigative function. Section 8(1) of the Inquests Act authorizes the presiding officer of an inquest court to, of his or her own accord, or at the request of any person with an interest, to subpoena any person to give evidence or produce any document or thing at the inquest. Accordingly an inquest is well placed to remedy shortcomings in an investigation, such as this one.

I assume in your paragraph 23 that the section you refer to in the Inquest Act is section 6(c) and not 6(3) which does not exist.

I now deal with the claim that it would be difficult to charge Radebe at this stage if he had been made a witness previously (PLCU Letter addressed to the Directorate of Priority Crimes dated 25 March 2010). I am advised that a person previously approached as a witness (presuming this was the case in respect of Radebe) can be subsequently charged and prosecuted. This is particularly the case where the statement made by such witness is patently false. Radebe has been blatantly untruthful in respect of his statement. He has not been given any express or implied immunity from prosecution. I am further advised that If Radebe agrees to be a cooperating state witness he can be warned in terms of s204 of the Criminal Procedure Act. He can be prosecuted subsequently if found to be mendacious; and indeed he can be charged directly if he refuses to fully cooperate at the outset. In any event the concern expressed appears to be an academic one since the letter dated 27 October 2010 from RC Macadam to Captain Masegela discloses that the Radebe's statement in the docket is "unsigned and unattested".

I note that Advocate Macadam is of the view that establishing whether Radebe was transferred to the Vehicle Branch in early September 2003 will determine whether he was being truthful about his presence at the farm. I am constrained to advise that mere evidence of a transfer to another unit does not in itself mean that he was not at the farm at the relevant time. Evidence of physical presence at another location will be required. I note that the 27 October 2010 letter is silent on Radebe's evidence of the actual kidnapping of Nokuthula where it is clear that he is lying.

In the circumstances I am of the firm view that there has been more than ample time to carry out these investigations, which ought to be in its final stages. I note that you state that this case is being attended to diligently in order to finalize the outstanding tasks. In this regard I am concerned that as recently as 4th and 8th February the investigating officer advised me that he had received no instructions to continue with the investigation.

I wish for a decision to be made one way or the other within the very near future. In view of the inordinately long delay I have sought legal advice from my legal team on how best to ensure that such decision is taken within a reasonable time. While they have advised that legal action is a real possibility they have also indicated that I should permit you and the police a reasonable time period within which to complete those investigations that are strictly necessary.

Your letter of 31 January 2013 does not disclose what these outstanding tasks are aside from the perusal of mortuary records. The letters of Advocate Macadam addressed to the investigating officers in March and October 2010 do disclose outstanding tasks. I would have thought that after more than 2 years these tasks would have been finalized by now. If they have not been attended I must insist on an explanation as to why not. The tasks include the tracing of missing documents and items, the drawing of a map and the taking of some 4 statements. I am entitled to know which of these tasks have been completed and which ones are outstanding. I further wish you to advise me approximately how much more time is required to finalize the investigation.

TP

I wish to place on record that I will no longer accept inordinate delays and that my rights in this regard are reserved. I have requested some of my legal representatives to meet with Advocate Macadam and Captain Masegela on 18 February 2013 in order to discuss what outstanding tasks are strictly necessary for purposes of completing the investigation; what a reasonable deadline would be for such tasks; and the criteria that the NPA will employ for deciding whether to prosecute or refer to a formal inquest.

Yours sincerely,

T P NKADIMENG

Copy to: Advocate Chris Macadam, Priority Crimes Litigation Unit
Captain Masegela, South African Police Service

TP

TN21.8
79

Office of the National Director of Public Prosecutions

NATIONAL PROSECUTING AUTHORITY
South Africa

Victoria & Griffiths
Mxenge Building
123 Westlake Avenue
eavind Park
Silverton

P/Bag X752
Pretoria
0001
Tel: (012) 845-6000
Fax: (012) 804 9529
www.npa.gov.za

12 February 2013

Ms TP Nkadimeng
698 Umhlanga Street
Wingate Park
Pretoria
0181

Fax: (012) 421 3516
Email: nkadimeng.thembi@gmail.com

Dear Ms Nkadimeng

REQUEST FOR THE HOLDING OF A FORMAL INQUEST IN TERMS OF SECTION 5 OF THE INQUESTS ACT 58 OF 1959 IN RESPECT OF THE KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE (PRIORITY INVESTIGATION: JV PLEIN: 1469/02/1996)

1. I acknowledge receipt of your letter, dated 11 February 2013 and confirm that Adv Macadam of my staff will be meeting with your lawyers on Monday, 18 February 2013 to discuss all the issues relating to the investigation of the matter.

2. I trust that a number of issues raised in your letter will be addressed in this meeting and therefore I do not propose to respond to all the matters which you raise. Since however you have raised the possibility of instituting legal action, I confirm that my failure to respond paragraph-by-paragraph to your letter in no way constitutes an admission of the various complaints you have made.

3. I however reconfirm my view that the interests of justice require that the case be fully investigated before a decision to prosecute can be taken and if the decision is not to prosecute, to arrange for the holding of an inquest.

Yours sincerely

DR MS RAMAITE SC
ACTING NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

TP 87

TN 21.9
TN21.9
80

Priority Crimes Litigation Unit

The National Prosecuting Authority of South Africa
Igunya Jikelele Labetshutshisi boMzantsi Afrika
Die Nasionale Vervolgingsgesag van Suid-Afrika

HEAD OFFICE

Tel: +27 12 845-6000
Fax: +27 12 845-6337

Victoria & Griffiths
Mxenge Building
Westlake Avenue
Weavind Park
Pretoria
0184

P/Bag X752
Pretoria
0001
South Africa

Docex:
DX207
Pretoria

www.npa.gov.za

13 February 2013

The Commander
Crimes Against the State
Organised Crime
Directorate for Priority Crimes Investigations
South African Police Service
Private Bag x X1500
SILVERTON
0127

Attention: Col N Xaba

Email: XabaN@saps.org.za

Dear Col Xaba

NOKUTHULA SIMELANE

Further to my earlier request for further investigations, the following also requires attention:

1. Efforts must be made to trace Nompumelelo Zakade, whom it is alleged supplied the information which led to the arrest of Justice Ngidi and not Nokuthula Simelane. It is alleged that this person is well known to Justice Ngidi and he should be able to assist in having her traced. A full statement should be obtained from her regarding all the issues relevant to the matter pertaining to Nokuthula Simelane.

2. At the amnesty hearing, Nimrod Veyi testified that he had knowledge of three houses in Klipspruit and one in Rustenburg. It must be established whether he is in a position to point these safe houses out and if any houses are identified, then the Missing Persons' Task Team must be requested to do an assessment as to whether an exhumation should be carried out at any one of them.

3. Norman Mkhonza testified at the amnesty committee that there was a safe house in Klipspruit West, which was used by Strongman Bambo. Evidence was led at the amnesty hearing that Mr Bambo was also present on the farm. He must be requested to point this house out and again the Missing Persons' Task Team must be requested to conduct an assessment.

4. A Mr Gilbert Twala testified at the amnesty hearing that before the disappearance of Nokuthula Simelane, she attended meetings with himself and Simphiwe Nyanda. Mr Nyanda is the former Chief of the SANDF and is currently an adviser in the Office of the President. He should be approached and asked whether he has any information which could shed light on Nokuthula Simelane's disappearance. If so, an affidavit must be obtained.

Kind regards

ADV RC MACADAM
SENIOR DEPUTY DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

TP 07

Simelane Meeting – 18 February 2013 – National Prosecuting Authority, Pretoria

Minutes

In attendance:

- Alan Wallis - SALC
- Robin Palmer - UKZN
- Chris McAdam (CM) – PCLU
- Susanne Bukau – PCLU
- Colonel Xaba (CX)– The Hawks
- Captain Masagela (M) – SAPS

- CM provided an overview of the case, emphasizing that he was only seized with the matter in 2010. He again mentioned tasks that he had identified for M (As outlined in the 2010 letter in our possession) to carry out and that of those tasks none had been properly carried out or carried out at all. Whilst he didn't explain why this case wasn't moved on before he was seized with it, he gave the impression that he is committed to ensuring that this matter be prioritized and investigated as fully as possible so that they can institute a prosecution or to request that in inquest be set up.

- We did not get the impression that they did not want to pursue this case or that they have attempted to cover the case up. The lack of action on their part appears to be due to it not being prioritized by the SAPS, and inadequate follow up on the part of the NPA.

- It was encouraging to see CX from the Hawks at the meeting, and he has been fully briefed on the matter. We hope that will provide oversight within the SAPS investigations.

- CM showed us the docket, which consists of one lever arch file.

- Whilst the tasks he identified in 2010 still need to be pursued CM identified a number of avenues that should be immediately undertaken which could render some of the identified tasks unnecessary. These tasks are aimed at determining course of events that led to the disappearance of Simelane and addressing inconsistencies. Specifically:

    - Further information was obtained by Captain Leask that there was another farm in Westonaria, near the farm that Simelane was held and that Simelane which have been taken to and buried there. A former police officer by the name of Sylvester has been identified as a person that may have knowledge of this farm.

    - Additional safe houses in and around Rustenburg have been identified.

TP

- In respect of Coetzee's, Pretorius' and Mong's alibi that they could not have been involved in Simelane's month long torture because they were involved in the planting of explosives at power stations, CM located and showed us two dockets on two explosions that occurred around Simelane's kidnapping. The explosions took place at two Eskom substations (Randburg – docket no: 387/09/83 and Fairlands – docket number 100/09/83) on 10 September 1983. A day before Simelane's kidnapping on 11 September 1983.

- CM located Justice Ngidi's detention files, and the dates of his incarceration and escape, in his view, raise questions about the veracity of his version of events.

- CM informed us that Radebe is a Johannesburg City Counselor.

- In light of this information CM has proposed the following:
-
  - Visit the 'new' farm and obtain a statement from Sylvester as well as visiting safe houses;
  - Re-interview Justice Ngidi and Radebe;
  - Approach Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong. Using the new bombing information regarding their alibi and statements made by Mong, CM believes that Mong should be approached to become a section 204 witness. This approach will have to be done carefully and may involve their lawyers. Robin mentioned that he would like to be present at any further communications with Mong or to discuss strategy before hand,

- CX agreed to make another investigating officer available to M.

- A follow up meeting has been tentatively set up for 30 May 2013.

- CM agreed that if they are not able to take investigation further he agrees that there should be an inquest and that it should be presided over by the a judge and not a magistrate.

- Robin will provide research on inquests in respect of which jurisdiction could be used and whether it is possible to request a judge led inquest instead of magistrate led inquest.

- All involved are happy to be contacted regarding progress.

TP 07

TN 21.11

84

THEMBISILE PHUMELELE NKADIMENG

698 Umhlanga Street
Wingate Park
PRETORIA 0181

Tel: 012 421 3500
Fax: 012 4213516
Cell: 082 553 6680
Email: nkadimeng.thembi@gmail.com

6 March 2013

TO:

RC Macadam
Priority Crimes Litigation Unit
National Prosecuting Authority
Private Bag X752
Pretoria
0001

OFFICE OF THE NATIONAL DIRECTOR

- 8 MAR 2013

NATIONAL PROSECUTING AUTHORITY

AND

Dr. MS Ramaite
Acting National Director of Public Prosecutions
National Prosecuting Authority
Private Bag X752
Pretoria
0001

Dear Adv. Macadam,

OUTSTANDING INVESTIGATIVE TASKS IN THE INVESTIGATION INTO THE KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE (PRIORITY INVESTIGATION: JV PLEIN: 1469/02/1996)

I want to thank you, and Colonel Xaba and Captain Masegela, for meeting with Adv. Robin Palmer and Allan Wallis on Monday 18 February 2013 to discuss the investigation in the case of Nokuthula Simelane. They advised me that they were encouraged by your assurances that this matter will be prioritised and that it will receive the PCLU's immediate attention through the completion of specific tasks within an agreed upon timeframe.

TP

I note from your letter dated 13 February 2013 addressed to the Commander of the Directorate of Priority Crimes Investigations, which you forwarded to Adv. Palmer on 5 March 2013, that certain instructions were given to Col. Xaba. It however came as a surprise, following communications between Captain Masegela and I on 26 February and 5 March 2013 that Captain Masegela is yet to receive any instructions from your office regarding the investigative priorities that you outlined in the meeting. I am advised that Captain Masegela joined the meeting on 18 February late and you had indicated that you would appraise him of what tasks should be completed and how they were to be prioritised. I would be grateful for your explanation as to why the investigating officer has not been given any further instructions.

At our meeting you informed us of the following:

- The majority of tasks identified in your letter to Captain Masegela dated 27 October 2010 still need to be pursued.

- You identified a number of avenues that should be immediately pursued which could render some of the previously identified tasks unnecessary. These tasks are aimed at determining the course of events that led to the disappearance of Ms. Simelane and addressing the following issues and inconsistencies:

    - Further information was obtained by Captain Leask that there is another farm in Westonaria, near the farm that Ms. Simelane was held and that Ms. Simelane could have been taken to and buried there. A former police officer by the name of Sylvester has been identified as a person that may have knowledge of this farm.

    - Additional safe houses in and around Rustenburg and Westonaria have been identified.

    - In respect of Coetzee's, Pretorius's and Mong's alleged alibi that they could not have been involved in Ms. Simelane's torture and disappearance because they were involved in the planting of explosives at power stations you located and showed me two dockets relating to two explosions that occurred around the date of Ms. Simelane's kidnapping. The explosions took place at two Eskom substations (Randburg – docket no: 387/09/83 and Fairlands – docket number: 100/09/83) on 10 September 1983. These occurred a day before Ms. Simelane's kidnapping on or around 11 September 1983.

    - You indicated that Justice Ngidi's detention files had been located and the dates of his incarceration and escape and are of the view that this raises questions about the veracity of his version of events.

    - You disclosed that Radebe is a Johannesburg City Counselor.

In light of the above you identified the following tasks:

TP

- That the investigating officers will visit the 'new' farm and obtain a statement from Sylvester. The investigating officer will also visit the safe houses;
- The investigating officers will interview Justice Ngidi and Radebe again;
- The investigating officer or members of the PCLU will speak to Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong. You also recommended approaching Mong to become a section 204 witness.

Additionally:

- Colonel Xaba agreed to make an additional investigating officer available to assist Captain Masegela;
- 30 May 2013 was tentatively agreed upon as a date on which to hold a follow-up meeting.

I note that in your letter to Col. Xaba (dated 13 February 2013) you asked him to carry out some but not all of the abovementioned tasks:

- Trace one N Zakade who could help in tracing Justice Ngidi;
- Identify certain safe houses for purposes of establishing whether exhumations should take place there;
- Interview Simphiwe Nyanda.

Please advise who is to carry out the additional tasks.

I have a number of queries that warrant your consideration and response and which may assist the investigation:

- In respect of the 'new' farm identified, there is no evidence that a second farm featured or played a role. The Security Police used multiple farms in their operations. Whilst this lead should be followed, the investigation of this information can be quickly finalised and must not be allowed to cause further and unnecessary delays or divert resources from other priorities unless there is specific evidence as to the whereabouts of the mortal remains of Ms Simelane

- Proving the existence of safe houses that were used by Coetzee and his team of Security Policemen during 1983 will contradict versions of events given by officers who testified that they did not use or have safe houses in 1983. This investigation is therefore important and can be quickly accomplished.

- Justice Ngidi's detention files are relevant in respect of the dates of his incarceration. In this regard I would ask you to provide us with the exact dates contained in Justice Ngidi's detention files and the reason these files cause you to question the veracity of his version.

- The bombings orchestrated by Coetzee et al. and the case dockets you located do not represent new evidence as these bombings on 10 September 1983 were conceded in their amnesty hearings.

TP

- In respect of the intention to re-interview Radebe it should be clarified whether you intend to speak to Radebe as a witness or a suspect. This will have an important impact on the case and should be carefully considered.

- Re-interviewing Mong solely on the bombing dockets is not advisable as this has already been conceded by Coetzee et al. Mong can be approached to become a witness to avoid the risk of prosecution. However any approach to Mong or others implicated must be done with the utmost care so as to avoid negatively impacting the investigation.

- In respect of the proposed interview with Simphiwe Nyanda we believe that the only significant matter to canvass with him is whether, to his knowledge, Nokuthula ever returned to Swaziland as claimed by the suspects.

Please urgently consider my concerns and suggestions outlined above and let me have your responses per return.

I further wish to place on record the telephone conversation you held with Adv. Palmer on 5 March 2013. During this conversation you confirmed that:

- You are being updated on a weekly basis by the investigation team;
- You will keep us updated by email (supplied) on progress;
- You will canvass with us the use of certain persons as possible state witnesses once the investigation has reached a more advanced state.

I attach a copy of a timeline of the investigation into the disappearance of Nokuthula which reflects the terrible neglect received by this case. I confirm that I expect these investigations to be finalized by the end of May by which time a decision must be taken either to prosecute or establish a formal judicial inquest. I look forward to hearing from you.

Yours sincerely,

T P NKADIMENG

Copy to: Captain Masegela, South African Police Service
Colonel Xaba, Directorate of Priority Crimes Investigations -- XabaN@saps.org.za Advocate Susan Bukau -- sbukau@npa.gov.za

TP

Angela Mudukuti TN 21.12 88

From: Robin Palmer <PALMER@ukzn.ac.za>
Sent: Wednesday, March 13, 2013 10:21 AM
To: Alan Wallis
Subject: FW: Nokuthula Simelane
Attachments: 20130308095040770.pdf

Alan- Please read and discuss- Robin.

From: Chris Macadam [mailto:cmacadam@npa.gov.za]
Sent: Wednesday, March 13, 2013 10:02 AM
To: Robin Palmer
Cc: Susan Bukau
Subject: Nokuthula Simelane

Dear Robin

I note with concern the contents of this letter. It contains several serious incorrect statements about what was discussed at our meeting, the most serious being the claim that I indicated that Ngidi was being untruthful. If any legal challenge is brought to any decision I may take in this matter, this document would have to be discovered and if subsequently Ngidi were to be a key witness in any proceedings, then his integrity will have been wrongfully brought into dispute and I will then have to become a witness in those proceedings. In fact, what I said was that in the light of the dates of the arrest of Mr Ngidi, a major question mark hangs around the veracity of the versions of certain of the suspects.

Both I and the DPCI must perform our duties without fear, favour or prejudice. In addition, the Courts have ruled that investigations must be conducted in an objective manner and that due weight must also be attached to any exculpatory versions which might assist the suspect's defence.

In the light thereof, I consider it improper to request that I have to give reasons for my decisions that certain matters be investigated (All the more so when there are incorrect statements about what I said.), explain my communications with the investigating officer and supply evidence out of the police docket to the victims. Consequently I am not prepared to accede to any of these requests. If this document were discovered, it would lay the basis for alleging that there was a manipulation of the investigation by persons who have a subjective interest therein.

I confirm that the matter will continue to be fully investigated, covering all the relevant issues raised in the evidence and an attempt will be made to have the investigation finalised by 31 May 2013. I would also be grateful if you could request your client to in future address her concerns with you and that you communicate with me having done the necessary filtering so as to eliminate any contentious issues which could be the subject of litigation.

Kind regards

Chris Macadam

Information from ESET Endpoint Antivirus, version of virus signature database 8108 (20130312)

TP 17

The message was checked by ESET Endpoint Antivirus.

http://www.eset.com
======= Please find our Email Disclaimer here-->: http://www.ukzn.ac.za/disclaimer =======

TN 21.13 90

Angela Mudukuti

Subject: FW: Nokuthula Simelane
Attachments: letter to macadam- proposed response (22-3)- changes (Robin)finalx.docx

---

From: PALMER@ukzn.ac.za
To: cmacadam@npa.gov.za
CC: frankdutton@hotmail.com; nkadimeng.thembi@gmail.com; yasmin.sooka@gmail.com; nicolef@salc.org.za; alanw@salc.org.za; PALMER@ukzn.ac.za; Gevers@ukzn.ac.za
Subject: RE: Nokuthula Simelane
Date: Sat, 6 Apr 2013 13:25:55 +0000

Dear Chris,
I have extensively canvassed the concerns raised in your email of 13 March 2013 with our client and all members of her legal team, and attach the team's response. I will also call you on Monday 8 April (if suitable) to discuss this and related issues.
Regards,
Robin Palmer.

From: palmer@ukzn.ac.za [mailto:palmer@ukzn.ac.za]
Sent: Wednesday, March 13, 2013 10:13 AM
To: Chris Macadam
Subject: Re: Nokuthula Simelane

Hi Chris - I will phone to discuss- Robin.
Sent via my BlackBerry from Vodacom - let your email find you!

From: Chris Macadam <cmacadam@npa.gov.za>
Date: Wed, 13 Mar 2013 08:01:43 +0000
To: Robin Palmer<PALMER@ukzn.ac.za>
Cc: Susan Bukau<sbukau@npa.gov.za>
Subject: Nokuthula Simelane

Dear Robin

I note with concern the contents of this letter. It contains several serious incorrect statements about what was discussed at our meeting, the most serious being the claim that I indicated that Ngidi was being untruthful. If any legal challenge is brought to any decision I may take in this matter, this document would have to be discovered and if subsequently Ngidi were to be a key witness in any proceedings, then his integrity will have been wrongfully brought into dispute and I will then have to become a witness in those proceedings. In fact, what I said was that in the light of the dates of the arrest of Mr Ngidi, a major question mark hangs around the veracity of the versions of certain of the suspects.

Both I and the DPCI must perform our duties without fear, favour or prejudice. In addition, the Courts have ruled that investigations must be conducted in an objective manner and that due weight must also be attached to any exculpatory versions which might assist the suspect's defence.

TP

In the light thereof, I consider it improper to request that I have to give reasons for my decisions that certain matters be investigated (All the more so when there are incorrect statements about what I said.), explain my communications with the investigating officer and supply evidence out of the police docket to the victims. Consequently I am not prepared to accede to any of these requests. If this document were discovered, it would lay the basis for alleging that there was a manipulation of the investigation by persons who have a subjective interest therein.

I confirm that the matter will continue to be fully investigated, covering all the relevant issues raised in the evidence and an attempt will be made to have the investigation finalised by 31 May 2013. I would also be grateful if you could request your client to in future address her concerns with you and that you communicate with me having done the necessary filtering so as to eliminate any contentious issues which could be the subject of litigation.

Kind regards

Chris Macadam

_____ Information from ESET Endpoint Antivirus, version of virus signature database 8200 (20130406) _____

The message was checked by ESET Endpoint Antivirus.

http://www.eset.com
======= Please find our Email Disclaimer here-->: http://www.ukzn.ac.za/disclaimer =======

TN 21.14

92

Email between Chris Macadam and Robin dated 15 April 2013

From: Robin Palmer [mailto:PALMER@ukzn.ac.za]
Sent: 02 May 2013 12:40 PM
To: Helena Zwart (H)
Cc: nicolef@salc.org.za; howardvarney@gmail.com; alanw@salc.org.za
Subject: RE: Nokuthula Simelane

Dear Chris,

I confirm receipt, and shall circulate to other team members. Do you have an update on the current status of the investigation?

Regards,

Robin Palmer.

From: Helena Zwart (H) [mailto:hzwart@npa.gov.za]
Sent: Monday, April 15, 2013 3:47 PM
To: Robin Palmer
Subject: Nokuthula Simelane

Dear Robin

With reference to our telcon last Friday, I do not deem it necessary to reply to the last letter from your clients, as we discussed all the issues during the course of our telcon. In the light of the DA/NDPP matter, a number of decisions of the NPA may now be reviewed and I would be obliged to file a record of all the communications which could cause embarrassment and open the doors for allegations.

I confirm that you drew my attention to a Sunday Times article where extracts from one of my letters were quoted. It should be brought to your client's attention that these types of disclosures are potentially prejudicial, as if proceedings are instituted, the other parties may then on the basis of the article require discovery fo my internal communications with you and your client.

TP

I note that Frank Dutton is being copied on the correspondence. He approached me two years ago, informing me that he had been appointed to investigate the matter on behalf of the family. It may well be necessary for him to provide the investigating officer with a statement outlining what he did.

I confirm that investigations are continuing regarding Radebe's claim to have been transferred to the Vehicle Theft Unit via the relevant police documentation and also locating all the dockets and background information relating to the detention of the various MK members as became relevant at the amnesty hearing.

Checks are also being conducted on the mortuaries in areas relevant to the investigation for any records which might correspond with the missing person.

Kind regards

Chris Macadam

TP

From: Helena Zwart (H) [hzwart@npa.gov.za]
Sent: 02 May 2013 02:12 PM
To: Robin Palmer
Subject: RE: Nokuthula Simelane

Dear Robin

There are no new developments at present.

Kind regards

Chris Macadam

From: Robin Palmer [mailto:PALMER@ukzn.ac.za]
Sent: 02 May 2013 12:40 PM
To: Helena Zwart (H)
Cc: nicolef@salc.org.za; howardvarney@gmail.com; alanw@salc.org.za
Subject: RE: Nokuthula Simelane

Dear Chris,

I confirm receipt, and shall circulate to other team members. Do you have an update on the current status of the investigation?

Regards,

Robin Palmer.

From: Robin Palmer
Sent: 17 May 2013 04:25 PM
To: Helena Zwart (H)
Subject: RE: NOKUTHULA SIMELANE

Thanks Chris- I will report back. Please let me know about timelines at the end of May.

Regards,

Robin.

From: Helena Zwart (H) [hzwart@npa.gov.za]
Sent: 17 May 2013 04:21 PM
To: Robin Palmer
Subject: RE: NOKUTHULA SIMELANE

Dear Robin

I agree that it is not necessary to meet. The alibi of Mr Radebe has been investigated and it was established that he was only transferred to the Vehicle Theft Unit in September 1984 and therefore he was still at the Security Branch at the time when Ms Simelane was on the farm at Northam.

The safe houses in use by the Soweto Security Branch at the time have all been identified and all have been eliminated as having exhumation potential, save for the smallholding at Westonaria where consideration is being given to the feasibility of a probe. The detention files relating to Mr Ngidi have been obtained from Justice. They give the case reference number of the docket upon which he was arrested, as well as dates of his detentions. Investigations are now in progress to locate the docket and other evidence whereupon he will be interviewed. The detention files relating to Gilbert Twala are still awaited from Justice. The original under-cover agent, Scotch, has been traced and will be re-interviewed as it would appear that he has also knowledge relating to the arrest of the MK members, which is central to the defence put up by Coetzee, Pretorius and Mong. The outcome of these investigations will determine whether it is still necessary to approach General Nyanda for a statement.

Work is in progress regarding checking mortuary records for entries which could correspond to the physical description of Ms Simelane and the time of her disappearance and once more information is forthcoming, consideration will be given as to whether exhumations are necessary. The outcome of these investigations will determine the necessity or otherwise of having to conduct the original queries directed by myself.

TP

Kind regards

Chris

From: Robin Palmer [mailto:PALMER@ukzn.ac.za]
Sent: 17 May 2013 03:46 PM
To: Helena Zwart (H)
Cc: Chris Macadam
Subject: RE: NOKUTHULA SIMELANE

Dear Chris,

I am out of the country for a while- perhaps you can update me on progress, and actions still to be taken with projected time-frames, at the end of May, and I will report to the other team members- a meeting seems unnecessary at this stage. I will be back in mid-to late June if a meeting is indicated at that stage.

Regards,

Robin Palmer.

From: Helena Zwart (H) [hzwart@npa.gov.za]
Sent: 17 May 2013 02:40 PM
To: Robin Palmer
Cc: XabaN@saps.org.za; Susan Bukau
Subject: NOKUTHULA SIMELANE

Dear Robin

With reference to our undertaking to meet at the end of May 2013, I would like you to indicate your availability. We are not in a position at this stage to have finalised all the investigations, but a number of key aspects have been dealt with and the remaining investigations should be finalised within a reasonable period of time.

TP

Kind regards

Chris Macadam

To Advocate C MacAdam ,

NPA.

Re Nokuthula Simelane

Dear Chris

I write on behalf of the legal team in this matter. In response to your indication that you are not satisfied that the investigation has progressed sufficiently to make a decision in this matter, I attempted to discuss this matter telephonically with you, but was unable to do so due to your involvement in an urgent application and court proceedings. Mrs Helena Zwart indicated that you would be available in the late afternoon of 26 June to discuss the matter but on calling her, she informed me that you were still not available. I did try your cell number and will try to speak to you again tomorrow morning, i.e. 27 June 2013.

In essence, the issues I wish to canvass on behalf of the family are the following:

1. Finalisation of investigations for decision on the docket

   Following early meetings with yourself and the police investigators in this matter, you did indicate that a decision would be made by the end of May 2013. This date has now passed and we still have no indication on what further investigative steps are envisaged before the NPA will be in a position to either make a decision to prosecute one or more alleged perpetrators, or to refer the matter for a formal inquest as this matter has now dragged on for the best part of 13 years. We respectfully request your urgent indication on what information or investigations you still require to put the NPA in a position to make a decision. In this regard, kindly also indicate how the complainant or any members of the complainant's legal support team can assist to expedite the making of this decision (in particular you did indicate that you would require an affidavit from Frank Dutton). In our view, there appears to be sufficient information and prima facie evidence to justify a formal judicial inquest, and we request you to seriously consider whether the matter should be referred for inquest at this stage. As you well know, the fact that the matter is referred for an inquest does not preclude the continuation of any investigations you nevertheless consider necessary.

TP

2. The emotional toll on the family and friends of Nokuthula Simelane

   As you can appreciate, the delays in finalising this matter create severe and on-going emotional stress and trauma for the family and friends of Nokuthula. I am sure you will agree that they are entitled to finalisation of the matter and emotional closure if the circumstances of the investigation indicate that no substantial progress is likely, especially given the length of time that has lapsed since the death of Nokuthula.

3. Specific indications of remaining steps and actions

   We kindly request that any remaining investigative steps and actions that the NPA requires still to be carried out be itemised and linked to specific target dates to prevent this matter from dragging on indefinitely. As requested above, the failure to make substantial progress on reaching these target dates should result in the referral of the matter to a formal inquest if sufficient evidence for a prosecution is not available. In this regard, your undertaking to assist with the motivation for a judicial inquest should there be insufficient evidence for a prosecution, is gratefully noted.

Yours faithfully,

Robin Palmer

(On behalf of the legal support team)

TP

TN 21.18

100

LRC

LEGAL RESOURCES CENTRE

PBO No. 930003292

Constitutional Litigation Unit • 16th Floor Bram Fischer Towers • 20 Albert Street • Marshalltown, Johannesburg 2001 • South Africa • www.lrc.org.za

PO Box 9495 • Johannesburg 2000 • South Africa • Tel: (011) 836 9831 • Fax: (011) 834 4273

Your Ref:

Our Ref: Our Ref: B Sibiya

The Acting National Director of Public Prosecutions
National Prosecuting Authority
Private Bag X752
Pretoria
0001

By fax: 012 845 7291

16 January 2014

Dear Mr. Nxasana

KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE (PRIORITY INVESTIGATION: JV PLEIN: 1469/02/1996)

1. We refer to the letter of Adv S K Abrahams. Acting Director of the Priority Crimes Litigation Unit (PCLU), dated 5 December 2013 and received on 9 December 2013, in response to our letters dated 20 September 2013 and 28 November 2013.

2. We assume that Adv Abrahams' letter constitutes a full response to both our letters. If this is not the case he is invited to supplement his response or provide us with the letter prepared in response to our 20 September 2013 but not transmitted.

3. From the outset we note that nearly a year has elapsed from our client's request for an inquest and your predecessor's refusal. We appear to be no closer to resolution.

4. We note the point that the PCLU was only formed in 2003 and could not have attended to our client's matter prior to this year. However the TRC cases, including the Simelane case, was referred to the National Prosecuting Authority (NPA) in 2001. The NPA ought to have acted on these cases from 2001. The fact that the PCLU was only formed in 2003 is no excuse for the inaction during this period.

National Office:
Cape Town:
Durban:
Grahamstown:
Johannesburg:
Constitutional Litigation Unit:

J Love (National Director), K Reinecke (Director: Finance)
S Magardie (Director), A Andrews, S Kahanovitz, WR Kerfoot, C May, M Mudarikwa, HJ Smith
MR Chetty (Director), EJ Broster, FB Mahomed, AJ Richard
S Sephton (Director), C McConnachie
N Fakir (Director), T Mbhense, C van der Linde
T Ngcukaitobi (Head of CLU), M Bishop, G Bizos SC, J Brickhill, S Nindi, B Sibiya, W Wicomb

TP

5. We note with dismay that the NPA persists in claiming that the Simelane matter received attention prior to October 2010. Adv Abrahams denies that 'little of no action' was taken in the years prior to October 2010 and refers to the letter of Adv Ramaite dated 31 January 2013. The relevant paragraphs of Adv Ramaite's letter are at 6 to 9. These paragraphs disclose no investigations. Instead they set out a litany of excuses as to why no investigations took place. These are the so-called "guidelines", the Ginwala Commission, the closure of the DSO and creation of the Hawks. None of these excuses justify the NPA's idleness.

6. Adv Abrahams maintains that the Simelane matter was not referred by the SAPS or the authorities previously dealing with the TRC cases. He does not disclose who referred the case to the NPA nor does he identify the 'authorities' previously handling these matters. It is claimed that the Simelane case only came to the attention of the PCLU when the Foundation for Human Rights (FHR) made a submission to it in November 2004. It would seem that if it were not for the intervention of the FHR in 2004 the Simelane matter would never have been taken up, even though it was on the list of TRC cases originally referred to the NPA. Our client will not be persuaded that the NPA has acted diligently in this matter. The failure of the NPA to resolve this matter one way or the other constitutes monumental neglect or incompetence; alternatively it is the function of an erstwhile policy or political decision or arrangement not to pursue the "TRC cases".

7. We note that the Simelane matter was part of a broader investigation against former SAP General Engelbrecht. General Krappies Engelbrecht was implicated in organised violent crime by both the Goldstone Commission and the Truth and Reconciliation Commission. We assume that this investigation was yet another case arising from past conflicts that was abandoned by the NPA.

8. There is much irony in the fact that in the mid-2000s the then head of the PCLU resisted prosecutions in favour of an inquest only for the PCLU to resist an inquest several years later in 2013. It is correct that the family's representatives motivated for prosecutions at that time, particularly of those suspects who had not applied for kidnapping. I am advised that this was dismissed by the PCLU who did not wish to pursue "small fish". The family's representatives' advice that pursuing the small fish could lead to the conviction of more senior perpetrators fell on deaf ears. In any event it was not just "small fish" who had not applied for amnesty. The Commander of the Security Branch C1 Section under whose auspices the operation against Nokuthula took place also did not apply for amnesty. In the circumstances it is not difficult to see why my client and her family hold the view that the authorities do not wish to see justice done this matter.

TP

9. We note that the NPA again attempts to escape responsibility for the failure to investigate on the basis that investigations are the responsibility of the police. According to Adv Abrahams the NPA played no role in the decisions to discontinue the investigations in this matter. My client does not accept this claim. It is common cause that the TRC matters (including my sister's case) were referred to the NPA not the police. The NPA accordingly had the responsibility to ensure that the cases were investigated. They failed to do so. In any event, the NPA has the authority to refer matters to the police for further investigation. Indeed it has been common practice for many years for prosecutors to direct investigations in serious or complex crime, as Adv Macadam is belatedly doing in the instant matter.

10. On the version of the NPA between November 2004 and 2010 (a period of more than 5 years) besides a few meetings between the PCLU and the representatives of the FHR nothing else was done. There was not the slightest attempt to investigate. According to my client very little happened between October 2010 and January 2013 when our client and her family finally gave up and sought an inquest.

Investigation report

11. The investigation report raises more questions than answers.

TP

DNA analysis and exhumations

12. In relation to the DNA analysis it is not stated when the second sample was sent for testing to Bosnia. Indeed it appears it has not been obtained, let alone sent. Par 5.2 says that a second sample "will be obtained and submitted to ... ." It is apparent from the paragraph on exhumations that as at the end of 2013, and notwithstanding our requests back in September 2013, the PCLU has no idea when the examinations will be complete. This is notwithstanding that a DNA sample was collected from my client on 4 April 2013.

13. I am advised that hundreds of unidentified remains are found each year in South Africa, many of which are of young women. Your Adv Abrahams advises that the remains could be of Nokuthula only because of the proximity of the site to the farm in Northham. Brits is situated 108 km south east of Northam; and is 68 km east of Rustenburg. A claim made before the Amnesty Committee of the TRC was that Nokuthula was taken from Northam to Westonaria via Rustenburg. Brits was not mentioned in evidence or in any statements as a place of interest in the Nokuthula matter. This exercise is accordingly a shot in the dark. While we would want the DNA from the remains of any and all young females in the wider region to be analysed, it would be pointless for the NPA to hold back from making a decision every time the remains of a young female was discovered.

14. Advocate Abrahams says that an anthropologist has made certain findings that the remains may be consistent with the missing person. Surprisingly no mention is made as to what these findings are. Since nothing was disclosed we must assume that such findings are tenuous. Strikingly, no mention is made as to whether there is evidence that the cause of death was violent. The modus operandi of the Security Branch at the time was to shoot their victims in the head. Since Adv Abrahams letter is silent on this point we must assume that there is no evidence of a violent death in respect of the remains found at or near Brits.

15. I am advised that it was wrong to have provided a photograph of Nokuthula to the facial reconstruction expert. The reconstruction should have been done independently of a photograph so as to avoid accusations that the face was reconstructed to resemble the photograph. In the circumstances any evidence arising from this work will have little evidential weight.

TP

16. In short, as matters stand, there is no reasonable nexus between Nokuthula and the skeletal remains. There is accordingly no compelling reason to delay the finalisation of the investigation on the basis of these or other remains found in similar circumstances. In any event if new evidence does come to light from the recovery of human remains proper decisions can be made accordingly. This could include stopping an inquest and proceeding to a prosecution.

Westonaria plot

17. In respect of the plot at Westonaria it should be noted that this is not fresh news. The black Security Branch members who testified before the TRC all knew about the safe-house at Westonaria. If basic investigation had been done the plot would have been pointed out decades ago as part of routine investigations.

18. In regard to possible exhumations on this plot I am advised that several years ago the mining company that owns the plot bulldozed the then existing structures, including the building used as the "safe house", which was levelled. Unless there is specific information pinpointing an exact location there is little or no prospect of recovering remains on this plot. Since no such information has been disclosed we must also assume that this is another shot in the dark. In any event I am advised that it would take an experienced specialist anthropologist a few hours to determine the feasibility of an exhumation.

19. Again, a possible exhumation on this plot should not be a reason for any additional delay, unless there is specific and detailed information about the exact location of a grave.

Mortuary Records

20. An inspection of mortuary records was made in 1996 by Captain Leask, which included the Rustenberg Mortuary. No connections were made between any records and Nokuthula. Towards the end of 2013 it is now said that some incomplete and obscure records are possibly linked to this case. Again there is no reason why such a study could not have been conducted many years ago. While these apparent connections should be explored they also constitute shots in the dark and should not hold back the taking of a decision.

TP

21. It is becoming increasingly apparent that the PCLU will delay making a decision on this matter on the basis of the most tenuous lines of inquiry.

Monthly Reports

22. If monthly reports are to be given they should be sufficiently detailed so as to be meaningful. Vague comments such as, "an anthropologist has made certain findings that the skeletal remains may be consistent with the missing person" without stating the findings are not helpful. The bulk of what is said in the October to December report is equally vague and unhelpful.

23. The monthly reports should be substantive, accurate and contain all relevant information not just suggestions or hints on progress in respect of the investigation.

Reasons for not holding an inquest

24. Quite remarkable reasons are given as to why an inquest should not be held at this time.

25. It has been demonstrated above that the outstanding investigations are shots in the dark and are not 'key outstanding investigations' as claimed by Adv Abrahams. In fact the investigating officer, Captain Masehela, who submitted his report to Adv Macadam in July 2011 recommended an inquest, which recommendation was ignored.

26. It is noted that the setting up of an inquest in the High Court could take several months. During this period outstanding investigations could be finalized. If any of these lines of inquiry resulted in evidence warranting a prosecution such a decision could be taken and effected. Should this happen the inquest will not be proceeded with; and if it has commenced, it can be stopped in terms of section 21(2) of the Inquest Act.

TP

27. While we accept that there may be potential prejudice to witnesses who have to testify in two fora we note that this was of no consequence to the PCLU in the 2000s who were pushing for an inquest at that time. Our instructions are that the interminable delay is of even greater prejudice to witnesses and our clients.

October to December report

28. The October to December report suggests that there is no end in sight. There is simply no reason why these matters could not have been pursued and resolved in the 12 months since my client sought an inquest.

29. We note that Adv Macdam identified these matters as investigational tasks back in 2010. It is quite apparent that little or no progress has been made on these tasks over the past three years and they remain as "work to be done". Many of these tasks are simple and basic and there is absolutely no reason why they should not have been quickly completed.

30. It is worth mentioning that other tasks identified by Adv Macadam in his 2010 letter of 2010 seem to have dropped off the list. No indication has been given whether these tasks were completed.

31. I have taken instructions from my client in respect of the requests made by Adv Abrahams in paragraph 8 of his letter. My client is not in possession of any of the records of the amnesty hearing. My client advises that members of her family did collect Nokuthula's belongings from the Duma Nkosi home in Soweto in late 1983 or early 1984. Unfortunately they cannot recall collecting a passport from amongst her clothes and other belongings. My client's mother advises that Nokuthula was a dual citizen of South Africa and Swaziland and possessed passports for both countries. Nokuthula apparently used her Swaziland passport on her last few trips.

TP

32. In respect of the holding of a meeting we had requested a meeting with the NDPP. My client and her representatives have met with the PCLU over the years and such meetings have proven to be utterly fruitless. We see no point in holding another meeting with the PCLU. We persist with our request for a meeting with yourself. The purpose of such a meeting would be to request an imposition of a reasonable time limit on the investigations and for the taking of a decision whether to prosecute or not. If a decision cannot be taken within a reasonable time period then this matter must be referred to a formal inquest in the High Court. We would submit that, in the circumstances of this case, a reasonable time period would be a matter of weeks not months.

33. Kindly advise per return whether you are willing to meet with us, and if so, the soonest date for such a meeting. If a meeting in the near future is not possible, then please advise whether you are willing to bring this matter to finality within a reasonable period as described above.

34. We look forward to hearing from you.

Yours sincerely

Legal Resources Centre, Constitutional Litigation Unit, Johannesburg
Bongumusa Sibiya

Copy to: Advocate Chris Macadam
Priority Crimes Litigation Unit
By fax: (012) 845 6337
Email: cmacadam@npa.gov.za / hzwart@npa.gov.za

And to: Advocate S K Abrahams
Acting Head: Priority Crimes Litigation Unit
Office of the National Director of Public Prosecutions
By fax: (012) 845 6337

TP M

* * * Communication Result Report (16. Jan. 2014 11:05) * * *

1) LEGAL RESOURCE CENTER
2)

Date/Time: 16. Jan. 2014 11:00

File No.	Mode	Destination	Pg(s)	Result	Page Not Sent
1376	Memory TX	0128457291	P. 8	OK
	Bongumusa	0128456337		OK
		0128456337		OK

Reason for error
E. 1) Hang up or line fail
E. 2) Busy
E. 3) No answer
E. 4) No facsimile connection
E. 5) Exceeded max. E-mail size

LRC
LEGAL RESOURCES CENTRE

PBO No. 930013282
Constitutional Litigation Unit • 14th Floor Bram Fischer Towers • 20 Albert Street • Marshalltown, Johannesburg 2001 • South Africa • www.lrc.org.za
PO Box 9495 • Johannesburg 2000 • South Africa • Tel: (011) 836 9831 • Fax: (011) 834-4273

Your Ref:
Our Ref: Our Ref: D Sibiya

The Acting National Director of Public Prosecutions
National Prosecuting Authority
Private Bag X752
Pretoria
0001

By fax: 012 845 7291

16 January 2014

Dear Mr. Nxasana

KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE (PRIORITY INVESTIGATION): JV PLEIN: 1469/02/2/2013

1. We refer to the letter of Adv S K Abrahams, Acting Director of the Priority Crimes Litigation Unit (PCLU), dated 5 December 2013 and received on 9 December 2013, in response to our letters dated 20 September 2013 and 28 November 2013.

2. We assume that Adv Abrahams' letter constitutes a full response to both our letters. If this is not the case he is invited to supplement his response or provide us with the letter prepared in response to our 20 September 2013 but not transmitted.

3. From the outset we note that nearly a year has elapsed from our client's request for an inquest and your predecessor's refusal. We appear to be no closer to resolution.

4. We note the point that the PCLU was only formed in 2003 and could not have attended to our client's matter prior to this year. However the TRC cases, including the Simelane case, was referred to the National Prosecuting Authority (NPA) in 2001. The NPA ought to have acted on these cases from 2001. The fact that the PCLU was only formed in 2003 is no excuse for the inaction during this period.

National Office:
Cape Town:
Durban:
Grahamstown:
Johannesburg:
Constitutional Litigation Unit:

J Love (National Director), K Agnes (Director: Finance),
B Bapela (Director), A Andrews, S Ngwenya, NM Farlane, C May, N Matsebatlela, KS Seleti, PM Chetty (Director), D Dooms, NB Mehlomakhulu, AJ Rickard,
S Seshoka (Director), C McConnachie,
R Pillay (Director), T Nkhwana, Cruz da Costa,
T Nyembe (Head of CLU), N Bishop, G Bizos SC, J Brickhill, S Khoza, B Sibiya, W Wessels

TP 2

TN 21.19

103

South African Police Service Suid-Afrikaanse Polisiediens

Private Bag X1500, SILVERTON, 0127 Fax No: (012) 846 4400

Your reference :

Enquiries : Brigadier Kadwa

Telephone no : 012 846 4001

E-mail : dpci.head@saps.gov.za

THE NATIONAL HEAD

DIRECTORATE FOR PRIORITY CRIME INVESTIGATION

SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE

Mr Bongumusa Sibiya
Legal Resources Centre
Constitutional Litigation Unit
JOHANNESBURG

KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE (PRIORITY INVESTIGATION: JV PLEIN: 1469/02/1996)

Your letter dated 25 September 2013 bears reference.
Since the Legal Resource Centre has been dealing directly with NPA (Priority Crime Litigation Unit) regarding this investigation, the DPCI investigator was of the opinion that you were well informed about the developments of the case. The last correspondence was sent on the 3rd of December 2013 by NPA to your office.

Nevertheless, the DPCI will compile a comprehensive report in consultation with all the relevant stakeholders involved in this investigation. The entire investigation is based on the DNA analysis before we could conclude that the bones found in Brits were those of Nokuthula Simelane who disappeared 30 years ago. On the other hand, if results are negative the NPA will decide whether according to the evidence available the formal inquest could be held or not.

The comprehensive report will be submitted to your office by the end of January 2014 which will cover all the aspects raised in the letter.

Kind regards,

LIEUTENANT GENERAL
NATIONAL HEAD: DIRECTORATE FOR PRIORITY CRIME INVESTIGATION
A DRAMAT
Date: 2014-01-16

TP

TN 21.20
110

LRC
LEGAL RESOURCES CENTRE
PBO No. 930003292
Constitutional Litigation Unit • 16th Floor Bram Fischer Towers • 20 Albert Street • Marshalltown, Johannesburg 2001 • South Africa • www.lrc.org.za
PO Box 9495 • Johannesburg 2000 • South Africa • Tel: (011) 836 9831 • Fax: (011) 834 4273

Your Ref: JB/ CAS: 1469/02/1996
Our Ref: Our Ref: B Sibiya

Lieutenant General A Dramat
Deputy National Commissioner: Directorate for Priority Crime Investigation
No 1 Cresswell Road
Silverton
Pretoria
By fax: 012 846 4400; and

Attention: Brigadier Kadwa
By fax: (012) 846-4400; and
By email: kadwaE@saps.gov.za

26 February 2014

Dear General Dramat

KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE (PRIORITY INVESTIGATION: JV PLEIN: 1469/02/1996)

1. We thank you for your letter dated 10 February 2013 in response to our letter dated 26 September 2013.

2. My client is disturbed to note that you do not accept any responsibility for the lengthy delay in finalizing this matter, or at least the delay of nearly 4 years, being the period from 25 March 2010 when the Directorate for Priority Crimes Investigation (DPCI) was given the file. Indeed you do not acknowledge that there has been any delay at all.

3. Since you have acknowledged that the DPCI was seized with this investigation since March 2010 my client holds you and your department responsible for failing to take expeditious steps to finalize this long outstanding investigation. Your letter provides no justifiable explanation for such delay. Your neglect has caused my client and her family considerable suffering and emotional anxiety. Moreover, such

National Office:
Cape Town:
Durban:
Grahamstown:
Johannesburg:
Constitutional Litigation Unit:

J Love (National Director), K Reinecke (Director: Finance)
S Magardie (Director), A Andrews, S Kahanovitz, WR Kerfoot, C May, M Mudarikwa, HJ Smith
MR Chetty (Director), EJ Broster, FB Mahomed, AJ Richard
S Sephton (Director), C McConnachie
N Fakir (Director), T Mbhense, C van der Linde
T Ngcukaitobi (Head of CLU), M Bishop, G Bizos SC, J Brickhill, S Ndidi, B Sibiya, W Wicomb

neglect constitutes a great disservice to the memory of the late Nokuthula Simelane (Nokuthula) who gave her life for the struggle for freedom and democracy in South Africa.

4. It is apparent from your letter that, notwithstanding the special circumstances of this case, it is still not being prioritized or treated as urgent. This conclusion is premised on the following:

4.1 The DNA from the Brits skeletal remains have not as yet been sent for testing to Bosnia because the police have still not yet received approval to incur such expense. A second sample has not even been secured should approval be granted;

4.2 The Westonaria plot has not been evaluated let alone excavated;

4.3 Additional 'manpower' has not as yet been assigned to the investigation;

4.4 The four mortuary entries have not yet been acted upon i.e. graves have not been identified and no decision has been taken as to whether or not to exhume and conduct DNA testing; and

4.5 The DPCI refuses to commit to specific time frames.

5. If past conduct is anything to go by, there is no end in sight to this investigation. The basic investigation into the disappearance of Nokuthula has not been completed; neither have the lines of inquiry agreed to between Advocates Macadam and Palmer during February 2013 been finalized.

6. We note your statement that, but for 'a significant new development', the agreed date for finalising the investigation, the end of May 2013 would have been met. This development related to the discovery of skeletal remains of a young woman in the Brits area, presumably in March 2013. It seemed that but for this development the investigations were on track for completion by the end of May last year. One would have then expected the different lines of inquiry to have been concluded by the end of May, bar the forensic examination of the Brits remains.

TP

7. It appears, however, that the balance of the investigation ceased following the discovery of the said remains. This conclusion can be drawn from a consideration of your letter as well as that of Adv. Abrahams of the Priority Crimes Litigation Unit (PCLU) dated 9 December 2013. The letter of Adv. Abrahams disclosed that very little of the agreed investigation had been attended to.

8. By way of example, a central pillar of the investigation has always been the tracing and interviewing of the 16 MK operatives that Willem Coetzee and Anton Pretorius claimed were arrested as a result of Nokuthula's cooperation. In October 2010 Adv. Macadam set this as one of the tasks to be carried out by the DPCI. According to the letter of Advocate Abrahams' dated 9 December 2013 this particular task had not yet been accomplished. This was his observation, more than 3 years after the instruction was given and some 9 months after the discovery of the skeletal remains. Many of these 16 individuals are well known personalities, easy to locate and are available for interview by investigators.

9. Your letter is oddly silent as to why this key aspect of the investigation could not be completed by end of May 2013, or soon thereafter. You confirm this lapse in your letter where you advise that "(p)ending the forensic results, the investigating officer will continue to focus on the investigations identified by Advocate McAdam". Since you add that the investigations are "quite extensive" and that it may be necessary to "assign additional manpower" we must conclude that as of February 2014, some 11 months after the discovery of the remains, little or nothing has been done in relation to the said investigations.

10. We are advised that a period of 3 years and 4 months (since the tasks set by Adv. Macadam in October 2010) is more than sufficient time to have completed these investigations. This is irrespective of whether or not skeletal remains had been found.

TP

11. We point out that that there is no apparent reason why the Brits remains should be regarded as "significant". No reason has been advanced as to why such discovery justifies the delay in completing the agreed investigations. The discovery of remains of a young woman is not an uncommon occurrence in South Africa. Apart from age and gender there is apparently no other link between the remains and Nokuthula. There is accordingly only a remote possibility that the remains may be identified as Nokuthula. While there is a need to establish the identity of the remains such a task should not have halted or slowed all other investigations.

12. The outstanding investigational aspects remain relevant, and still need to be investigated irrespective of whether the remains prove to be those of Nokuthula or not.

13. As matters stand, the balance of the investigation is far from complete. The forensic results of the skeletal remains and the four other bodies (all of which have no meaningful links to Nokuthula) have to be traced, exhumed, DNA samples obtained, procurement procedures completed, dispatched to Bosnia and then await results that will take at 6 months or more.

14. In the meantime time marches on and takes its toll on witnesses and suspects. Time in this case is critical because we have already had a delay running into decades. As a result our client and her family may be deprived of a meaningful legal conclusion to Nokuthula's death.

15. In the circumstances, we seek your answers to the following questions:

    15.1 Have the investigative tasks set by Adv. Macadam on 10 October 2010 been diligently conducted at all times?

    15.2 Did the discovery of the skeletal remains at Brits cause the investigations to be neglected, halted or slowed in any way?

We look forward to hearing from you.

TP

Yours sincerely

Legal Resources Centre, Constitutional Litigation Unit, Johannesburg
Per: Bongumusa Sibiya

Copy to: Advocate S K Abrahams, Acting Head: Priority Crimes Litigation Unit
By fax: (012) 845 6337

Advocate C Macadam, Priority Crimes Litigation Unit
By fax: (012) 845 6337; and
By email: cmacadam@npa.gov.za / hzwart@npa.gov.za

TP

* * * Communication Result Report (26. Feb. 2014 10:40) * * *

1) LEGAL RESOURCE CENTRE
2)

Date/Time: 26. Feb. 2014 10:35

File No.	Mode	Destination	Pg(s)	Result	Page Not Sent
1499	Memory TX	0128464400	P. 5	OK
	Bongumusa	0128464400		OK
		0128456337		OK
		0128456337		OK

Reason for error
E. 1) Hang up or line fail
E. 2) Busy
E. 3) No answer
E. 4) No facsimile connection
E. 5) Exceeded max. E-mail size

LRC

LEGAL RESOURCES CENTRE

PBO No. 930003292

Constitutional Litigation Unit • 16th Floor Bram Fischer Towers • 20 Albert Street • Marshalltown, Johannesburg 2001 • South Africa • www.lrc.org.za

PO Box 9495 • Johannesburg 2000 • South Africa • Tel. (011) 836 9831 • Fax: (011) 834-4273

Your Ref: JSI CAS: 1469/02/1998
Our Ref: Our Ref: S Sibiya

Lieutenant General A Dramat
Deputy National Commissioner: Directorate for Priority Crime Investigation
No 1 Cresswell Road
Silverton
Pretoria
By fax: 012 846 4400; and

Attention: Brigadier Kadwa
By fax: (012) 846-4400; and
By email: kadwaE@saps.gov.za

26 February 2014

Dear General Dramat

KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE (PRIORITY INVESTIGATION: JV PLEIN: 1469/02/1998)

1. We thank you for your letter dated 10 February 2013 in response to our letter dated 26 September 2013.

2. My client is disturbed to note that you do not accept any responsibility for the lengthy delay in finalizing this matter, or at least the delay of nearly 4 years, being the period from 25 March 2010 when the Directorate for Priority Crimes Investigation (DPCI) was given the file. Indeed you do not acknowledge that there has been any delay at all.

3. Since you have acknowledged that the DPCI was seized with this investigation since March 2010 my client holds you and your department responsible for failing to take expeditious steps to finalize this long outstanding investigation. Your letter provides no justifiable explanation for such delay. Your neglect has caused my client and her family considerable suffering and emotional anxiety. Moreover, such

National Office:
Cape Town
Durban
Grahamstown
Johannesburg
Constitutional Litigation Unit:

J Love (National Director), K Pokwana (Director: Finance)
S Magardie (Director), A Andrews, S Kahanovitz, WH Corfield, C May, N Hudleston, HS Smith
HR Cheadle (Director), CH Botes, PB Holmes, AM Pickard
S Sephton (Director), LC McDonald
M Pieterse (Director), T Ndlovu, C van der Linde
T Ngcukaitobi (Head of CLU), M Bishop, G Bizos SC, J Brickhill, S Mbatha, S Sibiya, W Wicomb

TP 7

South African Police Service Suid-Afrikaanse Polisiediens

Private Bag X1500, SILVERTON, 0127 Fax No: (012) 846 4400

Your reference : JV Plein 1469/1996 THE NATIONAL HEAD

Enquiries : Brigadier Kadwa
Colonel Xaba DIRECTORATE FOR PRIORITY CRIME INVESTIGATION

Telephone no : 012 846 4372 SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE

E-mail : dpci.head@saps.gov.za

Legal Resources Centre
PO Box 9495
JOHANNESBURG
2000

Dear Ms van der Linde

KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE: JV PLEIN 1469/02/1996.

I am in receipt of your letter dated 10 July 2014 and have noted the contents thereof.

It is unfortunate that your letter once again persists with the suggestion of inaction on the part of the investigators and the allegation that your client is not kept informed of developments; both of which are denied. While I do not deem it necessary to respond to each and every allegation contained in your letter under reply or your letter dated 26 February 2014, it needs to be pointed out that the allegation that the investigating officer has only contacted your client once during the last six months is disputed.

I am advised that contrary to this allegation, the investigating officer was in contact with your client on a number of occasions and that during this period she in fact visited him at his office where he showed her the docket and explained to her in detail the progress which had been made. According to the investigating officer your client expressed her relief that she had seen that the investigation was progressing and that she appeared to be satisfied with the progress made. I am also advised that shortly after receipt of your letter dated 26 February 2014 they had spoken and that your client had agreed that instead of continuous correspondence it would be more expedient for a meeting to be arranged where the matter could rather be discussed. I am furthermore advised that she undertook to take this matter up with yourself and to arrange a meeting towards the end of April 2014. No feedback was however received.

TP

KIDNAPPING, TORTURE, DISAPPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE: JV PLEIN 1469/02/1996.

In addition to the above, I am advised that the investigating officer was also in telephonic contact with your client on 20 March, 3 April, 8 April and 11 May 2014. The last contact between your client and the investigator was during June 2014 when he contacted her whilst on leave, to inform her of this fact and to assure her that the investigation would continue in his absence. I am advised that a good relationship exists between the investigating officer and your client and, as such, the investigating officers surprise at being confronted with your letter, is, in the circumstances, is understandable.

As regards the DNA results, I may inform you that the laboratory in Bosnia has completed the tests and that the investigating officer received notification on 14 July 2014 that the samples provided by Ms Simelane's family are not consistent with the samples obtained from the skeletal remains which were uncovered.

Since my previous letter, extensive investigations have been conducted and the case docket has in view thereof recently been submitted to the National Prosecuting Authority for consideration and further instructions, if any.

In conclusion it needs to be reiterated, that the DPCI is, without compromising on the quality of the investigation, committed to finalising the same as soon as possible. The DPCI is also committed to building forth on the good relationship which already appears to exist between your client and the investigating officer. Accordingly I support the agreement reached between them that a meeting to resolve any issues you may have/ clarity which you may need is the preferable route to follow in order to ensure a common understanding of the matters at hand and the issues which need to be dealt with. You are therefore at liberty to contact the investigating officer's commander Colonel Xaba at telephone number 0798899582, should such a meeting be required.

Your cooperation in this regard will be appreciated.

Kind regards,

LIEUTENANT GENERAL
NATIONAL HEAD: DIRECTORATE FOR PRIORITY CRIME INVESTIGATION
A DRAMAT
Date: 2014-07-17

TP

"TN 21.22"

MEETING WITH THE DPCI REGARDING THE CASE OF NOKUTHULA SIMELANE 31 JULY 2014

ATTENDEES

Frank Dutton

Thembi Nkadimeng

Angela Mudukuti

Carien Van Der Linde

Colonel Xaba (Director, Directorate for Priority Crime Investigation –SAPS)

Captain Masegela (Investigating Officer)

SUMMARY

The meeting followed mostly a question answer format with Frank asking for details about the investigation. The docket was handed to the PCLU on 14 July 2014 and Captain Masegela and Colonel Xaba are of the opinion that investigations are complete.

CLARIFICATION OF TEAM COMPOSITION

After brief introductions Colonel Xaba indicated that they had previously dealt with Robin Palmer whom they have not heard from for a long time but that he seems to have been replaced by the LRC. Frank then indicated that Robin is still very much a part of the team. Angela explained the composition of the team and that the letters come on the LRC letterhead but are produced after consultation with the entire team.

STATUS OF INVESTIGATIONS

Delays and Challenges Faced

Captain Masegela began by explaining that he only started investigating the matter in 2010 and struggled to trace all the original documents from the TRC. Throughout the process he maintained direct contact with the Simelane family. He also indicated that the entire process of investigation was done in consultation with Advocate Macadam. All decisions and instructions came from Macadam. He indicated that the investigations have been difficult as many of the senior officials involved have died and the evidence has been hard to obtain. He also felt that the people who were previously investigating the case had failed to do a thorough job otherwise this matter would have been resolved a long time ago. He felt that most of the delays can be attributed to obtaining DNA results from the laboratories in Bosnia and due to the difficult nature of the case. Despite the delays and negative DNA results he indicated that he could leave no stone unturned, making securing DNA results a very important part of the process. After the DNA results were obtained he submitted his entire docket to Macadam on 14 July 2014. They are currently waiting for Macadam to make a decision and/ or give further instructions.

TP

Further delays were attributed to the difficulty faced when dealing with uncooperative witnesses. According to Captain Masegela, in order to talk to TRC witnesses one has to go through their lawyers first. He indicated that many of the lawyers took a very long time to respond to his requests. He also expressed disappointment about the tone in our correspondence as it insinuated that he was not adequately doing his work despite the delays being out of his control.

Certificate of Completed Investigations
Frank asked if a certificate indicating that the investigations were complete had been issued. Captain Masegela said that a certificate had been issued but that it came from a different police department. Frank asked if Captain Masegela felt the investigations were complete and Masegela responded affirmatively but qualified the response by making it clear that investigations are complete with respect to instructions and guidance given by Macadam. Captain Masegela also said that, when necessary, he expanded investigations based on leads. Frank asked him again if, as the investigating officer he was satisfied with the investigations. Captain Masegela responded affirmatively.

DNA Tests
Frank raised that General Dramat had indicated that more DNA tests were to be done based on mortuary records and asked Captain Masegela if this had been done. Masegela indicated that it had been done and that they have ruled out the possibility of any of those bodies being that of Nokuthula as they are too old to be her.

Westonaria Plot
Frank asked if they had investigated the burial site at Westonaria. Masegela indicated that they went to the site and there were no more unidentified remains to examine. However, the people at Westonaria will keep him informed should anything else turn up.

Skeletal Remains from Brits
Frank asked what made them think that the skeletal remains at Brits were linked to this case. Captain Masegela indicated that he had received information that a female body fitting the age requirement had been discovered and that he had to ensure that it was not her. Brits is also close to where she disappeared. Thembi then asked if this means that they will continuously check every single female body fitting the age requirement as she felt that this is similar to shooting in the dark. She also indicated that these far-fetched options were time consuming and should not be allowed to prevent the pursuit of more credible leads. She acknowledged that they should leave no stone unturned but this must not be an excuse to waste time. She felt that the SAPS are walking down dark alleys whilst ignoring people like Radebe who could possibly lead them to her remains. Colonel Xaba stated that he agrees with her, but she must understand that they cannot rule out any avenues.

18 MK Operatives
Frank asked if they had interviewed the 18 MK members and Captain Masegela said he knew nothing about 18 MK operatives. He stated that he was only instructed to interview Ngidi, Ngubese, Olifant and Twala. He reiterated that he was never given the names of 18 MK operatives. Frank referred him to the letter from Macadam addressed to Captain Masegela dated 27 October 2010 where this task is specifically mentioned. Masegela denied ever seeing such a letter and repeated that he had followed every single instruction received from Macadam. Frank then went on to explain how finding the 18 MK members is central to the investigation. During the TRC hearings Coetzee alleged that Nokuthula had turned into a spy for them and that her information led to the arrest of those 18 MK members. Coetzee produced a newspaper displaying the announcement by the Minister of Police that 18 MK members had been arrested. The newspaper date had been removed. Coetzee tried to use this to prove that Nokuthula had been released as a spy and managed to give information that led to the arrests. Later, it was revealed that the date on the newspaper was September 1984 and Nokuthula disappeared in 1983 making it difficult to believe that she had been released as a spy and facilitated the arrests of the 18 MK members.

Captain Masegela then indicated that they had traced Ngidi and he is also supposed to be one of the people betrayed by Nokuthula. Ngidi confirmed that there is no way that Nokuthula could have given information that led to his arrest. Frank then indicated that finding the remaining operatives is important as it will prove that Coetzee lied.

Interviewing General Nyanda

Frank asked if General Nyanda had been interviewed. Masegela indicated that he was instructed by Macadam not to interview Nyanda. Frank went on to ask if there were any outstanding tasks and at that point Captain Masegela stated that he felt like he was being questioned in an accusatory manner. Frank apologized and indicated that this was not his intention. He made it clear that he was merely trying to fully understand what had and had not been done. It was at this point that Thembi explained that Captain Masegela had not been copied in any of the letters sent from the NPA to the team. Thembi shared the letters with Captain Masegela to make sure he knew exactly what the NPA had communicated to the team. Captain Masegela then said that there are no outstanding tasks and that if there was anything he was unable to do, for example- interview a man who has already passed away, he attached an affidavit to that effect and any supporting documentation, for example death certificates.

Brigadier Schoon

Frank asked if Brigadier Schoon was still alive and Masegela said yes but that he is very old and hard of hearing.

Extra Resources

Frank asked if Captain Masegela had requested extra resources for this investigation. Captain Masegela said he had and that they had received assistance from a number of departments including the Crime Scene Management team. Colonel Xaba also responded to say that unfortunately one of the people instructed to assist had recently been involved in a car accident.

Prosecution of Coetzee and Pretorius

Frank asked Captain Masegela whether he felt that sufficient evidence existed for the prosecution of Coetzee and Pretorius. Masegela indicated that there could be. Colonel Xaba responded by saying that there is no direct evidence that links them to the crime. Captain Masegela said that Radebe should be charged with kidnapping and torture. Frank then asked if they had been able to speak to Radebe. Captain Masegela indicated that Radebe and his lawyers refused to talk to them as did Coetzee and Mong.

Allegations of Nokuthula becoming a Spy for the Security Branch

TP

Frank explained that the white Security Branch members claimed that they managed to make Nokuthula a spy for them and that they took her to Swaziland and she never returned. Frank stated that this is unlikely because they never circulated Nokuthula as a wanted person after she failed to return to her "handlers". This is peculiar considering they had classified her as a "terrorist". Colonel Xaba said that in 1983 the police did not have the capacity to circulate wanted persons and that that Frank was speaking with modern day technology in mind.

Captain Masegela said that according to Coetzee and Pretorius they turned her into a spy and Strongman (Bambo) took her to the Swaziland border. Bambo was later arrested for another crime and Coetzee and Pretorius panicked as they feared he would implicate them and so they arranged to have him killed.

SWT66
Frank asked if they were able to trace SWT66. Captain Masegela said that they were not able to trace SWT66.

Motsoanyame Commission
Frank asked if they had followed up with Motsoanyame Commission. Captain Masegela said they had not.

TRC cases sent for investigation
Frank said that the NPA wrote to the team indicating that South African president had directed the NDPP to give attention to 500 TRC missing people cases and according to the NDPP website 150 cases were identified for immediate investigation. He then asked Captain Masegela if he was aware of these 150 cases. Colonel Xaba and Captain Masegela both said that they were not aware of 150 cases being investigated but that they knew that a much smaller number of cases were sent for immediate investigation including that of Nokuthula.

Thembi then suggested that a meeting should be organized between the NPA, SAPS and the team so that the NPA can go through the docket with everyone. Thembi indicated that regardless of what the NPA's decision is- this meeting must be held as she would like to know all the details.

Hospital Records in Swaziland
Frank asked if they had looked into hospital records in Swaziland. Captain Masegela said that they had done so in conjunction with Interpol but that nothing useful had turned up.

Angela asked if Macadam had indicated when he would give them feedback and they responded by saying that he did not say when he would get back to them.

CONCLUSION
The meeting ended with Colonel Xaba asking for us all to focus on the positive aspects and he indicated that he would not object to having another meeting with the PCLU present.

TP

Carien van der Linde

From: Carien van der Linde <carien@lrc.org.za>
Sent: 16 September 2014 12:47 PM
To: 'XabaN@saps.org.za'
Subject: KIDNAPPING TORTURE DISAPEARANCE AND MURDER OF NOKHUTHULA AURELIA SIMELANE / PRIORITY INVESTIGATION; JV PLEIN 1469/02/1996
Attachments: AFFIDAVIT FRANK KENNAN DUTTON.pdf

Dear Col. Xaba

I attach a PDF version of the affidavit of Frank Kennan Dutton, the investigator appointed by the Simelane family.

The original copy is with Frank Dutton, if you should require it.

Warm regards

Carien van der Linde
Attorney

| Tel: 011 836 9831 | Fax: 011 836 8680 | Email: carien@lrc.org.za |
| Mobile: 060 346 9577 |
Physical : 15th Floor	Bram Fischer Towers	20 Albert street	Marshalltown
Johannesburg	South Africa
Postal: P.O Box 9495	Johannesburg 2000
Website: www.lrc.org.za
Johannesburg	Cape Town	Durban	Grahamstown

MAKE A SECURE DONATION

LRC
Legal Resources Centre

TP

AFFIDAVIT

I, the undersigned

FRANK KENNAN DUTTON

Do hereby make oath and state:

1. I am a South African citizen with ID Number 4905204085086. I reside at 18 Lawrence Place, Waterfall, 3650, KwaZulu Natal.

2. I am an International policing and investigation expert and provide expertise on a consultancy basis internationally as well as locally. I have played leading roles in complex investigations in South Africa and many other countries. Including Bosnia, Croatia, Kosovo, Sudan (Darfur), Afghanistan, DRC, Cameroon, Uganda, Nigeria, Rwanda, Kyrgyzstan, Liberia, Mozambique, Zimbabwe, Brazil and East Timor. I have 38 years of policing experience in South Africa and I was the first head of the Directorate of Special Operations.

3. In 2012 I was awarded the Order of Baobab in Gold by the President of South Africa for my South African and International police work. In particular the President made this award in order to recognize my "exceptional contribution to and achievement in [my] investigative work as a dedicated and loyal policeman, for exposing the apartheid government's "Third Force".

4. I make this affidavit in response to a request set out in a letter from Colonel Xaba, Commander Crimes against the State, Directorate Priority Crimes Investigations (DPCI) dated 11 August 2014 to the family's legal representatives, the Legal Resources Centre (LRC). This letter sought an affidavit from me, as the family's private investigator, setting out what investigation I had conducted and in particular what statements I had taken. In a letter dated 9 September 2014 the LRC advised Col Xaba that I took no statements. Col Xaba responded by way of a letter dated 10 September 2014 in which he indicated that the National Prosecuting Authority (NPA) claimed it could not make a decision without the requested affidavit.

16/9/2024 TP

5. During June 2011 I was retained as a consultant by the family of Nokuthula Aurelia Simelane to inquire into the whereabouts of Nokuthula Simelane who had been kidnapped from the Carlton Centre, Johannesburg in September 1983 by members of the former Security Branch of the South African Police. My investigation was sponsored by the Foundation for Human Rights (FHR). After her kidnapping she was secretly held captive on a farm in Northam for several weeks and severely tortured after which she disappeared.

6. I researched documents provided to me by the family's legal representatives as well as the contents of public records pertaining to Ms Simelane's disappearance. I thereafter studied the testimonies before the Amnesty Committee of the TRC in respect of the abduction and assault of Ms Simelane. I also acquainted myself with the Truth & Reconciliation Commission (TRC) Report and the TRC findings concerning the Security Branch of the South African Police.

7. In the course of my inquiry I met and spoke to people concerning the disappearance of Ms Simelane. I did not take any written or sworn statements.

8. I spoke to the following relatives of Nokuthula Simelane:

- Ernestina Simelane - Mother
- Thembisile Phumelele Nkadimeng – Sister
- Lungelo Simelane - brother who was also a student at the University of Swaziland at the time of the disappearance.
- Richard Vilakazi – Uncle

TP

16/9/2014

- Thembi Vilakazi – Aunt (Ms Simelane was a frequent visitor to her home in Swaziland and saw her shortly before she left and disappeared in Johannesburg)
- Bonginkosi Nkumalo - Cousin - who was also a Swaziland University student and MK courier in Barney Molekwane 's unit and stayed with his Uncle Richard Vilakazi (together with Barney Molekwane and members of the Special Operations MK Unit. Barney was Ms Simelane's cousin).

9. I also met and spoke to the following persons who were in regular contact with Ms Simelane (in Swaziland) prior to her disappearance:

- Wendy Mpama - close personal friend.
- Sipho Twala – MK friend in Swaziland
- Philisiwe Twala – MK member and friend in Swaziland
- Ray Lala – MK member and friend in Swaziland
- Totsi Memela – Personal friend in Swaziland
- Mbali Mnqadi – a close friend (roommate at University) now a Brigadier in the South African Police Service.
- Zweli Sizane – Uncle who served in MK Security and Intelligence (Swaziland) at time of disappearance and enjoyed a close relationship with Ms Simelane.
- R.S Moloi – headed MK Security and Intelligence in Swaziland at time of Ms. Simelane's disappearance. He is currently South Africa's Ambassador to Vietnam. He enjoyed a friendly relationship with Ms Simelane.
- Siphiwe Nyanda – currently the President's personal representative in Parliament. He was a MK Commander in Swaziland. His positions included: Commander Transvaal Urban Machinery (1979 - 1983). Chief of Staff Transvaal Command (Eastern Command) (1983 - 1986). Commander Border Operations, Swaziland (1986). Deputy Head, Political Military underground leadership in South Africa (1988 - 1990). He was acquainted with Ms Simelane and her family members in Swaziland.
- Ricky Mkhondo – A senior MK Intelligence officer in Swaziland at the time of Ms Simelane's disappearance. He was friendly with Ms Simelane and Gilbert Twala.

TP

16/9/2011

- Gilbert Twala – now Director General of the Department of Civil Aviation. He was the Commander of the Transvaal Urban Machinery he was Ms Simelane's MK Commander and was also having a romantic relationship with her.

10. They all maintained that Ms Simelane had not returned to Swaziland after her disappearance in South Africa early in September 1983.

11. I spoke to Duma Nkosi and his mother Nthombi Nkosi who both confirm that Ms Simelane arrived at their home in Soweto and spent one night with them. Ms Simelane left the following morning to go to the Carlton Centre. She left a small travel bag of personal belongings at their home. She did not return and was not seen by them again.

12. I spoke to Norman Mkhonza who said he had last seen Ms Simelane on the day of her capture and had not been instructed by any of his superiors thereafter to be on the alert for her, or informed that she was a wanted person (terrorist).

13. I spoke to Nimrod Veyi and Mohapi Selamolela who confirmed that Ms Simelane had very noticeable injuries to her ankles and wrists (as one would expect) from the prolonged and continued shackling that she had endured over five weeks of captivity and said that in their opinion these injuries (apart from other injuries) would have precluded any attempt to re-infiltrate her back into MK Swaziland. They also both said that they were never informed by their superiors that Ms. Simelane was a wanted person (terrorist) and to be alert for her or to gather information regarding her activities or whereabouts. We also discussed safe houses which were used by their SB during 1983 in Klipspruit and Westonaria.

14. I investigated the death of Barney Molekwane because Willem Coetzee said in his testimony before the Amnesty Committee that while Ms Simelane was held captive at the Northam farm, she had provided him with information that led to action been taken against the Sasol MK sabotage group who were led by Barney

TP
16/9/2016

Molekwane. According to Piet Retief Inquest No 79/85 which dealt with the death of Barney Molekwane and members of his Special Operations group in the Eastern Transvaal on 28 November 1985. (Two years after Ms Simelane's capture.) The Molekwane group were on their way back to Swaziland when they encountered members of the Security Forces unexpectedly. A shooting ensued and Barney Molekwane and his fellow operatives were killed. The contact was unexpected and spontaneous. It was not a planned Security Force Operation and cannot be linked to Ms Simelane.

15. Coetzee and Pretorius testified that during Ms Simelane's detention she also provided information which enabled the Security Branch to arrest ANC cadres whilst she was still in confinement at the farm at Northam. They referred to the arrest of Curtis Norman Mkhonza aka MK Mpho. I spoke to Curtis Mkhonza and he told me he was arrested during 1984 and that his arrest was not linked to Ms Simelane.

16. Coetzee and Pretorius also claimed in their testimony before the Amnesty Committee that information from Ms Simelane whilst she was held captive on the farm led "directly or indirectly" to the arrest of 18 persons and referred to an undated news article as follows:

> "Police Strike Hard at ANC. Le Grange states 18 identified members of the banned African National Congress, as well as numerous active supporters have been arrested and detained by the Security Branch in the last three months..."

17. It became apparent at the hearing that The Star newspaper published this report on 22 June 1984. It therefore seems that these arrests occurred about 9 months after Ms Simelane's disappearance.

TP 16/9/2010

18. I spoke to some of the 18 persons who were arrested (as referred to in The Star news article dated 22 June 1984). The persons I spoke to were:

- Justice Ngidi
- Jabu Ngubese
- Enoch Mthombeni
- Lillian Gabashane
- Amos Masondo
- Duma Nkosi

19. I spoke to them individually and was told that their arrests in 1984 could not have been as a result of information supplied by Ms Simelane. Amos Masondo explained further that the majority of the 18 arrests related to persons who were not taking an active part in the "armed struggle" but were merely providing shelter and safety to MK Operatives who had been ousted from Swaziland in consequence to the Nkomati Accord, signed on 16 March 1984 between South Africa and Swaziland.

20. I spoke to Manuel Antonio Olifant who told me about a farmhouse at Westonaria which the Soweto SB Intelligence Unit used as a safe house prior to 1983. He also said that in 1983 he lived in house 23 Klipspruit and that the other section of the house, number 21, was used by Coetzee's SB unit as a safe house. He said he did not know what had happened to Ms Simelane.

21. I was told by Ray Lala, Ricky Mkhonda and Tim Williams (all of whom were appointed to senior positions within the South African Intelligence and police intelligence structures after their return from exile in about 1990) that they had not come across any official documentation declaring Ms Simelane a wanted person.

TP
16/9/2010

22. I spoke to Dirk Coetzee who told me that it was a SB strategy to always (wherever feasible) to deflect blame to the ANC. He provided several examples of how this strategy was used. In his opinion deflecting blame to the ANC for Ms Simelane's disappearance was a perfect example of this tactic. In addition to what Coetzee told me I noted too that the TRC made a finding concerning this SB strategy.

16/9/2014
F K DUTTON

I hereby certify that the deponent has acknowledged that he knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was signed and sworn to before me, Commissioner of Oaths, at HILLCREST SAPS on this the 16 day of September 2014 the regulations contained in Government Notice No R1258 of 21 July 1972, as amended, and Government Notice No R1648 of 19 August 1977, as amended, having been complied with.

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

COMMUNITY SERVICE CENTRE
2014 -09- 16
HILLCREST

TP

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

REGISTRAR OF THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA
PRIVATE BAG/PRIVAATSAK X67
PRETORIA 0001
2015 -05- 20
T. MALELE
REGISTRAR/GRIFFIER
SUID-AFRIKAANSE HOË HOF VAN
GAUTENG AFDELING, PRETORIA

Case Number:

In the matter between:

THEMBISILE PHUMELELE NKADIMENG — Applicant

And

NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS — First Respondent

THE NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE — Second Respondent

THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CORRECTIONAL SERVICES — Third Respondent

THE NATIONAL MINISTER OF POLICE — Fourth Respondent

WILLEM HELM COETZEE — Fifth Respondent

ANTON PRETORIUS — Sixth Respondent

FREDERICK BARNARD MONG — Seventh Respondent

MSEBENZI TIMOTHY RADEBE — Eighth Respondent

WILLEM SCHOON — Ninth Respondent

TP

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA
GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

Case Number:

In the matter between:

THEMBISILE PHUMELELE NKADIMENG	Applicant
And
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	First Respondent
THE NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE	Second Respondent
THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CORRECTIONAL SERVICES	Third Respondent
THE NATIONAL MINISTER OF POLICE	Fourth Respondent
WILLEM HELM COETZEE	Fifth Respondent
ANTON PRETORIUS	Sixth Respondent
FREDERICK BARNARD MONG	Seventh Respondent
MSEBENZI TIMOTHY RADEBE	Eighth Respondent
WILLEM SCHOON	Ninth Respondent

V.P.

TP

IN CAMERA SUPPORTING AFFIDAVIT

I, the undersigned

VUSUMZI PATRICK PIKOLI

state under oath as follows:

INTRODUCTION

1. I am an advocate of the High Court of South Africa and a former National Director of Public Prosecutions. I have provided a supporting affidavit in these proceedings.

2. I refer to the memorandum mentioned in paragraph 51 of my supporting affidavit titled 'PROSECUTION OF OFFENCES EMANATING FROM CONFLICTS OF THE PAST: INTERPRETATION OF PROSECUTION POLICY AND GUIDELINES' and was dated 15 February 2007. This memorandum is annexed hereto marked "VPP1". It was annexed to my affidavit before the Ginwala Commission marked as "TRC1".

3. As I had marked this memorandum as an "internal secret memorandum" I have not attached it to my open supporting affidavit. I have attached it this in camera affidavit which will be filed separately and which will not be made available to the public, unless this honorable Court authorizes such release.

V.P.

TP

3.1. The issues and complaints raised in the memorandum have already been discussed in my affidavit filed before the Ginwala Commission, which has been part of the public record since 2008.

3.2. In my view, there is nothing in the memorandum that implicates or impairs national security.

3.3. It ought to be released as it points to unlawful and unconstitutional conduct.

4. In this memorandum I pointed out that:

4.1. The problems are "hindering and obstructing the NPA in fulfilling its constitutional mandate, namely, to institute criminal proceedings without fear, favour or prejudice".

4.2. The SAPS and NIA had not made dedicated members available to the NPA to gather sufficient and admissible evidence in the TRC cases. This was one of the tasks that the "Task Team" was required to address.

4.3. There were differences in interpretation in relation to the role of the other state departments in relation to the prosecutorial decision-making process.

5. I concluded by stating that:

VP

TP

I have now reached a point where I honestly believe that there is "improper interference with my work and that I am hindered and/ or obstructed from carrying out my functions on this particular matter.

It would appear that there is a general expectation on the part of the Department of Justice and Constitutional Development, SAPS and NIA that there will be no prosecutions and that I must play along. My conscience and oath of office that I took, does not allow that.

Based on the above, I cannot proceed further with these TRC matters in accordance with the "normal legal processes" and "prosecuting mandate" of the NPA as originally envisaged by Government. Therefore, and in view of the fact that the NPA prosecutes on behalf of the State, I am awaiting Government's direction on this matter.

VUSUMZI PATRICK PIKOLI

I hereby certify that the deponent has acknowledge that he knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was signed and sworn to before me, Commissioner of Oaths, at CAPE TOWN on this the 6th day of MAY 2011 ~~day of .....~~ the regulations contained in Government Notice No R1258 of 21 July 1972, as amended, and Government Notice No R1648 of 19 August 1977, as amended, having been complied with.

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

Andrew Lehlogo Bucky Mohobio
Commissioner of Oaths
Practising Attorney
2nd Floor, Leadership House,40 Shortmarket Str
Greenmarket Square, Cape Town, 8001

COPY 134

The National Prosecuting Authority of South Africa
Igunya Jikelele Labetshutshisi Bo Mzantsi Afrika
Die Nasionale Vervolgingsgesag van Suid-Afrika

SECRET INTERNAL MEMORANDUM
TO	MS BS MABANDLA, MP MINISTER FOR JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT
FROM	ADV VP PIKOLI NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS
SUBJECT	PROSECUTION OF OFFENCES EMANATING FROM CONFLICTS OF THE PAST: INTERPRETATION OF PROSECUTION POLICY AND GUIDELINES
REF NO.	3/2P (PCLU)
DATE	15 FEBRUARY 2007

1. PURPOSE OF MEMORANDUM

The purpose of this memorandum is to—

(a) inform the Minister about the National Prosecuting Authority's (NPA) understanding and interpretation of the policy and guidelines relating to the prosecution of offences emanating from conflicts of the past which were committed on or before 11 May 1994;

(b) inform the Minister about the problems the NPA is experiencing in the implementation of this policy and guidelines; and

V.P.

TP

(b) propose a way forward.

2. BACKGROUND INFORMATION

2.1 Background relating to initial proposals

2.1.1 On 23 February 2004, a Director-General's Forum, under the chairpersonship of the former Director-General: Justice and Constitutional Development (Adv Vusi Pikoli) appointed a Task Team to consider and report on, "the nature of the 'arrangements that are standard in the normal execution of justice, and which are accommodated in our legislation' that the NPA and intelligence agencies may come up with in assisting persons who divulge information relating to offences committed during the conflicts of the past.".

2.1.2 In its deliberations, the Task Team took cognisance of the fact that in terms of section 179(1) and (2) of the Constitution, the NPA is an independent constitutional institution and the National Director has full discretion on whether a particular prosecution should or should not be instituted. The Task Team's recommendations should therefore be consistent with this constitutional requirement.

2.1.3 In its Report, the Task Team recommended the establishment of a Departmental Task Team comprising members of the following Departments or institutions:

- The Department of Justice and Constitutional Development
- The Intelligence Agencies (NIA)
- The South African National Defence Force
- The South African Police Service (SAPS)
- Correctional Services
- The National Prosecuting Authority
- Office of the President

VP TP

2.1.4 It was proposed that the functions of the proposed Task Team should, among others, be the following:

"(a) Before the institution of any criminal proceedings for an offence committed during the conflicts of the past, to consider the advisability of the institution of such criminal proceedings and make recommendations to the National Director of Public Prosecutions in this regard*.*

(b) To consider applications received from convicted persons alleging that they had been convicted of political offences committed during the conflicts of the past and to make recommendations to—

(i) the President, through the Minister for Justice and Constitutional Development, to pardon the alleged offender in terms of section 84(1)(k) of the Constitution;

(ii) the Commissioner of Correctional Services regarding the possible release of the applicant on parole or the conversion of the sentence to correctional supervision.". (Emphasis added)

2.2 Background relating to Amended Prosecution Policy

2.2.1 As the Minister is aware, the abovementioned recommendations were not implemented, since many held the view that the proposed functions of the Task Team could be unconstitutional in view of the provisions of section 179 of the Constitution. Subsequently, Government decided that it was important to deal with these matters on a uniform basis in terms of a specifically defined prosecutorial policy and directives.

2.2.2 Therefore, it was proposed that the National Director, with the concurrence of the Minister, should issue amended Prosecutorial Policy and Directives in terms of section 179(5)(a) of the Constitution, read with section 21 of the National Prosecuting Authority Act, 1998 (Act No. 32 of 1998) (NPA Act), and that such

VP
TP

Policy and Directives should be submitted to Parliament in terms of section 21(2) of the NPA Act.

2.2.3 Following discussions with all the relevant stakeholders and a submission to Cabinet, the Prosecution Policy and Directives relating to the prosecution of offences emanating from conflicts of the past which were committed on or before 11 May 1994 (hereinafter referred to as the "Amended Prosecution Policy"), were approved and came into operation on 1 December 2005. The Amended Prosecution Policy was also duly tabled in Parliament and is binding on the prosecuting authority.

3. IMPORTANT FEATURES OF AMENDED PROSECUTION POLICY

3.1 For purposes of this memorandum, it is important to refer the Minister to the under-mentioned features of the Amended Prosecution Policy:[1]

(a) The Amended Prosecution Policy emanates from and is based on the statement of President Thabo Mbeki to the National Houses of Parliament and the Nation, on 15 April 2003, when he gave Government's response to the final report of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC).

(b) The President, among others, stated that the question as to the prosecution or not of persons, who did not take part in the TRC process, is left in the hands of the National Prosecuting Authority (NPA) as is normal practice.[2]

(c) The President further stated that as part of the normal legal processes and in the national interest, the NPA, working with the Intelligence Agencies, will be accessible to those persons who are prepared to unearth the truth of the conflicts of the past and who wish to enter into agreements that are standard in the normal execution of justice and the prosecuting mandate, and are accommodated in our legislation.[3]

(d) It is important to note that the President made it clear that—

[1] Attached hereto as Annexure "A".
[2] See paragraph A.1(b) of Appendix A to Amended Prosecution Policy.
[3] See paragraph A.1(c) and (d) of Appendix A.

V.P. TP

(i) the decision to be taken by the NPA (whether to prosecute or not) should be in accordance with the normal legal process;

(ii) in order to reach a well-considered decision, the NPA should work together with the Intelligence Agencies, which include the NIA and the SAPS;

(iii) the agreements entered into between the NPA and those persons who are prepared to unearth the truth of the conflicts of the past, should be in accordance with standard and normal execution of justice;

(iv) such agreements should be in accordance with the NPA's prosecution mandate; and

(v) such agreements should be in accordance with existing legislation.

3.2 Furthermore, it is important to note that the Amended Prosecution Policy expressly states that the prosecuting policy, directives and guidelines are required to reflect and attach due weight to, among others, the following:

(a) The dicta of the Constitutional Court to the effect that the NPA represents the community and is under an international obligation to prosecute crimes of apartheid. (See The State v Wouter Basson CCT 30/03.).[4]

(b) The constitutional obligation on the NPA to exercise its functions without fear, favour or prejudice (section 179 of the Constitution).

(c) The legal obligations placed on the NPA in terms of its enabling legislation, in particular the provisions relating to the formulation of prosecuting criteria and the right of persons affected by decisions of the NPA to make representations, and for them to be dealt with.

(d) The existing prosecuting policy and general directives or guidelines issued by the National Director to assist prosecutors in arriving at a decision to prosecute or not.

[4] See paragraph A.2 (h) to (k) of Appendix A.

V.P.
TP

3.3 In respect of procedural arrangements, which must be adhered to in the prosecution process, the Amended Prosecution Policy provides, among others, in particular that—

(a) the Priority Crimes Litigation Unit (PCLU) in the Office of the National Director shall be responsible for overseeing investigations and instituting prosecutions in all such matters;

(b) the PCLU "shall be assisted in the execution of its duties" by a senior designated official from the following State departments or other components of the NPA:

(i) The National Intelligence Agency.

(ii) The Detective Division of the South African Police Service.

(iii) The Department of Justice & Constitutional Development.

(iv) The Directorate of Special Operations.

3.4 From the above, it is clear that in relation to the relevant offences—

(a) the decision whether to prosecute or not vests in the prosecuting authority and in terms of the Amended Prosecution Policy, in particular, the National Director;

(b) such decision must be exercised in accordance with the Constitution and existing legislation;

(c) the abovementioned State Departments only have a role to play insofar as they must assist the NPA in the investigation process and the gathering of information so as to assist the NPA in reaching a well-considered decision whether to prosecute or not.

4. PROBLEMS RELATING TO IMPLEMENTATION OF AMENDED PROSECUTION POLICY

4.1 Since the coming into operation of the Amended Prosecution Policy, the NPA has experienced various problems relating to the implementation thereof. These problems are hindering and obstructing the NPA in fulfilling its constitutional mandate, namely, to institute criminal proceedings without fear, favour or prejudice. On the one hand, the NPA is experiencing problems investigating cases to ascertain whether there is sufficient and admissible evidence to provide a reasonable prospect of a successful prosecution, since the SAPS and NIA had not made dedicated members available to assist the NPA in this regard. This was subsequently dealt with by the setting up of a "Task Team". On the other, the NPA is now experiencing problems relating to the interpretation of the role of the other State Departments in the process. As indicated hereunder, it seems as if the SAPS and NIA hold the view that the proposals relating to the original proposed Task Team (that were rejected by Government), must be implemented and that such Task Team should play a role in the decision-making process.

4.2 During the middle of 2006, a meeting was held at the Office of the Presidency to attend to the abovementioned problems. The National Commissioner, the National Director, the Directors-General of Justice and NIA, and Mr Jafta of the Presidency, attended this meeting. It was agreed that a Working Committee should be established. This recommendation was taken to the Ministers in the Cluster. At a subsequent meeting attended by the Minister for Safety and Security, the Minister of Social Development and Minister Thoko Didiza (as Acting Minister for Justice and Constitutional Development), it was agreed that such Working Committee (now referred to as a Task Team), should be established to assist the NPA.

4.3 Following the above agreement, the National Director called a meeting at the Office of the NPA. The Heads of Department as well as representatives of all relevant State Departments to serve on the Task Team were invited. All Departments were represented at this meeting. At this meeting—

(a) the terms of reference of the Task Team were explained and agreed to;

(b) it was agreed that Dr Silas Ramaite (Deputy National Director of Public Prosecutions) would chair the meetings of the Task Team.

Furthermore, on an issue raised by the representative of NIA, the National Director was explicit in explaining that the mandate of the Task Team would not entail making any recommendations on a decision whether to prosecute or not to prosecute and that the National Director would not be dependent on receiving such a recommendation before he could make a decision. The Task Team should be responsible for overseeing that the NPA obtain the necessary information or to give inputs so as to assist and enable the National Director to reach a well-considered decision whether to institute criminal proceedings or not. Furthermore, the Task Team should deal with all relevant matters identified by the PCLU and the SAPS.

4.4.1 Subsequently, on 6 December 2006, the Office of the PCLU received the e-mail marked "B" from Dr PC Jacobs of the SAPS. Furthermore, the National Director received letters from the National Commissioner and the Director-General: NIA, dated 6 February 2007 and 8 February 2007, respectively. (Attached hereto as Annexures "C" and "D", respectively)

4.4.2 According to Dr Jacobs, his understanding is that the Task Team must submit a final recommendation to a Committee of Directors-General in respect of each case. He also points out that the National Commissioner is of the view that this procedure should be followed in respect of each investigation that has been finalised. However, he does not elaborate on the role of the Committee of Directors-General.

4.4.3 In his letter dated 6 February 2007, the National Commissioner points out that he has been briefed regarding the meeting of the "Task Team set up in terms of the Cabinet guidelines on the outstanding Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC) matters". According to the National Commissioner his understanding is that the officials designated on the Task Team "will provide recommendations to the Directors-General who will, as a collective, advise the National Prosecuting Authority as the decision maker of prosecutions". The Director-General: NIA indicates that he had a discussion with his representative on the Task Team and he received a copy of the National Commissioner's letter. He concurs with the views of the National Commissioner.

4.5 In the first instance, it is important to note that as far as the NPA is concerned, this Task Team was not set up in terms of the Amended Prosecution Policy, which include the guidelines on TRC matters, but in terms of internal agreement between the relevant stakeholders. Furthermore, the NPA is not aware of any agreement or arrangement in terms of which the Task Team must submit a report to a Committee of Directors-General and which Committee must advise the NPA regarding prosecution decisions. Reading the e-mail of Dr Jacobs and the letter of the National Commissioner in context, it seems as if the above process is a proposal by the National Commissioner and not an agreement reached by the Task Team. For example, Dr Jacobs points out that—

- the National Commissioner is of the opinion that it must be established what disclosures were made...";
- "the National Commissioner is of the opinion that such process need to be followed in each case...".

In the same vein, the National Commissioner writes as follows:

- "I have insisted that the complainant be consulted ...on the basis that the Directors-General will have a opportunity to provide input before a decision on prosecution is taken.".
- "In my view a comprehensive report...should be discussed by the Directors-General".

V.P.
TP

- "Although I do not insist on a meeting of the Directors-General after each meeting of our officials, I deem it necessary that the substantive reports and recommendations of the officials should be discussed by the Directors-General before a decision is made.". (Emphasis added)

4.6 The NPA cannot agree to the above proposal. The effect thereof might be that the National Director would be obliged (as is suggested by the National Commissioner) to wait for the finalisation of the proposed process before he may make a decision whether to prosecute or not. If the Task Team or the Committee of Directors-General, in spite of a "reasonable prospect of a successful prosecution", unnecessarily delays the process, the National Director would be prevented from complying with the prosecuting authority's constitutional obligation. Therefore, such a process would be unconstitutional.

5. CONCLUSION AND WAY FORWARD

5.1 There is clearly a misunderstanding regarding the role of the Task Team and the role of the relevant State Departments referred to in the Amended Prosecution Policy. In accordance with the approved Amended Prosecution Policy[5], the NPA is of the view that the duty of the Task Team or the relevant State Departments is to assist the NPA "in the execution of its duties". However, nothing prevents such a Task Team or Departments (whether individually or collectively) to make recommendations to the National Director, provided that the National Director should never be in a position where his constitutional duty is dependent on the recommendation of such a Task Team or relevant Department. Such a procedure would be unconstitutional.

[5] See paragraph B.6 of Appendix A.

5.2 I have now reached a point where I honestly believe that there is improper interference with my work and that I am hindered and/or obstructed from carrying out my functions on this particular matter. Legally I have reached a dead end.

5.3 It would appear that there is a general expectation on the part of the Department of Justice and Constitutional Development, SAPS and NIA that there will be no prosecutions and that I must play along. My conscience and oath of office that I took, does not allow that.

5.4 Based on the above, I cannot proceed further with these TRC matters in accordance with the "normal legal processes" and "prosecuting mandate" of the NPA, as originally envisaged by Government. Therefore, and in view of the fact that the NPA prosecutes on behalf of the State, I am awaiting Government's direction on this matter.

15-02-2007

Adv VP Pikoli
National Director of Public Prosecutions

Ms BS Mabandla, MP
Minister for Justice and Constitutional Development

IN THE COMMISSION OF INQUIRY INTO STOPPED TRC INVESTIGATIONS AND/OR PROSECUTIONS

AFFIDAVIT OF THEMBISILE PHUMELELE SIMELANE

I, the undersigned

THEMBISILE PHUMELELE SIMELANE

state under oath as follows:

Introduction

1. I am an adult female, and presently the Minister of Human Settlements in the Republic of South Africa.

2. I am the sister of Nokuthula Aurelia Simelane ("Nokuthula") who was abducted, brutally tortured and enforcedly disappeared in 1983 by the Security Branch of the former South African Police.

3. The facts contained in this affidavit are within my personal knowledge, unless the context provides otherwise, and are to the best of my knowledge and belief true and correct.

4. I depose to this affidavit to assist the Judicial Commission of Inquiry into stopped TRC Investigations and/or Prosecutions ("the Commission") to address paragraphs 1 to 1.3.2 of the terms of reference of the Commission.

TP D

Confirmation of affidavits

5. I confirm the contents of the founding affidavit of Lukhanyo Calata dated 17 January 2025 filed in Calata & Others v Government of South Africa & Others (Gauteng Division, Case No. 2025-005245), insofar as it pertains to me ("the Calata affidavit"). A certified copy of this affidavit was supplied by Webber Wentzel attorneys to the Commission on 10 October 2025 in bundle 1 at paginated pages 1 - 842.

6. I also confirm the contents of my founding affidavit dated 18 May 2015 filed in Nkadimeng v National Director of Public Prosecutions and Others (Gauteng Division of the High Court, Pretoria, Case No: 35554/2015) ("Nkadimeng 2"), a copy of which was supplied by Webber Wentzel to the Commission on 10 October 2025 in bundle 4 of the Calata Group Volume.

7. My in-camera affidavit filed in Nkadimeng 2 is attached to this statement marked as TPS1. I will rely on the full contents of these affidavits to address the aforesaid paragraphs of the terms of reference.

Background

8. The circumstances surrounding Nokuthula's abduction, torture and disappearance are well documented in the records of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission ("TRC") and various court cases:

8.1 TRC Amnesty Decision AC/2001/185;

8.2 TRC Human Rights Violations Hearing No: JB0280 – Leandra, 3 June 1997

TP D

8.3 Nkadimeng and Others v National Director of Public Prosecutions and Others (Gauteng Division, Case No: 32709/07) [2008] ZAGPHC 422 ("Nkadimeng 1");

8.4 Nkadimeng v National Director of Public Prosecutions and Others (Gauteng Division, Case No: 35554/2015) (Nkadimeng 2);

8.5 Coetzee and Others v Minister of Police and Others (Gauteng Division of the High Court, Pretoria, Case No: 72747/2016);

8.6 Ex parte: Thembisile Phumelele Nkadimeng (Gauteng Division of the High Court, Pretoria, Case No: 86381/2018).

9. Although we now know the facts about Nokuthula's abduction and brutal torture, we do not know the circumstances surrounding her death and her remains have not been recovered. She disappeared 42 years ago.

10. In our quest for justice for Nokuthula, our family, legal representatives and private investigators have engaged with numerous officials of the South African Police Service ("SAPS") and the National Prosecuting Authority ("NPA").

11. In this process, we discovered that Nokuthula's case, like many other TRC cases were not seriously investigated or prosecuted. We did not expect the former South African Police to investigate themselves, however, we firmly believed that the new democratic government would take steps to ensure that the TRC cases would be investigated and prosecuted where sufficient evidence existed. We were wrong.

TP D

12. The failure to investigate and prosecute TRC cases, which I strongly believe could only have been the product of a policy or decision to abandon the cases, represents a deep betrayal of those who gave their lives for the struggle for freedom and democracy.

Interference in my sister's case

13. The interference that affected the investigation and prosecution of Nokuthula's case is set out in detail in the materials described above. It is also set out in detail in the Calata affidavit. I only set out an overview below, which is based on my personal experience to secure justice for Nokuthula.

14. The documents I refer to below are attached to my founding affidavit in Nkadimeng 2 and my in-camera affidavit. I am advised that my in-camera affidavit will be submitted to the Commission together with this affidavit.

15. Since Nokuthula's disappearance at the hands of the Security Branch during September 1983, my family and I have spared no effort in our search for her or her remains. Our initial enquiries were conducted in South Africa and Swaziland where she studied at the time of her disappearance.

16. On 27 January 1996, the Sowetan newspaper published an article in which an unnamed former Security Branch officer disclosed the facts surrounding Nokuthula's disappearance. It was later revealed that the officer was Mzimkulu Nimrod Veyi. As a consequence of the disclosures by Veyi, a police docket was formally registered during 1996 (Priority Investigation: JV Plein: 1469/02/1996).

17. The initial investigation made promising progress, and the case was transferred to the D'Oliveira Unit towards the end of 1996, where it was handled by Captain

TP D

Andrew Leask. Dr Jan D'Oliveira, former attorney-general of the Transvaal Provincial Division, was leading an investigation into apartheid-era crimes unearthed during the Goldstone Commission of Inquiry.

18. On 3 June 1997, the TRC amnesty hearings into Nokuthula's disappearance commenced. Amnesty applications were made for the crimes of kidnapping and torture, but no one applied for amnesty for Nokuthula's murder. The TRC amnesty hearings concluded on 30 June 2000. On 23 May 2001, the TRC granted amnesty to all the applicants for Nokuthula's abduction. However, WHJ Coetzee, A Pretorius and FB Mong were refused amnesty for her torture while MN Veyi and ML Selamolela were granted amnesty for this crime.

19. The investigation conducted by Captain Leask was apparently well advanced and our expectation was that the investigation would be concluded speedily, and that charges would follow given the vast amount of evidence that was placed before the TRC. However, before the conclusion of the investigation, Captain Leask was instructed by his superiors to stop his investigation and hand over the docket to Captain Mike Holmes, since Nokuthula's case was going to form part of a larger case against former SAP General Johannes Izak 'Krappies' Engelbrecht. As far as I am aware, Captain Holmes did not investigate Nokuthula's case further.

20. In 2003, the work of the TRC Amnesty Committee was concluded and the NPA's Priority Crimes Litigation Unit ("PCLU") became operational. The former NDPP, Mr Bulelani Ngcuka, referred the TRC cases to the PCLU. Nokuthula's case was brought to the attention of the PCLU in November 2004 when a submission was made by the Foundation for Human Rights (FHR) that the persons who were refused amnesty for crimes committed against Nokuthula should be prosecuted.

TP

D

21. However, we learned that the TRC cases were placed on hold pending the formulation a new policy to deal with this class of cases. The suspension of investigations into our cases was grossly illegal and unfair. Effectively we were told that our cases, involving murders and other serious crimes, were less important than other murders.

22. The amendments to the NPA's prosecution policy emerged in late 2005 and created a backdoor amnesty for apartheid-era perpetrators. Both the suspension of our cases and the new policy deeply undermined the rule of law as well as our rights to justice, equality and human dignity.

23. Together with the widows of the Cradock Four, I went to court in Nkadimeng 1 to challenge the amended prosecution policy which was struck down by the High Court in 2008.

23.1 During these review proceedings, the NPA disclosed a secret 2004 government report titled "Report of the Amnesty Task Team", which explored ways of promoting impunity for perpetrators of apartheid-era crimes.

23.2 In my view, the report is one of the clearest reflections of the policy or decision of the government not to vigorously pursue TRC cases.

23.3 Seen together with the many years of delay and inaction on our cases, it confirms in my mind that political interference effectively stopped the TRC cases.

TP

D

24. When the amended prosecution policy was set aside in 2008, we assumed that the way was now clear for investigations to be pursued into Nokuthula's case and the other TRC cases. We were again wrong.

25. When we met with the NPA, they advised us that their hands were still tied, as they had no investigators for the TRC cases. This was a refrain we had heard before. It signalled loudly and clearly to us that those in charge of the SAPS and the Directorate of Special Operations (known as the Scorpions) had decided not to investigate the TRC cases. Alternatively, and more likely, they had been told at a political level to keep our cases on ice.

26. Behind the scenes, my legal representatives and I called on the Ministry of Police to permit an investigation to proceed in Nokuthula's case. It was only in March 2010 that we learned that an investigation was going to be re-opened, however the original docket was lost or had gone missing, and a duplicate copy had to be created. I was outraged to hear this. At best it reflected the indifference and gross negligence visited on Nokuthula's case and at worse it was a deliberate attempt to suppress the investigation.

27. In June 2011, my family and I, with the support of the FHR, appointed the late international policing and investigation expert, Frank Dutton, to privately investigate Nokuthula's case. We decided to appoint Dutton because of the dire state of the police investigation.

28. I was advised by the former Acting NDPP, Advocate Nomgcobo Jiba who wrote a letter to my attorneys (on 14 August 2013) confirming what Dr S Ramaite had advised previously, that no investigations were conducted on Nokuthula's case between 2001 and March 2010.

TP

29. However, notwithstanding this dramatic neglect, little or no progress was made in the investigations post March 2010. On 27 October 2010, Adv Chris Macadam of the PCLU submitted a comprehensive list of investigative tasks to the investigating officer. To the best of my knowledge, none of the tasks were properly carried out and some were not carried out at all.

30. By early 2013, I had come to the conclusion that the NPA and DPCI were avoiding the finalisation of Nokuthula's case, alternatively they had no intention of prosecuting anyone. On 29 January 2013 I formally asked for the holding of an inquest. This was the first of several requests for an inquest, all of which fell on deaf ears.

31. Eventually, on 10 July 2014, my attorneys wrote to the NPA and DPCI noting that that there was no real intention on their part to make a prosecutorial decision; and no intention to refer the case to an inquest. The letter accordingly reserved my rights.

32. Out of sheer frustration, in 2015 I brought the application in Nkadimeng 2 to compel the NPA and SAPS to finalize their investigations, and to compel the NPA to hold a formal inquest into Nokuthula's death or take a prosecutorial decision. In support of my application, former NDPP, Advocate Vusi Pikoli and former PCLU head, Advocate Anton Ackermann SC, filed supporting affidavits confirming that political interference effectively blocked the TRC cases.

33. As a direct result of my application in Nkadimeng 2, on 26 February 2016, four former Security Branch officers, Msebenzi Timothy Radebe, Frederick Barnard Mong, Willem Helm Johannes Coetzee, and Anton Pretorius were arrested and charged for Nokuthula's murder. Radebe died in 2019, and Mong passed away in 2021.

TP

D

34. The trial of Coetzee and Pretorius is yet to commence. Initially, the criminal proceedings were delayed because the SAPS refused to pay the legal costs of Coetzee, Pretorius, and Mong. In June 2018, the Pretoria High Court directed the SAPS to pay the reasonable legal costs in the criminal proceedings. Around June 2022, Coetzee alleged he was mentally unfit to stand trial, which claim has still not been resolved. I have my doubts that the surviving accused will ever stand trial.

Conclusion

35. Neither the NPA nor the SAPS have ever taken responsibility for the delays that have besieged the investigation and prosecution of Nokuthula's case over the past decades. A graphical depiction of the delays is attached to this statement, marked as TPS1.

36. I do not believe that the delays were caused solely by negligence or sheer incompetence on the part of the NPA and the SAPS. I believe that outside forces imposed their will on both the NPA and SAPS to undermine, block or stop the TRC cases from being taken forward.

37. I humbly request the Commission to investigate the allegations of political interference and establish why my family, and many other survivors and victims of apartheid era crimes were denied justice.

TP

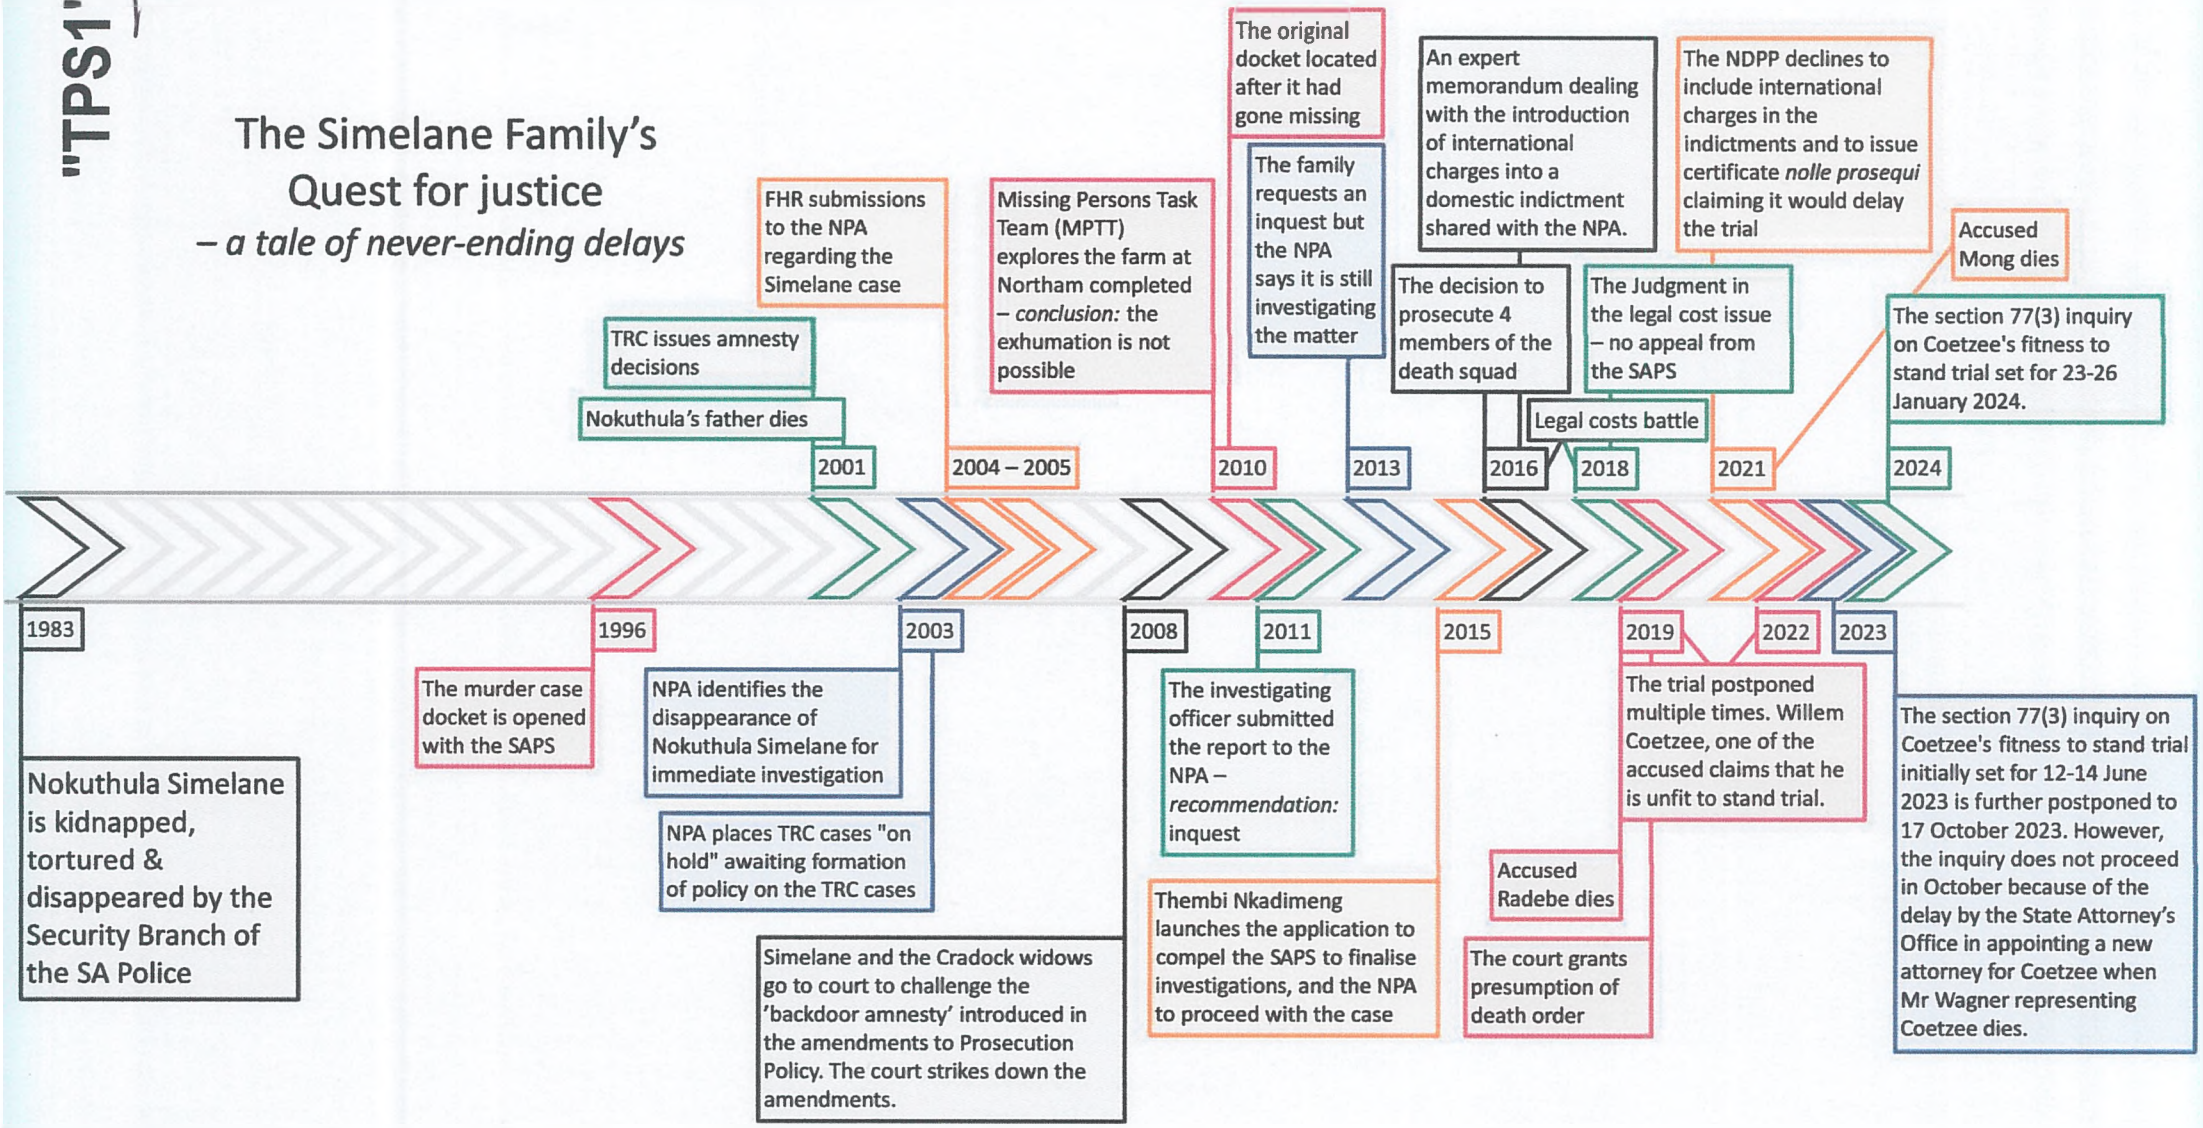
D

THEMBISILE PHUMELELE SIMELANE

The Deponent has acknowledged that the Deponent knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was signed and sworn to or solemnly affirmed before me at GARSFONTEIN on 04 NOVEMBER 2025, the regulations contained in Government Notice No. R1258 of 21 July 1972, as amended, and Government Notice No. R1648 of 19 August 1977, as amended, having been complied with.

7263784
MAJULEKE
CST

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS



Full names: MAJULEKE DEGREE
Business address: 277 Johnny Claasens
Designation: Constable
Capacity: POLICE Official

SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE
GARSFONTEIN
2025 -11- 04
COMMUNITY SERVICE CENTRE
SUID-AFRIKAANSE POLISIEDIENS

"TPS1"

The Simelane Family's Quest for justice

– a tale of never-ending delays

Divider 5

Affidavit of Yasmin Sooka

Calata and Others // Government of the Republic of South Africa and Others

Gauteng Division of the High Court, Pretoria, Case No: 2025/5245

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

CASE NO: _____

In the matter between:

LUKHANYO BRUCE MATTHEWS CALATA	1st Applicant
ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA	2nd Applicant
BONAKELE JACOBS	3rd Applicant
FATIEMA HARON-MASOET	4th Applicant
TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE	5th Applicant
KARL ANDREW WEBER	6th Applicant
KIM TURNER	7th Applicant
LYNDENE PAGE	8th Applicant
MBUSO KHOZA	9th Applicant
NEVILLE BELING	10th Applicant
NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI	11th Applicant
SARAH BIBI LALL	12th Applicant
SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE	13th Applicant
SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO	14th Applicant
STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE	15th Applicant

Date: 17/01/2025
Certified a True Copy
of the Original
Nicola Irving
Nicola Grace Irving

LC
ABM
NGI

THULI KUBHEKA	16th Applicant
HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO	17th Applicant
TSHIDISO MOTASI	18th Applicant
NOMALI RITA GALELA	19th Applicant
PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE	20th Applicant
MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI	21st Applicant
MOGAPI SOLOMON TLHAPI	22nd Applicant
FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS	23rd Applicant

and

GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	1st Respondent
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	2nd Respondent
MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT	3rd Respondent
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	4th Respondent
MINISTER OF POLICE	5th Respondent
NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE	6th Respondent

---

SUPPORTING AFFIDAVIT – YASMIN LOUISE SOOKA

NGI
AM LC

I, the undersigned,

YASMIN LOUISE SOOKA

do hereby make oath and state as follows:

1. I am an adult female and I reside in Johannesburg. I am a member of the Foundation for Human Rights ("FHR") Supervisory Board situated at Metal Box Building, 7th Floor, 25 Owl Street cnr Stanley Avenue, Auckland Park, Johannesburg

2. I am a former Commissioner of the South African Truth and Reconciliation Commission ("TRC" or "the Commission").

3. Save where appears from the context, the facts contained in this affidavit are within my own personal knowledge and are to the best of my knowledge and belief both true and correct.

My Background

4. I set out below some highlights from my career -

4.1 I served as a Commissioner on the TRC from 1995 to 2001 and chaired the committee responsible for the final report between 2001 and 2003.

4.2 I was subsequently appointed by the United Nations ("UN") to serve as a Commissioner on the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Sierra Leone from 2002 to 2004

4.3 Since 2000, I have been a member of the High-Level Expert Advisory Group for the Global Study on the 15-year implementation of the United Nations Resolution 1325 on Women, Peace and Security (which acknowledges the disproportionate and unique impact of armed conflict on women and girls).

LC
NGI
ASA

4.4 I was the Executive Director of the Foundation for Human Rights between 2001 and 2019.

4.5 In 2010, I was appointed by the UN to a three-member Panel of Experts advising the UN Secretary-General on accountability for war crimes committed during the final stages of the civil war in Sri Lanka.

4.6 I am the Executive Director of The International Truth and Justice Project, an independent non-profit organisation based in London working since 2013 to protect and promote justice and accountability in Sri Lanka.

4.7 In 2015, I was appointed by the UN Secretary General to serve as a Member of the Independent Review Panel for the Central African Republic ("CAR"), which investigated allegations of sexual abuse by Foreign Military Forces in CAR as well as the UN response to the allegations.

4.8 In 2016, I was appointed by the UN Human Rights Council as the Chairperson of the Commission on Human Rights in South Sudan and have served in that role since then.

Confirmation

5 I have read the notice of motion and a substantially complete version of the founding affidavit of Lukhanyo Bruce Matthews Calata and confirm the contents in so far as they relate to me.

LC

NGJ

6. In particular, I confirm that I oversaw the handover of the cases from the TRC to the National Prosecuting Authority ("the TRC cases") in the winding up phase of the Commission.

7. I also confirm that, on behalf of the former TRC Commissioners, I addressed letters to the President in 2019 and 2021 requesting him to appoint a commission of inquiry into the political suppression of the TRC cases.

8. I wholeheartedly endorse the application of Lukhanyo Calata and the other families. They have suffered deep and intolerable injustices to their dignity. The rule of law of has been trashed for the sake of political expediency.

9 What the families have endured should have been unthinkable in a society based on democratic values, social justice and fundamental human rights.

10. The families have had to fight every inch of the way to get their cases before the courts. Over decades they have faced the ongoing intransigence and indolence of the authorities.

11. That the families had to go to such lengths speaks volumes of the indifference of the post-apartheid state and its uncaring and contemptuous approach to their struggles for closure.

12 The families are eminently entitled to an independent and open commission of inquiry to get to the bottom of the suppression of the cases which resulted in the mass denial of justice to those who gave so much for South Africa's liberation.

13. In light of the egregious and unrelenting violation of their rights over decades they are also entitled to constitutional damages to vindicate the defilement of such rights.

LC
ASM
NGT

14. Given the abandonment by South Africa's law enforcement agencies of their responsibilities under law, the families had to rely on their own devices. They had to appoint their own lawyers and investigators or rely on pro bono attorneys and counsel, or those provided by the FHR

15. If constitutional damages are awarded, the families will be able to more coherently pursue those few cases where justice is still feasible. They will also be able to properly commemorate the memories of their loved ones, which were so easily abandoned by the ruling elite.

The former TRC Commissioners

16. I bring to the attention of this Honourable Court that the former TRC Commissioners in two letters to the President in 2019 and 2021 expressed their deep concern at the brazen shutting down of the TRC cases. We called on the President to appoint a commission of inquiry to enquire into the suppression of the cases. Both letters are annexed to the founding affidavit of Lukhanyo Calata

17. The former Commissioners who endorsed the aforesaid letters were.

1. The late Archbishop Emeritus Desmond Mpilo Tutu
2. Ms Yasmin Sooka
3. Adv Dumisa Ntsebeza SC
4. Ms Mary Burton
5. Ms Glenda Wildschut
6. Dr Fazel Randera

LC NM NGT

7. Mr Richard Lyster

8. Revd Bongani Finca

9. Adv Denzil Potgieter

10. Dr Wendy Orr

18. Former Committee Members who endorsed the letters were:

    1. Ms Pumla Gobodo-Madikizela

    2. Dr Russell Ally

    3. Prof Piet Meiring.

19. The letters were also endorsed by the following organisations:

    1. Desmond and Leah Tutu Legacy Foundation

    2. The South African Coalition for Transitional Justice, including:

2.1 Centre for the Study of Violence and Reconciliation

2.2 Khulumani Victims Support Group (Galela Campaign)

2.3 Human Rights Media Centre

2.4 Institute for Justice and Reconciliation

2.5 Foundation for Human Rights

2.6 South African H'story Archives

3. Ahmed Timol Family Trust

4 Legal Resources Centre

ASM LC NGT

5. Imam Haron Family Trust

20. We also called on the President to issue an apology to the families, noting that "no expression of regret, remorse or apology has been offered by anybody in authority for the deep betrayal of victims of past atrocities."

21. Aside from letters of acknowledgment we have heard nothing further from the President. It is time for an honest reckoning with the past.

22. Since the President appears to be still held back by political constraints, he must be compelled to exercise his responsibilities under the Constitution.

23. Given the compromised position of the President and his government, we support the relief sought that the President must be required to request the Chief Justice to recommend a sitting or retired judge to head the aforesaid commission of inquiry.

YASMIN LOUISE SOOKA

The Deponent has acknowledged that she knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was signed and sworn to or solemnly affirmed before me at _____ on this the 19th day of June 2018

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

Full Names: A. S. MAYET
Commissioner of Oaths
Practising Attorney
401 Elizabeth House
Pritchard Street
Johannesburg

Business Address:

Designation

NGI 4C

IN THE COMMISSION OF INQUIRY INTO STOPPED TRC INVESTIGATIONS AND/ OR PROSECUTIONS

CONFIRMATORY AFFIDAVIT OF YASMIN LOUISE SOOKA

I, the undersigned,

YASMIN LOUISE SOOKA

do hereby make oath and state:

1. I am an adult female and I reside in Johannesburg. I am a member of the Foundation for Human Rights ("FHR") Supervisory Board situated at Metal Box Building, 7th Floor, 25 Owl Street cnr Stanley Avenue, Auckland Park, Johannesburg.

2. I am a former Commissioner of the South African Truth and Reconciliation Commission ("TRC" or "the Commission") and the Sierra Leone TRC. Since 2016, I have served as the Chairperson of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights in South Sudan.

3. Save where appears from the context, the facts contained in this affidavit are within my own personal knowledge and are to the best of my knowledge and belief both true and correct.

4. I depose to this affidavit to assist the Judicial Commission of Inquiry into stopped TRC Investigations and/or Prosecutions ("the Commission") to address paragraphs 1 to 1.3.2 of the terms of reference of the Commission.

5. I confirm the contents of the founding affidavit of Lukhanyo Calata dated 17 January 2025 filed in Calata & Others v Government of South Africa & Others (Gauteng Division, Case No. 2025-005245), insofar as it pertains to me ("the Calata affidavit"). A certified copy of this affidavit was supplied by Webber Wentzel attorneys to the Commission on 10 October 2025 in bundle 5 of the Calata Group Volume.

Y.L.S

6. I also confirm the contents of my affidavit dated 18 November 2024 which was attached as a supporting affidavit in the abovementioned matter. I will rely on the full contents of this affidavit to address the aforesaid paragraphs of the terms of reference. A certified copy of this affidavit was supplied by Webber Wentzel attorneys to the Commission on 10 October 2025 at bundle 5 at paginated pages 1382 – 1390.

7. My supporting affidavit details the representations my colleague Adv Dumisa Ntsebeza SC and I made to the NPA to prosecute the TRC cases in our capacity as TRC Commissioners. My affidavit further details the role the Foundation for Human Rights played to help families and victims of gross human rights abuses to find justice due to the failure by the NPA and SAPS to investigate and prosecute the TRC cases.

YASMIN LOUISE SOOKA

Signed and sworn to before me at Rondebosch on this the 04 day of NOVEMBER 2025, the deponent having acknowledged in my presence that he knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, the provisions of Government Gazette R1478 of 11 July 1980 as amended by Government Gazette R774 of 20 April 1982, concerning the taking of the oath, having been complied with.

CST GELA M. Gela
.....7213824-6

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS
FULL NAMES: Mkhululi Gela
PHYSICAL ADDRESS: Church Street
DESIGNATION: Constable

SUID-AFRIKAANSE POLISIEDIENS
COMMUNITY SERVICE CENTRE
04 NOV 2025
RONDEBOSCH
SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE

Divider 6

Affidavit of Dumisa Buhle Ntsebeza

Calata and Others // Government of the Republic of South Africa and Others

Gauteng Division of the High Court, Pretoria, Case No: 2025/5245

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

CASE NO: _____

In the matter between:

LUKHANYO BRUCE MATTHEWS CALATA	1st Applicant
ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA	2nd Applicant
BONAKELE JACOBS	3rd Applicant
FATIEMA HARON-MASOET	4th Applicant
TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE	5th Applicant
KARL ANDREW WEBER	6th Applicant
KIM TURNER	7th Applicant
LYNDENE PAGE	8th Applicant
MBUSO KHOZA	9th Applicant
NEVILLE BELING	10th Applicant
NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI	11th Applicant
SARAH BIBI LALL	12th Applicant
SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE	13th Applicant
SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO	14th Applicant

Date: 17/01/2025
Certified a True Copy
of the Original
Nicola Irving
Nicola Grace Irving

LC
NGI

STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE	15th Applicant
THULI KUBHEKA	16th Applicant
HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO	17th Applicant
TSHIDISO MOTASI	18th Applicant
NOMALI RITA GALELA	19th Applicant
PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE	20th Applicant
MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI	21st Applicant
MOGAPI SOLOMON TLHAPI	22nd Applicant
FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS	23rd Applicant

and

GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	1st Respondent
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	2nd Respondent
MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT	3rd Respondent
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	4th Respondent
MINISTER OF POLICE	5th Respondent
NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE	6th Respondent

LC
NGI

CONFIRMATORY AFFIDAVIT - DUMISA BUHLE NTSEBEZA

I, the undersigned,

DUMISA BUHLE NTSEBEZA

do hereby make oath and state that:

1. I am an adult male former Commissioner of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission ("TRC" or "the Commission"). I am a Senior Counsel practicing as such as group leader of the Sandton Chapter of the Pan African Bar Association of South Africa (PABASA) Group of Advocates, situated at 1st Floor, PABASA Sandton Chambers, 82 Maude Street, Sandton, Johannesburg

2. The facts stated herein are within my own personal knowledge unless the context indicates otherwise and are to the best of my knowledge true and correct.

Professional Career

3. I have practiced law for 40 years. I was admitted as an attorney in 1984, practicing in the Eastern Cape mainly in human rights. I represented many political prisoners throughout the 1980s and early 1990s.

4. Between 1993 and 1996 I taught law at the University of the Transkei (now the Walter Sisulu University).

5. In the mid to late 1990s, I was a TRC Commissioner and was the Head of the Investigation Unit of the TRC.

LC
NGT

6 I was called to the Bar in 2000 and took Silk in 2005. I have been an acting judge in three divisions of the High Court of South Africa, as well as in the Labour Court.

7. In 2004 I was appointed by the Secretary-General of the United Nations as a member of the International Commission of Inquiry on Darfur, which was established pursuant to a UN Security Council Resolution passed under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter to investigate violations of international humanitarian law and human rights law in Darfur.

8. In 2012 I was appointed by the Socio-Economic Rights Institute as Lead Counsel on behalf of the families of the 37 Marikana miners who were killed by the police.

9. In 2017, the University of Fort Hare Council appointed me as Chancellor of the University of Fort Hare, which was renewed in 2022 for another five years.

10. I am a founder of South African National Association of Democratic Lawyers and served as its President I also served as president of South Africa's Black Lawyers Association. I was a member of the Judicial Service Commission (JSC) and a visiting professor of Political Science and Law at the University of Connecticut in the United States I am a former Chairperson of the Desmond Tutu Peace Trust, and I was a trustee of the Nelson Mandela Foundation.

11. I was appointed as Ombudsman by Cricket South Africa. I also serve as a Council member of the University of Cape Town. Rhodes University conferred on me a Doctor of Law (LLD honoris causa) in 2021.

12. In 2021 I was appointed by the 34th African Union Heads of State and Government Ordinary Summit as a judge of the African Court on Human and Peoples' Rights.

LC NGT

Confirmation

13. I have read the notice of motion and a substantially complete version of the founding affidavit of Lukhanyo Bruce Matthews Calata and confirm the contents in so far as they relate to me.

14. I have also read the confirmatory affidavit of Yasmin Sooka and confirm the contents in so far as they relate to me.

15. I specifically confirm that:

15.1 Towards the end of the life of the TRC, Commissioner Sooka and I took steps to hand over lists of cases to the National Prosecuting Authority ("NPA"). These were serious cases, mostly involving murders and disappearances, in which the perpetrators had not applied for amnesty or had been denied amnesty.

15.2 Together with the former TRC Commissioners, I wrote to the President in 2019 and 2021 calling on him to:

15.2.1 offer an apology to the families of apartheid-era victims for the mass denial of justice visited upon them,

15.2.2 appoint an independent and open commission of inquiry into the political suppression of the TRC cases.

15.3 Apart from acknowledgments of receipts the President ignored our pleas.

15.4 That in January 2023 I was appointed by the NPA to "review the measures that had been adopted to deal with and prosecute TRC matters and to provide recommendations as needed."

LC NGT

15.5 I submitted my report to the NPA in June 2023 and it was released in February 2024. In this report I found that:

15.5.1 The NPA and the PCLU were swayed from their constitutional and statutory duties in relation to the TRC cases.

15.5.2 My inquiry could not investigate the political interference given the narrow ambit of its terms of reference, and its lack of investigative powers.

15.6 I recommended that:

15.6.1 A commission of inquiry was the only sensible way to get to the bottom of why the TRC cases were neglected and suppressed.

15.6.2 A commission must investigate the extent and rationale behind the political interference and look into the roles of multiple state entities as well implicated individuals.

15.6.3 It must be a public inquiry and be empowered to hold hearings and conduct a proper investigation, including the exercise of powers of subpoena and search and seizure.

Conclusion

16 I have frequently gone on record stating that there has been a shameful lack of political will to deal with the issue of accountability for the apartheid-era victims of gross human rights violations. I fully endorse Archbishop Desmond Tutu's statement made in 2013 that the failure to prosecute those who failed to apply for amnesty undermined those who did.

17. The stories set out in Lukhanyo Calata's founding affidavit, as well as the supporting affidavits, are rooted in South Africa's bitter and divided past. They make for difficult and painful reading.

18. We as South Africans entered into a constitutional compact that we would grant perpetrators an opportunity to speak the truth and earn full immunity from criminal prosecution and civil litigation. We made a solemn promise that those who were not amnestied, or who spurned the process, would face the consequences where their crimes were serious, and evidence was available.

19. Instead of cherishing the memories of those who died for our freedom and acting expeditiously to make good on our past promises, the post-apartheid state engaged in various machinations to ensure that the bulk of the TRC cases would never see the light of day.

20. In so doing they treated the families as second-class citizens, not worthy of equal treatment under law. This must stand as one of the most shameful periods in South Africa's history.

21. Most of the TRC cases cannot be revived. Suspects and witnesses have died. Truth, justice and closure have forever been denied to the families, their communities and the nation.

22. In the few prosecutions and inquests that can proceed, they do so in a severely diminished way, since most persons of interest have passed on, particularly high-ranking offenders.

23. The suppression of the TRC cases stands as terrible stain on South Africa's post-apartheid history. It is in my view, unforgiveable. The families and their communities are entitled, under law, and as a moral imperative, to an independent commission of inquiry.

LC NGT

24. They are also entitled to constitutional damages to vindicate their deeply violated rights and to assist them to memorialise their loved ones and reach closure.

25. I accordingly endorse this application, and respectfully urge this honourable court to grant the order in the terms set out in the notice of motion.

DUMISA BUHLE NTSEBEZA

The Deponent has acknowledged that he knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was sworn to before me and the deponent's signature was placed thereon in my presence at SANDTON on this 8TH day of NOVEMBER 20 24, the regulations contained in Government Notice No R1258 of 21 July 1972, as amended, and Government Notice No R1648 of 19 August 1977, as amended, having been complied with

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

Full Names: NKOSINATHI ANDREW MAYO

Business Address 82 MAUDE STREET, SANDOWN SANDTON, JOHANNESBURG

Designation: EX-OFFICIO COMMISSIONER OF OATHS (LEGAL PRACTICIONER)

LC
JGT

IN THE COMMISSION OF INQUIRY INTO STOPPED TRC INVESTIGATIONS AND/ OR PROSECUTIONS

STATEMENT OF DUMISA BUHLE NTSEBEZA

I, the undersigned,

DUMISA BUHLE NTSEBEZA,

do hereby make oath and state:

1. I am a former Commissioner of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (the "TRC"). I am a Senior Counsel practicing as such at the Sandton Chapter of the Pan African Bar Association of South Africa (PABASA) Group of Advocates, situated at 1st Floor, PABASA Sandton Chambers, 82 Maude Street, Sandton, Johannesburg. I am currently a judge on the African Court on Human and Peoples' Rights.

2. Save where appears from the context, the facts contained in this affidavit are within my own personal knowledge and are to the best of my knowledge and belief both true and correct.

3. I depose to this affidavit to assist the Judicial Commission of Inquiry into stopped TRC Investigations and/or Prosecutions (the "Commission") to address paragraphs 1 to 1.3.2 of the terms of reference of the Commission.

4. I confirm the contents of the founding affidavit of Lukhanyo Calata dated 17 January 2025 filed in Calata & Others v Government of South Africa & Others (Gauteng Division, Case No. 2025-005245), insofar as it pertains to me (the "Calata affidavit"). A certified copy of this affidavit was supplied by Webber Wentzel to the Commission on 10 October 2025 in bundle 1 at paginated pages 1 - 842.

5. I also confirm the contents of my affidavit dated 8 November 2024 which was attached as a supporting affidavit in the abovementioned matter. I will rely on the full contents of this affidavit to address the aforesaid paragraphs of the terms of reference. A certified copy of this affidavit was supplied by Webber Wentzel to the Commission on 10 October 2025 at bundle 6 at paginated pages 1391 – 1398.

DUMISA BUHLE NTSEBEZA

Signed and sworn to before me at SANDTON on this the 3rd day of NOVEMBER 2025, the deponent having acknowledged in my presence that he knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, the provisions of Government Gazette R1478 of 11 July 1980 as amended by Government Gazette R774 of 20 April 1982, concerning the taking of the oath, having been complied with.

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

FULL NAMES: KACIISO LETSHOLO
PHYSICAL ADDRESS: 34 FRICKER ROAD ILLOVO, SANDTON DESIGNATION: ATTORNEY OF THE HIGH COURT

Divider 7

Affidavit of Ole Bubenzer

Calata and Others // Government of the Republic of South Africa and Others

Gauteng Division of the High Court, Pretoria, Case No: 2025/5245

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

CASE NO. _____

In the matter between

LUKHANYO BRUCE MATTHEWS CALATA	1st Applicant
ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA	2nd Applicant
BONAKELE JACOBS	3rd Applicant
FATIEMA HARON-MASOET	4th Applicant
TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE	5th Applicant
KARL ANDREW WEBER	6th Applicant
KIM TURNER	7th Applicant
LYNDENE PAGE	8th Applicant
MBUSO KHOZA	9th Applicant
NEVILLE BELING	10th Applicant
NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI	11th Applicant
SARAH BIBI LALL	12th Applicant
SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE	13th Applicant
SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO	14th Applicant
STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE	15th Applicant

Date: 17/01/2025
Certified a True Copy
of the Original
Nicola Irving
Nicola Grace Irving

NGI

THULI KUBHEKA	16th Applicant
HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO	17th Applicant
TSHIDISO MOTASI	18th Applicant
NOMALI RITA GALELA	19th Applicant
PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE	20th Applicant
MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI	21st Applicant
MOGAPI SOLOMON TLHAPI	22nd Applicant
FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS	23rd Applicant

and

GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	1st Respondent
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	2nd Respondent
MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT	3rd Respondent
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	4th Respondent
MINISTER OF POLICE	5th Respondent
NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE	6th Respondent

---

CONFIRMATORY AFFIDAVIT – OLE BUBENZER

LC
NGI

I, the undersigned,

OLE BUBENZER

do hereby make oath and state that:

1 I am an adult male, employed as Senior Legal Counsel in the European Central Bank, and presently resident in Germany. I am the author of the book Post TRC prosecutions in South Africa Accountability for political crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's amnesty process ("Post TRC prosecutions in South Africa")

2 The facts stated herein are within my own personal knowledge unless the context indicates otherwise and are to the best of my knowledge true and correct.

3. I have read the notice of motion and a substantially complete version of the founding affidavit of Lukhanyo Bruce Matthews Calata and confirm the contents are true and correct insofar as they pertain to me and the content of Post TRC prosecutions in South Africa.

OLE BUBENZER

The Deponent has acknowledged that he knows and understands the contents of this affidavit which was signed and sworn to or solemnly affirmed before me at _____ on this the ____ day of _____ 20____.

_____

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

Full Names:

Designation:

Address:

LC
NGI

UVZ-Nr. 1947 /2024 K
Sb Ia/24 331 013

I,

Dr. Tim Kasper,
Civil Law Notary with office in Wiehl, hereby certify that the signature on the document attached above was signed in my presence by

Mr. Ole Frederik Bubenzer, born on 23.07.1979, residing at 60385 Frankfurt am Main, Heidestrasse 48, Germany, identified by his identity card

Wiehl, 28th November 2024

Notary
-Dr. Tim Kasper-

DR. TIM KASPER
1
NOTAR IN WIEHL

1ECAH

LC
NGI

Chapter One

Dealing With the Legacy of the Past—Transitional Justice in South Africa

1. The Apartheid Conflict

Practically since the first Europeans settled in South Africa in the late 17th century, the native African population was disadvantaged and discriminated against.[1] Control over political instruments, the economy, natural resources and the majority of the land was reserved to whites. After the National Party (hereinafter NP), a predominantly Afrikaner[2] nationalist party, won the elections in 1948, the situation was aggravated further as the state of racial segregation and economic exploitation was institutionalised into law.[3] Black and coloured South Africans had

---

[1] If not stated otherwise, the general historical information contained in this subchapter derives from R. Davenport and C. Saunders South Africa (2000) and TRC Report, vol. 1, chap. 2; vol. 3, pages 12–33. See on the discrimination and human rights violations on racial grounds which occurred before 1948: TRC Report, vol. 1, pages 25–28.

[2] The Afrikaner population descends from an amalgamation of the earliest European settlers, mainly coming from the Netherlands, Germany and France.

[3] Racial segregation and discrimination was based on a range of acts, mainly the Population Registration Act of 1950, which provided for the classification of each South African according to four racial categories and the duty to carry a pass of racial identification; the Group Areas Act, which partitioned the whole country into zones for exclusive inhabitation by one of the racial groups and which provided for the eviction of millions of black and coloured South Africans from their land and property and the forced removal into townships and poor bantustan homelands; the Prohibition of Mixed Marriages Act of 1949; and the 1950 Immorality Amendment Act, which prohibited not only inter-racial marriages but all forms of sexual contacts between the practically no political or economic rights, yet were simultaneously exploited as cheap labourers, a practice which was vital for the thriving economy. Officially independent states were created on minimal and poor parts of the country which were intended to serve as homelands for the respective African ethnic groups. This racist system of so-called apartheid[4] became a guiding principle of South African government politics for the following decades.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:08.

Inevitably, resistance grew to white supremacy and apartheid. An opposition organisation, which in 1923 became the African National Congress (hereinafter ANC), formed in 1912. In 1959 the other major opposition movement, the Pan Africanist Congress (hereinafter PAC), was established. The opposition was faced with an intransigent commitment to apartheid and white supremacy. Peaceful political protest was greatly obstructed by the authorities. The opposition movement therefore resorted to militant means of protest. In 1961 the ANC formed its armed wing, uMkhonto weSizwe[5] (hereinafter MK) which attacked the security forces and directed acts of sabotage at important state facilities.

The legitimate quest for equal rights was perceived by the government merely as a terrorist onslaught[6] on the integrity of the state and ethnic groups. See for a comprehensive account of the legislation: TRC Report, vol. 1, chap. 2, paras. 25–40. See on the socio-economic effects of apartheid on the new democracy: K. Naudaschder-Schlag and H.R. Schillinger 'Von der Rassentrennung zur Regenbogennation' in R. Zugehör (ed.) Kap der besseren Hoffnung? (1994) 9–62. See for a survey of the gross human rights violations committed during apartheid: M. Coleman (ed.) A crime against humanity (1998) and TRC Report vols 1–7.

---

[4] Apartheid in Afrikaans means separate- or apart-ness. The term refers to the official government policy and system of racial segregation, discrimination and white political hegemony, introduced by the NP in 1948 (R.B. Beck The history of South Africa (2000) 125). See generally on apartheid R.B. Beck The history of South Africa (2000) 125–53; P. Bonner et al. (eds) Apartheid's genesis—1935–1962 (1993); W Beinart and S. Dubow Segregation and apartheid in twentieth-century South Africa (1995).

[5] UMkhonto weSizwe means "spear of the nation".

[6] Interview with Jan Wagener in Pretoria (May 8, 2006). The perceptions within security police are illustrated in H.D. Stadler The other side of the story (1997).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:08.

was increasingly met by force.[7] The resulting violent conflict reached its climax in the mid-1980s. During 1984 and 1989, 5600 people died as a result of political unrest.[8] Tens of thousands of people were detained during this period for political reasons without trial or court order.[9] Although security legislation had already been hugely extended, the state forces increasingly resorted to means that were criminal under South African law.[10] The South African Police (hereinafter SAP) abducted, tortured and murdered political opponents within and outside of South African borders. Secret death squads were established for this purpose.[11] Thus, the legitimate struggle of the black majority for equality and political as well as economic rights resulted in a violent conflict during which many gross human rights violations were committed on all sides.[12] The apartheid conflict extended to the South African

---

[7] The opposition to apartheid was seen as part of a communist 'total onslaught' on South Africa which was to be countered by a 'total strategy' of force (TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 1, paras. 108–11; M. Coleman (ed.) A crime against humanity (1998) 7–9).

[8] M. Coleman (ed.) A crime against humanity (1998) 42. Security force activities and vigilantism accounted for the majority of deaths. Vigilante groups operated in black communities. They were unofficial, yet directed and supported by the government to violently act against anti-apartheid activists.

[9] TRC Report, vol. 3, page 25. Cases of death in detention occurred frequently (M. Coleman (ed.) A crime against humanity (1998) 12 and 53–67; TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 3, paras. 166–95).

[10] See for an elaboration on the scope of state crimes in South Africa: V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 9–14.

[11] M. Coleman (ed.) A crime against humanity (1998) 118. The most notorious of these units was "Vlakplaas", named after a farm close to Pretoria where it was based. It operated from 1979 to the early 1990s (TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 3, chap. 1, paras. 157–79; F. Kutz Amnestie für politische Straftäter in Südafrika (2001) 23; V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 116–17). Revelations on such hit-squad activities were first made by Almond Nofomela, a former member of Vlakplaas, in 1989. This was followed by revelations of his former commander Dirk Coetzee and others (M. Coleman (ed.) A crime against humanity (1998) 119).

[12] G. Werle 'Alternativen zur Aufarbeitung von Systemunrecht' in H. Hof and M. Schulte (eds) Wirkungsforschung zum Recht vol. III (2001) 291 at 293.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:08.

protectorate of South-West Africa, now known as Namibia.[13] Other neighbouring countries also suffered from what the TRC described as a 'reign of terror and destruction'[14] in that South Africa either waged war on unwanted governments, supported rebel movements to overthrow such governments or periodically attacked the ANC abroad.

2. The Negotiated Transition and the Work of the TRC

Heightening internal unrest and international pressure brought the last apartheid President F.W. de Klerk, who had come into power in September 1989, to start a process of democratic reform. After Nelson Mandela was released from prison in March 1990,[15] a period of negotiations began between representatives of the ANC and the government.[16] The consultations were aimed at facilitating the transition to a democratic state and establishing a new constitution. After an agreement was reached on the first democratic and human rights oriented constitution,[17] Nelson Mandela was elected President and the ANC won a majority of parliamentary seats in the first democratic elections in April 1994.

---

[13] TRC Report, vol. 1, chap. 2, para. 53.

[14] Ibid., para. 21.

[15] Mandela had been sentenced to life imprisonment for high treason in 1963.

[16] The negotiations were accompanied by massive outbursts of violence, mainly resulting from clashes between supporters of the Zulu Inkatha Freedom Party and ANC members or sympathisers in Natal. Such conflicts were often instigated and fuelled by the state security forces. About 14,000 people died as a result of prolonged political conflicts all over South Africa during the negotiation period (TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 7, para. 7), which is in total more than during the preceding decades of conflict (TRC Report, vol. 5, chap. 6, para. 126).

[17] The Interim Constitution (Act 200 of 1993) entered into force in April 1994 and was in 1997 replaced by the Constitution (Act 108 of 1996).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:08.

This heralded a period of transitional justice,[18] demanding that the legacy of apartheid—human rights violations and crimes—would not be ignored.[19] It was decided that such matters would be dealt with by a truth commission.[20] The Promotion of National Unity and Reconciliation Act[21] (hereinafter TRC Act) established the Truth and Reconciliation Commission.[22] The brief of the TRC was '[t]o provide for the investigation and the establishment of as complete a picture as possible of the nature, causes and extent of gross violations of human rights committed' between 1 March 1960 and 6 December 1993.[23] Under the terms of the act, a gross human rights violation constitutes any act of killing, abduction, torture or severe ill-treatment of any person or any attempt, conspiracy, incitement, instigation, command or procurement to commit such an act.[24]

---

[18] Transitional justice basically circumscribes the way a democratic government takes over power from an oppressive regime and the choices taken in the course thereof with respect to, inter alia, the transition of state organs and the dealing with human rights violations committed under the former regime (D.A. Crocker 'Truth commissions, transitional justice, and civil society' in R.I. Rotberg and D. Thompson (eds) Truth v. justice (2000) 99 at 99; M. Fenwick 'Dilemmas of transitional justice' (2003) 35 3 The Seinan Law Review 1 at 1). See generally on transitional justice N.J. Kritz (ed.) Transitional justice vol. I (1995); A.J. McAdams (ed.) Transitional justice and the rule of law in new democracies (1997); G. Werle (ed.) Justice in transition (2006).

[19] A. Boraine 'Truth and reconciliation in South Africa' in R.I. Rotberg and D. Thompson (eds) Truth v. justice (2000) 141 at 142.

[20] The initiative to establish a truth commission was taken by the ANC, various human rights non-governmental organisations and leading personalities of the human rights sector (A. Boraine A country unmasked (2000) 11–46; E. Hahn-Godeffroy Die südafrikanische Truth and Reconciliation Commission (1998) 56–57).

[21] Act 34 of 1995. The act is available at http://www.doj.gov.za/trc.

[22] The process of establishing the legal framework of the TRC was accompanied by extensive debates in Parliament and the general public, which gave the TRC a high degree of democratic legitimacy (G. Werle 'Neue Wege' in P. Bock and R. Wolfrum (eds) Umkämpfte Vergangenheit (1999) 269 at 287).

[23] Preamble of the TRC Act.

[24] Section 1 of the TRC Act.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:08.

The Commission's work started when its commissioners were appointed in December 1995.[25] It consisted of three committees: a committee on human rights violations, a committee on reparations and a committee on amnesty—the work of the latter is the most relevant for the goals of this book. The commission's operation terminated in 1998. In October 1998 it issued a five volume final report[26] in which it published the findings it reached from its hearings and investigations on the nature, extent and causes of human rights violations committed during its mandate period. Since the work of the Amnesty Committee was only concluded later, two further volumes were published in March 2003.

The TRC found that the state and its security agencies accounted for the majority of gross human rights violations.[27] It found that during the political struggle between the late 1970s and early 1990s, state bodies increasingly made use of criminal measures in terms of the laws at the time. For example, occurrences such as extra-judicial killings of opposition members took place.[28] The Commission further found that the use of torture was systematic and widespread within the ranks of the SAP.[29] Many cases were recorded by the TRC where opposition members had been abducted, tortured and often killed by the security forces.[30] Such practices were condoned and authorised by leading police and security branch officials.[31] The Inkatha Freedom Party (hereinafter IFP) supported the state in its criminal activities.[32] The TRC found

---

[25] See TRC Report, vol. 1, chap. 3, paras. 1–6 and chap. 6, para. 4.

[26] See sections 3(1)(d), 4(e), 43(1)(b) and 44 of the TRC Act.

[27] TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 5, chap. 2, para. 7.

[28] TRC Report, vol. 5, chap. 6, para. 77; TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 5, chap. 2, paras. 72–90; TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 3, paras. 221–320, 509. See for testimonies received in amnesty applications and hearings on death squad activities of the various regional security branches TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 3, chap. 1, paras. 155–307.

[29] TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 3, para. 220; TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 5, chap. 2, para. 16.

[30] TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 5, chap. 2, paras. 50–71; TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 3, paras. 278–424. The security branch sometimes also killed its own members when it believed they were unloyal (TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 3, paras. 425–56).

[31] TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 5, chap. 2, para. 17.

[32] TRC Report, vol. 5, chap. 6, para. 77.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:08.

that the IFP was responsible for numerous killings in attacks on often unarmed ANC members and supporters and other gross human rights violations under the auspices of government policies.[33] With respect to the ANC and MK, the Commission took into account that it was the declared policy of the ANC to avoid the loss of civilian lives, but found nonetheless that civilians were killed and that MK members independently targeted persons outside of the ANC official policy in a manner which resulted in gross human rights violations.[34]

3. Accountability for Past Human Rights Violations in the South African Context: Conditional Amnesties and Prosecutions

The concept of amnesty within the TRC process is of paramount importance for the present research. Its parameters will be outlined in the following.

The question of criminal accountability was highly controversial at the negotiations.[35] The former government, the NP and the security forces of the apartheid state lobbied strongly for a general amnesty.[36] Although sympathies for a general amnesty could also be found among leading ANC members, such an approach was mostly seen as untenable.[37] A

---

[33] Ibid., para. 121.

[34] Ibid., para. 136; TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 5, chap. 3, paras. 28–47. See generally on the liberation movement TRC Report, vol. 5, chap. 6, paras. 130–50.; TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 5, chaps. 3 and 5.

[35] See for the debates on amnesty: A. Boraine A country unmasked (2000) 275–86; J. Sarkin Carrots and sticks: the TRC and the South African amnesty process (2004) 53; L. McGregor 'Individual accountability in South Africa: cultural optimum or political facade?' (2001) 95 American Journal of International Law 32 at 32–35; P. Parker 'The politics of indemnities, truth telling and reconciliation in South Africa' (1996) 17 1–2 Human Rights Law Journal 1 at 1–7.

[36] Interview with Jan Wagener in Pretoria (May 8, 2006); L. McGregor 'Individual accountability in South Africa: cultural optimum or political facade?' (2001) 95 American Journal of International Law 32 at 34.

[37] A. Boraine 'Truth and reconciliation in South Africa' in R.I. Rotberg and D. Thompson (eds) Truth v. justice (2000) 141 at 143.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:08.

general amnesty was felt to be counterproductive to the establishment of a human rights culture and unconducive to the consolidation of the new democratic order, which demanded recognition of and reconciliation with the legacy of the past.[38] Many ANC members demanded strict prosecution of those responsible for apartheid crimes and Nuremberg-style trials of the leaders.

However, a concession had to be made in this regard in order to secure the support of the security forces during the negotiation period and to facilitate a peaceful transition to democracy with the support of the former elites.[39] It was agreed that amnesty should be granted in some form for gross human rights violations committed during the conflicts of the past.[40] The post amble of the Interim Constitution, headed National Unity and Reconciliation, eventually incorporated the following statement concerning amnesty:

> In order to advance such reconciliation and reconstruction, amnesty shall be granted in respect of acts, omissions and offences associated with political objectives and committed in the course of the conflicts of the past. To this end, Parliament under this Constitution shall adopt a law determining a firm cut-off date, which shall be a date after 8 October 1990 and before 6 December 1993, and providing for the mechanisms, criteria and procedures, including tribunals, if any, through which such amnesty shall be dealt with at any time after the law has been passed.[41]

As no specific agreement could be reached, the determination of the precise form of the amnesty had to be left open for later implemen-

---

[38] Ibid., 142; J. Sarkin Carrots and sticks: the TRC and the South African amnesty process (2004) 52.

[39] G. Werle 'Neue Wege' in P. Bock and R. Wolfrum (eds) Umkämpfte Vergangenheit (1999) 269 at 275. It is commonly accepted that a compromise on amnesty was the price which invariably had to be paid in order to avoid civil war and in order to make a negotiated settlement possible at all. (Mbeki as cited in A. Boraine 'Truth and reconciliation in South Africa' in R.I. Rotberg and D. Thompson (eds) Truth v. justice (2000) 141 at 143; A.M. Omar 'Foreword by A.M. Omar' in M.R. Rwelamira and G. Werle (eds) Confronting past injustices (1996) vii at x).

[40] G. Werle 'Without truth no reconciliation' (1996) 29 Verfassung und Recht in Übersee—Law and politics in Africa, Asia and Latin America 58 at 64–65.

[41] Post amble of the Interim Constitution of South Africa, Act 200 of 1993.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:08.

tation. The amnesty model eventually incorporated in the TRC Act empowered the Amnesty Committee to grant amnesty only on certain conditions and restrictions.[42] First of all, violators had to apply for amnesty.[43] According to section 20(1)(b) of the TRC Act, amnesty could only be granted for an act, omission or offence which was associated with a political objective and was committed in the course of the conflicts of the past during the period of 1 March 1960 to 10 May 1994.[44] Applications for amnesty could only be submitted until 30 September 1997.[45] An additional decisive precondition in section 20(1)(c) of the TRC Act for attaining amnesty stated that the applicant had to make a full disclosure of all relevant facts concerning the crime to which the application related.[46] Thus, if any of the preconditions, most notably the full disclosure or political objective requirements, were not satisfied, amnesty would be denied. This legal mandate applied to all crimes, regardless of whether they were committed by the liberation movements or the state security forces.[47]

Despite the extensive public and parliamentary debates which preceded the enactment of the amnesty legislation, the amnesty scheme was not based on popular and political consensus. Many victims strongly contested the basic notion of amnesty and demanded retributive justice, prosecutions and trials.[48] The former apartheid government and security force representatives, however, perceived the TRC to be a one-sided

---

[42] Sections 16–22 of the TRC Act.

[43] Section 18 of the TRC Act.

[44] The time frame for amnesty had later been extended. The political objective criteria is more concretely outlined in sections 20(2) and 20(3) of the TRC Act. See further on these so-called 'Noorgaard Criteria' and the political offence criteria J. Sarkin Carrots and sticks: the TRC and the South African amnesty process (2004) 37–8, 63 and 278–335; F. Kutz Amnestie für politische Straftäter in Südafrika (2001) 221–61.

[45] F. Kutz Amnestie für politische Straftäter in Südafrika (2001) 144.

[46] See on this criteria: J. Sarkin Carrots and sticks: the TRC and the South African amnesty process (2004) 249–78; F. Kutz Amnestie für politische Straftäter in Südafrika (2001) 261–70.

[47] A. Boraine A country unmasked (2000) 69.

[48] A. Boraine 'Truth and reconciliation in South Africa' in R.I. Rotberg and D. Thompson (eds) Truth v. justice (2000) 141 at 149.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:08.

exercise of victor's justice and a raw deal for their side.[49] They had expected what they had advocated for all along, a general amnesty.[50] As will become apparent below, such positions still strongly influence the political discussions on post-TRC prosecutions.

However, the TRC was and continues to be held in high regard internationally. This is because with conditional amnesty and especially the onus to make a full disclosure it introduced a unique and unprecedented way of dealing with past atrocities in a transitional society.[51] The model was heralded as an innovative moral and legal achievement.[52] While many other countries adopted a course of blanket amnesty and forgetting of the past,[53] South Africa put in place a scheme by which it could uphold accountability, avoid total impunity[54] and unearth the truth regarding past human rights violations.

Amnesty was not designed to replace prosecutions entirely. It was only to be granted in exchange for a process of public truth telling. Criminal and amnesty proceedings, thus, ran parallel to each other. In the wake of the TRC, it clearly follows as a logical consequence from this concept as well as from the legal setup of the amnesty provisions that those perpetrators who were not granted amnesty for their politically motivated crimes must be prosecuted.[55] After the work of the Amnesty

---

[49] Interview with Johan van der Merwe in Pretoria (May 5, 2006); Interview with Jan Geldenhuys in Pretoria (May 10, 2006); F.W. de Klerk as cited in A. Boraine A country unmasked (2000) 275 at footnote 10.

[50] Ibid.

[51] A. Boraine A country unmasked (2000) 269; J. Sarkin Carrots and sticks: the TRC and the South African amnesty process (2004) 3; G. Werle 'Neue Wege' in P. Bock and R. Wolfrum (eds) Umkämpfte Vergangenheit (1999) 269 at 287. See for other truth commissions: P.B. Hayner 'Fifteen truth commissions' in N.J. Kritz (ed.) Transitional justice vol. I (1995) 262–89.

[52] E. Kiss 'Moral ambition within and beyond political constraints' in R.I. Rotberg and D. Thompson (eds) Truth v. justice (2000) 68 at 76.

[53] A. Boraine A country unmasked (2000) 269. See also K. Ambos Straflosigkeit von Menschenrechtsverletzungen (1997) 23–159.

[54] A. Boraine A country unmasked (2000) 283.

[55] M.E. Bennun 'Some procedural issues relating to post-TRC prosecutions of human rights offenders' (2003) 16 South African Journal of Criminal Justice 17 at 17.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:08.

Committee was concluded in May 2001,[56] the TRC accordingly recommended in its final report that:

> Where amnesty has not been sought or has been denied, prosecution should be considered where evidence exists that an individual has committed a gross human rights violation. In this regard, the Commission will make available to the appropriate authorities information in its possession concerning serious allegations against individuals (excluding privileged information such as that contained in amnesty applications). Consideration must be given to imposing a time limit on such prosecutions. Attorneys-general must pay rigorous attention to the prosecution of members of the South African Police Service (SAPS) who are found to have assaulted, tortured and/or killed persons in their care. In order to avoid a culture of impunity and to entrench the rule of law, the granting of general amnesty in whatever guise should be resisted.[57]

Equally President Mandela on the occasion of the tabling of the TRC Report in Parliament in February 1999 stated that '[a]ccountability does need to be established and where evidence exists of a serious crime, prosecution should be instituted within a fixed time frame.'[58]

Against the background of this concept the importance of post-TRC prosecutions for the whole process of dealing with past human rights abuses in South Africa becomes obvious. Since the concept of amnesty in South Africa was premised on the fact that those who were not granted impunity would be prosecuted, the issue of post-TRC prosecutions strongly affects the credibility and legitimacy of the entire process.[59] The amnesty process would be rendered paradoxical and might 'unravel into a farce', as Fernandez puts it strongly, if no prosecutions

---

[56] Due to the workload and ongoing amnesty hearings the Amnesty Committee's operation had to continue (TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 1, para. 3).

[57] TRC Report, vol. 5, chap. 8, para. 14.

[58] Opening address by President Nelson Mandela in the special debate on the report of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (National Houses of Parliament) (Feb. 25, 1999).

[59] G. Werle 'Alternativen zur Aufarbeitung von Systemunrecht' in H. Hof and M. Schulte (eds) Wirkungsforschung zum Recht vol. III (2001) 291 at 297; G. Werle 'Neue Wege' in P. Bock and R. Wolfrum (eds) Umkämpfte Vergangenheit (1999) 269 at 282.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:08.

take place in the aftermath of the TRC.[60] An evaluation of the success or failure and the overall justice of the TRC process must therefore inevitably take into account whether and how post-TRC prosecutions take place.[61] It is the purpose of this book to provide the basis for such an evaluation by examining the scope of post-TRC prosecutions in the following chapters.

7115 applications were registered by the TRC.[62] Of this total, 5143 applications were refused administratively, without a public hearing, mostly since no political objective was found to exist in the events referenced.[63] 1973 applications were dealt with in public hearings in terms of section 19(3)(a) and (b) of the TRC Act, meaning that the applications conveyed a prima facie politically related offence and a gross human rights violation in terms of the TRC mandate.[64] This number of applications relates to 1701 individual applicants. 1100 amnesty decisions were published in respect thereof.[65] 857 applicants of those were aligned to the ANC, 85 to the IFP, 116 to the PAC or the

---

[60] L. Fernadez 'Post-TRC prosecutions in South Africa' in G. Werle (ed.) Justice in transition (2006) 65 at 79; M.E. Bennun 'Some procedural issues relating to post-TRC prosecutions of human rights offenders' (2003) 16 South African Journal of Criminal Justice 17 at 36.

[61] R.C. Slye 'Comment on the papers by Lovell Fernandez, Jeremy Sarkin and Volker Nerlich' in G. Werle (ed.) Justice in transition (2006) 83 at 84; G. Werle 'Alternativen zur Aufarbeitung von Systemunrecht' in H. Hof and M. Schulte Wirkungsforschung zum Recht vol. III (2001) 291 at 301.

[62] TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 1, chap. 3, para. 4. See for an empirical study of the amnesty decisions: A. Pedain 'Was amnesty a lottery?' (2004) 121 South African Law Journal 785–828.

[63] J. Sarkin 'The amnesty hearings in South Africa revisited' in G. Werle (ed.) Justice in transition (2006) 43 at 47. About 65 per cent of the applications were received from persons who were already convicted and served jail terms (TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 1, chap. 2, para. 74).

[64] J. Sarkin 'The amnesty hearings in South Africa revisited' in G. Werle (ed.) Justice in transition (2006) 43 at 48.

[65] A. Pedain 'Was amnesty a lottery?' (2004) 121 South African Law Journal 785 at 795. Pedain points out that all applications concerning prima facie political conduct were published on the Commission's website (http://www.doj.gov.za/trc).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:08.

Azanian Peoples Liberation Army (hereinafter APLA) and 289 to the security forces.[66] Very few applications were received from the South African Defence Force (hereinafter SADF).[67] 1499 of those applicants submitted applications which concerned offences falling in the ambit of the committee's jurisdiction in terms of section 20(1) of the TRC Act.[68] Of the remainder, 105 applicants were high-ranking ANC members, whose applications generally related to political activities, but were refused since they did not specify a specific violation or circumstance to be considered.[69] Of the applications that were dealt with in public hearings, 1164 were granted, 806 were denied.[70]

The figures give an indicator of how many cases, potentially worthy of prosecution, might arise from the TRC amnesty proceedings. Considering the scale of human rights violations in the period of South Africa's history, which is relevant for the TRC's inquiries, the number of amnesty applications must be considered rather low.[71] Thus there are potentially hundreds of cases for which amnesty was not applied that could be relevant to future criminal prosecutions. The amnesty proceedings suffered especially from a lack of applications by figures from the upper ranks of politics and commanders of the security forces of the apartheid state.[72] The vast majority of amnesty applicants, especially from the state security forces, were ordinary rank and file officers.

---

[66] A. Pedain 'Was amnesty a lottery?' (2004) 121 South African Law Journal 785 at 804. Pedain points out that the numbers are by no means representative for the number of human rights violations committed by each respective group.

[67] TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 3, chap. 1, para. 4.

[68] A. Pedain 'Was amnesty a lottery?' (2004) 121 South African Law Journal 785 at 804–5.

[69] Ibid., 805.

[70] J. Sarkin 'The amnesty hearings in South Africa revisited' in G. Werle (ed.) Justice in transition (2006) 43 at 48.

[71] Ibid., 46.

[72] A. Pedain 'Was amnesty a lottery?' (2004) 121 South African Law Journal 785 at 806–7.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:08.

There was basically no participation by the military.[73] Significantly, the amnesty process also lacked the participation of IFP members, despite the fact that IFP members were the second most active group of perpetrators with respect to gross human rights violations.[74] In 1998, however, the TRC handed over to the prosecution authorities a list containing approximately 300 references to names and cases, resulting from the various TRC hearings, which the Commission considered worthy for further criminal investigation.[75]

4. Criminal Trials During the 1990s

As has been pointed out above, criminal proceedings took place before and during the operation of the Amnesty Committee.[76] However, very few trials took place regarding the former security forces and only two convictions of former security police members were recorded during the 1990s.[77] After the confessions surrounding the death squad unit Vlakplaas,[78] initial investigations were launched into the apartheid state's secret hit squad activities.[79] Subsequently, a special prosecution team headed by Transvaal Attorney-General Dr. Jan D'Oliveira was established to conduct the investigation and prosecution of hit-squad

---

[73] M. Fullard and N. Rousseau 'Truth, evidence and history' in C. Villa-Vicencio and E. Doxtader (eds) The provocations of amnesty (2003) 195 at 199.

[74] Ibid., 200.

[75] E. Kiss 'Moral ambition within and beyond political constraints' in R.I. Rotberg and D. Thompson (eds) Truth v. justice (2000) 68 at 78.

[76] See on the tense relationship of the Amnesty Committee, its investigation unit and the prosecutors: V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 240–41; TRC Report, vol. 1, chap. 11, para. 93.

[77] See for the only comprehensive study on the prosecution of apartheid crimes during the 1990s: V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002).

[78] See supra Chapter 1 note 11.

[79] The Harms- and later the Goldstone-Commissions were charged with conducting such investigations (V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 116–22; F. Kutz Amnestie für politische Straftäter in Südafrika (2001) 77–84.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:08.

activities.[80] The team consisted of prosecutors and investigators, and could therefore, contrary to the normal process, conduct its own investigations. This was vital in order to maintain a high degree of independence and efficiency.[81]

The first trial involved Eugene de Kock, former commander of Vlakplaas from 1985 to 1993.[82] De Kock was charged in February 1995 on 121 counts, 12 of which related to murder.[83] De Kock had been a central figure in a wide range of secret security force operations. He was, however, charged mainly for crimes which did not have a primarily political background.[84] De Kock was found guilty on 89 charges in August 1996 and was sentenced to two terms of life and 212 years of imprisonment.[85] After his conviction de Kock cooperated intensively with the prosecution authorities and testified on secret hit squad activities and concomitant command structures.[86]

In another case, the investigations of the D'Oliveira Unit led to charges against the former Eastern Cape security policemen Gideon Nieuwoudt, Gerhard Lotz, Wybrand du Toit, Jacobus Kok and Marthinus Ras in August 1996. They were charged with the murder of three black members of the police service and an askari[87] in December 1989.[88]

---

[80] V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 122–24.

[81] Interview with Jan D'Oliveira and others in Pretoria (May 2, 2006).

[82] TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 3, appendix, para. 19 at page 317.

[83] See on the de Kock trial: V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 124–34.

[84] This in part was due to the fact that such crimes were less difficult to prove but also since it was still unclear at the time how politically motivated crimes would be dealt with on a political level (ibid., 223–43).

[85] TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 3, chap. 1, para. 16. See for an analysis of the verdict: V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 129–34.

[86] De Kock's testimonies also contributed chiefly to the amnesty process in that they urged perpetrators to apply for amnesty. According to the TRC de Kock accounted for about 48 per cent of all applications from security branch personnel (TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 3, chap. 1, para. 16).

[87] Askari is a term used for black members of the security police, who were liberation movement activists 'turned' to security policemen.

[88] V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 134–37.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:08.

The case became known as "Motherwell-Four".[89] Nieuwoudt, du Toit and Ras were sentenced in June 1996 to 20, 15 and 10 years imprisonment respectively. The three later applied for amnesty and never had to serve their respective prison sentences.

In a trial closely connected to the de Kock prosecution, the security policemen Peter McIntyre, Andries Venter, Jaques Else and their superior Philip de Beer were charged in November 1996 with the murder of Sweet Sambo, who died in police custody in 1991.[90] As McIntyre, Venter and Else had already been charged and acquitted on assault charges in connection with Sambo's death in 1994, they successfully pleaded autrefoi acqui[91] and were accordingly acquitted.[92]

In April 1997, former Vlakplaas commander Dirk Coetzee and four other policemen were charged with the murder of lawyer and political activist Griffiths Mxenge in Durban in 1981.[93] Coetzee and two others were found guilty in May 1997 but shortly thereafter all received amnesty by the TRC.[94]

The investigations of the D'Oliveira team also concerned other security branches and the military. In October 1996 General Jack Cronjé and Jaques Hechter of the Northern Transvaal security branch were charged on 33 counts, including 27 counts of murder and four of attempted murder between 1986 and 1987.[95] Cronjé and Hechter immediately tendered amnesty applications, including the crimes in [89] TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 1, chap. 4, paras. 111–19; TRC Report, vol. 3, chap. 2, para. 301.

---

[90] V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 144.

[91] See for the double jeopardy pleas: infra Chapter 2(2.4).

[92] De Beer's indictment hinged on the other charges and could thus not be pursued (V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 145).

[93] V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 146–53. The revelations of Nofomela and Coetzee in 1989 (see supra Chapter 1 note 11) related to the Mxenge murder. The prosecution was not conducted by the D'Oliveira team but by KwaZulu-Natal Attorney-General Tim McNally.

[94] V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 149. Decision no AC/97/0041. Transcripts of decisions of the Amnesty Committee are available at http://www.doj.gov.za/trc/amntrans/index.htm.

[95] V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 153–54.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:08.

question, which were eventually successful.[96] The trial was therefore not concluded.[97]

Ferdinand Barnard, a member of the special unit Civil Cooperation Bureau,[98] which was attached to the SADF, was charged in September 1997 with the murder of human rights activist David Webster in May 1989, the attempted murder of the later ANC Minister of Justice, Dullah Omar, and a number of other political and non-political deeds.[99] Barnard was convicted in 1998 on 25 counts, including the murder and attempted murder counts. He was sentenced effectively to life imprisonment.[100]

The trial with the highest political impact started in Durban in December 1995. It resulted from investigations of the independent Investigative Task Board and Investigative Task Unit into the political violence between IFP and ANC supporters in KwaZulu-Natal before and during the negotiation period.[101] The last apartheid Minister of Defence, Magnus Malan, and 29 others, among them former high-ranking SADF generals such as former SADF chief Jan Geldenhuys and Jacobus "Kat" Liebenberg, were charged with their alleged involvement in the murder of 13 ANC supporters in Natal in 1987, the KwaMakutha massacre, and for conspiracy to murder various ANC and United Democratic Front (hereinafter UDF)[102] activists during the late 1980s. During the so-called "Operation Marion", which took place in the Namibian Caprivi Strip in 1986, the SADF instructed and trained about 200 Inkatha supporters in paramilitary combat techniques to fight the ANC.[103] The charges alleged that the murders were committed by the Caprivi recruits with [96] Decisions no. AC/99/0031 and AC/99/0030.

---

[97] V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 154.

[98] CCB. The CCB's initial task was to attack opposition members abroad but it later also operated in South Africa.

[99] V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 158–67.

[100] Ibid., 167.

[101] Ibid., 184–211.

[102] The UDF was an association of various anti-apartheid organisations, founded in 1983 (R. Davenport and C. Saunders South Africa (2000) 495).

[103] TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 5, paras. 236–56.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:08.

the support of the SADF generals.[104] The trial ended in an acquittal of the accused due to various circumstances.[105]

On the whole, therefore, the trials contributed very little to the examination of the criminal apartheid past in terms of revealing new information on past conflict related atrocities and crimes.[106] This can be attributed to the fact that, on the one hand, political issues were not sufficiently investigated in most trials or simply ignored, and on the other, only a few trials took place with only two convictions.[107] Nevertheless, the prosecutions, which took place parallel to the amnesty process, contributed significantly to the work of the TRC as they had a major effect on the number of amnesty applications. The threat of prosecution was the decisive incentive for the vast majority of perpetrators from the security police to apply for amnesty. Many only applied for amnesty when they became aware of an imminent threat of being charged or when they were implicated in a criminal trial concerning former colleagues.[108] Without concomitant criminal trials, the number of amnesty applications for apartheid-state sponsored crimes would, thus, have been significantly lower.

[104] V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 191–95.

[105] Ibid., 205. See for an analysis of the judgment: H. Varney and J. Sarkin 'Failing to pierce the hit-squad veil: an analysis of the Malan-trial' (1997) 10 South African Journal of Criminal Justice 141–61.

[106] V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 328.

[107] Ibid.

[108] For a statistical analysis of this point see V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 30 and 294–319.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:08.

Chapter Two

Prosecution of Political Crimes After the TRC

This chapter documents the prosecutions arising out of and/or connected with the TRC that have been initiated since the conclusion of its work. The chapter will also describe the various special units within the prosecutorial service, which were established for this purpose. The analysis will embrace all proceedings concerning crimes that were committed during the time period relevant for the Amnesty Committee's mandate from 1960 to 1994 and which potentially also fall within its legal mandate. Such crimes were, thus, at least politically motivated and connected with the apartheid conflict. The discussion therefore focuses on two types of crimes: those for which amnesty has been applied but was refused or those for which amnesty was not applied at all. Although the issue of post-TRC prosecutions in fact became more salient after the Amnesty Committee finished its work in 2001, the focus will be on all trials that were instituted after the deadline for amnesty applications had lapsed in 1997.

The first four documented cases concern proceedings that were conducted and initiated by the regional prosecution authorities independent of any central or special units in Pretoria. The following four cases, starting with the Terre'Blanche case, contain descriptions of prosecutions that were instituted and conducted by the special Priority Crimes Litigation Unit. Both sets of cases will be presented in chronological order.

1. Special Units for Post-TRC Prosecutions

In 1998 the work of the team headed by Jan D'Oliveira came to an end. In the course of that year the prosecution authorities were completely restructured. A new centralised National Prosecution

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

Authority (hereinafter NPA), headed by a National Director of Public Prosecutions (hereinafter NDPP), was established in Pretoria.[1] The first NDPP was Bulelani Ngcuka who was succeeded in early 2005 by Vusi Pikoli.[2] D'Oliveira became one of the deputy NDPP and was no longer involved with prosecutions related to the apartheid conflict.[3] In September 1999 most of the members of his unit were integrated into the newly established Directorate of Special Operations (hereinafter DSO),[4] the so-called "Scorpions", which was in urgent need of skilled investigators and prosecutors.[5] However, the question remained, what should happen with the TRC-related cases with which the D'Oliveira Unit had been dealing.

1.1 The Human Rights Investigative Unit

In early 1999 a working group called the Human Rights Investigative Unit was established within the NPA on the initiative of then Minister of Justice Dullah Omar. The unit's mandate was to review, investigate and possibly prosecute all cases falling within the ambit of the TRC Act for which amnesty had been refused or was not applied,[6] thus, to continue the work of Jan D'Oliveira.

---

[1] See for a comprehensive study of the NPA: M. Schönteich Lawyers for the people (2001).

[2] Ngcuka resigned as a result of political conflicts over the prosecution of former Deputy President Jacob Zuma. Pikoli was suspended in September 2007 for political reasons and replaced by Mokotedi Mpshe.

[3] Interview with Jan D'Oliveira and others in Pretoria (May 2, 2006).

[4] The DSO was an Investigating Directorate according to section 7 of the National Prosecuting Authority Act 32 of 1998 (hereinafter NPA Act) (for the capacities of the DSO see Chapter 5 of the NPA Act). It was the only prosecutorial entity capable of conducting its own investigations. According to section 7(1A) of the NPA Act the President may appoint two further Investigating Directorates, which as yet has not happened. Meanwhile the DSO has been disbanded on the initiative of the ANC. Most likely this happened for political reasons, since the DSO successfully targeted a number of high profile ANC leaders for corruption. See End of the road for Scorpions SAPA, Oct 10, 2008.

[5] V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 214.

[6] Interview with Vincent Saldanha in Cape Town (April 26, 2006).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

The unit was headed by Vincent Saldanha; and his deputy was former Witwatersrand prosecutor Brink Ferreira.[7] According to Saldanha, four lawyers worked basically on a full or part time basis for the unit.[8] He sensed intense political support for his work, especially from the Department of Justice, led by Dullah Omar. Distinctions were not to be made between perpetrators of the political groups.[9] The composition of the unit further reflected, according to Saldanha, an approach that was extremely human rights- and victims-orientated. He himself comes from the human rights sector and was involved in a number of TRC hearings as an attorney for victims.[10] Some of the other members of the unit had prior work experience with the TRC or with human rights non-governmental organisations (hereinafter NGO).[11] The drafting of personnel from outside the ordinary prosecution structures also guaranteed for a high degree of independence.[12]

In November 1999 all dockets concerning criminal cases were moved from the D'Oliveira Unit to the Human Rights Investigative Unit.[13] Furthermore, some prosecution dockets from the regional NPA offices concerning TRC-related cases as well as all relevant dockets from the TRC were gathered at the latter unit. Although the dockets often concerned ongoing investigations, which in some cases had reached a very advanced stage, there was strangely no consultation or cooperation between D'Oliveira and the Saldanha team.[14]

It was intended that Saldanha would head the unit for a short period. After the conclusion of his secondment from his primary place of work, the Legal Resources Centre in Cape Town, he left the unit, having

---

[7] V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 213.

[8] According to Nerlich it was initially intended to assign three deputy directors and five senior state advocates to the unit (ibid.).

[9] Interview with Vincent Saldanha in Cape Town (April 26, 2006).

[10] V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 213.

[11] Ibid.

[12] Interview with Vincent Saldanha in Cape Town (April 26, 2006). However, the unit had to appoint police to conduct investigations and had to appoint NPA prosecutors once a case was ready for indictment.

[13] V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 213.

[14] Interview with Jan D'Oliveira and others in Pretoria (May 2, 2006).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

served for only one year. Until then all investigations were still ongoing and no charges had been laid.[15] Among the cases under scrutiny some were very high profile, such as the case of the torture and killing of Steve Biko.[16] Moreover, a number of persons from the upper echelons of the former security apparatus were among those under the scrutiny of the unit.[17] The rationale behind the fact that nobody was charged lay, according to Saldanha, with the complexities of such high profile cases, which required meticulous preparation and the fact that a great number of cases were still handled by the Amnesty Committee. Once Saldanha's tenure lapsed, the unit's work only continued for a brief time. The setup of the unit was probably not ideal. Saldanha worked only on a part-time basis for the unit and lacked experience as a prosecutor.

However, thereafter the responsibility for TRC cases was again allocated to a working group within the DSO, the so-called Special National Projects Unit headed by Advocate Chris Macadam.[18] It is doubtful whether any significant and/or ongoing work was done on the issues during that time as it was probably only Macadam who worked on post-TRC prosecutions on a part time basis.[19] Again, no court proceedings were instituted. TRC cases apparently did not enjoy high priority at that time. Macadam asserts that, again, it was the ongoing amnesty proceedings that acted as the main barrier to progressing with prosecutions.[20]

Whereas the D'Oliveira Unit had been well-staffed and well-equipped, the resources allocated to post-TRC prosecutions after 1998 were absolutely minimal, which naturally contributed to their slow progress.[21]

---

[15] Interview with Vincent Saldanha in Cape Town (April 26, 2006).

[16] See text accompanying infra Chapter 4 note 166.

[17] Interview with Vincent Saldanha in Cape Town (April 26, 2006).

[18] Interview with Torie Pretorius and others in Pretoria (May 2, 2006). Macadam had previously also worked for the TRC as head of the Commission's witness protection programme.

[19] Interview by Gerhard Werle with Jan D'Oliveira in Pretoria (March 2004).

[20] Interview by Gerhard Werle with Chris Macadam and others in Pretoria (Feb 27, 2004).

[21] Interview by Gerhard Werle with Jan D'Oliveira in Pretoria (March 2004).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

The NPA did not want to commit resources to cases which might eventually collapse due to amnesty applications being granted to those under investigation.[22] Yet it seems probable that there were also a significant number of potential cases for which amnesty had not been applied or that the D'Oliveira team had already prepared, such as the investigations against General Krappies Engelbrecht, the former commander of Eugene de Kock.[23] By 1999 the D'Oliveira Unit had allegedly already prepared about 20 charge sheets.[24]

According to Macadam, the NPA wanted to await the presentation of the last volumes of the TRC Report. This could not, however, have constituted an obstacle in a legal sense, especially considering the clear recommendations the TRC had already made with regards to criminal accountability in 1998. However, the NPA tried to avoid interfering with the President's response to the TRC Report with respect to policy approaches to tackle TRC-related crimes, including the possible pardoning of certain perpetrators.[25] This and the lack of resources could explain why, although the Amnesty Committee's work ended in May 2001, still by 2003, when the last TRC Report volumes were published, criminal proceedings had yet to be instituted. Moreover, the structures put in place for post-TRC prosecutions were not ideal, as was especially the case when matters were placed with the DSO,[26] which was primarily an elite unit for the investigation and prosecution of serious economic crimes, corruption, organised crime and terrorism.[27]

In conclusion it must be stated that the work on post-TRC prosecutions within the central NPA office between 1998 and 2003 was insignificant.

---

[22] Interview by Gerhard Werle with Chris Macadam and others in Pretoria (Feb 27, 2004).

[23] See V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 154–55.

[24] Ibid., 154.

[25] Interview by Gerhard Werle with Chris Macadam and others in Pretoria (Feb 27, 2004).

[26] Interview with Madeleine Fullard in Pretoria (May 4, 2006).

[27] M. Schönteich Lawyers for the people (2001) 64.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

1.2 The Priority Crimes Litigation Unit

The pace of developments did indeed pick up, however, after the last two volumes of the TRC Report[28] had been tabled in Parliament on 15 April 2003. President Mbeki stated in a speech before Parliament on this occasion that it was in the hands of the NDPP to pursue any cases arising from the TRC that he considered prosecutable as is normal practice in criminal justice.[29] This apparently provided the clarification the NPA had awaited to proceed on TRC cases.

One month prior to this statement the responsibility for TRC prosecutions had been transferred again. On 24 March 2003, three days after the final Report volumes had been presented to the President, Advocate Anton Ackermann was appointed Special Director of Public Prosecution[30] and head of the newly founded Priority Crimes Litigation Unit (hereinafter PCLU).[31] According to the respective presidential proclamation, the PCLU is responsible for managing and directing the investigation and prosecution of crimes dealt with in the Implementation of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court Act no 27 of 2002, serious national and international crimes, including acts of terrorism and sabotage, high treason, sedition, mercenary activities and other priority crimes to be determined by the NDPP.[32] No mention is made of post-TRC prosecutions. However, at the inception of the PCLU the NDPP declared all crimes relating to the TRC for which

---

[28] TRC Report, vols 6 and 7. See also section 44 of the TRC Act.

[29] Statement by President Mbeki to the National Houses of Parliament and the Nation, at the Tabling of the Report of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (April 15, 2003).

[30] According to section 13(1)(c) of the NPA Act the President may appoint Directors of Public Prosecutions to exercise certain powers, carry out certain duties and perform certain special functions.

[31] Proclamation by the President of the Republic of South Africa of 24 March 2003 (No. 46 of 2003).

[32] Ibid. The PCLU is also responsible for prosecutions relating to the non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction (nuclear, chemical and biological) and regulations of conventional military arms (National Prosecuting Authority, Annual report 2005/2006).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

amnesty had not been granted as priority crimes in the context of the proclamation, which made the PCLU the agency responsible for dealing with such crimes.[33] In fact, TRC matters initially made up the main proportion of the unit's work.

In mid-2006 the PCLU effectively consisted of six prosecutors: its head Anton Ackermann, his deputy Torie Pretorius, Chris Macadam, who was previously responsible for TRC matters in the DSO, Shawn Abrahams, Susan Bukau and the then newly appointed Mtunzi Mhaga, who had previously been involved in two TRC-related trials in the Eastern Cape.[34] The composition of the unit shows a high degree of continuity. Ackermann and Pretorius had worked under D'Oliveira. Prior to that Pretorius had worked for the Goldstone commission.[35] As already stated, Macadam had been involved with TRC cases before 2003 and had gathered experience by working for the TRC.

When Ackermann took over matters, he instituted an audit of all available cases. The result was that some 459 cases[36] could be registered from the material, contained in dockets concerning the cases handed over from the TRC or the D'Oliveira Unit. About 160 cases were immediately deemed not to warrant further proceedings. Only about 16 cases were identified as worthy of pursuing prosecution.[37] At least three were prepared almost immediately for indictment.[38] It would, however, be totally unrealistic to expect all of the hundreds of cases, especially those submitted by the TRC, to warrant criminal proceedings.[39] The list handed over by the TRC does not significantly contribute to the work of the PCLU in general, as most cases had already been known to the D'Oliveira Unit.[40] By the end of 2006 the PCLU was [33] E-mail from Anton Ackermann (Oct 18, 2005).

[34] Interview with Torie Pretorius and others in Pretoria (May 2, 2006).
[35] V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 123.
[36] National Prosecution Authority, Annual report 2002/2003.
[37] Interview with Anton Ackermann in Pretoria (May 11, 2006).
[38] Ibid.
[39] Interview with Jan D'Oliveira and others in Pretoria (May 2, 2006).
[40] Interview with Torie Pretorius and others in Pretoria (May 2, 2006).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

working on 16 cases in total, five of which were considered to be of high priority and had been prepared to an advanced stage.[41]

As far as the general approach to post-TRC cases is concerned, the PCLU focuses first on cases in which amnesty has been denied, since it is generally easier to identify a case worthy for prosecution. The PCLU's secondary focus is cases where amnesty was not applied at all.[42] Cases that involve the use of egregious violence and which resulted in the death of more than one person are naturally of higher priority than those which, for instance, were only directed at non-human entities, such as sabotage attacks of the liberation movement.[43] However, according to its senior members, the PCLU attempts to ignore as much as possible political implications and to resist distinguishing between the political groups of liberation movement and apartheid state forces. The approach taken is strictly dependent on the availability of evidence and the egregiousness of the crime, regardless of political affiliation of the perpetrator.[44]

Besides this, there is also a working group within the NPA which works on the exhumation of missing persons who were killed during the struggle against apartheid and secretly buried. The primary aim of the exhumation work is to return the remains to the victims' relatives. It is not driven by criminal investigations but occasionally new information can come to light that is relevant for prosecutions.[45]

---

[41] E-mail from Anton Ackermann (June 19, 2006). It is unclear what happened to the above mentioned 20 indictments allegedly prepared already in 1999 or in how far those overlap with the 16 cases.

[42] Interview by Gerhard Werle with Chris Macadam and others in Pretoria (Feb 27, 2004).

[43] Interview with Anton Ackermann in Pretoria (May 11, 2006).

[44] Interview with Torie Pretorius and others in Pretoria (May 2, 2006); Interview with Anton Ackermann in Pretoria (May 11, 2006).

[45] Interview with Madeleine Fullard in Pretoria (May 4, 2006). Valuable information was uncovered in the case concerning the death of Ntombi Khubeka, who was a member of MK. In 1987 she was arrested by the security police in Natal and beaten during her interrogation. The policemen at their amnesty hearing claimed that she had suddenly died of a heart attack. However, when her remains were discovered

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

The biggest obstacle facing the PCLU is the severe lack of resources.[46] Apart from TRC matters, the unit is responsible for a range of other issues. As such, cases pertaining to the illegal trafficking of nuclear material and knowledge by South Africans took up a particularly large proportion of the unit's resources in recent times. Until the end of 2006, TRC matters took up on average only about 30 to 50 per cent of the unit's work.[47] Considering the already small number of prosecutors in the PCLU, this proportion is rather modest. Furthermore, the minimal resources devoted to the unit's investigative work is a major problem. Some cases had already been fully investigated, others needed more investigation. The D'Oliveira team included about 20 carefully selected, highly skilled and experienced police investigators, who were not suspected of sympathising with their former colleagues accused of political crimes.[48] Whereas this unit could thus conduct investigations independent of the police, the PCLU has to rely on the assignment of investigators and the conduct of investigations by the South African Police Service (hereinafter SAPS) or the meanwhile disbanded DSO.[49] The gathering of evidence concerning TRC cases is especially and exhumed, a bullet hole in her temple was detected which, of course, exposed the police testimony presented as false (See TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 4, chap. 2).

---

[46] Interview with Anton Ackermann in Pretoria (May 11, 2006); Interview with Torie Pretorius and others in Pretoria (May 2, 2006). See also N Rousseau 'Prosecutions' in E. Doxtader (ed.) Provoking questions (2005) 37 at 47.

[47] Interview with Torie Pretorius and others in Pretoria (May 2, 2006).

[48] V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 123; Interview by Gerhard Werle with Jan D'Oliveira in Pretoria (March 2004).

[49] Interview with Torie Pretorius and others in Pretoria (May 2, 2006). Traditionally investigations, which are basically the independent responsibility of the police, and prosecutions are quite strictly separated (M. Schönteich Lawyers for the people (2001) 41). Only with the establishment of the NPA was this traditional separation eased since with the DSO investigative powers were permanently introduced to the NPA. Furthermore, with the NPA Act prosecutors were granted greater influence on investigations. According to section 24(4)(c) of the NPA Act, a Director of Public Prosecutions, such as Ackermann, may in some bounds direct the responsible investigator who is according to section 24(7) of the NPA Act obliged to follow requests. It is also interesting to note that the first steps towards a combination of investigation and prosecution capacities occurred at the investigation of apartheid demanding of investigators. The crimes often happened secretly without independent witnesses and were covered up meticulously. Thus, as was the case with the D'Oliveira team, the PCLU relies to a great extent on state witnesses in order to bring cases before the courts.[50] Again, incriminating evidence has to be compiled in order to urge the conspirators to cooperate.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

Such circumstances and the political implications of TRC cases place special demands on the skills, commitment and experience of investigators. In contrast to the abilities of the investigators working for the D'Oliveira team, the PCLU has major problems recruiting such investigators.[51] Although it was intended for the DSO to provide the PCLU with investigators, the DSO declined to cooperate.[52] Thus, the unit has to rely on the police, who are obliged to cooperate. However, a request to the police of early 2004 to assign investigators on an ongoing basis was not followed.[53] The investigators, who were assigned to crimes through the D'Oliveira team and the Investigative Task Unit in Natal which was necessitated by the during the 1990s still largely untransformed police service (V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 123).

---

[50] Interview with Anton Ackermann in Pretoria (May 11, 2006). According to section 204 of the Criminal Procedure Act no 51 of 1977 arrangements can be made for participants in a crime to testify on behalf of the state against their accomplices to secure a conviction. If the state witness testifies frankly and honestly in the opinion of the court, he may be discharged from criminal liability for the offence in question. According to Ackermann, Pretorius and D'Oliveira evidence gathered by the TRC in comparison is not helpful and plays no significant part in the work of the PCLU. See also V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 327 and 244.

[51] Interview with Torie Pretorius and others in Pretoria (May 2, 2006).

[52] Ibid.

[53] Ibid. It has to be borne in mind that the SAPS also suffers from a major lack of resources and availability of skilled investigators. The focus of the SAPS is clearly on tackling the high present-day crime rate. It is thus not willing to assign resources for cases which mostly took place more than 20 years ago. (Interview with Jan D'Oliveira and others in Pretoria (May 2, 2006)). Added to this power struggles between police commissioner Jackie Selebi and the NDPP, which came to a head at the prosecution of former deputy President Jacob Zuma, tainted the relationship between the SAPS and the NPA (Interview with Torie Pretorius and others in Pretoria (May 2, 2006)).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

investigate certain matters, often lacked the necessary skill, determination and experience.[54] Compared to this problem, a possible lack of development and change in the police service or the reluctance of certain officers to investigate their former colleagues no longer plays an influential role.[55]

From early 2006 all post-TRC prosecutions were concentrated at the PCLU and the regional prosecutors are obliged to refer such cases to the NPA in Pretoria. A centralised prosecution certainly has the advantage of enabling the achievement of consistent progress. Moreover, it certainly makes sense to concentrate the experience in prosecuting TRC-related cases in one central unit. The advantages of centralised prosecutions were highlighted by the D'Oliveira team and also by the prosecution of systematic crimes committed by the socialist regime in the former German Democratic Republic (hereinafter GDR).[56]

2. The Wouter Basson Case

On 4 October 1999 the trial of Dr. Wouter Basson was opened at the High Court of Pretoria.[57] Basson was the leader of South Africa's secret programme on chemical and biological warfare also referred to as "Project Coast".[58] Project Coast was established by the SADF in the early 1980s initially with the intention of providing the country with the defensive capacity to react to chemical and biological warfare attacks.[59] Especially due to the activities of Basson, the project became increasingly involved in criminal activities in relation to the countering of opposition efforts against apartheid in Namibia, South Africa and various other countries.

---

[54] Interview with Torie Pretorius and others in Pretoria (May 2, 2006).

[55] Ibid.

[56] K. Marxen and G. Werle Die strafrechtliche Aufarbeitung von DDR-Unrecht (1999) 233–34.

[57] V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 167.

[58] TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 6 C, paras. 1–2.

[59] Ibid., para. 40.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

The trial against Wouter Basson is not a genuine post-TRC case. It is rather connected to the prosecutions of the 1990s since it was conducted by Ackermann and Pretorius, both members of the D'Oliveira Unit at that time. The amnesty hearings were still in full swing when it was started. However, Basson failed to apply for amnesty and the deadline for applications had lapsed by the time charges were laid. Moreover, the Basson case was significant due to its links to other post-TRC cases, such as the attempted murder of Frank Chikane which will be described below, and the scope and seriousness of the charges, which were of great significance. The litigation only came to an end in late 2005. It went through the Supreme Court of Appeal and the Constitutional Court. The ruling of the Constitutional Court potentially has great effects for post-TRC prosecutions in general. The trial court litigation has already partly been analysed by legal scholars and was generally well documented in the public.[60] The following subchapter will thus only outline the charges and give an overview of how the case progressed. The Constitutional Court's judgment will then be analysed in greater detail.

2.1 The trial and quashed charges

Basson was initially charged with 64 counts, 24 of which pertained to non-political fraud offences allegedly committed by Basson while managing Project Coast.[61] Further counts pertained to drug offences.[62] Of special importance are 29 counts which concerned murder.[63] According to the prosecutors, the murders in which Basson participated were aimed at killing enemies of the apartheid state. Most of these incidents were distinctly connected to a political objective and were allegedly [60] See especially V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 167. For a comprehensive overview of the development of the trial see http://ccrweb.ccr.uct.ac.za/archive/cbw/cbw_index.html.

[61] S. v Wouter Basson (T) Case no. 32/1999 11 April 2002, unreported, at para. 16. See for a comprehensive summary of the indictment: V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 169–74.

[62] S. v Wouter Basson, akte van beskuldigung, vol. II, aanklagte 25–30.

[63] Ibid., aanklagte 31–36, 38–43, 45–50, 52–58, 60–63.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

committed in the fight against the opposition movement's anti-apartheid struggle.[64]

Targets for such murders were detainees in Namibia, the then South-West Africa, who belonged to the rebel movement South-West African People's Organisation (hereinafter SWAPO), members of the South African state's own forces who were believed to be a security risk, ANC members such as Ronnie Kasrils and Pallo Jordan[65] and various other persons believed to be enemies of the apartheid state.[66] One of the gravest incidents concerned the poisoning of about 200 SWAPO detainees in Namibia.[67] Basson allegedly provided the poison. Apparently many corpses were later dumped from a plane into the sea off the Namibian coast.[68] In another incident Basson allegedly provided cholera bacteria, which were introduced to a drinking water well in a SWAPO refugee camp.[69] The aim was to disturb the first free elections in Namibia.[70] Basson was allegedly involved mostly in organising the murders and especially providing the poison.[71]

After an extensive and very costly trial he was eventually acquitted on all charges by the trial judge, Mr Justice Hartzenberg, on 11 April 2002.[72]

---

[64] See for a summary of the wide ranging charges against Basson: S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 at para. 192.

[65] Pallo Jordan served the ANC as a senior member in exile in London and Lusaka and later inhibited various posts as a minister in the cabinet (P. van Niekerk and B. Ludman (eds) A–Z of South African politics 1999 (1999) 133–35).

[66] S. v Wouter Basson, akte van beskuldigung, vol. II, aanklagte 31–36, 38–43, 45–50, 52–58, 60–63.

[67] V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 170.

[68] S. v Wouter Basson, akte van beskuldigung, vol. II, opsomming van wesentlike feite, aanklag 31, para. 16.

[69] Ibid., aanklag 61.

[70] The bacteria were unexpectedly killed due to a high proportion of chlorine in the water.

[71] V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 171–73.

[72] S. v Wouter Basson (T) Case no. 32/1999 11 April 2002, unreported. The judgment stretches over more than 1400 pages. The trial was one of the most extensive ones in South African history. 140 witnesses were heard. The costs for the state totalled several million Rand. The state also had to cover the costs of Basson's defence team, since he was still a state employee.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

The failure to secure a conviction can be attributed mainly to the fact that Hartzenberg rejected most of the evidence and witnesses testifying on behalf of the State as unconvincing and untrustworthy.[73] The judge was criticised for being biased and generally hostile towards the prosecutors but also for erring on several legal issues.[74]

However, three issues emerged during the trial which were of central relevance in the Appeal Court and Constitutional Court litigations. The first of the three issues emerged about three months after the start of the trial. The prosecutors applied for the recusal of Judge Hartzenberg. They claimed that Hartzenberg was biased and could not rule on the case objectively.[75] The judge, however, refused to recuse himself.[76] The second issue pertains to the prosecutors' intention to introduce records of a bail hearing regarding the fraud charges to the trial. Hartzenberg ruled that the bail records were inadmissible in the trial.[77]

The third and most important issue for the purposes of the present discussion, concerns the objection made by Basson's defence team to certain charges before the trial had commenced.[78] The attorneys applied for nine of the charges to be quashed on the grounds that they would not concern criminal offences.[79] The judge granted the application with respect to seven charges.[80] Six of these quashed charges, counts 31, 46, 54, 55, 58 and 61, concern acts of conspiracy to commit murder in terms of section 18(2) of the Riotous Assemblies Act no 17 of 1956.[81] The

---

[73] Interview with Torie Pretorius and others in Pretoria (May 2, 2006).

[74] Ibid.; M. Fullard and N. Rousseau 'An imperfect past: the Truth and Reconciliation Commission in transition' in J. Daniel et al. (eds) State of the nation (2003) 78 at 92; V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 179–82.

[75] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 at para. 3.

[76] S. v Basson [2000] 3 All SA 59 (T).

[77] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 10 March 2004 at para. 4.

[78] See for a summary of this issue: S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 at paras. 13–18. See for a legal evaluation: V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 174–83.

[79] The application was based on section 85(1)(c) of the Criminal Procedure Act.

[80] S. v Basson [2000] 1 All SA 430 (T).

[81] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 10 March 2004 at para. 5. The provision reads as follows:

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

charges contained the most serious of the accusations against Basson. Count 31 concerned the poisoning of the SWAPO detainees. Count 46 concerned the conspiracy to murder a high-ranking administrative official in northern Namibia. Count 54 related to the unsuccessful conspiracy to murder the later ANC ministers Pallo Jordan and Ronnie Kasrils in London. Counts 55 and 58 concerned a conspiracy to murder ANC members in Mozambique and Swaziland. Count 61 concerned the conspiracy to murder the SWAPO refugees with cholera bacteria.

As is evident, these charges concern cases of murder or attempted murder that took place beyond South Africa's borders. Since South African courts have no jurisdiction to try crimes which were committed abroad,[82] prosecutors were relegated to pursuing convictions for Basson's participation in the conspiracy that took place in South Africa.[83] However, Basson's defence argued that the conspiracy to commit crimes abroad would according to the definition of the crime itself not constitute a criminal offence, even if this conspiracy took place in South Africa.[84] Hartzenberg accepted the defence's arguments and held that conspiracies to commit crimes abroad were not covered by section 18(2) of the Riotous Assemblies Act.[85] Should this legal opinion prevail it would have serious consequences for all cases in which a similar indictment is intended. The litigation proceedings concerning this point will now be examined.

---

(2) Any person who

(a) conspires with any other person to aid or procure the commission of or to commit; or

(b) incites, instigates, commands, or procures any other person to commit, any offence, whether at common law or against a statute or statutory regulation, shall be guilty of an offence and liable on conviction to the punishment to which a person convicted of actually committing that offence would be liable.

[82] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 at para. 223.

[83] V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 175. Nerlich points out that the prosecutors in the trial of Eugene de Kock successfully exercised this approach in respect of certain charges.

[84] Ibid., 175.

[85] S. v Basson [2000] 1 All SA 430 (T) at 444g.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

2.2 The appeal litigation

Immediately after the judgment had been handed down, the State applied for judgment to be reserved on certain questions of law[86] for resolution by the Supreme Court of Appeal.[87] The application concerned the three issues outlined above. Subject to certain conditions, Hartzenberg reserved the recusal and bail record issues for consideration by the Supreme Court of Appeal. However, he refused to reserve the question of whether he erred in law concerning his ruling to quash the aforementioned charges.[88] The NPA in June 2002 appealed against the judgment concerning the questions of law reserved by the trial judge and simultaneously applied to the Supreme Court of Appeal to reserve the issue of the quashing of the charges for consideration.[89] However, this specific application was seriously defective in various procedural aspects.[90] The prosecutors then applied for condonation regarding the non-compliance with the procedural requirements.[91] Due to the appeal application's clear and serious violations with respect to the Supreme Court of Appeal rules, the Court refused condonation, and, thus, did not even consider the merits of the legal question of whether the charges were correctly quashed, nor did it answer the other questions in favour of the State.[92] [86] See section 319(1) of the Criminal Procedure Act.

---

[87] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 10 March 2004 at para. 8. For a comprehensive summary of the litigation up to the Constitutional Court see S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 10 March 2004 paras. 1–14 and S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 paras. 1–18.

[88] S. v Basson [2002] JOL 9680 (T) at 19–20.

[89] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 10 March 2004 at para. 10.

[90] S. v Basson 2003 (2) SACR 373 (SCA) at 379. See on defects of the application also: S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 paras. 157–160.

[91] S. v Basson 2003 (2) SACR 373 (SCA) at para. 379; S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 10 March 2004 at para. 11.

[92] S. v Basson 2003 (2) SACR 373 (SCA) at para. 118. The Supreme Court of Appeal held that the bail record and recusal issues concerned questions of fact and not of law as required for an appeal litigation.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

2.3 The Constitutional Court litigation

After the appeal had failed, the prosecutors applied for special leave to appeal against the judgment of the Supreme Court of Appeal in mid-2003 and for leave to appeal the judgment of the High Court directly at the Constitutional Court.[93] The application again concerned the three central issues: bias of the trial judge; admissibility of the bail records; and the quashing of six charges, which had already been before the Supreme Court of Appeal.[94] The focus here will be on the quashing of the charges.

In a preliminary judgment the Constitutional Court ruled that even though the conduct in question had taken place before the Constitution had come into force, the issues concerned constitutional matters within the jurisdiction of the Court.[95] Apart from various complex procedural issues,[96] the crucial issue to be considered by the Constitutional Court was whether the Supreme Court of Appeal exercised its discretion wrongly in not considering the respective question and whether it was in the interest of justice to grant leave to appeal on this question.[97] The Court therefore found it crucial to consider the seriousness of the charges in light of South Africa's international obligations regarding the maintenance of fundamental principles of international humanitarian law.[98] Since the crimes in question were very grave and had been committed abroad, the question arose whether South Africa had an obligation to prosecute under international law. In its preliminary judgment, the Court had stated, without dealing exhaustively with the issue, that international law obliged South Africa to prosecute crimes against humanity and war crimes.[99] In its final judgment, however, it [93] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 10 March 2004 at para. 1. The application was unique in that it was the first time that a state organ, the NPA, appealed to the Constitutional Court against a judicial decision.

---

[94] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 at para. 1.

[95] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 10 March 2004 at para. 79.

[96] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 at paras. 128–187.

[97] Ibid., at paras. 185–186.

[98] Ibid., at para. 171.

[99] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 10 March 2004 at para. 37.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

confined itself to evaluating the importance of the charges in general terms with regard to South Africa's obligations under international humanitarian and human rights law.

The Court was of the opinion that no country ought to allow the planning of cross-border criminal activities.[100] The Court then elaborated in general terms on the great significance of international humanitarian law, thereby quoting the decision of the International Court of Justice on the legality of the threat or use of nuclear weapons,[101] which highlighted humanitarian law as a fundamental and intransgressible aspect of international law.[102] The Court further made it clear, with reference to the decision of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia in the Dusko Tadic case, that the distinction in international law between internal and international conflict had become increasingly blurred.[103] Thus, since the minimum standards for internal and international conflicts were identical, the Court neglected to determine how the conflict between SWAPO and the SADF in Namibia should be classified.[104] Due to the growing overlap of international human rights and humanitarian law the precise characterisation of the participants' legal status was also left open.[105] However the Court pointed out that South Africa, as a party to the Geneva Conventions, was bound to respect the principles outlined therein and was bound to respect fundamental principles of customary humanitarian law.[106] Such rules had also to be obeyed in the Namibian conflict. The subjection of captives to asphyxiation through poison under the guise of medical care and the insertion of cholera bacteria in the water supply of hundreds [100] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 at para. 170. The Court pointed out that this factor has neither been considered by the Supreme Court of Appeal in any regard, nor had it been brought to the attention of the Supreme Court of Appeal.

---

[101] Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons (Advisory Opinion) [1996] ICJ Rep 226.

[102] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 at para. 174.

[103] Ibid., at para. 175.

[104] Ibid., at para. 178.

[105] Ibid., at para. 179.

[106] Ibid., at para. 177.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

suspected opponents of the regime grossly transgressed even the most minimal standards of international humanitarian law.[107] According to the Constitutional Court, the Supreme Court of Appeal had failed to consider these grave breaches and the, what it termed 'international consensus on the normative desirability to prosecute war criminals'.[108] The application of the State thus succeeded.

The Court went even further and examined whether the quashing of the six charges was based on a proper interpretation of section 18(2) of the Riotous Assemblies Act. The Court initially referred to the main arguments of counsel for the State[109] that the Military Discipline Code[110] criminalised certain conduct of SADF members even if the acts were committed beyond the borders of South Africa, that section 19A of the Riotous Assemblies Act provided that the Riotous Assemblies Act was also applicable in South-West Africa and most importantly, that South African Courts generally had jurisdiction to try crimes committed abroad when there was a sufficient connection between the crime and South Africa.[111]

According to the Court, section 47 of the Military Discipline Code[112] determines that any SADF member who commits a civil offence, meaning an offence not criminalised by military law but by common South African law, is criminally liable in terms of the code even if the crime was

---

[107] Ibid., at paras. 179–182.

[108] Ibid., at paras. 184–185.

[109] Counsel for the state were Wim Trengrove, A. Cockrell and N. Fourie.

[110] The code is part of the Defence Act (Act no. 44 of 1957).

[111] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 at para. 210.

[112] The section provides that:

> 'Any person who beyond the borders of the Union commits or omits to do any act in circumstances under which he would, if he had committed or omitted to do that act in the Union, have been guilty of a civil offence, shall be guilty of an offence under this Code and liable on conviction to such penalty applicable in respect of that civil offence as could be imposed under section ninety-one of this Code.' The Code was in force during the time in that the offences were allegedly committed and during the time of the trial. According to section 104(5) of the Defence Act, the Code applies to all members of the Permanent Force of the Defence Force.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

committed abroad.[113] Any member of the army who commits murder beyond South Africa's borders is liable to prosecution in a military as well as an ordinary court in South Africa.[114] Thus, provided the murders were to be carried out by members of the SADF, South Africa has jurisdiction to try the conspiracy.[115] This was especially relevant for counts 55, 54 and 58 that pertained to murders in Mozambique, London and Swaziland.[116] In terms of the Defence Act and the Military Discipline Code, Namibia was in any case considered part of South Africa, which had certain specific implications for the matter.[117]

In any event, the Court did not take this further and turned to a general rule concerning the jurisdiction over crimes committed abroad. It basically stated that the rule that South African courts have no jurisdiction over crimes that are committed abroad, based on the principle of international comity, is not absolute.[118] The Constitutional Court then approved and followed the ruling of the Canadian Supreme Court on the same legal issue.[119] The Canadian Supreme Court had ruled that Canadian courts have jurisdiction to try conspiracies concerning crimes to be committed abroad when a significant portion of the activities constituting the offence took place in Canada or when there is a real and substantial link between the conspiracy to commit the crime and the country itself.[120] The Constitutional Court confirmed the existence of such a real and substantial link in the Basson case[121] and based this opinion on the following grounds, which can be partitioned in two groups.

---

[113] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 at para. 214.

[114] Ibid., at para. 216.

[115] Ibid., at para. 219.

[116] Ibid.

[117] Ibid., at paras. 220–222. See section 1(xxii) of the Defence Act.

[118] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 at paras. 223 and 225. International comity in this sense means the respect for another country's sovereignty in terms of exclusively exercising jurisdiction over crimes committed on its territory.

[119] Libman v The Queen [1985] 2 SCR 178.

[120] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 at para. 226.

[121] Ibid., at para. 228.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

The first group encompasses factors pertaining to the special situation of Namibia at the time. A number of findings show that there was a real and substantial link between the conspiracy to commit the crime and South Africa, including the following: Namibia was administered by South Africa; the Riotous Assemblies Act was applicable in Namibia; at all material times, the SADF was deployed in Namibia in terms of the Defence Act, which deems Namibia part of South Africa; certain charges pertain to the murder of detainees who were held captive by the SADF; and that the Defence Act generally criminalises acts of SADF members even if committed abroad.[122]

The other set of factors indicating the real and substantial link to South Africa are broader in nature and are not confined to the Namibian situation. They include: the mere fact that the conspiracy was entered into in South Africa; that it was organised and directed by members of the South African military; that the means for the implementation of the killings were provided and prepared in South Africa; and that the respective instructions were issued from there.[123]

The Court rejected the arguments of Basson's legal counsel.[124] Accordingly the Constitutional Court unanimously held on 9 September 2005 that South African courts have jurisdiction to try the crimes in question

---

[122] Ibid., at 227.

[123] Ibid.

[124] The main argument was based on the hypothetical situation that if section 18(2) of the Riotous Assemblies Act was construed in the way desired by the State, the conspiracy to smoke cannabis in the Netherlands, which is not criminal there, would be criminal in South Africa as well as the situation where the conspiracy to consume alcohol in a Muslim country, in some countries a criminal offence, would be criminal in South Africa. This argument was rejected on the basis that there anyways is not a sufficient connection between South Africa and the acts to warrant jurisdiction and that they are by no means comparable to the murder of detainees by SADF personnel held captive in a country administered by South Africa. The second argument, namely that the acts were covered by an amnesty proclaimed in Namibia in 1989, was rejected on the basis that the proclamation has no application for South African courts. See S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 at paras. 237 and 244.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

and ordered that the quashing of the charges be set aside.[125] The judgement thereby clarified to a certain degree the question concerning section 18(2) of the Riotous Assemblies Act.

The Court obviously viewed international law, more precisely the international law obligation to prosecute this case, as a decisive factor in coming to the conclusion that the Supreme Court of Appeal should have granted the State leave to appeal against the trial court's judgment. Nevertheless, in this regard the Court's elaborations remained of a rather broad and general nature. It did not analyse in any detailed way whether there is a strict obligation to prosecute such crimes under international law. Although this issue is relevant for the decision on whether South African courts have jurisdiction to try crimes of the gravity and international relevance such as in the Basson case, or the concomitant conspiracy, it did not analyse whether the crimes and conspiracies could also have been prosecuted on the basis of the international law principle of universality.[126] According to the principle of universality, any state's courts have jurisdiction to try a person accused of an international crime, regardless of the place where the crime was committed or the nationality of the victim or alleged perpetrator.[127] This principle is accepted under international customary law for war crimes, crimes against humanity, genocide and also with regard to crimes committed in civil wars.[128] The Constitutional Court had pointed out that the crimes of which Basson was accused would violate even the most minimal standards of international humanitarian law and would [125] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 at para. 265. The applications regarding the recusal and the admissibility of the bail record were dismissed.

---

[126] See on the issue of universal jurisdiction and generally international law in the Basson case: M. Swart 'The Wouter Basson prosecution: the closest South Africa came to Nuremberg?' (2008) 68/1 Heidelberg Journal of International Law 209–26. The Court expressly states that it does not consider it necessary to examine these issues in detail (S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 at para. 172). It apparently sufficed for the Court to approach the topic on the basis of South African law.

[127] A. Cassese International criminal law (2003) 284.

[128] G. Werle Principles of international criminal law (2005) para. 174.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

thus constitute horrendous war crimes.[129] Against this background, it is incomprehensible why the Court did not elaborate on the principle of universality, which would clearly have provided for the jurisdiction of South African courts and would have rendered as incorrect the quashing of the charges.

2.4 A new trial?

With respect to the six quashed charges, the NPA won its case. The Constitutional Court had stated that the previously quashed indictment stands and that it was up to the State to charge Basson anew.[130] The way seemed clear for a new trial on the basis of the six charges. Yet rather surprisingly, especially considering the time and effort required to reach this result, the NPA announced in October 2005 that it would not recharge Wouter Basson on the six counts.[131] The reason provided for this decision was that a new trial on the basis of the six charges would violate the double jeopardy rule, which in this case would be an inescapable procedural obstacle for a new indictment.[132]

The principle of double jeopardy is laid out in section 35(3)(m) of the Constitution. Its roots lie in the basic principle common to most legal systems that no one shall be punished for the same offence more than once.[133] In criminal procedure, the rule is embodied in the pleas of autrefoi acqui, if the accused has previously been acquitted, or autrefoi convict, if the accused has previously been convicted for the offence in question in terms of section 106(c) and (d) of the Criminal Procedure Act. However, the rules on these pleas provide that the accused must

---

[129] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 at paras. 179–180.

[130] Ibid., at para. 260.

[131] W. Menges 'Dr Death' is off the hook in South Africa The Namibian, Oct 24, 2005.

[132] NPA, press statement NPA decides not to re-charge Wouter Basson (Oct 19, 2005).

[133] P.M. Bekker et al Criminal procedure handbook 7ed (2005) 220; S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 10 March 2004 at para. 61. See generally on the double jeopardy rule M.L. Friedland Double jeopardy (1969); Law Reform Commission of Canada Double jeopardy, pleas and verdicts (1991).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

have been in danger of conviction in the first trial[134] which was never the case with Basson, since the specific charges were not admitted.[135] The NPA's decision must therefore have been based on a different aspect of the double jeopardy rule, which is the plea of res judicata.[136] The doctrine of res judicata, known in England and Canada as issue estopple, in the United States as collateral estoppel,[137] is part of the double jeopardy rule in criminal procedures of common law countries.[138] It holds that if issues of ultimate fact, including those concerning evidence such as the credibility of witnesses and the like, have already been determined by a valid and final judgment of a trial court, these issues cannot be made the subject of another criminal litigation between the parties.[139]

In the present case, the six charges, which had been set aside, were all materially also covered by an umbrella charge (count 63), which encompassed virtually all conspiracy charges, those relating to crimes to be committed abroad and those relating to crimes to be committed in South Africa.[140] According to Pretorius, who mainly led the evidence in question at the trial, the evidence supporting the quashed charges

---

[134] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 at para. 254. See on the preconditions of the pleas autrefoi acqui and autrefoi convict: P.M. Bekker et al. Criminal procedure handbook 7ed (2005) 220–25; E. Du Toit et al. Commentary on the Criminal Procedure Act service 36 (2006) 15–28 to 15–34.

[135] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 at para. 256.

[136] The Constitutional Court only briefly touched upon this issue when it stated that the question could arise whether the quashed charges, were they subject of a new indictment, could be rendered susceptible to a plea of res judicata (ibid. at para. 257).

[137] Law Reform Commission of Canada Double jeopardy, pleas and verdicts (1991) 13.

[138] See generally M.L. Friedland Double jeopardy (1969) 117–60; Law Reform Commission of Canada Double jeopardy, pleas and verdicts (1991) 13–14; C.F. Stuckenberg Double jeopardy (2001) 26–28.

[139] Law Reform Commission of Canada Double jeopardy, pleas and verdicts (1991) 13; C.F. Stuckenberg Double jeopardy (2001) 26. The principle is accepted in most English speaking countries (M.L. Friedland Double jeopardy (1969) 117), obviously including South Africa.

[140] NPA, press statement NPA decides not to re-charge Wouter Basson (Oct 19, 2005). Count 63 basically concerned all charges where Basson had to provide the poison (Interview with Torie Pretorius and others in Pretoria (May 2, 2006)).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

equally supported the relevant parts of the umbrella charge.[141] Thus, for the purpose of count 63, the State led all the evidence, including especially witness statements, on which also the six quashed charges were almost entirely based.[142] Judge Hartzenberg refers to this situation in the final judgment when he states that:

> Although I initially ruled that conspiracies to commit crimes abroad are not justiciable in this court and a number of charges had therefore been quashed, it made no difference to the evidence the State has led, because the State has led evidence to support the charges, as it was required of the State, to prove the wider conspiracy (charge 63) the accused allegedly had committed.[143]

The trial judge considered the evidence and rejected it as being not credible enough to support the guilt of the accused with respect to count 63.[144] The Court, therefore, had ruled on issues of ultimate fact. Thus, there was the peculiar situation that, although the six charges had not been admitted to the trial, the Court apparently nevertheless heard virtually all evidence in respect thereof. Before the trial, Basson's defence had also applied for the quashing of count 63, which was refused by Hartzenberg since it also concerned conspiracies regarding crimes to be committed in South Africa.[145] Nevertheless, Hartzenberg ruled that the defence had the right to object to all evidence, which was led in connection with count 63, that is only aimed at proving conspiracies to commit crimes abroad, which according to the judge

---

[141] Interview with Torie Pretorius and others in Pretoria (May 2, 2006). See also S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 para. 257.

[142] Pretorius estimates that only about 5 per cent of the evidence concerning the six charges has not been led in the trial.

[143] S. v Wouter Basson (T) Case no. 32/1999 11 April 2002, unreported, at para. 1610 (abstract translated from Afrikaans).

[144] Interview with Torie Pretorius and others in Pretoria (May 2, 2006). The dismissal of the evidence was made on factual not legal grounds and could thus only be taken on review not on appeal. However, a review of the judges rulings on the evidence would have provided a gross irregularity which was not given (Interview with Susan Bukau and others in Pretoria (May 2, 2006)).

[145] S. v Basson [2000] 1 All SA 430 (T) at 436h.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

do not disclose criminal offences.[146] Apparently either the defence did not object to the leading of evidence in this regard or the evidence that was actually led in the trial always concerned both justiciable and non-justiciable conspiracies. Thus, since the judge at the trial had ruled over all relevant evidence and no fresh evidence was available to sufficiently sustain the charges,[147] further charges would be vulnerable of a plea of res judicata.

It is difficult to comprehend, why the NPA applied for leave to appeal in respect of the six charges at the Constitutional Court at all, when a new indictment would be exposed to a double jeopardy plea anyway. The specific issue had already been raised during the Supreme Court litigation. The NPA must have been aware of such implications. Furthermore, the Constitutional Court did not state that these circumstances completely precluded a new prosecution. Instead, the Court appeared much more encouraging stating that it would be up to the judge in a newly convened trial to determine in the light of the new charges and the record of the previous criminal proceedings whether the mass of evidence led previously indeed particularly covers the new charges.[148] However, the Court also left it up to the NPA to decide on a fresh charge.[149] Although the prosecutors are naturally well able to consider this question, a ruling by a new trial court, after careful consideration of the criminal records, would have had greater authority, which would probably have made it easier for many victims concerned to find closure on the issue.

The reason for the decision not to proceed with the trial after the NPA had succeeded on the issue of the six quashed charges probably lies in the fact that this issue was only one of three that were taken to the Constitutional Court. The NPA had also applied at the Constitu-

---

[146] Ibid. at 443e and 444h.

[147] Interview with Torie Pretorius and others in Pretoria (May 2, 2006).

[148] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 at paras. 169, 258 and 260. The court expressly refrained from tackling this complex task in the proceedings before it since it had no effect on its decision to grant leave to appeal (S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 at para. 258).

[149] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 at para. 260.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

tional Court for a ruling on the refused recusal of Judge Hartzenberg and his alleged bias, which did not succeed. A successful ruling in this regard might have led to the setting aside of the judgment and would have enabled the NPA to proceed with a new trial regardless of the double jeopardy rule. However, it is not possible to conclude with certainty what the considerations of the NPA were in this regard. The independent decision of the NPA has not been accepted by many victims.[150] Basson continued to work as a member of the South African National Defence Force (hereinafter SANDF) and as a cardiologist in various hospitals.[151]

2.5 Conclusion

In the view of many apartheid victims, the trial against Wouter Basson was very promising. That it did not succeed was equally disappointing for many. The case had the potential to become one of the most significant prosecutions of apartheid era crimes. It offered the possibility of focussing more closely on the secret activities of the military, which had thus far not received the same attention as the security police.[152] The acquittal prevented the achievement of definite clarity on such criminal activities. It also had a negative impact on further post-TRC prosecutions. Since the costs of millions of Rand were not "balanced" by a conviction, the government might become increasingly reluctant to push for other trials. Also, a number of state witnesses who had testified extensively against Basson were nevertheless not granted immunity by Hartzenberg in terms of section 204 of the Criminal Procedure Act, which might generally impact negatively on the willingness of co-perpetrators to cooperate with the prosecutors.[153]

---

[150] Interview with Marjorie Jobson in Pretoria (May 9, 2006).

[151] Defence confirms Basson's suspension payments SAPA, Sep 13, 2006; Wouter Basson to defend himself against complaints SAPA, Feb 26, 2007.

[152] V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 174.

[153] M. Fullard and N Rousseau 'An imperfect past: the Truth and Reconciliation Commission in transition' in J. Daniel et al. (eds) State of the nation (2003) 78 at 93.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

However, one positive aspect is that the Constitutional Court dealt with the matter and made a number of statements with regards to the relevance of international human rights law for the prosecution of apartheid era crimes. It is also of great importance for other post-TRC trials regarding the conspiracy issue. It concerns all similar situations in which crimes were organised in South Africa but were carried out abroad. These include the numerous cross border raids of the security police during which opposition members and other civilians were killed in neighbouring countries. The judgment is also generally relevant for all crimes committed by SADF members abroad.

The Court outlined that South African courts have jurisdiction over conspiracies in terms of section 18(2) of the Riotous Assemblies Act to commit crimes abroad when there is a real and substantial link between the conspiracy and South Africa. However, it did not formulate general criteria to determine the existence of a real and substantial link. One can nevertheless conclude from the factors applied by the Court with respect to the Basson case, the general criteria that are relevant should such factors mutually occur. Accordingly, apart from the factors that pertained to the special situation in Namibia, a real and substantial link exists when the conspiracy was entered into in South Africa, when it was organised and directed by members of the South African state forces, when the relevant orders emanated from South Africa and when the means for the implementation of the crime were provided from within South Africa. Such circumstances probably existed in most criminal cross-border activities of the security police. The conspiracy to commit such acts would thus be prosecutable.

Additionally it is implicit from the judgment that South African courts have jurisdiction to try all crimes committed by former SADF members covered by the Military Discipline Code. Conspiracies to commit crimes in Namibia generally fall under the jurisdiction of South African courts due to the Court's strong emphasis on the close connection between Namibia and South Africa at the time.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

3. The Bisho-Massacre

In October 2001 a criminal trial commenced at the High Court of Bisho in the Eastern Cape that dealt with the Bisho-massacre, one of the most serious and tragic political killings in the South African transition period.

3.1 The massacre

The events commonly referred to as the Bisho-massacre occurred on 7 September 1992 in the immediate vicinity of Bisho, capital of the then homeland Ciskei.[154] The ANC had organised a protest march from the Eastern Cape city of King Williams Town towards the adjacent town of Bisho. The rally, in which about 70,000 to 80,000 people participated, was intended to proceed into Bisho in order to press for the resignation of then Ciskei leader, Oupa Gqozo.[155] However, the marchers only received permission to enter a stadium right behind the Ciskei border.[156] The organisers of the march, among them prominent ANC members such as Chris Hani, Ronnie Kasrils[157] and Cyril Ramaphosa, nevertheless were adamant that they would proceed into Bisho.[158] The assigned route to the stadium was marked off by razor wire fencing and approximately 200 Ciskei Defence Force (hereinafter CDF) soldiers were lined up in the surroundings.[159] The situation was, due to recent intense violent clashes between ANC supporters and Ciskei authorities, very tense.[160]

---

[154] TRC Report, vol. 3, chap. 2, paras. 368–69.

[155] Ibid., para. 369.

[156] Ibid., para. 374.

[157] Kasrils became deputy Minister of Defence in the new government in 1994 (P. van Niekerk and B. Ludman (eds) A–Z of South African politics 1999 (1999) 139). In 1999 he was appointed Minister of Water Affairs and Forestry.

[158] S. v Mkosana and another 2003 (2) SACR 63 (BCH) at 74.

[159] TRC Report, vol. 3, chap. 2, paras. 369 and 374.

[160] Numerous warnings that the march is in danger of ending in a bloodshed were made by prominent politicians from all sides and reported in the media (S. v Mkosana and Gonya, indictment, summary of substantial facts, pages 20–22).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

However the marchers were clearly unarmed and the rally proceeded peacefully.[161]

Events took a turn when a group of marchers, headed by Ronnie Kasrils, noticed a gap in the fence and decided to break through.[162] Some hundred marchers then ran towards a CDF battalion that was lined up at a distance. Commander Vakelele Archibald Mkosana gave the order to fire.[163] What ensued was uncontrolled and indiscriminate shooting.[164] Without warning of the order to fire the shooting was joined by most of the other soldiers employed around the march.[165] 29 protestors and one CDF soldier died, dozens others were injured.[166] Many were shot either when running away or while already lying on the ground.[167]

The massacre was subject to various investigations and TRC hearings.[168] The TRC found that Gqozo and the CDF were accountable for the massacre but also criticised the ANC leadership for having lacked prudence in the volatile situation.[169] Indictments were drafted shortly after the massacre concerning CDF soldiers and even Ronnie Kasrils.[170] However due to political circumstances, charges were not instituted and it was only in 1996 that a new police investigation docket was submitted to the Attorney-General.[171] The proceedings were pending the outcome of amnesty applications, received from Vakele Archiebald

---

[161] Decision no. AC/2000/122; S. v Mkosana and another 2003 (2) SACR 63 (BCH) at 74.

[162] TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 7, para. 180.

[163] Ibid., para. 182.

[164] Over 400 shots and four rifle grenades were fired.

[165] TRC Report, vol. 3, chap. 2, para. 375.

[166] Ibid. para. 369. The prosecutors of the case list 67 injured (S. v Mkosana and Gonya, indictment, annexure D, page 17). Other sources refer to about 300 injured (J. Sarkin Carrots and sticks: the TRC and the South African amnesty process (2004) 377).

[167] TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 7, para. 184.

[168] The TRC had held two extensive public hearings on the Bisho-massacre in September and November 1996, during which about 60 witnesses testified (See especially TRC Report, vol. 3, chap. 2, paras. 368–99).

[169] TRC Report, vol. 3, chap. 2, para. 399.

[170] Ibid., para. 397.

[171] Ibid., para. 398.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

Mkosana and Mzamile Thomas Gonya, who were both concerned by the investigations.[172] Both applications were refused in 2000.[173] In 2001 the newly appointed Director of Public Prosecutions of the area, Johan Bezuidenhout, took the matter up again.[174]

3.2 The indictment

In October 2001, Mkosana and Gonya were both charged with one count of murder and two counts of attempted murder. Mkosana was also charged with culpable homicide.[175]

Mkosana was the field commander of the CDF soldiers employed in the operation on the particular day in question and was stationed directly behind the CDF line facing the approaching protestors who had broken through the gap.[176] He allegedly radioed his superiors for instructions and reported, as he later admitted, that shots were fired by the approaching protestors. He then received permission to fire single shots in return to turn back the crowd.[177] Following this, Mkosana allegedly ordered the line in front of him to open fire on the approaching group.[178] The State based the charges against him on the claim that he lied when he reported the shots.[179] He had supposedly known that the situation did not pose such a compelling threat as to justify the shooting and he had failed to ensure that only single shots were fired, knowing that his conduct would result in many deaths.[180] Due to the chaotic nature of the events it was not possible to determine exactly who was shot by which group of soldiers.[181] At least one victim from

---

[172] Applications no. AM/4458/96 and AM/7882/97.
[173] Decision no. AC/2000/122.
[174] S. v Mkosana and another 2003 (2) SACR 63 (BCH).
[175] S. v Mkosana and Gonya, indictment.
[176] Ibid., preamble, at page 5.
[177] Ibid. at page 6.
[178] Ibid.
[179] Ibid. at page 7.
[180] Ibid. at pages 8–9.
[181] Ibid. at page 7.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

the group of protestors, which had run through the fence, was allegedly killed by the CDF line in front of Mkosana.[182] Accordingly, he would be guilty of murder of this one protestor and also of attempted murder of an undeterminable number of other demonstrators.[183] Furthermore, Mkosana would be guilty of having negligently caused the death of all other victims shot dead at other places around the stadium (culpable homicide count), since he had failed to ensure that the other soldiers would not join in the shooting without specific orders.[184]

Gonya was a soldier armed with a rifle grenade launcher, employed in the CDF line facing the approaching protestors.[185] He allegedly fired two grenades, without orders to do so, into the approaching group or in the direction thereof with the intention to kill members of the group.[186] He was accordingly charged with murder of one victim who died through grenade shrapnel and with the attempted murder of an undeterminable number of persons.[187]

The prosecutor was initially not convinced that the case against the accused would be strong. The indictment was rather the result of the great significance of the massacre and the expectations among victims and the public since amnesty had been denied to the accused. An inquest was not conducted since it was feared that public expectations would rise even more should the inquest result in a recommendation to charge the suspects.[188]

---

[182] Ibid. at page 10.

[183] Ibid. at page 11.

[184] Ibid. at page 9. Allegedly Mkosana's order was transmitted by radio and was also audible to at least some of the other lines engaged in the shootings, who then mistook it as being directed at them (Telephone interview with Johan Bezuidenhout in June 2006).

[185] S. v Mkosana and Gonya, indictment, page 10.

[186] Ibid.

[187] Ibid. at page 11. It appears contradictory that on the one hand Mkosana was charged with murder by having ordered the line to shoot and on the other hand Gonya, who allegedly killed the only one protestor in the group charged with murder for acting without any order to shoot.

[188] Telephone interview with Johan Bezuidenhout in June 2006.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

3.3 The judgment

Exploring the Bisho-massacre confronted the Court with a major task. After 43 court days during which the events were dealt with thoroughly, Judge White delivered his ruling on 13 March 2002.[189] Both accused were found not guilty and were acquitted on all charges.[190]

The crucial issues were whether the accused were entitled to act in self-defence and whether the limits of self-defence had been observed.[191] The Court confirmed both issues. The ruling took into account that all soldiers were very anxious of possible attacks due to the row of violent clashes[192] and had beforehand been advised that the marchers could be armed.[193] With respect to the examination of whether a situation of self-defence existed, the Court found no evidence of shots being fired from the protestors.[194] Mkosana had suggested that he might have mistaken the rotor sound of a helicopter, flying above the march, for shots.[195] After examining closely the evidence and testimony on this question, the Court found it reasonably possible, especially considering the tense and agitated conditions, that the sounds were indeed mistaken for shots.[196] On this basis the Court was of the opinion that a situation justifying actions taken in self-defence existed.[197] With regard to the question of whether the limits of self-defence had been exceeded, the Court found that to order shots immediately was indeed appropriate.

---

[189] S. v Mkosana and another 2003 (2) SACR 63 (BCH) at 66. The state had submitted an extensive list of 134 state witnesses (S. v Mkosana and Gonya, indictment, list of state witnesses).

[190] S. v Mkosana and another 2003 (2) SACR 63 (BCH) at 95.

[191] Ibid. at page 87.

[192] Ibid. at page 67.

[193] Ibid. at page 1.

[194] Ibid. at page 63.

[195] This possibility had already been raised at the TRC (TRC Report, vol. 3, chap. 2, para. 383).

[196] A special in loco inspection was undertaken by the Court after which it found that there was considerable similarity between the sounds (S. v Mkosana and another 2003 (2) SACR 63 (BCH) at 88). A number of protestors also mistook the rotor sounds for shots during the march.

[197] S. v Mkosana and another 2003 (2) SACR 63 (BCH) at 90.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

Less stringent measures, such as warning shots etc., could not have been considered since the crowd was running towards the soldiers and was already relatively close.[198] The Court thereby also took into account that senior commanders had expressly prohibited the use of warning shots.[199] The charge of culpable homicide was rejected since the Court could not find proof that Mkosana had submitted his order to shoot to the line in front of him via radio, which could, thus, not have been mistaken by other CDF groups as being directed at them.[200] With regard to Gonya the Court could not find proof that it was exactly the grenade fired by Gonya that killed the one specific victim.[201] It appeared possible that the death was caused by grenades that might have been fired by other soldiers.[202]

3.4 Conclusion

The Bisho massacre is an example of the clashes that occurred at the mass rallies during the early 1990s. It is not representative of the secret state activities against political activists. It had already been examined extensively due to its scope, the great public attention and the investigations of the TRC. It was doubtful whether the trial could contribute further to the findings already made by the TRC. However, the call for retributive justice from victims and from many in the public was still strong.[203]

There is a strong impression from the judgment that the judge was of the opinion that the events were merely a tragic coincidence of various unfortunate factors rather than a crime for which a specific person could be held accountable. This becomes clear when the Court refers to the events as an inevitable 'clash between an irresistible force and an immovable object'.[204] Moreover, the judge apparently found it

---

[198] Ibid. at page 91.
[199] Ibid. at page 92.
[200] Ibid. at page 93.
[201] Ibid.
[202] Ibid. at page 94.
[203] Telephone interview with Johan Bezuidenhout in June 2006.
[204] S. v Mkosana and another 2003 (2) SACR 63 (BCH) at 68.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

inappropriate to blame only the two accused, although he presumably found others equally or even more responsible. The Court for instance heavily criticised the leadership of the ANC for taking the irresponsible decision to break through the gap in the fence and run towards Bisho.[205] It also made it clear that the prosecution should have rather focussed on CDF soldiers in other positions surrounding the march, who had shot in a totally defenceless and harmless crowd, which had caused the vast majority of deaths and injuries on that day.[206] Such action was described as 'a wanton and brutal slaying of innocent people'.[207] According to the prosecutor,[208] the willingness of the Court to punish the accused diminished further when Ronnie Kasrils made statements during the trial in which he once again called strongly for closing the books on the massacre and indicated his lack of vindictiveness.[209]

Against this background, it appears that the Court accepted too easily that Mkosana acted in self-defence when he ordered the line in front of him to open fire. The Court simply accepted that warning shots had not been appropriate since they had been forbidden for whatever reason by the CDF leadership. Warning shots would generally have been insufficient to stop the crowd. The judge went further to state that even if Mkosana had not thought the protestors were firing he would have been exonerated by the defence of self-defence by the plain fact that some hundred marchers running towards them in a distance of about 150 meters constituted a real danger.[210] Furthermore, he stated that it would be 'churlish for a Court to blame an accused who has, through no fault of his own, been placed on the horns of a dilemma as to the exact steps he must take to protect himself and those in his care'.[211]

It is hard to accept this. Mkosana was a senior officer of the CDF who was in command on the ground on that day. One requires a high degree

---

[205] Ibid. at page 77. Indeed Kasrils had already expressed a deep sense of moral responsibility for the events before the TRC (TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 7, para. 181).

[206] S. v Mkosana and another 2003 (2) SACR 63 (BCH) at 81.

[207] Ibid. at page 80.

[208] Telephone interview with Johan Bezuidenhout in June 2006.

[209] S. v Mkosana and another 2003 (2) SACR 63 (BCH) at 74.

[210] Ibid. at page 91.

[211] Ibid. at page 93.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

of prudence and responsibility of an officer in such a high position of the army. Furthermore, a distance of 150 meters seems far enough to fire warning shots or single shots. Kasrils had stated that they would have stopped right away if there had been warning shots.[212] The Court's findings on self-defence are in stark contrast to the findings of the TRC and especially to the findings of the Amnesty Committee. The Amnesty Committee refused amnesty to Mkosana and Gonya on the grounds that their actions were totally disproportionate to the dangers they faced.[213] The committee had described the firing under the circumstances as totally irrational and unjustified.[214] However, in the end, the acquittal is consequent as it is clear from the judgment that the judge had to acquit the accused due to the principle of in dubio pro reo.

4. The Trial of Michael Luff

In November 2001 the policeman Michael Phillip Luff was charged with murder in the Regional Court of Worcester in the Western Cape. He was accused of having shot the 17-year-old William Dyasi in Zwelethemba township in 1985. At the time, Luff was a young member of the so-called Unrest Unit of the Worcester police, a riot squad that was dealing primarily with containing unrest in the townships of the region.[215]

According to the prosecutor, events unfolded as follows.[216] In early November 1985, Luff and a colleague were called while on duty in the

---

[212] TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 7, paras. 180–81.

[213] Decision no. AC/2000/122. According to section 19(3)(f) of the TRC Act the proportionality of the act inter alia determines the political character of the offence. The offences were on this basis not considered to be political.

[214] Decision no. AC/2000/122.

[215] MMM Mackay Outrage as amnesty reject gets off in court Cape Argus, May 7, 2002.

[216] The following information derives from an interview with prosecutor Themba Velem on 21 June 2006 in Paarl, if otherwise is not stated. The judgment and the charge sheet concerning the trial have been destroyed after the lapse of two years since Luff had been acquitted. Velem's account, often differs from information township to deal with a rioting group of protestors who were stoning a local beer hall.[217] When confronting the protestors, the policemen fired shots and Dyasi, who was among the crowd, was seriously injured by a lead gun-shot in his chest. Dyasi managed to escape. Two women gave him shelter in a nearby house. Later that evening, Luff and his colleague were informed that he was hiding in the house. Dyasi was found by the two policemen, who wanted to arrest him. Luff took the heavily bleeding youth outside while his colleague was still inside the house with the two women. Luff then shot Dyasi outside of the house. The prosecutor claimed that Luff intentionally shot Dyasi without justification.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

Already in early 1986, an inquest was conducted by the Worcester Magistrate's Court in order to establish whether an indictment of Luff was worthwhile. It was found that Luff was criminally liable for Dyasi's death and that the Attorney-General should institute a prosecution.[218] However, the Attorney-General declined to charge Luff, most likely for political reasons. Only in December 1996 was the decision reversed and a trial set to begin. This was due to intervention by the TRC. Dyasi's death and the subsequent events had been the subject of a TRC Human Rights Violations Committee hearing, in which his parents told their story.[219] Luff, however, immediately applied for amnesty.[220] The criminal proceeding was pending at that time. At the amnesty hearings, Luff testified that Dyasi had tried to escape when they had gone outside. He admitted to having shot him in the back only in order to effect an arrest.[221] Amnesty was refused in 2000 mainly because the offence lacked a political objective.[222] However, the Amnesty Committee also raised serious doubts regarding Luff's version of events. It found it especially deriving from TRC proceedings. An exact account of the events is thus under the circumstances impossible.

---

[217] Beer halls in townships were perceived by political activists as an apartheid instrument to keep Africans quiet.

[218] Decision no. AC/2000/005.

[219] TRC Report, vol. 3, chap. 5, para. 144.

[220] Application no. AM/3814/96.

[221] Decision no. AC/2000/005.

[222] Ibid.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

improbable that Dyasi was able to run away at all considering his severe injuries caused by the first shots at the beer hall. These doubts were not further explored since the criminal proceedings were still pending.

After the refusal of amnesty, the case was resumed and went to trial in November 2001. The prosecution was conducted without any involvement by the unit for TRC prosecutions in Pretoria. The prosecutor, Themba Velem, intended to base the charges mainly on the evidence provided by the two women of the shack in which Dyasi was hiding, one of whom could be traced, and most importantly on the testimony of a doctor who had conducted the post-mortem examination of the corpse in 1986. He had also testified at the inquest in 1986. This testimony contradicted Luff's version of events. For example, the doctor there had stated that Dyasi's injuries would probably not have allowed him to walk or run away at all. In a meeting with the doctor right before the trial, Velem convinced himself that the evidence given at the inquest in 1986 would be repeated. When testifying at the trial, however, the witness made a complete about turn, according to Velem, and his new recount of events was no longer consistent with his previous testimony.

Luff was eventually acquitted by Magistrate van Rensburg in May 2002. According to Velem, the Court could not find sufficient proof that Dyasi was shot by Luff at all. Velem stated that Luff had testified at the inquest that he had accidentally shot Dyasi in the back while stumbling outside the shack. Strangely, however, Luff never had to testify at the trial. The main reason for a lack of proof was that the doctor testified differently. A number of other important witnesses also could not be traced. Furthermore, Velem sensed a strong reluctance on the part of the police to investigate the case thoroughly. Initially only a junior officer, who had even attended shooting lessons led by Luff, was assigned to investigate the case. A senior, more independent officer later replaced him. Certain witnesses were only traced after Velem intervened personally. He also had the impression that the Magistrate van Rensburg was very reluctant to conduct the trial. For example, on many occasions the judge strangely did not grant applications for adjournments by Velem in order to trace other witnesses. The judge

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

also apparently made certain derogative statements about the fact that Luff was prosecuted at all.

The case was certainly loaded with political implications and emotions. After the acquittal, the judge was accused of racism by Dyasi's relatives and representatives of the black population in the area.[223] The victim's relatives found it especially difficult to accept that there was insufficient proof that Luff killed Dyasi since they had attended the amnesty hearings in which Luff admitted to having killed Dyasi.[224] The trial raised much racial tension and emotion in the area. The exact circumstances of Dyasi's death were not established. There were indications that there was a politically motivated reluctance on the side of the police and the Court to convict Luff, who continues to work as an inspector at the Ceres police. However, even the prosecutor admitted that under the circumstances the evidence was probably not sufficient to secure a conviction.

5. The Case of Tyani and Gumengu

In 2004 two former members of the Transkei homeland security police, Aron Mtobeli Tyani and Pumelele Gumengu, were each charged in the Butterworth Circuit Court[225] with one count of attempted murder and one count of murder. The two were charged with having murdered Sithembele Zokwe on 8 August 1987.[226] Zokwe was a political activist and member of MK. He had undergone military training abroad. The indictment alleged that the accused and other members of the local security police arrested Zokwe in Umtata in August 1987 and took him to a remote quarry where they shot him in the neck and head.

---

[223] M.M.M. Mackay Outrage as amnesty reject gets off in court Cape Argus, May 7, 2002.

[224] Such self-incriminating evidence is according to section 31(3) of the TRC Act inadmissible in a criminal trial.

[225] Umtata High Court.

[226] S. v Tyani and Gumengu, indictment. The charges were conducted by M. Mhaga, who later shifted to the PCLU in Pretoria.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

Zokwe, who was severely injured, miraculously survived the attack. He later managed to call for help and was brought to a hospital.[227] After his release from hospital, he was again arrested by the security police in January 1988. Gumengu and Tyani took Zokwe to a house where he was allegedly asked to point out where he was hiding hand grenades. On this occasion, he was shot by Tyani inside the house. The accused then allegedly placed the dead body on a hand grenade, which was activated in the house to create the impression that Zokwe had tried to throw the grenade at them so that they had to shoot him in self-defence.[228]

After they had already previously been charged for the murder both applied for amnesty in relation to it in 1996.[229] Gumengu simultaneously applied for amnesty regarding the previous murder attempt. The prosecution was then pending the amnesty decision and only continued after amnesty had been denied in March 2000.[230] The Amnesty Committee found that the applicants had presented highly improbable and contradictory versions of the events and accordingly denied amnesty for a lack of full disclosure.[231] At trial, the accused nevertheless presented the same account of events. They claimed that when they had brought Zokwe to the quarry he attempted to escape which they tried to prevent by shooting in the air and in his direction without intending to kill him.[232] With regard to the actual murder they claimed that Tyani shot at Zokwe since he had tried to attack them with a hand grenade. Both pleaded not guilty.[233] The versions were again rejected as obviously false and highly improbable considering the various pieces of evidence and the post-mortem examination.[234] The judge was certain that Zokwe was

---

[227] S. v Tyani and Gumengu, indictment, summary of substantial facts.

[228] Ibid.

[229] Applications no. AM/3786/96 and AM/3610/96.

[230] Decision no. AC/2000/042.

[231] Ibid.

[232] S. v Tyani and Gumengu (Transkei division) Case no. 76/2004, unreported, at para. 55.

[233] Ibid. at para. 4.

[234] Ibid. at para. 76.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

not killed in self-defence[235] and that both acted with a common purpose when Zokwe was shot.[236] Gumengu and Tyani were found guilty of murder.[237] Only Gumengu was found guilty of attempted murder whereas Tyani was discharged on that count for a lack of evidence.[238] Both were sentenced to 25 years imprisonment.[239]

Although a conviction was secured, it is rather disconcerting that the judgment did not clarify the truth regarding the facts of the case. There is no proper examination of why exactly Zokwe was murdered. While the amnesty decision clearly stated that Gumengu had been ordered by his superiors to eliminate Zokwe, there is no mention of such implications and the intentions behind the deed in the judgment. The political background is only touched upon in the trial judge's judgment when he mentions that Zokwe was indeed a very active member of MK and that it was the common goal of Gumengu and Tyani to subdue him since he was considered a dangerous terrorist.[240] The judgment is also largely confined to rejecting the accused' versions of events. It does not clarify in detail how Zokwe's murder took place. It also fails to clarify whether Zokwe was brought to the quarry with the sole purpose of killing him there. However, it is most likely that the judge did not consider it necessary to elaborate on these questions since he was convinced that the case against the accused was strong and clear.[241] Moreover, it is not the purpose of a criminal trial to deal with the political background of a crime, if this does not contribute to establishing the guilt of the accused. The case nevertheless provides evidence that the security forces also engaged in the practice of murdering opposition members in the officially independent homelands.

---

[235] Ibid. at para. 79.

[236] Ibid. at para. 81.

[237] Ibid. at para. 83.

[238] Ibid.

[239] Telephone interview with Advocate Quitsi in June 2006.

[240] S. v Tyani and Gumengu (Transkei division) Case no. 76/2004, unreported, at paras. 42 and 79.

[241] Ibid. at para. 83.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

6. Eugene Terre'Blanche

The first TRC-related trial conducted by the PCLU concerned the right wing organisation Afrikaner Weerstandsbeweging leader, Eugene Terre'Blanche. Terre'Blanche was accused of various terrorist attacks aimed at thwarting the negotiations during the early 1990s which potentially fell in the TRC amnesty mandate but for which he had failed to apply for amnesty. He had entered into a plea agreement with the PCLU in terms of section 105A of the Criminal Procedure Act. On 12 November 2003 he pleaded guilty to five counts of terrorism in contravention of section 54(1)(i) of the Internal Security Act[242] in the Regional Court of Potchefstroom and was sentenced to six years imprisonment, which was wholly suspended.[243] The case did not demand extensive investigations. Since it concerned isolated acts of right-wing terrorist violence and not the violence of the liberation movement and the security forces during the apartheid conflict, it is only of minor relevance for the present research. Thus it is not examined in detail.

7. The PEBCO-Three Case

Soon after the PCLU was established, Ackermann decided to press charges in early 2004 in the first major TRC case, the murder of the so-called PEBCO-Three. In May 1985 Sipho Hashe, Champion Galela and Qaqawuli Godolozi were abducted, tortured and killed by the security police.[244]

During the mid-1980s the Eastern Cape was heavily disrupted by political unrest. After a visit to the region in 1985, a high-ranking delegation of security force officials expressed concern, which signalled to the local security police branch, based at Port Elizabeth, that they [242] Act no. 74 of 1982.

[243] E-mails from Shaun Abrahams of 30 May 2007 and 6 June 2007.

[244] Unless otherwise is stated the following information derives from the amnesty decision no. AC/99/0223 and from TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 3, paras. 240–44.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

should drastically intensify their efforts. The three victims were leading members of the Port Elizabeth Black Civic Organisation[245] (hereinafter PEBCO), an important regional political organisation with close ties to the UDF and ANC. The security forces considered PEBCO to be a mere extension of the ANC and a major author of the political unrest and anti-apartheid movement in the region. The Port Elizabeth security branch, thus, decided to eliminate Hashe, Godolozi and Galela in a concerted effort with a Vlakplaas unit that was operating in the area at that time in order to break the opposition in the region.[246] On 8 May 1985, the three were lured to Port Elizabeth airport, from which they were abducted to a defunct police station in Post Chalmers, close to the town of Cradock. There they were interrogated. During the interrogation they were continuously and severely tortured. Eventually, on the 9 or 10 May they were shot dead.

In 1996 the Amnesty Committee received amnesty applications of Gideon Nieuwoudt, Harold Snyman, Hermanus Barend Du Plessis, Johannes Martin van Zyl and Gerhardus Johannes Lotz of the Port Elizabeth security branch[247] as well as of Johannes Koole[248] and some other members of the Vlakplaas group[249] for their involvement in the events.[250] In the amnesty hearings contradictory testimony was given. The applicants of the Port Elizabeth security police stated that no torture had taken place during the interrogation, which had been conducted by van Zyl, Lotz and Nieuwoudt. They further claimed that the Vlakplaas members only took part in the abduction, not in the interrogation and murder. This evidence was contradicted by the Vlakplaas askaris, [245] Godolozi was the President, Galela the General Secretary and Hashe the Secretary of PEBCO (S. v Nieuwoudt and others, konsep akte van beskuldiging).

---

[246] The operation was commanded by the Port Elizabeth security branch.

[247] Applications no. AM/3920/96; AM/3918/96; AM/4384/96; AM/5637/97; AM/3921/96.

[248] Application no. AM/3748/96.

[249] The group consisted of Roelf Venter, Gerhardus Beeslaar, Kimani Peter Mogoai, Joseph Mamasela and Johannes Koole.

[250] Snyman and Du Plessis had not been physically involved in the deed but were the ones who had ordered the actions.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

Mogoai, Koole and Mamasela, who claimed to have been present in the interrogation during which the three victims, allegedly, were severely assaulted. The Amnesty Committee found their versions reasonably true. Since other contradictions also emerged, in 1999 amnesty was refused to Nieuwoudt, van Zyl and Lotz for the abduction and killing of the PEBCO-Three for lack of full disclosure.[251] Amnesty was also refused to du Plessis, for conspiring and ordering the abduction and murder, to Beeslaar, for his role in the abduction and assault, and to Koole for the abduction and assault.[252] Later, amnesty was also refused to Venter.[253] Snyman was granted amnesty and has since died. Mogoai was also granted amnesty for his role in the abduction and assault.[254]

7.1 The indictment and further development

In February 2004 Anton Ackermann informed the attorney of Gideon Nieuwoudt[255] that he intended to charge his client in connection with the PEBCO-Three murder.[256] Nieuwoudt, who since passed away in August 2005, then appeared for his bail hearing in the Magistrate Court on 11 February 2004. He was released on 3000 Rand bail. The case was postponed to 3 June 2004. Shortly thereafter an arrest warrant was also issued for van Zyl,[257] who, at the time, was working for a company in Cambodia, clearing landmines. Van Zyl then also became a client of Wagener, who arranged for his return to South Africa. He appeared in court in early March 2004 and was released on bail. At the same time

---

[251] Decision no. AC/99/0223.

[252] Ibid.

[253] Decision no. AC/2001/064.

[254] Decision no. AC/99/0223.

[255] Gideon Nieuwoudt came to prominence through his involvement in a range of other cases for which he applied for amnesty and which were interrogated by the TRC such as the torture and killing of Steve Biko, which also involved Snyman, and the murder of the so-called Motherwell-Four.

[256] Unless otherwise is cited, all information contained in this subchapter derives from an interview with the attorney of Nieuwoudt and van Zyl, Jan Wagener, on 8 May 2006 in Pretoria.

[257] Nieuwoudt charged with murder SAPA, Feb 11, 2004.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

the PCLU had tried to convince Johannes Koole to serve as a state witness in terms of section 204 of the Criminal Procedure Act.[258] However, Koole refused to cooperate and the PCLU decided to charge him as well.[259] In the PEBCO case the PCLU again relies heavily on state witnesses to sustain their case. Roelf Venter, Gert Beeslaar, Joe Mamasela and Peter Mogoai were approached for this purpose and thus for the time being were not included in the charges.[260]

Nieuwoudt, van Zyl and Koole were each to be charged with three counts of abduction, assault and murder respectively.[261] The charges accuse them of the deeds the Amnesty Committee determined they had committed: that they abducted the three deceased at the airport and then took them to Post Chalmers. The indictment further alleges that throughout the night and the following day the PEBCO-Three were severely assaulted. On 10 May 1985 the accused allegedly killed the PEBCO-Three under circumstances that, as the indictment asserts, are unknown to the State.[262] However, after the bail hearings of early 2004 until mid 2007, the Court proceedings made no progress at all. The trial was pending. The delay was caused mainly by an application of van Zyl and Nieuwoudt to review the refusal of amnesty. The circumstances of this application will be outlined in the following subchapter. Adding to this NDPP Bulelani Ngcuka imposed a moratorium in November 2004 on all TRC-related cases.[263] All TRC-related investigations and prosecutions were put on hold, which also affected proceedings in the PEBCO case.[264] The case is since pending. Only in July 2007 did the NPA again make statements on the matter when it was announced that the PCLU

---

[258] Act 51 of 1977. See supra Chapter 2 note 50.

[259] Interview with Anton Ackermann in Pretoria (May 11, 2006).

[260] Ibid.

[261] S. v Nieuwoudt and others, konsep akte van beskuldiging. Counts one to three relate to the abduction, counts four to six to the murder and counts seven to nine to the assault of the three deceased.

[262] S. v Nieuwoudt and others, konsep akte van beskuldiging, opsomming van wesentlike feite, pages 3–5.

[263] The causes and circumstances of the moratorium will be discussed below (Chapter 3(3.1)).

[264] E-Mail from Anton Ackermann (Oct 10, 2005).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

also intended to charge Herman du Plessis, Gerhardus Lotz, Gerhardus Beeslaar and Peter Mogoai if they did not cooperate.[265] Mogoai, who had been granted amnesty for the abduction and assault, could only be charged for a possible participation in the murder.

In mid-July 2007 an NPA investigation team found remains of corpses on the farm in Post Chalmers near Cradock in the Eastern Cape where the PEBCO-Three had been kept.[266] These remains are believed to be those of the PEBCO-Three, which would contradict the testimony of van Zyl and other amnesty applicants from the Port Elizabeth security police that the corpses had been burned and thrown into the Fish River.[267] At the date of completing this book it remained to be seen how the case would proceed.

7.2 The review application

The decision to apply for a review of Nieuwoudt's and van Zyl's refusal of amnesty was taken shortly after their bail hearings.[268] As will become apparent, this has major implications for the PEBCO-Three prosecution. The review application, which now only concerns van Zyl since Nieuwoudt has passed away, was tendered at the High Court of Pretoria[269] by the attorney Jan Wagener in September 2004.

Considering that the amnesty decisions were already handed down in 1999, the tendering of the review application appears to have been

---

[265] T. Mtshali Pebco Three: old cops face charges The Sunday Times, July 17, 2007.

[266] L. Oelofse NPA may have found bodies of Pebco Three SAPA, July 16, 2007.

[267] Decision no. AC/99/0223.

[268] Decisions of the Amnesty Committee can be taken on review at the High Courts by applicants, victims or other parties with a substantial interest in the matter (TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 1, chap. 2, para. 68; J. de Lange 'The historical context, legal origins and philosophical foundation of the South African Truth and Reconciliation Commission' in W. Verwoerd and C. Villa-Vicencio (eds) Looking back reaching forward (2000) 14 at 26). See further J. Sarkin Carrots and sticks: the TRC and the South African amnesty process (2004) 86–88; F. Kutz Amnestie für politische Straftäter in Südafrika (2001) 139–41,.

[269] The legal successor of the TRC is the Minister of Justice and Constitutional Development (see section 46(7)(b)(ii) of the TRC Act), seated in Pretoria.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

delayed. According to section 7(1) of the Promotion of Administrative Justice Act[270] (hereinafter PAJA), an application for judicial review of an administrative action must be brought no later than 180 days after the person was informed of the administrative action. The High Courts ruled that the Amnesty Committee is part of the executive power and that amnesty decisions are administrative actions.[271] Thus, according to this provision the deadline for applying for review already lapsed six months after the decision was handed down. Section 9(1)(b) PAJA, however, provides that the period of 180 days may be extended by agreement between the parties. This is what happened in the PEBCO-Three amnesty proceedings. Shortly after the applications in question had been refused, some of the applicants approached Wagener for advice on the possibility of reviewing the decision.[272] Wagener then negotiated an agreement with the Justice Department according to which the time limit for instituting judicial review proceedings in the PEBCO amnesty process was extended to the date on which the authorities charge the applicants. While Johannes Koole has never been a client of Wagener and, accordingly, the agreement does not cover him, the criminal proceedings against Koole are also affected since the charges will be tried jointly. The agreement does cover van Zyl and covered Nieuwoudt. Moreover, it not only affects the PEBCO matter, but another eight applications of clients of Wagener in which amnesty has been refused.[273] In the following, the legal and factual effects on the criminal litigation will, therefore, be outlined.

---

[270] Act 3 of 2000. It merely repeats the common law rule which already existed in 1999.

[271] Nieuwoudt, du Toit and Ras v Chairman, Sub-Committee on Amnesty for the Truth & Reconciliation Commission 2002 (1) SACR 299 (C) at 311; Derby-Lewis and another v The Chairman of the Committee on Amnesty and Truth and the Reconciliation Commission and others 2001 (3) BCLR 215 (C). Whether the Amnesty Committee is an administrative body was rarely discussed in legal literature (see F. Kutz Amnestie für politische Straftäter in Südafrika (2001) 113 and 141).

[272] Most of them had not been Wagener's clients during the amnesty proceedings but became his clients thereafter.

[273] E-mail from Jan Wagener (Feb 12, 2007).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

The amnesty proceedings and criminal litigation generally run parallel to each other.[274] However, once an application has been lodged the Amnesty Committee may request the appropriate authority to postpone the proceedings pursuant to section 19(7) of the TRC Act[275] pending the consideration and disposal of the amnesty application. In practice the applicant always tenders a request at the criminal court himself[276] and the courts have always granted such requests.[277] However, in this case, an amnesty hearing is not pending and the Amnesty Committee no longer exists. Nevertheless, the review application stays the criminal proceedings. This conclusion derives from a similar case, the Motherwell-Four case. As has been outlined above, Nieuwoudt and two other policemen were convicted of murder in the Motherwell case in 1996.[278] The conviction was immediately appealed to the Supreme Court of Appeal. The three had applied for amnesty simultaneously in relation to their conviction for the Motherwell-Four incident.[279] The appeal proceeding was then postponed pending a final decision on the question of amnesty.[280] After amnesty was eventually denied to all applicants in December 1999,[281] Wagener applied at the High Court in Cape Town for a review of the decision to refuse amnesty.[282] In the still pending appeal of the criminal conviction, the Supreme Court of

---

[274] F. Kutz Amnestie für politische Straftäter in Südafrika (2001) 201.

[275] The section reads: 'If the person who submitted an application under section 18 is charged with any offence constituted by the act or omission to which the application relates, or is standing trial upon a charge of having committed such an offence, the Committee in consultation with the attorney-general concerned, may request the appropriate authority to postpone the proceedings pending the consideration and disposal of the application.'

[276] F. Kutz Amnestie für politische Straftäter in Südafrika (2001) 201.

[277] Ibid., 202.

[278] See supra Chapter 1(4.).

[279] Applications no AM/3920/96; AM/3381/96; AM/5183/96.

[280] L. Fernandez 'Post-TRC prosecutions in South Africa' in G. Werle (ed.) Justice in transition (2006) 65 at 67.

[281] Decision no. AC/99/0345. Thereafter du Toit and Nieuwoudt became clients of Jan Wagener.

[282] Interview with Jan Wagener in Pretoria (May 8, 2006).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

Appeal then ruled that this appeal litigation will remain pending until the review litigation concerning the refused amnesty applications has been concluded, since only when such review proceedings are concluded would an amnesty application be disposed of in terms of section 19(7) of the TRC Act.[283] The same applies to the PEBCO-Three case. The prosecution, which was initiated in early 2004, is now pending the final outcome of the review application concerning the rejected amnesty application of van Zyl.

The practical effects of a review application on the PEBCO prosecution, in terms of delay, are again illustrated by the Motherwell-Four case. There, the review application to have the amnesty decision set aside was granted on 23 November 2001.[284] It was ordered that the amnesty decision be set aside and, quite interestingly, that the Minister of Justice had to reconvene a new amnesty committee to hear and consider the amnesty applications afresh, since the Amnesty Committee had meanwhile been disbanded.[285] It took until March 2004 for a new amnesty committee to be constituted in Port Elizabeth.[286] The ad hoc committee consisted of the attorney F Bosman and High Court judges R Pillay and N Motata. The hearing was concluded in September 2004 but the decision on whether to grant amnesty was reserved.[287] Only on 29 August 2005, did the majority of the committee decide that amnesty should be granted to du Toit and Ras but again refused

---

[283] E-mail from Jan Wagener (Feb 12, 2007).

[284] Nieuwoudt, du Toit and Ras v Chairman, Sub-Committee on Amnesty for the Truth & Reconciliation Commission 2002 (1) SACR 299 (C). The court found that the decision of the Amnesty Committee was unstructured, that the evidence had largely been disregarded or only considered on a selective basis. Moreover the amnesty decision did not make it sufficiently clear how the decision had been reached at all.

[285] Nieuwoudt and others v Chairman, Sub-Committee on Amnesty for the Truth & Reconciliation Commission 2002 (1) SACR 299 (C) at page 304.

[286] J. Sarkin Carrots and sticks: the TRC and the South African amnesty process (2004) 88. The Promotion of National Unity and Reconciliation Amendment Act (Act no 23 of 2003) was specially enacted to make provisions for the setting up of a new amnesty committee in case applications need to be dealt with afresh.

[287] Interview with Jan Wagener in Pretoria (May 8, 2006).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

to Nieuwoudt.[288] Nieuwoudt did not hear of the decision since he died shortly before it was handed down. The proceedings illustrate that a review application can lead to drastic delays in the pursuit of criminal justice. Six years have passed from the time the first amnesty decisions were handed down to the time of the final decision on amnesty in 2005. If Nieuwoudt had still been alive, the second refusal would have again been taken on review, if possible.[289] Although the delay in the Motherwell-Four case is also due to the fact that special legislation had to be enacted, providing for the establishment of ad hoc amnesty committees, which only happened in 2003, the example, nevertheless, illustrates that the PEBCO-Three prosecution will be delayed significantly by the judicial review hearings.

At the time of writing, no decision had been reached in the PEBCO-Three review proceedings since 2004. The start of the review litigation is held up by the Department of Justice, which takes an inexplicably long time to file the necessary papers to the court in order to initiate the proceedings. By the end of 2007, years after the review application had been tendered, the Department had yet to file the documents and the criminal matter remained postponed until August 2008.[290] Should the review application succeed, an amnesty committee would need to be reconvened. Should van Zyl's amnesty application eventually succeed, he would be freed of criminal and civil liability in terms of section 20(8) of the TRC Act.

7.3 Conclusion

The charges in the PEBCO-Three case aroused strong reactions in the South African public, both welcoming and critical.[291] The PEBCO-Three

---

[288] The new amnesty hearing also concerned former police general Jacobus Janse Nicolaas ("Nic") van Rensburg, who was also granted amnesty. He has since died. Information on the decision was only provided to the public in December 2005. The decision has not been published yet. It was provided to the author by the Justice Ministry.

[289] Interview with Jan Wagener in Pretoria (May 8, 2006).

[290] E-mail from Jan Wagener (Sep 13, 2007).

[291] See infra Chapter 3 (1.2.3).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

case is a well-known, high profile case, exemplifying the use of egregious violence by the security police and the cold-blooded murder of political opponents. It was heralded by many as the starting point of a larger body of prosecutions. Indeed, it marked the first major sign of progress on the subject of post-TRC prosecutions after the establishment of the PCLU in 2003. However, as will be pointed out later in this book, it was not the starting point of a larger process. Though it started promisingly, the case quickly stagnated and the review application will prevent it from proceeding. It is probable that it will take years before the criminal trial can continue, if at all.[292]

The interruption of the criminal proceedings through the amnesty review applications was, as described above, unavoidable in procedural terms. However, the Department of Justice can easily avoid long delays until the start of the review litigation. It is inexplicable why the Department of Justice is not filing its affidavits and papers to the High Court and is not taking the steps necessary for the review litigation to start. It thereby deliberately hinders the criminal trial from resuming.

8. The Blani Case

In October 2004, Buyile Ronnie Blani, at that time a 40 year-old member of the SANDF, was tried for his involvement in the killing of two people in the Eastern Cape in 1985.[293] Blani had been a member of the Addo Youth Congress during the 1980s, an organisation loosely affiliated to the ANC and UDF.[294] Blani's involvement with the liberation movement was, however, of a basic and minimal nature. He came from a poor and uneducated background and was one of many militant youths who were mobilised and politicised by the wave of mass movement activities during the 1980s.[295] However, in response to a call of [295] Interview with Madeleine Fullard in Pretoria (May 4, 2006).

[292] Interview with Jan Wagener in Pretoria (May 8, 2006).

[293] ANC member charged with murder of farm couple Cape Times, July 7, 2004.

[294] N. Rousseau 'Prosecutions' in E. Doxtader (ed) Provoking questions (2005) 37 at 42.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

the UDF in the mid-1980s to render the country ungovernable, Blani and other members of the youth congress raided a local farm and killed the elderly farmer couple.[296] Various items were stolen.

In 1985 the case was prosecuted. Blani managed to escape to exile in Angola. Most members of the group were tried and either sentenced to death or to long jail terms. Two death penalties were executed and two were later commuted to live imprisonment. During the negotiation period in the early 1990s, all remaining convicts in the case received either presidential pardons in 1993 or indemnity under the laws of 1990 and 1992.[297] One of Blani's accomplices who had also fled to exile successfully applied for amnesty for his participation in the killings after his return.[298] Blani, however, neither seemed to have recognised the indemnity laws of 1990 and 1992 nor of the TRC as he failed to apply for amnesty after his return from exile in 1992.[299]

When auditing the TRC dockets, Ackermann came across the docket of the Blani case. The case against Blani had already been investigated fully and the evidence was clear and compelling.[300] It was obvious that the case would not require a great effort for the prosecution. Blani was arrested in June 2004 and granted bail. On 12 October 2004 he was charged at the High Court of Grahamstown with two counts of murder and one count of housebreaking with intent to commit robbery and robbery with aggravating circumstances for his part in the conspiracy and execution of the raid and killings.[301] The case was not affected by the said moratorium on all TRC-related prosecutions of November 2004. Whereas the PEBCO-Three case was still in the pre-trial stage, the Blani trial had to continue because by November it was too advanced

---

[296] N. Rousseau 'Prosecutions' in E. Doxtader (ed) Provoking questions (2005) 37 at 42.

[297] See for the indemnity laws of the early 1990s: J. Sarkin Carrots and sticks: the TRC and the South African amnesty process (2004) 37–49.

[298] Application no. AM/2707/96; Decision no. AC/99/0264.

[299] Feud builds up over Kirkwood murders The Herald, available at http://www.theherald.co.za/herald/2004/07/08/news/n06_08072004.htm.

[300] Interview with Anton Ackermann in Pretoria (May 11, 2006).

[301] S. v Buyile Ronnie Blani, indictment.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

to be stopped.[302] The prosecution was conducted by M. Mhaga and directed by the PCLU.

The parties agreed on a relatively lenient sentence. On 25 April 2005 Blani was convicted on all charges and sentenced to five years imprisonment, four of which were suspended for five years.[303] The judge took into account the fact that, in contrast to all of his accomplices, Blani neither benefited from the indemnity laws of the early 1990s nor the TRC amnesty legislation. This was due to a lack of legal advice, for which Blani clearly lacked the resources to obtain. Upon returning from exile he basically assumed that the 1992 Further Indemnity Act[304] automatically indemnified him from criminal liability. Had he understood the provisions correctly, he would not have had to face charges at all. He obviously did not have proper access to legal counsel. Even at his trial in 2004, he only obtained legal representation through the legal aid scheme shortly before the trial was to start.[305] Against the background of these mitigating circumstances, the Court considered it to be inappropriate to sentence Blani to a long jail term.[306] The Court further acknowledged the political implications of the matter and took into account the fact that a number of co-perpetrators only benefited from indemnity and amnesty regulations since the crimes in question were associated with a political objective.[307] The prosecutors concurred with this consideration and pleaded for a mild sentence.[308]

There were many critical reactions to the Blani trial.[309] However, the trial shows that the PCLU is intent on prosecuting across the political spectrum by focusing mainly on the availability of evidence and the

---

[302] Interview with Madeleine Fullard in Pretoria (May 4, 2006).

[303] S. v Buyile Ronnie Blani (Eastern Cape division) Case no. CC 81/2004 25 April 2005, unreported.

[304] Act 151 of 1992.

[305] D. Bruinders Postponement granted in 1985 Kirkwood murder case The Herald, available at http://www.epherald.co.za/herald/2004/10/13/news/n05_13102004.htm.

[306] S. v Buyile Ronnie Blani (Eastern Cape division) Case no. CC 81/2004 25 April 2005, unreported.

[307] Ibid.

[308] Interview with Anton Ackermann in Pretoria (May 11, 2006).

[309] See infra Chapter 3(1.2.3).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

strength of the case. As stated above, the evidence in the case was very strong and the crimes in question, murder and robbery, were serious. Blani's trial was not, however, without political consequences, as it contributed to a debate on priorities and also to the above mentioned moratorium.

9. The Attempted Murder of Frank Chikane

In early November 2004, the PCLU was ready to carry out the arrests of three former officers of the South African security police on charges relating to the attempted murder of Frank Chikane in 1989.[310] Frank Chikane, who is now the Director-General of the President's Office, had been the Director-General of the South African Council of Churches, which was the leading organisation in the Protestant opposition to apartheid.[311] He was also a leading member of the UDF and generally a very vocal and popular opponent of the apartheid government.[312] The security forces perceived him to be a considerable threat to the regime.[313] It is believed that there were several attempts to kill him.[314] At his trial in 1995, former Vlakplaas commander Eugene de Kock alleged that the SADF and police had attempted to kill Chikane in a planned and premeditated operation.[315]

The three former policemen, former Major-General Christoffel Smith, Gert Otto and Johannes "Manie" van Staden, were to appear in Pretoria High Court on charges of attempted murder led by the PCLU.[316] They were also to face an umbrella charge of conspiracy to kill a number of unknown opponents of the apartheid state.[317] The accused persons had

---

[310] Interview with Torie Pretorius and others in Pretoria (May 2, 2006).

[311] P. van Niekerk and B. Ludman (eds) A–Z of South African politics 1999 (1999) 33.

[312] Ibid.

[313] S. v Wouter Basson, akte van beskuldiging, vol. II, aanklag 57, para. 2.

[314] S. Adams Drama in Chikane's poison case The Star, Nov 11, 2004.

[315] P. van Niekerk and B. Ludman (eds) A–Z of South African politics 1999 (1999) 34.

[316] S. Adams Drama in Chikane's poison case The Star, Nov 11, 2004.

[317] Interview with Jan Wagener in Pretoria (May 8, 2006).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

not applied for amnesty in relation to the charges. The facts concerning the involvement of the three accused in the attempted murder in 1989 emerged during the investigations against Wouter Basson,[318] who himself had been charged in 1999 for his alleged involvement in the murder attempt.[319] The case against the policemen had been almost completely investigated in the course of the Basson investigations.[320] The three had allegedly managed to get access to Chikane's luggage at the airport of Johannesburg in April 1989, when he was about to go on a trip to Namibia. On this occasion Chikane's clothing was apparently saturated with Paraoxon, a lethal nerve poison. The poison had been produced under the supervision of Basson in military laboratories and had been provided to the three accused under his instruction. After putting on his cloths, Chikane experienced severe health disturbances but survived the attack. His condition only improved once he had received hospital treatment and had taken off his clothing. Directly afterwards he went on a scheduled trip to the USA where he again experienced severe health problems after wearing his clothes. When he was treated in hospital the chemicals were eventually detected in his body and it was clear that an attempt on his life had been made.[321]

However the accused never appeared in court in November 2004 and the planned prosecution took a remarkable turn.

9.1 The arrest suspension

After the accused persons were informed by the PCLU of their imminent arrest the arrest warrants were suddenly withdrawn and the bail hearing, which was scheduled for the following day, was suspended.[322] The decision was reportedly taken by senior members of the NPA.[323]

---

[318] Interview with Torie Pretorius and others in Pretoria (May 2, 2006).

[319] S. v Wouter Basson, akte van beskuldiging, vol. II, aanklag 57.

[320] T. Pretorius Panel presentation at the Institute for Justice and Reconciliation conference 'The TRC: ten years on' (April 20, 2006).

[321] See S. v Wouter Basson, akte van beskuldiging, vol. II, aanklag 57, paras. 3–10.

[322] Interview with Torie Pretorius and others in Pretoria (May 2, 2006).

[323] S. Adams Drama in Chikane's poison case The Star, Nov 11, 2004.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

The most likely scenario is that the NDPP Bulelani Ngcuka directed the PCLU to stop the proceedings.[324]

The NPA's official reason given for the sudden reversal of the PCLU's decision to prosecute was that the NPA realised that there was not a clear strategic plan on how to deal with TRC prosecutions and, thus, specific guidelines for these kinds of cases were needed.[325] The events in the case contributed to and are closely linked to the imposition of the said moratorium on all TRC-related investigations and prosecutions in late November 2004.[326] The exact implications of this will be outlined below.[327] However, there is more to the reasons for why the step was taken than what has been officially presented by the NPA. Although the NPA tried to argue that the reasons for the suspension of the arrests were not political,[328] the suspension of the arrests was mainly the result of a political settlement behind the scenes.[329] After the PCLU informed the accused persons of their arrest, their attorney Jan Wagener took immediate steps to prevent this from happening. Wagener intervened at the Office of the President and pressed for a suspension of the arrests.[330] According to Wagener it was President Mbeki who then decided that the proceedings be put on hold. Ngcuka was apparently directed to take the necessary steps. However, there must obviously have been convincing political arguments to influence the decision.[331]

Chikane, who holds a central position in the President's Office, played an active role in the events. In 2003, Chikane wrote letters to the alleged [324] The NDPP has great influence on all prosecutorial decisions. According to section 22(1) of the NPA Act, the NDPP exercises directive control over all duties, functions and powers assigned to the prosecuting authorities. According to section 22(2)(c) of the NPA Act, he can review any decision taken by a Director of Public Prosecutions to lay charges.

---

[325] S. Adams Drama in Chikane's poison case The Star, Nov 11, 2004.

[326] E-mail from Anton Ackermann (Oct 18, 2005).

[327] Infra Chapter 3(3.1).

[328] Chikane poison case not closed, say Scorpions SAPA, Nov 11, 2004.

[329] Interview with Jan Wagener in Pretoria (May 8, 2006).

[330] Ibid.

[331] The political influences and considerations of the government will be analysed in Chapter 3(4.).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

perpetrators, urging them to come and disclose to him their deeds in order to be liberated from their guilt.[332] Then in late 2006, he announced that they were ready to meet with him and ask for forgiveness.[333] He was convinced that it was more important that the perpetrators tell their story rather than be prosecuted.[334]

The NPA assured at the time that once the question of strategy had been settled, the prosecution would definitely continue[335] and later confirmed that the case was still being considered.[336]

9.2 The indictment and plea bargain

It took until early 2007 for new developments on the case to occur. The said moratorium came to an end by January 2006 since the question of strategy had apparently been settled. From then on, the prosecution was subject to a consultation process between the attorney of the accused and the NPA.[337] The NPA and government had meanwhile drafted new prosecution policy guidelines for the exercise of prosecutorial discretion concerning the decision of whether to prosecute TRC-related cases, which will later be analysed in greater detail.[338] The policy document outlines criteria according to which a procedure can be implemented that requires the alleged perpetrator to make full disclosure on the criminal acts in question, which then can lead to a decision of the NDPP not to institute criminal proceedings. Although the NPA made no public announcements whatsoever, it is clear that the three accused in the Chikane case were subject to the new procedure apparently mainly in September 2006.[339]

---

[332] S. Adams Drama in Chikane's poison case The Star, Nov 11, 2004.

[333] I know who tried to kill me—Chikane SAPA, Oct 2, 2006.

[334] E. Naidoo No general amnesty for apartheid crimes The Sunday Independent, July 3, 2005.

[335] Chikane poison case not closed, say Scorpions SAPA, Nov 11, 2004.

[336] Chikane's would-be assassins on NPA's list SAPA, Jan 24, 2005.

[337] Interview with Jan Wagener in Pretoria (May 8, 2006).

[338] See infra Chapter 3(3.).

[339] See for the implications of the prosecution guidelines for the Chikane case: infra Chapter 3(3.4).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

It later emerged that the case would also concern two formerly high-ranking officials of the security forces and government. In mid-2007 the NPA announced that Adriaan Vlok, who had been Minister of Law and Order in the apartheid government from 1986 to 1991, and Johan van der Merwe, who had been head of the SAP security branch from 1986 to 1988, deputy National Commissioner of the Police from 1988 to 1990 and National Commissioner of the Police from 1990 to 1995, would be indicted.[340] Vlok and van der Merwe had been linked to a number of criminal activities of the security police due to their previous positions. Vlok had apparently already admitted earlier to having played a central role in the crime and had in 2006 apologised to Chikane.[341]

Although no official announcements were made concerning the aforementioned, it is clear that during 2006 Vlok and van der Merwe had joined the three former security police officers, who were initially to be charged, in terms of the guideline's disclosure procedure in order to make representations on their involvement in the case.[342] The fact that they came forward, however, was allegedly not prompted by imminent charges or the discovery of implicating evidence against them, but was done entirely voluntarily.[343] Their motives for this move will be outlined below. However, in January 2007 the NPA eventually informed the three alleged perpetrators that their prosecution would go ahead and apparently intended to also focus on Vlok and van der Merwe,[344] which obviously means that the guidelines procedure did not result in a decision of the NPA against prosecution. In August 2007, van der Merwe, Vlok, Otto, van Staden and Smith were charged with one count of attempted murder of Frank Chikane, alternatively with the conspiracy to murder Chikane in contravention of section 18(2)(a)

---

340 Court date for Vlok expected Tuesday: NPA SAPA, June 25, 2007.

341 Vlok apologises for atrocities SAPA, Aug 26, 2006; I know who tried to kill me—Chikane SAPA, Oct 2, 2006.

342 E-mail from Jan Wagener (Sep 13, 2007).

343 Ibid.

344 W.J. da Costa and T. Mtshali Prosecuting apartheid's soldiers 'divisive' Pretoria News, Feb 8, 2007.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

of the Riotous Assemblies Act, and with one count of conspiracy to murder various unknown persons.[345] Both acts of conspiracy allegedly also concerned Wouter Basson and his accomplice André Immelmann from Project Coast. The indictment is based on the facts that emerged during the Basson prosecution. It was allegedly together with Basson and Immelmann from Project Coast conspired to murder Chikane. Otto, van Staden and Smith allegedly carried out the poisoning at Johannesburg airport. Vlok and van der Merwe are claimed to have been involved in the command level underlying the actual implementation of the attempted murder.[346]

It was soon seen as likely that the accused would agree on a plea and sentence agreement, a so-called plea bargain, with the PCLU.[347] Indeed in June 2007 a plea bargain was agreed upon. On the scheduled trial date on 17 August 2007, the Court only had to decide on the validity of a plea and sentence agreement concerning the charges in terms of section 105A of the Criminal Procedure Act. According to section 105A(1)(a) of the Criminal Procedure Act a plea bargain contains an agreement between the State and the accused on a plea of guilty and a just sentence. Plea-bargaining is therefore a procedure under which the accused forgoes his right to a full trial in exchange for a reduced sentence.[348] There is extensive room to negotiate the exact terms and details of the agreement.[349] However, judicial approval of the plea and sentence agreement is required and the terms must be documented and presented in court.[350] According to section 105A(8) of the Criminal Procedure Act, the court has to adjudicate on whether the agreement is just and thereafter convicts and sentences the accused in terms of the sentence agreement.

---

[345] S v Johannes Velde van der Merwe en andere, akte van beskuldiging.

[346] Ibid., opsomming van wesentlike feite.

[347] E. Momberg and C. Terreblanche Alleged NPA deal may let Vlok off the hook The Sunday Independent, Feb 25, 2007.

[348] E. Du Toit et al. Commentary on the Criminal Procedure Act service 35 (2006) § 105A 15–5.

[349] Ibid., 15–6.

[350] Ibid., 15–7.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

The Court approved the plea and sentence agreement. In terms of the agreement, the five accused persons pleaded guilty to the charge of attempted murder. The charge of conspiracy to murder various other opponents of apartheid, whose identities are unknown to the State, was withdrawn by the PCLU. Vlok and van der Merwe were, according to the sentence agreement, sentenced by the Court to ten years imprisonment, wholly suspended for five years on the condition that they are not convicted of a similar crime. Otto, Smith and van Staden were sentenced to five years imprisonment, wholly suspended for five years on the same condition.[351]

9.3 Terms of the plea bargain

The plea and sentence agreement contains various admissions regarding the crime and lists aggravating and mitigating circumstances. Initially reference is made to the political backgrounds of the crime and the implication with the SADF project led by Basson, which allegedly had been engaged in developing toxic substances to be supplied to the various security branches.[352] It then turns to an account of the events constituting the crime of attempted murder, which confirms what had been alleged in the charges:[353] At a meeting in 1987 that had been arranged by the SADF, Johan van der Merwe 'took cognisance of an order to act against high profile members of the anti-apartheid liberation struggle in order to neutralise their influence. He also took note that, in extreme cases and only as a last resort, consideration could be given to killing them.'[354] Van der Merwe and other senior security force officials were given a list containing names of such high profile activists, among them Frank Chikane. Van der Merwe and Vlok discussed the implementation of the order and decided to set up a group of security policemen for this purpose.

---

[351] S. v Johannes Velde van der Merwe en andere (Pretoria High Court) pleit en vonnisooreenkoms, 15 August 2007.

[352] Ibid. at paras. 14–35.

[353] Ibid. at paras. 35–49.

[354] Ibid. at para. 36.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

Otto and van Staden became members of this special unit and Smith later served as the unit's commander. On the orders of General Sebastiaan Smit, who had meanwhile been appointed head of the security police branch, Christoffel Smith contacted Wouter Basson for the supply of substances for the special unit's purposes 'that could be applied against the enemy'.[355] Thereafter Smith, Otto and van Staden met with André Immelmann, a scientist working for Basson's project, who had been ordered by Basson to instruct the policemen in the use of chemicals against enemies of the state. For Chikane a lethal substance was requested. Immelmann provided the three with the nerve poison Paraoxon and instructed them in how to apply it to Chikane's clothing.[356] The order to kill Frank Chikane was eventually issued by security branch head General Smit to Smith 'in terms of an order of' van der Merwe and Vlok.[357] Smith and Otto on 23 April 1989 intercepted Chikane's luggage at the airport and applied the poison to his underwear and clothing.

The plea bargain then points out various aggravating circumstances. The following are the most important:[358]

- Both van der Merwe and Vlok held high positions in the police and government.
- The only motive to kill Chikane was to prevent him from further political activities.
- None of the five accused applied for amnesty at the TRC with regard to the attempted murder of Frank Chikane.
- On 10 July 1997, van der Merwe testified before the TRC that he was not aware of a list containing names of opposition members to be targeted, which was obviously not true considering the facts of the Chikane case.
- Vlok only approached Chikane to apologise and attempt a reconciliation after it had emerged in November 2004 that the PCLU had a prima facie case against Smith, van Staden and Otto.

---

[355] Ibid. at para. 42.

[356] Ibid. at para. 43.

[357] Ibid. at para. 49.

[358] Ibid. at paras. 50–62.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

- In the trial against Wouter Basson Smith, van Staden and Otto were approached on many occasions by the prosecutors to cooperate as state witnesses in terms of section 204 of the Criminal Procedure Act. They persistently refused to do so, gave false accounts on the events and chose instead to cooperate with Basson's legal team.
- Chikane had written to Smith, van Staden and Otto after the Basson trial, asking them to tell the full truth and to reconcile with him, which persistently was ignored by them.

However, also a number of mitigating circumstances are identified, which are apart from certain personal circumstances mainly the following:[359]

- The accused all pleaded guilty. With respect to Vlok and van der Merwe, otherwise a conviction would not have been possible, since no sufficient evidence against them was available.
- The original project to neutralise specific apartheid opposition members was not initiated by the accused but by the SADF.
- Van der Merwe and Vlok allegedly had no knowledge of the specific plan and operation to kill Chikane. Vlok was not informed, although he had given instruction to be informed should the killing of anyone on the list be considered.
- Smith and Otto were only subordinates. They later came forward to disclose their roles in the incident and have since shown remorse.
- Van der Merwe encouraged members of the security forces to apply for amnesty during the TRC process. Regarding the attempted murder of Chikane, he allegedly tried to persuade the responsible officials of the SADF to apply for amnesty together with him in this incident.
- As part of the plea bargain, the accused have undertaken to cooperate with the PCLU as witnesses in a possible prosecution of General Sebastiaan Smit.

[359] S. v Johannes Velde van der Merwe en andere (Pretoria High Court) pleit en vonnisooreenkoms, 15 August 2007, at paras. 63–80.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

The official positions of the accused, which generally obliged them to protect the state, were obviously seen as mitigating. As such, it was emphasised that the three accused officers acted in their professional positions in defence of a 'lawfully elected government' to which they had sworn an 'oath of allegiance'.[360] It was further pointed out that the offence was committed during a period of intense political conflict in which violent acts by the liberation movement to overthrow the government were prevalent. The plea and sentence agreement took into account that the security police played a vital role in warding off the onslaught and that the distinction between lawful and unlawful means became increasingly blurred. It was further pointed out that due to his position of leadership, Chikane played a key role in causing unrest and mobilising resistance to apartheid.

9.4 Conclusion

The prosecution in the Chikane case is high profile and of great significance due to the rank and political position of Vlok and van der Merwe but also due to the political position of the victim, Frank Chikane, who was at the forefront of apartheid opposition and is now an influential political figure within the government. After the suspension of the arrests in 2004 it appeared as if no further progress on the matter would be made. However, after a lapse of almost three years, caused by the moratorium and various political developments,[361] the proceedings were concluded.

The eventual convictions in the case concern not only the three security police agents who were initially to be charged, but also van der Merwe, who was the highest ranking security policeman at that time and later the leading policeman of the country, and Vlok, a former minister of the apartheid government, who during the years of the most intense struggle had, by virtue of his portfolio, been politically responsible for the police's efforts to counter the apartheid opposition.

---

[360] Ibid. at para. 71.

[361] See infra Chapter 3(3.).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

Only once before, with the former Minister of Defence Magnus Malan, had a minister of the apartheid government been charged with an apartheid crime. Vlok was the first political leader to be held accountable for the criminal practices of the apartheid state. Van der Merwe was the first high-ranking general of the security police to face charges in a court of law. Previously, charges predominantly concerned the rank and file operatives of the security police. This was the case during the 1990s and, as has been shown above, was the case after the TRC. For the first time, sentences were handed down to people who gave orders and who forged the policies under which the security forces acted. Two of the highest ranked protagonists of the apartheid state or its security forces were publicly put on trial and admitted to criminal acts, which obviously originated from specific orders given at the highest levels of the state and government. This unprecedented event alone is a very significant achievement.

Nevertheless, the plea bargain in the case was strongly criticised by victims organisations. It was rejected as being a merely symbolic public relations event, which did not reveal any substantial new information.[362] The sentences were considered to be far too mild and there has been criticism that they were agreed on behind the scenes. This practice fails to uphold the principle of restorative justice and diminishes victims' trust in a fair legal system. The critique indicates that the trial, especially regarding Vlok and van der Merwe, was seen as a broader and general reckoning with apartheid crimes. This fails to take into account that the prosecution only concerned one specific case, that of Frank Chikane, who himself was very satisfied with the plea agreement.[363]

However, the suspended sentences indeed appear lenient since the aggravating circumstances are strong. This is particularly true since Smith, Otto and van Staden, who actually carried out the poisoning, in terms of the plea bargain did not show proper remorse and rejected Chikane's requests to come forward. Another grave and aggravating

---

[362] Khulumani Support Group, press statement Khulumani Support Group rejects the finding of the Pretoria High Court today (Aug 17, 2007).

[363] S. v Johannes Velde van der Merwe en andere (Pretoria High Court) pleit en vonnisooreenkoms, 15 August 2007, at para. 6.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

fact is that they refused to take up the offer of indemnity by cooperating with the NPA in the prosecution of Basson. Instead they chose to support the defence of Basson, who had also been implicated in the murder attempt of Chikane. Neither of them applied for amnesty. The fact that they eventually came forward to disclose the particulars of their involvement to the PCLU can certainly be attributed to their imminent prosecution. However, consideration must be given to the fact that the three operatives were only the ones who carried out orders. Those behind the crime bear greater responsibility for it. In this regard, it is an achievement that the prosecutors managed to secure convictions of members of the higher echelons of power.

The suspended sentences of Vlok and van der Merwe can probably be attributed to the nature of their involvement and the PCLU's inability to present a strong case against them. It must be borne in mind that a plea bargain essentially depends on the State's assessment of the probable outcome of the case.[364] It has been pointed out that without the admissions of Vlok and van der Merwe, it would have been impossible to prosecute them. It has also been pointed out that their involvement was allegedly confined to passing on the order in its broadest sense to act against the listed apartheid opponents and setting up a group for this purpose. The murder attempt, however, only happened years later in 1989. Allegedly, van der Merwe and Vlok did not have knowledge of the actual operation against Chikane.[365] Furthermore, the PCLU was allegedly not even aware of their involvement. Likewise, the police officers Smit, van Staden and Otto could not have had knowledge of Vlok's and van der Merwe's involvement as commanders in the background in 1987, and, thus, could not have implicated them.[366] The PCLU, thus, had two choices: first, they could pursue charges against the three officers with uncertain prospects for securing a conviction in court and without charges being brought against Vlok and van der Merwe; second, they could go with the plea and sentence agreement

[364] E. Du Toit et al. Commentary on the Criminal Procedure Act service 35 (2006) § 105A 15–8.

[365] E-mail from Jan Wagener (Sep 13, 2007).

[366] Ibid.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

including all five. Obviously, the second choice seemed more promising. The suspended sentences of Otto, van Staden and Smith, thus, have to be seen as part of this overall agreement that included Vlok and van der Merwe. The whole plea bargain must further be seen in conjunction with the disclosure procedure in terms of the prosecution policy including all five concerned persons and the voluntary admissions of Vlok and van der Merwe.[367] Thus, on the one hand, the plea bargain was a by-product of this disclosure process and on the other hand it was a compromise since sufficient evidence was not available to sustain charges against Vlok and van der Merwe in a criminal trial.

Furthermore, there is not a compelling reason why suspended sentences should be detrimental to the principle of restorative and transitional justice. With regard to the three operatives, the prosecution of killings at the inner German border carried out by wall guards of the GDR proves that in terms of dealing with the systematic crimes of a past regime, it can be perfectly appropriate to hand down suspended sentences. 88.8% of custodial sentences that were handed down with regard to human rights violations at the border, such as manslaughter of persons illegally trying to cross the border, were covered by suspended sentences.[368] Specifically, in many manslaughter convictions, the sentence was suspended.[369] Suspended sentences were commonplace in cases where a low ranking officer was convicted. Sentences of high-ranking officers from the political and military spheres, however, were generally not suspended.[370] However, as has been pointed out, Vlok's and van der Merwe's inclusion to the plea agreement must be seen in the context of its own special circumstances.

The facts brought to bear raise the following questions: why did Vlok and van der Merwe admit to their involvement at all and why did they agree to plead guilty if there was not any solid evidence against them available to the NPA. According to their lawyer Jan Wagener, the two [367] See further on the connections with the guidelines procedure infra Chapter 3(3.4).

---

[368] K. Marxen and G. Werle Die strafrechtliche Aufarbeitung von DDR-Unrecht (1999) 212.

[369] Ibid. 214.

[370] Ibid. 24.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

took this step voluntarily and out of a moral urge to do so.[371] The police investigation only concentrated on the events of 1989. Allegedly Vlok and van der Merwe did not want to leave the three police officers to face charges alone as if there had not been any involvement in the background at the leadership level. Since they knew that there had been indications that there was involvement from those at a very high level before the murder attempt, they apparently felt it was the just thing to disclose the information, at least to a certain degree. In this regard, it is also important to note that at least van der Merwe and two of the accused former police officers are engaged together in an organisation acting on behalf of former security police members, which was also occasionally supported by Vlok.[372] This underlines the fact that it was their desire to help each other. The motivation was not to be included in a plea bargain but to support the three officers facing charges in their disclosure effort so that they would all be covered by a decision of the NDPP not to institute a prosecution as is permitted under the prosecution policy. The details of which will be dealt with below. It is difficult to see why there was not a decision against prosecution in the end since the NPA did not make any public announcements, which could have clarified the backgrounds of the proceeding. Van der Merwe and Vlok apparently had also intended and hoped for other former apartheid era security force authorities to follow their example and disclose their roles.[373] It should also be pointed out that the two were likely candidates for cooperation with the State since they were two of the very few apartheid era officials who had already cooperated during the TRC to a comparably high degree.[374] In a press statement Vlok and van der Merwe, accordingly, also announced that they had actually intended to apply for amnesty in this regard. However, since they only had limited knowledge of the incident and the main

---

[371] E-mail from Jan Wagener (Sep 13, 2007).

[372] See infra Chapter 3(1.1.2).

[373] E-mail from Jan Wagener (Sep 13, 2007).

[374] Vlok was the only apartheid minister to apply for amnesty. He applied for amnesty for the bombing of the South African Council of Churches, Khotso house and the COSATU trade unions headquarters (decisions no. AC/99/0349 and AC/99/0349).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

authors of the order, authorities from the SADF, strongly refused to cooperate with the TRC, an application was not considered possible in this regard.[375]

Nevertheless, the benefits of the plea bargain are very limited with respect to its potential to reveal more information about the background of criminal activities at the governmental and military command level. The plea bargain states that an order was issued to van der Merwe to act against apartheid opponents, possibly by killing them, which emanated from the SADF, acting on higher authority. The exact terms of the order were not disclosed. Also, the specific background is in no way clarified. There is no clarification about which authorities concretely issued the order concerning the hit list or on whose higher authority the SADF officials acted. Thus, the specific political background concerning the targeting of certain prominent opposition members is only dealt with peripherally, but is not fully clarified at all and the information contained in the document, in this regard, is absolutely minimal. Furthermore, regarding Vlok's and van der Merwe's involvement, all that is stated is that the implementation of the order was discussed and a special unit was set up. There is not any mention of the exact brief of the unit and the terms for the implementation of the order, which possibly might have entailed the systematic killing and/or intimidation of those contained in the list.

In a press release issued on the day the plea agreement was presented in court, Vlok and van der Merwe indicated that they had not known who exactly worked out and issued the order to act against certain opposition members and that their limited knowledge was fully disclosed to the PCLU and completely included in the plea agreement.[376] Nevertheless, one would expect that more details could certainly have been presented in the plea bargain document since there are no particulars at all on, for instance, those who participated in the meeting of 1987. It appears strange that Vlok, who was a minister and not someone simply obeying orders, did not have further information on the real [375] A. Vlok, J. van der Merwe, C. Smith, G. Otto and M. van Staden, press statement (Aug 17, 2007).

[376] Ibid.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

authors of the plan. It remains unclear whether another recognisable authority transmitted it to them. All that is stated is that the initial instructions were presumably issued by the then President PW Botha. It is also claimed that no other person except Chikane was injured or killed on the basis of this order.[377]

The fact that so little information has reached the public domain certainly leaves a bitter aftertaste. It is also rather disconcerting that none of the information seems to have been tested in court. Many questions remain unanswered. The proceeding only sheds marginal light on the basic fact that systematic criminal acts were based on concrete policies and orders at the highest state levels. Since the plea bargain nevertheless clearly indicates that other people with more authority were involved in this specific matter, one must expect the PCLU to conduct further proceedings in order to deal with the case in its entirety. However, for the reasons presented above and under the circumstances, the case is at least a positive step forward in terms of establishing accountability for crimes committed during apartheid.

10. Conclusion

The prosecution of apartheid era political crimes after the conclusion of the TRC is characterised by delay. During the roughly eleven years that have passed from the end of the TRC in 1998 up to the time of publishing, prosecutions have been sporadic and few in number. Only seven criminal proceedings have as yet been concluded, four of which resulted in a conviction, three in an acquittal of the accused. The PEBCO case is currently pending. Its prospects for a swift continuation are bleak due to the review litigation. Considering the number of cases arising from the TRC that could potentially have been pursued in the interim period of almost a decade, the results have been minimal.[378] A

[377] Ibid.

[378] Although the circumstances are certainly not easily comparable it is nevertheless interesting to note that the process of dealing with systematic crimes after the fall of the east German GDR has led to 420 judgments, including 289 convictions and 131 acquittals. A large proportion of the convictions, at least 98 concerning the

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

concentrated process of prosecutions to dispose of the matter within a restricted timeframe has not taken place.

As far as the central units are concerned, structural problems and minimal funding and resources accounted for the complete lack of progress on prosecutions between 1998 and 2003. While the D'Oliveira Unit of the 1990s constituted a well equipped team of experienced prosecutors and investigators with strong political support, support for TRC-related prosecutions after 1998 declined drastically. There was also a clear lack of continuity as none of the prosecutors of the Human Rights Investigative Unit had been involved with TRC cases before and there was not any interaction with the predecessor unit. Thereafter, as outlined above, the responsibility for TRC cases was assigned to inappropriate structures in the DSO.

It was also put forward by NPA officials that the many still running amnesty proceedings prevented the prosecutors from moving ahead. This, however, does not appear compelling, since there must also have been a number of cases, which were not the subject of amnesty proceedings, such as the Basson matter. Also, as the Amnesty Committee had finished its work in 2001, there still were no trials initiated for over two years. NPA officials then maintained that they would have to wait for the political response from the President to the TRC Report of 2003. However, there was no discernable legal obligation to halt criminal proceedings pending a political announcement, especially considering that as far back as 1998, both the TRC and President Mandela had clearly recommended prosecutions to take place.

After 2003 and with the inception of the PCLU the situation indeed improved. The senior members of the unit are very experienced in prosecuting political crimes committed during apartheid and were determined to push ahead with trials. Nevertheless, investigative resources and funding remain a major obstacle. Furthermore, the promising advances made by the PCLU were halted by political interventions in crimes at the inner German border, concerned gross human rights violations of state organs (See K. Marxen and G. Werle Die strafrechtliche Aufarbeitung von DDR-Unrecht (1999) 210).

---

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

late 2004. Thus, between its inception in 2003 and early 2008 only three cases were concluded, two of which, the Blani and Terre'Blanche cases, required very little effort.

Generally, two types of prosecutions can be identified. The first concerns those that were initiated independently by the regional prosecution offices, i.e. the Basson, Bisho-massacre, Luff and Tyani and Gumengu cases. Apart from the Basson matter, which emanated from an investigation that had been conducted by the D'Oliveira team in the 1990s, all of these trials resulted from criminal proceedings, which had already been initiated before or during the TRC and then suspended pending the disposal of amnesty applications. The proceedings were simply resumed by the regional prosecution offices at a later stage, without the involvement and sometimes even without the knowledge of the central units in Pretoria. The other set of cases was prosecuted by the PCLU. The unit initiated proceedings in the Terre'Blanche, PEBCO-Three, Blani and Chikane cases.

In fact, as far as a centralised effort to tackle post-TRC prosecutions is concerned, there have only been these four proceedings initiated by the PCLU. Thus, the assessment of prosecutions that resulted from a political or governmental effort to cope with post-TRC prosecutions through the centrally established units, is especially negative. During the interim period of almost one decade since the end of the TRC in 1998, such efforts only lead to those four proceedings being initiated, only three of which have been concluded thus far. It must also be pointed out that two of those were concluded as part of a plea and sentence agreement and a third, the Blani case, required very little effort. The achievements of the central units on post-TRC prosecutions, and thus, the achievements of the centralised approach, are therefore hardly noteworthy.

In four cases, the accused parties had not applied for amnesty for the crime in question. In all other cases amnesty had been applied for but denied. The prosecutions in the Basson, PEBCO-Three, Tyani/ Gumengu and Chikane cases are of specific significance since they concern cases of systematic state violence against opposition members.

Due to the small number of proceedings and the even smaller number of convictions, it cannot be said that accountability for apartheid era

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

political crimes has been furthered to any significant degree. In contrast to the trials before 1998, however, proceedings overwhelmingly concerned politically motivated criminal conduct. Nevertheless, no substantial amounts of new information on systematic crimes during the apartheid era were discovered.

The Basson case was of special importance since it dealt with a wide range of exceptionally egregious, politically motivated, gross human rights violations, which emanated from a systematic SADF programme. Victims range from hundreds of SWAPO captives and Mozambican citizens to high profile ANC members in exile. From the mere scope of the charges the proceedings had the potential to mark a very significant step forward in revealing facts on systematic apartheid crimes. However, the prosecution did not secure a conviction. The validity of the accusations was not confirmed. Definite conclusions, therefore, cannot be drawn from the trial. Moreover the case certainly had a deterrent effect on the general willingness to approach more cases, since the huge amount of resources and money, which was invested, eventually proved to be futile. Nevertheless, the case was dealt with by the Constitutional Court, which, to a certain degree, set out guidelines for the prosecution of TRC-related cases and at least tentatively analysed the matter in the context of international human rights and humanitarian law.[379]

The PEBCO-Three case concerned acts of torture, abduction and murder, in many instances committed by the security police. A number of similar cases had been investigated by the TRC. Most of the facts in this case had already been revealed during amnesty hearings. The [379] M. Swart 'The Wouter Basson prosecution: the closest South Africa came to Nuremberg?' (2008) 68/1 Heidelberg Journal of International Law 225–26, however, points out that the importance of international law in the judgment of the Constitutional Court should not be overestimated, since the legal substance of international law was still largely very foreign to the Court and to the prosecution, was in fact introduced to the litigation in a "last minute" move and handled rather awkwardly generally. Accordingly the Court has been criticised for missing a perfect opportunity to acknowledge the status of international law in South Africa and to apply it completely.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

potential for new information to emerge in a trial is rather limited, should the case continue.

Although the judgment concerning the Bisho-massacre trial also resulted in an acquittal, it nevertheless dealt extensively with the facts concerning the events and made statements regarding where responsibility lay for the crimes. However, the TRC also analysed the matter intensively. The findings of the TRC and of the Court conflict strongly, especially regarding the responsibility for the massacre. Thus, although additional analysis of the events has been made in the trial, it is now even more difficult to evaluate the events and the authority of both findings is, to a certain degree, rendered compromised.

The convictions in the Chikane case, however, were highly relevant to the political backgrounds and policies formed by high-ranking state and government officials concerning the practice of combating the liberation movement by criminal means. Concrete findings on the chain of command, linking government organs to criminal acts, were hardly established by the TRC. Unfortunately, the plea bargain in the Chikane case stops short of shedding light on the exact political responsibilities concerning the order to act against liberation movement leaders. It only indicates that the command stated that consideration should also be given to killing opponents. Nevertheless, the case indicates that criminal proceedings can generally contribute to clarifying the specific chain of command behind apartheid crimes. It remains to be seen if this development is taken further in other cases in order to clarify the responsibility of those at the command level.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-07 08:09:17.

Chapter Three

The Politics of Prosecutions

The question of how to deal with the legacy of the TRC in terms of criminal accountability is part of the overall process of transitional justice in South Africa. The issue is, as is generally the case with matters of transitional justice, to a great extent driven by and charged with political considerations. A former minister in the ANC government even demanded that the matter should be dealt with solely through political channels and not left to the courts.[1] Obviously, the success or failure of prosecutions in the wake of the TRC depends to a large degree on the political support for such proceedings. Moreover, prosecutions have an impact on society, are perceived totally differently politically and have consequences for reconciliation. As the political factors clearly have consequences for the overall process of criminal trials, any assessment of post-TRC prosecutions has to take account of the political context within which such trials find themselves. The following chapter will do just this by touching on the discussions and players, but mainly by focussing on consultations of the government with certain groups of perpetrators and the government's decisions and general policy on the issue.

1. Overview

The following subchapter will describe the main political and social interest groups engaged in advocacy for or against prosecutions. Also, a cursory overview of the political discussions and public debates along [1] Apartheid crimes a political issue—Maharaj SAPA, Aug 1, 2007.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

with a collection of government's most important statements on the subject will be given.

1.1 Interest groups

During the operation of the TRC a wide range of NGOs, especially from the human rights sector, actively took part in the process. The number of organisations engaged with the issue of post-TRC prosecutions after 1998 is minimal compared to this. However, especially groups and networks acting on behalf of former members of the state security forces continue to exist and remain influential. The most important organisations will be described briefly to provide a background to their involvement of different forms, which will be focussed on at a later stage.

1.1.1 Human rights organisations

Most NGOs, which are engaged in promoting human rights in South Africa and which supported the TRC and the transition to democracy, deal only occasionally with issues of criminal accountability in the wake of the TRC.

The Khulumani Support Group[2] is the NGO most actively engaged in advocacy efforts on post-TRC prosecutions. The Khulumani group, which was founded in 1995, represents about 54,000 victims of apartheid era violence. During the work of the TRC its efforts were aimed at helping victims to take part in and benefit from the TRC process. Nowadays, the organisation seeks the implementation of proper reparations[3] for apartheid victims, the full-scale prosecution of apartheid operatives and generally the recognition of victim interests in the wake of the TRC. Khulumani calls for apartheid criminals to be held accountable since only then can victims attain justice for their endurance of gross human [2] See http://www.khulumani.net.

[3] See on the reparations for apartheid victims as envisaged by the TRC scheme: K. Koppe Wiedergutmachung für die Opfer von Menschenrechtsverletzungen in Südafrika (2005).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

rights violations.[4] Generally, the amnesty process was perceived as a very generous offer to perpetrators and they suggest that it is now time for victims to demand their share of justice. Khulumani presses for more trials and gathers affidavits of victims including accounts of the human rights violations they had to endure and information on the respective perpetrators.[5] Such affidavits are intended for possible use in criminal trials. Moreover, these efforts are aimed at conserving the records on human rights violations which have yet to be accounted for.[6]

Another significant organisation involved in advocacy on post-TRC prosecutions is the Foundation for Human Rights.[7] The Foundation for Human Rights is a grant-supplying organisation, distributing funds to various human rights and social work projects in South Africa. It is involved in funding legal actions aimed at effecting the implementation of proper trials. The executive director of the Foundation for Human Rights, former TRC commissioner Yasmin Sooka, is one of the most vocal and active advocates for the implementation of post-TRC trials.

Apart from this, there are few human rights NGOs actively involved in advocacy efforts on post-TRC prosecutions. As such, the Centre for the Study of Violence and Reconciliation in Johannesburg[8] (hereinafter CSVR) and the Cape Town-based Institute for Justice and Reconciliation[9] are worth mentioning.

1.1.2 Security forces side

There are two organisations or structures representing former members of the security forces. Neither group has been represented often in the media or public. However, their influence on and involvement in consultations with the government is or was significant. One organisation was an alliance engaged in support for former members of the SADF. The other organisation is acting on behalf of former members of the

---

[4] Interview with Marjorie Jobson in Pretoria (May 9, 2006).

[5] Ibid.

[6] Ibid.

[7] See http://www.fhr.org.za.

[8] See http://www.csvr.org.za.

[9] See http://www.ijr.org.za.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

security police. Both groups were founded between the completion of the negotiations on the transition to democracy and the beginning of the TRC process. It was sensed that in the period of transitional justice it would be vital to form organised structures to react to prosecutions and TRC inquiries.

a. Kontak Buro

With regard to the SADF, an elite group of formerly high-ranking generals was formed to support former members of the military.[10] The group consisted of at least five to seven SADF generals, among them the former Chief of the SADF, General Jan Geldenhuys,[11] in a leading position and other prominent generals such as "Kat" Liebenberg and Georg Meiring. Also, the former Minister of Defence, General Magnus Malan and the former Chief of the SADF, General Constand Viljoen, occasionally took part in meetings of the group, apart from other former officers.

The group developed a structure to provide support for former soldiers of the SADF who, in connection with their occupation in the army, became involved with the TRC either because they were the subjects of investigations, implicated through amnesty applications, wished to apply for amnesty themselves, or were, directly or indirectly, affected by criminal investigations. The facility was called the Kontak Buro (Afrikaans for contact office). The Kontak Buro was basically a staffed office that could provide access to a certain support network, organise legal advice or counsel, provide financial support and advice SADF soldiers whether or not to apply for amnesty.[12]

The generals perceived the inquiries of the TRC into the activities of the SADF merely as a one-sided attack on the integrity of the SADF and [10] Unless otherwise stated, the following information concerning the SADF group is taken from an interview with Jan Geldenhuys in Pretoria on 10 May 2006.

[11] General Geldenhuys was Chief of the South African army from 1980 to 1985 and of the SADF from 1985 to 1990.

[12] The organisation was criticised by the TRC of having urged SADF members not to cooperate with the TRC, thus contributing to the general lack of cooperation with the TRC on the side of the SADF (See TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 3, chap. 1, paras. 22–23).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

its former members. The TRC was considered to be biased, unjust and untrustworthy.[13] Instead of cooperating with the process, the former SADF leadership felt responsible to defend themselves and their former colleagues against the perceived attack. Thus, apart from the initial focus on providing support to former SADF members, after the completion of the TRC in 1998 the group became involved in consultations with the government on the implementation of a further amnesty scheme in the wake of the TRC.

b. Foundation for Equality before the Law

For former members of the apartheid security police and generally for members of the police who had been involved in political conflicts, an organisation called the Foundation for Equality before the Law is actively engaged in support and advocacy efforts concerning prosecutions.[14] As the transition to democracy in South Africa was underway, and the decision had been reached to examine the atrocities of the apartheid past at the TRC, a support network was founded to react to the anticipated challenges for security force members. It contributed to this development, that the security police strongly felt that their former political superiors in the apartheid government had turned away from them and support was largely absent. Van der Merwe points out that F.W. de Klerk and Adriaan Vlok were exceptions in that they continued to support the interests of former security police operatives.

The members of the Foundation for Equality before the Law consist largely of former security police operatives.[15] It has reduced in membership size from considerably higher numbers during the TRC to about 30. Gideon Nieuwoudt, who was a main suspect in the PEBCO-Three case, was also a member of the Foundation for Equality before the Law. The management board consists mostly of formerly high-ranking

---

[13] See also TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 1, chap. 4, paras. 31–32.

[14] Unless otherwise stated, the following information on the organisation acting for former police members is taken from an interview with Johan van der Merwe in Pretoria on 5 May 2006.

[15] Yet the organisation is open to every state security force member who participated during the apartheid years in fighting the liberation struggle.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

officers of the SAP, among them apparently with van Staden, Otto and van der Merwe, three of the accused in the Chikane matter.[16]

As the organisation's name suggests, according to its mission declaration, the Foundation for Equality before the Law wants to ensure equality before the law for its members.[17] More precisely, according to the constituting mission declaration, the organisation's aim is to ensure for security force members and anyone who had been involved in the counter-revolutionary struggle comprehensive protection and fair treatment in the face of the TRC and criminal trials.[18] In practical terms, this means that the organisation, similar to the Kontak Buro, is aimed at providing legal and financial facilities to security police members who were concerned by amnesty applications or who have to face charges for their activities in the police. Thus the Foundation for Equality before the Law was most active during the operation of the TRC, when it advised and assisted former security police members with amnesty applications. Thereafter, its activities were increasingly directed at helping those avoid prosecution who had been denied amnesty or had not applied for amnesty. Since the TRC processes, the Pretoria-based advocate and former state attorney of the apartheid government Jan Wagener has been an important supporter and advisor, both legally and politically, on the organisation's purposes.[19] The political advocacy efforts of the Foundation for Equality before the Law are directed at pressing for the permanent cessation of any TRC-related prosecutions [16] However, the Foundation's chairperson Johan Botha comes from the civil sector. His deputy is General Johan van der Merwe. The Foundation's secretary is Major-General J.A. Steyn, formerly a high-ranking security police official in Natal. Other members of the management committee are J.H. le Roux, C. Colyn, H.D. Stadler, P.D. Uys, J.H. van Staden, D. Davidson, I.P. Minnaar, G. Otto and W.D. Pelser.

---

[17] That principle was unfortunately not pursued by the Foundation's members with equal vigour during the days of apartheid.

[18] Constitution and Mission Declaration of the Foundation for Equality before the Law.

[19] Jan Wagener very successfully acted as lawyer for many security police members seeking amnesty before the TRC. He continues to be the lawyer of a number of police who are in danger of being charged or who have already been charged and is politically involved to a significant extent.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

and for finding a solution as to how to avoid further trials. To this end, as will later be shown, after 1998 it engaged in discussions with the government.

The motivation to avoid prosecutions also derives from the deep-rooted conviction that the crimes, which were obviously committed by the police, occurred in warlike circumstances during which it was a just obligation to defend the state against the 'terrorist onslaught' of the liberation movement. Although it is often accepted that in many instances boundaries of legality were overstepped, there is little recognition that the security forces' measures could not be justified, since their very purpose, the maintenance of a system and state based on the racist suppression of millions of people, was deeply unjust and unlawful.[20] Against this background, many aligned to the Foundation for Equality before the Law perceive the TRC and prosecutions as biased and unfair and a simple case of victor's justice.

Obviously, the viewpoints and activities of the two organisations are largely similar. Yet there was never any attempt to coordinate their efforts, although the Foundation for Equality before the Law's doors are open to former SADF members. This separation was intended by the military generals, who maintained it on the basis that different legal circumstances applied for the operations of SADF members, who mostly operated abroad in situations where rules of international conflicts and war applied, whereas the security police mostly operated under secret circumstances in South Africa and were bound by South African laws.[21] Furthermore, the military felt less vulnerable to prosecutions and accordingly did not want to side with the police.[22]

---

[20] This conclusion derives from interviews with Jan Wagener in Pretoria on 8 May 2006 and Johan van der Merwe on 5 May 2006 in Pretoria as well as from H.D. Stadler The other side of the story (1997).

[21] Interview with Jan Geldenhuys in Pretoria (May 10, 2006). Compare also the question whether South African courts have jurisdiction to try crimes abroad (see supra Chapter 2(2.3)).

[22] Interview with Jan Geldenhuys in Pretoria (May 10, 2006). This is also reflected by the fact, that far lesser SADF members applied for amnesty at the TRC than members

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

1.2 Public debate

The public discussion in the aftermath of the TRC on accountability for politically motivated human rights violations has generally been very muted and was largely confined to a few interested and concerned NGOs.[23] Public awareness of issues concerning transitional justice in South Africa has markedly declined. Some commentators suggested that after the end of the TRC, the Commission's recommendations and the tasks arising out of its work, such as prosecutions and reparations, were almost completely disregarded and largely disappeared from the political agenda.[24] In public discussions on the matter, it is necessary to distinguish generally between the conservative faction, which is opposed to prosecutions, and the human rights faction, which is calling for more trials. However, specific debate often erupted on occasions of specific prosecution events. The two factions will be discussed in turn below.

1.2.1 The conservative spectrum and the call for even-handedness

The conservative political spectrum and parties representing a mainly white constituency assume a generally dismissive position towards prosecutions. Many, like the right wing Afrikaner party Freedom Front Plus, reject prosecutions completely.[25] Importantly, many organisations, such as the Democratic Alliance, the conservative F.W. de Klerk Foundation or the Freedom Front Plus constantly demand that prosecutions, should they take place, be 'even-handed' and equal.[26] Prosecutions as such must not only focus on former security force members but must also include of the security police, who were far more often concerned by prosecutions (V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 312–14).

---

[23] Interview with Piers Pigou in Johannesburg (May 6, 2006); N. Rousseau 'Prosecutions' in E. Doxtader (ed.) Provoking questions (2005) 37 at 46.

[24] M. Fullard and N. Rousseau 'An imperfect past: the Truth and Reconciliation Commission in transition' in J. Daniel et al., (eds.) State of the nation (2003) 78 at 86.

[25] Freedom Front Plus, press statement FF Plus says NPA must prosecute Mbeki and other ANC (Jan 25, 2006).

[26] Interview with Sheila Camerer in Cape Town (March 30, 2006); Freedom Front Plus, press statement FF Plus says NPA must prosecute Mbeki and other ANC (Jan 25, 2006); D. Stewart Panel presentation at the Institute for Justice and Reconciliation

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

ANC and other liberation movement members, maybe even President Mbeki himself. Even-handed prosecutions and applying equal standards is allegedly demanded by the constitution's principle of equality before the law.[27] The fact that between 1984 and 1994, thousands of people were killed as a result of liberation movement activities would have to be taken into account.[28] If prosecutions are one-sided, post-TRC trials could be perceived by the white population as an act of vengeance and as being political trials. This, thus, could lead to further alienation between the ethnic groups and impact negatively on reconciliation and nation-building.[29] The NPA's list of priority cases is cited as foundation for the suspicion that prosecutions will remain one-sided, as it allegedly does not contain members of the ANC and hardly any of the liberation movement.[30]

The request to halt TRC-related prosecutions is further substantiated with the negotiations and indemnity laws in the early 1990s.[31] There, the NP representatives were convinced that legislation for a general amnesty was possible. A conditional amnesty allegedly came unexpectedly and was found to be in conflict with the Interim Constitution. Furthermore, the former NP government had conceded to far-reaching indemnity laws on the basis of which thousands of ANC members had been released from prison or were indemnified for often very serious crimes. It is argued that this should also be used as a precedent for former security force personnel. However, against this background it would now be totally unjust to prosecute former apartheid security force members on a broad basis.[32] It was also suggested that trials conference 'The TRC: ten years on' (April 20, 2006); Interview with Johan van der Merwe in Pretoria (May 5, 2006).

---

[27] D. Stewart Panel presentation at the Institute for Justice and Reconciliation conference 'The TRC: ten years on' (April 20, 2006).

[28] Ibid.

[29] Ibid.; Nieuwoudt case will drive home a message Cape Times, Feb 13, 2004.

[30] E-mail from Sheila Camerer (June 13, 2006).

[31] F.W. de Klerk Amnesty rules for all Financial Mail, July 27, 2007 and D. Stewart Panel presentation at the Institute for Justice and Reconciliation conference 'The TRC: ten years on' (April 20, 2006).

[32] Ibid.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

could impact negatively on the national project of reconciliation since it might be perceived by the white population as a one-sided process and would certainly revive the conflicts of the past.[33]

1.2.2 Human rights and victim sector

After 1998, a very prominent member of the human rights sector made a very controversial comment on post-TRC prosecutions. In 1999, the former chair of the South African Human Rights Commission, Reverend Barney Pityana, called for all TRC-related prosecutions to be abandoned and for legislation to be enacted to impose a moratorium on all trials.[34] He suggested that trials would be likely to fail, thus be futile, such as the Malan trial. Trials would only open up old wounds of the past and would accordingly not serve the purposes of reconciliation and nation-building and would only consume time and resources far more urgently needed to tackle the high current crime rate. Although such statements are rather rare, it is likely, nevertheless, that they express typical and widespread concerns regarding prosecutions, especially of those in political circles.

However, after 1998 the former chairperson of the TRC, Archbishop Desmond Tutu, called strongly for the institution of criminal trials. He has continuously emphasised his view that the TRC legislation requires prosecutions to go ahead and that justice must be served concerning the rights of victims, who, in accepting the amnesty scheme, accepted a significant concession and are now entitled to demand accountability.[35] He is of the opinion that failure to prosecute those who had been denied amnesty subsequently would foster a culture of impunity and undermine the rule of law.[36] In 2004, Tutu also warned against the introduction

---

[33] Interview with Jan Wagener in Pretoria (May 8, 2006).

[34] Comments cited in D.B. Ntsebeza 'The uses of truth commissions' in R.I. Rotberg and D. Thompson Truth v. justice (2000) 158 at 166 and J. Battersby Call to stop apartheid prosecutions The Sunday Independent, July 24, 1999.

[35] Interview with Desmond Tutu in Cape Town (March 22, 2006).

[36] Ibid.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

of any kind of further indemnity or amnesty mechanism.[37] He accordingly welcomed the arrests in the PEBCO-Three case in early 2004 but, however, was critical in saying that generally, much more needed to be done on prosecutions.[38] The TRC's former deputy chairperson, Alex Boraine, in late 2006 also lamented the slow progress stating that the NPA and the government are far too slow and undedicated in their approach to post-TRC prosecutions.[39]

Generally, most organisations and people working in the human rights sector strongly call for prosecutions to take place and argue that more needs to be done to properly achieve accountability after the TRC. They are very aware of the slow and minimal progress of prosecutions and are extremely critical of the government's approach.[40] The government is often accused of being too hesitant, reluctant and unwilling to initiate prosecutions. The victim support organisation Khulumani has strongly criticised the government for utterly ignoring victims' interests in its approach to prosecutions.[41] It argues that far more criminal trials needed to be instituted[42] and that prosecutions are generally delayed too much and are taken haphazardly.[43] The Foundation for Human Right's executive director, former TRC commissioner Yasmin Sooka, has also criticised the government heavily for the delay in pushing ahead with

---

[37] C. Terreblanche Tutu warns against blanket amnesty The Sunday Independent, April 18, 2004.

[38] Tutu slates SA's lack of apartheid prosecutions SAPA, Dec 15, 2005.

[39] SA 'should try apartheid-era torturers' SAPA, Nov 25, 2006.

[40] A great number of the unanimous and wide-ranging points of criticism were voiced at a conference in 2006 commemorating the 10th anniversary of the first Human Rights Violations Committee hearing of the TRC (The TRC: ten years on, conference organised by the Institute for Justice and Reconciliation in Cape Town from 20 to 21 April 2006. See Institute for Justice and Reconciliation, Statement: the IJR conference on the TRC: ten years on (2006)). See for criticism of human rights organisations also: infra Chapter 3(3.5).

[41] Interview with Marjorie Jobson in Pretoria (May 9, 2006).

[42] M. Jobson Panel presentation at the Institute for Justice and Reconciliation conference 'The TRC: ten years on' (April 20, 2006).

[43] Interview with Marjorie Jobson in Pretoria (May 9, 2006).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

prosecutions.[44] She has argued that the lack of prosecutions is contributing to a culture of impunity.[45] Moreover, both organisations demand that prosecutions focus to a greater extent on higher echelons of the apartheid regime, i.e. politicians and generals of the old regime, rather than ordinary rank and file activists, such as Ronnie Blani.[46] As such, the former President FW de Klerk should also be held accountable for his presumed knowledge and involvement in apartheid crimes.[47] Criticism of the government's supposedly lame response to the TRC recommendations was even voiced by international organisations, such as Amnesty International and Human Rights Watch.[48]

The request for even-handed prosecutions and the proposition that it would amount to a gross injustice should the NPA focus primarily on prosecuting former security forces and apartheid government representatives is strongly rejected by organisations and people from the human rights sector.[49] It would be totally disingenuous to lament one-sided prosecutions since liberation movement activists were prosecuted extensively during apartheid. Thousands were tried and imprisoned because they fought for their liberation, over 100 were even executed for politically motivated offences.[50] In contrast, criminal accountability for the atrocities of the apartheid state has, as yet, been absolutely [44] Y. Sooka Letter to the minister of justice and constitutional development (Sep 8, 2005) (on file with author).

---

[45] Interview with Yasmin Sooka in Pretoria (May 3, 2006).

[46] Ibid.; Interview with Marjorie Jobson in Pretoria (May 9, 2006).

[47] Ibid.

[48] Amnesty International and Human Rights Watch, briefing paper Truth and justice: unfinished business in South Africa (Feb 2003).

[49] Interview with Madeleine Fullard in Pretoria (May 4, 2006); Interview with Yasmin Sooka in Pretoria (May 3, 2006); Interview with Piers Pigou in Johannesburg (May 6, 2006). See also C. Villa-Vicencio The TRC still has lessons for our future The Sunday Times, April 23, 2006.

[50] See M. Coleman (ed.) A crime against humanity (1998) 81–84 and TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 3, paras. 21–37 on death penalty; M. Coleman (ed.) A crime against humanity (1998) 77–80 on political imprisonment and M. Coleman (ed.) A crime against humanity (1998) 43–53 on detention without trial.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

minimal.[51] Against this background the priority of prosecuting crimes of the apartheid state needed to be far higher than for ANC and liberation movement members. It is also important to consider that Ronnie Blani, one of the first convictions in a post-TRC trial, was a former liberation movement member.

1.2.3 Debate erupting on the occasion of specific prosecutions

Public debate on the issue of post-TRC prosecutions in the media and political sphere always intensified around significant events, such as the presentation of the last TRC Report volumes in 2003 or the start of specific prosecutions. Tensions and debate at the time of prosecutions on a regional level were commonplace. For example, during the proceeding in the Luff case,[52] debates between the ethnic groups on ethnic and apartheid-related issues in the specific area were prevalent.

During the first proceedings in the PEBCO-Three case against former security police officers in 2004, some political representatives of the Afrikaner population criticised the arrests, claiming they were vindictive and could harm reconciliation.[53] Others from the victim and human rights sector welcomed them as the first major step towards post-TRC accountability.[54] However, the former head of the TRC research department and executive director of the NGO Institute for Justice and Reconciliation, Charles Villa-Vicencio, on the occasion of the PEBCO-Three prosecution also warned of certain dangers connected to prosecutions. In this regard, he was quoted as stating that the PEBCO-Three prosecution could cause unrest and could have serious implications for the process of nation-building and reconciliation.[55] As the accused persons in that case were ordinary rank and file officers, logically, the whole chain of command up to those who actually gave the orders, thus, those truly responsible, needed to be pursued in order

---

[51] See also supra Chapter 1(4.).

[52] See also supra Chapter 2(4.).

[53] 'Nieuwoudt case will drive home a message' Cape Times, Feb 13, 2004.

[54] Ibid.

[55] J.J. Joubert and A. Muller Versoening in gedrang Beeld, Feb 12, 2004.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

to do justice.[56] He substantiated these concerns by stating that although prosecutions were right in principle, if they failed to focus on all possible perpetrator groups and ranks, they could be regarded as one-sided and unbalanced, which could have implications for reconciliation between the ethnic groups.[57]

Ronnie Blani's trial and the judgment of April 2005 were criticised from various sides. Ackermann was heavily criticised by the relatives of the deceased for having agreed to a soft sentence.[58] The PCLU was also criticised by the ANC, former liberation movement activists and members of the human rights sector for having prosecuted Blani at all.[59] Such critics consider that Blani's prosecution should not have been a high priority. Considering his personal circumstances laid out above[60] and the fact that he was probably on the lowest tier of the liberation movement command structure, critics claim that the PCLU should make other cases a much higher priority, especially if they involve persons from the upper echelons of the security forces with far greater responsibility and individual guilt who in many cases are still not sentenced.[61]

There was also intense public scrutiny at the beginning of the court proceedings in the Chikane case in 2007. The Khulumani support group and many apartheid victims protested against the decision as being too weak and called for extended criminal trials for those responsible for the crimes committed by the apartheid security forces.[62] On the other hand, victims of ANC attacks and/or their relatives and other mem-

---

[56] C. Villa-Vicencio Let apartheid-era perpetrators be heard The Sunday Independent, Jan 29, 2006.

[57] E-mail from Charles Villa-Vicencio (May 31, 2006).

[58] Interview with Anton Ackermann in Pretoria (May 11, 2006).

[59] C. Terreblanche and A. Quintal NPA feels the heat on amnesty The Sunday Independent, Nov 28, 2004; Interview with Madeleine Fullard in Pretoria (May 4, 2006); Interview with Yasmin Sooka in Pretoria (May 3, 2006).

[60] See supra Chapter 2(8.).

[61] N. Rousseau 'Prosecutions' in E. Doxtader (ed.) Provoking questions (2005) 37 at 44–45. Interview with Madeleine Fullard in Pretoria (May 4, 2006).

[62] Vlok trial: different conclusions drawn SAPA, Aug 20, 2007; Theatre of differences outside Vlok trial SAPA, Aug 16, 2007.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

bers of organisations supporting the interests of the white population protested against the trial and demanded that ANC leaders should also be held accountable.[63]

1.3 Government and ANC statements

The South African government and the ANC have only rarely made public statements on the issue of post-TRC prosecutions. When the TRC's operation had come to an end in 1998, President Mandela strongly emphasised that criminal trials must start within a fixed time frame[64] which > …needs to be realistic, taking into account how long it takes for evidence to be secured and preparations made for successful prosecution. Yet a time frame for this process is necessary; for we cannot afford as a nation and as government, to be saddled with unending judicial processes which can easily bog down our current efforts to resolve problems of the present.[65]

Mandela added that:

> These matters will of course be handled by the Office of the National Director of Prosecutions. And we believe that in discharging this responsibility the Director will take into account not only the critical need to establish accountability and the rule of law, but also to advance reconciliation and the long-term interests of our country.[66]

He further pointed out that:

> …[W]e are not contemplating a general amnesty under any guise. Such an approach would go against the grain of the very process that we all

---

[63] Ibid.

[64] See text accompanying supra Chapter 1 note 58.

[65] Opening address by President Nelson Mandela in the special debate on the report of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (National Houses of Parliament) (Feb 25, 1999).

[66] Ibid.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

> agreed upon; it would undermine the culture of accountability that we seek to engender.[67]

Thereafter government politicians were rather reticent on the subject. However, the then Deputy President, Thabo Mbeki, had already indicated in early 1999 that a new amnesty could nevertheless be considered as he stated in an address to parliament his dismissive view towards prosecutions that:

> Quite a lot of people in KwaZulu-Natal did not apply [for amnesty] and with the level of violence that took place in that province, if you dig and dig and dig, you are going to have to arrest a lot of people. That can't be right. A number of generals in the SA Defence Force are very keen that this matter be dealt with, because their own sense, too, is that there may very well be significant numbers of people in the former SADF who didn't apply, and again, with regards to them, it would not be right week after week to charge people with something that happened in 1987.[68]

Moreover in May 2002, Mbeki, who had meanwhile become president, pardoned 33 prisoners who were aligned to the ANC and PAC.[69] Most of them had been sentenced for politically related offences, two-thirds had either been denied amnesty or not applied for amnesty.[70] At the ANC's national conference in December 2002[71] the discussion of guidelines for a broad national amnesty, possibly in the form of presidential pardons, was scheduled.[72] According to the head of the ANC presidency, Smuts Ngonyama, the ANC generally supported the idea to introduce a new amnesty law.[73] However the proposals on the ANC's national conference were strongly motivated by the volatile situation in KwaZulu-Natal and

---

[67] Ibid.

[68] Cited in J. Klaaren and H. Varney 'A second bite at the amnesty cherry?' in C. Villa-Vicencio and E. Doxtader (eds) The provocations of amnesty (2003) 265 at 265.

[69] S. Ngesi 'The presidential pardons and the media' in C. Villa-Vicencio and E. Doxtader (eds) The provocations of amnesty (2003) 294 at 294.

[70] Ibid.

[71] The ANC's 51st national conference took place from 16 to 20 December 2002 in Stellenbosch.

[72] P. Dickson ANC to seek broad national amnesty Cape Times, Dec 11, 2002.

[73] Ibid.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

the fact that many IFP members did not receive amnesty.[74] Ngonyama nevertheless subsequently declared that his party was generally against running trials in the style of the Nuremberg trials, since this would occur at the cost of nation-building.[75]

Such developments and statements triggered speculation in the public that the government intended to enact another amnesty law in the wake of the TRC.[76] Some even claimed a general amnesty for the crimes relating to the apartheid conflict was considered.[77] However, in his speech at the tabling of the TRC Report in April 2003, Mbeki eventually ruled out the possibility that a general amnesty would be introduced and took up a strong and seemingly unequivocal stance for prosecutions as he stated that

> …there shall be no general amnesty. Any such approach, whether applied to specific categories of people or regions of the country, would fly in the face of the TRC process and subtract from the principle of accountability which is vital not only in dealing with the past, but also in the creation of a new ethos within our society.[78]

He went further to stress that 'Government is of the firm conviction that we cannot resolve this matter by setting up yet another amnesty process, which in effect would mean suspending constitutional rights of those who were the receiving end of gross human right violations.'[79] He stated that it is 'in the hands of the National Directorate of Public Prosecutions, for it to pursue any cases that, as is normal practice, it

---

[74] Ibid.

[75] L. Fernandez 'Post-TRC prosecutions in South Africa' in G. Werle (ed.) Justice in transition (2006) 65 at 71.

[76] J. Klaaren and H. Varney 'A second bite at the amnesty cherry?' in C. Villa-Vicencio and E. Doxtader (eds) The provocations of amnesty (2003) 265 at 265; J. Steinberg Amnesty quandary looms for judges Business Day, June 8, 1999.

[77] P. Pigou Unfinished business Mail & Guardian, Sep 21, 2002; Victim's to fight amnesty Mail & Guardian, June 7, 2002.

[78] Statement by President Mbeki to the National Houses of Parliament and the Nation, at the Tabling of the Report of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (April 15, 2003).

[79] Ibid.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

believes deserve prosecution and can be prosecuted.'[80] However, he also made rather vague remarks, which indicate that other political factors will have to be considered in any approach to post-TRC prosecutions, stating that the government

> …should continue to establish the truth about networks that operated against the people. This is an obligation that attaches to the nation's security today; for, some of these networks still pose a real or latent danger against our democracy. In some instances, caches of arms have been retained which lend themselves to employment in criminal activity.[81]

The President concluded that the NPA

> …will leave its doors open for those who are prepared to divulge information at their disposal and to co-operate in unearthing the truth, for them to enter into arrangements that are standard in the normal execution of justice, and which are accommodated in our legislation.[82]

He further stated that 'in each instance where any legal arrangements are entered into between the NDPP and particular perpetrators as proposed above, the involvement of the victims will be crucial in determining

---

[80] Ibid.

[81] Ibid.

[82] Ibid. This announcement has led to considerable confusion. In its wake various media reports referred to a new deal on indemnity provisions for apartheid era perpetrators and a new mechanism of disclosure (See e.g. C. Terreblanche New deal for apartheid abuse perpetrators The Sunday Independent, April 20, 2003). In fact no specific arrangement had been made. Van der Merwe shortly after the speech contacted the NPA in order to find out what new process could be meant. The NPA was totally unaware of any new arrangements and what the President was actually referring to (Interview with Johan van der Merwe in Pretoria (May 5, 2006)). The NPA obviously had not been advised on the intentions behind the announcement. The arrangements Mbeki was referring to probably concern the normal instruments of plea-bargaining and state witness arrangements (see sections 105A and 204 of the Criminal Procedure Act). As such it is noteworthy that, only years later, with the Chikane case for the first time a plea bargain arrangement was entered into, which also included that the accused disclose information and cooperate in further trials (see supra Chapter 2(9.)).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

the appropriate course of action.'[83] Such statements will later be put into context with regard to the governmental perspective concerning its actual approach towards prosecutions.

In 2007, there were announcements made regarding yet another pardon process concerning liberation movement members convicted of political crimes related to the apartheid conflict.[84]

2. Bargaining Over the TRC's Legacy

In 2002, rumours on secret consultations between former generals of the SADF and the government were highlighted in the media.[85] The South African government and the ANC did indeed engage in secret talks and consultations with representatives of the SADF and the security police over a long period from the end of the TRC in 1998 until about early 2004. Two separate processes of consultations concerning the two factions of the former security establishment took place.[86] Details of the secret meetings were never disclosed to the public.[87] As will later be outlined, the common denominator of the talks was that a legislative solution should be reached on how to avoid prosecutions in the wake of the TRC. The consultations are indicative of the real motivations and political considerations of the government during the years after the end of the TRC in 1998 and also provide valuable background information for the evaluation of later developments.

---

[83] Statement by President Mbeki to the National Houses of Parliament and the Nation, at the Tabling of the Report of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (April 15, 2003).

[84] Presidential pardons in the spotlight SAPA, Nov 15, 2007.

[85] M. Fullard and N. Rousseau 'An imperfect past: the Truth and Reconciliation Commission in transition' in J. Daniel et al. (eds) State of the nation (2003) 78 at 93; P. Pigou Unfinished business Mail & Guardian, Sep 21, 2002.

[86] Interview with Jan Geldenhuys in Pretoria (May 10, 2006); Interview with Johan van der Merwe in Pretoria (May 5, 2006).

[87] P. Pigou Unfinished business Mail & Guardian, Sep 21, 2002.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

2.1 Consultations with the security police

During and after the operation of the TRC, the Foundation for Equality before the Law occasionally conducted talks with the government concerning the amnesty proceedings and general questions of accountability.[88] Especially after the main work of the TRC was completed in 1998, consultations concerning post-TRC accountability were conducted, which mostly involved high-ranking members of the government. On behalf of the former apartheid state employees and the Foundation for Equality before the Law, former President F.W. de Klerk assumed a central role in the consultations. De Klerk often consulted with President Mbeki directly or with other high-ranking members of the government. Apart from that the organisation was in contact with various other government officials and submitted proposals.

The Foundation for Equality before the Law's aim in the consultations was to find a solution to avoid the prosecution of former members of the security police who had not received amnesty. Allegedly, legislation for a general amnesty was never requested. A general amnesty would certainly have served the organisation's purposes in avoiding trials. However, it was clear that a general amnesty was not an option since it would have seriously damaged the TRC process and its scheme of conditional amnesties and would thus not have been feasible politically. Accordingly other legislative options had to be explored. After 1998, the Foundation for Equality before the Law initially advocated a procedure, which envisaged that indemnity from prosecution could be granted, if all details regarding the crime in question were disclosed. This would therefore have reproduced the TRC's precondition of amnesty subject to a full disclosure. The proposal was later altered so that the granting of indemnity would be dependent only on the crime in question falling within the legal ambit of section 20(1) of the TRC Act. This would mean that the act was associated with a political objec-

[88] Unless otherwise stated, the information laid out in this subchapter comes from an interview with Johan van der Merwe in Pretoria on 5 May 2006. The consultations were conducted in strict confidentiality. Apart from the broad framework, details concerning negotiations with security police members could thus not be provided.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

tive and was committed in the course of the conflicts of the past.[89] The proposal was quite similar to the indemnity laws of the early 1990s.[90] It was proposed that a full disclosure in terms of the TRC Act should not be required since the amnesty proceedings had shown that there were still many uncertainties as to when a full disclosure was in fact made.[91] According to the proposal, such indemnity proceedings should be conducted before a judge.[92]

Although among members of the Foundation for Equality before the Law the government had raised expectations that a solution according to the proposals was desirable, no agreement was reached. The talks continued until about 2004. The consultations had allegedly highlighted the government's lack of political will to adequately react to the TRC's recommendations on prosecutions, which also explains the huge delay in initiating trials.[93]

2.2 Consultations with the generals

More or less concurrently with the consultations with the police representatives, starting in 1998, the government conducted talks with a group of high-ranking former generals of the SADF.[94] Initially, the former chief of the SADF, General Constand Viljoen[95] was approached by one of the leading members of the ANC and government at that time, Jacob Zuma,[96] with the aim of consulting over questions of criminal

---

[89] E-mail from Johan van der Merwe (May 31, 2006).

[90] See supra Chapter 2 note 297.

[91] E-mail from Johan van der Merwe (May 31, 2006).

[92] Ibid.

[93] Interview with Jan Wagener in Pretoria (May 16, 2006).

[94] Interview with Jan Geldenhuys in Pretoria (May 10, 2006).

[95] After his career in the SADF, Viljoen went into politics as the co-founder and leader of the right-wing Afrikaner party Vryheitsfront (the predecessor of the Freedom Front Plus) and was a member of parliament (See P. van Niekerk and B. Ludman (eds) A-Z of South African politics 1999 (1999) 83–84 and 302–3).

[96] The later deputy President of South Africa was at the time mainly involved in regional politics of his home province KwaZulu-Natal (See P. van Niekerk and B. Ludman (eds) A-Z of South African politics 1999 (1999) 317–18).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

accountability in the wake of the TRC.[97] Viljoen, however, considered that such matters were better discussed with the group of former SADF generals who had established the support network for former soldiers and the Kontak Buro,[98] who were, thus, already working intensely on amnesty issues and prosecutions. He immediately referred Zuma to the network group of generals around Geldenhuys.[99]

2.2.1 The process of meetings

General Geldenhuys agreed to meet with Zuma. A series of frequent meetings, negotiations and consultations ensued from 1998. The main process of consultations was conducted over four years until early 2003.[100] A small number of meetings, however, infrequently continued until 2004.[101] The consultations were, like the security police consultations, generally aimed at finding a mutual solution as to how to avoid trials after the TRC through new indemnity mechanisms.[102] The talks were mediated and facilitated by Johannesburg businessman Jürgen Kögl, who is closely connected to leading ANC members, especially to Jacob Zuma. All meetings took place strictly separated from the meetings with the police, which was in the interest of the generals.[103]

Zuma was asked to conduct the talks on behalf of the government or ANC.[104] Apart from him, various other high-ranking members of the ANC, such as the then Minister of Justice Penuell Maduna or Mathew Sposa, Sidney Mufamadi and Charles Nqakula also participated occasionally. On various occasions Thabo Mbeki was also present, as Vice

---

[97] Interview with Jan Geldenhuys in Pretoria (May 10, 2006).

[98] See supra Chapter 3(1.1.2).

[99] Interview with Jan Geldenhuys in Pretoria (May 10, 2006).

[100] Interview with Jürgen Kögl in Johannesburg (May 12, 2006).

[101] Ibid.

[102] Interview with Jürgen Kögl in Johannesburg (May 12, 2006); Interview with Jan Geldenhuys in Pretoria (May 10, 2006).

[103] Interview with Jan Geldenhuys in Pretoria (May 10, 2006).

[104] Interview with Jürgen Kögl in Johannesburg (May 12, 2006). Since in practice the distinction between ANC and government concerning the negotiations was often blurred, the two expressions will be used synonymously.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

President and later in his capacity as the President.[105] On the side of the generals, Jan Geldenhuys assumed a leading role. He participated along with two to four other generals belonging to their support group. Both sides were accompanied by legal advisors. The main process of consultations came to an end in or about early 2003. Only as a matter of courtesy did a few meetings continue to take place until 2004.[106]

2.2.2 Motivation of the government

The main catalyst for Zuma's approach to the generals was the still very volatile political situation in KwaZulu-Natal, which was due to prolonged political tensions between supporters of the ANC and IFP during the late 1990s.[107] Zuma was at that time successfully conducting mediation and appeasement efforts between the two political factions of the ANC and IFP in order to contain possible fresh occurrences of violence.[108] The question of accountability for political crimes in the wake of the TRC was considered to be a critical issue in this regard.[109] As a great amount of politically motivated human rights violations had occurred in the conflict between IFP and ANC, especially during the negotiation period between 1990 and 1994, and considering that many IFP members accused of such crimes had not applied for amnesty, it was feared that the release of the TRC Report and prosecutions in its wake could stir up conflict again and be a constant source of unrest in the region.[110] On top of that, the second democratic elections were imminent and it was crucial to avoid new conflicts flaring up.[111] The initial intention was, thus, to create an amnesty scheme which would specifically cover the political crimes that happened between ANC and

---

[105] Interview with Jan Geldenhuys in Pretoria (May 10, 2006).

[106] Interview with Jürgen Kögl in Johannesburg (May 12, 2006).

[107] Ibid.

[108] P. van Niekerk and B. Ludman (eds) A-Z of South African politics 1999 (1999) 317. See also supra Chapter 1(2.).

[109] Interview with Jan Geldenhuys in Pretoria (May 10, 2006); Interview with Jürgen Kögl in Johannesburg (May 12, 2006).

[110] Interview with Jürgen Kögl in Johannesburg (May 12, 2006).

[111] Telephone interview with Jürgen Kögl (June 14, 2006).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

IFP supporters in KwaZulu-Natal.[112] Yet it was clear that, regarding the constitutional framework and the political implications for the TRC amnesty scheme, a purely local solution would be almost impossible to implement. The generals also categorically refused to support a regionally confined amnesty process.[113]

They were contacted on this specific issue for various reasons. According to Kögl, the government intended to ensure support of other influential groups and important role-players of the apartheid regime, such as the generals, in order to put any possible solution, even if initially mainly focussing on KwaZulu-Natal, on a wider national basis.[114] The generals were already dealing with amnesty issues, had legal expertise, and as such, were relevant candidates to be canvassed for such support.

There was also a range of other specific reasons why the generals were contacted. According to Kögl, one reason for the government's initiative was the SADF's, and therefore the general's alleged involvement in the KwaZulu-Natal conflicts between the IFP and ANC.[115] During the TRC process the former top command of the SADF was accused of having fuelled the conflict between the ANC and IFP during and before the negotiations towards a transition to democracy, in order to weaken the position of the ANC. Allegations were made that weapons and expertise had been supplied to Zulu fighters. There were strong signs that a so-called "third force", established and steered by the security forces, had fuelled the atrocities committed by IFP supporters against ANC supporters, not only in Natal but also to a great extent in the Transvaal areas.[116] There were strong indications of SADF involvement in such activities, such as had been thxe case when weapons were supplied to [112] Interview with Jan Geldenhuys in Pretoria (May 10, 2006); Interview with Jürgen Kögl in Johannesburg (May 12, 2006).

[113] Interview with Jan Geldenhuys in Pretoria (May 10, 2006).

[114] Interview with Jürgen Kögl in Johannesburg (May 12, 2006).

[115] Telephone interview with Jürgen Kögl (June 14, 2006).

[116] See TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 4, appendix, paras. 1–43; TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 7, paras. 497–551; TRC Report, vol. 5, chap. 6, paras. 126–29.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

the Inkatha Caprivi trainees.[117] Geldenhuys and other generals had been charged in 1995 for their alleged involvement in these Caprivi activities and the KwaMakutha massacre.[118] The government, when approaching the generals, was mindful of the fact that the SADF had supplied the Zulu fighters with weapons on a large scale and that the locations of a number of the hidden weapons caches, which had been established in the region during the last apartheid years, remain as yet unknown.[119] Government officials were wary that the generals could still possess knowledge of such still hidden and unknown weapons caches, established during the late 1980s and early 1990s, that they could, thus, still exercise negative influence on the peace process between IFP and ANC and that they could generally, through the possible third force networks, in some way thwart appeasement attempts or contribute to a re-ignition of the conflict.[120] These factors were allegedly a major reason for integrating the generals in any future approach to post-TRC accountability, to contain their potentially negative influence.[121] Such considerations are also clearly indicated in the aforementioned speech by President Mbeki.[122]

It was also considered that the TRC process suffered from a lack of sufficient findings on SADF activities, especially concerning those that took place in South Africa.[123] Very few SADF members had applied for amnesty, despite the fact that the SADF was involved in many gross human rights violations.[124] The SADF leadership practically refused

---

[117] TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 4, appendix, para. 18.

[118] See supra Chapter 1(4.).

[119] Telephone interview with Jürgen Kögl (June 14, 2006).

[120] Ibid.; Interview with Jürgen Kögl in Johannesburg (May 12, 2006).

[121] Ibid. Whether the generals really had any potential to thwart the appeasement attempts in KZN remains unclear. Geldenhuys insists that the generals neither would engage in any kind of violent activity nor would they have any special knowledge of weapons caches or have the resources to exercise negative influence on mediation efforts in KwaZulu-Natal.

[122] See text accompanying supra Chapter 3 note 81.

[123] Interview with Jürgen Kögl in Johannesburg (May 12, 2006); Telephone interview with Jürgen Kögl (June 14, 2006).

[124] TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 3, chap. 1, para. 4.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

completely to cooperate with the TRC. There were no disclosures made on the involvement in violence during the negotiation period.[125] In this regard the TRC also referred to certain networks with access to weapons and resources.[126] As it was unable to establish the extent of such networks, the TRC stated that it would be essential to investigate the involvement of the police and military in third force activities more closely.[127] The government had this in mind when it approached the generals. The aim was also to work out proposals to satisfy the generals' desire to avoid prosecutions of SADF members and to create mechanisms for cooperation and disclosures on still uncovered secret SADF activities, in order to compensate for the lack of TRC findings in this regard.[128]

Another factor was the government's fear that South Africa could be exposed to claims for reparation and damages by countries, which had been attacked by the apartheid state.[129] The territorial integrity of various neighbouring countries had frequently been violated by illegal invasions of the SADF.[130] Angola, for instance, suffered enormous damages due to the war that was waged by South Africa and due to the massive support the apartheid government provided to the rebel movement UNITA.[131] Apparently, during the late 1990s neighbouring governments had discussed the issue of reparation claims against South Africa concerning the activities of the SADF. The government, thus, tried not to fuel such discussions by prosecuting SADF members for

---

[125] Ibid., s. 4, appendix, para. 7.

[126] Ibid., para. 33.

[127] Ibid., paras. 42–43.

[128] Interview with Jürgen Kögl in Johannesburg (May 12, 2006).

[129] The TRC found that the military strategy of South Africa during the times of Apartheid was guided by the principles of pre-emptive interventionism and counter-revolutionary warfare (TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 2, para. 6). It further for instance found that the SADF committed a great amount of gross human rights violations e.g. in its war against Angola (TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 2, para. 72).

[130] TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 2, para. 48.

[131] Ibid., paras. 70–72.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

the atrocities caused in other countries.[132] In this regard, the aim was to make sure that full-scale criminal trials did not go ahead.

Yet another aspect was that the government tried to avoid a drain of military competence and intelligence from South Africa to other African countries.[133] In the process of establishing an effective army for the new democratic South Africa, it was absolutely vital to ensure the support and expertise of former officers and generals of the apartheid state's SADF. Moreover, a number of other African countries were apparently very keen to engage officials of the SADF as advisors on improving their respective armies.[134] The South African government thus wished to avoid former SADF generals and military experts being driven away from South Africa, should SADF activities be investigated and tried on a large scale.[135]

Furthermore, the intention was to avoid setting precedents concerning criminal liability for military operations.[136] The army of the new democratic South Africa, the SANDF, at that time had increasingly become involved in peace keeping and military operations throughout Africa. The government was concerned that trials concerning military operations of the former apartheid-state's defence force, the SADF, could negatively impact on SANDF operations, in that they might lead to legal uncertainty concerning the legality of certain measures.[137] Precedents in terms of what actions by soldiers engaged in conflict situations can lead to criminal liability were to be avoided.[138] The government wanted to ensure that the effectiveness of the South African army and its capacity to act was not tainted by any kind of legal uncertainty.[139] Thus, military operations were to be generally kept out of criminal trials. However, the notion that the SADF generals would in any way be

---

[132] Interview with Jürgen Kögl in Johannesburg (May 12, 2006).
[133] Ibid.
[134] Ibid.
[135] Ibid.
[136] Ibid.
[137] Telephone interview with Jürgen Kögl (June 14, 2006).
[138] Ibid.
[139] Ibid.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

willing and capable of instigating any kind of violent uprising against the new South African state is, allegedly, completely unfounded.[140]

The consultations generally have shown that the government is not at all keen to promote post-TRC prosecutions. Rather it has indicated its desire to leave the apartheid past behind as quickly as possible, in order to move forward towards a stable and reconciled nation and to avoid thwarting the project of nation-building by costly and extensive trials, which constantly bring up the atrocities and injustices of the past.[141] According to Geldenhuys, Zuma underlined this quite clearly when during one of the meetings he emphasised that prosecutions were not in the interest of the government as this could destroy some of the good effects the TRC had on nation-building and reconciliation. The issue needed to be dealt with in a political manner, rather than by the NPA.[142]

In summary, the government tried to work out some kind of legal mechanism, by which to generally avoid convictions, specifically concerning crimes committed in the conflict between IFP and ANC and concerning the SADF and simultaneously to create a mechanism by which to uncover more information that was not uncovered by the TRC.

2.2.3 Interest of the generals

Regarding the interest of the generals in the negotiations, it has often been claimed that, considering the many atrocities and criminal offences of the SADF which have not yet been dealt with properly, a general amnesty or convenient deal had been requested.[143] Yet a general amnesty was allegedly neither proposed nor discussed, especially not one that

---

[140] Ibid.; Interview with Jan Geldenhuys in Pretoria (May 15, 2006).

[141] Interview with Jürgen Kögl in Johannesburg (May 12, 2006); E-mail from Jürgen Kögl (June 26, 2006).

[142] Interview with Jan Geldenhuys in Pretoria (May 10, 2006).

[143] Interview with Yasmin Sooka in Pretoria (May 3, 2006); Victims to fight amnesty Mail & Guardian, June 7, 2002; P. Pigou Unfinished business Mail & Guardian, Sep 21, 2002; C. Carter No truth for the thousands of apartheid dead Cape Argus, April 8, 2006.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

would only cover the generals.[144] From the outset it was rather clear that a general amnesty would not square with the TRC scheme on amnesty. A less overt and again, somehow conditional indemnity scheme was also in the generals' interest.[145] However, the generals were obviously interested in securing a convenient agreement in the interest of their former subordinates and in their own interest, which would diminish the chances that former SADF members would be charged for their involvement in SADF operations.[146] As most SADF members had been very suspicious of the TRC process, which was perceived to be biased, the generals sensed they could now take part in working out a, in their eyes, fairer procedure.[147] Furthermore, after the TRC, the general attitude towards the activities of the SADF was perceived to be unreasonably negative and hostile. The TRC's findings in its report were perceived to be an unjustified attack on the SADF's integrity.[148] When entering into consultations with the government the generals were motivated by the opportunity to correct the perceived wrong image of their activities in another forum.[149]

2.2.4 Results

The aim of the government was to take the amnesty legislation of the TRC as a reference point and try to establish a new mechanism adapted to the previous amnesty legislation.[150] The mechanism had to apply to the whole of the country and could not be limited to the province of

---

[144] Interview with Jürgen Kögl in Johannesburg (May 12, 2006); Interview with Jan Geldenhuys in Pretoria (May 15, 2006).

[145] Telephone interview with Jürgen Kögl (June 14, 2006).

[146] Interview with Jan Geldenhuys in Pretoria (May 10, 2006).

[147] Interview with Jan Geldenhuys in Pretoria (May 15, 2006).

[148] Interview with Jan Geldenhuys in Pretoria (May 10, 2006). The top commanders never made an effort to acknowledge the brutal atrocities which had been caused by the SADF. It also never properly participated in TRC hearings which would have given the SADF command an occasion to defend against perceived unjustified allegations.

[149] Interview with Jan Geldenhuys in Pretoria (May 15, 2006); Interview with Jürgen Kögl in Johannesburg (May 12, 2006).

[150] Interview with Jürgen Kögl in Johannesburg (May 12, 2006).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

KwaZulu-Natal. By the end of 2002, the consulting parties had agreed on a detailed proposal for the enactment of a legal mechanism practically amounting to a new amnesty law.[151] It envisaged a legal concept according to which a special plea on amnesty would be introduced as an amendment to the Criminal Procedures Act.[152] The solution on how to deal with criminal accountability in the wake of the TRC should, thus, be embedded in the normal court procedures. After the agreement was reached, the consultations were practically concluded and only continued with the participation of Zuma and Minister of Justice, Maduna, on an infrequent basis as a matter of courtesy and to conduct a rather general exchange of thoughts on the topic until 2004.[153]

The solution provided that perpetrators of politically motivated offences falling within the ambit of the TRC Act should not principally be exempted from criminal liability.[154] In case they are criminally charged, an alleged perpetrator who had not received amnesty by the TRC could then in the criminal trial launch a special plea on amnesty. Once such a plea was launched, a special inquiry by the judge embedded in the normal public criminal trial should ensue. Should the plea for amnesty succeed, the trial needed to result in an acquittal of the accused.[155] The envisaged preconditions for a successful plea on amnesty were that the criminal offence in question needed to satisfy exactly the same test which was outlined as a precondition to the granting of amnesty according to the TRC Act. It, thus, had to be committed within the fixed time frame applicable for the TRC Act and had to be connected with a political objective and committed in the course of the conflicts of the past etc.[156] Furthermore, the alleged perpetrator would then have to make a full disclosure before the court in order to succeed with the plea.[157] Whether the criteria are satisfied should be [151] Ibid.; Interview with Jan Geldenhuys in Pretoria (May 10, 2006).

[152] Ibid.
[153] Interview with Jürgen Kögl in Johannesburg (May 12, 2006).
[154] Ibid.; Interview with Jan Geldenhuys in Pretoria (May 10, 2006).
[155] Ibid.
[156] Ibid.
[157] Telephone Interview with Jürgen Kögl (June 14, 2006).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

subject to the scrutiny of the judge and other participants as is normal procedure in a criminal trial.[158] If the plea would not succeed, the trial would resume.[159]

The solution that was agreed upon at the consultations of the generals and the government, thus, embodied an exact replication of the TRC amnesty scheme. The only difference was that the competence to decide on the granting of indemnity would rest with an ordinary criminal court and not with a special committee such as the Amnesty Committee of the TRC. The idea to introduce a special plea on amnesty to criminal procedure law was not at all new. Before the TRC process began, the NP launched a similar proposal aimed at extending the amnesty regime by the same means.[160]

By late 2002 the proposal had been worked out in great detail by the Justice Department and was practically ready to be presented to Parliament for enactment.[161] The public was neither informed of the existence of the proposal nor of details thereof. By the end of 2002, it was first put forward for the consideration of President Thabo Mbeki. The implementation of the proposal depended on the decision of President Mbeki.[162] In early 2003 it was eventually rejected by President Mbeki.[163] The President apparently did not expressly communicate to the consultation group of generals and ANC government representatives that he rejected the draft law. However, his announcements in the speech at the tabling of the TRC Report in Parliament in April 2003 effectively and unmistakably signalled to the consulting parties a rejection of their proposal on another round of indemnity legislation.[164] As mentioned above,[165] Mbeki had announced that it would be up to

---

[158] Interview with Jürgen Kögl in Johannesburg (May 12, 2006); Interview with Jan Geldenhuys in Pretoria (May 10, 2006).

[159] Ibid.

[160] F. Kutz Amnestie für politische Straftäter in Südafrika (2001) 143.

[161] Interview with Jürgen Kögl in Johannesburg (May 12, 2006).

[162] Ibid.

[163] Ibid.

[164] Ibid.

[165] See supra Chapter 3(1.3).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

the NPA to pursue post-TRC prosecutions according to its normal procedures and that any approach such as general amnesty will not be considered, which of course means that the specific indemnity procedure proposed would, at least at the beginning, not be implemented. What exactly motivated Mbeki to turn away from the proposal at that stage cannot be established. However, it is implicit from his speech that he apparently did not consider such an obvious legislative introduction of another amnesty mechanism similar to that of the TRC as appropriate, since he expressly stated that any new amnesty approach, whether applied regionally or nationally, would harm the TRC process. However, elements of the consultations did, as will be shown below, reappear in later policy decisions.

3. A Prosecution Policy for TRC-Related Cases

It becomes clear from the consultations with the security forces that the government attempted to introduce new legal mechanisms aimed at avoiding trials directly after 1998. As has been outlined in the preceding paragraphs, the solution, which had been reached by late 2002, was in early 2003 not found fit by the President to provide a sufficient new indemnity mechanism. However, the urge to introduce a satisfactory mechanism persisted. It took until late 2004 for the government to start a new process of developing a solution. Eventually in early 2006, a new legal approach to post-TRC prosecutions was introduced. On 24 January 2006 the NPA presented a set of new guidelines to the public, which were supposed to apply specifically to prosecutions of political crimes connected with the conflicts of the apartheid past.[166] The so-called 'prosecution policy and directives relating to the prosecution of offences emanating from the conflicts of the past and which were [166] See NPA, press statement Amended prosecution policy and directives relating to prosecution of criminal matters arising from the conflicts of the past (Jan 24, 2006).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

committed before 11 May 1994' were an amendment to the general prosecution policy of the NPA.[167]

Traditionally, prosecutors in South Africa have wide discretion on the decision on whether or not to initiate a prosecution.[168] According to section 179(5)(a) and (b) of the Constitution and 21 of the NPA Act, the NDPP, with the concurrence of the Minister of Justice, has to determine and issue policy directives, which have to be observed by the prosecutors in the prosecution process.[169] In guiding the prosecutors' discretion, this generally tries to achieve fair, transparent, consistent and predictable processes.[170] The directives are not a statute but outline binding guidelines for the exercise of the prosecutors' discretion. As section 21(2) of the NPA Act states, they have to be tabled in parliament. According to sections 179(5)(a) of the Constitution and 21 of the NPA Act, the prosecution policy is drafted by the NDPP. However, in this case it was in fact not the NDPP but the government, more precisely the Department of Justice, which entirely drafted the guidelines and only formally were they issued by the NDPP.[171] Although the policy amendment was only presented to the public in January 2006, it had already come into effect on 1 December 2005.[172] It has given rise to

---

[167] Prosecution Policy, appendix A.

[168] M. Schönteich Lawyers for the people (2001) 19–20; F.G. Richings 'The prosecutor's discretion: a plea for circumspection' (1977) 1 no. 2 South African Journal of Criminal Law and Criminology 143 at 143–44.

[169] The section reads:

> (5) The National Director of Public Prosecutions
>
> (a) must determine, with the concurrence of the Cabinet member responsible for the administration of justice, and after consulting the Directors of Public Prosecutions, prosecution policy, which must be observed in the prosecution process;
>
> (b) must issue policy directives which must be observed in the prosecution process.

Section 21 (1) of the NPA Act repeats this instruction.

[170] M. Schönteich Lawyers for the people (2001) 52.

[171] Interview with Jan Wagener in Pretoria (May 8, 2006); Interview with Torie Pretorius and others in Pretoria (May 2, 2006).

[172] NPA, press statement Amended prosecution policy and directives relating to prosecution of criminal matters arising from the conflicts of the past (Jan 24, 2006).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

considerable controversy and was suspended by the High Court of Pretoria in December 2008.

3.1 Previous history

After the conclusion of the consultation processes and the establishment of the PCLU in early 2003, no political interventions occurred for over one year. This situation changed significantly in late 2004, when the first prosecutions were initiated by the PCLU. The PEBCO-Three prosecution had been initiated in early 2004, Ronnie Blani had been charged in October 2004 and in November 2004 the PCLU was ready to effect arrests in the Chikane case.

The events in the Blani and Chikane cases had triggered the decision to develop specific guidelines. With regard to the indictment of Ronnie Blani, many criticised that priority was put on such a case, considering that apartheid officials were rarely forced to account for their crimes.[173] This decision to prosecute a former liberation force cadre raised concerns and unease in high echelons of the government and in ANC circles as well as in local ANC structures.[174] In addition to this, the arrests in the Chikane case were imminent. As outlined above, the accused' attorney Jan Wagener immediately intervened politically and apparently put great pressure on the government to stop the proceedings.[175] Following this and in an extraordinarily swift move, the NPA was advised on behalf of President Mbeki to suspend the arrests,[176] which it did. The NPA's official explanation for its action was that it had realised that there was no strategic plan as to how to deal with TRC-related cases and that it was necessary to approach them on a

---

[173] See supra Chapter 2(8.).

[174] C. Terreblanche and A. Quintal NPA feels the heat on amnesty The Sunday Independent, Nov 28, 2004.

[175] See supra Chapter 2(9.1). The imminent arrests according to Ackermann decisively contributed to the decision to work out guidelines (E-mail from Anton Ackermann (Oct 18, 2005)).

[176] Interview with Jan Wagener in Pretoria (May 8, 2006).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

holistic and uniform basis.[177] The events reportedly prompted meetings of the Minister for Justice and the Minister of Safety and Security with high-ranking NPA and police officials, at which appropriate political and policy approaches to post-TRC prosecutions were discussed.[178] In November 2004, they eventually resolved to impose a moratorium on all TRC-related prosecutions and investigations pending the composition and approval of guidelines.[179]

It took more than a year until the moratorium was resolved in January 2006. During the presentation of the completed prosecution guidelines, the NPA announced that prosecutions would go ahead.[180] On 17 January 2006, representatives of the NPA tabled the guidelines in Parliament's portfolio Committee on Justice and Constitutional Development.[181] The portfolio committee was given only short notice on the scheduled presentation and was convened for an ad hoc meeting.[182] Although the guidelines are of great significance for the further conduct of post-TRC prosecutions, there was no parliamentary participation in their drafting and proper parliamentary discussion at their presentation was also impossible due to the ad hoc nature of the presentation.[183]

During the process of drafting the guidelines it was also not possible for the public and civil sector to participate in any way. None of the major South African NGOs, such as the victim organisation Khulumani,

---

[177] S. Adams Drama in Chikane's poison case The Star, Nov 11, 2004.

[178] C. Terreblanche and A. Quintal NPA feels the heat on amnesty The Sunday Independent, Nov 28, 2004.

[179] E-mail from Anton Ackermann (Oct 21, 2005). The acting NDPP Bulelani Ngcuka had advised the PCLU to stop all further investigations and prosecutions (E-mail from Anton Ackermann (Oct 18, 2005)).

[180] NPA apartheid-era prosecutions to start SAPA, Jan 24, 2006.

[181] See Justice and Constitutional Development Portfolio Committee Briefing and deliberation on the amendment of the prosecuting policy to provide for directives for the prosecution of matters before 11 May 1994, Jan 17, 2006 (protocol of minutes available at http://www.pmg.org.za).

[182] Interview with Sheila Camerer in Cape Town (March 30, 2006).

[183] Ibid. However, sections 179(5) of the Constitution and 21 of the NPA Act do not provide for parliamentary participation apart from the mere tabling of the completed policy.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

could give any input or were in any way consulted on the contents of the document.[184] Moreover, although the Foundation for Human Rights and Khulumani had constantly requested that the Department of Justice issues information about the guidelines and eventually furnishes a copy thereof, they were not heard or adhered to.[185] The government was generally extraordinarily reluctant to issue information.[186] More precise details on the contents were only reported in the media shortly before the guidelines came into effect.[187] The former security force members were also allegedly not properly involved in the process of developing the guidelines.[188] However, according to the attorney Jan Wagener on a very occasional and infrequent basis representatives of this side were consulted informally.[189]

3.2 Contents

The amendments to the prosecution policy shall be applicable to the prosecution of crimes arising out of the conflicts of the past, which

---

[184] Interview with Marjorie Jobson in Pretoria (May 9, 2006); Interview with Yasmin Sooka in Pretoria (May 3, 2006).

[185] Ibid.

[186] The Foundation for Human Rights and Khulumani learned only in late 2004 from a journalist that a policy amendment was drafted at all. There were signs that the guidelines would reintroduce an amnesty scheme similar to that of the TRC. A coalition of human rights and victim NGOs then in December 2004 and September 2005 wrote letters to the NDPP and Minister of Justice requesting further information and cautioning against the repetition of the TRC amnesty scheme. All requests remained unanswered. Again only through hints of a journalist did the NGOs learn in December 2005, that the policy amendment had been completed (Interview with Yasmin Sooka in Pretoria (May 3, 2006)). Moreover, the victim organisation Khulumani, although having contacted the NPA continuously for information, was not even informed of the scheduled press conference in January 2006, on which the guidelines were presented. Only through journalists was the organisation informed of the presentation shortly beforehand.

[187] C. Terreblanche Back door amnesty plan revealed The Sunday Independent, Nov 27, 2005.

[188] Interview with Jan Wagener in Pretoria (May 8, 2006); Interview with Johan van der Merwe in Pretoria (May 5, 2006).

[189] Interview with Jan Wagener in Pretoria (May 8, 2006).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

were committed before 11 May 1994, i.e. crimes that also fell within the jurisdiction of the Amnesty Committee.[190] On the one hand, the document lays out a procedure that must be strictly adhered to regarding persons who want to make representations to the NDPP in relation to TRC crimes.[191] On the other hand side, the amendment lays out a catalogue of material criteria which, in addition to the general criteria outlined in the normal prosecution policy, govern the discretionary decision of the prosecutors on whether or not to prosecute a case.[192] It was further determined that the regional Directors of Public Prosecutions must refer all post-TRC prosecutions to the NPA, thus, all TRC-related cases are centralised in the office of the PCLU.[193]

The procedural part of the policy amendment determined, apart from a number of negligible formal requirements, that any person possibly facing prosecution may submit an affidavit containing representations on the alleged criminal offence, if he wished to enter into arrangements with the NPA.[194] Such affidavit must contain

> …a full disclosure of all the facts, factors or circumstances surrounding the commission of the alleged offence, including all information which may uncover any network, person or thing, which posed a threat to our security at any stage or may pose a threat to our current security.[195]

The material criteria governing the prosecutor's decision to take a case to trial are of critical importance. There are basically three sets of criteria. The first set is based on the preconditions for granting amnesty as stated in the TRC Act.[196] First, it must be taken into account 'whether the alleged offender has made a full disclosure of all relevant facts, factors or circumstances' concerning the alleged offence.[197] The next

---

[190] Prosecution Policy, appendix A.

[191] Ibid., para. B.

[192] Ibid., para. C. The criteria expressly shall be applicable besides the general criteria governing the discretion of the NDPP set out in paragraph 4 of the general prosecution policy.

[193] Prosecution Policy, appendix A, para. B.5.

[194] Ibid., para. B.3.

[195] Ibid.

[196] See section 20 of the TRC Act.

[197] Prosecution Policy, appendix A, para. C.3.(a).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

factor is whether the offence was associated with a political objective and committed in the course of the conflicts of the past, which needs to be determined on the basis of a number of factors: the motive; the object or objective; whether the offence was committed in furtherance of an order or with the approval of an organisation, institution or liberation movement of which the accused offender was a supporter, agent or member; and finally, the relationship between the offence and the objective pursued and the proportionality in respect thereof, which does not include objectives of personal gain and personal malice, ill-will or spite.[198]

The second set of criteria encompasses factors relating to the personal circumstances and behaviour of the alleged offender:[199]

- the degree of cooperation of the alleged offender, including his endeavours to disclose 'the truth of the conflicts of the past, including the remains of victims; or possible clandestine operations […] including the exposure of networks that operated or are operating against the people, especially if such networks still pose a real or latent danger against our democracy.'
- the health of the alleged offender and other humanitarian considerations;
- 'the credibility of the alleged offender';
- the offender's 'sensitivity towards the need for restitution';
- 'the degree of remorse shown by the alleged offender and his or her attitude towards reconciliation';
- the 'renunciation of violence and willingness to abide by the Constitution on the part of the alleged offender'; and
- 'the degree of indoctrination to which the alleged offender was subjected'.

[198] Ibid., para. C.3.(b).

[199] Ibid., paras. C.3.(c) and (d).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

The final set of criteria contains a range of rather general factors:[200]

- 'whether the offence is serious';
- the extent to which the prosecution or non-prosecution may positively or negatively affect the national project of nation-building through transformation, reconciliation, development and reconstruction;
- 'whether the prosecution may lead to the further or renewed traumatisation of victims and conflicts in areas where reconciliation has already taken place';
- 'if relevant, the alleged offender's role during the TRC process, namely, in respect of co-operation, full disclosure and assisting the process in general';
- 'considerations of any views obtained for purposes of reaching a decision' and any other criteria deemed relevant.

The NDPP must obtain the views of concerned victims before reaching a decision and consult with victims in any further process concerning the perpetrator.[201] Any decision to continue or discontinue investigations or proceed with prosecutions must be approved by the NDPP.[202] Furthermore, the Minister of Justice must be informed of all decisions taken or imminent in respect of procedures under the amendment.[203] A decision not to prosecute and the reasons thereof must be made public.[204] The NPA and other agencies shall not use any information obtained from the alleged offender in the procedure in any possible subsequent criminal proceeding against the person who made the disclosure.[205]

---

[200] Ibid., paras. C.3.(e)–(j).
[201] Ibid., para. B.9. and 13.
[202] Ibid., para. B.7.
[203] Ibid., para. B.11.
[204] Ibid., para. B.10.
[205] Ibid., para. B.15.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

3.3 Rationales

The policy amendment was intended to give effect to the aforementioned announcements of the President from 2003.[206] Generally, it was stated that it was necessary to standardise the dealings with all post-TRC cases in terms of specifically defined criteria, and that the normal policy would not have sufficed for this purpose.[207] As such, to ensure consistency and also considering the complexities of the cases, the amendment determined that all post-TRC prosecutions are centralised at the PCLU. Consistency was especially necessary to avoid undermining the project of nation-building. Thus, the guidelines were designed to provide a uniform, rational, effective and reconciliatory basis on which the cases will be dealt with in the future.[208] A more detailed justification for the guidelines was not provided. Another motive underlying the guidelines, however, seems to be the perceived sensitivity that such cases require in terms of reconciliation and nation-building.[209] Apparently, the guidelines were generally designed to allow the NDPP to stop a prosecution wherever it is deemed detrimental for the overall progress of reconciliation and nation-building.

3.4 Practical implementation

Soon after the policy amendment was introduced, the Foundation for Equality before the Law approached the NPA attempting to discover

---

[206] NPA, press statement Amended prosecution policy and directives relating to prosecution of criminal matters arising from the conflicts of the past (Jan 24, 2006). See also Prosecution Policy, appendix A, para. A.1.

[207] Ibid.; Presentation at the tabling of the prosecution policy amendment in the Justice Portfolio Committee, Jan 17, 2006, para. 5.3 (available at http://www.pmg.org.za); Justice and Constitutional Development Portfolio Committee Briefing and deliberation on the amendment of the prosecuting policy to provide for directives for the prosecution of matters before 11 May 1994 Jan 17, 2006 (protocol of minutes available at http://www.pmg.org.za).

[208] Prosecution Policy, appendix A, para. A.5.

[209] Ibid., paras. C.3.(f) and (g).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

how the guidelines would be implemented in practice.[210] Various clients of the organisation's attorney, Jan Wagener, were willing to launch an application with the NPA under the policy procedure, should a prosecution target them.[211] Apparently, a satisfactory answer could not be given, which indicates that the practical scope and implementation had yet to be worked out.

As far as the records show, up to the completion of this research in April 2009, only one set of proceedings had been completed under the guidelines. As has already been outlined above, soon after the guidelines came into effect, applications according to the policy amendment were tendered by the three former security police officers, Otto, van Staden and Smit, accused of having attempted to murder Frank Chikane.[212] Shortly thereafter, Vlok and van der Merwe also entered into a disclosure proceeding in terms of the guidelines.[213] The five subsequently made representations during September 2006 and possibly thereafter concerning the crime as required by the policy. In January 2007, the NPA announced that it would push ahead with the charges against the three accused,[214] which obviously meant that it had not decided against initiating a prosecution after conclusion of the guidelines procedure.

For the attorney of the accused, Jan Wagener, the decision to proceed with the charges came unexpectedly.[215] The attorney was absolutely adamant that his clients made full disclosure of their knowledge of the events as required by the guidelines.[216] Vlok, van der Merwe and Smith even submitted themselves to a polygraph test that allegedly proved they had told the full truth.[217] Indeed it is expressly pointed out in the plea

---

[210] Interview with Johan van der Merwe in Pretoria (May 5, 2006).

[211] Interview with Jan Wagener in Pretoria (May 16, 2006).

[212] See supra Chapter 2(9.2).

[213] E-mail from Jan Wagener (Sep 13, 2007).

[214] J.J. Joubert and W. Jordaan Cops up for apartheid crimes Beeld, Feb 7, 2007; W.J. da Costa and T. Mtshali Prosecuting apartheid's soldiers 'divisive' Pretoria News, Feb 8, 2007.

[215] E-mail from Jan Wagener (Feb 12, 2007).

[216] E-mail from Jan Wagener (Sep 13, 2007).

[217] A. Vlok, J. van der Merwe, C. Smith, G. Otto and M. van Staden, press statement (Aug 17, 2007).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

agreement that the accused approached the NPA immediately to take part in the procedure under the guidelines and made disclosure. The plea bargain ambiguously states in Afrikaans that the accused have 'oop kaarte gespeel', which means that they have played with their cards on the table.[218] Although it is not expressly stated that there was full disclosure, the expression nevertheless logically indicates that the accused did not hide anything. Furthermore, the accused eventually asked for forgiveness and showed remorse. Chikane had previously indicated that he is not really interested in their prosecution.[219] In a spectacular symbolic act of repentance Vlok publicly washed Chikane's feet in August 2006 at the Union Buildings in Pretoria,[220] which coincided with and was certainly connected with the guidelines procedure. Vlok and van der Merwe cooperated with the TRC to a considerably higher degree than other leading apartheid officials. All of these factors are explicit criteria of the guidelines, which logically can only lead to one decision: not to prosecute. This is especially true for Vlok and van der Merwe who came forward voluntarily. On the basis of the guidelines, it is therefore not clear why the NDPP nevertheless decided to prosecute. The decision might have been taken for obscure political reasons.

However, the NPA refused to furnish reasons for its decision to the public or the accused and did not provide any information whatsoever on the proceedings.[221] On the occasion of the presentation of the plea bargain arrangement, the guidelines proceeding was also not properly investigated, although it was obviously closely connected to the plea agreement.

---

[218] S v Johannes Velde van der Merwe en andere (Pretoria High Court) pleit en vonnisooreenkoms 15 August 2007 at para. 80.

[219] E. Naidoo No general amnesty for apartheid crimes The Sunday Independent, July 3, 2005.

[220] M. Swart 'Sorry seems to be the hardest word: apology as a form of symbolic reparation' (2008) 1 South African Journal on Human Rights 50 at 64.

[221] E-mail from Jan Wagener (Feb 16, 2007).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

3.5 Reactions to the guidelines

The reactions from within the sector of human rights, victim organisations and activists to the guidelines and the process of their drafting were overwhelmingly critical. As the criticisms have common features, the main points can be summarised here:[222]

- The guidelines effectively amount to a replica of the amnesty procedure as was laid out in the TRC Act. As the NDPP is entitled to decide against an indictment if the perpetrator makes a full disclosure, the policy confers powers on the NPA, which were formerly exercised by the Amnesty Committee. This continuation of the TRC's legal regime on amnesty is unacceptable since the amnesty process had taken place in a carefully confined and negotiated framework, which was not meant to be extended.
- Perpetrators were deliberately given a second chance to achieve impunity, although many shunned the TRC process in the first place by rejecting the very generous offer of amnesty or presented untruthful versions of their crimes. This is totally unacceptable considering the great concession the amnesty scheme demanded of victims.
- The process outlined by the policy amendment totally lacks transparency. In stark contrast to the TRC legislation, the new guidelines do not make provision for the publication of information deriving from perpetrator testimonies or the records thereof. The procedures will be carried out in camera. The public does not even have to be informed if a procedure according to the guidelines is taking place.

---

[222] Interview with Marjorie Jobson in Pretoria (May 9, 2006); Interview with Yasmin Sooka in Pretoria (May 3, 2006); Memorandum of Howard Varney on discussion concerning the prosecution policy amendment attended by Yasmin Sooka, Marjorie Jobson, Howard Varney, Ahmed Motala (executive director of the CSVR), Jody Kollapen (chair of the South African Human Rights Commission) (Dec 9, 2005) (on file with author); Y. Sooka Panel presentation at the Institute for Justice and Reconciliation conference 'the TRC: ten years on' (April 20, 2006); M. Jobson Panel presentation at the Institute for Justice and Reconciliation conference 'The TRC: ten years on' (April 20, 2006); Institute for Justice and Reconciliation Statement: the IJR conference on the TRC: ten years on (2006).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

– Sufficient provision is not made for a satisfactory involvement of victims in the process. There are not even provisions for concerned victims to be given an exact record of the representations made by the relevant perpetrator.
– Although the policy amendment fundamentally concerns the rights and interests of many victims of apartheid era crimes, there was regrettably no consultation or cooperation with victim organisations in their drafting. While the TRC process was always accompanied by extensive public participation and discussion, the drafting of the guidelines took place entirely behind closed doors. This contravenes the spirit of openness and democratic debate, which had been established during the TRC process.
– The centralisation of all TRC cases in the office of the PCLU needs to be accompanied by a huge increase in the provision of resources, if the unit is to be capable at all of dealing with all possible cases. Otherwise the result would be a de facto amnesty for most cases.
– The NPA's contention that victims should not feel aggrieved if a prosecution is not pursued, since they can seek civil redress or prosecute privately,[223] is utterly disingenuous.[224] It is absolutely clear that neither private prosecutions nor civil claims are a realistic option. Generally, according to section 7 of the Criminal Procedures Act anyone with a substantial interest in a case can institute a private prosecution, in the event that the NDPP has issued a certificate stating that the State declines to prosecute the matter.[225] The privately prosecuting party must carry out the complete investigation for the case.[226] The NPA is not even obliged to hand over evidence and incriminating material it has already prepared.[227] The private litigant is also without investigative [223] NPA, press statement Amended prosecution policy and directives relating to prosecution of criminal matters arising from the conflicts of the past (Jan 24, 2006). See also Prosecution Policy, appendix A, paras. A.3.(d) and A.4.

[224] Interview with Howard Varney in Johannesburg (May 6, 2006).
[225] Nolle prosequi certificate. See sections 7–16 of the Criminal Procedure Act.
[226] V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 218.
[227] Ibid.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

rights similar to those of the NPA and police.[228] Furthermore a private prosecution imposes a great financial onus and risk on the litigant, since they must finance the investigation and, in the event of an acquittal, not only incur their own legal costs but also those of the accused's defence team.[229] Victims and NGOs certainly cannot meet these demands.[230] Furthermore, the time limit to pursue civil claims has lapsed in most cases and is thus also not a realistic option.[231]

Right after the amendments entered into force a number of human rights organisations have asked the government to set the guidelines aside.[232] Various international NGOs have also joined in criticising the guidelines. For example, the International Bar Association expressed deep concern over the policy, since it replicates the TRC amnesty legislation, seriously violates victims' rights and could foster a culture of impunity for the human rights violations committed under apartheid.[233] A number of African human rights organisations, the International Centre for Transitional Justice and former Constitutional Court Judge Richard Goldstone voiced similar concerns in a letter to the President.[234] It is also noteworthy that the policy was also rejected by senior members of the PCLU.[235] Some prosecutors requested civil society to

---

[228] Ibid., 46.

[229] Ibid.

[230] Interview with Howard Varney in Johannesburg (May 6, 2006); Interview with Marjorie Jobson in Pretoria (May 9, 2006).

[231] Interview with Howard Varney in Johannesburg (May 6, 2006).

[232] Y. Sooka Panel presentation at the Institute for Justice and Reconciliation conference 'The TRC: ten years on' (April 20, 2006).

[233] Letter from Mark S. Ellis, executive director International Bar Association, to Brigitte Mabandla, Minister of Justice and Constitutional Development (March 14, 2006) (on file with author). See also International Bar Association, press statement IBA critical of amendments to South Africa's prosecution policy (March 29, 2006). The International Bar Association is a leading international organisation of legal practitioners, bar associations and law societies.

[234] Letter to President Thabo Mbeki, President of South Africa (April 7, 2006).

[235] T. Pretorius Panel presentation at the Institute for Justice and Reconciliation conference 'The TRC: ten years on' (April 20, 2006).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

monitor the processes carefully to see that the guidelines are not being misused.[236] They argued that the guidelines did not add any practical value to their work and are simply not necessary to conduct effective and successful prosecutions.[237]

Considering the strong rejection of the amendments by human rights and victim groups, it is rather surprising that the representative of perpetrators, the Foundation for Equality before the Law, also strongly rejected the guidelines. They believed that the criteria's vagueness and obscurity make them highly unpredictable.[238] They also suggested that prosecutors will not be able to conduct the procedure in an impartial way, since they will have already investigated the case and have prepared an indictment.[239] They, thus, will have reached specific conclusions on the course of events in the specific case. Regardless of whether such conclusions are correct or not, the prosecutors will inevitably judge the credibility of a perpetrator's 'full disclosure' on the basis thereof. It would have been important and far better, if such a procedure had been placed before an independent forum, such as a court, as had previously been suggested in the consultations with the government.[240] Some have nevertheless identified positive potential for the guidelines' procedure, as perpetrators who had been denied amnesty unjustly at the TRC would get a second chance and generally the probability of criminal trials would be diminished.[241] However, representatives of perpetrators had expected, on the basis of the apparently promising negotiations with the government, a clear legislative solution providing for an independent and foreseeable indemnity mechanism, which would lay out clear preconditions and a strict obligation to grant indemnity. However, the guidelines did not meet this expectation. Against this

[236] Ibid.

[237] Interview with Anton Ackermann in Pretoria (May 11, 2006).

[238] Interview with Jan Wagener in Pretoria (May 8, 2006); Interview with Johan van der Merwe in Pretoria (May 5, 2006).

[239] E-mail from Johan van der Merwe (May 31, 2006); E-mail from Johan van der Merwe (June 4, 2006).

[240] Ibid.

[241] Interview with Jan Wagener in Pretoria (May 8, 2006).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

background, to some in the Foundation for Equality before the Law the guidelines were rather unexpected.[242]

3.6 Court challenge of the guidelines

In July 2007, various relatives of victims of crimes committed by the apartheid security forces as well as human rights NGOs launched an application at the Pretoria High Court against the amendment of prosecution policy. The application sought an order of the High Court to suspend and stay the operation of the prosecution guidelines and to eventually declare the policy amendments to be inconsistent with the South African Constitution, and therefore unlawful and invalid.[243]

The applicants were Thembisile Nkadimeng, the sister of MK activist Nokuthula Simelane, who was abducted, tortured and probably murdered by the security police in 1983,[244] Nyameka Goniwe, Nombuyiselo Mhlauli, Sindiswa Mkhonto and Nomonde Calata, the widows of the four liberation movement activists known as the Cradock-Four, who were murdered by members of the Eastern Cape security police in 1985[245] as well as three human rights organisations, the Khulumani Support Group, the CSVR and the International Centre for Transitional Justice in New York.[246] The respondents were the NDPP, the Minister of Justice, the alleged perpetrators in the Cradock-Four murder case, Eric

---

[242] Interview with Johan van der Merwe in Pretoria (May 5, 2006).

[243] Thembisile Nkadimeng and others v National Director of Public Prosecutions and others, Notice of Motion, Case no. 32709/07 (T) July 2007 (on file with author).

[244] See infra Chapter 4(5.1.1).

[245] See infra Chapter 4(5.2).

[246] The applicants were represented by lawyers from the Legal Resources Centre in Johannesburg and the Foundation for Human Rights has contributed to the funding (Interview with Howard Varney in Johannesburg (May 6, 2006)). The victims' relatives brought the application in their own interest as family members of the deceased persons in terms of section 38(a) of the Constitution, the organisations' application was based on their own interest and the representation of the public interest in terms of section 38(d) of the Constitution. All applicants also based their interest on the overall interest of the group of all apartheid victims possibly concerned by the Prosecution Policy in terms of section 38(c) of the Constitution.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

Taylor, Johannes Lotz, Johannes van Zyl and Hermanus du Plessis as well as the alleged perpetrators in the Simelane case, Willem Coetzee, Anton Pretorius, Frederick Mong and Msebenzi Radebe.

The applicants expect the prosecution of the alleged perpetrators, since they were refused amnesty either completely, as in the Cradock-Four case, or for parts of the crimes, as in the Simelane case. They argue that the prosecution policy potentially prevents this from happening, should the alleged perpetrators successfully apply for indemnity under the procedure, a result that they seek to prevent.[247] It is submitted that the policy amendment allows for the NDPP to grant de facto indemnity to perpetrators and thereby infringes the right to dignity according to section 10 of the Constitution, as the protection of perpetrators from prosecution is at the expense of victims and victims' families who are thereby denied justice and whose quest for closure is prevented. Their respect, dignity and value in the wider community is undermined and the constitutional pact underlying the agreement on amnesty, on which many victims relied, is demeaned. The right to life according to section 11 of the Constitution would be violated, as murderers remain unpunished. As the impunity mechanism also encompasses acts of torture and abduction, the right of an individual to his/her freedom and security, as stated under section 12 of the Constitution, would also be violated. Moreover, there would also be a violation of section 9 of the Constitution, the right to equal protection and equality before the law, since the policy discriminates against victims of a crime committed with a political objective before 11 May 1994 and perpetrators who participated in the amnesty process in good faith and were granted amnesty as well as those who did not participate at all or were refused amnesty but who now get a second offer of indemnity. The unlawfulness of the policy is further highlighted in two ways: first, by the fact that it is not a law of general application, which is required by section 36(1) of the Constitution for any limitation of the Bill of Rights; and second, by the rule of law as enshrined in section 1 of the Constitution, since the [247] Thembisile Nkadimeng and others v National Director of Public Prosecutions and others, Founding Affidavit, Case no. 32709/07 (T) July 2007 (on file with author).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

policy grants selective impunity in a manner that lacks transparency and prevents sufficient participation of interested parties. The policy guidelines would also constitute an infringement of South Africa's international law obligations as it violates the International Covenant for Civil and Political Rights and the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

The respondents answered the criticism that the policy amendments would not allow for decisions not to prosecute in cases where there is sufficient evidence. Furthermore, it could not amount to effective indemnity in any event, because perpetrators would still be exposed to private prosecutions and civil claims. During the court hearings, the NDPP counsel submitted that representations in terms of the amendments would have no other purpose than to be used for plea and sentence or state witness arrangements in terms of sections 105A and 204 of the Criminal Procedure Act.

With the judgment on 12 December 2008 of judge Legodi, the High Court of Pretoria declared the policy amendments to the National Prosecution Policy to be inconsistent with the Constitution, unlawful and invalid and therefore suspended them.[248] The Court found that representations by perpetrators as envisaged by the policy amendment are not sanctioned by the Constitution. Section 179(5)(d) of the Constitution only provides for representations in cases where a decision to institute a prosecution has already been taken. However, in the view of the Court, representations in terms of the amendments apply to persons who are still facing possible prosecution.[249] The Court went on to point out that representations in terms of the guidelines cannot be the representations which are required in terms of sections 105A (plea bargaining) or 204 (state witnesses) of the Criminal Procedure Act, because both provisions apply only to situations where a prosecution has already been initiated. Furthermore, in terms of section 204

[248] Nkadimeng and others v The National Director of Public Prosecutions and others (Transvaal Provincial Division) Case no 32709/07, unreported, at para. 18.1.

[249] Ibid., at para. 15.3.1.1 and 15.3.1.2.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

of the Criminal Procedure Act, indemnity is granted by a court and not by the NDPP.[250]

The Court accordingly concluded that the policy amendments could only mean that perpetrators be granted indemnity in cases of full disclosure, because otherwise the making of representations would not make sense. There would also be no incentive for perpetrators to come forward and make representations on their deed, if they would not afterwards be rewarded with a decision by the NDPP not to prosecute.[251] Consequentially, there would be simply no need for the disclosure procedure if it was not intended to result in indemnity.[252] Against this background the Court labelled the amendments in drastic terms as a "recipe for conflict and absurdity".[253] Accordingly, the Court confirmed the position of the applicants in that it views the amended guidelines as a copy of the TRC amnesty mechanism. It also pointed out that there cannot be any systematic connection between criteria such as the degree of remorse, the effects on reconciliation etc and a decision whether to prosecute or not.[254] The Court considered that the NPA has to prosecute where there is sufficient evidence to secure a conviction and a decision not to do so under such circumstances would be unconstitutional.[255] In this context it referred to a constitutional obligation of the NPA to prosecute.[256] The Court stated that it is not for victims to investigate crimes but much rather the responsibility of police and prosecutors to do so.[257] The making of representations directed at allowing for decisions

---

[250] Ibid., at para. 15.3.1.4.

[251] Ibid., at para. 15.5.3.1. The court apparently presumed that there is no protection mechanism for self-incriminating disclosures. It either did not consider paragraph B.15. of the amendment, where it is stated that no state agencies shall use information stemming from perpetrator disclosures in any proceedings against the person at a later stage, or did not consider that provision to sufficiently rule out the use of self-incriminating evidence, since it is not a law.

[252] Ibid., at para. 15.5.4.

[253] Ibid., at para. 15.5.3.

[254] Ibid., at para. 15.14.3.

[255] Ibid., at para. 15.4.4.

[256] Ibid., at para. 15.5.2.1.

[257] Ibid., at para. 16.2.3.3.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

not to prosecute would accordingly be unlawful but in light of sections 105A and 204 of the Criminal Procedure Act also totally unnecessary. The normal prosecution policy is sufficient to provide guidelines for the decision whether to prosecute or not.[258]

Thus, in strong terms the Court declared the amendments to be unconstitutional. However, the judgment lacks supportive legal analysis. The Court did not base the conclusions it reached on a systematic legal interpretation and application of the respective explicit or implicit constitutional provisions at all. The NPA has lodged an appeal against the High Court ruling at the Supreme Court of Appeal, which had still not been heard or concluded upon the publication of this book.

3.7 Evaluation

The amendment of the prosecution policy reveals a great deal on the political viewpoints of the government and the developments on post-TRC prosecutions behind the scenes. They will therefore be evaluated in the following paragraphs.

3.7.1 The guidelines criteria

The criteria are rather vague. This is especially the case with respect to those criteria relating to a perpetrator's personal circumstances, such as the degree of remorse and his/her attitude towards reconciliation, the willingness to abide by the Constitution, etc. The same is true for criteria concerning the possible impact of a trial on society such as its effect on nation-building and reconciliation. It appears very unlikely that prosecutors will be in a position to determine such implications properly and with certainty so as to be able to apply the criteria in a consistent manner. Furthermore, the policy document does not specify how the individual preconditions that make up the criteria relate to each other in practical application. According to the NPA, there is no

[258] Ibid., at para. 15.3 and 15.4.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

hierarchy in the catalogue.[259] Thus, what if the accused makes a full disclosure before the NDPP, yet shows no inclination to effect restitution? What if a victim demands prosecution, but the perpetrator has complied with all other criteria? The policy amendment does not even outline what the specific result of the process must be, if the alleged perpetrator has complied with most criteria. It is only stated that the criteria must be applied in a balanced way before reaching a decision on whether or not to prosecute.[260] The final decision remains in the NDPP's discretion.

However, even though the implementation in the Chikane case provided a different example, in theory, regarding the logic of the guidelines, one would expect that the satisfaction of the disclosure and political offence requirements in particular were intended to lead to a decision to preclude prosecution. Also, should the NDPP be convinced that a specific prosecution will have a negative impact on reconciliation, lead to renewed trauma or that the perpetrator cooperated satisfactorily, such circumstances were also meant to lead to a non-prosecution. What sense would it, in terms of the guidelines, make to press for a prosecution, if such a case would obviously harm the reconciliation effort in a specific case? Or why should one decide to prosecute an alleged perpetrator if he came forward and made a full disclosure and cooperated with the authorities in unearthing the truth? Thus, in theory the catalogue of criteria essentially outlines a whole range of reasons on which a decision not to prosecute can be based.

Furthermore, most criteria seem rather out of place for that particular stage of a criminal procedure. For one, with regard to the general prosecution policy, it is incomprehensible why factors like the accused's willingness to abide by the Constitution should contribute to a decision to forego prosecution, especially in the context of such serious crimes as murder or torture. Secondly, personal factors, such as the degree of indoctrination, should be considered by the trial court in handing [259] Presentation at the tabling of the prosecution policy amendment in the Justice Portfolio Committee, Jan 17, 2006, para. 5.3 (available at http://www.pmg.org.za).

[260] Prosecution Policy, appendix A, para. C.3.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

down a just sentence but should not have a connection to the question of whether a trial should be initiated in the first place.

It also seems inappropriate to place such a procedure before the NDPP. The NDPP's sole purpose in terms of section 179(2) of the Constitution is to hold perpetrators of crimes accountable. However, prosecutors would be required by the guidelines to consider a range of criteria on behalf of the perpetrator, which are outside the normal criteria outlined in the general prosecution policy. A conflict of interest between exercising the duty to prosecute and assessing wide-ranging factors for the perpetrators is inevitable. Obviously, a court would have been better charged with conducting such a process, as it would resemble more closely its usual tasks in a criminal trial of assessing mitigating and aggravating circumstances on the side of the accused.

3.7.2 A copy of the amnesty process?

The policy amendment more or less repeats verbatim the preconditions for granting amnesty through the Amnesty Committee according to the TRC Act. As such, the requirement for the crime to be associated with a political objective and to be committed in the course of the conflicts of the past,[261] including the catalogue of factors determining this,[262] is repeated, as well as the requirement to make a full disclosure of all relevant facts, factors and circumstances concerning the crime.[263] The major difference to the TRC Act is that the policy amendment does not provide an outline for attaining a strict resolution. Whereas the Amnesty Committee was legally obliged to grant amnesty once it was satisfied that the preconditions had been met, the decision in terms of the guidelines still remains at the discretion of the NDPP. However, it is clear that under the terms of the amendment the NDPP may refuse to prosecute once a full disclosure has been made and the offence can be deemed political. As also the High Court of Pretoria has pointed out, this might logically even be a decision intended for such cases by [261] See section 20(1)(b) of the TRC Act.

[262] See section 20(3) of the TRC Act.

[263] See section 20(1)(c) of the TRC Act.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

the authors of the prosecution policy guidelines. Also, since private prosecutions are not a realistic option, a decision by the NDPP not to prosecute grants the perpetrator a de facto indemnity or amnesty. Thus, in essence the amendments repeat the basic TRC amnesty scheme of a trade-off of impunity for a full disclosure, yet at the full discretion of the NDPP. The NPA was, however, at pains to stress that the guidelines were not meant to be a rerun of the TRC amnesty process, which is also emphasised in the policy amendment.[264] The strong resemblance of the guidelines to the TRC Act suggests otherwise.

However, there are major differences between the policy process and the TRC amnesty process with regard to victim and public participation. While the Amnesty Committee hearings relating to gross human rights violations took place in public,[265] and the records of hearings and decisions were published, the process outlined by the policy amendment could take place completely in camera. Confessions made on a specific crime could not necessarily be published. Also, while at TRC amnesty hearings concerned victims could be present, testify, adduce evidence or submit other relevant material,[266] no such provisions were made in the policy amendment. Obviously the interest was to ensure the procedures received as little public attention as possible. Moreover, there are other fundamental differences. While the run-up to the amnesty legislation was accompanied by large-scale public participation and gave ample opportunities for victim interest groups to give their input, the drafting process for the guidelines did not involve public participation at all and numerous demands of the major victims organisation, Khulumani, for information were simply totally ignored.

These facts contradict the President's statements, in which he maintained that the involvement of victims would be crucial in determining the future course of action and specific agreements between perpetrators and the NPA. He also stated that the matter could not be dealt with

---

[264] NPA, press statement Amended prosecution policy and directives relating to prosecution of criminal matters arising from the conflicts of the past (Jan 24, 2006); Prosecution Policy, appendix A, para. A.3.

[265] See section 33(1)(a) of the TRC Act.

[266] See section 19(4)(b) of the TRC Act.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

by another amnesty process as this would fly in the face of victims, considering their concessions made in the first amnesty process.

3.7.3 A political instrument and product of the consultations?
The political consultations with representatives of the former security forces, which preceded the enactment of the guidelines, indicate that the amendment of the prosecution policy was designed merely to meet the political concerns, highlighted at the meetings. Any discernable similarity between the two processes would underline this perception that the guidelines were intended to be a tool to pursue a political agenda driven by the concerns and motivations, which surfaced at the talks.

However, there was not a direct continuity between the drafting of the guidelines and the consultations, which came to an end by 2004. The meetings with the generals resulted in a specific legislative proposal, which was not enacted in the form agreed upon. Thereafter, the process of drafting the policy amendment was conducted without the proper involvement of the former security forces. The generals were not even involved.[267] Thus, the policy amendment was not a direct product of the consultation processes. Nevertheless, it was certainly influenced by it to a great extent, since there are significant similarities between what was discussed or agreed upon in the consultations and what was incorporated in the policy. The policy amendment reproduces the basic scheme, which already formed the core of the draft legislation worked out in the SADF consultations, i.e., that a full disclosure of a political crime can result in non-prosecution. Equally, the negotiations with former police members envisaged the granting of indemnity, if some kind of disclosure was made and if the crime satisfied the political offence requirement according to the TRC Act criteria. Accordingly those who participated in the consultations or had insight into their operation, maintain that the guidelines contain a number of central features from the negotiations on how to avoid full-scale prosecutions

[267] Interview with Jan Geldenhuys in Pretoria (May 10, 2006).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

in the wake of the TRC.[268] Thus, although the guidelines even go beyond that, the repetition of central preconditions for the granting of amnesty contained in the TRC Act is a feature, which emanates from and was worked out in the consultations with perpetrator groups. One must therefore conclude that the guidelines' enactment was obviously part of, and was in a way the conclusion of a broader political process that was characterised by the secret consultations with the perpetrator groups, which were already underway in 1998.

There are, however, two major differences. While both proposals of the security forces envisaged that any further indemnity process should be outlined by specific legislation, the guidelines are not a law but merely a directive for prosecutorial practice. Secondly, while the proposals envisaged that the indemnity process must take place before a court or in the course of a trial and must be conducted by a judge, the policy amendment places the decision concerning a non-prosecution in the discretion of the prosecutor. This point in particular makes the guidelines, in terms of how the public can benefit from further perpetrator disclosures and in terms of what should be required for a consistent and reliable process of post-TRC prosecutions, even less attractive than the proposals from the consultations. The proposals would have guaranteed public transparency as the process would have taken place in a criminal trial or at least before a court. Through the court records and possibly the reasons given by the judge for his decision, the information deriving from the perpetrator testimonies would have been retained and could have contributed to the compilation of a public record on apartheid atrocities. Furthermore, if indemnity had been granted in the course of an ordinary criminal trial, there would have been fixed rules for victim participation according to the normal provisions of criminal trials. Accordingly the solutions would have ensured more reliability and independence since indemnity would have been granted by a judge and in the course of a criminal trial. Thus, the [268] Interview with Jürgen Kögl in Johannesburg (May 12, 2006); Interview with Jan Wagener in Pretoria (May 8, 2006); Interview with Johan van der Merwe in Pretoria (May 5, 2006).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

proposals from the consultations clearly had some significant advantages over the guidelines.

The decision to turn away from these specific features of the proposals was certainly for concrete reasons. By not enacting the indemnity scheme as a law, the intention may have been to shield the guidelines, to a certain degree, from scrutiny according to the constitutional principles outlined by the Constitutional Court concerning the constitutionality of the TRC Act's amnesty legislation, which had also set out guidelines for the validity of any future legislation on amnesty.[269] This speculated goal was not reached, at least in the High Court litigation. Furthermore, placing the decision to prosecute at the discretion of the NDPP retains a much greater degree of influence for the government on criminal proceedings. The events in the Chikane case have clearly shown that the government is in a position to influence decisions of the NDPP and that its position is not entirely independent from political influence. The NDPP followed the instructions of the government to revoke a specific prosecutorial decision, although the preconditions for a prosecution of the accused had certainly been fulfilled. Although the Minister of Justice has final word on the NPA in terms of section 179(6) of the Constitution, the government is by no means entitled to interfere with the actual conduct of specific prosecutions and may not influence a specific discretional decision to prosecute. The NDPP is also by no means obliged to obey instructions by the government in respect thereof.[270] However, with regard to post-TRC prosecutions, the situation is obviously different. This was shown by the imposition of the moratorium on all post-TRC prosecutions and the political intervention in the scheduled arrests of the three security police officers in the Chikane case.

Also, it was often suggested that the position of the NDPP was generally strongly exposed to political influence and that the NDPP

---

[269] See The Azanian Peoples Organisation and others v The President of South Africa and others (CC) Case no. CCT 17/96 25 July 1996. See also infra Chapter 4(1.1.1).

[270] J. de Waal and I. Currie The new constitutional and administrative law vol. 1 (2001) 313.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

had thus far been very loyal to the government.[271] The legislative setup of the restructured prosecution authority has given rise to criticisms concerning the position of the NDPP in conjunction with politics. On the one hand, it provides for the appointment of the NPA's head by a totally independent decision of the President,[272] and on the other hand it gives the NDPP a very powerful position; it can review any decision to prosecute and has generally great influence on practically all prosecutors and criminal proceedings[273].[274] Considering the appointment process of the NDPP, which is entirely in the discretion of the President, there were doubts that the NDPP would be sufficiently independent and thus subject to politics.[275] The appointment of a highly political figure as the first NDPP has further fuelled such apprehensions.[276]

The policy amendment foresees that the decision-making process as to whether to prosecute a post-TRC case is entirely up to the NDPP since it is empowered to make any final decision. Due to this, and the fact the policy is, to a certain degree, the conclusion of the political process of consultations it is probable that the guidelines were meant to serve as a political instrument. One can assume that the process was drafted to give the government a tool to exercise political influence in situations where it is deemed necessary, such as in the Chikane case and eventually to pursue the agenda discussed at the consultations of keeping the number of trials to a minimum.

3.7.4 Conclusion

The prosecution policy amendment for TRC-related cases was certainly driven by the government's motivations arising out of the consulta-

---

[271] Interview with Yasmin Sooka in Pretoria (May 3, 2006); Interview with Jan Wagener in Pretoria (May 8, 2006).

[272] See section 179(1)(a) of the Constitution and section 10 of the NPA Act.

[273] See section 179(5)(d) of the Constitution and section 22 of the NPA Act.

[274] D. van Zyl Smit and E. Steyn 'Prosecuting authority in the new South Africa' in Centre for the Independence of Judges and Lawyers Yearbook vol. 8 (2000) 137 at 146.

[275] Ibid., 151 and 153; M. Schönteich Lawyers for the people (2001) 44 and 46.

[276] Ibid.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

tions with various representatives of the former apartheid security forces, which were aimed at finding solutions to keep the number of post-TRC trials as low as possible. The guidelines for their setup and criteria create wide-ranging opportunities to forego prosecuting the crimes of apartheid and had the potential to easily prevent a number of cases from reaching the stage of indictment.

The first case considered under the guidelines did not lead to impunity. Although prima facie a number of the most important criteria were complied with, the NDPP decided to prosecute. However, it cannot be determined with certainty what the NPA's reasons were for deciding to lay charges in the Chikane case after all, since no information was made public on the guidelines procedure preceding the plea and sentence agreement. It also cannot be ruled out that the decision was essentially political and thus not representative. The Chikane procedure at least shows that the guidelines are a highly flexible means according to which arbitrary decisions can be made without any public participation or reasoning. It also shows that, contrary to what one would expect on the basis of the theoretical setup of the policy amendment, one cannot assume with certainty that the guidelines procedure automatically resulted in a de facto indemnity of the alleged perpetrators, in cases where its criteria were complied with.

Since the concept of the process is lacking transparency and public participation, neither victims nor the public could be certain to benefit in terms of publishing more information regarding the truth about apartheid era atrocities. Generally, the practical value of the procedure would be very limited. The main reasons for the guidelines put forward by government officials were that a holistic approach was necessary and that effect should be given to the President's speech to reveal more information on possibly dangerous networks.[277] However, in terms of [277] The proposition that secret networks at all still pose a latent danger to the state is strongly rejected by many but cannot be answered conclusively in this book (Interview with Jan Geldenhuys in Pretoria (May 15, 2006); Interview with Johan van der Merwe in Pretoria (May 5, 2006); Interview with Jürgen Kögl in Johannesburg (May 12, 2006); Interview with Yasmin Sooka in Pretoria (May 3, 2006)). The existence of a range of weapons caches which are still hidden is, however, not doubted.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

giving incentives to perpetrators to reveal more information, it would also be possible to use the two legal mechanisms of plea and sentence and state witness agreements according to sections 105A and 204(2)(a) of the Criminal Procedure Act. Both mechanisms encourage perpetrators to come forward and disclose in exchange for a complete or partial indemnity.[278] Since it is unlikely that perpetrators who thus far deliberately refused to cooperate will now come forward voluntarily, the basic precondition of the threat of an imminent prosecution is the same. Moreover, plea-bargaining and state witness arrangements, which take place within a clear legislative framework and are independently adjudicated by a court, might also be far more convenient for perpetrators, especially considering the Foundation for Equality before the Law's strong critique concerning the vagueness and unpredictable nature of the guidelines. The proceedings in the Chikane case are also indicative with regard to the apparent lack of practical necessity, since it is not comprehensible why the accused first underwent the new procedure and apparently made extensive disclosures, if they were eventually convicted via a plea and sentence agreement.

By enacting the guidelines, which could potentially prevent further trials, the government contradicted the recommendations of the TRC and the overall scheme of conditional amnesties, which foresaw prosecutions in cases where amnesty was not granted. Furthermore, a setup which allows for the granting of de facto indemnity on a regular basis in cases where a full disclosure is made, as the High Court asserts the function of this amendment to be, is an essential reproduction of the amnesty process, which would have grave consequences for the legitimacy and reputation of the TRC's amnesty process and for the interests of victims in the amnesty process. The TRC Act provided for a definite and specified time frame for the amnesty process. This was the result of extensive discussions and part of a broad consensus. It was never meant to be extended in any form. This would be totally unacceptable for victims who relied on the fixed framework of the [278] See for both mechanisms also infra Chapter 4(3.3).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

amnesty legislation.[279] Furthermore, the drafting process has led to further alienation of official politics from the civil sector, human rights and victim organisations.

As a result, one must conclude that the guidelines marked a grave step backwards in the process of establishing accountability for apartheid era crimes after the conclusion of the TRC; a step which has been reversed by the High Court in Pretoria. However, the great delay and uncertainty in prosecuting apartheid era crimes which has been caused by the enactment is irreversible.

4. Conclusion on Government's Political Considerations

As shown above, the issue of criminal accountability in the wake of the TRC is, to a large extent, charged with political influences and considerations. In the following subchapter the political motivations and considerations on the part of the government will be summarised and evaluated. New aspects will be highlighted.[280]

Although in 1998 President Mandela called for trials within a fixed timeframe, the subsequent government under President Mbeki was clearly reluctant to create the appropriate conditions to institute trials on a general basis. Instead it engaged in working out solutions on how to avoid further trials and on how to enact new indemnity legislation, stopped a promising prosecution and imposed a moratorium, which further delayed the proper start of trials for more than one year. The approach indicates a clear lack of political will.

Key reasons for the government's generally dismissive attitude towards prosecutions lie in the motivations for entering into consultations with

---

[279] Interview with Marjorie Jobson in Pretoria (May 9, 2006); Interview with Desmond Tutu in Cape Town (March 22, 2006).

[280] It is important to mention that no comment or statement was made by government officials. The deputy Minister of Justice, Johnny de Lange and the Director-General of the President's office, Frank Chikane, were both unsuccessfully approached for comment by the author. The government's approach therefore had to be determined on the basis of the information laid out in the subchapters above.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

the SADF generals, which have been laid out above.[281] However, there are other factors that contribute to the generally dismissive attitude towards trials. Commentators and experts on the issue of post-TRC prosecutions see as a central factor the fact that former liberation fighters can also become the focus of the prosecution authorities.[282] Former liberation movement cadres who were not granted amnesty are legally as exposed to criminal liability as former security forces operatives. The trial of former activist Ronnie Blani highlighted discomfort among ANC and government members concerning the prosecution of liberation activists. Of course, not only ordinary rank and file but also members of the higher echelons of the ANC and government could be vulnerable to prosecution. A number of leading ANC members submitted 'collective' amnesty applications, which had been refused.[283]

In November 1997, 37 high-ranking members of the ANC submitted applications for amnesty. Among them were current President Thabo Mbeki,[284] former Deputy President Jacob Zuma and ministers such as Charles Nqakula or the National Commissioner of Police Jackie Selebi. In support of their application, all commonly referred to a declaration of the ANC formulated for this purpose.[285] As such the applications

---

[281] See supra Chapter 3(2.2.2).

[282] Interview with Yasmin Sooka in Pretoria (May 3, 2006); Interview with Desmond Tutu in Cape Town (March 22, 2006); Interview with Charles Villa-Vicencio in Cape Town (March 29, 2006); J. Klaaren and H. Varney 'A second bite at the amnesty cherry?' in C. Villa-Vicencio and E. Doxtader (eds) The provocations of amnesty (2003) 265 at 265–66. Klaaren and Varney also suggested that the prospects of huge delictual claims against the state or political organisations such as the ANC following a conviction in a criminal trial could be a factor. However, since no further signs indicating the relevance of this issue could be made out and thus far no claims have been lodged, this issue can be left aside.

[283] See further L. McGregor 'Individual accountability in South Africa: cultural optimum or political facade?' (2001) 95 American Journal of International Law 32 at 39–44; J. Sarkin Carrots and sticks: the TRC and the South African amnesty process (2004) 15 and 214; F. Kutz Amnestie für politische Straftäter in Südafrika (2001) 140; TRC Report, vol. 1, chap. 7, para. 95 (Practically all sources only deal with the political and legal implications of the applications and not with the contents thereof.).

[284] Application no. AM/5506/97.

[285] Decision no. AC/99/0046.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

stated that collective responsibility was assumed for all criminal acts committed by ANC members in the execution of the ANC's strategic and policy decisions during the struggle against apartheid.[286] It was further stated that none of the applicants had been aware of or involved in any crimes and could not have knowledge of all particular acts committed on the basis of their policy directives. Accordingly no particular acts or specified incidents were mentioned in the applications.[287] Although they obviously contravened section 20(1) of the TRC Act, which requires that a particular crime should be disclosed in any application for amnesty, the Amnesty Committee granted amnesty for the 37 applications.[288] The decision was challenged by both the TRC and the NP.[289] The Cape Town High Court in May 1998 reversed the decision to grant amnesty and ordered that the applications be considered anew.[290] Meanwhile, over 70 other applications by high-ranking ANC members had been tendered, which were also based on the common declaration.[291] Eventually, in the second run, the Amnesty Committee refused to grant amnesty in any of the applications since no specific conduct, which could constitute a crime, had been disclosed.[292]

However, since no particular acts were disclosed in the applications it does not automatically mean that a prosecution concerning the application has to follow. Nevertheless, the mere fact that top ANC members had been denied amnesty was politically exploited

---

[286] TRC Report, vol. 1, chap. 7, para. 95.

[287] Decision no. AC/99/0046; J. Sarkin Carrots and sticks: the TRC and the South African amnesty process (2004) 16.

[288] TRC Report, vol. 1, chap. 7, para. 95.

[289] See L. McGregor 'Individual accountability in South Africa: cultural optimum or political facade?' (2001) 95 American Journal of International Law 32 at 41. Due to section 5(e) of the TRC Act, the TRC could not instruct the Amnesty Committee to withdraw its decision. The NP accused the Amnesty Committee of bias.

[290] The National Party of South Africa and James Marren Simpson v The Chairperson; Committee on Amnesty of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission and 38 others (C) Cases no 3626/98, 3859/98, 3729/98 8 May 1998, unreported.

[291] Decision no. AC/99/0046; J. Sarkin Carrots and sticks: the TRC and the South African amnesty process (2004) 276.

[292] Decision no. AC/99/0046.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

and used to pressure the government. As mentioned above, various political parties and organisations called for 'even-handed' prosecutions, 'equally' targeting ANC members.[293] As most of the advocates of such calls rejected the idea of prosecutions and preferred the concept of a general amnesty, it is obvious that the call is intended to pressure the government into stopping further trials. The Foundation for Equality before the Law, represented by its attorney, Wagener, even went so far as to compile complete dockets supporting the prosecution of top ANC members, including about five of the top ANC leadership, among them President Mbeki.[294] An attorney, Jaap Cilliers, who had also been the attorney of Wouter Basson, had been approached to evaluate the dockets. It was claimed the dockets contained sufficient evidence to support charges.[295]

The PCLU even requested the Foundation for Equality before the Law to hand over the dockets since it intended to investigate the matters and evaluate the possibility of pressing charges.[296] The organisation refused. It of course had no interest in the conviction of top ANC members, since its preference was for the preclusion of all prosecutions.[297] Only in the event of further trials, especially if such prosecutions focused only on the former apartheid side and not on liberation movement crimes, was there an intention to use the gathered information as a means to exercise political pressure and to publish the information and, only theoretically, to eventually engage in private prosecutions, all with the aim of preventing any further trials.[298] In 2004, when the arrests in the Chikane case were suddenly suspended on the directions of the President, the issue apparently played an influential role. According to Wagener, he used the matter successfully to pressure the govern-

---

[293] See supra Chapter 3(1.2.1).

[294] Interview with Johan van der Merwe in Pretoria (May 5, 2006).

[295] Ibid.

[296] L. Fernandez 'Post-TRC prosecutions in South Africa' in G. Werle (ed.) Justice in transition (2006) 65 at 75.

[297] Interview with Johan van der Merwe in Pretoria (May 5, 2006).

[298] Ibid.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

ment to stop the arrests.[299] Thus obviously the matter weighs heavily in the government's considerations. In July 2008 representatives of the Foundation for Equality before the Law publicly reiterated their willingness to act against leading ANC officials by instituting private prosecutions, should the state move ahead with criminal proceedings against their members.[300]

The former SADF generals also view the issue of potential criminal liability of ANC members as a major consideration for the government. Moreover, if any of the generals had been charged after the TRC, they were willing to pressure the government with exactly the same means, politically exploiting the issue by calling for the prosecution of ANC members.[301]

Advocates of even-handed prosecutions suggest that criminal liability could concern various orders given through the specific direct command structure of the ANC in exile.[302] During the apartheid years the ANC directed violent struggles against the South African state from abroad. The top command structure of the ANC at the time was the National Executive Committee (hereinafter NEC), which exercised direct responsibility over any sizeable militant ANC organisation or cell operating in South Africa.[303] The NEC also directed the ANC's armed wing, MK. Most of the 37 ANC amnesty applicants who were denied amnesty are former members of the NEC.[304] The past conduct of the ANC and its organs was also subject to investigations and hearings by the TRC. The TRC later in its report emphasised that the ANC was an internationally recognised liberation movement involved in a just war against apartheid, which was considered a crime against humanity.[305] Nevertheless, it found that ANC organs at times used means that resulted in unjustifiable

---

[299] Interview with Jan Wagener in Pretoria (May 8, 2006).

[300] B. Webb Tit-for-tat threat by apartheid generals Sunday Tribune, July 20, 2008.

[301] Interview with Jan Geldenhuys in Pretoria (May 15, 2006).

[302] Interview with Jan Wagener in Pretoria (May 16, 2006).

[303] TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 4, appendix, page 393.

[304] Ibid.

[305] TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 4, para. 2.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

gross human rights violations.[306] These conclusions were drawn especially with regard to the bombing and the landmine campaigns, both of which were launched by the ANC to target state facilities and security force personnel and equipment in South Africa.

Now, advocates of even-handed prosecutions claim that these campaigns, especially the landmine campaign, which was instructed by the NEC and carried out by MK, could form the basis for a criminal liability of former NEC members.[307] The TRC pointed out that it had been the declared aim not to harm civilians in such campaigns[308] but that inevitably and foreseeably bombs directed at other targets also killed civilians.[309] The landmine campaign was also designed and ordered by the NEC. During the mid-1980s, MK was given the task of planting landmines in rural areas of northern South Africa and other border regions to target military patrols.[310] According to the TRC this inevitably led to many civilian casualties, which was also the reason that the ANC quickly abandoned the campaign.[311] From the findings of the TRC it is clear that bomb attacks, such as the Church Street bomb, and the landmine campaign were directly attributable to orders given by the NEC. It is further clear that in many cases it was obvious and foreseeable, even though clearly not intended, that civilians would be harmed by such actions.[312] These circumstances might potentially provide the basis to [306] Ibid. See further TRC Report, vol. 3, chap. 6, paras. 500–12; TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 4, paras. 13–45.

---

[307] Interview with Jan Wagener in Pretoria (May 16, 2006).

[308] TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 5, chap. 3, para. 30.

[309] TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 4, para. 37. The most prominent of such bomb attacks was the explosion of a car bomb in front of the South African Air Force headquarters in Church Street, Pretoria, in 1983, which killed 21 people, 10 of whom were civilians. Another prominent attack was that in 1986 on the Magoo's Bar/'Why Not' Bar, a bar in Durban popular among security force members. It resulted in three deaths (see TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 4, paras. 13–37).

[310] TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 4, para. 38.

[311] Ibid., para. 45.

[312] TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 5, chap. 3, paras. 30, 39, 40, 42–43. See also TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 7. The TRC report illustrates that lower and local ANC parts of the organisation also account for numerous deaths in the course of the struggle. Equally

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

establish the criminal liability of high-ranking ANC and government members who were involved in the NEC or other command structures at that time and who had been refused amnesty.

The NPA had, however, announced in 2004 that there was not sufficient evidence warranting criminal investigations against the 37 ANC members who had been refused amnesty.[313] Regardless, it seems highly unlikely that it would be easy for the PCLU to institute criminal proceedings against leading politicians of the ANC, such as former President Thabo Mbeki. Nevertheless, the more crucial factor is that the side of the security forces, police and military alike, can use their influence to exercise political pressure, stir up significant political conflict and unrest and to damage the reputation of leading ANC officials by publicly linking them to criminal acts and claiming they could be charged for murder or other crimes. This would of course affect the stability of the government. Furthermore, the opponents of prosecutions will continue to claim that post-TRC prosecutions are unjust and harm reconciliation if they only concentrate on former security force members. These circumstances must certainly contribute to the government's reluctance to promote post-TRC prosecutions and to their desire to consult with the perpetrator groups.

A range of other factors certainly also contribute to the lack of political will to pursue post-TRC prosecutions. It has been mentioned above that one of the ANC leaders stated that prosecutions were not in the country's interest.[314] It is likely that this represents a common position among many government members. As such, sources from the Justice Ministry were reported in the media as mentioning that the government had no interest in South African politics being dominated and disrupted by a series of spectacular trials relating to the apartheid era.[315]

Underlying this are probably concerns, which were also voiced in the public debate on post-TRC prosecutions. Post-TRC trials would many gross human rights violations resulted from decisions of MK operatives, taken independently from any official command structures.

---

[313] NPA won't prosecute ANC 37 SAPA, June 2, 2004.

[314] See text accompanying supra Chapter 3 note 75.

[315] J. Steinberg Juggling justice, practically Business Day, June 21, 2001.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

constantly highlight accounts of the injustices, atrocities and crimes of the apartheid past over a period of several years. It is most probably feared that this could result in the recurrence of rifts between the ethnic groups and fuel alienation and accusations concerning the apartheid past.[316] As mentioned above, compared to the period when the TRC was in session, during which the media reported almost daily on the TRC and its revelations and findings on the violent conflicts of the past, public debate has generally become rather quiet and sporadic. The government probably welcomes this since it indicates that the ethnic groups might have left the conflicts of the past behind. The government certainly fears that this quiet could be changed by a row of TRC-related trials.[317] The recent prosecutions, especially that in the Chikane case, the PEBCO-Three and Ronnie Blani cases, have shown that such occasions inevitably also give rise to renewed public discussion and conflicts based on ethnic grounds. The Afrikaans speaking white population in particular might perceive prosecutions as part of an overall attack on their ethnic group and might therefore further feel alienated from the new South African state.[318] The concern is, thus, that old wounds might be opened up and that some of the good effects the TRC had on nation-building might be tainted. Thus, as far as South African society is concerned, the government is surely anxious that prosecutions will be a serious obstacle in the process of leaving the past behind and moving forward towards a reconciled nation with harmony reigning between the various ethnic groups. The government's sensitivity towards such issues is also obvious from the amended policy guidelines, as it is stated there that the NDPP needs to take into account how a prosecution could impact on the 'national project of nation-building through transformation, reconciliation, development and reconstruction within and of our society' and whether the prosecution could cause renewed trauma and conflict where reconciliation has already taken place.[319]

---

[316] Interview with Desmond Tutu in Cape Town (March 22, 2006); Interview with Charles Villa-Vicencio in Cape Town (March 29, 2006).

[317] Interview with Desmond Tutu in Cape Town (March 22, 2006).

[318] Ibid.

[319] See supra Chapter 3(3.2).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

Simple issues of governance thereby also come into play as any government is interested in heading a stable society and not one constantly shaken by ethnic conflicts or alienation. There may also be an economic dimension as it is certainly more advantageous in this regard to signal to the international community that the conflicts of the past have ceased indefinitely and the multi-ethnic society and country have stabilised for good.

Apart from these general considerations, concrete practical factors also militate against further wide scale prosecutions. The process of post-TRC prosecutions starts with a legacy of failure.[320] At least as far as the high profile cases are concerned, two very extensive, costly and time consuming trials, the trial of former Minister of Defence Magnus Malan and others, and the Wouter Basson trial ended with acquittals. TRC cases have proved to be very arduous, time-consuming and expensive. The current government has to face an extremely high crime rate[321] and has limited resources for the police and prosecutors.[322] In this regard it is probably reluctant to assign sufficient resources to the prosecution of apartheid crimes, considering the pressing need to deal with current crime and the past examples of failed TRC prosecutions attempts.

On the other hand, the government is aware that the TRC amnesty scheme unequivocally demands prosecutions. It had been commonly acknowledged in the consultations with the apartheid security forces after 1998 that due to this a general amnesty would not be feasible politically.[323] It is clear that abstaining completely from pursuing prosecutions, which would, according to the above findings, suit the government,

---

[320] Interview with Yasmin Sooka in Pretoria (May 3, 2006).

[321] In 2006 18,500 cases of murder, 55,000 of rape and 119,000 of armed robbery were recorded (crime statistics available at http://www.saps.gov.za).

[322] See L. Fernandez 'Post-TRC prosecutions in South Africa' in G. Werle (ed.) Justice in transition (2006) 65 at 77–79. The later constitutional court judge Richard Goldstone had already in 1994 pointed out that the justice system of the new South Africa would simply not be capable to cope with all crimes committed during apartheid (P. Parker 'The politics of indemnities, truth telling and reconciliation in South Africa' (1996) 17 1–2 Human Rights Law Journal 1 at 9).

[323] Interview with Johan van der Merwe in Pretoria (May 5, 2006); Interview with Jan Geldenhuys in Pretoria (May 10, 2006).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

could seriously damage the legitimacy and the reputation of the TRC. Harming the TRC and its beneficial effects for the country is not in the government's interest. Thus, the government faces a dilemma regarding its obvious reluctance to foster prosecutions.

The guidelines were certainly intended to balance these conflicting factors. With them, the government decided that prosecutions would go ahead, turned away from strict indemnity procedures in a court, prima facie leaving it in the hands of the NDPP to decide whether to prosecute. At first glance, this satisfies the TRC's requirement for trials to go ahead. Nevertheless, the intention of the government to restrict the scope of prosecutions could also easily be satisfied by the policy amendment, since it provided for ample and flexible measures to influence any specific criminal proceeding. According to the design of the policy amendment, a prosecution, for example, may be rejected if it is deemed detrimental for reconciliation and nation-building, which is the factor that most obviously introduces political considerations into the prosecution process.

As a result of the considerations outlined above, one must conclude that the government had a tendency to prefer a course of partial and controlled forgetting about the past over comprehensively and unequivocally dealing with past political crimes through criminal proceedings.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:02:56.

Chapter Four

Normative Standards and Practical Prospects for Further Prosecutions

The process of initiating and conducting criminal trials in the wake of the TRC for those who committed politically motivated gross human rights violations during the apartheid conflict has certainly not been dealt with exhaustively. During the decade succeeding the official end of the TRC in 1998, very few trials were initiated. The task to conduct post-TRC prosecutions is, thus, far from conclusion.

The following chapter will highlight the features of the applicable legal framework which must guide the official approach to establishing criminal accountability for politically motivated human rights violations in South Africa. This also includes dealing with statutory limitations and legally consistent prioritisation criteria. Concurrently, the practical prospects for further trials and the question of whether we may expect a significant number of further proceedings will be examined. Although it is not possible to assess here which cases could still be prosecuted, a short collection of cases will be presented, which were either announced by the NPA as exhibiting sufficient prospects for a successful prosecution, or which due to certain specific features are of extraordinary or exemplary relevance for victims and the issue of post-TRC criminal accountability as a whole.

1. Constitutional and International Law Requirements

Criminal proceedings concerning the politically motivated gross human rights violations of the apartheid era are invariably embedded in a legal framework. As such, norms and legal standards from both

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

constitutional as well as international law place specific obligations on the government and also determine the legality of the current official approach and the actual conduct of prosecutions through the NPA. The South African government and the NPA must consider this legal framework and fulfil any legal requirements. The extent to which the State continues to fail to conduct a significant number of criminal trials and its policy of trying to prevent trials on a large scale might be seen as conflicting with such requirements. However, any possible legal obligations and South Africa's compliance therewith will be outlined in the following paragraphs.

1.1 Constitutional law obligations

The politically motivated crimes which were committed in the course of the apartheid conflict violated a range of fundamental human rights, which are meanwhile explicitly protected in the Constitution of democratic South Africa. Many apartheid opponents were abducted, tortured and killed by the security forces simply for their resistance to the inhumane regime. Many civilians also died through activities of the liberation movement. The relevant rights of the Constitution's Bill of Rights[1] concerned by such conduct are the right to the respect of human dignity of every human being, as enshrined in section 10 of the Constitution, the right to life, according to section 11 of the Constitution and the fundamental rights of freedom and security emanating from section 12 of the Constitution. Section 12 contains the rights not to be arbitrarily deprived of personal freedom, not to be detained without trial, to be free from all forms of violence regardless whether public or private, not to be tortured and not to be treated in a cruel, inhuman or degrading way, as well as the right to bodily and psychological integrity.

According to section 7(2) of the Constitution the state is obliged to protect, respect, promote and fulfil the Bill of Rights. This obligation is not confined to preventive measures but extends to punitive measures

[1] See sections 7 to 39 of the Constitution.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

if there has been a serious violation of a right contained in the Bill of Rights. Impunity for such serious violations would effectively render the rights meaningless. The prosecution of murder, thus, is a central means to protect the right to life and the prosecution of assault likewise is a central means to protect the right to bodily integrity.[2] The state is accordingly obliged to protect the life of its citizens through the enforcement of the criminal law to the best of the state's abilities.[3] The obligation arises, to the same extent, also for violations of other fundamental rights such as the right not to be subjected to violence and torture.[4] As a result, the state has a constitutional obligation to prosecute offences that threaten or violate the rights of citizens, and this obligation is of central importance in the overall constitutional framework.[5]

The importance of the institution of criminal proceedings where rights are violated is further underlined through section 179 of the Constitution, which establishes the prosecution service and outlines that it needs to exercise its functions without fear, favour or prejudice.[6] It is of specific relevance in the present context, that the prosecution service's obligations apply not only to violations of rights that occurred after the Constitution came into force but also to offences committed beforehand.[7]

1.1.1 The AZAPO rationale

However, according to section 7(3) of the Constitution, constitutional rights can be subject to limitations. The Constitutional Court has elaborated extensively on the limitation of rights in cases of indemnity from prosecution for politically motivated crimes committed in the course of the apartheid conflict. In 1996, the Court dealt with the constitu-

---

[2] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 10 March 2004 at para. 31.

[3] J. de Waal et al., The Bill of Rights handbook 4ed (2001) 242.

[4] Ibid., 259.

[5] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 10 March 2004 at paras. 31–32; S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 at para. 144.

[6] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 10 March 2004 at para. 33; S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 at para. 144.

[7] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 10 March 2004 at para. 37.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

tionality of the amnesty legislation contained in the TRC Act in what commonly became known as the "AZAPO case".[8] The decision is of great significance for the general constitutional principles applicable to prosecuting past human rights violations.

The Court had to decide whether section 20(7) of the TRC Act, which exempts perpetrators who were granted amnesty from criminal and civil liability, contravened the Interim Constitution. It, thus, had to decide under which circumstances the non-prosecution of politically motivated human rights offenders of the apartheid era was constitutionally justified. The applicants in the case[9] argued that the relevant amnesty regulations of the TRC Act were unconstitutional since the state would thereby violate its constitutional duty to prosecute crimes committed during the apartheid regime.[10] Specifically, the applicants claimed that section 20 of the TRC Act would violate section 22 of the Interim Constitution, according to which '[e]very person shall have the right to have justiciable disputes settled by a court of law or, where appropriate, another independent and impartial forum.' The respective provision is now enshrined in section 34 of the Constitution.

From the outset, the Constitutional Court made it clear that an amnesty, that is, the official granting of indemnity or factual impunity,[11]

---

[8] The Azanian Peoples Organisation and others v The President of South Africa and others (CC) Case no. CCT 17/96 25 July 1996. See on the judgment C. Braude and D. Spitz 'Memory and the spectre of international justice: a comment on AZAPO' (1997) South African Journal on Human Rights 269–82; J. Dugard 'Is the truth and reconciliation process compatible with international law? An unanswered question' (1997) South African Journal on Human Rights 258–68; F. Kutz Amnestie für politische Straftäter in Südafrika (2001) 105–32; Z. Motala 'The Promotion of National Unity and Reconciliation Act, the constitution and international law' (1995) 28 Comparative and International Law Journal of Southern Africa 338–62; J. Sarkin 'The trials and tribunals of South Africa's Truth and Reconciliation Commission' South African Journal on Human Rights (1996) 617 at 625–39.

[9] The challenge was brought by the AZAPO, the widow of Steve Biko and relatives of Griffith Mxenge and Florence and Fabian Ribeiro who were murdered by the security police.

[10] F. Kutz Amnestie für politische Straftäter in Südafrika (2001) 106.

[11] Ibid., 7–9.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

impacts on fundamental rights since all persons are entitled to the protection of the law against unlawful invasions of the right to life, respect for and protection of their dignity and the right not to be subjected to torture.[12] The Court pointed out that in case rights are invaded, the victims must have the right to obtain redress before ordinary civil or criminal courts and that the perpetrators must account before such courts for the crimes they commit. The Court was obviously also then of the conviction that, although the Constitution only came into force at a later stage, it nevertheless demands redress for the crimes committed during apartheid. The Court stated that an amnesty effectively obliterates such rights.[13] In the Court's view therefore, the submission that an amnesty constitutes a violation of section 22 of the Interim Constitution, had considerable merits.[14] Accordingly the Constitution needed to authorise such a violation.[15]

In clarifying whether this was the case, the Court mainly focussed on a provision in the epilogue of the Interim Constitution. The part in question is the passage which provides for the enactment of a law on amnesty. As pointed out above, it says that 'amnesty shall be granted in respect of acts, omissions and offences associated with political objectives and committed in the course of the conflicts of the past.'[16] The Court found the epilogue to be of no lesser status than any other provi-

---

[12] The Azanian Peoples Organisation and others v The President of South Africa and others (CC) Case no. CCT 17/96 25 July 1996 at para. 9.

[13] Ibid.

[14] Ibid., at para. 10. In this regard the decision contradicts with later decisions of the Constitutional Court where it explicitly ruled that section 34 of the Constitution, formerly section 22 of the Interim Constitution, only applies to non-criminal disputes (S. v Pennington and Summerley (CC) Case no. CCT 14/97 18 September 1997 at para. 46). Yet the Court in the AZAPO case obviously applied section 22 also to criminal disputes. See also M.E. Bennun 'Amnesty and international law' in C. Villa-Vicencio and E. Doxtader (eds) The provocations of amnesty (2003) 92 at 106 and J. de Waal et al., The Bill of Rights handbook 4ed (2001) 555.

[15] The Azanian Peoples Organisation and others v The President of South Africa and others (CC) Case no. CCT 17/96 25 July 1996 at para. 10. See section 33 of the Interim Constitution and 36 of the Constitution.

[16] See text accompanying supra Chapter 1 note 41.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

sion of the Interim Constitution and found that this section not only permitted the granting of amnesty but even obliged the legislature to pass an appropriate law on amnesty.[17] The Court found two subsequent reasons supporting the constitutionality of the amnesty provision.

First, the special political circumstances of the negotiation and transition period of the early to mid 1990s were taken into account.[18] The Court pointed out that the crucial factor for upholding the amnesty provisions was that without amnesty the 'historic bridge', as outlined in the epilogue, might never have been successfully erected.[19] Amnesty in this sense was, according to the Court, a vital means of effecting a successful and peaceful transition to a democratic society.[20] It stated that the negotiated hand-over of power to a democratically elected government with the full support of the former state forces and the agreement on a democratic constitution might not have been reached, was it not for the epilogue's provision on amnesty as a means to promote nation-building and reconciliation.[21]

Secondly, the Court took into account the fact that it would be of overwhelming importance for the victims of political violence, the nation as a whole as well as the project of nation-building to uncover the truth about the apartheid crimes in order to establish a better public record of the past atrocities. To achieve this only by means of criminal investigation would, due to the secretive methods involved, widespread cover-ups and the dearth of investigations during the apartheid era, be very difficult. Accordingly, it would be necessary to offer incentives

---

[17] The Azanian Peoples Organisation and others v The President of South Africa and others (CC) Case no. CCT 17/96 25 July 1996 at para. 14.

[18] The Court made extensive reference at various points to the difficult task of negotiation, transition and the spirit of reconciliation encapsulated in the Interim Constitution (The Azanian Peoples Organisation and others v The President of South Africa and others (CC) Case no. CCT 17/96 25 July 1996 at paras. 2–4, 17, 21, 48).

[19] The Azanian Peoples Organisation and others v The President of South Africa and others (CC) Case no. CCT 17/96 25 July 1996 at para. 19.

[20] Ibid., at para. 32.

[21] Ibid., at para. 19.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

to those who are aware of the information by means of amnesty to uncover the truth about past human rights abuses.[22]

The reasons can be summarised to the effect that amnesty was justified on the basis of the epilogue and was required by the objectives of effecting a peaceful transition to democracy and uncovering the truth about criminal acts committed during the apartheid era.

1.1.2 The present approach and the constitutional framework

In examining whether the State's present approach to post-TRC criminal accountability does justice to these constitutional requirements or to what extent it might be unconstitutional, we must recall once again two features which characterise this present approach.

For one, there have been very few criminal proceedings in TRC-related cases after 1998. After 2003, when proceedings were actually meant to be pursued by the centrally located PCLU, the number of proceedings declined even further. Only two significant prosecutions, those in the Blani and Chikane cases, have been concluded by the PCLU between 2003 and 2008. Only the prosecution in the PEBCO-Three case is currently pending. It has been pointed out that there are many practical restrictions that bar the PCLU from making greater progress in terms of the number of prosecutions. However, there have certainly not been as many prosecutions as were potentially possible,[23] even when the significant constraints on resources are taken into account. Thus, the NPA is, to a certain degree, simply refraining from investigating and prosecuting cases, thereby, to a certain extent, creating a state of de facto indemnity. The government contributes significantly to this state of impunity by not giving the NPA the support it would need to go further. Instead it has, as shown above, attempted to restrict prosecutions from progressing further. Although the NPA is independent under the terms of section 179 of the Constitution, the government restricted potential criminal proceedings and sought to put in place measures to further limit their potential.

---

[22] Ibid., at para. 17.

[23] See for concrete practical prospects infra Chapter 4(5).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

It is certainly possible that the constitutional obligation to prosecute only extends to that which is reasonably and practically possible, and, thus, must also take account of the very limited resources available to the NPA and other pressing needs of the state. However, to the extent that the NPA deliberately refrains from instituting criminal proceedings in cases exhibiting sufficient prospects of success, it violates this constitutional obligation. The minimal progress in reaching anywhere near the maximum capacity for prosecutions does not do justice to these constitutional requirements and the NPA and the government are obliged to do more.

The other critical circumstances are discretionary decisions of the NDPP not to prosecute, either based on the ordinary prosecution policy of the NPA or on any possible amendment of the policy applicable to TRC-related cases. It has already been pointed out that, unlike countries that adopted the so-called Principle of Legality which obliges prosecutors to pursue every crime, in South Africa prosecutors generally have a wide discretion as to whether to indict a perpetrator or not.[24]

As already mentioned above, the High Court of Pretoria abstained from analysing the underlying constitutional provisions when coming to the conclusion that the policy amendment, which was intended to guide the use of discretion, is unconstitutional. However, the government's intended policy approach needs to be examined on a basis similar to the amnesty law during the 1990s. The fact that the amendments were not introduced as a law, that they do not outline a legally binding concrete result and that the NDPP's generally prosecutorial decisions according to the general prosecution policy neither effect criminal nor civil liability does not exempt them from constitutional muster similar to that of the TRC Act in the AZAPO litigation before the Constitutional Court. Once again without systematic constitutional law analysis, the High Court concluded accordingly when adjudicating the amendments. It confirmed that the guidelines create the possibility for the prosecutors to grant perpetrators de facto indemnity. What is generally crucial in this regard is that decisions of the NDPP not to institute a prosecution are [24] M. Schönteich Lawyers for the people (2001) 19–20.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

tantamount to legal amnesty, as perpetrators would effectively receive impunity. It has already been pointed out that private prosecutions are simply not a realistic option for apartheid era victims.[25]

Moreover, according to section 8(1) of the Constitution, the Bill of Rights binds all state organs. Generally therefore, it cannot make a difference whether perpetrators are not prosecuted on the basis of a law or an administrative policy, as long as this results from a decision of a state organ and effectively grants the perpetrator immunity from criminal accountability. It also flows from section 179(2) of the Constitution, which states that '[t]he prosecuting authority has the power to institute criminal proceedings on behalf of the state, and to carry out any necessary functions incidental to instituting criminal proceedings', that the institution of criminal proceedings is a matter of importance to the state. Indeed, it is one of the primary tasks of the state connected to its constitutional duty to protect the Bill of Rights.[26] Thus, it is clear that the NDPP cannot simply justify a decision not to prosecute by referring to the possibility to prosecute privately. The High Court strongly confirmed this trite perception, when plainly stating that it is not for victims to investigate crimes.[27] Accordingly, it would be inappropriate to evaluate discretionary decisions not to prosecute differently to the amnesty law simply with reference to the fact that criminal and civil liabilities legally remain intact.

Decisions of the NDPP to preclude prosecution, whether based on specific guidelines or on the general prosecution policy, effectively obliterate the victims' rights to judicial redress and their human rights in the Bill of Rights in the same way recognised by the Constitutional Court in the AZAPO decision on the amnesty law.[28] Yet there is no constitutional provision in the current constitution which, like the epi-

---

[25] See text accompanying supra Chapter 3 note 230.

[26] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 10 March 2004 at para. 33; S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 at para. 144.

[27] Nkadimeng and others v The National Director of Public Prosecutions and others (Transvaal Provincial Division) Case no. 32709/07, unreported, at para. 16.2.3.3.

[28] The Azanian Peoples Organisation and others v The President of South Africa and others (CC) Case no. CCT 17/96 25 July 1996 at paras. 9–10.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

logue of the Interim Constitution, authorises the state not to prosecute gross human rights violations which occurred under apartheid.

However, item 22 of schedule 6 of the Constitution extends the provisions of the Interim Constitution's epilogue to the present constitution as it provides that:

> Notwithstanding the other provisions of the new Constitution and despite the repeal of the previous Constitution, all the provisions relating to amnesty contained in the previous Constitution under the heading 'National Unity and Reconciliation' are deemed to be part of the new Constitution for the purposes of the Promotion of National Unity and Reconciliation Act, 1995 (Act 34 of 1995), as amended, including for the purposes of its validity.

However, commentators have pointed out that this section is only applicable to maintain the purposes of the TRC Act, thus, providing for the option of amending it only in terms of its defined scope and ambit.[29] Undoubtedly the section does not constitute a general extension of the epilogue's broad requirement to grant amnesty into the future. Thus, it is not possible to base a completely new process of indemnity on it. It is clear that it was not the intention of the legislator to provide for any new and separate indemnity process in the new Constitution.

Apart from the epilogue, the Constitutional Court's other main consideration in upholding the amnesty law were the necessities of the political situation during the negotiation period. The situation was very unstable and the country found itself on the brink of open civil war. The support of the security forces for the transition needed to be assured. Commentators consequently pointed out that an expiry of the transition period alters the evaluation of any further amnesty mechanism drastically.[30] There can be no doubt that at present the South African state has stabilised significantly and the new democratic order is well established. There are certainly no forces in the country, which are willing or capable of threatening the stability of South Africa

[29] J. Klaaren and H. Varney 'A second bite at the amnesty cherry?' in C. Villa-Vicencio and E. Doxtader (eds) The provocations of amnesty (2003) 265 at 281.

[30] Ibid., 279.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

in any significant way.[31] Thus, there is no constitutional authority, which could now, some 13 years after the first democratic elections, justify the extended non-prosecution or indemnification of apartheid era political crimes.

However, the general prosecution policy concerning the prosecutor's conduct with regard to the exercise of prosecutorial discretion states in paragraph 4.(c), that in cases where a reasonable prospect for a successful prosecution was established, a decision not to prosecute might nevertheless be taken by the prosecutor if the public interest so demands. This test needs of course to be applied on a case by case basis, but nevertheless indicates that with regard to TRC-related cases the public interest might be used to justify non-prosecution in terms of the general prosecution policy in certain cases. Constitutional considerations must certainly be taken into account when applying the general prosecution policy, as a decision that is in blatant opposition to important constitutional principles can hardly be claimed to be in the public interest. The benefit of enhancing the public knowledge on past atrocities by offering perpetrators incentives to disclose was identified by the Constitutional Court as a major aspect of the public interest when upholding the legality of the amnesty legislation.

However, this factor was only one of many in the Court's considerations. When considered alone, it is clearly outweighed by the following considerations: the public interest in prosecution is strengthened by the mere gravity of the crimes in question. According to section 7(1) of the Constitution, the Bill of Rights is considered a cornerstone of South Africa's new democracy. Accordingly, it hardly seems possible, in general terms, to declare the non-prosecution of violations of its central values, such as the right to life, to be in the public interest. Furthermore, as made clear at the outset, the TRC's legal scheme on amnesty demands the prosecution of those who were not granted amnesty. Not only might the legitimacy of the whole mechanism be seriously harmed should prosecutions not follow, but victims who relied on the central proposition of post-TRC prosecutions when accepting [31] Interview with Charles Villa-Vicencio in Cape Town (March 29, 2006).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

the indemnification of perpetrators might justifiably feel betrayed. Furthermore, a central statement of the Constitution is, according to its section 1(a), that South African democracy is based on the values of the advancement of human rights, freedom and equality to which the Bill of Rights gives specific expression. Constitutional Court judge Albie Sachs has pointed out that:

> Nothing shows greater disrespect for the principles of equality, human dignity and freedom than the clandestine use of state power to murder and dispose of opponents. It follows that any exercise of judicial power which has the effect of directly inhibiting the capacity of the state subsequently to secure accountability for such conduct goes to the heart of South Africa's new constitutional order.[32]

This statement forcefully demonstrates how important it is for the public interest to prosecute the crimes committed by the apartheid security forces. To do otherwise would be in blatant opposition to these principles, undermine the rule of law according to section 1(c) of the Constitution and would do nothing to promote a human rights culture. Any decision not to prosecute that is not prompted by practical realities, such as availability of evidence, thus, cannot be justified. Moreover, due to the aforementioned forceful assertion of constitutional rights and values, the Constitution implicitly prohibits the use of discretion in this regard altogether, as it would subtract from these fundamental legal pillars. In a legal sense and in the public interest the Constitution even obliges the NPA to prosecute violations of the Bill of Rights wherever possible.

The High Court of Pretoria accordingly and correctly declared the policy amendment unconstitutional. The government is barred from introducing a similar indemnity process in the future. Any discretionary decision of the NPA not to prosecute gross human rights violations, although there is sufficient evidence and a prospect of success is therefore unconstitutional. Furthermore, the lack of progress on criminal [32] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 10 March 2004 at para. 112 (separate opinion of Sachs J.).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

proceedings does not do justice to the Constitution's general requirement to protect the Bill of Rights by applying the criminal law. Thus, the government is obliged to provide more support and must refrain from restrictive interference.

1.2 International law obligations

The question whether the South African state's present conduct of criminal investigations and prosecutions of politically motivated human rights violations satisfies legal requirements also has implications under international law, as many of the crimes might constitute international crimes. The litigation at the Constitutional Court in the Basson case already highlighted that international law places obligations on the NPA and national courts regarding criminal accountability for past human rights abuses, which must certainly be considered to a far higher degree in the future than has thus far been the case.[33] The following subchapter seeks to outline in broad terms whether the South African state is obliged, under international law, to institute criminal proceedings when there is evidence supporting charges in cases of political human rights violations during the apartheid era, and likewise whether refraining from instituting criminal proceedings under such conditions violates international law. 'Prosecution' in this context refers to the criminal investigation, charging and possible sentencing of perpetrators alleged to have committed the type of crimes referred to previously, if there is sufficient evidence that there is a reasonable prospect of a successful conviction.[34]

In the South African context, academic research has focussed largely on the question of whether the TRC amnesty programme violated international obligations.[35] Although the question of whether states

---

[33] See supra Chapter 2(2.3).

[34] See K. Ambos Straflosigkeit von Menschenrechtsverletzungen (1997) 163.

[35] J. Dugard 'Dealing with crimes of a past regime. Is amnesty still an option?' (1999) 12 Leiden Journal of International Law 1001–15; J. Dugard 'Is the truth and reconciliation process compatible with international law? An unanswered question' (1997)

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

have a duty under international law to prosecute must be assessed under the same premises, determining the legality of an amnesty under international law must be done in a particular way. While a general and unconditional amnesty would not be acceptable under international law, the South African scheme on conditional amnesty needed to be judged in a differentiated manner.[36] A restricted amnesty was inevitably necessary and legally permissible for the restoration of peace in the transitional society.[37] As has already been outlined above, the TRC Act fulfilled these conditions. However, the same circumstances no longer apply with the passage of time. These specific national features which were considered with respect to amnesty laws, thus, cannot be considered when determining whether South Africa has a duty under international law to prosecute.

It is clear that under certain circumstances international law imposes an obligation on states to prosecute international crimes, such as crimes against humanity or war crimes.[38] Duties to prosecute derive first and foremost from international covenants but might also derive from customary international law.[39] It is necessary to consider whether the criminal acts of the apartheid forces committed abroad or in South Africa by SADF or police members constitute crimes under international law covered by international law obligations.

South African Journal on Human Rights 258–68; A. du Bois-Pedain Transitional amnesty in South Africa (2007) 300–35; G. Werle Principles of international criminal law (2005) paras. 188–92; M.E. Bennun 'Amnesty and international law' in C. Villa-Vicencio and E. Doxtader (eds) The provocations of amnesty (2003) 92–114. See also The Azanian Peoples Organisation and others v The President of South Africa and others (CC) Case no. CCT 17/96 25 July 1996.

[36] G. Werle Principles of international criminal law (2005) paras. 190–91; J. Dugard 'Dealing with crimes of a past regime. Is amnesty still an option?' (1999) 12 Leiden Journal of International Law 1001 at 1009–13; C. Kress 'War crimes committed in non-international armed conflicts and the emerging system of international criminal justice' (2000) 30 Israel yearbook on human rights 103 at 167–68.

[37] Ibid.

[38] G. Werle Principles of international criminal law (2005) para. 177.

[39] Ibid., para. 179.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

1.2.1 Treaty law

Various statutory sources of international law impose specific duties on states to institute criminal proceedings if treaty obligations are breached. As such, the four Geneva Conventions of 1949[40] and the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment of 26 June 1987 (hereinafter "Torture Convention") are of particular relevance.

Each of the four Geneva Conventions outlines a catalogue of prohibited grave breaches of prohibitions of the Conventions.[41] Common to them all are, inter alia, any wilful act of killing, torture or inhuman treatment including biological experiments, wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health, unlawful deportation or transfer or unlawful confinement of a protected person. Apart from defining the breaches, each Convention explicitly obliges signatory states to provide for effective legal sanctions to prohibit grave breaches and 'to search for persons alleged to have committed, or to have ordered to be committed, such grave breaches' and to 'bring such persons, regardless of their nationality, before its own courts'.[42] These provisions undoubtedly convey a duty to prosecute perpetrators of grave beaches.[43] South Africa acceded to the Geneva Conventions in 1952.[44] The Conventions' application is, however, according to Article 2 common to the four Conventions (hereinafter "Article 2"), primarily confined to international armed conflicts. Purely internal conflicts are generally excluded from the Conventions' ambit.

---

[40] Convention I for the Amelioration of the Condition of the Wounded and Sick in Armed Forces in the Field; Convention II for the Amelioration of the Condition of Wounded, Sick and Shipwrecked Members of Armed Forces at Sea; Convention III relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War; Convention IV relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War; Geneva 12 August 1949.

[41] Article 50 Convention I, art. 51 Convention II, art. 130 Convention III, art. 147 Convention IV.

[42] Article 49 Convention I, art. 50 Convention II, art. 129 Convention III and art. 146 Convention IV.

[43] M. Scharf 'The letter of the law: the scope of the international legal obligation to prosecute human rights crimes' (1996) 59 Law & Contemporary Problems 41 at 44.

[44] J. Dugard International law (1994) 56.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

With regard to the South African context, three major fields of operation of the apartheid security forces need to be distinguished: first, the security police's activities in resisting the liberation movement's opposition efforts inside South Africa; second the state's actions against the guerrilla activities of the Namibian liberation movement SWAPO; and finally, the military operations conducted by the SADF in Angola, the war against the Angolan army and Cuban forces.

The South African conflict between the security forces and the national liberation movements is of a genuinely internal character, notwithstanding the fact that on various occasions the ANC was attacked outside South Africa's borders. The character of the conflict with SWAPO in Namibia is less obvious.[45] South-West Africa was, at the time, de facto, a part of South Africa. In 1920 the territory was entrusted to South Africa by the League of Nations and, although the United Nations (hereinafter UN) subsequently revoked the mandate, South Africa remained entirely in charge of the political and administrative instruments of the territory.[46] The country only gained independence in 1990. It is, thus, not possible to characterise Namibia of the time as a sovereign state.[47] Thus, the conditions of this conflict do not qualify it as an international conflict. The war fought against Angola, which was started during the 1970s and drastically intensified during the 1980s, however, must certainly be classified as an international armed conflict in terms of Article 2 of the Conventions. South Africa is under an obligation in terms of the four Geneva Conventions to prosecute possible grave breaches which occurred during this war.[48]

An obligation to prosecute human rights violations committed in Namibia and South Africa might, however, be established under article

[45] See for human rights violations committed during security force operations in Namibia: TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 2, paras. 73–157.

[46] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 at paras. 194–196.

[47] The Constitutional Court in the Basson matter explicitly refrained from exploring the precise characterisation of the conflict with SWAPO (S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 at para. 179).

[48] See for human rights violations committed by the SADF in Angola: TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 2, paras. 10–72.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

3 common to the Geneva Conventions (hereinafter "Article 3"), which lays down minimum standards, which must be fulfilled in non-international armed conflicts. According to Article 3, persons not actively taking part in the armed conflict shall not be subjected to inter alia violence to life and bodily integrity, in particular, murder of all kinds, mutilation, cruel treatment and torture. The application of Article 3 to the conflict in South Africa and the SWAPO conflict would, however, mean that the threshold of an 'armed conflict' was reached. This is the case in protracted states of armed violence between governmental authorities and organised armed groups.[49] The fight against SWAPO guerrilla activities, which took place mainly in the northern border regions of Namibia's Owamboland but also in Angola, was conducted primarily by military means and certainly reached high levels of prolonged armed violence.[50] It has also been classified as an armed conflict by the Constitutional Court, which stated in the Basson judgment that, regardless of whether the conflict in Namibia was international or not, the minimum standard of Article 3 would apply.[51]

Whether the same can be concluded with regard to the conflict with the liberation movement, mainly ANC and PAC, in South Africa is rather doubtful. In contrast to riots and occasional disruptions and clashes, an armed conflict requires high levels of protracted violent conflict.[52] The apartheid conflict, however, never reached the stage of full-scale civil or guerrilla warfare. Although political unrest climaxed during the 1980s, it was largely confined to township areas and the liberation movement never seriously threatened the apartheid state by military means.[53] The Constitutional Court consequentially stated in its AZAPO decision of 1996 that it was not convinced that the conflict

[49] C. Kress 'War crimes committed in non-international armed conflicts and the emerging system of international criminal justice' (2000) 30 Israel yearbook on human rights 103 at 117.

[50] See TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 2, paras. 1–157.

[51] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 at para. 179.

[52] M. Scharf 'The letter of the law: the scope of the international legal obligation to prosecute human rights crimes' (1996) 59 Law & Contemporary Problems 41 at 44.

[53] See also A. du Bois-Pedain Transitional amnesty in South Africa (2007) 323–24.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

reached levels required for an armed conflict in terms of Article 3.[54] Thus, Article 3 applies in the Namibian context but does not apply to the conflict within South Africa.

However, does this mean that South Africa has an obligation under the Geneva Conventions to prosecute the political crimes committed during the Namibian conflict? The Convention's formulation of an obligation to prosecute extends explicitly to cases of grave breaches and does not deal with Article 3. It is nevertheless pointed out by legal scholars that the prohibitions of Article 3 must be viewed as included in the grave breaches doctrine, since only such an interpretation would do justice to the development of human rights protection mechanisms during the preceding decades.[55] Such an approach seems questionable, considering the conscious separation of Article 3 and the grave breaches doctrine in terms of the state's duty to prosecute. However, it must be borne in mind that this differentiation stems from a conviction to maintain a strict separation of internal and international conflicts. This approach has become increasingly blurred in international law, especially since the ruling of the International Court of Justice in the Nicaragua case.[56] With regard to such developments, there is in fact no justification to treat breaches of Article 3, which occurred in internal conflicts, different from those that occurred in international conflicts. Civilians must, therefore, also be treated as protected persons. The Constitutional Court has also strongly expressed its willingness to accept an overlap of internal and international conflicts in analysing the application of Article 3 in the framework of the overall protection regime of the Geneva Conventions.[57] Thus, breaches of Article 3 must be interpreted as constituting grave breaches in terms of the Conven-

[54] The Azanian Peoples Organisation and others v The President of South Africa and others (CC) Case no. CCT 17/96 25 July 1996 at para. 29.

[55] G. Werle Principles of international criminal law (2005) para. 180.

[56] K. Ambos Straflosigkeit von Menschenrechtsverletzungen (1997) 185.

[57] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 9 September 2005 at para. 179.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

tions.[58] The duty to prosecute as outlined in the Geneva Conventions, thus, extends to violations of the rules for internal armed conflicts.

The effect of this interpretation is that South Africa has an obligation under the Geneva Conventions to prosecute any breach of Article 3 that occurred in the conflict with the SWAPO liberation movement in Namibia.

Further obligations regarding the internal conflicts might derive from the two additional 1977 Protocols to the Geneva Conventions. Article 1(4) of Protocol I[59] supplements Article 2 of the Geneva Conventions so that jurisdiction is extended to armed conflicts fought against colonial domination and alien occupation and against racist regimes in the exercise of the right of self-determination.[60] Thus, the full application of the Geneva Conventions according to Article 2 is extended to the situations outlined in Protocol I. The Protocol was apparently motivated to a large degree by the apartheid conflict in South Africa.[61] The outlined situations clearly fit the Namibian conflict. Protocol II[62] supplements Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions to the effect that it shall include

---

[58] G. Werle Principles of international criminal law (2005) para. 180; K. Ambos Straflosigkeit von Menschenrechtsverletzungen (1997) 186; A. du Bois-Pedain Transitional amnesty in South Africa (2007) 306. See further on the distinction between international and non-international conflict C. Kress 'War crimes committed in non-international armed conflicts and the emerging system of international criminal justice' (2000) 30 Israel yearbook on human rights 103 at 114–23; T. Meron 'International criminalisation of internal atrocities' (1995) 89 AmJIntL 554–77; Prosecutor v Dusko Tadic, Decision on the defence motion for interlocutory appeal on jurisdiction (AC) Case no. IT-94-1-AR72 2 October 1995 para. 83.

[59] Protocol Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and Relating to the Protection of Victims of International Armed Conflicts (Protocol I), 8 June 1977.

[60] The right is enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations.

[61] J. Dugard International law (1994) 334.

[62] Protocol Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and Relating to the Protection of Victims of Non-International Armed Conflicts (Protocol II), 8 June 1977.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

armed conflicts that take place in the territory of a High Contracting Party between its armed forces and dissident armed forces or other organised armed groups, which under responsible command, exercise such control over a part of its territory as to enable them to carry out sustained and concerted military operations.

Both Protocols, however, again require an armed conflict, which did not exist for the internal South African conflict. Furthermore, the requirements of Protocol II were clearly not met by the expansion of militant opposition activities in South Africa, which were far from being able to exercise sustained military operations in apartheid South Africa. Moreover, South Africa only became party to the Protocols in November 1995, which, thus, have no application for state sponsored crimes committed during the apartheid era.[63] Whether the Protocol I in that exact form codified customary international law, which was already applicable during the period in question, is rather doubtful.[64] This is especially so for South Africa, which specifically refrained from acceding to the Protocols to avoid their possible application to the state's fight against liberation movement activities.[65]

A further treaty source establishing an obligation to investigate and charge perpetrators of gross human rights violations is the Torture Convention. The covenant, which entered into force in 1987, requires each signatory state to ensure that acts of torture are investigated, charged and sentenced.[66] Torture in terms of the Convention is, according to Article 1(1), defined as any act by which severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental, is intentionally inflicted on a person for such purposes as obtaining from him or a third person information or a confession, punishing him for an act he or a third person has committed or is suspected of having committed, or intimidating or coercing

---

[63] The Azanian Peoples Organisation and others v The President of South Africa and others (CC) Case no. CCT 17/96 25 July 1996 at para. 29.

[64] A. du Bois-Pedain Transitional amnesty in South Africa (2007) 323.

[65] J. Dugard 'Is the truth and reconciliation process compatible with international law? An unanswered question' (1997) South African Journal on Human Rights 258 at 265.

[66] See articles 4–7 Torture Convention.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

him or a third person, or for any reason based on discrimination of any kind, when such pain or suffering is inflicted by or at the instigation of or with the consent or acquiescence of a public official or other person acting in an official capacity.

The TRC found that the South African police systematically used torture against the liberation movement for political and often arbitrary reasons, but mostly to force them to cooperate or disclose information about underground activities.[67] There can be no doubt that this practice constitutes torture in terms of the Convention. Yet South Africa only ratified the Torture Convention on 10 December 1998. Moreover, according to a decision of the Committee Against Torture, a treaty body established under Article 17 of the Torture Convention, the Convention only covers incidents, which took place after its entry into force in 1987.[68] It is also not possible to sustain the proposition that South Africa might nevertheless, by acceding to the Convention, have accepted a duty to prosecute all as yet unpunished acts of torture that took place after 1987. Article 28 of the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, to which South Africa is a party, makes it clear that a convention only is applicable to situations which occurred after the entry into force of the convention for the signatory state in question. According to Article 27(2) Torture Convention, it only enters into force 30 days after ratification by acceding states. Thus, no duty to prosecute arises from the Convention for South Africa.

Eventually it is necessary to address the question of whether South Africa is obliged under international conventions to prosecute the racial segregation and discrimination of apartheid as such.[69] According to Article I.1 of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid of 1973 (hereinafter Apartheid

---

[67] TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 5, chap. 2, para. 16.

[68] Report of the Committee Against Torture to the General Assembly on its 45th session on 21 June 1990, supplement No. 44 (A/45/44), Annex V, para. 7.5.

[69] See generally on apartheid as a crime against humanity R.C. Slye 'Apartheid as a crime against humanity: a submission to the South African Truth and Reconciliation Commission' (1998–1999) 20 Michigan Journal of International Law 267–300.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

Convention)[70] signatory states declare apartheid to be a crime against humanity and all racist and discriminatory acts flowing from the apartheid policies as crimes violating the principles of international law. Article II of the Convention outlines policies and practices of racial segregation and discrimination, which typically occurred during the apartheid era, as criminal conduct in terms of the Convention. According to Article IV of the Convention, signatory states are obliged to prosecute persons accused of acts which constitute crimes of apartheid under the Convention.

However, South Africa never became a party to the Apartheid Convention, not even today.[71] The Convention, thus, only establishes an obligation to prosecute the discriminatory policies of apartheid for the present government, if the Convention became part of customary international law. Although the Apartheid Convention was not unanimously adopted by states[72] some commentators have contended that the Apartheid Convention's definition of apartheid as a crime against humanity has meanwhile found expression as customary international law.[73] Also the Rome Statute for the International Criminal Court has incorporated in its Article 7(1)(j) the crime of apartheid as a crime against humanity.[74] Nevertheless, considering the limited international [70] International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, ratification by General Assembly resolution 3068 (XXVIII) of 30 December 1973, entry into force 18 July 1976.

---

[71] J. Dugard 'Is the truth and reconciliation process compatible with international law? An unanswered question' (1997) South African Journal on Human Rights 258 at 262; A. du Bois-Pedain Transitional amnesty in South Africa (2007) 325.

[72] R.C. Slye 'Apartheid as a crime against humanity: a submission to the South African Truth and Reconciliation Commission' (1998–1999) 20 Michigan Journal of International Law 267 at 293.

[73] J. Dugard 'Is the truth and reconciliation process compatible with international law? An unanswered question' (1997) South African Journal on Human Rights 258 at 263; R.C. Slye 'Apartheid as a crime against humanity: a submission to the South African Truth and Reconciliation Commission' (1998–1999) 20 Michigan Journal of International Law 267 at 300.

[74] The Rome Statute, however, only concerns crimes falling in the ambit of the Statute, thus only those committed after its entry into force in 2002 (A. du Bois-Pedain

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

support of the Apartheid Convention's obligation to prosecute,[75] it cannot be said that a specific obligation under customary international law has developed that conveys a specific duty on the South African state to prosecute the politics of apartheid as such. Furthermore, there would be no grounds in South African law to prosecute the political acts of apartheid. The acts of designing and executing the policies of apartheid were not penalised at the time. Within its own system, the legality of apartheid for the past remained intact, even under the new dispensation.[76] This follows from the Interim Constitution,[77] in which the apartheid laws were repealed, but which did not abolish the legality of apartheid retroactively.[78]

1.2.2 Customary international law

Apart from these limited sources in statutory international law, obligations for South Africa to prosecute might also arise out of customary international law.[79] The preamble of the Statute of the International Criminal Court (hereinafter "Rome Statute"), to which South Africa is also a party, states that 'the most serious crimes of concern to the international community as a whole must not go unpunished and that their effective prosecution must be ensured', as well as 'that it is Transitional amnesty in South Africa (2007) 326).

---

[75] R.C. Slye 'Apartheid as a crime against humanity: a submission to the South African Truth and Reconciliation Commission' (1998–1999) 20 Michigan Journal of International Law 267 at 293–95; A. du Bois-Pedain Transitional amnesty in South Africa (2007) 307–8.

[76] G. Werle 'Without truth no reconciliation' (1996) 29 Verfassung und Recht in Übersee—Law and politics in Africa, Asia and Latin America 58 at 63.

[77] Ibid. See section 229 on the continuation of existing laws. See generally H. Corder 'Towards a South African constitution' (1994) 57 4 The Modern Law Review 491–533.

[78] See also M.R. Rwelamira 'Punishing past human rights violations: considerations in the South African context' in M.R. Rwelamira and G. Werle (eds) Confronting past injustices (1996) 3 at 7.

[79] See on the forming of customary international law: J. Dugard International law (1994) 24–32.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

the duty of every State to exercise its criminal jurisdiction over those responsible for international crimes'.[80]

Today, there is overwhelming scholarly support for the contention that customary international law has indeed developed after the second world war so that it places states under a duty to prosecute certain serious crimes under international law.[81] Although it is rather doubtful that this also obliges third party states, regardless of where the crime was committed, it is strongly supported with regard to the state of commission.[82] The progress of human rights protection mechanisms and treaties are cited as support for this contention. These include the International Law Commissions Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace

---

[80] It needs to be pointed out that this passage alone does not constitute a specific obligation (C. Tomuschat 'The duty to prosecute international crimes committed by individuals' in H.J. Cremer et al., (eds) Tradition und Weltoffenheit des Rechts (2002) 315 at 338). Also, the wording 'jurisdiction' might be ambiguous regarding the interpretation of the precise scope of the statement (C. Kress 'War crimes committed in non-international armed conflicts and the emerging system of international criminal justice' (2000) 30 Israel yearbook on human rights 103 at 163).

[81] K. Ambos Straflosigkeit von Menschenrechtsverletzungen (1997) 203; J. Dugard 'Is the truth and reconciliation process compatible with international law? An unanswered question' (1997) South African Journal on Human Rights 258 at 262; D.F. Orentlicher 'Settling accounts: the duty to prosecute human rights violations of a prior regime' (1991) 100 The Yale Law Journal 2537 at 2582–94; C. Tomuschat 'The duty to prosecute international crimes committed by individuals' in H.J. Cremer et al., (eds) Tradition und Weltoffenheit des Rechts (2002) 315 at 342–43; G. Werle Principles of international criminal law (2005) para. 179. C. Kress 'War crimes committed in non-international armed conflicts and the emerging system of international criminal justice' (2000) 30 Israel yearbook on human rights 103 at 162–63 cautions that whether a duty can be established in this regards depends on the methodological approach to determining customary international law. M. Scharf 'The letter of the law: the scope of the international legal obligation to prosecute human rights crimes' (1996) 59 Law & Contemporary Problems 41 at 59 rejects the notion of a customary law duty to prosecute since multiple examples of amnesty laws adopted by states in transition indicate that no consistent state practice in this regard exists.

[82] G. Werle Principles of international criminal law (2005) para. 179; C. Tomuschat 'The duty to prosecute international crimes committed by individuals' in H.J. Cremer et al., (eds) Tradition und Weltoffenheit des Rechts (2002) 315 at 343.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

and Security of Mankind; several declarations and resolutions of the UN General Assembly, such as the adopting of the Principles of International Cooperation in the Detection, Arrest, Extradition and Punishment of Persons Guilty of War Crimes and Crimes Against Humanity;[83] and the great progress made in trying crimes under international law since the Nuremberg trials, i.e. the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda and the International Criminal Court.[84]

Basically, crimes under international law concern acts that involve direct and individual criminal responsibility as laid out by statutory or customary rules of international criminal law.[85] The core crimes under international law are war crimes, crimes against humanity, genocide and the crime of aggression.[86] The international element of crimes under international law is established through the scope and gravity of the acts in question, such as the systematic and large-scale use of force typically by state organs, suggesting that important values of the international community are concerned.[87] Such an international link exists, for instance, in cases of systematic violations of basic human rights.[88] Given the fact that during the apartheid conflict grave human rights violations occurred on a regular and widespread basis over decades, the relevance of international law is obvious.

War crimes are to a large extent covered by the codification of international humanitarian law, which has been referred to above. However, the international law duty to prosecute crimes against humanity as separate crimes under international law is of specific interest in the South African context. Crimes against humanity generally require a

---

[83] General Assembly resolution 3074 (XXVIII) of 3 December 1973.

[84] J. Dugard 'Dealing with crimes of a past regime. Is amnesty still an option?' (1999) 12 Leiden Journal of International Law 1001 at 1003; D.F. Orentlicher 'Settling accounts: the duty to prosecute human rights violations of a prior regime' (1991) 100 The Yale Law Journal 2537 at 2593.

[85] G. Werle Principles of international criminal law (2005) para. 72.

[86] Ibid., para. 74.

[87] Ibid., para. 81.

[88] Ibid., para. 102.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

widespread or large-scale and systematic attack on a population or parts of a population or large groups of civilians.[89] The attack needs to target a specific group, a civilian population or also a political group.[90] The specific disruption of values of the international community in cases of crimes against humanity occurs by systematic or large-scale violations of fundamental human rights of the civilian population.[91] Recent developments mean that crimes against humanity are no longer required to take place in the context of an armed or international conflict.[92]

Torture on a widespread and systematic scale is, on this basis, typically considered to be a crime against humanity.[93] As such, under customary international law torture is understood to be the infliction of severe pain or suffering by a person acting in an official capacity especially if this is part of a widespread or systematic practice.[94] Widespread and systematic use of extrajudicial killings and abductions or enforced disappearance of persons are also typically considered to be crimes against humanity, if such conduct was authorised, supported or acquiesced in by the state or a political organisation.[95]

Of the criminal acts committed by the state security forces during the conflict in South Africa, murder, kidnapping and abduction are some of the most prominent.[96] As has already been pointed out in this book,

---

[89] G. Werle Principles of international criminal law (2005) paras. 82 and 666; C. Tomuschat 'The duty to prosecute international crimes committed by individuals' in H.J. Cremer et al., (eds) Tradition und Weltoffenheit des Rechts (2002) 315 at 340; K. Ambos Straflosigkeit von Menschenrechtsverletzungen (1997) 187–88.

[90] G. Werle Principles of international criminal law (2005) para. 633.

[91] Ibid., para. 84.

[92] K. Ambos Straflosigkeit von Menschenrechtsverletzungen (1997) 188; C. Kress 'War crimes committed in non-international armed conflicts and the emerging system of international criminal justice' (2000) 30 Israel yearbook on human rights 103 at 127; R.C. Slye 'Apartheid as a crime against humanity: a submission to the South African Truth and Reconciliation Commission' (1998–1999) 20 Michigan Journal of International Law 267 at 286.

[93] G. Werle Principles of international criminal law (2005) para. 710.

[94] A. Cassese International criminal law (2003) 119.

[95] Ibid., 74 and 80; G. Werle Principles of international criminal law (2005) paras. 675–77 and 752–57.

[96] See on the use of the security forces of such practices supra Chapters 1 and 2.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

acts of torture were committed by the security forces on a widespread basis. In fact torture of prisoners was a very common tool to get information. Political prisoners were commonly subjected to often severe torture in order to move them to work for the police as informants or to extract information on their colleagues. Torture was so common that thousands of prisoners became victim of such conduct. What in many cases preceded the torture of political captives was the kidnapping of the opposition activist and what usually followed such conduct in cases of denied cooperation was the elimination of the liberation activist. Extrajudicial killings and abductions of apartheid opponents increased significantly from the early 1980s onwards and were a means often used to combat political resistance. It is clear from this that there was a systematic pattern in the state security force's use of torture and, to a lesser but still very significant degree, of kidnapping and murder of political opponents in the quest to quell resistance to apartheid. In terms of the aforementioned definition of crimes against humanity, state organs committed such acts on a large scale and widespread basis. The acts were directed at a political group—the opponents to apartheid.

However, a legal evaluation of this subject denied that the high threshold required for actions to constitute crimes against humanity was met in the South African context.[97] With regard to torture, it is referred specifically to Article 7(2) of the Rome Statute, which requires the crime against humanity to be committed in the furtherance of a state policy to commit such violations. As such, it is pointed out that many of the criminal acts were committed on an operational level only and, though they were certainly accepted or even welcomed by superior authorities as they contributed to the purpose of quashing the resistance, there is not sufficient proof that torture was part of a state policy or even ordered by figures at the highest political levels.[98] The crimes were not committed in a holistic and concentrated effort to violate rights but rather on a case by case basis.

This view, however, is not convincing. The definition of torture in the Rome Statute does not necessarily conform to the understanding [97] A. du Bois-Pedain Transitional amnesty in South Africa (2007) 326–27.

[98] Ibid.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

of torture as a crime against humanity in terms of customary international law. In fact, the customary international law definition of crimes against humanity does not require a policy element.[99] Since the Nuremberg trials, most definitions of crimes against humanity did not encompass a policy element.[100] The policy element in the Rome Statute can be interpreted as a mere reference to the requirements of a widespread and systematic attack.[101] The systematic and widespread nature of the crimes has already been pointed out. Furthermore, the TRC found sufficient indicators that the criminal conduct in question was not something developed solely on an operational level but clearly resulted, at least indirectly, from policy guidelines of the highest state levels demanding a violent, if not even criminal conduct.[102]

Even if one opts for requiring a policy element in terms of persecution on political, ethnic or religious grounds,[103] which it has been pointed out is not required by the customary law definition, the crimes of the South African security forces committed in quashing the resistance to apartheid can be defined as crimes against humanity. The definition employed by the French Cour de Cassation for instance held that crimes against humanity are > …inhumane acts and persecution committed in a systematic manner in the name of a State practising a policy of ideological supremacy, not only against persons by reason of their membership of a racial or religious community, but also against the opponents of that policy whatever the form of their opposition.[104]

---

[99] G. Werle Principles of international criminal law (2005) para. 666.

[100] Ibid.

[101] Ibid., para. 667.

[102] See TRC Report, vol. 5, chap. 6, paras. 84–99.

[103] See J. Dugard 'Is the truth and reconciliation process compatible with international law? An unanswered question' (1997) South African Journal on Human Rights 258 at 263.

[104] Fédération Nationale des Déportés et Internés Résistants et Patriotes and Others v Barbie (France, Cour de Cassation) [1984] 78 ILR 125 at 137.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

It is clear that the human rights violations were committed by the security forces in the course of furthering and protecting the racist and oppressive apartheid state policy of ideological supremacy. The crimes were committed on racial grounds but mainly against opponents for their political opposition, which underlines that the crimes in question must be seen as crimes against humanity. The South African Constitutional Court on occasion of the Basson case also stated that it was firmly convinced that apartheid led to the commission of crimes against humanity, though it did so in rather general terms without explaining whether this held true only for the situation in Namibia or also for the conflict in South Africa.[105]

As a result, the systematic and large-scale use of kidnapping, extrajudicial killings and torture by the apartheid security forces, which was committed to protect the apartheid regime against political opposition, qualifies as crimes against humanity in terms of the above mentioned definitions. Thus, on the basis of the customary international law duty to prosecute crimes against humanity, South Africa is obliged to investigate and prosecute such acts of murder, abduction and torture committed by the apartheid state security forces.[106]

---

[105] S. v Basson (CC) Case no. CCT 30/03 10 March 2004 at para. 37.

[106] Some even argue for a rule under customary international law imposing a duty on states to prosecute every human rights violation committed by organs of a prior regime, even in cases where they occur on an occasional basis without constituting crimes against humanity (D.F. Orentlicher 'Settling accounts: the duty to prosecute human rights violations of a prior regime' (1991) 100 The Yale Law Journal 2537 at 2583–85). In support of this notion reference is made to a wide range of United Nations and intergovernmental organisations' practices and activities with regard to the prohibition of certain human rights violations as well as the incorporation of such a duty in various international instruments such as the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture or the Draft Declaration on the Protection of Persons from Enforced Disappearance prepared under UN auspices. Above the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights is cited for support. It is, however, rather doubtful whether such a rule under customary international law has indeed already developed.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

1.2.3 Conclusion

South Africa is obliged under international law to prosecute any crime constituting a grave breach in terms of the four Geneva Conventions, violations of common Article 3 and acts of the security forces as far as they constitute crimes against humanity under customary international law. The Constitutional Court has pointed out in the Basson judgment the circumstances in which South African courts have jurisdiction to try crimes which were committed in Namibia and abroad.[107]

Any of the international law obligations outlined only concern acts, which are attributable to the state and committed by state organs. If the NPA refrains from investigating and prosecuting members of the apartheid security police, SADF or other state employees who are alleged to have committed political crimes, which constitute grave breaches or breaches of Article 3 or crimes against humanity, despite evidence that there are sufficient prospects of a successful prosecution, South Africa will violate international law. Any legal setup providing for extended non-prosecution of apartheid era human rights offenders would equally constitute a violation of international law.

The government must further, as also explicitly required by the Geneva Conventions, undertake to enact appropriate legislation to provide for criminal proceedings to take place. In this regard it must refrain from enacting restrictive measures since otherwise it would breach its obligations under international law. The reluctant and restrictive approach of the South African government towards criminal proceedings equally does not do justice to the requirements of international law.

2. The Prosecution of Torture and Statutes of Limitation

In the preceding subchapters, it has been shown that under certain circumstances South Africa is obliged to prosecute acts of torture committed during the apartheid conflict, should those acts constitute crimes against humanity. However, there is one major obstacle for the [107] See supra Chapter 2(2.3 and 2.5).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

NPA to comply with this obligation. According to the limitation period in section 18 of the Criminal Procedure Act, the right to lay criminal charges, except for inter alia cases of murder and kidnapping as well as the crime of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes, as contemplated in section 4 of the Implementation of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court Act, lapses after 20 years from the point of time the crime was committed.[108] The prosecution of offences listed in section 18 never becomes statute barred. The 20 year limit is not absolute since prescription is interrupted by the institution of a prosecution.[109]

Concerning the prosecution of the most serious crimes relevant for post-TRC prosecutions, murder, kidnapping and torture, the statute of limitation has the effect that murder and kidnapping are not subject to any time limitation. Torture, however, is prosecuted as assault or assault causing grievous bodily harm, which is covered by the statute of limitation and cannot be prosecuted after 20 years from the time the offence was committed. Thus, section 18 of the Criminal Procedure Act currently precludes the NPA from prosecuting any acts of torture that were committed before 1988. This is especially serious considering the fact that the mid- to late 1980s witnessed a climax in violence in South Africa, which resulted in increased incidents of torture. The massive delay in instituting criminal proceedings in a significant number of post-TRC cases has, therefore, led and continues to lead to many cases of torture being time-barred from prosecution. However, the following subchapter seeks to outline the possibility to argue that under

---

[108] Section 18 of the Criminal Procedure Act ('Prescription of right to institute prosecution') reads:
The right to institute a prosecution for any offence, other than the offences of- (a) murder; (b) treason committed when the Republic is in a state of war; (c) robbery, if aggravating circumstances were present; (d) kidnapping; (e) child-stealing; or (f) rape; (g) the crime of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes, as contemplated in section 4 of the Implementation of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court Act, 2002, shall, unless some other period is expressly provided by law, lapse after the expiration of a period of 20 years from the time when the offence was committed.

[109] See R. v Magcayi 1951 (4) SA 356 (O) and R. v Friedman 1948 (2) SA 1034 (C).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

international law the statute of limitation of section 18 of the Criminal Procedure Act does not apply to torture. It also seeks to point out ways under constitutional law to neutralise the statute of limitation.

Section 18(g) of the Criminal Procedure Act itself exempts certain international crimes from the statute of limitation. It provides that the crime of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes, as contemplated in section 4 of the Implementation of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court Act no. 27 of 2002, are not covered by the statute of limitation. This exemption, however, is only applicable from the point of its introduction in 2002 and is obviously only related to the crimes contemplated in the Rome Statute. Article 29 Rome Statute determines that statutes of limitation are not applicable to crimes within the jurisdiction of the court. This provision required implementation in the national law of signatory states.[110] In South Africa, this was done with the introduction of section 18(g) of the Criminal Procedure Act, which is designed to implement only the Rome Statute, from 2002 forward, and not to apply to all past circumstances of international crimes.

The UN Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes Against Humanity of 16 November 1968 also constitutes an attempt to rule out any obstacles in national law to the prosecution of serious international crimes. According to Article 1 of the Convention, national statutes of limitation shall not be applicable to war crimes and crimes against humanity. However, thus far only 50 states have signed the treaty[111] and South Africa has never been party to it. The rules outlined therein are, thus, not applicable.

It has been argued, however, that there is also a rule under customary international law that precludes the application of national statutes of limitation at least with regard to the most egregious of international crimes, such as genocide, crimes against humanity and torture.[112] Statutes of limitation would contradict the rules penalising such crimes. It is submitted that these crimes are so abhorrent that their authors [110] W.A. Schabas An introduction to the International Criminal Court 3ed (2007) 233.

[111] See http://www.ohchr.org/english/countries/ratification/6.htm.

[112] A. Cassese International criminal law (2003) 319.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

must be invariably punished, otherwise the important deterrent effect of preventing future reoccurrences could be undermined. Furthermore, the universal nature of international crimes is in conflict with various national statutes of limitations.[113] The French Cour de Cassation took a similar view as it ruled that crimes against humanity, in that case the murder of thousands of Jews during World War II, could not be subject to the French statute of limitation.[114] Other commentators have pointed out that whether and to what extent such a rule has become part of customary international law is far from being clear.[115] The moral and technical desirability for the non-application of statutory limitations to serious international crimes, which are the aspects mainly cited in support of a customary rule, is certainly not matched by a consistent state practice and opinio juris in this regard, as necessary for customary international law.[116]

Calls by states in support of a respective rule under international law have largely been made through resolutions of the UN General Assembly, which are not binding.[117] Moreover, the highly limited acceptance of the relevant UN convention and the lack of a consistent widespread practice in national approaches to the issue indicate that a state practice, in terms of customary international law, has yet to be established.[118] The European Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to Crimes Against Humanity and War Crimes of 1974 has equally only been met with minimal support and has not

---

[113] Ibid., 318.

[114] Fédération Nationale des Déportés et Internés Résistants et Patriotes and Others v Barbie (France, Cour de Cassation) [1984] 78 ILR 125 at 315.

[115] G. Werle Principles of international criminal law (2005) para. 553.

[116] C. Kress 'War crimes committed in non-international armed conflicts and the emerging system of international criminal justice' (2000) 30 Israel yearbook on human rights 103 at 164–65.

[117] W.A. Schabas An introduction to the International Criminal Court 3ed (2007) 233–34. See General Assembly resolutions 3(I); 170(II); 2583(XXIV); 2712(XXV); 2840(XXVI); 3020(XXVII); 3074(XXVIII).

[118] S.R. Ratner and J.S. Abrams Accountability for human rights atrocities in international law (2001) 143–44; H. Kreicker 'Die völkerstrafrechtliche Unverjährbarkeit und die Regelung im Völkerstrafgesetzbuch' (2002) Neue Justiz 281 at 285.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

entered into force yet.[119] Moreover, the process of drafting the Rome Statute for the International Criminal Court highlighted that the various delegations were clearly not in agreement as to the acceptance of rules under international law concerning statutes of limitation.[120] Furthermore, in the South African context, the most serious crimes of concern, such as murder, are, unlike the regulation of the respective legislation in France, which was examined by the Cour de Cassation,[121] exempted from the South African statute of limitation. Thus, a rule does not exist under customary international law that precludes the applicability of section 18 of the Criminal Procedure Act with regard to torture.

However, the non-applicability of the provision with regard to torture might also be argued under South African constitutional law.[122] During apartheid, the crimes of the security forces were virtually never prosecuted and operatives were protected by a system and policy of non-prosecution.[123] This practice of impunity is contrary to the values of human rights and the rule of law according to the democratic constitution. Thus, it might be argued that compelling constitutional implications require an interpretation of the statute of limitation to the effect that the limitation period is interrupted during the apartheid period when there was not a prospect of prosecution.[124] In the preceding subchapters it was pointed out that deliberate impunity for state sponsored, political and gross human rights violations is in stark conflict with fundamental constitutional values and international law. The state of impunity for state sponsored political crimes during the apartheid era is, thus, absolutely incompatible with the present constitutional order. The Constitutional Court found that the duty to prosecute extends to

---

[119] Ibid.

[120] Ibid.

[121] See W.A. Schabas An introduction to the International Criminal Court 3ed (2007) 233.

[122] See V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 67–69.

[123] K. Koppe Wiedergutmachung für die Opfer von Menschenrechtsverletzungen in Südafrika (2005) 26.

[124] V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 69. Nerlich, however, rejects this proposition considering that with murder and kidnapping the most serious crimes of apartheid remain prosecutable.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

crimes committed before the Constitution came into effect. The same should be true concerning a possible interruption of the statute of limitation during times before its entry into force. These circumstances indeed provide good grounds to assume that compelling constitutional circumstances mean that the statute of limitation was interrupted during the state of systematic impunity for security force violence. Only from 1994 and more specifically from the coming into force of the Interim Constitution on 27 April 1994 onwards was there a realistic prospect and possibility for apartheid crimes to be prosecuted.

German courts took a similar view in the prosecution of political crimes committed under the Nazi regime and in the former socialist GDR. According to the Bundesgerichtshof, the German Federal Supreme Court, the German statute of limitation's limitation period was suspended until the capitulation of the German army in May 1945 if the crimes in question were condoned or ordered by the former regime and not prosecuted due to an unlawful policy of impunity for politically motivated gross human rights violations.[125] Similar findings were made with respect to certain crimes of state forces of the GDR and legislation was enacted accordingly after 1990.[126]

Academics have pointed out yet another way of neutralising the statute of limitation. It has been argued that the crimes of the security forces could be prosecuted directly as international crimes which, according to section 232 of the Constitution, would be directly applicable in South Africa as international law and not only under national South African law.[127] Section 18 of the Criminal Procedure Act would then have no application, as it is confined to South African crimes, such as assault.

It remains to be seen how, if at all, South African courts will be willing in potential future trials to interrogate and possibly follow such arguments. First, the NPA would be required to adopt a more open attitude to such approaches and not to strictly rely on the statute of limitation.

---

[125] BGHSt 18, 367 (368–369).

[126] BGHSt 40, 48–59; K. Marxen and G. Werle Die strafrechtliche Aufarbeitung von DDR-Unrecht (1999) 5–7.

[127] See V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 81–96.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

3. Strategies and Priorities

The issue of strategy has proved to be of major concern in considering the approach towards post-TRC prosecutions. In the face of highly limited resources and considering the large number of prima facie politically motivated crimes for which amnesty was not granted, choices invariably have to be made regarding which cases to concentrate on with criminal proceedings.

However, the most important consideration regarding prosecution prioritisation is whether there is sufficient evidence available to prosecute or whether there is a sufficient prospect of gathering more evidence to prosecute successfully. Although there are potentially thousands of cases, most cannot be considered because the availability of evidence is too limited.[128] To a certain degree, the question of who to prosecute will also often be driven by the prosecutors' practical considerations concerning their specific strategy in certain cases. As such, the experience of Jan D'Oliveira has shown that it is often advisable in cases involving different levels of command to prosecute the operatives first in order to be able to establish a solid case against their superiors.[129] Nevertheless, with regard to those cases that would provide a reasonable practical prospect of success, those arguing against trials in the public debate frequently express doubts as to whether it is possible to decide whom to prosecute and whom not to prosecute using consistent criteria.[130] Should the focus be on those who created the policies of apartheid or those who executed orders and should liberation movement members be put on trial in an 'even-handed' way like apartheid agents?[131] Selective prosecutions could fail to establish accountability where the command and political responsibility actually lay.[132] The gross human rights violations committed in the name of the apartheid state were not

---

[128] Interview with Torie Pretorius and others in Pretoria (May 2, 2006).

[129] Interview by Gerhard Werle with Jan D'Oliveira in Pretoria (March 2004).

[130] Interview with Jan Wagener in Pretoria (May 8, 2006).

[131] See on such strategic dilemmas N. Rousseau 'Prosecutions' in E. Doxtader (ed) Provoking questions (2005) 37 at 44–45.

[132] See also A. du Bois-Pedain Transitional amnesty in South Africa (2007) 345.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

a range of isolated acts but flowed from a systematic pattern of abuse that resulted from political guidelines and often from the orders of superiors. Although operatives are generally more easily implicated by evidence, to prosecute them alone and not also those from the higher ranks would, thus, not do justice to the systematic nature of apartheid policies. The question, thus, that needs to be addressed is which criteria should be used to identify higher priority cases.

With the prosecution guidelines for TRC-related cases, a rather inappropriate attempt was made to create prioritisation criteria. The following subchapter will deal with the issue of how to differentiate between cases on a consistent normative basis and will highlight ways concerning how to deal with limited evidence and the need to encourage further perpetrator disclosures.

3.1 Prioritisation

A very noteworthy approach to prioritisation has been presented by a lawyer closely involved with TRC matters.[133] It is suggested that generally the egregiousness and the rank and authority of the perpetrator should govern the decision whether to focus on a case or not. As such, it is viewed as a mitigating factor when a junior perpetrator has acted on the basis of specific instructions issued to him or when a crowd involved in mob violence is concerned. Aggravating circumstances include situations in which the perpetrator acted in a position of great influence, authority and leadership, thus, a position of high personal responsibility that enabled the perpetrator to determine whether and how the specific operation takes place, and which, therefore, could have allowed him to resort to legal means. The egregiousness of the offence in question should be determined on the basis of the proportionality test similar to that outlined for the granting of amnesty by the Amnesty Committee [133] H. Varney Exploring a prosecutions strategy in the aftermath of South Africa's Truth & Reconciliation Commission discussion paper presented at the Foundation for Human Rights and International Centre for Transitional Justice conference 'Domestic prosecutions and transitional justice conference' (Magaliesburg, May 16–19, 2005)(on file with author).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

according to section 20(3)(f) of the TRC Act.[134] Accordingly, an offence should be considered egregious if the political objective pursued is out of proportion to the gravity of the offence, which is determined by the scope and value of the violated human rights. On this basis, three categories of priority are identified: low priority cases involve non-egregious offences committed by junior perpetrators; middle order priority cases involve egregious offences committed at least by low ranks; and high priority cases concern egregious offences committed by senior perpetrators. Low priority cases should not be prosecuted at all. Most attention should be paid to high priority cases and middle order priority cases should be pursued when there are practical demands to do so or when resources allow it.

A number of examples suffice to illustrate the point.[135] The attempted murder of Frank Chikane is a high priority case. It involved a number of high-ranking security force officials, infringed against a high legal value and, considering the fact that Chikane was clearly a non-violent opponent and the objective of the offence was to protect the racist and oppressive apartheid regime, the offence was disproportionate.[136] Generally, an aggravating factor with regard to security forces crimes is that they could have resorted to far less violent means to achieve their goal. Especially during the many states of emergency during the 1980s, the state had a huge range of official legal tools at hand to quash resistance, such as detention for indefinite periods without charge or [134] In terms of the TRC Act the proportionality test determined, inter alia, the polical character of the crime. It is important to remember that the Amnesty Committee applied the proportionality test very generously so that crimes that were clearly disproportionate to their aims were still considered to be politically motivated (A. du Bois-Pedain Transitional amnesty in South Africa (2007) 121–26. The practical implementation of the proportionality test by the Amnesty Committee thus cannot be adopted by the NPA when prioritising cases.

---

[135] H. Varney Exploring a prosecutions strategy in the aftermath of South Africa's Truth & Reconciliation Commission discussion paper presented at the Foundation for Human Rights and International Centre for Transitional Justice conference 'Domestic prosecutions and transitional justice conference' (Magaliesburg, May 16–19, 2005)(on file with author).

[136] Ibid.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

trial and the banning of persons believed to be a security risk. Notwithstanding these options the security police often chose instead to murder their enemies.

The refusal of amnesty to 37 ANC leaders which might relate to the bombing and landmine campaigns and other violent acts ordered during the armed struggle of the ANC is also significant. It is contended that the overwhelming majority of such offences committed under orders of the NEC must be classified as non-egregious since they were proportional to the objective pursued.[137] The objective of the ANC was to liberate the country from an internationally condemned regime of racism and oppression of the population's majority and to establish a system based on democracy and human rights. It must also be pointed out that the liberation movement tried in vain to achieve its goals by means of public and non-violent political protest and only when after decades of massive oppression and intransigence of the apartheid government this proved fruitless did they resort to violent means of protest. Violent acts were overwhelmingly directed at state facilities and police or military personnel. They generally attempted, though often unsuccessfully, to avoid harm to civilians. Such acts, accordingly, cannot be seen as egregious, they should be of low priority. However, there were occasionally individual acts that were primarily directed at civilians that went beyond official ANC policy. Any conscious attack of liberation fighters on defenceless civilians, regardless of ethnic group, cannot be seen as proportional in terms of the struggle for liberation.[138]

The outlined criteria of this prioritisation proposal[139] seem to offer a consistent and plausible way of prioritising factors, as the personal responsibility of commanders is generally greater.

3.2 The call for even-handedness

The considerations regarding prioritisation according to egregiousness and the statements concerning the distinction between the liberation

[137] Ibid.
[138] Ibid.
[139] Ibid.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

movement and state forces also find support in the framework of the Constitution. The South African state is, according to section 1 of the Constitution, founded on the values of human dignity, freedom, equality, non-racialism, democracy and the advancement of human rights. In light of these parameters, acts of murder, torture and abduction, which were committed by the state security forces in order to oppress free and democratic political developments and to maintain a system of racism, inequality and violation of basic human dignity, in legal terms, cannot simply be equated with acts that were committed in a violent liberation struggle, conducted as a last resort and aimed only at state forces in order to establish these very constitutional values.

The decisive circumstance regarding the legal evaluation of 'even-handedness' lies, however, with the relevance of international law. As has been outlined above, the systematic, large-scale and widespread use of torture, extra-judicial killings and kidnapping of opposition activists by the state security forces are covered by an international law obligation to prosecute. In contrast to this, liberation movement crimes are not crimes under international law or crimes against humanity, since they were not orchestrated by state organs or on behalf of a state. From an international law viewpoint, the liberation movement conducted a lawful and legitimate struggle.[140] This strongly underlines the comparatively higher egregiousness of security forces crimes. In order for South Africa to fulfil its international law obligations, the NPA's first priority must be to prosecute the outlined systematic crimes orchestrated by the apartheid state forces.

It certainly does not mean that there is no criminal liability concerning e.g. the many civilians who fell victim to the landmine campaign by the ANC. It does, however, mean that on the basis of constitutional requirements as well as of international law requirements, the NPA's primary focus must be on prosecuting criminal acts committed by the security forces in the furtherance of apartheid. Constitutional Court [140] M.R. Rwelamira 'Punishing past human rights violations: considerations in the South African context' in M.R. Rwelamira and G. Werle (eds) Confronting past injustices (1996) 3 at 16.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

judge Albie Sachs underlined this perception when he made it clear that securing accountability for the clandestine use of state power to murder and dispose of opponents 'goes at the heart of South Africa's constitutional order'.[141]

However, the request for 'even-handedness' was nevertheless based on section 9 of the Constitution.[142] Section 9(1) of the Constitution states that everyone is equal before the law and section 9(3) prohibits the unfair discrimination through the State. It would certainly be unacceptable under section 9 to indemnify certain criminals generally while others are held criminally liable. Yet this does not answer the question of which cases must be considered more appropriate for prosecution. Section 9(1) of the Constitution only rules out differentiations that are not justified on reasonable grounds.[143] The abovementioned legal circumstances in international and constitutional law clearly provide such reasonable grounds for a differentiation.

The request for even-handedness towards apartheid crimes and liberation movement crimes, thus, is not of perceptible legal merit and must be considered as merely political. It should not be considered in any decision-making process of the prosecution authorities concerning on which cases to focus. There is no legal authority demanding equal prosecution of liberation movement and security force members and the process of post-TRC prosecutions would not be discredited in legal terms should the NPA primarily focus on former state forces. Nevertheless, for other societies in transition, opting for a similar system to deal with past atrocities, one must conclude that the new rulers and former liberation fighters must participate in the process unequivocally so that they are not exposed to political claims of unjust proceedings and a lack of 'even-handedness' in prosecutions and to avoid political obstacles to trials.[144]

---

[141] See supra Chapter 4 note 32.

[142] Interview with Jan Wagener in Pretoria (May 8, 2006).

[143] See J. de Waal et al., The Bill of Rights handbook 4ed (2001) 199–222.

[144] It must, however, be pointed out that the ANC did support the TRC amnesty proceedings and encouraged its members to apply for amnesty. Nevertheless there obviously were gaps, as highlighted by the applications of the 37 ANC leaders.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

3.3 Limited evidence

In terms of strategy, another issue needs to be addressed, which is general paucity of evidence in TRC-related cases and the often heavy demands such cases place on prosecutors. Various high profile trials that failed, like those of Malan and Basson but also the Chikane case, where the convictions of Vlok and van der Merwe were not reached due to strong evidence, are proof of such difficulties.

Generally, the crimes of the security forces were committed in great secrecy and evidence was meticulously concealed and never properly investigated by the police.[145] Witnesses of the criminal acts were mostly involved in the deeds themselves. Urging them to cooperate with the State, would require prosecutors to find evidence, which implicates the potential state witnesses themselves.[146] Problems of evidence increase, the higher one looks in the chain of command of the apartheid state. Written orders or records of policy directives to combat the liberation movement by criminal means are rarely obtainable.[147] Furthermore, before the first democratic government was constituted in 1994, apartheid government and security force agents destroyed huge amounts of sensitive documents.[148]

Where the prospect of a successful conviction is limited due to the insufficient capacity to compile more evidence, such difficulties could, at least to a certain degree, be countered by an extended use of plea and sentence agreements in terms of section 105A of the Criminal Procedure Act.[149] The agreements might deal with far reaching issues, such as an admission of the accused regarding the details of the crime.[150] In exchange, the accused could be rewarded with a significantly reduced

---

[145] N. Rousseau 'Prosecutions' in E. Doxtader (ed) Provoking questions (2005) 37 at 45.

[146] Interview with Torie Pretorius and others in Pretoria (May 2, 2006).

[147] N. Rousseau 'Prosecutions' in E. Doxtader (ed) Provoking questions (2005) 37 at 46.

[148] See TRC Report, vol. 1, chap. 8, paras. 1–106; and TRC Report, vol. 5, chap. 6, para. 105.

[149] See also supra Chapter 2(9.2).

[150] Du Toit et al., Commentary on the Criminal Procedure Act service 35 (2006) § 105A 15–7.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

sentence.[151] Thus, perpetrators willing to make disclosures regarding offences they were involved in could do so in exchange for a suspended and/or greatly reduced sentence under a plea bargain, as was already done in the Chikane case. The declared intention of the government to offer incentives for perpetrators to come forward and disclose could thereby be met. The extended use of plea-bargaining could be accompanied by specifically drafted directives applicable only for post-TRC criminal cases in order to meet the specific demands and challenges of post-TRC prosecutions.[152] According to section 105A(11) of the Criminal Procedure Act, the NDPP with the concurrence of the Minister of Justice can issue binding directives for the use and implementation of plea and sentence agreements. Consistent criteria could, thus, outline how to apply plea-bargaining to TRC-related cases, to treat and test information that is provided and to reward perpetrators willing to make full disclosures. It could also provide for victim participation and publication of information.

These measures could also easily replace the policy approach which the government considered, as perpetrators would be encouraged to make full disclosures. The benefit would be that for plea-bargaining the participation of victims is legally required,[153] the court proceedings and its records are accessible to the public, perpetrators have to admit their guilt publicly and although they might only receive low or suspended sentences, are held criminally liable, which avoids complete impunity. Since a court tests the validity of the agreement and assesses the guilt of the accused in a plea-bargaining situation, possibly also through a process of questioning and considering evidence,[154] such procedures certainly have far greater legal legitimacy with regard to the principle of the rule of law under section 1(c) of the Constitution than decisions

---

[151] Ibid., 15–5.

[152] L. Fernandez 'Post-TRC prosecutions in South Africa' in G. Werle (ed) Justice in transition (2006) 65 at 69–70.

[153] E. Du Toit et al., Commentary on the Criminal Procedure Act service 35 (2006) §105A 15–7.

[154] Ibid.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

of the NDPP to grant impunity under unknown and untested circumstances. Plea-bargaining certainly cannot replace trials completely but is advisable where resources and evidence are limited, there is an increased interest for victims to reveal the facts of the case and the interest in avoiding years long, possibly futile, criminal proceedings.

Furthermore, it is trite to point out that the challenges of prosecuting higher echelons of the command structures could, to a certain degree, be met by the use of section 204 of the Criminal Procedure Act. According to section 204(2)(a) of the Criminal Procedure Act, a witness who testifies on behalf of the State shall be discharged from prosecution for the offence in question if the court is satisfied that he has answered all questions put to him frankly and honestly. The provision is designed to protect perpetrators of a crime from criminal liability who have testified for the prosecution against their co-perpetrators.[155] Especially lower level operatives, who are generally more easily implicated since they were the ones carrying out the operations, can be offered indemnity from prosecution should they testify against those from whom they received their orders. As has already been mentioned, the mechanism continues to be of enormous practical value for the PCLU.

The above discussion shows that there are worthwhile strategy approaches for TRC-related cases. However, it is important to remember that an imminent threat of prosecution will nevertheless usually still be required since it is rather unlikely that a perpetrator who previously refused to take part in the amnesty process would, subsequently, volunteer to cooperate with the NPA without such incentive.[156]

4. General Prospects for Further Trials

The fact that dozens of amnesty applications concerning prima facie politically motivated offences were refused due to a lack of full disclosure [155] Ibid., service 33 (2004) § 204 23–50B.

[156] L. Fernandez 'Post-TRC prosecutions in South Africa' in G. Werle (ed) Justice in transition (2006) 65 at 70.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

suggests that, potentially, a great number of cases could still be dealt with by the PCLU. Furthermore, in many instances of politically motivated human rights violations, amnesty was not applied for at all. Thus, from her experience during the TRC, a former Commissioner consequently estimated that a great number cases could still warrant further investigation.[157] This is also suggested by the fact that the TRC handed to the NPA a list containing over 300 references to criminal incidents, which came to light during the TRC investigations and hearings.

However, it has already been pointed out that the actual prospects for further trials depend on the availability of evidence and the willingness of co-perpetrators to testify on behalf of the State, among other things. It has been mentioned in the preceding paragraphs that evidence is often highly limited, especially when it comes to those who occupied the higher echelons of the state. That other former officials of the apartheid government would be willing to follow the example of Vlok's and van der Merwe's voluntary admissions in the Chikane case appears rather unlikely. The two had already cooperated greatly in the process during the TRC, at least compared to other leading apartheid officials and politicians, and were, thus, possibly more willing to cooperate again with the PCLU. Especially leading figures in the ranks of the SADF, who obviously also played a central role in the Chikane case, are likely to continue to refuse to cooperate in even the slightest regard, as was already the case during the TRC proceedings. The continued lapse of time aggravates problems concerning evidence gathering, as witnesses' memory of the crimes, which often happened over 20 years ago, diminish. Some potential witnesses may have passed away, as well as certain alleged perpetrators, such as Gideon Nieuwoudt or security police general Nicolaas van Rensburg. The delay also has other negative consequences, since public and political awareness generally decline.

Another vital precondition for the conduct of successful prosecutions, is that there are sufficient investigative resources and skilled and experienced investigators available to tackle the intricate cases of apartheid

[157] Interview with Yasmin Sooka in Pretoria (May 3, 2006).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

era crimes. However, these are not in place.[158] It has been outlined above that the PCLU generally does not have sufficient investigative resources and funding to conduct prosecutions on a broader basis than has already happened. The PCLU is rather modest and small compared to the task it has to face.[159] Furthermore, apart from TRC cases, it was also assigned other significant responsibilities that demand a lot of its resources.[160] Thus, there is certainly also a need for greater numbers of experienced prosecutors and investigators to conduct the proceedings. Considering these shortcomings in terms of resources, it appears rather unlikely that the PCLU will be capable to proceed with more than a few cases at a time or to guarantee that a broader spectrum of crimes can be prosecuted during a short time frame.

Given these realities, the number of cases that potentially could be prosecuted diminishes significantly in comparison to what could be expected from the number of refused amnesty applications. Consequently, at one stage the PCLU referred to only 16 cases it considered at all prosecutable, five of which were of high priority and had already been investigated to an advanced stage.[161] It is certainly possible that more cases could be pursued, were there more resources available. Thus, in general, apart from problems of evidence, the prospects of further successful trials hinge on whether the government has the political will to promote prosecutions and whether it will assign more resources to the NPA.[162] Yet as has been shown above, the government is clearly lacking political will to support prosecutions and to assign sufficient resources to the process. Moreover, considering the overall resource constraints of the judicial system in the face of the extraordinarily high present-day crime rate, it is unlikely that significantly more resources

---

[158] Interview with Anton Ackermann in Pretoria (May 11, 2006); Interview with Torie Pretorius and others in Pretoria (May 2, 2006).

[159] See N. Rousseau 'Prosecutions' in E. Doxtader (ed) Provoking questions (2005) 37 at 47.

[160] See supra Chapter 2(1.2).

[161] Ibid.

[162] D. Ntsebeza 'The legacy of the TRC' in C. Villa-Vicencio and E. Doxtader (eds) The provocations of amnesty (2003) 23 at 25.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

will be assigned to the PCLU in the future.[163] Should possible future mechanisms of the kind that the government adopted with the prosecution policy amendment prevail over legal challenges, it would have the effect that many cases would not reach the court room.

As has been outlined above, the bleak prospects for further trials will also remain unaffected by the legal option to conduct private prosecutions, since victims and NGOs do not have the means necessary for such proceedings.[164]

Further trials might also potentially be interrupted by certain perpetrators from the ranks of the security police, exercising their right to apply for a review of their amnesty refusal, should they have been clients of Jan Wagener, with the consequences highlighted by the PEBCO-Three prosecution.[165] With regard to the need to have a consistent and short period of prosecutions, it was a bad decision to create the option to apply for a review of certain amnesty decisions years later.

Essentially, we must conclude that, although constitutional as well as international law requires the government to pursue post-TRC prosecutions vigorously, in the circumstances, the prospects for a significant number of further trials are absolutely minimal. However, it is still possible that a small number of cases will nevertheless be prosecuted.

5. Non-Prosecutions

The following subchapter will outline the practical prospects of further proceedings by describing an array of exemplary cases. Given the practical realities such as evidence, the choice of cases is not necessarily what might be desired by specific groups or the public generally. Thus, for instance, the prominent Steve Biko case, which many had expected to be prosecuted, will not go ahead. The popular political activist Steve Biko was the founder of the Black Consciousness movement. He was severely

---

[163] N. Rousseau 'Prosecutions' in E. Doxtader (ed) Provoking questions (2005) 37 at 47.

[164] See text accompanying supra Chapter 3 note 230.

[165] See supra Chapter 2(7.2).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

assaulted and tortured in police custody and died as a result thereof in 1977.[166] Five amnesty applications were refused in this matter, among those that of since deceased Gideon Nieuwoudt.[167] The NPA, however, stated that a prosecution would not be sustainable since sufficient evidence was not available to prove charges relating to the death, and other charges, such as assault, had lapsed under the statute of limitation.[168] As mentioned above, others have called for the prosecution of leading ANC members. The possible grounds for this have already been outlined.[169] However, the list of priority cases at the PCLU allegedly does not contain cases of ANC members[170] and the PCLU has, as had already been mentioned, denied that sufficient evidence would exist to prosecute any of the ANC leaders who were denied amnesty.

Although the NPA has not made public which are its priority cases, the media referencing NPA sources reported that it would focus on, inter alia, the cases of the St. James Church massacre, Nokuthula Simelane, both of which will be described below, and the Cradock-Four.[171] Yet charges in a number of other cases could potentially be pursued. More indications to the practical scope of a possible prosecution can be found regarding the cases outlined below.

5.1 The cases of missing Simelane and Morudu

Cases in which the whereabouts of the victim and the exact circumstances of his or her death remain unknown are of specific relevance.

---

[166] See TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 3, paras. 184–85; TRC Report, vol. 4, chap. 5, para. 12; TRC Report, vol. 3, chap. 2, para. 120.

[167] Decision no. AC/99/0020.

[168] N. Rousseau 'Prosecutions' in E. Doxtader (ed) Provoking questions (2005) 37 at 47.

[169] See supra Chapter 3(4.).

[170] Interview with Sheila Camerer in Cape Town (March 30, 2006) (Camerer claims to have had insight in the list). See also C. Terreblanche Apartheid massacres go to court The Sunday Independent, April 23, 2006.

[171] C. Terreblanche Apartheid massacres go to court The Sunday Independent, April 23, 2006.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

5.1.1 The Nokuthula Simelane case

An example for this is the case of Nokuthula Simelane, which many people, such as the former TRC commissioner Yasmin Sooka, believe should be investigated and prosecuted at the PCLU. The case is an example of a very egregious, yet not untypical, act of security police violence against anti-apartheid activists.

Nokuthula Simelane acted as a courier for MK and was based in Swaziland.[172] Through covert agents of the security police branch of Soweto, Simelane was lured into a trap while she was on a mission in Johannesburg in September 1983. According to the findings of the TRC in this case, Simelane was abducted and brought to a remote farm in the north-west of South Africa, where she was held captive for a period of approximately five weeks. During this period, the security police attempted to get information from her and to recruit her as an informer for the police. She was continuously and seriously assaulted and tortured until she was almost unrecognisable and could barely walk. Yet according to the TRC's findings, all attempts to get information and to recruit her remained fruitless. After Simelane's torture ordeal on the farm, she was taken away without a trace. Her exact fate has never been established with any certainty. It is, however, quite clear that she is dead.

The Amnesty Committee received eight amnesty applications in connection with the events, among them those of the three white security police officers Willem Coetzee, Anton Pretorius and Frederick Mong,[173] who were given the task of overseeing and directing the operation. Applications were also received from two black policemen, Veyi and Selamolela. All, except Veyi, participated in the abduction as well as in the subsequent torture. Compelling differences emerged in the testimonies of the black and white policemen. Whereas the white policemen maintained that Simelane was only tortured during the first [172] Unless otherwise is cited, the information concerning the Simelane case derives from TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 3, chap. 1, paras. 199–206 and TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 3, paras. 287–92.

---

[173] Applications no. AM/4122/96; AM/4389/96; AM/4154/96.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

week of her detention and that she eventually agreed to cooperate as an informer, whereafter she had been returned to Swaziland, the black policemen denied Simelane ever agreed to cooperate. According to them she was held captive for several weeks, during which she was continuously tortured, allegedly also with electric shocks, which was denied by the white policemen. The last time the black policemen saw Simelane was when she was loaded into the boot of Coetzee's car and taken away. She was allegedly in such a bad state that it would have been absolutely impossible to return her to Swaziland. They claim to have been told by another black policeman, who has since died, that Simelane was subsequently shot by Pretorius and Coetzee and buried near Rustenburg.

The Amnesty Committee found strong indicators that the versions of the white security policemen were false and accordingly refused to grant them amnesty for the torture. Amnesty was, however, granted to all applicants regarding the abduction.[174] No conclusion could be reached on her eventual fate but it is highly likely that Simelane was murdered after being kept on the farm.

Although the case is certainly being considered by the PCLU and an investigation had already started before the TRC hearings, which was then pending the amnesty decisions, the case was simply not taken further by the NPA after the Amnesty Committee eventually refused amnesty in May 2001. This inexcusable failure has grave consequences since prospects for a successful prosecution now seem limited. Possible criminal conduct in the Simelane matter concerns kidnapping, assault, assault causing grievous bodily harm and murder. The NPA, however, refuses to investigate charges of assault because of the limitation period of section 18 of the Criminal Procedure Act, according to which the right to pursue assault charges lapses after 20 years.[175] As the torture of Simelane constituted assault in a legal sense, the possibility to charge the white policemen, who had been denied amnesty for the torture, lapsed after 20 years in September 2003. They can also not be

[174] Decision no. AC/2001/185.

[175] Interview with Howard Varney in Johannesburg (May 6, 2006).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

prosecuted for kidnapping, since they all were granted amnesty for Simelane's abduction.[176] What possibly remains are charges of murder. Yet a possible murder seems very hard to prove, as there is apparently not enough evidence and possible witnesses are not forthcoming or have meanwhile passed away.[177]

The case, thus, drastically illustrates the grave consequences of the massive delay of prosecutions. Had the NPA pursued assault charges before 2003, a conviction might have been achieved. Likewise, the alleged perpetrators could have possibly been urged to testify against each other concerning the murder or to fully disclose their knowledge in a plea and sentence agreement. The NPA has also been asked to initiate investigations into the involvement of other security branch members, who possibly participated in the abduction, such as Msebenzi Radebe and Willem Schoon, neither of whom even applied for amnesty.[178]

5.1.2 The Moss Morudu case

Many similar cases exist in which the exact facts concerning the fate of still missing victims remain unknown.[179] One such case is that of the MK operative Moses "Moss" Morudu, in which the notorious and infamous Northern Transvaal security branch was involved. The security police believed that Morudu was part of a special MK unit, the so-called "Icing Unit", which was engaged in eliminating black collaborators with the apartheid regime such as black policemen.[180] On the instruction of Captain Hendrik Johannes Prinsloo, Morudu was abducted in October 1986 from his home in Mamelodi/ Pretoria [176] The attorney Howard Varney, who is presently acting for the Simelane family, has pointed out that the decision to grant amnesty for the abduction was flawed in a legal sense, since the Committee basically failed to distinguish between the two legal terms abduction and kidnapping. The attorney of the family at the time failed to apply for a review of the amnesty decision in this regard on behalf of the relatives. The possibility to apply for review has since lapsed. The option to apply for condonation has been assessed and found not to be promising.

---

[177] Interview with Howard Varney in Johannesburg (May 6, 2006).

[178] Ibid.

[179] See generally TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 4, chap. 1.

[180] TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 3, chap. 1, para. 269.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

and taken to a farm.[181] He was interrogated and brutally tortured for approximately one week.[182] What happened to him afterwards remains unknown. His family, however, had been deceived into believing he had gone into exile.[183]

The only amnesty applications concerning this incident were tendered by three black former security police members.[184] They only applied for their role in the abduction and later captivity of Morudu on the farm and claimed to have no knowledge of what eventually happened to Morudu, since they had not been present or involved for the whole time. They implicated the other security police operatives Hechter, Ludick, dos Santos, Mokhaba, Joe Mamasela and especially Captain Prinsloo, who was allegedly in charge of the operation. All of them denied any involvement.[185] Another officer believed to have been present during the interrogation is Northern Transvaal security branch constable van Vuuren.[186] The applicants claimed that at some point Morudu was taken away from the farm while they themselves had not been present and that Prinsloo had thereafter simply ordered them to remove all signs of their presence on the farm. It still remains unclear what eventually happened to Morudu. It is, however, again highly probable that he was executed and his remains were disposed of somewhere.

The problems in prosecuting this case are similar to those in the Simelane matter, since there is not any proper evidence of a murder and the possibility of prosecuting for assault has lapsed. Yet in this case, the alleged perpetrators, such as Prinsloo, had not applied for amnesty and might possibly, providing there was evidence to support the charge, be prosecuted for the kidnapping.

Commentators close to the TRC claimed that the Northern Transvaal security police's activities were generally not properly investigated by the TRC and that prosecutions should focus more on this area, since

---

[181] Ibid., para. 272.

[182] Ibid.

[183] Ibid., s. 4, chap. 1, para. 1.

[184] Applications no. AM/3756/96, AM/3755/96, AM/6064/97.

[185] Decision no. AC/2000/010.

[186] TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 3, chap. 1, para. 272.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

amnesty applications were often not submitted.[187] As such, especially Prinsloo is believed to be a very worthwhile target for prosecution.[188]

5.1.3 The relevance of prosecution in missing persons cases

The family of Nokuthula Simelane and especially her mother suffers severely, mentally and physically, from the lack of closure.[189] According to Simelane's sister, it is extremely important for the family to find out the whole truth of Simelane's probable murder and to see the perpetrators admit their guilt. Only by discovering the full truth and being able to retrieve the remains for a proper burial could the family find closure and leave their grief behind. The yet unresolved situation prevents them from doing so and is a continuous source of pain.[190] This example is representative for others. The relatives of Moss Morudu experience similar problems.[191] It is generally essential for victims' families to get to know the exact fate and whereabouts of the remains of family members for whose disappearance is still unaccounted.[192] Otherwise they are unable to find closure.[193] As the TRC Report aptly put it, families remain 'trapped in the past, unable to move on' and 'constantly caught between near certainty that the missing person has not survived and hope that he or she will return'.[194]

---

[187] Interview with Madeleine Fullard in Pretoria (May 4, 2006).

[188] Ibid. See further TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 3, chap. 1, paras. 267–77.

[189] T. Nkadimeng (sister of N. Simelane) Panel presentation at the Institute for Justice and Reconciliation conference 'The TRC: ten years on' (April 20, 2006).

[190] Ibid.

[191] See for an account of equal suffering caused by the unresolved situation for the relatives of missing former activist Moss Murudu: S. Russouw 'All I want is to bury my son' The Star, March 31, 2007. See for an exemplary account from a victim's point of view on this issue and the implications for reconciliation with regard to victims: Y. Sooka 'Apartheid's victims in the midst of amnesty's promise' in C. Villa-Vicencio and E. Doxtader (eds) The provocations of amnesty (2003) 309 at 312.

[192] TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 4, chap. 1, para. 115.

[193] Y. Sooka Panel presentation at the Institute for Justice and Reconciliation conference 'The TRC: ten years on' (April 20, 2006).

[194] TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 4, chap. 1, para. 7.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

Although in such cases it is generally more important for victims to get to know all the facts than to see the perpetrator being sentenced to a long jail term,[195] criminal proceedings are nevertheless an important tool to extract this very information. In both above examples, the possible perpetrators are not willing to cooperate with the NPA or the victims' relatives to clarify the facts. An imminent threat of prosecution is absolutely critical in presenting an incentive to move the perpetrators to disclose information.

Both cases have shown the grave consequences that the non-investigation of security police violence during the apartheid years and the statute of limitation has with regard to torture. On the basis of the above elaborations,[196] it can be argued that the limitation period should be extended. Furthermore, in terms of the above outlined prioritisation approach, both cases should be considered as of high priority for the PCLU, since the crimes in question are very egregious and can qualify as crimes against humanity. Both cases also give proof that it is worthwhile to explore an extended use of plea-bargaining. Perpetrators could be offered a suspended or reduced sentence in exchange for a full disclosure on the victims' fates.

5.2 The Cradock-Four case

The Cradock-Four case is a well-known case, typical of police violence against opposition activists.[197] Four leading UDF members of the Eastern Cape town of Cradock, Matthew Goniwe, Sparrow Mkhonto, Fort Calata and Sicelo Mhlauli, were abducted and executed by the security police in 1985.[198] All four had already previously been frequently arrested,

---

[195] Interview with Marjorie Jobson in Pretoria (May 9, 2006); Interview with Y. Sooka in Pretoria (May 3, 2006).

[196] See supra Chapter 4(3.).

[197] See on the case TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 3, paras. 245–52; TRC Report, vol. 3, chap. 2, paras. 294–98. The Motherwell-Four case is connected to this case, since there the killings took place to prevent revelations concerning the Cradock-Four murders (TRC Report, vol. 3, chap. 1, appendix, page 28).

[198] TRC Report, vol. 3, chap. 2, para. 295.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

tortured and harassed by the police.[199] On 27 June 1985, after returning from a UDF meeting in Port Elizabeth, they were abducted by the security police and shortly thereafter shot or stabbed to death.[200] To avert suspicion from the security police their bodies and the car were burned.[201] The corpses were later found in the vicinity of Port Elizabeth.[202] In 1987 an inquest into the matter did not find any indications of security force involvement in the murders. However, in 1993 a secret document containing a message of the regional SADF command to the State Security Council secretariat was found, which called for the 'permanent removal from society' of the four activists.[203] Thereafter the inquest was reopened. The inquest judge found that there was prima facie evidence that the security forces carried out the murders and recommended the institution of criminal proceedings.[204]

Prompted by later investigations of the Transvaal Attorney-General in the case,[205] the Amnesty Committee received amnesty applications in relation to the murders from six security police officers: Hermanus du Plessis, Gerhardus Johannes Lotz, Harold Snyman, Johannes Martin van Zyl, all of whom had also been involved in the PEBCO-Three case, which happened only six weeks beforehand, Eric Taylor and General Nicolaas van Rensburg.[206] All applications with regard to the abduction and killing were refused in 1999 since the Committee was not convinced the applicants had made a full disclosure.[207] Snyman and van Rensburg have since passed away. Thus, the PCLU could potentially prosecute the four remaining security police perpetrators. However, since the amnesty refusals, the NPA has not made an attempt to lay charges.

---

[199] TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 3, para. 247.

[200] Ibid., para. 250.

[201] Ibid.

[202] TRC Report, vol. 3, chap. 2, para. 296.

[203] TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 3, para. 248.

[204] Ibid.

[205] TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 3, chap. 1, para. 17.

[206] Applications no. AM/4384/96, AM/3921/96, AM/3918/96, AM/5637/97, AM/3917/96, AM/3919/96.

[207] Decision no. AC/99/0350.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

The Cradock-Four case must be considered as egregious and of high priority, since it involves systematic, ordered and very grave police violence against opposition members. However, should a prosecution be initiated, at least with regard to van Zyl, and possibly also with regard to some of the other alleged perpetrators, if they are clients of the lawyer Jan Wagener, the agreement to apply for a review of the amnesty refusal could again come into play and possibly delay or even prevent the start of a trial, as was the case in the PEBCO-Three matter.[208]

5.3 The St. James Church massacre

Among the cases believed to be under close scrutiny by the PCLU, there is at least one case that concerns the former liberation movement, the St. James Church massacre. The massacre was committed by members of the APLA, the military wing of the PAC. On 25 July 1993, a service congregation of St. James Church in Kenilworth, a district in Cape Town with predominantly white inhabitants, was stormed by APLA members.[209] The attackers opened machine gun fire and threw hand grenades at the about 1000 churchgoers. Eleven people were killed and fifty-eight were wounded.[210]

Four people applied for amnesty in relation to the attack, among them Letlapa Mphahlele,[211] former APLA commander and later president of the political party PAC. Mphahlele was director of operations of the APLA at the time of the massacre.[212] He was allegedly involved in the planning and authorisation of the attack.[213] Mphahlele later effectively withdrew his application before a decision of the Committee was handed down.[214] According to him, this was done in protest against a

---

[208] See supra Chapter 2(7.2).

[209] TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 7, para. 472.

[210] Ibid.

[211] Application no. AM/3018/96.

[212] F. Kutz Amnestie für politische Straftäter in Südafrika (2001) 271.

[213] Ibid., 277.

[214] TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 3, chap. 4, para. 114.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

perceived lack of objectivity of the TRC.[215] All other applicants were granted amnesty.[216]

The APLA attack was exceptionally brutal. It appeared highly senseless and totally unjustifiable in terms of the struggle against apartheid. The only reason for the APLA to attack the church was allegedly that white churches were used to legitimise apartheid and were, thus, perceived to be a means of oppressing the black population.[217] However, this specific church community consisted of very liberal whites, who actively engaged in cooperating with black church communities in poor areas of Cape Town.[218] Furthermore, about one third of the congregation consisted of people of colour.[219] The massacre also happened at a time when the Interim Constitution was about to enter into force and the transition to democracy was well under way. It was presumed by many that the attack was an attempt to thwart the negotiations, which were not supported by the PAC.

The APLA was also responsible for a number of other attacks during the negotiation period, which were only aimed at killing civilians. Among those are the Heidelberg Tavern massacre of December 1993 and the King William's Town Golf Club attack of November 1992, both of which left four people dead.[220]

In September 2006 Mphahlele was elected president of the political party PAC.[221] His prosecution was apparently high on the PCLU's list of priority cases. It remains to be seen whether these brutal attacks on unarmed civilians will indeed be prosecuted. However, since the targets of the attack were totally defenceless civilians, the case must be considered as being egregious and of high priority.

---

[215] Ibid.

[216] Decision no. AC/1998/018.

[217] TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 7, para. 475.

[218] F. Kutz Amnestie für politische Straftäter in Südafrika (2001) 275.

[219] TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 3, chap. 4, para. 125.

[220] See TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 7, paras. 466–96; TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 3, chap. 4, paras. 89–167.

[221] See PAC elects new president SAPA, Sep. 26, 2006.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

5.4 Cases involving former security police leaders

In the Chikane case further proceedings are apparently envisaged concerning a very high-ranking former security force official. As such there are obviously plans to charge the former head of the apartheid security police, General Sebastiaan "Basie" Smit, since part of the plea agreement in the case was that the accused undertook to act as state witnesses in the event of a prosecution of General Smit.[222] As mentioned above, Smit eventually issued the order to murder Chikane.[223] The plea bargain also clearly indicated that other figures from the higher echelons of authority, probably including the highest levels of the apartheid government and the command of the SADF, were involved. It remains to be seen if the PCLU will follow up on such leads and charge these persons who may have been behind Chikane's assassination.

One of those concerned in the Chikane case, General Johan van der Merwe, could be a focus point for the PCLU, also with regard to at least one other case.[224] He was refused amnesty for a failure to make full disclosure concerning his involvement in organising a cross-border raid into Lesotho.[225] In December 1985 a group of security police operatives secretly entered Lesotho with the aim of executing various MK members who had planned to enter South Africa. During the attack nine people were murdered, among them uninvolved civilians.[226] However, it must be remembered that van der Merwe was one of the very few high-ranking security force officials who cooperated with the TRC extensively. His general openness to cooperate with the state in clarifying apartheid atrocities has also been shown in the Chikane case. The focus should rather be on those leaders, who, thus far, have yet to cooperate.

Another possible prosecution could again target General Smit and

---

[222] See supra Chapter 2(9.3).

[223] Ibid.

[224] As a leading security police official during the 1980s, van der Merwe was probably involved in or must have had knowledge of a number of criminal security police operations (see various mentioning of van der Merwe in TRC Report, vol. 6).

[225] Decision no. AC/2001/231.

[226] Decision no. AC/2001/231.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

a further former high-ranking officer of the security police, General "Krappies" Engelbrecht, for their involvement in instigating "third force" violence during the early 1990s. Engelbrecht had been the last head of the notorious C section of the security police, which the Vlakplaas unit was a part of, and was, as such, also the direct superior of Eugene de Kock.[227] In this, he was certainly involved in a number of the criminal activities of Vlakplaas. However, the TRC, specifically, found evidence of Smit and Engelbrecht having been involved in the provision of arms to Inkatha fighters to support their attacks on ANC sympathisers during the bloody conflicts raging during the early 1990s.[228] The Goldstone Commission had in 1994 found indications of the two generals having initiated, authorised and supervised a project, which involved the production of home-made guns as well as the importing of large amounts of weapons from Namibia.[229] Allegedly the arms were directly provided to senior members of the IFP, such as Themba Khosa, to be used in their brutal slaying of ANC supporters.[230] A central figure in these activities was Eugene de Kock, who testified against the two at the TRC.[231] The involvement of Engelbrecht and Smit could merit, to say the least, a charge of incitement and/or aiding and abetting the murder of thousands of ANC supporters.

An investigation against Engelbrecht was already completed by the D'Oliveira team in 1999 and there were plans to charge Engelbrecht by April 2000.[232] However, strangely nothing has happened thus far, which might be due to the overall pattern of delay and the flaws in providing for proper continuity between the prosecution teams. Whether a trial of Engelbrecht is still planned is unknown.

---

[227] TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 3, appendix, para. 19.

[228] TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 3, chap. 1, para. 132. See especially TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 7, paras. 100–123.

[229] TRC Report, vol. 3, chap. 6, para. 546.

[230] Ibid.

[231] Ibid.

[232] V. Nerlich Apartheidkriminalität vor Gericht (2002) 155 and 220. It cannot be said, however, which conduct was planned to be concerned by the charges.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

5.5 The State Security Council and the apartheid government

In public debates on the topic many human rights activists and victim representatives have called for more prosecutions of figures from the higher ranks of the apartheid regime and political leaders of the former governments, notwithstanding the practical challenges in targeting the command and political level of the former apartheid regime. Many have claimed that it would be necessary to investigate the involvement of former President F.W. de Klerk in apartheid atrocities.[233] Whereas the former Director-General of de Klerk's presidential office, Dave Steward, maintained that de Klerk could not be prosecuted since he had not been aware of any crimes committed by the security forces during his tenure, human rights activists claimed that his accountability could be established on the basis of his involvement in the State Security Council (hereinafter SSC).[234]

The SSC was a board of leading security force members and politicians, including de Klerk from the late 1980s, which was established to advise the government and security forces on security issues.[235] The TRC expressed great surprise that members of the SSC, who always maintained that they had no knowledge of criminal conduct, had never investigated or followed up the clear indications of crimes committed within the security structure they commanded.[236] Former leading NP member Leon Wessels, himself a member of the SSC, doubted the argument that SSC members could not have known of the crimes, which at least indirectly resulted from its policy directives.[237] With regard to former President F.W. de Klerk, the TRC had lamented that during his testimony before the TRC he did not give a truthful and full account of his knowledge of gross human rights violations committed by senior

---

[233] Interview with Yasmin Sooka in Pretoria (May 3, 2006); Interview with Howard Varney in Johannesburg (May 6, 2006); Interview with Marjorie Jobson in Pretoria (May 9, 2006).

[234] H. Varney De Klerk and the Truth Commission The Guardian, Aug. 17, 2007.

[235] See TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 3, appendix, paras. 1–6.

[236] TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 3, chap. 1, para. 357.

[237] TRC Report, vol. 5, chap. 6, para. 77.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

government members and the SAP.[238] As such, the Commission proposed to make a finding that he had known of the bombing of Khotso house in Johannesburg, the headquarters of the South African Council of Churches which was very active in anti-apartheid opposition, through the security police in 1988.[239]

The TRC also found that 22 members of the SSC were accountable for the violence of Inkatha groups against anti-apartheid organisations, especially the ANC, as the government had provided equipment, training and financial resources to IFP hit-squads.[240] It further found that the SSC, among others, pressured the security forces to act robustly against the liberation movement, used language that could easily be understood as orders to eliminate anti-apartheid activists and failed to prevent the commission of crimes by security force operatives.[241] Such conduct could possibly constitute criminal liability, such as incitement to commit the political crimes in question or make the involved politicians accessories to the fact. However, the exact scope of involvement of apartheid politicians in criminal acts cannot be determined here.

5.6 The Steyn-Report concerning criminal SADF activities

The potential to investigate cases of criminal SADF activities was again highlighted by the declassification of a report on alleged dangerous activities of SADF components in early 2006.[242] SADF general Pierre Steyn had in the early 1990s been assigned by former President de Klerk with the task of following up and investigating allegations that SADF

---

[238] The respective paragraph of TRC Report, vol. 5, chap. 6, para. 104 containing these findings on de Klerk had to be blacked out before publication following a court order de Klerk had applied for.

[239] TRC Report, vol. 6, s. 1, chap. 4, para. 29. See further TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 3, paras. 521–29.

[240] TRC Report, vol. 2, chap. 5, para. 249.

[241] TRC Report, vol. 5, chap. 6, paras. 99 and 102.

[242] Staff paper prepared for the Steyn commission on alleged dangerous activities of SADF components, December 1992 (on file with author).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

elements attempted to thwart the negotiations in the early 1990s and destabilise the country. During the mid-1990s, the report was handed to the TRC from which it was, after being considered highly sensitive, moved to the Department of Justice. It had only been declassified after the South African History Archives had lodged a legal challenge for its release against the Department of Justice.

The report outlines detailed yet uncorroborated indications of far-reaching and intense involvement of the SADF in third force violence, such as provision of weapons to IFP members, instigation of the so-called train murders and hostel violence in the Witwatersrand area, setting up of weapon caches, incitement to kill ANC members and various murders. The report also alleges that there had been plans for a right wing coup d'État as well as that support had been given to opposition movements in neighbouring countries. It details a wide range of names of officials and their specific alleged conduct.[243]

Criminal investigations concerning the SADF activities interrogated by Steyn had allegedly already been conducted in the early 1990s, apparently without results.[244] However, the concrete indications of intense and far reaching involvement of some very high-ranking SADF officials in high profile political crimes, which emerged through the Steyn report, appear to offer grounds on which the PCLU can initiate further investigations.[245]

---

[243] Strangely and apparently due to a lapse the names had not, at least in the English version, been masked by the NPA which eventually released the document.

[244] C. Carter Apartheid army's deadly secrets The Sunday Independent, April 30, 2006.

[245] However, the report itself points out that criminal proceedings might be difficult due to destroyed evidence and the role players protecting each other.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process. Leiden: BRILL, 2009. Accessed May 9, 2021. ProQuest Ebook Central.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-09 23:37:58.

Chapter Five

Conclusion

This book was written to document and evaluate the progress, and lack thereof, which has been made in establishing criminal accountability for politically motivated gross human rights violations of the apartheid era, for which amnesty was not granted by the TRC. This process of establishing accountability is not isolated. Post-TRC prosecutions are part of South Africa's model of dealing with crimes committed during the apartheid conflict and, thus, must be put in context with the TRC's conceptual and legal regime on amnesty. Such prosecutions potentially impact on South Africans' attitude towards the TRC process and reconciliation generally, since many expect trials as part of this process. On the other hand, the former apartheid establishment and parts of the white population may see trials as yet another confirmation of their perception of victor's justice. The following will summarise the main conclusions and results reached in this book and will comment on the conduct of post-TRC prosecutions and their impact on the process of dealing with the past.

1. Summary of Results

The deadline to apply for amnesty was 30 September 1997. On the release of the TRC Report in 1998, the TRC and President Mandela made strong recommendations for criminal proceedings to be instituted where there was evidence of gross human rights violations (Chapter 1).

However, the government and the NPA implemented the recommendations very reluctantly (Chapter 2). In 1999 the Human Rights Investigative Unit was established to oversee investigations into and the prosecution of TRC-related cases. Thereafter matters were moved to the DSO ("Scorpions"). Not one prosecution was instituted by these units. Only when the last volumes of the TRC Report were issued in 2003 was a more appropriate unit, the PCLU, established.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:03:13.

The PCLU nevertheless only concluded three criminal proceedings during its five years of existence. In all, during almost one decade after the conclusion of the TRC, prosecutions have been initiated in only eight cases. Seven proceedings were finalised in court, four of which resulted in the conviction of all accused parties. Four of the finalised cases were conducted by regional prosecution offices.

There has, therefore, been a minimal number of criminal proceedings conducted after the conclusion of the TRC. Provisions for the appropriate conditions for the units to perform the necessary tasks involved in prosecutions were totally insufficient. For the sake of the country to achieve quick closure on the past, as President Mandela had rightly suggested already in 1998, it would have required a clear commitment in 1998, consistent strategic decisions, the definition of priority criteria, the assignment of better and more resources, more continuity and cooperation between the D'Oliveira Unit and possibly only one successor unit instead of various different ones.

The lack of a clear commitment and concentrated efforts after 1998 essentially reveal a lack of political will from the government to properly support post-TRC prosecutions (Chapter 3). This lack of political will has found expression when the government intervened in a specific case and interrupted all proceedings for 13 months by imposing a moratorium without compelling reasons, thereby further delaying trials from taking place. However, most indicative of the lack in political will were the consultations of government and leading ANC representatives with groups of former apartheid security force leaders, which aimed to reach agreement on new indemnity mechanisms to circumvent trials. Eventually, the Prosecution Policy was amended to the effect that specific guidelines, which reproduced the TRC's indemnity mechanism and aimed to avoid large-scale prosecutions, shall govern the discretionary decision on whether to prosecute a TRC-related case. It was found to have potentially negative consequences for the establishment of criminal accountability after the TRC. With the suspension of the amendment

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:03:13.

by the High Court of Pretoria, the government suffered a serious blow in its ambitions to introduce new indemnity mechanisms.

The South African handling of post-TRC prosecutions violates the Constitution wherever proceedings are not instituted despite the existence of evidence which would warrant further investigation or prosecution (Chapter 4). By granting de facto indemnity to many authors of gross human rights violations, South Africa is also in breach of its obligations under international humanitarian and human rights law, should the crimes in question constitute grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions or crimes against humanity.

There are practical and strategic difficulties in the approach to post-TRC prosecutions, which should be an incentive to explore legally appropriate solutions, allowing prioritisation of cases, embracing the practical needs as well as the interests of victims and that do justice to the Constitution. On this basis, there are sound legal grounds to place higher priority on systematic crimes of state forces.

The prospects for a significant number of cases to be dealt with are bleak. Better progress would require the state to increase resources significantly, which, in the face of a lack of political will, limited resources and a very high present-day crime rate, is unlikely to happen. Among such cases that could already have been tackled, are the St. James church massacre, the Simelane case, the Cradock-Four case and many other cases from the PCLU's priority list of 16 cases, which allegedly are cases that have already been prepared to an advanced stage, as well as the many cases, which had already been prepared for prosecution by the D'Oliveira Unit, such as the case of General Engelbrecht.

Even under the difficult conditions in present-day South Africa, a limited amount of the most egregious cases of gross human rights violations could have been and can still be targeted. Nevertheless, many cases which actually warrant further investigation and provide the prospect of a successful prosecution on the basis of available evidence will remain unpursued. The book has practically been closed on post-TRC accountability.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:03:13.

2. The Conduct of Prosecutions in the Context of the TRC Process

While the appropriate course of transitional justice will always depend on the specific circumstances in the country concerned, there are general considerations either speaking for or against prosecutions in transitional societies.[1] However, any academic assessment concerning the advantages or disadvantages of prosecutions in South Africa's transition to democracy is now anachronistic. The course of transitional justice and dealing with the crimes under apartheid, which South Africa chose, means that prosecutions must take place where amnesty was not granted.

The systematic requirement of prosecutions to take place is obvious. However, the question needs to be addressed to what extent the minimal conduct of post-TRC prosecutions impacts on the overall assessment of the TRC and its amnesty proceedings. Some suggest that abandoning the idea of prosecutions would 'make a mockery of the process',[2] and even that the entire TRC might unravel into a farce.[3] Certainly, the granting of amnesty on conditions simply does not make any sense if there are no consequences in terms of criminal proceedings attached to the non-compliance with one or more of the requirements. However, it can hardly follow from this that the entire legitimacy of the TRC would be obliterated. This would mean that the justice of amnesty depends fundamentally on post-TRC prosecutions being implemented. This certainly is not the case. It has been pointed out at the outset that the granting of amnesty was necessitated by the political realities during the negotiation period. Nevertheless, with the conditional model a successful attempt was made to avoid blanket amnesty, which in itself is an achievement. The great strength of the amnesty proceedings above was that they encouraged perpetrators to disclose information about their deeds, which might otherwise not have been forthcoming. Thousands

---

[1] See A. Boraine A country unmasked (2000) 280–81; E. Hahn-Godeffroy Die Südafrikanische Truth and Reconciliation Commission (1998) 39–43.

[2] Interview with Yasmin Sooka in Pretoria (May 3, 2006).

[3] L. Fernandez 'Post-TRC prosecutions in South Africa' in G. Werle (ed) Justice in transition (2006) 65 at 79.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:03:13.

participated in the process. It was often suggested that the model was ideal to meet the demands of the South African transition and even superior to prosecutions.[4] There was, therefore, strong justification for the amnesty proceedings on their own, regardless of the overall context of accountability.

Nevertheless, amnesty and prosecutions were both integral parts of the South African system. The offer of amnesty was fundamentally premised on the fact that, without it, criminal proceedings would be instituted if there was sufficient evidence to support a prosecution. Many relied on this premise. 'Amnesty is not cheap', as former TRC chair Desmond Tutu repeatedly pointed out.[5] Yet this statement only rings true for those who participated in the process. For those who did not participate but who are not prosecuted, indemnity was obtained cheaply. Perpetrators who participated in the process may now ask themselves why they did so at all. Those who scoffed at the TRC are, in contrast, validated in their decision not to cooperate. This makes it clear that failing to institute prosecutions contradicts the system of accountability, which South Africa chose to adopt as a transitional justice scheme. Thus, if it is not the entire legitimacy of amnesty which is at stake, it is certainly the perceived credibility and justice of the process. What is therefore also at stake, is the overall assessment of the success of South Africa's attempt to deal with its past and the perception of many concerned South Africans that a consistent and just way of dealing with the past has been implemented.[6]

Consistency and credibility in the process is especially relevant with regard to victims' position in the legal setup of amnesty. Their sacrifice of retributive justice and redress was meant to be compensated with a concrete claim to the full truth regarding the crimes they had to endure. This benefit of the amnesty procedures for victims was, according to the Constitutional Court, of central relevance for the scheme's legal

---

[4] See A. du Bois-Pedain Transitional amnesty in South Africa (2007) 344–45.

[5] See G. Werle 'Neue Wege' in P. Bock and R. Wolfrum (eds) Umkämpfte Vergangenheit (1999) 269 at 279.

[6] See G. Werle 'Alternativen zur Aufarbeitung von Systemunrecht' in H. Hof and M. Schulte (eds) Wirkungsforschung zum Recht vol. III (2001) 291 at 297.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:03:13.

justification.[7] It follows from this logic that should this benefit fail to materialise, either because the full truth was not told or amnesty was not applied for, these victims have a right to call for the normal course of criminal justice to proceed.[8]

In terms of consistency of the process, we must also conclude that the positive international perception of transitional justice in South Africa must be altered. The great international reputation the TRC gained with regard to amnesty was premised on the fact that blanket indemnity was avoided.[9] Especially with regard to the amnesty scheme's legal evaluation in terms of South Africa's international law obligations to prosecute, this structure was considered as the basis for the TRC's legal legitimacy in comparison to other societies in transition.[10] This, however, only rings true if the conditional model is conducted consistently. This is not the case. South Africa does not properly comply with its international law obligations to conduct post-TRC prosecutions properly. Thus, whereas the TRC's scheme on amnesty was seen by many as a role model, which could provide many lessons for transitional societies,[11] South Africa's actual conduct cannot properly function as a role model since it sends out the message that those who refused the offer of amnesty will still not be held accountable for their actions.

Nevertheless, it was often argued in the case against post-TRC prosecutions, that in terms of dealing with the past and promoting reconciliation and nation-building, the achievements of the TRC were

---

[7] The Azanian Peoples Organisation and others v The President of South Africa and others (CC) Case no. CCT 17/96 25 July 1996 at para. 17.

[8] Ibid., at para. 20.

[9] Interview with Desmond Tutu in Cape Town (March 22, 2006); L. Fernandez 'Post-TRC prosecutions in South Africa' in G. Werle (ed) Justice in transition (2006) 65 at 79.

[10] R.A. Wilson The politics of truth and reconciliation in South Africa (2001) 23.

[11] S. Garkawe 'The South African Truth and Reconciliation Commission: a suitable model to enhance the role and rights of victims of gross human rights violations?' (2003) 27 Melbourne University Law Review 334 at 335; P. Hayner 'Same species, different animal: how South Africa compares to truth commissions worldwide' in W. Verwoerd and C. Villa-Vicencio (eds) Looking back reaching forward (2000) 32 at 33.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:03:13.

sufficient.[12] Trials are seen by many as detrimental to these achievements of the TRC. Certainly, prosecutions concentrating on former security police members, who were mostly recruited from the white Afrikaans speaking population, would be perceived by many South Africans of that ethnicity as yet another attack of the new ruling class on their group.[13] However, it would seem that such perceptions, especially among the Afrikaans speaking population, generally stem from affirmative action measures and the feeling that their language and heritage are predominantly pushed away from schools, universities, city names or memorial sites. Prosecutions would rather be a merely insignificant addition to these circumstances.

Furthermore, it fails to take into account what victims are required to do to reconcile the gross human rights violations they, or their family members, had to endure. Their ability to do so is certainly dependent on accountability being established for the crimes,[14] since what was for perpetrators a very generous offer to come clean on their criminal deeds,[15] was hard to accept for victims and often highly contested.[16] Unless proceedings are instituted, a balance cannot be struck between the concessions made by victims and the offers made to perpetrators.[17] To abandon post-TRC trials would, thus, be considered as 'a slap in the face' to victims.[18] Under such circumstances, it is hardly possible to expect victims to reconcile themselves with the past if perpetrators

---

[12] G. Bizos Why prosecutions are necessary in C. Villa-Vicencio and E. Doxtader (eds) The provocations of amnesty (2003) 5 at 7 refers to this notion of many others.

[13] The activities of the predominantly Afrikaans advocacy group "Afriforum", especially around the Chikane litigation, demonstrate the mingling of anti-prosecution with pro-Afrikaans advocacy efforts.

[14] R.C. Slye 'Amnesty, truth and reconciliation' in R.I. Rotberg and D. Thompson (eds) Truth v. justice (2000) 170 at 179. See also K. Marxen and G. Werle Die strafrechtliche Aufarbeitung von DDR-Unrecht (1999) 246.

[15] Interview with Desmond Tutu in Cape Town (March 22, 2006).

[16] A. Gutmann and D. Thompson 'The moral foundations of truth commissions' in R.I. Rotberg and D. Thompson (eds) Truth v. justice (2000) 22 at 24.

[17] M.E. Bennun 'Some procedural issues relating to post-TRC prosecutions of human rights offenders' (2003) 16 South African Journal of Criminal Justice 17 at 36.

[18] Interview with Desmond Tutu in Cape Town (March 22, 2006).

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:03:13.

simply get away with their deeds scot-free without the state making sufficient efforts for prosecutions.[19] The deep divide between the government and apartheid victims, mainly caused by the highly reluctant payout of reparations, will deepen further.

The proposition of prosecutions harming the achievements of the TRC also forgets that the amnesty proceedings had significant gaps, since many perpetrators of politically motivated gross human rights violations did not submit amnesty applications. Prosecutions can function to fill some of these gaps. They can, to some extent, clarify the facts regarding past atrocities[20] and should occur where the TRC has not been successful.

3. Closing Remarks

The assessment of the conduct of post-TRC prosecutions in South Africa in this study is negative. However, the moral and/or legal desirability of criminal accountability is certainly restricted by the adverse practical realities and conceptual difficulties that have been acknowledged. Certainly, only a relatively small number of cases could still be tackled under the present circumstances. The question which ultimately needs to be addressed is, whether these practical burdens and theoretical dilemmas can, in terms of this evaluation, trump criminal accountability and justify not instituting more proceedings. Can the fact that the vast majority of crimes cannot be prosecuted lend support to the contention that it would then be better not to prosecute at all? Must one conclude that the prosecution of only a small number of cases is actually not worth the effort, today, fifteen years into the new democracy?

The answer clearly must be, no. Limited resources and strategic demands can, by no means, be a reason not to institute proceedings at all. Many victims still have no answers to what happened to their

---

[19] R.C. Slye 'Amnesty, truth and reconciliation' in R.I. Rotberg and D. Thompson (eds) Truth v. justice (2000) 170 at 179.

[20] See also K. Marxen and G. Werle Die strafrechtliche Aufarbeitung von DDR-Unrecht (1999) 245.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:03:13.

family members, although in many cases the perpetrators are known to the NPA. What is fundamentally at stake is not only the aforementioned consistency and reputation of the TRC process and, partially, the success of the process of dealing with the past, but also the substance and credibility of South Africa's commitment to the enforcement of a culture of human rights. The new South Africa was, in its renunciation of the politics of apartheid, eager to support international human rights law. Respect for human rights has found expression in the Constitution as a fundamental basis for the new democratic order.[21] The current practice of de facto indemnity, however, furthers a disreputable tradition of impunity for state orchestrated gross human rights violations, which was adopted during apartheid.[22] It renders meaningless and undermines the human rights protection in international, as well as constitutional law.

Finally it must be pointed out that to rely on forgetfulness in dealing with the past, which by many is seen as the ideal option in the interest of the country, has hardly ever proved to be successful as many countries provide an example that their violent past refuses to rest until it has sufficiently been dealt with and acknowledged. Reconciliation and closure on the past on an individual and national level are prevented by official forgetting.[23] Thus, avoiding the assignment of criminal accountability serves short term practical interests but in the long run will not be in the interest of the country to leave its past behind effectively. Although South Africa made an important step against total impunity with the TRC, too many crimes yet remain unrevealed and unaccounted for.

Almost 10 years after conclusion of the TRC, post-TRC prosecutions have not been conducted successfully and the South African process of dealing with past gross human rights violations, therefore, cannot be seen as concluded.

---

[21] See also T.M. Grupp Südafrikas neue Verfassung (1999) 27–28.

[22] See F. Kutz Amnestie für politische Straftäter in Südafrika (2001) 29–63; P. Parker 'The politics of indemnities, truth telling and reconciliation in South Africa' (1996) 17 1–2 Human Rights Law Journal 1 at 1.

[23] K. Marxen and G. Werle Die strafrechtliche Aufarbeitung von DDR-Unrecht (1999) 255.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:03:13.

Copyright © 2009. BRILL. All rights reserved.

Bubenzer, Ole. Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa : Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, BRILL, 2009. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/lib/uunl/detail.action?docID=634909.
Created from uunl on 2021-05-08 10:03:13.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa
Collection of documents

A. The State v. van der Merwe, Vlok, Smith, Otto, van Staden (Chikane case)

I. Charge sheet (Afrikaans)
II. Plea and Sentence Agreement (English)
III. Plea and Sentence Agreement (Afrikaans)

B. The State v. Nieuwoudt, van Zyl (PEBCO-Three case) charge sheet

C. The State v. Ronnie Blani

I. Charge sheet
II. Judgment

D. Prosecution Policy Amendment (related documents)

I. Prosecution Policy text
II. Minutes Justice Portfolio Committee
III. NPA presentation Justice Portfolio Committee
IV. NPA press statement
V. High Court judgment suspending the amendments

E. Motherwell-Four Case new amnesty hearing

I. New amnesty decision of 29 August 2005
II. Minority decision of 23 June 2005

F. National Party and others v. Truth and Reconciliation Commission

(High Court judgment of 1998 setting aside the granting of amnesty to 37 high ranking ANC officials)

G. NPA Press Statement on non-continuation of Basson prosecution

H. "Steyn Report" on dangerous SADF activities

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

A.

I.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

IN DIE HOOGGEREGSHOF VAN SUID-AFRIKA

(Transvaalse Provinsiale Afdeling)

DIE STAAT

teen

1. JOHANNES VELDE VAN DER MERWE
'n volwasse man en 'n Suid-Afrikaanse burger

2. ADRIAAN JOHANNES VLOK
'n volwasse man en 'n Suid-Afrikaanse burger

3. CHRISTOFFEL LODEWIKUS SMITH
'n volwasse man en 'n Suid-Afrikaanse burger

4. GERT JACOBUS LOUIS HOSEA OTTO
'n volwasse man en Suid-Afrikaanse burger en

5. HERMANUS JOHANNES VAN STADEN
'n volwasse man en Suid-Afrikaanse burger

(hierna die beskuldigdes genoem)

AKTE VAN BESKULDIGING

Die Spesiale Direkteur van Openbare Vervolging, wat as sodanig vervolg vir en namens die Staat, stel die hof hiermee in kennis dat die beskuldigdes skuldig is aan die misdade van:

1. POGING TOT MOORD ALTERNATIEWELIK OORTREDING VAN ARTIKEL 18(2)(a) VAN DIE WET OP OPROERIGE BYEENKOMSTE, WET 17 VAN 1956

2. OORTREDING VAN ARTIKEL 18(2)(a) VAN DIE WET OP OPROERIGE BYEENKOMSTE, WET 17 VAN 1956

18/07/2007 11:29 FAX 007

Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-20

AANKLAG 1: POGING TOT MOORD

DEURDAT die beskuldigdes op of omtrent 23 April 1989 en te of naby die destydse Jan Smuts Lughawe in die distrik van Kempton Park wederregtelik en opsetlik ter bevordering van 'n gemeenskaplike oogmerk gepoog het om vir Eerwaarde Frank Chikane, 'n volwasse manlike persoon, te dood deur sy klere met 'n gifstof, te wete Paraoxon, te besmet.

ALTERNATIEWE AANKLAG TOT AANKLAG 1: OORTREDING VAN ARTIKEL 18(2)(a) VAN DIE WET OP OPROERIGE BYEENKOMSTE, WET 17 VAN 1956

DEURDAT die beskuldigdes, Sebastiaan Smit, Wouter Basson, André Immelman en persone onbekend aan die Staat, gedurende April 1989 en te of naby Roodeplaat Navorsingslaboratorium en/of Pretoria in die distrik van Pretoria wederregtelik en opsetlik saamgesweer het om die misdaad van moord ten aansien van Eerwaarde Frank Chikane, te pleeg en/of by die pleging van die misdaad behulpsaam te wees en/of die pleging daarvan te bewerkstellig.

AANKLAG 2: OORTREDING VAN ARTIKEL 18(2)(a) VAN DIE WET OP OPROERIGE BYEENKOMSTE, WET 17 VAN 1956

DEURDAT die beskuldigdes, Wouter Basson, André Immelman en persone onbekend aan die Staat, gedurende 1989 en te of naby Roodeplaat Navorsingslaboratorium, Veiligheidspolisie Hoofkantoor in die distrik van Pretoria en/of ander plekke onbekend aan die Staat wederregtelik en opsetlik saamgesweer het om die misdaad van moord ten aansien van persone onbekend aan die Staat te pleeg en/of by die pleging van die misdaad behulpsaam te wees en/of die pleging daarvan te bewerkstellig.

In die geval van skuldigbevinding versoek die genoemde Direkteur vonnis ooreenkomstig die reg teen die beskuldigdes.

AR ACKERMANN SC
SPESIALE DIREKTEUR VAN OPENBARE VERVOLGING
KANTOOR VAN DIE NASIONALE DIREKTEUR VAN OPENBARE VERVOLGING

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

OPSOMMING VAN WESENLIKE FEITE INGEVOLGE ARTIKEL 144(3)(a) VAN WET 51 VAN 1977

AGTERGROND:

1. Die Suid-Afrikaanse Weermag het gedurende die tydperk 1982-1992 'n hoogs geheime projek bedryf wat as Projek Coast bekend gestaan het. Die hoofdoelstelling van die projek was om 'n defensiewe en beperkte offensiewe chemiese- en biologiese oorlogvermoë daar te stel.

2. Dr Wouter Basson was die projekoffisier.

3. Vanweë die sensitiwiteit van die projek is daar van frontmaatskappye gebruik gemaak om navorsing te doen sowel as om substanse te vervaardig en te verkry.

4. Die frontmaatskappy Delta G Scientific (Edms) Bpk (hierna genoem "Delta G") was vir die navorsing en vervaardiging van die chemiese been van die projek verantwoordelik.

5. Roodeplaat Navorsing Laboratorium (Edms) Bpk (hierna genoem "Roodeplaat") het navorsing op biologiese gebied en tot 'n mindere mate chemiese navorsing gedoen.

6. Dr A Immelman was 'n wetenskaplike wat by Roodeplaat as die hoof van navorsing op toksikologie werksaam was.

7. Dr Basson het ongeveer in die middel tagtigerjare vir Dr Immelman opdrag gegee om inter alia navorsing te doen oor die aanwending van toksiese substanse teen individue, die roete van aanwending, sowel as die opspoorbaarheid van die stowwe na die toediening daarvan. Hierdie toksiese substanse (onder andere Paraoxon) is by Roodeplaat vervaardig en sommige daarvan is aan Dr Basson oorhandig.

8. Gedurende ongeveer 1987 is die vermoëns van die projek aan ander afdelings van die Suid-Afrikaanse Veiligheidsmagte tydens 'n vergadering in Kaapstad voorgehou.

9. Na bovermelde vergadering het Dr Basson aan Dr Immelman opdrag gegee om met verteenwoordigers van ander afdelings van die Veiligheidsmagte op 'n klandestiene wyse te ontmoet en aan hul behoeftes te voldoen.

10. Dr Immelman het daarna verskeie klandestiene ontmoetings met lede van die onderskeie veiligheidsmagte gehad. Tydens hierdie ontmoetings is die behoefte van die besondere afdeling bespreek en is die substanse later aan hulle oorhandig.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

11. Ten einde rekord te hou van hierdie toksiese substanse wat aan die buitestaanders oorhandig is, het Dr Immelman 'n lys (aangeheg as Aanhangsel "A") bygehou om die datum van lewering, die naam van die substans, sowel as die volume / hoeveelheid wat gelewer is, aan te dui.

DIE BESKULDIGDES:

12. Beskuldigde no 1 was gedurende die tydperk Januarie 1986 tot September 1988 'n generaal in die Suid-Afrikaanse Polisie (hierna genoem die "Polisie") en in bevel van die Veiligheidstak van die Polisie. Gedurende Oktober 1988 is hy bevorder tot adjunk-kommissaris van die Polisie.

13. Generaal Sebastiaan Smit het hom opgevolg as bevelvoerder van die Veiligheidstak.

14. Beskuldigde no 2 was die Minister van Wet en Orde van die Republiek van Suid-Afrika gedurende die tydperk Desember 1986 tot Augustus 1991.

15. Beskuldigdes no 3 tot 5 was gedurende die relevante tye tot die akte van beskuldiging senior offisiere verbonde aan die Veiligheidstak.

DIE SAMESWERING:

16. Gedurende die tagtigerjare was verskeie persone / organisasies aktief betrokke in Suid-Afrika onder andere met die doel om die afskaffing van die misdaad apartheid en/of die omverwerping van die regering van die dag teweeg te bring.

17. In 1987 was daar 'n besluit deur die leierkorps van die Veiligheidsgemeenskap geneem dat hoë profiel lede van die anti-Apartheids-vryheidstryd in uiterste gevalle om die lewe gebring moes word.

18. 'n Lys met die name van die geïdentifiseerde persone is aan die bevelstruktuur van die Veiligheidsgemeenskap oorhandig.

19. Beskuldigdes no 1 en 2 het die uitvoering van die bovermelde besluit bespreek.

20. Daar was toe besluit dat 'n spesiale eenheid in die Veiligheidstak gestig sou word om die opdrag uit te voer.

21. Beskuldigde no 3 was die bevelvoerder van hierdie eenheid.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

22. Beskuldigdes no 4 en 5 was ten alle relevante tye verbonde aan hierdie spesiale eenheid.

23. Nadat Generaal Smit oorgeneem het as bevelvoerder van die Veiligheidstak, is hy ingelig ten aansien van die doelwitte van die spesiale eenheid.

24. Ten alle relevante tye het die beskuldigdes, Smit, Basson, Immelman en ander persone onbekend aan die Staat opgetree ter bevordering van die gemeenskaplike oogmerke vermeld in die akte van beskuldiging.

DIE SLAGOFFERS:

25. Eerwaarde Frank Chikane se naam was op die lys vermeld in paragraaf 18.

26. Eerwaarde Frank Chikane was 'n uitgesproke teenstaander van apartheid en die beleid van die destydse regering. Hy was onder andere sekretaris-generaal van die Suid-Afrikaanse Raad van Kerke en die vise-president van die United Democratic Front.

27. Gedurende April / Mei 1989 was Eerwaarde Chikane van voorneme om verskeie lande te besoek om onder andere die toepassing van ekonomiese sanksies teen Suid-Afrika te propageer.

28. Die eerste been van sy toer was 'n besoek aan Namibië. Hy het per vliegtuig vanaf die destydse Jan Smuts Lughawe na Windhoek gereis.

29. Nadat Eerwaarde Chikane op 24 April 1989 van die klere wat in sy tas gepak was, aangetrek het, het hy siek geword. Hy is in 'n hospitaal in Namibië opgeneem, maar is later op dieselfde dag dringend terug na Suid-Afrika vervoer, waar hy weer gehospitaliseer is.

30. Nadat daar 'n verbetering in sy toestand ingetree het, is hy ontslaan. Hy het daarop na die VSA vertrek om daar te gaan aansterk en afsprake na te kom. Sy bagasie, wat intussen vanaf Namibië gearriveer het, is met bykomende klere aangevul.

31. In die Verenigde State van Amerika het Eerwaarde Chikane weer eens siek geword, nadat hy van die klere wat in sy tas was, aangetrek het. Sy toestand het na hospitalisasie verbeter. Hierdie episode het homself op twee verdere geleenthede herhaal, waarop hy gehospitaliseer was.

32. Ekstensiewe mediese toetse is gedurende hospitalisering op Eerwaarde Chikane uitgevoer. P.Nitrophenole is in sy urine geïdentifiseer tesame met spesifieke simptome (onder andere 'n lae anticholienesterase) wat ooreenstem met organofosfaat vergiftiging. P.Nitrophenole is vinnig afbrekende metaboliete van Parathion, waarvan Paraoxon die aktiewe bestanddeel is.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

33. Ten aansien van aanklag 2, is die slagoffers waarna daar verwys word, met die uitsondering van Eerwaarde Chikane, onbekend aan die staat.

DIE MISDADE:

34. Nadat Dr Basson die opdrag vermeld in paragraaf 7 aan Dr Immelman gegee het om navorsing te doen oor die aanwending van toksiese substanse, was daar verskeie klandestiene ontmoetings tussen Dr Immelman en beskuldigdes no 3, 4 en 5.

35. Gedurende die ontmoetings het die beskuldigdes inligting oor inter alia gifstowwe, bakterieë en kiere as gewenste toedieningsroete verlang. Dr Immelman het die substans, Paraoxon, vir die doel geïdentifiseer en verduidelik dat hierdie tipe gifstof op nousluitende kledingstukke, soos 'n hemp se boordjie en/of op 'n onderbroek, aangewend moet word. Die beskuldigdes het Dr Immelman daarop versoek om Paraoxon aan hulle te verskaf.

36. Paraoxon is 'n dodelike, toksiese substans.

37. Op 4 April 1989 het Dr Immelman die Paraoxon aan die beskuldigdes gelewer, soos in Aanhangsel "A" gereflekteer word.

38. Op 23 April 1989 sou Eerwaarde Chikane vanaf Jan Smuts Lughawe vertrek het na Windhoek.

39. Voor sy vertrek het beskuldigdes no 4 en 5 vir ene Zeelie, wat ook verbonde was aan die Veiligheidspolisie, genader en Zeelie versoek om hulle behulpsaam te wees om Eerwaarde Chikane se bagasie op die lughawe te onderskep en oop te maak, sodat die kiere met 'n gifstof besmet kon word.

40. Die aand van 23 April 1989 was beskuldigdes no 4 en 5 op die lughawe en is Eerwaarde Chikane se tas onderskep en aan hulle oorhandig. Beskuldigdes no 4 en 5 het van die inhoud van Eerwaarde Chikane se tas besmet met die Paraoxon wat Dr Immelman aan hulle verskaf het.

41. Die besmetting van Eerwaarde Chikane se klere het die gebeure soos uiteengesit in paragrawe 29 - 32 tot gevolg gehad.

42. Die Staat beweer dat beskuldigdes ter bevordering van 'n gemeenskaplike oogmerk opgetree het om Eerwaarde Chikane te dood.

43. Ten aansien van aanklag 2 is dit onbekend aan die staat wanneer en ten opsigte van wie die substanse toegedien is. Die staat beweer egter dat daar gedurende die vermelde tydperk 'n sameswering bestaan het om teenstanders van die regering van die dag te elimineer.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

LYS VAN GETUIES INGEVOLGE ARTIKEL 144(3)(a) VAN WET 51 VAN 1977

1. Eerwaarde Frank Chikane
2. Dr André Immelman
3. Charles Alfred Zeelie
4. Paul Francis Erasmus
5. Pieter Jacobus Johannes Burger
6. Eugéne Alexander de Kock
7. Superintendent Marthinus Gert Thomas Swart
8. Jacobus Francois Kotze
9. Wynand Johannes Pretorius
10. Dr Daniël J Smith
11. Dr Tomas P Lynch
12. Mary Rook
13. Joan Emmerich

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

AANHANGSEL "A"

VERKOPE

Datum gelewer		Stof	Volume	Prys
19.03.89	JK	Phensiklidien Thallium asetaat	1 x 500mg 50g	Teruggebring
23.03.89	JK	Phensiklidien	5 x 100mg
04.04.89	C	Aldicarb – Lemoensap	6 x 200mg
04.04.89	C	Asied – Whisky	3 x 1,5 g
04.04.89	C	Paraoxon	10 x 2ml
07.04.89	C	Vit D	2gr
15.05.89	C	Vit D	2gr	R300,00
15.05.89	C	Katharidien	70mg	R150,00
15.05.89	C	10ml Spuite	50
16.05.89	C	Naalde 15Gx10mm	24	R18,00
16.05.89	C	Naalde 17Gx7,5mm	7	R7,00
19.05.89	C	Thallium asetaat	1g
30.05.89		Fosfied tablette	30
09.06.89		Spore en Brief	1
20.06.89	K	Kapsules NaCN	50
21.06.89		Bierblik Bot	3
21.06.89		Bierblik Thallium	3
21.06.89		Bottel bier Bot	1
21.06.89		Bottel bier Thallium	2
22.06.89	K	Suiker en Salmonella	200gr
27.06.89	C	Wiskey en Paraquat	1x75ml
20.07.89	K	Hg-sianied	4gr
27.07.89	K	Bobbejaan foetus	1
04.08.89	K	Vibrio cholera	16 bottels

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

DATUM GELEWER		STOF	VOLUME	PRYS
10.08.89	K	Asied 4xgr	Kapsule sianied 7
11.08.89	C	Sigarette B anthracis	5
	C	Koffie sjokolade B anthracis	5
	C	Koffie sjokolade Potulinum	5
	C	Pepperment sjokolade Aldikarb	3
	C	Pepperment sjokolade Brodifakum	2
	C	Pepperment sjokolade Katharidien	3
	C	Pepperment sjokolade Sianied	3
16.08.89	K	Vibrio cholera	6 bottels
16.08.89	K	Kapsules Propan NaCN	7
16.08.89	K	Formalien en Piridien	50ml x 30
		Naalde 10cm x no 16	12
16.08.89	K	Katharidien - poeier in sakkie	100mg
16.08.89	K	Metanol	3-30ml
	C	Vibrio cholera	10 bottels
06.09.89	K	Slange	2
	K	Mamba toksien	1	Teruggebring
13.09.89	K	Digoksien	5 mg
18.09.89	C	Whiskey 50ml + colchicines	75mg
06.10.89	K	B.melitensis c	1 x 50
		S.typhimurium in deodorant	1
11.10.89	K	Kulture vanaf briewe	2
21.10.89	K	B.melitensis c
		S.typhimurium in deodorant	1

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

A.

II.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

(TRANSVAAL PROVINCIAL DIVISION)

CASE NO:

In the matter between:

THE STATE

and

1. JOHANNES VELDE VAN DER MERWE

an adult male South African citizen

2. ADRIAAN JOHANNES VLOK

an adult male South African citizen

3. CHRISTOFFEL LODEWIKUS SMITH

an adult male South African citizen

4. GERT JACOBUS LOUIS HOSEA OTTO an adult male South African citizen AND

5. HERMANUS JOHANNES VAN STADEN

an adult male South African citizen

(hereafter referred to as the accused)

PLEA AND SENTENCING AGREEMENT IN TERMS OF SECTION 105A OF ACT 51 OF 1977 (AS AMENDED)

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

THE PLEA AGREEMENT:

A. PARTIES TO THE AGREEMENT:

1. The State is the National Prosecuting Authority of South Africa and represents the complainant.

2. There are five accused, namely:

JOHANNES VELDE VAN DER MERWE

ADRIAAN JOHANNES VLOK

CHRISTOFFEL LODEWIKUS SMITH

GERT JACOBUS LOUIS HOSEA OTTO and

HERMANUS JOHANNES VAN STADEN;

B. AUTHORISATION:

3. The prosecutor who represents the Prosecuting Authority in this matter is Adv AR Ackermann SC, a Special Director in the Priority Crimes Litigation Unit in the Office of the National Prosecuting Authority, who is duly authorised to enter into this plea agreement on behalf of the State. The relevant authorisation is attached as Annexure A.

C. LEGAL REPRESENTATION:

4. At all times during the plea negotiations and these proceedings, the accused have been represented by Adv Johann Engelbrecht SC and Jan Wagener, of Attorneys Wagener Muller, 833 Church Street, Pretoria, 0001.

D. THE INVESTIGATING OFFICER:

5. The investigating officer was consulted regarding this plea agreement and has indicated that he has no objection to the pleas of guilty as set out in the agreement, or to the proposed sentences.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

E. THE COMPLAINANT'S ATTITUDE WITH REGARD TO THE PLEA AGREEMENT:

6. The complainant, the Reverend Frank Chikane, has been consulted and has indicated that:

   6.1 He does not harbour a grudge against the accused.

   6.2 It is extremely important for him to have the true facts surrounding the attempt on his life disclosed.

   6.3 He is satisfied with the plea agreement and does not wish to make any further representations in connection with the matter.

F. THE RIGHTS OF THE ACCUSED:

7. Prior to entering into the plea agreement, the accused were duly informed about their constitutional rights..

8. They have been fully informed regarding the rebuttable presumption that they are innocent until guilt has been proved beyond reasonable doubt.

9. They were informed of their right to remain silent.

10. They were also fully informed of their right not to offer self-incriminating testimony.

11. The accused are fully aware of the fact that the Honourable Court is not bound by this plea agreement.

G. THE CHARGES:

12. The accused are charged with the following offences:

COUNT 1: ATTEMPTED MURDER

IN THAT on or about 23 April 1989 and at or in the vicinity of the then Jan Smuts Airport in the district of Kempton Park, the accused unlawfully and intentionally, and in furtherance of a common purpose, attempted to murder the Reverend Frank Chikane, an adult male person, by way of administering a poison, to wit Paraoxon, to his clothing.

ALTERNATIVE CHARGE TO COUNT 1: CONTRAVENTION OF SECTION 18(2)(a) OF THE RIOTOUS ASSEMBLIES ACT, NO 17 OF 1956

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

IN THAT the accused, together with Wouter Basson, André Immelman and persons unknown to the State, during April 1989 and at or near Roodeplaat Research Laboratory and/or Pretoria in the district of Pretoria, unlawfully and intentionally conspired to commit the crime of murder against the Reverend Frank Chikane, and / or to assist in the commission of this offence and / or to further the commission of the offence.

COUNT 2: CONTRAVENTION OF SECTION 18(2)(a) OF THE RIOTOUS ASSEMBLIES ACT, NO 17 OF 1956

IN THAT the accused, Wouter Basson, André Immelman and persons unknown to the State, during 1989 and at or near Roodeplaat Research Laboratory, Security Branch Headquarters in the district of Pretoria and/or other locations unknown to the State, unlawfully and intentionally conspired to commit the crime of murder of persons unknown to the State and / or to assist with the commission of such murders and / or to further the commission of such murders.

H. THE PLEA OF THE ACCUSED:

13. The parties to this plea agreement have concurred on the following:

13.1 That all the accused plead guilty to Count 1, as set out in the indictment:

COUNT 1: ATTEMPTED MURDER

IN THAT on or about 23 April 1989 and at or in the vicinity of the then Jan Smuts Airport in the district of Kempton Park, the accused unlawfully and intentionally, and in furtherance of a common purpose, attempted to murder the Reverend Frank Chikane, an adult male person, by way of administering a poison, to wit Paraoxon, to his clothing.

13.2 That the State will withdraw Count 2 against all the accused.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

1. FACTUAL SUMMARY OF EVENTS:

(i) BACKGROUND:

(For the sole and exclusive purpose of this agreement, the accused admit the contents of paragraphs 14 to 23 as set out hereunder, although at the time the relevant offence referred to in Count 1 was committed, they had no knowledge whatsoever thereof.)

14. During the period 1982 – 1992, the South African Defence Force ran a Top Secret project, namely Project Coast. The primary objective of this project was to develop a defensive and limited offensive chemical and biological warfare capacity.

15. Dr Wouter Basson was the project officer.

16. Due to the sensitivity of the project, front companies were used to conduct research as well as to manufacture and procure substances.

17. The front company Delta G Scientific (Pty) Ltd (hereafter referred to as "Delta G") was responsible for research and manufacture of chemical substances for the project.

18. Roodeplaat Research Laboratory (Pry) Ltd (hereafter referred to as "Roodeplaat") conducted research in the biological sphere and to a lesser extent, also carried out chemical research.

19. Dr A Immelman was a scientist employed as the head of toxicological research at Roodeplaat.

20. Around the mid-1980s, Dr Basson instructed Dr Immelman to, inter alia, carry out research on the use of toxic substances against individuals, methods of application and the traceability of such substances following administration. These toxic substances (including Paraoxon) were manufactured at Roodeplaat and some of them were handed over to Dr Basson.

21. In approximately 1987, Dr Basson ordered Dr Immelman to meet clandestinely with representatives of other branches of the Security Forces and to supply them with whatever substances they needed.

22. As a result of this instruction, Dr Immelman had various clandestine meetings with members of the various Security Force components. During these meetings, the needs of particular components were discussed and toxic substances were in fact later supplied to them.

23. In order to keep a record of the toxic substances that were handed over to these outsiders, Dr Immelman maintained a list (attached to the indictment as Annexure "A") indicating the date of delivery, the name of the substance and the volume / quantity supplied.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

(ii) THE ACCUSED:

24. During the period January 1986 to September 1988, accused No 1 was the commanding officer of the SA Police Special Branch. In October 1988, he was promoted to Deputy Commissioner of Police.

25. General Sebastiaan Smit succeeded him as commander of the Security Police and thereafter, accused No 1 had no further involvement with the project.

26. During the period December 1986 to August 1991, accused No 2 was the Minister of Law and Order in the Republic of South Africa.

27. During the period relevant to the indictment, accused 3 to 5 served as police officers attached to the Security Branch.

(iii) THE VICTIM:

28. The Reverend Frank Chikane was an outspoken opponent of apartheid and the policies of the then lawfully elected government. He was, inter alia, the secretary-general of the South African Council of Churches and the vice president of the United Democratic Front. It was the stated policy of the latter organisation to propagate and support countrywide unrest and violence for the direct purpose of rendering the country ungovernable.

29. During April / May 1989, Reverend Chikane was planning to visit various foreign countries with a view to propagating the imposition of economic sanctions against South Africa.

30. The first leg of his trip was a visit to South West Africa, now Namibia. He travelled by air from the former Jan Smuts Airport to Windhoek.

31. After dressing on 24 April 1989 in some of the clothes that had been packed in his suitcase, the Reverend Chikane took ill. He was admitted to a hospital in Namibia, but later the same day, he was transported back to South Africa as a matter of urgency and re-hospitalised on arrival.

32. His condition improved and he was discharged from hospital. He then flew to the USA, both to recuperate and to keep a number of scheduled appointments. Additional clothing was packed in his suitcase, which had arrived from Namibia in the interim.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

33. In the United States, Reverend Chikane again fell ill after wearing clothing taken from his suitcase. Again, after being hospitalised, his condition improved. This pattern was repeated twice more.

34. During his third hospitalisation in the USA, extensive medical tests were carried out on Reverend Chikane. P-Nitrophenol was found in his urine and this, together with specific symptoms and other test results, indicated organophosphate poisoning. P-Nitrophenol is a rapidly biodegradable metabolite of Parathion, of which Paraoxon is the active ingredient.

(iv) THE CRIME:

35. During the 1980s, various individuals / organisations were actively involved in efforts to abolish apartheid in South Africa and/or overthrow the government of the day by violent means. Methods used included the promotion of economic sanctions against and the international isolation of South Africa, as well as direct propagation of civil disobedience in order to render the country ungovernable.

36. During 1987, at a meeting arranged by the South African Defence Force, accused No 1 took cognisance of an order to act against high profile members of the anti-apartheid liberation struggle in order to neutralise their influence. He also took note that, in extreme cases and only as a last resort, consideration could be given to killing them.

37. A list containing the names of persons identified in terms of this order was handed to senior members of the security establishment, including accused No 1. Reverend Chikane's name was among those on this list.

38. The execution of the above-mentioned order was discussed by accused No 1 and No 2.

39. Accused No 1 and No 2 then decided that a special unit should be set up within the Security Branch for the purpose of carrying out this order.

40. Accused No 4 and No 5 were attached to this special unit at all relevant times and from January 1989, accused No 3 served as the commander of the unit.

41. After General Smit assumed command of the Security Branch, he was informed about the objectives of the special unit.

42. Acting on the orders of General Smit, accused No 3 made contact with Dr Basson and requested him to assist the special unit in acquiring substances that could be applied against the enemy. Dr Basson arranged for contact to be made with Dr Immelman.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

43. A number of clandestine meetings took place thereafter between Dr Immelman and accused No 3, 4 and 5. At these meetings, these three accused discussed the details of substances that could be used against the enemy. In respect of Reverend Chikane, a substance that would specifically lead to his death was required. Dr Immelman identified a certain substance for this purpose and explained that it should be applied to close-fitting clothing items, such as a shirt collar and/or underpants. The toxic substance, which was subsequently identified as Paraoxon, was supplied to them by Dr Immelman.

44. Paraoxon is a lethal toxic substance.

45. On 4 April 1989, Dr Immelman delivered the Paraoxon to the accused, as reflected in Annexure "A" of the Indictment.

46. Reverend Chikane was due to depart for Windhoek from Jan Smuts Airport on 23 April 1989.

47. On the evening of 23 April 1989, accused No 3 and No 4 were at the airport and Reverend Chikane's suitcase was intercepted. They then applied the Paraoxon supplied to them by Dr Immelman, to the contents of Reverend Chikane's suitcase.

48. The poisoning of Reverend Chikane's clothing resulted in the series of events set out in paragraphs 31-34.

49. The order to kill Reverend Chikane was issued by General Smit to accused No 3 in terms of an order conveyed to accused No 1 and No 2. The accused acted in pursuance of a common purpose to murder Reverend Chikane. At all relevant times, the accused acted unlawfully and with the necessary intent.

AGREEMENT REGARDING A JUST SENTENCE:

J. AGGRAVATING CIRCUMSTANCES:

50. The administration of poison in order to secretly eliminate opponents is an egregious, reprehensible and universally abhorrent act.

51. Accused No 1 was the Deputy Chief of the Republic of South Africa's Police at the time of commission of this crime.

52. Accused No 2 was a prominent political leader and member of the ruling party of the day.

53. Reverend Chikane was a religious leader.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

54. The motive for the planned murder of Reverend Chikane was to prevent him from lobbying abroad for economic sanctions against South Africa and to deprive him of his role in promoting internal résistance against the government..

55. The Promotion of National Unity and Reconciliation Act, No 34 of 1995, made provision for persons who were guilty of committing gross human rights violations for political purposes, to apply for amnesty.

56. On several occasions, accused No 1 and 2 availed themselves of this right and testified before the Truth and Reconciliation Committee, each time under oath.

57. The accused did not apply for amnesty in respect of the charge to which they have now pleaded guilty.

58. On 10 July 1997, accused No 1 testified before the TRC that he was not aware of the existence of a so-called "internal hit list" that was circulated within the security community.

59. Acts of reconciliation towards Reverend Chikane by accused No 2 took place only after the National Prosecuting Authority had indicated that it had a prima facie case against accused No 3, 4 and 5 in respect of the poisoning of Reverend Chikane.

60. During the trial of Dr Wouter Basson, who was charged, inter alia, with the poisoning of Reverend Chikane, the accused, and in particular accused No 2, remained silent about their role in the attempted murder and avoided any suggestion of attempted reconciliation.

61. During the prosecution of Dr Basson, accused No 3, 4 and 5 were approached on several occasions by members of the prosecution team with a view to giving evidence as State witnesses. They were offered indemnity from prosecution in terms of Section 204 of Act 51 of 1977 in this regard. The accused consistently refused to offer their cooperation and persisted in furnishing the State with a false version of events. The accused offered instead to cooperate with Dr Basson's legal defence team.

62. After conclusion of Dr Basson's trial, Reverend Chikane wrote to accused No 3, 4 and 5 several times, pleading with them to reconcile with him. The accused consistently ignored all his requests.

K. MITIGATING CIRCUMSTANCES:

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

63. None of the accused has any previous convictions. Their respective ages are 71 (accused No 1), 70 (accused No 2), 69 accused No 3), 60 (accused No 4) and 63 (accused No 5).

64. The accused are all married.

65. The accused have all pleaded guilty.

66. Disposal of this case in terms of Section 105A of Act 51 of 1977 saves both the court and the State the cost and inconvenience of a protracted trial.

67. The accused have assisted the State by pleading guilty, in so far as it would otherwise have been difficult for the State to prove its case, since the State is not in possession of any evidence regarding the involvement of accused No 1 and No 2 and has been able to establish their role only as the result of their cooperation. In addition, accused No 3 and No 4 came forward to disclose their roles.

68. The accused have shown remorse for their deeds and have undertaken to act as State witnesses in the event of a prosecution being instituted against General Sebastiaan Smit.

69. Accused No 2 publicly washed Reverend Chikane's feet as a gesture of reconciliation. This act of contrition must be seen against the background that it was performed voluntarily by accused No 2.

70. The sincere remorse of accused No 2 in regard to past deeds is further illustrated by his act of reconciliation towards the mothers of 9 of the 10 Nietverdiend victims killed by the Security Forces, despite the fact that accused No 2 had no knowledge of this operation at the time and nor was it sanctioned by him.

71. At all relevant times, the accused were acting by virtue of their official positions and posts, in defence of the lawfully elected government of the day, to which they had sworn an oath of allegiance.

72. The offence was committed during a period of intense conflict and division between the various communities and structures in South Africa. On the one hand, the ANC and other anti-apartheid organisations that wished to overthrow the government by violent means, had thrown everything into the struggle to achieve their objectives. All members and spheres of society were drawn into the struggle in order to foment résistance in a variety of forms. On the other hand, the then lawfully elected government, in turn, used all the methods and powers at its disposal. The Security Forces, and in particular the SA Police, played a key role in combating the onslaught. Amid the violence raging countrywide as well as in Namibia, the SA Police were increasingly required to act against trained military operatives, which had a significant influence on normal policing. At times, they were forced to sacrifice the principle of minimum force and, amid the violence and bloodletting, the distinction between lawful and unlawful action became blurred.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

73. At the time of commission of the offence outlined in Count 1, accused No 1 was no longer head of the Security Police and was also no longer involved in the project.

74. Neither accused No 1 nor No 2 had knowledge of the specific attempt on Reverend Chikane's life. Notwithstanding the fact that accused No 2 had made it clear that he wished to be informed in advance if consideration was being given to killing a specific individual, he was not informed in this particular case.

75. Accused No 3 and No 4 were subordinates who acted in terms of a direct order issued by the Security Branch chief, General Smit.

76. The original project aimed at neutralising the influence of high profile members of the anti-apartheid liberation struggle, was not initiated by the accused, but by the SA Defence Force, which itself was acting on higher authority.

77. As secretary-general of the South African Council of Churches and vice president of the United Democratic Front, Reverend Chikane played a key role in fomenting resistance to the former government. The United Democratic Front succeeded in mobilising the masses countrywide, resulting in widespread unrest and violence.

78. In the run-up to the TRC process, accused No 1 did everything possible to encourage members and former members of the SA Police to participate in the process. When the incident involving Reverend Chikane came to his notice, he held discussions with former chiefs and generals of the SA Defence Force in an attempt to persuade them to take part in the process as well. Because members of the defence force were involved in the incident, any attempt to seek amnesty would necessarily have been unsuccessful without their cooperation. The military generals were of the opinion, however, that the Promotion of National Unity and Reconciliation Act, No 34 of 1995, contained one-sided provisions that rendered the process unacceptable to them.

79. After conclusion of the TRC process, accused No 1 and No 2 did everything they could to promote creation of a further process that could address shortcomings exposed by the TRC process. Following the decision to prosecute accused No 3, 4 and 5, accused No 1 and No 2 also held discussions with Reverend Chikane with a view to the institution of such a process. He showed empathy for the problems with which accused No 1 and No 2 were wrestling.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

80. With the formulation of the National Prosecuting Authority's prosecutorial guidelines entitled "Prosecuting policy and directives relating to the prosecution of offences emanating from conflicts of the past and which were committed on or before 11 May 1994" (see Annexure "B"), a process was created that offered built-in protection for individuals who wished to make use of it, and the accused lost no time in coming forward and making full disclosure regarding this incident, which they had not been able to do in response to the letters from Reverend Chikane referred to in paragraph 62 above.

L. SENTENCE AGREEMENT:

81. In the light of the circumstances set out above, agreement has been reached on the following as appropriate sentences in respect of count 1:

Accused No 1 and No 2:

Each of the accused is sentenced as follows:

> "10 (ten) years' imprisonment, wholly suspended for 5 (five) years on condition that the accused are not convicted of a crime in which assault or the administration of poison or other hazardous substances form an element, or of conspiracy to commit such a crime, committed during the period of suspension and in respect of which a sentence of imprisonment without the option of a fine is imposed."

Accused No 3, 4 and 5:

Each accused is sentenced as follows:

> "5 (five) years' imprisonment, wholly suspended for 5 (five) years on condition that the accused are not convicted of a crime in which assault or the administration of poison or other hazardous substances form an element, or of conspiracy to commit such a crime, committed during the period of suspension and in respect of which a sentence of imprisonment without the option of a fine is imposed."

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

SIGNED AT PRETORIA ON THIS DAY OF JUNE 2007.

_____

AR ACKERMANN SC
Director of Public Prosecutions
Priority Crime Litigation Unit.

_____

1. JOHANNES VELDE VAN DER MERWE

_____

2. ADRIAAN JOHANNES VLOK

_____

3. CHRISTOFFEL LODEWIKUS SMITH

_____

4. GERT JACOBUS LOUIS HOSEA OTTO

_____

5. HERMANUS JOHANNES VAN STADEN

_____

JAN WAGENER
ATTORNEY FOR THE ACCUSED
WAGENER MULLER
833 CHURCH STREET
ARCADIA, PRETORIA
TEL: (012) 342-3525
DOCEX 321 PRETORIA
REF: JW0423

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

A.

III.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

IN DIE HOOGGEREGSHOF VAN SUID AFRIKA

(TRANSVAALSE PROVINSIALE AFDELING)

SAAK NR:

In die saak tussen:

DIE STAAT

en

1. JOHANNES VELDE VAN DER MERWE

'n volwasse man en 'n Suid-Afrikaanse burger

2. ADRIAAN JOHANNES VLOK

'n volwasse man en 'n Suid-Afrikaanse burger

3. CHRISTOFFEL LODEWIKUS SMITH

'n volwasse man en 'n Suid-Afrikaanse burger

4. GERT JACOBUS LOUIS HOSEA OTTO

'n volwasse man en Suid-Afrikaanse burger en

5. HERMANUS JOHANNES VAN STADEN

'n volwasse man en Suid-Afrikaanse burger

(hierna die beskuldigdes genoem)

PLEIT- EN VONNISOOREENKOMS INGEVOLGE

ARTIKEL 105A VAN WET 51 VAN 1977 (SOOS GEWYSIG)

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

DIE PLEIT-OOREENKOMS:

A. PARTYE TOT OOREENKOMS:

1. Die Staat is die vervolgingsgesag en verteenwoordig die klaer;

2. Daar is vyf beskuldigdes, naamlik:

JOHANNES VELDE VAN DER MERWE

ADRIAAN JOHANNES VLOK

CHRISTOFFEL LODEWIKUS SMITH

GERT JACOBUS LOUIS HOSEA OTTO en

HERMANUS JOHANNES VAN STADEN;

B. MAGTIGING:

3. Die aanklaer wat die Vervolgingsgesag hierin verteenwoordig, is Adv. Anton R Ackermann SC, 'n Spesiale Direkteur verbonde aan die Prioriteits Misdaad Litigasie Eenheid van die Nasionale Vervolgingsgesag en het die pleit-onderhandelinge in hierdie saak behartig, waartoe hy behoorlik gemagtig is. Die betrokke magtiging word hierby aangeheg as Aanhangsel A.

C. REGSVERTEENWOORDIGING:

4. Die beskuldigdes is gedurende die pleit-onderhandelinge en voer van die verrigtinge deurentyd verteenwoordig deur Adv Johann Engelbrecht SC en Jan Wagener, van Prokureurs Wagener Muller, Kerkstraat 833, Pretoria, 0001.

D. DIE ONDERSOEKBEAMPTE:

5. Die ondersoekbeampte is geraadpleeg in hierdie aangeleentheid en het geen beswaar teen die verrigtinge en die voorgestelde vonnisse nie.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

E. DIE KLAER SE HOUDING TEN OPSIGTE VAN DIE PLEIT-OOREENKOMS:

6. Die klaer, Eerwaarde Frank Chikane, is gespreek.

6.1 Hy het te kenne gegee dat hy nie 'n wrok teen die beskuldigdes koester nie;

6.2 Dat dit baie belangrik vir hom is dat die ware feite aan die lig kom; en

6.3 Dat hy tevrede is met die pleit-ooreenkoms en geen verdere vertoë in verband met hierdie aangeleentheid wil rig nie.

F. DIE BESKULDIGDES SE REGTE:

7. Alvorens hierdie verrigtinge 'n aanvang geneem het, is die beskuldigdes behoorlik oor hul fundamentele regte ingelig.

8. Hulle is volledig ingelig oor die weerlegbare vermoede dat hulle onskuldig is totdat hul bo redelike twyfel skuldig bewys word.

9. Hulle is ingelig oor hul reg om te kan swyg.

10. Hulle is ook volledig ingelig oor die reg om nie inkriminerende getuienis teen hulself af te lê nie.

11. Die beskuldigdes is verder bewus van die feit dat die Agbare Hof nie gebonde is aan hierdie ooreenkoms nie.

G. DIE AANKLAGTE:

12. Die beskuldigdes word aangekla van die volgende aanklagte:

AANKLAG 1: POGING TOT MOORD

DEURDAT die beskuldigdes op of omtrent 23 April 1989 en te of naby die destydse Jan Smuts Lughawe in die distrik van Kempton Park wederregtelik en opsetlik ter bevordering van 'n gemeenskaplike oogmerk gepoog het om vir Eerwaarde Frank Chikane, 'n volwasse manlike persoon, te dood deur sy klere met 'n gifstof, te wete Paraoxon, te besmet.

P. 005/024
Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

ALTERNATIEWE AANKLAG TOT AANKLAG 1: OORTREDING VAN ARTIKEL 18(2)(a) VAN DIE WET OP OPROERIGE BYEENKOMSTE, WET 17 VAN 1956

DEURDAT die beskuldigdes, Wouter Basson, André Immelman en persone onbekend aan die Staat, gedurende April 1989 en te of naby Roodeplaat Navorsings Laboratorium en of Pretoria in die distrik van Pretoria wederregtelik en opsetlik saamgesweer het om die misdaad van moord ten aansien van Eerwaarde Frank Chikane, te pleeg en / of by die pleging van die misdaad behulpsaam te wees en / of die pleging daarvan te bewerkstellig.

AANKLAG 2: OORTREDING VAN ARTIKEL 18(2)(a) VAN DIE WET OP OPROERIGE BYEENKOMSTE, WET 17 VAN 1956

DEURDAT die beskuldigdes, Wouter Basson, André Immelman en persone onbekend aan die Staat, gedurende 1989 en te of naby Roodeplaat Navorsings Laboratorium, Veiligheidspolisie Hoofkantoor in die distrik van Pretoria en of ander plekke onbekend aan die Staat wederregtelik en opsetlik saamgesweer het om die misdaad van moord ten aansien van persone onbekend aan die Staat te pleeg en / of by die pleging van die misdaad behulpsaam te wees en / of die pleging daarvan te bewerkstellig.

H. DIE BESKULDIGDES SE PLEIT:

13. Die partye tot hierdie ooreenkoms het tot die volgende ooreengekom:

13.1 Dat die beskuldigdes skuldig pleit op aanklag 1, soos vervat in die akte van beskuldiging:

Aanklag 1:

DEURDAT die beskuldigdes op of omtrent 23 April 1989 en te of naby die destydse Jan Smuts Lughawe in die distrik van Kempton Park wederregtelik en opsetlik ter bevordering van 'n gemeenskaplike oogmerk gepoog het om vir Eerwaarde Frank Chikane, 'n volwasse manlike persoon, te dood deur sy klere met 'n gifstof, te wete Paraoxon, te besmet.

13.2 Dat die Staat aanklag 2, soos vervat in die akte van beskuldiging, terugtrek teen al die beskuldigdes.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

I. FEITLIKE UITEENSETTING VAN DIE VOORVALLE:

(i) AGTERGROND:

(Vir doeleindes van hierdie ooreenkoms alleen erken die beskuldigdes die inhoud van paragrawe 14 tot 23 wat direk hierna volg, alhoewel hulle ten tye van die pleeg van die betrokke misdryf geen kennis van enige aard daarvan gedra het nie.)

14. Die Suid-Afrikaanse Weermag het gedurende die tydperk 1982-1992 'n hoogs geheime projek bedryf wat as Projek Coast bekend gestaan het. Die hoofdoelstelling van die projek was om 'n defensiewe en beperkte offensiewe chemiese- en biologiese oorlogvermoë daar te stel.

15. Dr Wouter Basson was die projekoffisier.

16. Vanweë die sensitiwiteit van die projek is daar van frontmaatskappye gebruik gemaak om navorsing te doen sowel as om substanse te vervaardig en te verkry.

17. Die frontmaatskappy Delta G Scientific (Edms) Bpk (hierna genoem "Delta G") was vir die navorsing en vervaardiging van die chemiese been van die projek verantwoordelik.

18. Roodeplaat Navorsing Laboratorium (Edms) Bpk (hierna genoem "Roodeplaat") het navorsing op biologiese gebied en tot 'n mindere mate chemiese navorsing gedoen.

19. Dr A Immelman was 'n wetenskaplike wat by Roodeplaat as die hoof van navorsing op toksikologie werksaam was.

20. Dr Basson het ongeveer in die middel tagtigerjare vir Dr Immelman opdrag gegee om inter alia navorsing te doen oor die aanwending van toksiese substanse teen individue, die roete van aanwending, sowel as die opspoorbaarheid van die stowwe na die toediening daarvan. Hierdie toksiese substanse (onder andere Paraoxon) is by Roodeplaat vervaardig en sommige daarvan is aan Dr Basson oorhandig.

21. Gedurende ongeveer 1987 het Dr Basson aan Dr Immelman opdrag gegee om met verteenwoordigers van ander afdelings van die Veiligheidsmagte op 'n klandestiene wyse te ontmoet en aan hul behoeftes te voldoen.

22. Dr Immelman het daarna verskeie klandestiene ontmoetings met lede van die onderskeie veiligheidsmagte gehad. Tydens hierdie ontmoetings is die behoefte van die besondere afdeling bespreek en is die substanse later

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

23. Ten einde rekord te hou van hierdie toksiese substanse wat aan die buitestaanders oorhandig is, het Dr Immelman 'n lys (aangeheg as Aanhangsel "A" tot die Akte van Beskuldiging) bygehou om die datum van lewering, die naam van die substans, sowel as die volume / hoeveelheid wat gelewer is, aan te dui.

(ii) DIE BESKULDIGDES:

24. Beskuldigde no 1 was gedurende die tydperk Januarie1986 tot September1988 die bevelvoerende offisier van die Veiligheidstak van die SA Polisie. Gedurende Oktober 1988 is hy bevorder tot adjunk-kommissaris van die Polisie.

25. Generaal Sebastiaan Smit het hom opgevolg as bevelvoerder van die Veiligheidstak en beskuldigde no 1 was daarna nie meer betrokke by die projek nie.

26. Beskuldigde no 2 was die Minister van Wet en Orde van die Republiek van Suid-Afrika gedurende die tydperk Desember 1986 tot Augustus 1991.

27. Beskuldigdes no 3 tot 5 was gedurende die relevante tye tot die akte van beskuldiging offisiere verbonde aan die Veilgheidstak.

(iii) DIE SLAGOFFER:

28. Eerwaarde Chikane was 'n uitgesproke teenstaander van apartheid en die beleid van die destydse wettige verkose regering. Hy was onder andere die sekretaris-generaal van die Suid-Afrikaanse Raad van Kerke en die vise-president van die United Democratic Front. Laasgenoemde organisasie het as verklaarde beleid gehad die propagering en ondersteuning van landswye onrus en geweld met as direkte doelstelling om die land onregeerbaar te maak.

29. Gedurende April / Mei 1989 was Eerwaarde Chikane van voorneme om verskele lande te besoek om onder andere die toepassing van ekonomiese sanksies teen Suid-Afrika te propageer.

30. Die eerste been van sy toer was 'n besoek aan Suidwes-Afrika, tans Namibië. Hy het per vliegtuig vanaf die destydse Jan Smuts Lughawe na Windhoek gereis.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

31. Nadat Eerwaarde Chikane op 24 April 1989 van die klere wat in sy tas gepak was, aangetrek het, het hy siek geword. Hy is in 'n hospitaal in Namibië opgeneem, maar is later op dieselfde dag dringend terug na Suid-Afrika vervoer, waar hy weer gehospitaliseer is.

32. Nadat daar 'n verbetering in sy toestand ingetree het, is hy ontslaan. Hy het daarop na die VSA vertrek om daar te gaan aansterk en afsprake na te kom. Sy bagasie, wat intussen vanaf Namibië gearriveer het, is met bykomende klere aangevul.

33. In die Verenigde State van Amerika het Eerwaarde Chikane weer eens siek geword, nadat hy van die klere wat in sy tas was, aangetrek het. Sy toestand het na hospitalisasie verbeter. Hierdie episode het homself op twee verdere geleenthede herhaal, waarop hy gehospitaliseer was.

34. Ekstensiewe mediese toetse is gedurende hospitalisering op Eerwaarde Chikane uitgevoer. P.Nitrophenole is in sy urine geïdentifiseer tesame met spesifieke simptome (onder andere 'n lae anticholienesterase) wat ooreenstem met organofosfaat vergiftiging. P.Nitrophenole is vinnig afbrekende metaboliete van Parathion, waarvan Paraoxon die aktiewe bestanddeel is.

(iv) DIE MISDAAD:

35. Gedurende die tagtigerjare was verskeie persone / organisasies aktief betrokke in Suid-Afrika onder andere met die doel om die afskaffing van apartheid en/of die omverwerping van die regering van die dag met geweld teweeg te bring. Dit is onder andere gedoen deur die bevordering van ekonomiese sanksies teen en die internasionale isolasie van Suid-Afrika, asook die regstreekse bevordering van burgerlike ongehoorsaamheid ten einde die land onregeerbaar te maak.

36. Gedurende 1987 het beskuldigde no 1 op 'n vergadering, wat deur die Suid-Afrikaanse Weermag gereël is, verneem van 'n opdrag om teen hoë profiel lede van die anti-Apartheids-vryheidstryd op te tree ten einde hul invloed te neutraliseer en dat, slegs in uiterste gevalle, as 'n laaste uitweg, oorweeg kon word om hulle om die lewe te bring.

37. 'n Lys met die name van die geïdentifiseerde persone is aan senior lede van die Veiligheidsgemeenskap, insluitende beskuldigde no 1, oorhandig. Eerwaarde Chikane se naam het op hierdie lys verskyn.

38. Beskuldigdes nos 1 en 2 het die uitvoering van die bovermelde opdrag bespreek.

39. Daar was toe deur beskuldigdes nos 1 en 2 besluit dat 'n spesiale eenheid in die Veiligheidstak gestig sou word om die opdrag uit te voer.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

40. Beskuldigdes nos 4 en 5 was ten alle relevante tye verbonde aan hierdie spesiale eenheid en vanaf Januarie 1989 het beskuldigde no 3 gedien as die bevelvoerder van die eenheid.

41. Nadat Generaal Smit oorgeneem het as bevelvoerder van die Veiligheidstak, is hy ingelig ten aansien van die doelwitte van die spesiale eenheid.

42. In opdrag van Generaal Smit het beskuldigde no 3 kontak met Dr Basson gemaak en hom versoek om hulle spesiale eenheid behulpsaam te wees om middels te bekom wat aangewend kon word teen die vyand. Dr Basson het reëlings getref dat kontak gemaak word met Dr Immelman.

43. Verskeie klandestiene ontmoetings het daarna tussen Dr Immelman en beskuldigdes nos 3, 4 en 5 plaasgevind. Gedurende die ontmoetings het die gemelde beskuldigdes inligting oor middels wat teen die vyand aangewend kon word, bespreek, en wat Eerwaarde Chikane betref, spesifiek 'n middel verlang wat tot sy dood sou lei. Dr Immelman het 'n bepaalde substans vir die doel geïdentifiseer en verduidelik dat dit op nousluitende kledingstukke, soos 'n hemp se boordjie en/of op 'n onderbroek, aangewend moet word. Die betrokke substans, wat nou blyk Paraoxon te gewees het, is deur Dr Immelman aan hulle verskaf.

44. Paraoxon is 'n dodelike, toksiese substans.

45. Op 4 April 1989 het Dr Immelman die Paraoxon aan die beskuldigdes gelewer, soos in Aanhangsel "A" tot die Akte van Beskuldiging gereflekteer word.

46. Op 23 April 1989 sou Eerwaarde Chikane vanaf Jan Smuts Lughawe vertrek het na Windhoek.

47. Die aand van 23 April 1989 was beskuldigdes nos 3 en 4 op die lughawe en is Eerwaarde Chikane se tas onderskep. Daarna het hulle van die inhoud van Eerwaarde Chikane se tas besmet met die Paraoxon wat Dr Immelman aan hulle verskaf het.

48. Die besmetting van Eerwaarde Chikane se klere het die gebeure soos uiteengesit in paragrawe 31-34 tot gevolg gehad.

49. Die opdrag om Eerwaarde Chikane te dood is deur Generaal Smit aan beskuldigde no 3 gegee in navolging van 'n opdrag van beskuldigdes nos 1 en 2. Die beskuldigdes het ter bevordering van 'n gemeenskaplike oogmerk opgetree om Eerwaarde Chikane te dood. Te alle relevante tye het die beskuldigdes met die nodige opset en wederregtelikheid opgetree.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

OOREENKOMS TEN OPSIGTE VAN 'N REGVERDIGE VONNIS:

J. VERSWARENDE OMSTANDIGHEDE:

50. Die aanwending van giftstowwe om opponente heimlik te vermoor, is 'n uiters laakbare daad wat universeel verag word.

51. Beskuldigde no 1 was die Adjunk-Polisiehoof van die Republiek van Suid-Afrika tydens die pleeg van die misdryf.

52. Beskuldigde no 2 was 'n prominente politieke leier van die regerende party van die dag.

53. Eerwaarde Chikane was 'n geestelike leier.

54. Die motief vir die beplande moord op Eerwaarde Chikane was om hom te verhoed om ekonomiese sanksies teen Suid-Afrika in die buiteland te propageer en om sy rol om in die binneland verset teen die regering aan te wakker, aan bande te lê.

55. Die Wet op die Bevordering van Nasionale Eenheid en Versoening 34 van 1995, het daarvoor voorsiening gemaak dat persone wat hulle skuldig gemaak het aan die growwe skending van menseregte vir 'n politieke oogmerk, aansoek kon doen vir amnestie.

56. Beskuldigdes nos 1 en 2 het op verskeie geleenthede gebruik gemaak van hierdie reg deur te getuig voor die Komitee, welke getuienis elke keer onder eed gelewer is.

57. Die beskuldigdes het nie aansoek gedoen vir amnestie ten opsigte van die aanklag waarop hulle skuldig pleit nie.

58. Beskuldigde no 1 het inter alia op 10 Julie 1997 voor die WVK getuig dat hy nie bewus was van die bestaan van 'n sogenaamde "internal hit list" wat onder die Veiligheidsgemeenskap gesirkuleer is nie.

59. Beskuldigde no 2 se versoenende optrede teenoor Eerwaarde Chikane het eers plaasgevind nadat die Vervolgingsgesag aangedui het dat hy 'n prima facie saak ten aansien van die vergiftiging van Eerwaarde Chikane teen beskuldigdes nos 3, 4 en 5 het.

60. Gedurende die verhoor van Dr Wouter Basson wat inter alia tereg gestaan het op die vergiftiging van Eerwaarde Chikane, het die beskuldigdes, en in die besonder beskuldigde no 2, geswyg oor sy rol in die poging tot moord en was daar ook geen sprake van enige versoenende optrede nie.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

61. Gedurende die verhoor van Dr Basson is Beskuldigdes nos 3, 4 en 5 verskeie kere deur lede van die vervolgingspan genader om as Staatsgetuies op te tree. Vrywaring ingevolge Artikel 204 van Wet 51 van 1977 is vir hulle aangebied. Die beskuldigdes het geweier om enigsins hulle samewerking te gee en het voortgegaan om 'n valse weergawe aan die Staat te verskaf. Beskuldigdes het hulle samewerking aan die verdedigingspan van Dr Basson aangebied.

62. Na afloop van die verhoor van Dr Basson het Eerwaarde Chikane verskeie skrywes aan Beskuldigdes nos 3, 4 en 5 gerig, waarin hy om versoening gepleit het. Die beskuldigdes het nie op hierdie skrywes gereageer nie.

K. VERSAGTENDE OMSTANDIGHEDE:

63. Beskuldigdes het geen vorige veroordelings nie en is onderskeidelik 71 (beskuldigde no 1), 70 (beskuldigde no 2), 69 (beskuldigde no 3), 60 (beskuldigde no 4) en 63 (beskuldigde no 5) jaar oud.

64. Die beskuldigdes is tans getroud.

65. Die beskuldigdes pleit skuldig.

66. Die afhandeling van die huidige saak by wyse van artikel 105A van Wet 51 van 1977 het die hof en die Staat die onkoste en die ongerief van 'n uitgerekte verhoor gespaar.

67. Die beskuldigdes het die Staat gehelp deur skuldig te pleit, deurdat die Staat andersins moeilik die aanklag sou kon bewys het, aangesien die Staat oor geen getuienis beskik het rakende die aandeel van beskuldigdes no 1 en 2 en slegs met hul eie samewerking bewus geraak het van hulle aandeel. Verder het beskuldigdes no 3 en 4 na vore gekom met die feite rakende hulle aandeel.

68. Die beskuldigdes het berou getoon vir hulle dade en onderneem om as staatsgetuies op te tree indien daar 'n vervolging teen generaal Sebastiaan Smit ingestel word.

69. Beskuldigde no 2 het sonder geheimhouding en as versoeningsdaad Eerwaarde Chikane se voete gewas. Hierdie versoeningsdaad moet beoordeel word teen die agtergrond dat beskuldigde no 2 self na vore gekom het vir soverre dit hierdie saak aangaan.

70. Dat beskuldigde no 2 opregte berou het oor optredes in die verlede word verder geïllustreer deur sy versoeningsdaad geopenbaar teenoor die moeders van 9 van die 10 Nietverdiend-slagoffers wat deur die veiligheidsmagte gedood is, dit ten spyte van die feit dat beskuldigde no 2 destyds nie enige kennis van hierdie optrede gedra het nie en dit ook nie gemagtig het nie.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

71. Die beskuldigdes het uit hoofde van hulle ampte en poste te alle relevante tye opgetree ter beskerming van die wettige verkose regering van die dag, teenoor wie hulle 'n eed van getrouheid afgelê het.

72. Die voorval het plaasgevind tydens 'n tydperk toe daar intense konflik en verdeeldheid tussen die verskillende gemeenskappe en strukture in Suid-Afrika geheers het. Enersyds het die ANC en ander organisasies wat apartheid teëgestaan het en die vorige regering met geweld omver wou werp, alles in die stryd gewerp om hulle doelstellings te bereik. Alle lede en sfere van die samelewing is by die stryd betrek om verset in 'n verskeidenheid van vorme aan te wakker. Andersyds het die destydse wettige verkose regering op sy beurt al die middele en kragte tot sy beskikking gebruik. Die veiligheidsmagte, in besonder die SA Polisie, het 'n sleutel rol gespeel om die aanslag af te weer. Te midde van die geweld wat landwyd asook in Namibië gewoed het moes die SA Polisie al hoe meer teen militêr opgeleide aanvallers optree, wat normale polisiëring wesentlik beïnvloed het. Hulle was soms genope om die beginsel van minimum geweld prys te gee en te midde van die geweld en bloedvergieting het die skeidslyn tussen regmatig en onregmatig vervaag.

73. Ten tyde van die handeling vermeld in aanklag 1 was beskuldigde no 1 nie meer die Veiligheidshoof van die polisie nie en ook nie meer betrokke by die projek nie.

74. Nóg beskuldigde no 1 nóg beskuldigde no 2 het kennis gedra van hierdie spesifieke aanslag op Eerwaarde Chikane se lewe. Ten spyte van die feit dat beskuldigde no 2 in elk geval vereis het om vooraf ingelig te word, indien dit oorweeg sou word om iemand spesifiek te dood, het dit in hierdie geval nie gebeur nie.

75. Wat betref beskuldigdes nos 3 en 4, was hulle ondergeskiktes wat gehandel het in terme van 'n direkte opdrag van die Veiligheidshoof, Generaal Smit.

76. Die oorspronklike projek om die invloed van hoë profiel lede van die anti-apartheids-vryheidstryd te neutraliseer, is nie deur die beskuldigdes geïnisieer nie, maar is deur die SA Weermag van stapel gestuur in opdrag van hoër gesag.

77. Eerwaarde Chikane het as sekretaris-generaal van die Suid-Afrikaanse Raad van Kerke en vise-president van die United Democratic Front 'n belangrike rol gespeel om verset teen die vorige regering aan te wakker. Die United Democratic Front het daarin geslaag om die massas landwyd te mobiliseer en burgerlike ongehoorsaamheid op groot skaal te weeg te bring, wat weer tot grootskaalse onrus en geweld gelei het.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

78. Tydens die aanvang van die WVK-proses het beskuldigde no 1 alles moontlik gedoen om lede en voormalige lede van die SA Polisie aan te moedig om aan die proses deel te neem. Toe die geval van Eerwaarde Chikane onder sy aandag gekom het, het hy met voormalige hoofde en generaals van die SA Weermag samesprekings gevoer om hulle te probeer oorreed om ook aan die proses deel te neem. Omdat lede van die weermag by die voorval betrokke was, sou enige poging om amnestie te vra sonder hulle samewerking noodwendig misluk het. Die generaals van die weermag was egter van mening dat die Wet op die Bevordering van Nasionale Eenheid en Versoening 34 van 1995, eensydige bepalings bevat het wat dit vir hulle onaanvaarbaar gemaak het.

79. Beskuldigdes nos 1 en 2 het na afloop van die WVK-werksaamhede alles moontlik gedoen om 'n verdere proses tot stand te bring om die leemtes wat tydens die WVK-proses ontstaan het, uit te skakel. Na die besluit om beskuldigdes nos 3, 4 en 5 te vervolg, het beskuldigdes no 1 en 2 ook met Eerwaarde Chikane samesprekings gevoer met die oog op so 'n proses en het laasgenoemde begrip gehad vir die probleme waarmee beskuldigdes nos 1 en 2 geworstel het.

80. Met die daarstel van die Nasionale Direkteur van Openbare Vervolging se vervolgingsdirektief met die opskrif "Prosecuting policy and directives relating to the prosecution of offences emanating from conflicts of the past and which were committed on or before 11 May 1994" (sien Aanhangsel "B"), is 'n proses geskep wat ingeboude beskerming verleen aan persone wat daarvan gebruik maak en het die beskuldigdes onverwyld na vore gekom en oop kaarte gespeel met die Vervolgingsgesag ten aansien van die hierdie aangeleentheid, iets wat hulle nie kon doen in reaksie op die briewe van Eerwaarde Chikane na verwys in paragraaf 62 hierbo nie.

L. VONNIS-OOREENKOMS:

81. Dit word ooreengekom dat wat betref aanklag 1, die volgende 'n regverdige vonnis daarstel in die omstandighede hierbo uiteengesit:

Beskuldigdes nos 1 en 2:

Elke beskuldigde word soos volg gevonnis:

> "10 (tien) jaar gevangenisstraf wat in die geheel opgeskort word vir 5 (vyf) jaar op voorwaarde dat die beskuldigde nie skuldig bevind word aan 'n misdaad waarvan aanranding of die toediening van gif of ander skadelike stowwe 'n element is nie, of aan sameswering om so 'n misdaad te pleeg, gepleeg gedurende die periode van

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Beskuldigdes nos 3, 4 en 5:

Elke beskuldigde word soos volg gevonnis:

> "5 (vyf) jaar gevangenisstraf wat in die geheel opgeskort word vir 5 (vyf) jaar op voorwaarde dat die beskuldigde nie skuldig bevind word aan 'n misdaad waarvan aanranding of die toediening van gif of ander skadelike stowwe 'n element is nie, of aan sameswering om so 'n misdaad te pleeg, gepleeg gedurende die periode van opskorting en ten opsigte waarvan gevangenisstraf sonder die keuse van 'n boete opgelê word."

GETEKEN TE PRETORIA, OP HIERDIE 15 DAG VAN AUGUSTUS 2007.

AR ACKERMANN SC
Direkteur van Openbare Vervolging,
Prioriteits Misdade Litigasie Eenheid.

1. JOHANNES VELDE VAN DER MERWE

2. ADRIAAN JOHANNES VLOK

3. CHRISTOFFEL LODEWIKUS SMITH

Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-

4. GERT JACOBUS LOUIS HOSEA OTTO

5. HERMANUS JOHANNES VAN STADEN

JAN WAGENER
PROKUREUR VIR BESKULDIGDES
WAGENER MULLER
KERKSTRAAT 833
ARCADIA, PRETORIA
TEL: (012) 342-3525
DOCEX 321 PRETORIA
VERW: JW0423

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

B.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

KONSEP AKTE VAN BESKULDIGING

IN DIE OOS KAAPSE PROVINSIALE AFDELING

Saakno: .....

Die Staat

teen

1. Gideon Nieuwoudt
2. Johannes Martin Van Zyl

(Hierna vermeld as die beskuldigdes)

Akte van Beskuldigding

AANKLAGTE 1 TOT 3 – MENSEROOF (3 AANKLAGTE)

Deurdat die beskuldigdes en die volgende persone:

(i) Roelf Venter;
(ii) Gert Beeslaar;
(iii) Johannes Koole
(iv) Joe Mamasela;
(v) Peter Mogai;
(vi) Onbekende lede verbonde aan die Veiligheidstak van die SA Polisie te Port Elizabeth,

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

ter bevordering van 'n gemeenskaplike oogmerk op of omtrent 8 - 10 Mei 1985 te of naby die Port Elizabeth lughawe en Post Chalmers in die regsgebied van die Oos-Kaapse Provinsiale Afdeling wederregtelik en opsetlik die vryheid en beweging van:

(i) Qaquwili Godolozi;
(ii) Champion Galela; en
(iii) Sipho Hashe

ontneem het.

AANKLAGTE 4 TOT 6 – MOORD (3 AANKLAGTE)

Deurdat die beskuldigdes en die volgende persone:

(i) Roelf Venter;
(ii) Gert Beeslaar;
(iii) Johannes Koole
(iv) Joe Mamasela;
(v) Peter Mogai;
(vi) Onbekende lede verbonde aan die Veiligheidstak van die SA Polisie te Port Elizabeth,

Ter bevordering van 'n gemeenskaplike oogmerk op of omtrent 10 Mei 1985 te of naby Post Chalmers in die regsgebied van die Oos-Kaapse Provinsiale Afdeling wederregtelik en opsetlik die volgende persone:

(i) Qaquwili Godolozi;
(ii) Champion Galela; en
(iii) Sipho Hashe

gedood het.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

AANKLAGTE 7 – 9 : AANRANDING MET DIE OPSET OM ERNSTIG TE BESEER (3 AANKLAGTE)

Deurdat die beskuldigdes en persone vermeld in aanklag 1, ter bevordering van 'n gemeenskaplike oogmerk op of omtrent die 8 – 9 Mei 1985 te Post Chalmers in die regsgebied van die Oos- Kaapse Afdeling wederregtelik en met die opset om ernstig te beseer vir:

(i) Qaquwili Godolozi;
(ii) Champion Galela; en
(iii) Sipho Hashe

aangerand het.

OPSOMMING VAN WESENTLIKE FEITE

1. Die drie oorledenes was lede van 'n politieke organisasie wat bekend gestaan het as "Port Elizabeth Black Civic Organization" hierna genoem PEBCO.

2. Die oorledenes het leidende rolle gespeel in die aktiwiteite van die organisasie en het onderskeidelik die volgende ampte bekleë:

   (i) Qaquwili Godolozi was die President;
   (ii) Champion Galela was Organiserings-Sekretaris; en
   (iii) Sipho Hashe was die Sekretaris.

3. PEBCO was geaffilieer by die "United Democratic Front" en het oorhoofs ten doel gehad die afskaffing van die misdaad apartheid in Suid-Afrika.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

4. Die SA Polisie het die standpunt gehuldig dat die "United Democratic Front" en PEBCO bloot verlengingstukke was van die toe verbode "African National Congress" en dat die organisasies verantwoordelik was vir die voortdurende onrus en geweld wat in die Port Elizabeth gebied geheers het.

5. Die beskuldigdes was verbonde aan die Veiligheidstak van die SA Polisie te Port Elizabeth.

6. Die aktiwiteite van die drie oorledenes was deur die bovermelde Veiligheidstak gemonitor.

7. Daar is besluit dat die drie oorledenes gedood moes word.

8. Gedurende die relevante tydperk was lede van die Veiligheidspolisie wat verbonde was aan die Vlakplaas eenheid werksaam in die Port Elizabeth gebied.

9. Ene Roelf Venter het bevel gevoer oor hierdie lede.

10. Beskuldigde 2 wat verbonde was aan die Veiligheidstak Port Elizabeth het Venter versoek om hulle behulpsaam te wees met die ontvoering van die drie oorledenes.

11. Op 8 Mei 1985 is die drie oorledenes onder valse voorwendsels na die Port Elizabeth lughawe gelok.

12. Gedurende die aand van 8 Mei 1985 was die drie oorledenes ontvoer vanaf die lughawe. Die volgende persone was daadwerklik betrokke by hierdie ontvoering:

    (i) Die beskuldigdes;
    (ii) Venter;
    (iii) Lotz;
    (iv) Beeslaar;

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

(v) Koole;
(vi) Mogai; en
(vii) Mamasela.

13. Die oorledenes is na 'n verlate Polisiestasie, Post Chalmers, in die Cradock distrik geneem waar hulle aangehou is.

14. Die oorledenes is daardie nag ondervra en herhaaldelik aangerand.

15. Die aanranding het die volgende dag voortgeduur.

16. Op 10 Mei 1985 het al die Vlakplaas-lede wat teenwoordig was onttrek vanaf Post Chalmers. Die oorledenes het op daardie stadium nog geleef en was onder die beheer van die beskuldigdes en ander lede van die Port Elizabeth se Veiligheidstak.

17. Die Staat beweer dat die beskuldigdes en ander lede van die Port Elizabeth Veiligheidstak die oorledenes gedood het, in omstandighede wat onbekend is aan die Staat.

18. Die lyke van die oorledenes is nooit gevind nie.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

C.

I.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

CALENDER

EASTERN CAPE DIVISION

GRAHAMSTOWN A

BEFORE THE HONOURABLE MR. ACTING JUSTICE

D.P.P	Ref. No Registrar or Magistrate	Accused	Charge(s)	District	Witnesses
TUESDAY 12 OCTOBER TO FRIDAY 15 OCTOBER 2004
CC81/04 1.	9/2/4/1-63/04 KIRKWOOD CR42/8/85	BUYILE RONNIE BLANI	1. MURDER 2. MURDER 3. HOUSEBREAKING WITH INTENT TO COMMIT ROBBERY AND ROBBERY (with aggravating circumstances as defined in section 1(1)(b) of Act 51 of 1977)	KIRKWOOD	5 WITNESSES
MONDAY 18 OCTOBER TO FRIDAY 29 OCTOBER 2004
2.			TO BE FINALIZED

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

IN THE HIGH COURT OF THE EASTERN CAPE

The Director of Public Prosecutions for the area of jurisdiction of the High Court of the Eastern Cape, who prosecutes for and in the name of the State, informs the Honourable Court that

BUYILE RONNIE BLANI, a 40 year old male of the Military Base, Grahamstown (hereinafter called the accused) is guilty of the following crimes:

1. MURDER

2. MURDER

3. HOUSEBREAKING WITH INTENT TO COMMIT ROBBERY AND ROBBERY (with aggravating circumstances as defined in section 1((1)(b) of Act 51 of 1977)

COUNT 1: MURDER

IN THAT on or about 17 June 1985 and at or near the farm Enhoek in the Kirkwood magisterial district, the accused unlawfully and intentionally killed KOOS DE JAGER, a 72 year old male.

COUNT 2: MURDER

IN THAT on or about the date and at or near the place referred to in count 1, the accused unlawfully and intentionally killed MYRTLE LOUISA DE JAGER, a 65 year old female.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

COUNT 3: HOUSEBREAKING WITH INTENT TO COMMIT ROBBERY AND ROBBERY WITH AGGRAVATING CIRCUMSTANCES

IN THAT on or about the date and at or near the place referred to in count 1, the accused unlawfully and intentionally broke into and entered the house of KOOS and MYRTLE LOUISA DE JAGER and by intentionally using force and violence to induce submission by the said KOOS and MYRTLE LOUISA DE JAGER took and stole from out of their care and protection certain property as per the attached annexure, being in their lawful possession and thereby robbing them of same.

In the event of a conviction, the said Director of Public Prosecutions requests sentence against the accused according to law.

In terms of section 144(3) of Act 51 of 1977 a summary of substantial facts and a list of certain state witnesses are attached.

J P M MARAIS
DEPUTY DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS: EASTERN CAPE

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

ANNEXURE TO COUNT THREE

1. One ,22 Rifle (serial number: 210934)
2. One Pellet Gun
3. One long knife
4. One bayonet
5. R180.00 cash
6. One portable radio
7. Two torches
8. One thermos flask
9. One 1976 model Datsun pick-up truck (Registration number: CB 8978)
10. Linen (assorted)
11. Foodstuffs

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

SUMMARY OF SUBSTANTIAL FACTS

1. The two deceased were an elderly married couple who resided on the farm Enhoek.

2. The accused was associated with an organization known as the "Addo Youth Congress".

3. At a certain stage the accused conspired with other members of the organization to attack the farm of the deceased.

4. On the night of 17 June 1985 the accused and his co-conspirators ("the group") armed themselves and traveled to the farm of the deceased.

5. Upon arrival, the group cut the telephone connection to the farm and proceeded to the farmhouse.

6. The group then broke into the house despite attempts by the deceased in count 1 to defend himself with a firearm.

7. Both deceased were assaulted and killed inside the house. A child who was also present in the house was, however, not harmed.

8. The group ransacked the house and removed the items set out in the annexure to count three.

9. The group then left the scene in a Datsun pick-up truck that was in the possession of the deceased in count 1. The vehicle was driven to Motherwell, near Port Elizabeth where it was set on fire and burnt out.

10. At medico-legal post mortem examinations conducted on the bodies of the two deceased, the cause of death was determined as "Breinbesering" and "Akute bloedverlies" respectively.

11. At all relevant times the group acted in pursuance of a common purpose to break into the house of the two deceased, and to rob and kill them.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

LIST OF STATE WITNESSES

1. Insp. G Le Roux
   Serious and Violent Crime Unit
   PORT ELIZABETH

2. Dr. D S Gerber
   District Surgeon
   KIRKWOOD

3. Casper Jonker
   Directorate Special Operations
   VGM Building
   PRETORIA

4. James Ronald Beyl
   C/o Investigating Officer

5. Supt. Victor Leonard Clive Meyer
   SAPS
   PORT ELIZABETH

In terms of section 144(3)(a)(ii) of Act 51 of 1977 the names and addresses of other witnesses have been withheld.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

C.

II.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

(EASTERN CAPE DIVISION)

GRAHAMSTOWN

CASE NO.: CC81/2004

DATE: 25 APRIL 2005

In the matter between:

THE STATE

versus

BUYILE RONNIE BLANI

SENTENCE

LEACH J

The accused is charged with two counts of murder and one count of robbery with aggravating circumstances. Although he initially pleaded not guilty to those charges he amended his plea to one of guilty and explains that his plea of not guilty had been based upon a misconception of the legal position in that although he admitted participation in the events, he was not the person who actually killed the two deceased.

The material facts had been read into the record and the accused has confirmed that he agrees with those facts.

The charges against him arise out of an incident which occurred on 17 June 1985 when the accused and certain companions went to the farm Enhoek in the district of Kirkwood. There entry was gained into the house and the deceased, Mr Koos de Jager and his wife, Mrs Myrtle Louisa de Jager were both overpowered and killed. The accused states that this was done as he was a member of the Youth Congress which was affiliated to the African National Congress and that instructions had been received to attack farmers to destabilise the country. During the course of the incident I understand that Mr De Jager was shot to death and his wife was stabbed to death. In the course of the incident a number of items were stolen including a rifle, a pellet gun, a knife, a bayonet, cash, a radio, torches, a flask, linen, foodstuffs and a light delivery van. It seems clear that the accused was guilty of the offences of which he was charged on the basis that he participated with a common purpose in all three of these charges.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

The parties are agreed that a just sentence in the circumstances, taking the three counts together as one, is one of 5 years' imprisonment of which 4 years is suspended for 5 years on various conditions. At first blush that appears to be an alarmingly light sentence for the predetermined killing of other human beings, especially as section 105A of the Criminal Procedure Act obliges me to take the minimum sentencing legislation into account which, although it would not be of application because the actions in question were committed before the minimum sentencing legislation came into effect, does provide an indication of how severe murders committed with premeditation should be regarded.

However, the parties are agreed that one of the co-perpetrators of these crimes, a person by the name of Malgas, had applied for amnesty to the Truth and Reconciliation Commission and had been granted amnesty for the same crimes. It is further agreed that after the commission of these crimes the accused went into exile and returned to this country only after the Further Indemnity Act of 1992 had been enacted. In terms of that Act, provision was made for any outstanding warrants relating to exiled persons who wished to return to this country to be stayed on condition that, when they did return, they would then formally apply for amnesty. The accused misunderstood the position and was under the impression that as he had been granted leave to come back to the country, it was not necessary for him to apply for amnesty. It is agreed that if the accused had applied for amnesty and made the confession that he has made to this Court today, his application for amnesty would have been granted. It would seem to me to be an injustice for his misunderstanding of the provisions of the Act to be held against him and for him to go to gaol for a long period of time, whereas if he had understood the legislation properly and applied for amnesty, he would not be in that position at all.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC-Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

What is also of relevance is that another co-perpetrator who committed these offences and who had been tried and sentenced for his crimes has been granted a Presidential pardon. These are political considerations which normally would not count with the Court, because a Court must, in general, impose whatever sentence it feels appropriate and then leave the political machinations up to the politicians. But in these particular circumstances, bearing in mind that it is an element of justice that people who commit the same offences should be treated more or less the same way, it would seem to me that the sentence which has been agreed upon is in fact a just sentence and I should have regard to what has happened to his two co-perpetrators in deciding in what should happen to him.

I am therefore satisfied, that the accused has admitted all the elements of the offences with which he is charged, that he is guilty of those offences and that the sentence upon which agreement has been other is just.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

The accused is therefore found guilty on all three counts.

Taking all three counts together for the imposition of sentence I impose a sentence of 5 years' imprisonment of which 4 years is suspended for 5 years on the following conditions:

Firstly, that the accused is not found guilty of murder or culpable homicide committed during the period of suspension.

Secondly, that the accused is not found guilty of housebreaking with the intent to commit a crime, committed during the period of suspension.

Thirdly, that the accused is not found guilty of robbery committed during the period of suspension.

LE LEACH

JUDGE OF THE HIGH COURT

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

D.

I.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PROSECUTION POLICY

Preface

1. Introduction

2. Purpose of Policy Provisions

3. The Role of the Prosecutor

4. Criteria Governing the Decision to Prosecute

   (a) General

   (b) Factors to be considered when evaluating evidence

   (c) (Prosecution in the public interest

5. Case Review

   (a) Stopping of proceedings

   (b) Restarting a prosecution

   (c) Consent to prosecution

6. Forum of Trial, Determination of Charges and Acceptance of Pleas

7. The Trial Process and Related Matters

8. Co-operation and Interaction with Police and Other Constituent Agencies

8A. Prosecutorial Policy and Directives relating to Specified Matters

9. Conclusion

Appendix A

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

PREFACE

Crime cannot be allowed to undermine the constitutional democracy in South Africa. The efforts of the Prosecuting Authority should therefore be directed at reducing pervasive criminal activities. An efficient Prosecuting Authority will also enhance public confidence in the criminal justice system.

Prosecutors are the gatekeepers of the criminal law. They represent the public interest in the criminal justice process.

Effective and swift prosecution is essential to the maintenance of law and order within a human rights culture.

Offenders must know that they will be arrested, charged, detained where necessary, prosecuted, convicted and sentenced.

The Prosecution Policy is aimed at promoting the considered exercise of authority by prosecutors and contributing to the fair and even-handed administration of the criminal laws.

This Policy is the end result of a process of intense consultation amongst all prosecutors in the country. It has also been circulated to a number of criminal justice organizations, government departments, academic institutions and community organizations.

The wealth of their combined knowledge and experience has helped significantly to shape the contents of this document.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

1. INTRODUCTION

The Constitution of the Republic of South Africa provides for a single National Prosecuting Authority, consisting of—

- the National Director of Public Prosecutions, who is the head of the Prosecuting Authority,
- Deputy National Directors,
- Directors,
- Deputy Directors, and
- Prosecutors.

As an organ of state the Prosecuting Authority must give effect to the laws of the country; as an instrument of justice it must exercise its functions without fear, favour or prejudice.

The Prosecuting Authority has the power and responsibility to institute and conduct criminal proceedings on behalf of the State and to carry out any necessary functions incidental thereto.

The Constitution requires the National Director of Public Prosecutions to determine, with the agreement of the Minister of Justice and after consulting the Directors of Public Prosecutions, a "prosecution policy which must be observed in the prosecution process".

This Prosecution Policy must be tabled in Parliament and is binding on the Prosecuting Authority. The National Prosecuting Authority Act also requires that the United Nations Guidelines on the Role of Prosecutors should be observed.

The Prosecuting Authority is accountable to Parliament and ultimately to the people it serves. Every prosecutor is accountable to the National Director who, in turn, is responsible for the performance of the Prosecuting Authority.

The law gives a discretion to the Prosecuting Authority and individual prosecutors with regard to how they perform their functions, exercise their powers and carry out their duties. This discretion must, however, be exercised according to the law and within the spirit of the Constitution.

2. PURPOSE OF POLICY PROVISIONS

The aim of this Prosecution Policy is to set out, with due regard to the law, the way in which the Prosecuting Authority and individual prosecutors should exercise their discretion.

The purpose of this Prosecution Policy is, therefore, to guide prosecutors in the way they perform their functions, exercise their powers and carry out their duties. This will serve to make the prosecution process more fair, transparent, consistent and predictable.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

By promoting greater consistency in prosecutorial practices nationally, these policy provisions will contribute to better training of prosecutors and better coordination of investigative and prosecutorial processes between departments.

Since the Prosecution Policy is a public document, it will also inform the public about the principles governing the prosecution process and so enhance public confidence.

These principles have been written in general terms to give direction rather than to prescribe. They are meant to ensure consistency by preventing unnecessary disparity, without sacrificing the flexibility that is often required to respond fairly and effectively to local conditions.

3. THE ROLE OF THE PROSECUTOR

Prosecutors must at all times act in the interest of the community and not necessarily in accordance with the wishes of the community.

The prosecutor's primary function is to assist the court in arriving at a just verdict and, in the event of a conviction, a fair sentence based upon the evidence presented. At the same time, prosecutors represent the community in criminal trials. In this capacity, they should ensure that the interests of victims and witnesses are promoted, without negating their obligation to act in a balanced and honest manner.

The prosecutor has a discretion to make decisions which affect the criminal process. This discretion can be exercised at specific stages of the process, for example:

- the decision whether or not to institute criminal proceedings against an accused;
- the decision whether or not to withdraw charges or stop the prosecution;
- the decision whether or not to oppose an application for bail or release by an accused who is in custody following arrest;
- the decision about which crimes to charge an accused with and in which court the trial should proceed;
- the decision whether or not to accept a plea of guilty tendered by an accused;
- the decision about which evidence to present during the trial;
- the decision about which evidence to present during sentence proceedings, in the event of a conviction; and
- the decision whether or not to appeal to a higher court in connection with a question of law, an inappropriate sentence or the improper granting of bail, or to seek review of proceedings.

Members of the Prosecuting Authority must act impartially and in good faith. They should not allow their judgement to be influenced by factors such as their personal views regarding the nature of the offence or the race, ethnic or national origin, sex, religious beliefs, status, political views or sexual orientation of the victim, witnesses or the offender. Prosecutors must be courteous and professional when dealing with members of the public or other people working in the criminal justice system.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

4. CRITERIA GOVERNING THE DECISION TO PROSECUTE

(a) General

The process of establishing whether or not to prosecute usually starts when the police present a docket to the prosecutor. This often happens after the suspect has been arrested. The case needs to be studied to make sure that it is properly investigated.

The prosecutor should consider whether to—

- request the police to investigate the case further;
- institute a prosecution;
- decline to prosecute and to opt for pre-trial diversion or other non-criminal resolution; or
- decline to prosecute without taking any other action.

The decision whether or not to prosecute must be taken with care, because it may have profound consequences for victims, witnesses, accused and their families. A wrong decision may also undermine the community's confidence in the prosecution system.

Resources should not be wasted pursuing inappropriate cases, but must be used to act vigorously in those cases worthy of prosecution.

In deciding whether or not to institute criminal proceedings against an accused, prosecutors should assess whether there is sufficient and admissible evidence to provide a reasonable prospect of a successful prosecution. There must indeed be a reasonable prospect of a conviction, otherwise the prosecution should not be commenced or continued.

This assessment may be difficult, because it is never certain whether or not a prosecution will succeed. In borderline cases, prosecutors should probe deeper than the surface of written statements.

Where the prospects of success are difficult to assess, prosecutors should consult with prospective witnesses in order to evaluate their reliability. The version or the defence of an accused must also be considered, before a decision is made.

This test of a reasonable prospect must be applied objectively after careful deliberation, to avoid an unjustified prosecution. However, prosecutors should not make unfounded assumptions about the potential credibility of witnesses.

The review of a case is a continuing process. Prosecutors should take into account changing circumstances and fresh facts, which may come to light after an initial decision to prosecute has been made.

This may occur after having heard and considered the version of the accused and representations made on his or her behalf. Prosecutors may therefore withdraw charges before the accused has pleaded in spite of an initial decision to institute a prosecution.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

(b) Factors to be considered when evaluating evidence

When evaluating the evidence prosecutors should take into account all relevant factors, including—

How strong is the case for the State?

X Is the evidence strong enough to prove all the elements of an offence?

X Is the evidential material sufficient to meet other issues in dispute?

Will the evidence be admissible?

 Will the evidence be excluded because of the way in which it was acquired or because it is irrelevant or because of some other reason?

Will the state witnesses be credible?

 What sort of impression is the witness likely to make?
 Are there any matters, which might properly be put by the defence to attack the credibility of the witness?
 If there are contradictions in the accounts of witnesses, do they go beyond the ordinary and expected, thus materially weakening the prosecution case?

Will the evidence be reliable?

- If, for example, the identity of the alleged offender is likely to be an issue, will the evidence of those who purport to identify him or her be regarded as honest and reliable?

Is the evidence available?

- Are the necessary witnesses available, competent, willing and, if necessary, compellable to testify, including those who are out of the country?

How strong is the case for the defence?

 Is the probable defence of the accused likely to lead to his or her acquittal in the light of the facts of the case?

(c) Prosecution in the public interest

Once a prosecutor is satisfied that there is sufficient evidence to provide a reasonable prospect of a conviction, a prosecution should normally follow, unless public interest demands otherwise.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

There is no rule in law, which states that all the provable cases brought to the attention of the Prosecuting Authority must be prosecuted. On the contrary, any such rule would be too harsh and impose an impossible burden on the prosecutor and on a society interested in the fair administration of justice.

When considering whether or not it will be in the public interest to prosecute, prosecutors should consider all relevant factors, including:

The nature and seriousness of the offence:

- The seriousness of the offence, taking into account the effect of the crime on the victim, the manner in which it was committed, the motivation for the act and the relationship between the accused and the victim.

- The nature of the offence, its prevalence and recurrence, and its effect on public order and morale.

- The economic impact of the offence on the community, its threat to people or damage to public property, and its effect on the peace of mind and sense of security of the public.

- The likely outcome in the event of a conviction, having regard to sentencing options available to the court.

The interests of the victim and the broader community:

- The attitude of the victim of the offence towards a prosecution and the potential effects of discontinuing it. Care should be taken when considering this factor, since public interest may demand that certain crimes should be prosecuted - regardless of a complainant's wish not to proceed.

- The need for individual and general deterrence, and the necessity of maintaining public confidence in the criminal justice system.

- Prosecution priorities as determined from time to time, the likely length and expense of a trial and whether or not a prosecution would be deemed counter-productive.

The circumstances of the offender:

- The previous convictions of the accused, his or her criminal history, background, culpability and personal circumstances, as well as other mitigating or aggravating factors.

- Whether the accused has admitted guilt, shown repentance, made restitution or expressed a willingness to co-operate with the authorities in the investigation or prosecution of others. (In this regard the degree of culpability of the accused and the extent to which reliable evidence from the said accused is considered necessary to secure a conviction against others, will be crucial).

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

- Whether the objectives of criminal justice would be better served by implementing non-criminal alternatives to prosecution, particularly in the case of juvenile offenders and less serious matters.

- Whether there has been an unreasonably long delay between the date when the crime was committed, the date on which the prosecution was instituted and the trial date, taking into account the complexity of the offence and the role of the accused in the delay.

The relevance of these factors and the weight to be attached to them will depend upon the particular circumstances of each case.

It is important that the prosecution process is seen to be transparent and that justice is seen to be done.

5. CASE REVIEW

(a) Stopping of proceedings

Criminal proceedings may sometimes be stopped after a plea has already been entered. This would normally only occur when it becomes clear during the course of the trial that it would be impossible for the State to prove its case or where other exceptional circumstances have arisen which make the continuation of the prosecution undesirable.

If a prosecution is stopped, an accused will be acquitted and may not be charged again on the same set of facts. A prosecutor may therefore not stop a prosecution, unless the Director of Public Prosecutions or his or her delegate has consented thereto. Such decisions should therefore be made with circumspection.

(b) Restarting a prosecution

People should be able to rely on and accept decisions made by members of the Prosecuting Authority. Normally, when a suspect or an accused is informed that there will not be a prosecution or that charges have been withdrawn, that should be the end of the matter.

There may, however, be special reasons why a prosecutor will review a particular case and restart the prosecution. These include:

- an indication that the initial decision was clearly wrong and should not be allowed to stand;

- an instance where a case has not been proceeded with in order to allow the police to gather and collate more evidence, in which case the prosecutor should normally have informed the accused that the prosecution might well start again; and

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

- a situation where a prosecution has not been proceeded with due to the lack of evidence, but where sufficient incriminating evidence has since come to light.

A number of statutes provide that a prosecution for an offence under a particular law cannot be commenced or proceeded with unless the consent of a Director of Public Prosecutions has been obtained.

The inclusion of such requirements in legislation is intended to ensure that prosecutions are not brought in inappropriate circumstances.

Other reasons for these requirements may involve the use of the criminal law in sensitive or controversial areas where important considerations of public policy should be taken into account.

Similarly, rules of practice require that certain matters be referred to a Director of Public Prosecutions before a prosecution is proceeded with.

As a matter of policy, it is important that certain decisions are made at the appropriate level of responsibility to ensure consistency and accountability in decision-making.

6. FORUM OF TRIAL, DETERMINATION OF CHARGES AND ACCEPTANCE OF PLEAS

(a) Forum of trial

The law directs and policy considerations suggest that certain types of prosecutions sometimes be conducted at specified jurisdictional levels.

In practice this results in certain types of cases being heard in the District Court, some in the Regional Court and others in the High Court.

In terms of certain legislation and rules of practice, the instruction of a Director of Public Prosecutions is required to determine the forum in which the trial should proceed.

In determining whether or not a case is appropriate for hearing in the High Court, the following factors, inter alia, should be taken into account:

- the nature and complexity of the case and its seriousness in the circumstances;
- the adequacy of sentencing provisions in the lower courts and whether a conviction in the High Court carries a greater deterrent effect;
- any specific legal provision on, or any implied legislative preference for, a particular forum of trial;
- any delay, cost or adverse effect that witnesses may have to incur if the case is heard in the High Court; and
- the desirability of a speedy resolution and disposal of some prosecutions in available lower courts, aimed at reducing widespread criminal activity.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

The decision regarding the court in which to prosecute an accused is determined by the complexity and seriousness of an offence, and the need for the Prosecuting Authority to guard against making decisions that will bring the law into disrepute.

(b) Determination of charges

The process by which charges are selected must be compatible with the interests of justice.

Prosecutors should decide upon, and draw up charges based on, available evidence which will—

- reflect adequately the nature, extent and seriousness of the criminal conduct and which can reasonably be expected to result in a conviction;
- provide the court with an appropriate basis for sentence; and
- enable the case to be presented in a clear and simple way.

This means that prosecutors may not necessarily proceed with the most serious charge possible.

Additional or alternative charges may be justified by the amount of evidence and where such charges will significantly enhance the likelihood of a conviction of an accused or co-accused.

However, the bringing of unnecessary charges should, in principle, be avoided because it may not only complicate or prolong trials, but also amount to an excessive and potentially unfair exercise of power.

Prosecutors should therefore not formulate more charges than are necessary just to encourage an accused to plead guilty to some. Similarly, a more serious charge should not be proceeded with as part of a strategy to obtain a guilty plea on a less serious one.

(c) Acceptance of pleas

An offer by the defence of a plea of guilty on fewer charges or on a lesser charge may be acceptable, provided that -

- the charges to be proceeded with readily reflect the seriousness and extent of the criminal conduct of an accused;
- the plea to be accepted is compatible with the evidential strength of the prosecution case;
- those charges provide an adequate basis for a suitable sentence, taking into account all the circumstances of the case; and
- where appropriate, the views of the complainant and the police as well as the interests of justice, including the need to avoid a protracted trial, have been taken into account.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

7. THE TRIAL PROCESS AND RELATED MATTERS

Prosecutors work in an adversarial context and seek to have the prosecution sustained. Cases should therefore be presented fearlessly, vigorously and skilfully.

At the same time, prosecutors should present the facts of a case to a court fairly. They should disclose information favourable to the defence (even though it may be adverse to the prosecution case) and, where necessary, assist in putting the version of an un-represented accused before court.

This notion also applies to bail proceedings. On the one hand, prosecutors should aim to ensure that persons accused of serious crimes are kept in custody in order to protect the community and to uphold the interests of justice. On the other hand, the prosecutor should not oppose the release from custody of an accused if the interests of justice permit.

Prosecutors should show sensitivity and understanding to victims and witnesses and should assist in providing them with protection where necessary. In suitable cases the prosecutor should advise the victim of the possibility of being compensated for the harm suffered as a result of the crime.

As far as it is practicable and necessary, prosecutors should consult with victims and witnesses before the trial begins. They should assist them by giving them appropriate and useful information on the trial process and reasons for postponements and findings of the court, where necessary.

Prosecutors are not allowed to participate in public discussion of cases still before the court because this may infringe the rule against comment on pending cases and may violate the privacy of those involved.

During the sentencing phase of a criminal case, prosecutors should assist the court by ensuring that the relevant facts are fully and accurately brought to its attention.

They should also make appropriate recommendations with a view to realizing the general purposes of sentence. These include the need for retribution, the deterrence of further criminal conduct, the protection of the public from dangerous criminals and the rehabilitation of offenders.

The Prosecuting Authority should give special attention to the effective and speedy disposal of cases identified as priority matters.

Prosecutors should specialize in the prosecution of certain offences where desirable and practicable.

The Prosecuting Authority should, as far as possible, make its senior trial prosecutors available to conduct the most difficult cases.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

8. CO-OPERATION AND INTERACTION WITH POLICE AND OTHER CONSTITUENT AGENCIES

Effective co-operation with the police and other investigating agencies from the outset is essential to the efficacy of the prosecution process. If a case is not efficiently prepared initially, it will less likely lead to a prosecution or result in a conviction.

The decision to start an investigation into possible or alleged criminal conduct ordinarily rests with the police. The Prosecuting Authority is usually not involved in such decisions although it may be called upon to provide legal advice and policy guidance.

In major or very complex investigations, such an involvement may occur at an early stage and be of a fairly continuous nature. If necessary, specific instructions should be issued to the police with which they must comply.

In practice, prosecutors sometimes refer complaints of criminal conduct to the police for investigation. In such instances, they will supervise, direct and co-ordinate criminal investigations.

Provision is made for Investigating Directors of the Prosecuting Authority to hold inquiries or preparatory investigations in respect of the commission of certain offences brought to their attention.

Prosecutors have the responsibility under the National Prosecuting Authority Act to determine whether a prosecution, once started, should proceed.

Such decisions are made independently, but prosecutors should consult the police and other interest groups where required.

It is therefore desirable, wherever practicable, that matters be referred to prosecutors by the police before a prosecution is instituted. In most cases suspected offenders are arrested and charged before the police can consult with prosecutors.

However, in cases where difficult questions of fact or law are likely to arise, it is desirable that the police consult the prosecutors before arresting suspected persons.

With regard to the investigation and prosecution of crime, the relationship between prosecutors and police officials should be one of efficient and close co-operation, with mutual respect for the distinct functions and operational independence of each profession.

Prosecutors should work together with other departments and agencies such as Correctional Services, Welfare, lawyers' organizations, non-governmental organisations and other public institutions, to streamline procedures and to enhance the quality of service provided to the criminal justice system.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

8A. PROSECUTORIAL POLICY AND DIRECTIVES RELATING TO SPECIFIED MATTERS

The National Director may supplement or amend this Policy to determine prosecutorial policy and directives in respect of specific matters, for example, in respect of new legislation and matters of national interest.

The Prosecutorial Policy and Directives, in Appendix A, relating to the prosecution of cases arising from conflicts of the past and which were committed before 11 May 1994, are hereby determined in terms of section 179(5) of the Constitution, with effect from 1 December 2005.

9. CONCLUSION

The Prosecuting Authority is a public, representative service, which should be effective and respected. Prosecutors should adhere to the highest ethical and professional standards in prosecuting crime and should conduct themselves in a manner which will maintain, promote and defend the interests of justice.

This Prosecution Policy is designed to make sure that everyone knows the principles that prosecutors apply when they do their work.

Applying these principles consistently will help those involved in the criminal justice system to treat victims fairly and prosecute offenders effectively.

The Prosecution Policy is not an end in itself.

The challenge which faces the Prosecuting Authority is to implement this Policy in a manner that will increase the sense of security of all people in South Africa.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

APPENDIX A

PROSECUTING POLICY AND DIRECTIVES RELATING TO THE PROSECUTION OF OFFENCES EMANATING FROM CONFLICTS OF THE PAST AND WHICH WERE COMMITTED ON OR BEFORE 11 MAY 1994

A. INTRODUCTION

1. In his statement to the National Houses of Parliament and the Nation, on 15 April 2003, President Thabo Mbeki, among others, gave Government's response to the final report of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC). The essential features of the response for the purpose of this new policy, are the following:

   (a) It was recognized that not all persons who qualified for amnesty availed themselves of the TRC process, for a variety of reasons, ranging from incorrect advice (legally or politically) or undue influence to a deliberate rejection of the process.

   (b) A continuation of the amnesty process of the TRC cannot be considered as this would constitute an infringement of the Constitution, especially as it would amount to a suspension of victims' rights and would fly in the face of the objectives of the TRC process. The question as to the prosecution or not of persons, who did not take part in the TRC process, is left in the hands of the National Prosecuting Authority (NPA) as is normal practice.

   (c) As part of the normal legal processes and in the national interest, the NPA, working with the Intelligence Agencies, will be accessible to those persons who are prepared to unearthing the truth of the conflicts of the past and who wish to enter into agreements that are standard in the normal execution of justice and the prosecuting mandate, and are accommodated in our legislation.

   (d) Therefore, persons who had committed crimes, before 11 May 1994, which emanate from conflicts of the past, could enter into agreements with the prosecuting authority in accordance with existing legislation. This was stated in the context of the recognition of the need to gain a full understanding of the networks which operated at the relevant time since, in certain instances, these networks still operated and posed a threat to current security. Particular reference was made to un-recovered arms caches.

2. In view of the above, prosecuting policy, directives and guidelines are required to reflect and attach due weight to the following:

   (a) The Human Rights culture which underscores the Constitution and the status accorded to victims in terms of the TRC and other legislation.

   (b) The constitutional right to life.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

(c) The non-prescriptivity of the crime of murder.

(d) The recognition that the process of transformation to democracy recognized the need to create a mechanism where persons who had committed politically motivated crimes, linked to the conflicts of the past, could receive indemnity or amnesty from prosecution.

(e) The dicta of the Constitutional Court justifying the constitutionality of the above process, inter alia, on the basis that it did not absolutely deprive victims of the right to prosecution in cases where amnesty had been refused. (See Azanian Peoples Organisation v The President of the RSA, 1996 (8) BCLR 1015 CC).

(f) The recommendation by the TRC that the NPA should consider prosecutions for persons who failed to apply for amnesty or who were refused amnesty.

(g) Government's response to the final Report of the TRC as set out in paragraphs 1(a) to (d) above.

(h) The dicta of the Constitutional Court to the effect that the NPA represents the community and is under an international obligation to prosecute crimes of apartheid. (See The State v Wouter Basson CCT 30/03.).

(i) The constitutional obligation on the NPA to exercise its functions without fear, favour or prejudice (section 179 of the Constitution).

(j) The legal obligations placed on the NPA in terms of its enabling legislation, in particular the provisions relating to the formulation of prosecuting criteria and the right of persons affected by decisions of the NPA to make representations, and for them to be dealt with.

(k) The existing prosecuting policy and general directives or guidelines issued by the National Director of Public Prosecutions (NDPP) to assist prosecutors in arriving at a decision to prosecute or not.

(l) The terms and conditions under which the Amnesty Committee of the TRC could consider applications for amnesty and the criteria for granting of amnesty for gross violation of human rights.

3. Government did not intend to mandate the NDPP to, under the auspice of his or her own office, perpetuate the TRC amnesty process. The existing legislation and normal process referred to by the President, include the following:

(a) Section 204 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1977 (Act No. 51 of 1977), which provides that a person who is guilty of criminal conduct may testify on behalf of the State against his or her co-conspirators and if the Court trying the matter finds that he or she testified in a satisfactory manner, grant him or her indemnity from prosecution.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

(b) Section 105A of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1977, which makes provision for a person who has committed a criminal offence to enter into a mutually acceptable guilty plea and sentence agreement with the NPA.

(c) Section 179(5) of the Constitution in terms of which the NDPP, among others—

(i) must determine, in consultation with the Minister and after consultation with the Directors of Public Prosecutions, prosecution policy to be observed in the prosecution process;

(ii) must issue policy directives to be observed in the prosecution process; and

(iii) may review a decision to prosecute or not to prosecute.

(d) The above process would not indemnify such a person from private prosecution or civil liability.

4. The NPA has a general discretion not to prosecute in cases where a prima facie case has been established and where it is of the view that such a prosecution would not be in the public interest. The factors to be considered include the following:

(a) The fact that the victim does not desire prosecution.

(b) The severity of the crime in question.

(c) The strength of the case.

(d) The cost of the prosecution weighed against the sentence likely to be imposed.

(e) The interests of the community and the public interest.

In the event of the NPA declining to prosecute in such an instance, such a person is not protected against a private prosecution.

5. Therefore, following Government's response, and the equality provisions in our Constitution and the equality legislation, and taking into account the above factors regarding the handling of cases arising from conflicts of the past, which were committed prior to 11 May 1994, it is important to deal with these matters on a rational, uniform, effective and reconciliatory basis in terms of specifically defined prosecutorial policies, directives and guidelines.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

B. PROCEDURAL ARRANGEMENTS WHICH MUST BE ADHERED TO IN THE PROSECUTION PROCESS IN RESPECT OF CRIMES ARISING FROM CONFLICTS OF THE PAST

The following procedure must be strictly adhered to in respect of persons wanting to make representations to the NDPP, and in respect of those cases already received by the Office of the NDPP, relating to alleged offences arising from conflicts of the past and which were committed before 11 May 1994:

1. A person who faces possible prosecution and who wishes to enter into arrangements with the NPA, as contemplated in paragraph A1 above (the Applicant), must submit a written sworn affidavit or solemn affirmation to the NDPP containing such representations.

2. The NDPP must confirm receipt of the affidavit or affirmation and may request further particulars by way of a written sworn affidavit or solemn affirmation from the Applicant. The Applicant may also mero moto submit a further written sworn affidavit or solemn affirmation to the NDPP containing representations.

3. All such representations must contain a full disclosure of all the facts, factors or circumstances surrounding the commission of the alleged offence, including all information which may uncover any network, person or thing, which posed a threat to our security at any stage or may pose a threat to our current security.

4. The Priority Crimes Litigation Unit (PCLU) in the Office of the NDPP shall be responsible for overseeing investigations and instituting prosecutions in all such matters.

5. The regional Directors of Public Prosecutions must refer all prosecutions arising from the conflicts of the past, which were committed before 11 May 1994, and with which they are or may be seized, immediately to the Office of the NDPP.

6. The PCLU shall be assisted in the execution of its duties by a senior designated official from the following State departments or other components of the NPA:

   (a) The National Intelligence Agency.

   (b) The Detective Division of the South African Police Service.

   (c) The Department of Justice & Constitutional Development.

   (d) The Directorate of Special Operations.

7. The NDPP must approve all decisions to continue an investigation or prosecution or not, or to prosecute or not to prosecute.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

8. The NDPP must also be consulted in respect of and approve any offer to a perpetrator relating to the bestowing of the status of a section 204 witness and all section 105A plea and sentence agreements.

9. The NDPP may obtain the views of any private or public person or institution, our intelligence agencies and the Commissioner of the South African Police Service, and must obtain the views of any victims, as far as is reasonably possible, before arriving at a decision.

10. A decision of the NDPP not to prosecute and the reasons for that decision must be made public.

11. In accordance with section 179 (6) of the Constitution, the NDPP must inform the Minister for Justice & Constitutional Development of all decisions taken or intended to be taken in respect of this prosecuting policy relating to conflicts of the past.

12. The NDPP may make public statements on any matter arising from this policy relating to conflicts of the past, where such statements are necessary in the interests of good governance and transparency, but only after informing the Minister for Justice and Constitutional Development thereof.

13. The institution of any prosecution in terms of this policy relating to conflicts of the past would not deprive the accused from making further representations to the NDPP requesting the NDPP to withdraw the charges against him or her. These representations would be considered according to the NPA prosecuting policy, directives, guidelines and established practice. The victims must, as far as reasonably possible, be consulted in any such further process and be informed, should the accused's representations be successful.

14. The NDPP may provide for any additional procedures.

15. All state agencies, in particular those dealing with the prosecution of alleged offenders and those responsible for the investigation of offences, must be requested not to use any information obtained from an alleged accused person during this process in any subsequent criminal trial against such a person. Whatever the response of such agencies may be to this request, the NPA records that its policy in this regard is not to make use of such information at any stage of the prosecuting process, especially not to present it in evidence in any subsequent criminal trial against such person.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

C. CRITERIA GOVERNING THE DECISION TO PROSECUTE OR NOT TO PROSECUTE IN CASES RELATING TO CONFLICTS OF THE PAST

Apart from the general criteria set out in paragraph 4 of the Prosecuting Policy of the NPA, the following criteria are determined for the prosecution of cases arising from conflicts of the past:

1. The alleged offence must have been committed on or before 11 May 1994.

2. Whether a prosecution can be instituted on the strength of adequate evidence after applying the general criteria set out in paragraph 4 of the said Prosecuting Policy of the NPA.

3. If the answers to paragraphs 1 and 2 above are in the affirmative, then the further criteria in paragraphs (a) to (j) hereunder, must, in a balanced way, be applied by the NDPP before reaching a decision whether to prosecute or not:

   (a) Whether the alleged offender has made a full disclosure of all relevant facts, factors or circumstances to the alleged act, omission or offence.

   (b) Whether the alleged act, omission or offence is an act associated with a political objective committed in the course of conflicts of the past. In reaching a decision in this regard the following factors must be considered:

      (i) The motive of the person who committed the act, commission or offence.

      (ii) The object or objective of the act, omission or offence, and in particular whether the act, omission or offence was primarily directed at a political opponent or State property or personnel or against private property or individuals.

      (iii) Whether the act, omission or offence was committed in the execution of an order of, or on behalf of, or with the approval of, the organisation, institution, liberation movement or body of which the person who committed the act was a member, agent or a supporter.

      (iv) The relationship between the act, omission or offence and the political objective pursued, and in particular the directness and proximity of the relationship and the proportionality of the act, omission or offence to the objective pursued, but does not include any act, omission or offence committed—

         (aa) for personal gain; or

         (bb) out of personal malice, ill-will or spite, directed against the victim of the act or offence committed.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

(c) The degree of co-operation on the part of the alleged offender, including the alleged offenders endeavours to expose—

(i) the truth of the conflicts of the past, including the location of the remains of victims; or

(ii) possible clandestine operations during the past years of conflict, including exposure of networks that operated or are operating against the people, especially if such networks still pose a real or latent danger against our democracy.

(d) The personal circumstances of the alleged offender, in particular—

(i) whether the ill-health of or other humanitarian consideration relating to the alleged offender may justify the non-prosecution of the case;

(ii) the credibility of the alleged offender;

(iii) the alleged offender's sensitivity to the need for restitution;

(iv) the degree of remorse shown by the alleged offender and his or her attitude towards reconciliation;

(v) renunciation of violence and willingness to abide by the Constitution on the part of the alleged offender; and

(vi) the degree of indoctrination to which the alleged offender was subjected.

(e) Whether the offence in question is serious.

(f) The extent to which the prosecution or non-prosecution of the alleged offender may contribute, facilitate or undermine our national project of nation-building through transformation, reconciliation, development and reconstruction within and of our society.

(g) Whether the prosecution may lead to the further or renewed traumatisation of victims and conflicts in areas where reconciliation has already taken place.

(h) If relevant, the alleged offender's role during the TRC process, namely, in respect of co-operation, full disclosure and assisting the process in general.

(i) Consideration of any views obtained for purposes of reaching a decision.

(j) Any further criteria, which might be deemed necessary by the prosecuting authority for reaching a decision.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

D.

II.

JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT PORTFOLIO COMMITTEE
17 January 2006
BRIEFING AND DELIBERATION ON THE AMENDMENT OF THE PROSECUTING POLICY TO PROVIDE FOR DIRECTIVES FOR THE PROSECUTION OF MATTERS BEFORE 11 MAY 1994.

Chairperson: Ms F Chohan-Khota (ANC)

SUMMARY
The National Prosecution Authority (NPA) briefed the Committee on its proposals to amend its Prosecution Policy to allow it to decide whether or not to prosecute cases arising from conflicts of the past and were committed before 11 May 1994. The President had made it clear that there would be no general amnesty as this would fly in the face of the TRC process. The President's proposal was to leave the matter in the hands of the National Directorate of Public Prosecutions (NDPP) to pursue any cases that, as is normal practice, it believed deserved prosecution and could be prosecuted. The NPA emphasised that all their proposals were within current legislation such as the Criminal Procedure Act. In determining whether or not to prosecute, the NDPP had issued general criteria governing such a decision. In deciding whether some matters of the past were prosecutable, the guidelines were insufficient and required specific policy guidelines. The NPA recommended that policy be determined in terms of section 179(5)(a).

The amendments proposed by the NDPP were submitted and approved by the Minister of Justice and Constitutional Development, who also submitted them to Cabinet which noted the amended Prosecution Policy. All the Directors of Public Prosecutions also supported the amendments. The amended Prosecution Policy came into effect on the 1st of December 2005.

Members of the Committee asked how a prosecution could be triggered, if the NPA had an idea of how many cases were pending and what the effect of the amendments would be on the budget of the NPA.

MINUTES
Adv G Nel, the Deputy Director of Public Prosecutions, said that according to section 179(5)(a) and (b) of the Constitution, the National Director of Public Prosecution with the concurrence with the Minister determine Prosecution Policy. Any amendments to this policy were to be included in the report referred in section 35(2)(a) of the National Prosecution Authority Act. As a matter of public interest, the amendments in question were tabled before Parliament.

Adv Nel said that in his statement to Parliament on the tabling of the Report of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC) on the 25th of April 2003, the President made it clear that there would be no general amnesty as this would fly in the face of the TRC process. The President said that the matter could not be resolved by setting up another amnesty process which would mean suspending the constitutional rights of those on the receiving end of gross human rights violations. Thus, any amnesty process, whether general, individualised or in any other form, had been categorically excluded by Government as an option, not least because it was unconstitutional.

The President's proposal was to leave the matter in the hands of the National Directorate of Public Prosecutions (NDPP) to pursue any cases that, as is normal practice, it believed deserved prosecution and could be prosecuted. The NDPP would leave its doors open for those willing to divulge information at their disposal and to co-operate in unearthing the truth, for them to enter into arrangements that were standard in the normal execution of justice, and which were accommodated in legislation. Adv Nel emphasised that all their proposals were within current legislation such as the Criminal Procedure Act. The President also said that the involvement of victims was crucial in determining the appropriate course of action.

Section 179(1) of the Constitution stated that there was a single prosecuting authority, and section 179(2) gave the prosecuting authority the power to institute criminal proceedings on behalf of the state and any functions incidental to this. Thus the NPA was independent constitutional institution. In determining whether or not to prosecute, the NDPP had issued general criteria governing such a decision. In deciding whether some matters of the past were prosecutable, the guidelines were insufficient and required specific policy guidelines. Adv Nel recommended that policy be determined in terms of section 179(5)(a).

The amendments proposed by the NDPP were submitted and approved by the Minister of Justice and Constitutional Development, who also submitted them to Cabinet which noted the amended Prosecution Policy. All the Directors of Public Prosecutions also supported the amendments. All the cases were centralised in the office of the NDPP to ensure consistency in decision-making especially given the complexities in some of these cases. The Priority Crimes Litigation Unit (PCLU) was responsible for overseeing the investigations and instituting prosecutions. Since this task team was based in Pretoria, it was desirable that the cases be centralised in the office of the NDPP.

The Prosecution Policy was amended by the insertion of a new paragraph 8A. This gave the NDPP power to supplement or amend the Prosecution Policy so as to determine prosecutorial policy and directives in respect of specific matters, for example, in respect of new legislation and matters of national interest. In line with this amendment, the NDPP determined the criteria in Appendix A relating to the prosecution of cases arising from conflicts of the past and were committed before 11 May 1994. Appendix A had three parts. Paragraph A was an introduction and paragraph B set out the procedural arrangements which must be adhered to in the prosecution process in respect of crimes arising from conflicts of the past. Paragraph C set out the criteria governing the decision to prosecute or not. This amended Prosecution Policy came into effect on the 1st of December 2005.

Discussion

Ms S Camerer (DA) asked how a prosecution could be triggered. Now that the guidelines were in place, would the workload of the PCLU greatly increase, and how many people were involved?

Adv Nel replied that a prosecution could be triggered firstly by a complaint being lodged by a victim. The PCLU had already looked at some of the cases from the TRC where amnesty had not been given. Some matters could be brought by the intelligence agency as well as the police. Thus there was a pro-active aspect to the triggering of prosecutions. It was not necessary at present to appoint new personnel given their current workload, but it may become necessary later on. It was hard to predict.

Mr G Solomon (ANC) asked what would happen where the victims did not want to prosecute an accused as the crime may have occurred many years ago.

Adv Nel said that the NDPP looked at all the circumstances of the case, such as the seriousness of the case, and whether there had been full disclosure for instance. It was for the NDPP to decide whether or not it would prosecute, not the victim.

Mr L Joubert (IFP) asked if the NPA had an idea of how many cases were pending. Also, in the case of a private prosecution, what was the situation regarding locus standi?

Adv Nel replied that at present it was impossible to know exactly how many cases were pending especially as the amendments were new. With regards to locus standi, anyone with an interest in the matter could bring an action.

Adv C Johnson (NNP) asked if looking at the circumstances of the accused created a loophole in the system for example where they claimed to be too old or infirm to stand trial. Could the NDPP be taken on review by an unsatisfied victim if they decided not to prosecute?

Adv Nel replied that it was important to consider things like the health of the accused. The Chairperson added that there was no hierarchy of criteria. Each case had to be decided on its merits. The whole basket of criteria had to be examined in making the determination of whether or not to prosecute. The NDPP could be taken on review.

Mr B Magwanishe (ANC) asked what the effect of the amendments would be on the budget of the NPA.

Adv Nel said that he did not see a major effect on the NPA’s budget given the number of cases they were dealing with now. It was hard to predict how many more people would come forward and how this would affect their budget.

The meeting was adjourned.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

D.

III.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

PROSECUTION POLICY AND DIRECTIVES RELATING TO PROSECUTION OF CRIMINAL MATTERS ARISING FROM CONFLICTS OF THE PAST

1. In his statement to the National Houses of Parliament and the Nation on the occasion of the Tabling of the Report of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission on 15 April 2003 the President, when dealing with the "issue of amnesty", made it clear that there shall be no general amnesty. He argued that such an approach would fly in the face of the TRC process and detract from the principle of accountability which is vital, not only in dealing with the past, but also in the creation of a new ethos within our society.

2. However, the President did not stop there. He went further and stated in respect of any further process of amnesty, as follows:

> "Yet we have to deal with the reality that many of the participants in the conflict of the past did not take part in the TRC process….This reality cannot be avoided. .."The President then concludes that Government is of the firm conviction that we cannot resolve this matter by setting up yet another amnesty process, which in effect would mean suspending constitutional rights of those who were at the receiving end of gross human rights violations. Thus, any amnesty process, whether general, individualised or in any other form, has been categorically excluded by Government as a future option, not least because it would be unconstitutional.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

3. The President then went on to explain Government's proposal as follows:

"We have therefore, left this matter in the hands of the National Directorate of Public Prosecutions, for it to pursue any cases that, as is normal practice, it believes deserve prosecution and can be prosecuted. This work is continuing."; and

"However, as part of this process and in the national interest, the National Directorate of Public Prosecutions, working with our intelligence agencies, will leave its doors open for those who are prepared to divulge information at their disposal and to co-operate in unearthing the truth, for them to enter into arrangements that are standard in the normal execution of justice, and which are accommodated in our legislation."; and

"…in each instance where any legal arrangements are entered into between the NDPP and particular perpetrators as proposed above, the involvement of the victims will be crucial in determining the appropriate course of action.". (Emphasis added)

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

4. It is important for the Prosecuting Authority to deal with these matters on a uniform basis in terms of specifically defined criteria.

5.1 In terms of section 179(1) of the Constitution of the Republic of South Africa, 1996, there is a single national prosecuting authority in the Republic consisting of a National Director of Public Prosecutions (NDPP), who is the head of the prosecuting authority, and Directors of Public Prosecutions and prosecutors.

5.2 In terms of section 179(2) of the Constitution the prosecuting authority has the power to institute criminal proceedings on behalf of the state, and to carry out any necessary functions incidental to instituting criminal proceedings. This means that the National Prosecuting Authority (NPA) is an independent constitutional institution and that the NDPP has full discretion regarding whether a particular prosecution should or should not be instituted.

5.3 Section 179(5)(a) of the Constitution provides that the NDPP must determine, with the concurrence of the Cabinet member responsible for the administration of justice, and after consulting the Directors of Public Prosecutions, prosecution policy, which must be observed in the prosecution process. To assist the prosecutors at arriving at a decision whether to prosecute or not, the NDPP has, in terms of the above provision, issued general criteria governing such a decision. These general Criteria are set out in paragraph 4 of the Prosecution Policy.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

These criteria could be defined as general policy guiding decision makers in arriving at informed decisions in the above regard. The question arises whether these guidelines are sufficient to assist the NDPP in arriving at decisions relating to offences which arise from conflicts of the past as contemplated by the President. The answer is no. Therefore, it is recommended that this process requires specific policy guidelines to facilitate the structured conclusion of the matter. It is therefore recommended that policy be determined in terms of section 179(5)(a) of the Constitution to deal with the matter under discussion.

6. Before dealing with the amendments to the Prosecution Policy, it is important to deal with the requirements for the determination for such Policy as required by section 179(5)(a) of the Constitution.

(a) In the first instance this provision requires that the Policy must be determined "with the concurrence of the Cabinet member responsible for the administration of justice". The amendments proposed by the NDPP were submitted and approved by the Minister for Justice and Constitutional Development. In view of the fact that the President requested the NPA to deal with the matter, the Minister also submitted the amendments and guidelines to Cabinet. Cabinet noted the amended Prosecution Policy.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

(b) Secondly, section 179(5)(a) of the Constitution requires that the Prosecution Policy must be determined "after consultation with the Directors of Public Prosecutions". The amended Prosecution Policy was submitted to all Directors of Public Prosecutions. All the Directors supported the amended Prosecution Policy.

7. It was decided to centralise all these case in the Office of the NDPP for the following reasons:

(a) A prosecution should not undermine nation building and it is therefore important that all these cases be synchronised in the Office of the NDPP in order to ensure that there is consistency in decision-making.

(b) The decision is consistent with the request of many DPPs to the NDPP, namely, that the National Office should take over these cases, because of the complexities implicit therein.

(c) As indicated in paragraph B4 of the amended Policy, the Priority Crimes Litigation Unit (PCLU) shall be responsible for overseeing the investigations and instituting prosecutions. Furthermore, senior designated officials of various departments and other components of the NPA must assist the PCLU in the execution of its duties. Since this Task Team will be based in

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Pretoria, it is desirable that the cases be centralised in the Office of the NDPP.

8. The Prosecution Policy is amended by the insertion of a new paragraph 8A. In terms of this amendment the NDPP may supplement or amend the Prosecution Policy so as to determine prosecutorial policy and directives in respect of specific matters, for example, in respect of new legislation and matters of national interest. In accordance with this amendment, the NDPP determined the criteria in Appendix A, relating to the prosecution of cases arising from conflicts of the past and which were committed before 11 May 1994.

9. Appendix A consists of three parts, namely, an introduction part (par A); the procedural arrangements which must be adhered to in the prosecution process in respect of crimes arising from conflicts of the past (par B); and the criteria governing the decision to prosecute or not to prosecute in cases relating to conflicts of the past (par C).

10. (a) Paragraph A1 sketches the background and motivation for the amended Policy and guidelines.

(b) Paragraph A2 sets out the various factors to be taken into account in developing and applying the prosecuting policy, directives and guidelines. See subparagraphs (a) to (l).

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

(c) Paragraph A3 emphasises that Government did not intend to mandate the NDPP to, under the auspice of his or her own office, perpetuate the TRC amnesty process. The existing legislation and normal process referred to by the President, include the application of—

- section 204 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1977 (Act No. 51 of 1977), in terms of which a person who is guilty of criminal conduct may testify on behalf of the State against his or her co-conspirators and if the Court trying the matter finds that he or she testified in a satisfactory manner, grant him or her indemnity from prosecution;

- section 105A of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1977, which makes provision for a person who has committed a criminal offence to enter into a mutually acceptable guilty plea and sentence agreement with the NPA.

- the processes determined and set out in the current Prosecution Policy, and the fact that such processes would not indemnify a person from private prosecution or civil liability. Therefore, if someone feels aggrieved regarding the process followed by the NPA, it can be tested in court.

11. Paragraphs A1 to 15 provide for the procedural arrangements which must be adhered to in the prosecution process in respect of crimes arising from conflicts of the past. In summary the following process must be followed:

(a) A person who faces possible prosecution and who wishes to enter into arrangements with the NPA, must submit a written sworn affidavit or solemn affirmation to the NDPP containing such representations (par 1).

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

(b) The NDPP must confirm receipt of the affidavit or affirmation and may request further particulars by way of a written sworn affidavit or solemn affirmation from the Applicant. The Applicant may also mero moto submit a further written sworn affidavit or solemn affirmation to the NDPP containing representations (Par 2).

(c) All representations must contain a full disclosure of all the facts, factors or circumstances surrounding the commission of the alleged offence, including all information which may uncover any network, person or thing, which posed a threat to our security at any stage or may pose a threat to our current security (par 3).

(d) The PCLU in the Office of the NDPP is responsible for overseeing investigations and instituting prosecutions in all such matters (par 4).

(e) The regional DPPs must refer all prosecutions arising from the conflicts of the past, which were committed before 11 May 1994, and with which they are or may be seized, immediately to the Office of the NDPP (par 5).

(f) The PCLU shall be assisted in the execution of its duties by a senior designated official of the National Intelligence Agency, the Detective Division of the South African Police Service, the Department of Justice & Constitutional Development and the Directorate of Special Operations (par 6).

(g) The NDPP must approve all decisions to continue an investigation or prosecution or not, or to prosecute or not to prosecute (par 7). The NDPP must also be consulted in respect of and approve any offer to a perpetrator relating to the bestowing of the status of a section 204 witness and all section 105A plea and sentence agreements (par 8).

(h) The NDPP may obtain the views of any private or public person or institution, our intelligence agencies and the Commissioner of the South African Police Service, and must obtain the views of any victims, as far as is reasonably possible, before arriving at a decision (par 9).

(i) A decision of the NDPP not to prosecute and the reasons for that decision must be made public and in accordance with section 179(6) of the Constitution, the NDPP must inform the Minister for Justice & Constitutional Development of all decisions taken or intended to be taken in respect of this prosecuting policy relating to conflicts of the past (par 10 and 11).

12. Paragraphs C1 to C3 set out the criteria governing the decision to prosecute or not to prosecute in cases relating to conflicts of the past. In the first instance the alleged offence must have been committed on or before 11 May 1994 and secondly the NPA must ascertain whether a prosecution can be instituted on the strength of adequate evidence after applying the general criteria set out in paragraph 4 of the said Prosecuting Policy of the NPA. If the answers to these questions are in the affirmative, the further criteria set out in paragraph C3 (a) to (j) must be applied. These criteria are in line with the criteria followed in the TRC process as well as the general criteria laid down for the prosecuting authority.

13. This amended Prosecution Policy came into effect on 1 December 2005.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

D.

IV.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Media Statement

DATE: 24th January 2006
EMBARGO: 11H30

AMENDED PROSECUTION POLICY AND DIRECTIVES RELATING TO PROSECUTION OF CRIMINAL MATTERS ARISING FROM CONFLICTS OF THE PAST

In his statement to Parliament and the Nation on the occasion of the Tabling of the Report of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission on 15 April 2003 the President of the Republic, when dealing with the issue of amnesty, made four very important points regarding the future handling of cases arising from conflicts of the past:

- In the first instance the President made it clear that there shall be no general amnesty.

- Secondly, he pointed out that we have to deal with the reality that many of the participants in the conflict of the past did not take part in the TRC process. However we cannot resolve this matter by setting up yet another amnesty process, which in effect would mean suspending the constitutional rights of those who were at the receiving end of gross human rights violations.

- Thirdly the President directed that any further processes should be left in the hands of the National Prosecuting Authority (NPA), for it to pursue any cases that, as is normal practice, it believes deserve prosecution and can be prosecuted. In this regard he further pointed out that, as part of this process and in the national interest, the NPA, working with our intelligence agencies, will leave its doors open for those who are prepared to divulge information at their disposal and to co-operate in unearthing the truth, for them to enter into arrangements that are standard in the normal execution of justice, and which are accommodated in our legislation.

- In the final instance the President indicated that in each case where any legal arrangements are entered into between the National Director and particular perpetrators as proposed, the involvement of the victims will be crucial in determining the appropriate course of action.

Following the President's announcement, and realising the importance for the NPA to deal with these matters on a uniform basis in terms of specifically defined criteria, the NPA started a consultation process to determine uniform Prosecuting Policy to deal with criminal matters arising from conflicts of the past.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

In the process, the NPA consulted with other law enforcement agencies, relevant departments, the Minister of Justice and Constitutional Development (Minister), the Directors of Public Prosecutions and Unit Heads within the NPA.

These cases will be centralised in the Office of the National Director for the following reasons:

- To ensure that there is consistency in decision-making.
- The complexities implicit in these cases.
- The Priority Crimes Litigation Unit (PCLU), which Unit is based within the Office of the National Director, shall be responsible for overseeing the investigations and instituting prosecutions. Furthermore, senior designated officials of various departments and other components of the NPA will assist the PCLU in the execution of its duties.

During the middle of 2005 a draft Amended Prosecution Policy was submitted to the Minister for her approval as required by the provisions of the Constitution and the NPA Act. The Amended Prosecution Policy was submitted to Cabinet for its information and towards the end of last year the Policy was tabled in Parliament by the National Director and the Minister. This amended Prosecution Policy came into effect on 1 December 2005.

The Amended Prosecution Policy gives effect to the proposals of the President. Some of the most important features of the Amended Prosecution Policy are the following:

- It emphasises that Government did not intend to mandate the National Director to, under the auspice of his or her own office, perpetuate the TRC amnesty process. The existing legislation and normal process referred to by the President, include the application of—

(a) Section 204 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1977, in terms of which a person who is guilty of criminal conduct may testify on behalf of the State against his or her co-conspirators and if the Court trying the matter finds that he or she testified in a satisfactory manner, grant him or her indemnity from prosecution;

(b) Section 105A of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1977, which makes provision for a person who has committed a criminal offence to enter into a mutually acceptable guilty plea and sentence agreement with the NPA

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

(c) The processes determined and set out in the current Prosecution Policy, and the fact that such processes would not indemnify a person from private prosecution or civil liability. Therefore, if someone feels aggrieved regarding the process followed by the NPA, it can be tested in court.

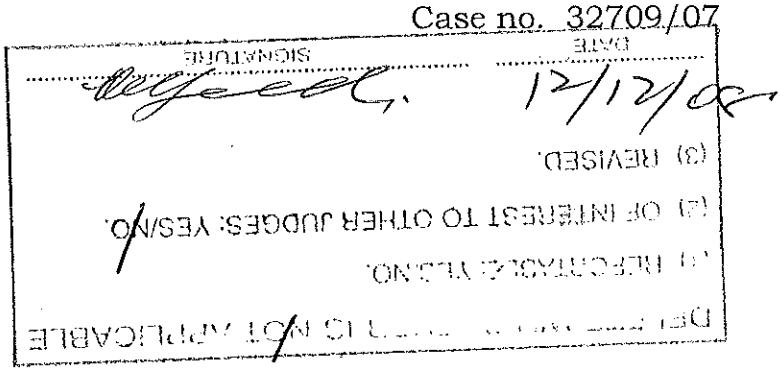
- The amended policy provides for the procedural arrangements that must be adhered to in the prosecution process in respect of crimes arising from conflicts of the past.

- Furthermore, the policy sets out the criteria governing the decision to prosecute or not to prosecute in cases relating to conflicts of the past. In the first instance the alleged offence must have been committed on or before 11 May 1994. Secondly, the NPA must ascertain whether a prosecution can be instituted on the strength of adequate evidence after applying the general criteria set out in paragraph 4 of the said Prosecuting Policy of the NPA. If the answers to these questions are in the affirmative, the further criteria set out in paragraph C3(a) to (j) must be applied. These criteria are in line with the criteria followed in the TRC process as well as the general criteria laid down for the prosecuting authority.

Issued by the National Director of Public Prosecutions, Advocate Vusi Pikoli.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

D.



V.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

32709/07

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA
(TRANSVAAL PROVINCIAL DIVISION)
Held in PRETORIA

Case no. 32709/07

In the matter between:

THEMBISILE PHUMELELE NKADIMENG	1st Applicant
NYAMEKA GONIWE	2nd Applicant
NOMBUYISELO NOLITA MHLAULI	3rd Applicant
SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKHONTO	4th Applicant
NOMONDE CALATA	5th Applicant
KHULUMANI SUPPORT GROUP	6th Applicant
CENTRE FOR STUDY OF VIOLENCE AND RECONCILIATION (AN ASSOCIATION NOT FOR GAIN INCORPORATED UNDER SECTION 21 OF THE COMPANIES ACT 61 OF 1973)	7th Applicant
INTERNATIONAL CENTRE FOR TRANSITIONAL JUSTICE (AN ASSOCIATION NOT FOR GAIN INCORPORATED UNDER SECTION 21 OF THE COMPANIES ACT 61 OF 1973)	8th Applicant

And

THE NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	1st Respondent

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE	2nd Respondent
ERIC ALEXANDER TAYLOR	3rd Respondent
GERHARDUS JOHANNES LOTZ	4th Respondent
JOHAN MARTIN VAN ZYL	5th Respondent
HERMANUS BAREND DU PLESSIS	6th Respondent
WILLEM HELM COETZEE	7th Respondent
ANTON PRETORIUS	8th Respondent
FREDERICK BARNARD MONG	9th Respondent
MSEBENZI TIMOTHY RADEBE	10th Respondent

JUDGMENT

Judgment reserved: 24 November 2008
Judgement handed down: 12/12/08.

LEGODI J,

INTRODUCTIONS

1. In this application, the applicants seek relief as follows:

> "1. Pending the final outcome of this application, the coming into force and operation of the amendments to the National Prosecution Policy dated 1 December 2005 ("the policy amendments") is suspended and stayed.
>
> 2. Declaring the policy amendments to be inconsistent with the Constitution of the Republic of South Africa, 1996 and unlawful and invalid.
>
> 3. Alternatively to prayer 2 above
>
> 3.1 Reviewing and setting aside the adoption of the policy amendments in terms of section 6 of the Promotion of Administrative Justice Act 3 of 2000 (PAJA).

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

3.2 To the extent that it is required, condoning the applicants' non-compliance with the time period set out in section 7(1) of PAJA

4. Ordering that such of the respondents as may oppose the matter pay the applicants costs.

5. Granting the applicants further and/or alternative relief.

PARTIES

2. This application was instituted by the first five applicants and other applicants, whose particulars and interests are briefly set out hereunder as follows:

2.1 The first applicant is the sister to one Nokuthula Aurelia Simelane (hereinafter referred to as Nokuthula) who disappeared after being abducted by the then Security Brach. In the early eighties she operated as a courier for Umkhonto We Sizwe, the armed wing of African National Congress).

2.2 During the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC), it was established that Nokuthula disappeared while on a mission in Johannesburg after meeting with one Norman Mkhonza, who was apparently working with the Security Branch.

2.3 It emerged during the TRC proceedings that she was abducted by the Security Branch with the help of Mkhonza. To date, Nokuthula has not been found nor has her remains been found.

2.4 During the TRC, evidence emerged that implicated a number of people in the possible abduction, assault and or killing of Nokuthula. No one has however been charged. The first applicant is challenging the prosecution policy amendments in question as the sister of Nokuthula.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

2.5 The second and fifth applicants are challenging the policy as the widows of what is commonly referred to as the "Cradock four".

2.6 Their husbands were on the 27 June 1985 scheduled to attend a meeting in Port Elizabeth. This was a meeting which was arranged by the United Democratic Front (UDF).

2.7 On the way, they were apparently, intercepted and or stopped by the security branch members. Few days thereafter, their bodies were found burnt, mutilated and spread all over a wide area in the Redhouse or Bluewater Bay, on the outskirts of Port Elizabeth.
Their bodies and especially their faces were deliberately dosed with petrol and set on fire with the intention or rendering them unrecognisable and not identifiable.

2.8 During the TRC, several security branch officials were implicated, some of them are still alive. These people who were implicated many of them have not been prosecuted yet.

2.9 The second to the fifth applicants are challenging the prosecution policy amendments referred to in paragraph 1 above. They are challenging these policy amendments as the widows of the Cradock Four.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

3. The sixth to the eighth applicants are non-governmental organizations challenging the prosecution policy and directives concerned as interested parties in the protection of the constitution.

4. In terms of section 179(5) (a)(b) of the Constitution, the first respondent with the concurrence of the second respondent, and after consulting with the Directors of Public Prosecutions, must determine prosecution policy which must be observed in the prosecution.

5. Section 21(2) of the National Prosecuting Authority Act 32 of 1998 provides that the first prosecution policy issued under the Act shall be tabled in Parliament as soon as possible, but not later than six months after the appointment of the first National Director.

6. The first prosecution policy was issued some time before 2005. The applicants are challenging the amendments to the first prosecution policy issued by the first respondent.

BACKGROUND

7. During or about 2005, the first respondent produced amendments to the prosecution policy. In terms of the amendments paragraph 8A was added to the first prosecution policy.

8. In terms of the addition, the first respondent purporting to act in terms of section 179(5) of the Constitution, introduced prosecution policy and directives in Appendix A (hereinafter referred to as policy amendments), to deal with prosecution of cases arising from conflicts of the past which were committed before the 11 May 1994. The policy and directives aforesaid in Appendix A are repeated as follows:

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

APPENDIX A

PROSECUTING POLICY AND DIRECTIVES RELATING TO THE PROSECUTION OF OFFENCE EMANATING FROM CONFLICTS OF THE PAST AND WHICH WERE COMMITTED ON OR BEFORE 11 MAY 1994

A. INTRODUCTION

1. In his statement to the National Houses of Parliament and the Nation, on 15 April 2003, President Thabo Mbeki, among others, gave Government's response to the final report of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC). The essential features of the response for the purpose of this new policy are as follows:

   (a) It was recognised that not all persons who qualified for amnesty availed themselves of the TRC process, for a variety of reasons, ranging from incorrect advice (legally or politically) or undue influence to a deliberate rejection of the process.

   (b) A continuation of the amnesty process of the TRC cannot be considered as this would constitute an infringement of the Constitution, especially as it would amount to a suspension of victims' rights and would fly in the face of the objectives of the TRC process. The question as to the prosecution or not of persons, who did not take party in the TRC process, is left in the hands of the National Prosecuting Authority (NPA) as is normal practice.

   (c) As part of the normal legal processes and in the national interest, the NPA, working with the Intelligence Agencies, will be accessible to those persons who are prepared to unearthing the truth of the conflicts of the past and who wish to enter into agreements that are standard in the normal execution of justice and the prosecuting mandate, and are accommodated in our legislation.

   (d) Therefore, persons who had committed crimes before 11 May 1994, which emanate from conflicts of the past, could enter into agreements with the prosecuting authority in accordance with existing legislation. This was stated in the context of the recognition of the need to gain a full understanding of the networks which operated at the relevant time since, in certain instances, these works still operated and posed a threat to current security. Particular reference was made to un-recovered arms caches.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

2. In view of the above, prosecuting policy, directives and guidelines are required to reflect and attach due weight to the following:

   (a) The Human Rights culture which underscores the Constitution and the status accorded to victims in terms of the TRC and other legislation.

   (b) The constitutional right to life.

   (c) The non-prescriptivity of the crime of murder.

   (d) The recognition that the process of transformation to democracy recognized the need to create a mechanism where persons who had committed political motivated crimes, linked to the conflicts of the past, could receive indemnity or amnesty from prosecution.

   (e) The dicta of the Constitution justifying the constitutionality of the above process, inter alia, on the basis that it did not absolutely deprive victims of the right to prosecution in cases where amnesty had been refused. (See Azanian People Organisation v The President of the RSA, 1996 (8) BCLR 1015 CC*).*

   (f) The recommendation by the TRC that the NPA should consider prosecutions for persons who failed to apply for amnesty or who were refused amnesty.

   (g) Government's response to the final Report of the TRC as set out in paragraphs 1(a) to (d) above.

   (h) The dicta of the Constitutional Court to the effect that the NPA represents the community and is under an international obligation to prosecute crimes of apartheid. (See The State v Wouter Basson CCT 30/03*).*

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

(i) The legal obligations placed on the NPA in terms of its enabling legislation, in particular the provisions relating to the formulation of prosecuting criteria and the right of persons affected by decisions of the NPA to make representations and for them to be dealt with.

(j) The existing prosecuting policy and general directives or guidelines issued by the National Director of Public Prosecutions (NDPP) to assist prosecutors in arriving at a decision to prosecute or not.

(k) The terms and conditions under which the Amnesty Committee of the TRC could consider applications for amnesty and the criteria for granting of amnesty for gross violation of human rights.

3. Government did not intend to mandate the NDPP to, under the auspice of his or her own office, perpetuate the TRC amnesty process. The existing legislation and normal process referred to by the President include the following:

(a) Section 204 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1977 (Act No. 51 of 1977), which provides that a person who is guilty of criminal conduct may testify on behalf of the State against his or her co-conspirators and if the Court trying the matter finds that he or she testified in a satisfactory manner, grant him or her indemnity from prosecution.

(b) Section 105A of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1977, which makes the provision for a person who has committed a criminal offence to enter into a mutually acceptable guilty plea and sentence agreement with the NPA.

(c) Section 179(5) of the Constitution in terms of which the NDPP, among others-

(i) must determine, in consultation with the Minister and after consultation with the Directors of Public Prosecutions, prosecution policy to be observed in the prosecution process:

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

(ii) must issue policy directives to be observed in the prosecution process; and

(iii) may review a decision to prosecute or not to prosecute.

(d) The above process would not indemnify such a person from private prosecution or civil liability.

4. The NPA has a general discretion not to prosecute in cases where a prima facie case has been established and where it is of the view that such a prosecution would not be in the public interest. The factors to be considered include the following:

(a) The fact that the victim does not desire protection.

(b) The severity of the crime in question.

(c) The strength of the case.

(d) The cost of the prosecution weighed against the sentence likely to be imposed.

(e) The interests of the community and the public interes.

In the event of the NPA declining to prosecute in such an instance, such a person is not protected against a private prosecution.

5. Therefore, following Government's response, and the equality provisions in our Constitution and the equality legislation, and taking into account the above factors regarding the handling of cases arising from conflicts of the past, which were committed prior to 11 May 1994, it is important to deal with these matters on a rational, uniform, effective and reconciliatory basis in terms of specifically defined prosecutorial policies, directives and guidelines.

B. PROCEDURAL ARRANGEMENTS WHICH MUST BE ADHERED TO IN THE PROSECUTION PROCESS IN RESPECT OF CRIMES ARISING FROM CONFLICTS OF THE PAST

The following procedure must be strictly adhered to in respect of persons wanting to make representations to the NDPP, and in respect of those cases already received by the Office of the

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

NDPP, relating to alleged offences arising from conflicts of the past and which were committed before 11 May 1994.

1. A person who faces possible prosecution and who wishes to enter into arrangements with the NPA, as contemplated in paragraph A1 above, (the applicant) must submit a written sworn affidavit or solemn affirmation to the NDPP containing such representations.

2. The NDPP must confirm receipt of the affidavit or affirmation and my request further particulars by way of a written sworn affidavit or solemn affirmation from the Applicant. The applicant may also mero moto submit further written sworn affidavit or solemn affirmation to the NDPP containing representations.

3. All such representations must contain a full disclosure of all the facts, factors or circumstances surrounding the commission of the alleged offence, including all information which may uncover any network, person or thing, which posed a threat to our security at any stage or may pose a threat to our current security.

4. The Priority Crimes Litigations Unit (PCLU) in the office of the NDPP shall be responsible for overseeing investigations and instituting prosecutions in all such matters.

5. The regional Directors of Public Prosecutions must refer all prosecutions arising from the conflicts of the past, which were committed before 11 May 1994, and with which they are or may be seized, immediately to the Office of the NDPP.

6. The PCLU shall be assisted in the execution of its duties by a senior designated official from the following State departments or other components of the NPA:

    (a) The National Intelligence Agency.

    (b) The Detective Division of the South African Police Services.

    (c) The Department of Justice and Constitutional Development.

    (d) The Directorate of Special Operations.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

7. The NDPP must approve all decisions to continue an investigation or prosecution or not, or to prosecute or not to prosecute.

8. The NDPP must also be consulted in respect of and approve any offer to a perpetrator relating to the bestowing of the status a section 204 witness and all section 105A plea and sentence agreements.

9. The NDPP may obtain the vies of any private or public or institution, our intelligence agencies and the Commissioner of the South African Police Service, and must obtain the views of any victims, as far as is reasonably possible, before arriving at a decision.

10. A decision of the NDPP not to prosecute and the reasons for the decision must be made public.

11. In accordance with section 179(6) of the Constitution, the NDPP must inform the Minister of Justice & Constitutional Development of all decisions taken or intended to be taken in respect of this proceeding policy relating to conflicts of the past.

12. The NDPP may make public statements on any matter arising from the policy relating to conflicts of the past, where such statements are necessary in the interests of good governance and transparency, but only after informing the Minister for Justice and Constitutional Development thereof.

13. The institution of any prosecution in terms of this policy relating to conflicts of the past would not deprive the accused from making further representations to the NDPP requesting the NDPP to withdraw the charges against him or her. These representatives, guidelines and established practice. The victims must, as far as reasonably possible be consulted in any such further process and be informed should the accused's representations be successful.

14. The NDPP may provide for any additional procedures.

15. All stage agencies, in particular those dealing with the prosecution of all alleged offenders and those responsible for the investigation of offences, must be requested not to use any information obtained from an alleged accused person during this process in any subsequent criminal trial against such a person. Whatever the response of such agencies may be to this request, the NPA records that its policy in this regard is not to make use of such information at any stage of the prosecuting process, especially not to present it in evidence in any subsequent criminal trial against such person.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

C. CRITERIA GOVERNING THE DECISION TO PROSECUTE OR NOT TO PROSECUTE IN CASES RELATING TO CONFLICTS OF THE PAST

Apart from the general criteria set out in paragraph 4 of the Prosecuting Policy of the NPA, the following criteria are determined for the prosecution of cases arising from conflicts of the past.

1. The alleged offence must have been committed on or before 11 May 1994.

2. Whether a prosecution can be instituted on the strength of adequate evidence after applying the general criteria set out in paragraph 4 of the said Prosecuting Policy of the NPA.

3. If the answers to paragraphs 1 and 2 above are in the affirmative, then the further criteria in paragraphs (a) to (j) hereunder, must, in a balanced way, be applied by the NDPP before reaching a decision whether to prosecute or not;

   (a) Whether the alleged offender has made a full disclosure of all relevant facts, factors or circumstances to the alleged act, omission or offence.

   (b) Whether the alleged act, omission or offence is an act associated with a political objective committed in the course of conflicts of the past. In reaching a decision in this regard the following factors must be considered.

      (i) The motive of the person who committed the act, commission or offence.

      (ii) The object or objective of the act, omission or offence, and in particular whether the act, omission or offence was primarily directed at a political opponent or State property or personnel or against private property or individuals.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

(iii) Whether the act, omission or offence was committed in the execution of an order of, or on behalf of, or with the approval of, the organisation, institution, liberation movement or body of which the person who committed the act was a member, agent or supporter.

(iv) The relationship between the act, omission or offence and the political objective pursued, and in particular the directness and proximity of the relationship and the proportionality of the act, omission or offence to the objective pursued but does not include any act, omission or offence committed-

(aa) for personal gain; or

(bb) out of personal malice, ill-will or spite, directed against the victim of the act or offence committed.

(c) The degree of co-operation on the part of the alleged offender, including the alleged offenders endeavours to expose-

(i) the truth of the conflicts of the past, including the location of the remains of victims; or

(ii) possible clandestine operations during the past years of conflict, including exposure of networks that operated or are operating against the people, especially if such networks still pose a real or latent danger against our democracy.

(d) The personal circumstances of the alleged offender, in particular-

(i) whether the ill-health of the other humanitarian consideration relating to the alleged offender may justify the non-prosecution of the case;

(ii) the credibility of the alleged offender;

(iii) the alleged offender's sensitivity to the need for restitution;

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

(iv) the degree of remorse shown by the alleged offender and his or her attitude towards reconciliation;

(v) renunciation of violence and willingness to abide by the Constitution on the part of the alleged offender; and

(vi) the degree of indoctrination to which the alleged offender was subjected.

(e) Whether the offence in question is serious.

(f) The extent to which the prosecution or non-prosecution of the alleged offender may contribute, facilitate or undermine our national project of nation-building through transformation, reconciliation, development and reconstruction within and of our society.

(g) Whether the prosecution may lead to the further or renewed traumatisation of victims and conflicts in areas where reconciliation has already taken place.

(h) If relevant, the alleged offender's role during the TRC process, namely in respect of co-operation, full disclosure and assisting the process in general.

(i) Consideration of any views obtained for purposes of reaching a decision.

(j) Any further criteria, which might be deemed necessary by the prosecuting authority for reaching a decision

9. These prosecution policy amendments and directives are challenged by the applicants briefly on the following grounds:

9.1 that the policy amendments introduce a prosecutorial indemnity;

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

9.2 that such prosecutorial indemnity is in breach of the Constitution on various grounds including:

9.2.1 infringement of the rule of law;

9.2.2 infringement of various constitutional rights,

9.2.3 non-compliance with international law, etc. All of the rights challenged as aforesaid are set out in details in paragraphs 42 and 43 of the applicants' founding affidavit,

9.2.4 that the prosecutorial indemnity is inconsistent with the right to just administrate action contained in section 33 of the Constitution and the requirements of Administrative Justice Act 3 of 2000,

9.2.5 that the applicants seek to review the policy amendments in terms of section 6 of PAJA.

10. The respondents resist these challenges on the basis that the policy amendments do not allow the respondents to make a decision not to prosecute on the basis of the criteria in A, B and C of the policy amendments referred to above, where there is sufficient evidence to support prosecution. Secondly, that even if the policy allows this, it does not amount to an effective indemnity from prosecution, because the perpetrators would still be exposed to private prosecutions and civil remedies.

11. Further, the defence raised by the respondents appears to be that, until such time as a decision not to prosecute is made on the basis of the policy amendments, the challenge is not justifiable at the instance of the applicants. Lastly, the defence is that the applicants' claim is not justified because the first respondent does not intend to ever implement the policy amendments in the manner complained by the applicants.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

12. In the supplementary heads of argument submitted on behalf of the respondents, another issue is raised. It is contended that what the applicants are claiming for, do not relate to resolution of real and concrete controversies involving persons who have interest in the resolution of the disputes. The facts upon which the applicants rely on for the relief sought are said to be totally unconnected to the prosecutorial policy. In short, it is contended that the matter is not ripe for adjudication by the court. The relief sought by the applicants is said to be academic and does not relate to material prejudice.

ISSUES RAISED

13. As I see it, the issues raised narrowed and argued before me are as follows:

- Whether the application is academic, unripe and having no material effect to the applicants?

- Whether the policy amendments allow for an amnesty, indemnity or a re-run of the TRC? Or

- Whether the policy amendments in relation to a decision not to prosecute will have the effect of allowing for an amnesty or indemnity equivalent to a re-run of the TRC?

DISCUSSIONS, SUBMISSIONS & FINDINGS

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

14. I find if necessary to deal with the two latter issues identified in paragraphs 13 above.

14.1 In a somewhat introduction to the issue, counsel for the respondents in paragraph 30 of his written heads of argument stated as follows:

"30. As stated above, the policy amendments were adopted with the object to achieve the Constitutional mandate placed on the NDPP, which mandate is the prosecution of crime. If the applicants' case is not about the intentions of the NPA, in relation to the application of the policy amendments, or mala fide on the part of the NDPP, then it must be accepted that when the amendments to the prosecution policy were adopted, they were adopted in accordance with constitutional mandate placed on him by the Constitution with the objective of the prosecution of crime. Therefore, the applicants' contention that the policy amendments were adopted for an ulterior purpose is without merit".

14.1.1 Surely, the intention by the first respondent (NDPP) to comply with its constitutional mandate to prosecute crimes is one thing. But the issue as I see it is, whether such intention is implicit in the policy amendment? If not, the next issue is whether the policy amendments should be allowed to exist in their apparent contrast to the intention and constitutional mandate and obligation of the first respondent.

14.1.2 It appears therefore, that one should look closely at the policy amendments, with a view to find in them, purported intention of the first and second respondents, in having brought about the policy amendments.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

14.2 The applicants' contention is that, the purpose of the policy amendments is to allow the first respondent to conduct what is effectively a "re-run" of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC)'s amnesty process. Remember, TRC was specifically introduced and authorised in terms of the Interim Constitution. The main objective thereof was to deal with political commissions of offences in the past and, in particular the objective being to forge or bring about reconciliation in our country.

14.2.1 The response to this contention by the applicants was disputed and summed up as follows in the respondents' written heads of argument:

"32. It was submitted that the policy amendments correctly considered are not intended to be a process that can become a constitution or a re-run of the amnesty process of the TRC.

33. It must be appreciated that the purpose of the amendment policy is to ensure that the objects for which the Interim Constitution authorised the reconciliation process through the TRC process, should not be undermined.

34. The TRC process was a specific legislative process that authorised amnesty subject to the terms and conditions of that legislation.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

35. The policy amendments are conscious that they are not a process in terms of which individuals are to receive any amnesty. The NDPP is not authorised to grant any amnesty.

36. It is therefore denied that the policy amendments can be considered to be re-run of the TRC process or to have an impact of undermining the constitutional compact that the South African society made with the victims of human rights"

14.2.2 What is quoted above, in my view captures the essence of the attack against the applicants' cause of complaint. In addition to this, it is the respondents' case that, as the first respondent exercises its power and obligation to institute prosecution proceedings, it would prosecute and if need be, only conclude agreements as envisaged in sections 204 and 105A of the Criminal Procedure Act.

14.3 The applicants in their heads of argument seek to identify the issue as follows:

"Firstly, the applicants do not allege that the policy amendments allow for an amnesty, indemnity or a re-run of the TRC, as the respondents suggest. Rather, the applicants allege that, the application of the policy amendments in relation to a decision not to prosecute will have this effect. As it will be seen below, the applicants alleged that, in light of the enormous difficulties associated with private prosecutions, a decision not to prosecute (on grounds other than the absence of evidence) on the basis of criteria that are strikingly similar to those applied by the

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

TRC amnesty committee constitute an effective re-run of the amnesty provisions of the TRC"

15. Before I turn to deal with the documents that contain the policy amendments under attack, I find it necessary to refer to the debate that ensued during the discussion. During the discussion, issues were further raised as follows:

- Whether the applicants have demonstrated the existence of a prima facie case on which factors enumerated in part C of the policy amendments were relied upon in taking a decision to grant prosecutorial indemnity?

- Whether parts A, B and C confer a power not to prosecute where a prima facie case is established? And if so,

- Which provisions of the policy amendments empower the first respondent, a power not to prosecute, where prima facie is established?

15.1 I see the question raised above as refining the issues to be decided. According to Mr Marcus on behalf of the applicants, in a response to an enquiry by the court, whether he understands part C as entitling the first respondent not to prosecute in the face of a prima facie evidence, he stated as follows:
"It says so, much explicitly. It says what it means"

15.2 I must pause for a moment to deal with the documents containing the policy amendments. Such policy amendments are quoted in paragraph 9 of this judgment.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

I found it necessary to quote the policy amendments in their entirely for completeness sake and better understanding of the amendments. For this purpose, and in dealing with the interpretation or construction of the policy amendments, I will not repeat the quotation unless it becomes necessary to do so.

15.3 Apart from parts A and B of the policy amendments, the actual amendments are contained in part C. Part A deals with the introduction and the basis for bringing about the policy amendments as contained in part C. Part B deals with the procedure that has to be strictly followed in respect of persons wanting to make representations to the NDPP and in respect of those cases already received by the office of the NDPP, relating to alleged offences arising from conflicts of the past and which were committed before 11 May 1994. Any reference to any provision in parts A, B and C of the policy amendments will be referred to in this judgment as "paragraph".

15.3.1 Two classes of persons can seemingly make representations in terms of Part B paragraph 1 thereof, namely, those who are facing possible prosecution and secondly, those who wish to enter into an arrangement with the NPA as contemplated in paragraph1 of part A. Remember, in terms of section 179 (5)(d) of the Constitution, the first respondent may review a decision to prosecute or not to prosecute, after consulting the relevant Director of Public Prosecutions and after taking representations within a period specified by the first respondent, from the accused person, the complainant and any other person or party whom the first respondent considers to be relevant.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

15.3.1.1 In my view, the representations envisaged in paragraph 1 of part B of the policy amendments are not covered and sanctioned by the Constitution. Such representations as sanctioned in section 179(5)(d), are for a review of a decision, the review being in respect of a decision previously taken to prosecute or not to prosecute. For example, if a decision was previously taken not to prosecute A on a charge of murder of B, but later review such a decision and decide to charge A on the murder of B, A might be required to make representations in terms of section 179(5)(d), as to why the initial decision not to prosecute should not be reviewed.

15.3.1.2 Invitation for representations in terms of paragraph B.1 of the policy amendments are in my view, in respect of those who are facing possible prosecution, where a decision is not taken on their fate. Secondly, the representations relate to those persons in respect of whom their cases have already been received by the first respondent, but a decision is not taken to prosecute or not to prosecute them in respect of offences relating to the conflict of the past and committed before 11 May 1994.

15.3.1.3 In terms of paragraph A1 (c) of the policy amendments as part of the normal legal processes and in the national interest, the first respondent working with the Intelligence Agencies, will be accessible to those persons who are prepared to unearth the truth of the conflicts of the past and who wish to enter into agreements, that are standard in the normal execution of justice and prosecuting mandate and are accommodated in the existing legislations (my own emphasis). During the discussion

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Mr Semenya on behalf of the respondents, was quizzed on the reasons for the representations as envisaged in paragraph B1 of the policy amendments. His answer thereto was firstly, that the legislations referred to in paragraph A1 (c) of the policy amendments are sections 204 and 105A of the Criminal Procedure Act. Secondly, he contended that such agreement referred to in A.1.(c) are therefore in terms of the two sections.

15.3.1.4 Mr Semenya obviously had some difficulties in expanding on his submission as referred to in 15.3.1.3 above. His submission cannot be correct, for the following reasons: Firstly, representations in terms of paragraph B1 of the policy amendments are aimed at enabling the first respondent to decide whether or not to prosecute. Secondly, section 105A relates to a situation where a decision to prosecute has already been taken. Thirdly, section 204 can only take place where a decision to prosecute has already been taken against other persons or person and indemnity is granted by the court and not by the prosecution to a witness who testified in the proceedings. Implementation of sections 105A and 204 is therefore subject to judicial consideration, and are entirely matters of discretion by the trial court. The decision to prosecute or not to prosecute in terms of the first respondent's constitutional obligation and also as envisaged in the policy amendments, is entirely a matter falling within the domain of the first respondent.

15.3.2 All of these, in my view, raise another question. If indeed the policy amendments are intended to and or should be understood to be subject to the provisions of section 204 and 105A, why then the need for the amendments? Or to put it differently, if indeed the policy amendments are not intended to authorise the first respondent to grant indemnity or amnesty, why then the need for the amendments? Remember, when the first prosecution policies were introduced, clear guidelines relating to prosecution of offences were set out. For example, reference is made in paragraph C.2 of the policy amendments to paragraph 4 of the said first prosecuting policy of the first respondent. The first prosecuting policy and directives, in my view, are adequate enough to deal with any decision to prosecute or not to prosecute in respect of any offence whether or not committed in conflicts of the past.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

15.4 In my view, there is no need in the light of detailed first prosecuting policy to introduce and adopt a procedure as set out in parts A and B of the policy amendments. Of course, this has to be seen in the light of the ultimate policy amendments as contained in part C thereof. This should then bring me to deal with the interpretation of part C of the policy amendments as fully set out in paragraph 9 of this judgment.

15.4.1 Remember, when Mr Marcus on behalf of the applicants, was quizzed by the court, whether his understanding was that the prosecution can in terms of the policy amendments decline to prosecute in the face of a prima facie case, he stated as follows"

"It says so, much explicitly. It says what it means"

15.4.2 Part C, of the policy amendments sets out criteria that should be followed for the prosecution of cases arising from conflicts of the past. Paragraphs C1 and C2 thereof in my view, are important, in particular C2 (read paragraph C.2 quoted in paragraph 9 of this judgment).

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

15.4.3 If the answer to paragraph C 2 of the policy amendments is in the affirmative other criteria set out in paragraph C 3(a) to (L) must still be considered. Immediately the question is "What else is required for the purpose of taking a decision to prosecute or not to prosecute in the face of the strength of adequate evidence (my own emphasis). Of course, the question must be seen amongst others in the light of the following criteria which must still be considered in terms of paragraph C 3:

15.4.3.1 the extent to which the prosecution or non-prosecution of the alleged offender may contribute, facilitate or undermine our national project of nation-building through transformation, reconciliation, development and reconstruction within and of our society. (see paragraph C 3 of the policy amendments quoted in paragraph 9 of this judgment). This should be seen in the light of an introduction to these policy amendments as set out in paragraph A1 quoted in paragraph 9 of this judgment. The respondents wished to seek to deny that there is any reference to consideration of reconciliation and reconstruction in the policy amendments. Of course this is incorrect. The wording of the policy amendments should be seen in context. In my view, they were correctly referred to by Mr Marcus as a copy or duplication of the guidelines set out for and used during the TRC hearings. For example, "Why should the degree of remorse shown by the alleged offender and his or her attitude towards reconciliation have any bearing on the decision to prosecute or not to prosecute, especially in the light of the strength of adequate evidence? Why should the extent to which the prosecution or non-prosecution of the alleged offender, be dictated by national project of nation-building through transformation, reconciliation, development of our society? (See paragraph C 3 (f) of the policy amendments). What is stated in paragraphs C 3 (d) (iv) and C.3 (f) is indeed like a "copy cat" of the TRC's guidelines.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

15.4.4 When there is sufficient evidence to prosecute, the first respondent must comply with its obligation. Entitlement by the first respondent, to refuse to prosecute where there is a strong case and adequate evidence to do so, would in my view be unconstitutional. Paragraph C 2 read with paragraph C 3 of the policy amendments, allow the first respondent even where there is a strong case and adequate evidence not to prosecute. This is contrary to the first respondent's constitutional obligation to ensure that those who are alleged to have committed offences are prosecuted.

15.4.4.1 Perhaps Mr Marcus was right in expressing himself, as indicated in paragraphs 15.1 and 15.4.1of this judgment. I am mindful of the first respondent's assertion that, it was not and it is still not its intention not to prosecute where there is a strong case and adequate evidence to backup the prosecution. Surely, this is understandable, because the very existence of the first respondent is to prosecute crimes. The submission as I understood it is that, there is no need for the applicants to panic. That might be so, however, the real issue as I see it is whether the policy amendments which do not properly reflect the intention of the respondents should be allowed to remain in the book. I do not think so.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

15.5 In paragraph 14.3 of this judgment, I quoted paragraph 2.1 of the applicants' written heads of argument. At the risk of repetition, the applicants aver that it is not their case that the policy amendments expressly allow for an amnesty, indemnity or a re-run of the TRC, rather that the application of the policy amendments in relation to a decision not to prosecute will have this effect. This submission should be seen in the light of paragraph C 2 read with C 3 of the policy amendments.

15.5.1 This submission on behalf of the applicants, suggests a broader interpretation or construction of the policy amendments. I do not intend referring to legal principles and case laws dealing with the manner of interpretation, where a literal meaning does not seem to make sense or does not properly reflect the intention of the legislature, in the instant case, the intention of the respondents who produced the policy amendments. The policy amendments have the effect of legal binding.

15.5.2 The many criteria referred to in paragraph C3 are to enable the first respondent in deciding whether or not to prosecute offences committed before 11 May 1994 arising from conflicts of the past. However, many of these criteria in my view, are not relevant in deciding whether or not to prosecute. Remember, these criteria as contained in paragraph C3 are subject to two factors. Firstly, the offence or offences must have been committed on or before 11 May 1994. (See paragraph C1). Secondly, there must be a strong case supported by adequate evidence (see paragraph C2).

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

15.5.2.1 As I said, once criteria C 2 presents itself in a particular case, the first respondent is constitutionally bound to prosecute. The many factors referred to in C3 are factors which in my view, should be considered when the first respondent decides to enter into negotiations or agreement in terms of section 105A. Section 105 A, has nothing to do with the decision to prosecute or not to prosecute. It can only be invoked once a decision to prosecute has been taken and an accused person is on trial. It is a provision which is under judicial consideration. Decision to prosecute or not to prosecute is not. Many factors as set out in C3 in my view, are relevant and important in deciding whether a sentence agreed upon in terms of section 105A is appropriate or not, but not in deciding whether to prosecute or not to prosecute.

15.5.2.2 As I said earlier in this judgment, section 204 is a process which is followed on the strength of a state's case and on whether a particular individual who participated in the commission of the offence is prepared to assist in successfully prosecuting his or her co-perpetrators. The section does not require representations and I do not think it is necessary for such representations to be made. The question again arises, why then representations as envisaged in paragraph B1 of the policy amendments if not to give indemnity other than in terms of section 204?

15.5.3 Looking at what is envisaged in paragraph B 1, one sees a recipe for conflict and absurdity. What is conspicuous in paragraph B 1 regarding the representation is absence of the status of such representations. Put it differently, how does the first respondent intend dealing with representations in terms of paragraph B1 in a situation where it decides to prosecute a person referred to in C3 after having made such representations in terms of paragraph B 1?

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

15.5.3.1 If indeed representations in terms of B1 are intended to enable the first respondent to take a decision to prosecute, and not to grant indemnity, how does it hope to have a full disclosure as intended in B1? Surely, unless it intends not to prosecute those who make a full disclosure, in terms of paragraph B1, it cannot hope that any person who runs the risk of being prosecuted by his or her own full disclosure will come forward as envisaged in B1. Remember, this full disclosure as envisaged in B1 is emulation of a full disclosure as it was in terms of the TRC guidelines.

15.5.4 The whole procedure as envisaged in part B1, is a recipe for conflict and absurdity, because on the one hand it does not provide protection for such a disclosure. On the other hand, the first respondent says it is not indemnity or amnesty. It is a recipe for conflict, for example, the first respondent may wish to use the representations once it has decided to prosecute and the person who made such representations is on trial. It is a recipe for absurdity, because the first respondent insists that it does not intend to grant indemnity. The need for the procedure does not prevail, unless the intention is to grant indemnity or amnesty. Broad interpretation or construction of parts A, B, and C of the policy amendments displays amnesty or indemnity or agreement, contrary to that allowed in terms of section 204 and 105A of the Criminal Procedure Act and also contrary to the intention of the first respondent seen in the light of its insistence that it was never its intention to act other than in terms of its obligation to prosecute and to utilise sections 204 and 105A The result of this is that the policy amendments are not only unconstitutional but absurd and cannot continue to exist.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

16. I now turn to deal with the other issue which was intended to be raised as a preliminary issue. The issue was in detail dealt in the respondent's supplementary written heads of argument. The argument was that the applicants' application is not ripe. The issue was introduced as follows in the first respondent' heads of argument:

"1. One of the cardinal policies or principles of judicial function is the adjudication of real and concrete disputes between the parties. Stated differently domestic, foreign, as well as international courts have consistently said that the function of the courts is never to answer abstracts, academic or hypothetical questions"

16.1 Having said this, Mr Semenya then at length dealt in detail with the principles applicable to the issue as raised. Having referred to the applicable principles the submission was concluded as follows on pages 8 to 9 of the respondents' supplementary heads of argument:

"2. The authorities said above, more than amply demonstrate that as a matter of policy, the courts should concern themselves with the resolution of real and concrete controversies involving persons who have interests in the resolution of those disputes. We submit in the present case, what the applicant call the "stories of five South African families" is totally unconnected to the prosecutorial policy under question. We say so for the following reasons:

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

2.1 There is no evidence that any one has been arrested in connection with the victims of the cases cited in the applicants' papers (Nokuthula Aurelia Simelane; Mathew Goniwe, Sicelo Stanley Mhlauli; Sparrow Thomas Mkhonto and Fort Calatha).

2.2 The applicants have furnished no evidence indicating that the police have secured sufficient evidence to mount a prima facie case against anyone in respect of the victims on whose behalf the application is launched;

2.3 There is no basis offered by the applicants that the first respondent has taken any decision to grant "prosecutorial indemnity/immunity" to anyone;

2.4 More importantly, the applicants have not shown any concrete facts which meet the facts cited in the prosecutorial policy to inform the decision whether to prosecute or not to prosecute. For instance, whether there is "adequate evidence" whether there has been full disclosure of all relevant factors alleged in the offences; whether the offences were associated with political objectives" the motive of persons who committed the acts; the personal circumstances of the offender" or whether the offences are serious". All of these factors must be first established before the applicants can contend for the "effective indemnity".

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

4. The other reason why the application should fail, is that the applicants are seeking a declarator, a power which a court exercises in terms of section 19(1)(a)(iii) of the Supreme Court Act, which courts have a discretion to grant even where a proper case has been made out. The courts have consistently said"

16.2 I do not intend referring to authorities relied upon for the submission as quoted above. However, I find it necessary to look at the submission closely.

16.2.1 The contention by the first respondent should be seen in the light of its insistence that it intends enforcing the policy amendments as they are. In other words, that, it will continue to require persons who qualify in terms of the policy amendments to make representations in terms of paragraph B1. Secondly, that it will continue to decide whether or not to prosecute and to consider other factors as set out in paragraph C3, once a strong case and adequate evidence are established as envisaged in paragraph C2 in respect of offences referred to in paragraph C1 (refer to the provisions of the paragraphs as quoted in paragraph 9 of this judgment).

16.2.2 Coming back to the submission as quoted in 16.1 above, it is necessary to elaborate on the submission.

16.2.2.1 The stories of the first five applicants are described as totally "unconnected to the prosecutorial policy". I do not think so. Firstly, their stories relate to conflicts of the past committed before 11 May 1994. Secondly, the five applicants have direct interest in the prosecution of those who are connected to the crimes alluded by them in the founding affidavit. Thirdly, some of these persons who were involved or might have been involved have not been granted indemnity, either because they did not apply or they were found not to have given a full disclosure. Lastly, the first respondent is under obligation to prosecute them once a strong case and adequate evidence is established.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

16.2.3 The reasoning for the submission as set out in paragraph 2 of the first respondent' supplementary heads of argument quoted above should also be considered closely.

16.2.3.1 I do not think that anyone connected with the commission of the crimes cited in the applicants' papers need to be arrested before the applicants could be entitled to bring the application on the basis that their application would then be ripe or not academic. The essence of the application as I see it is prompted by the introduction of the policy amendments and the desire by the first respondent to enforce the policy amendments complained of. I did not understand counsel for the respondents to suggest that any of the applicants is not a party or persons referred to in section 38 of the Constitution. This concession in my view, should settle the score.

16.2.3.2 Clearly, the second to the fifth applicants are widows of the Cradock four who were killed in gruesome manner during 1985. The killings were politically motivated. Some of the people who were involved or might have been were not granted amnesty during the TRC proceedings. Some did not apply for amnesty and have not been prosecuted yet. If the first respondent was to deal with these people receive their representations as contemplated in paragraph B1 and receive adequate evidence suggesting a strong case for prosecution as contemplated in paragraph C 2; the first respondent may still decide not to prosecute as contemplated in paragraph C3, after having considered the criteria therein. The applicants' interests lie in the first respondent's obligation to prosecute in circumstances as might prevail under paragraph C 1 and C 2. Paragraph C3 is threatening such interest. Therefore, such people as referred to in B1 in respect of offences referred to in C 1 do not have to be arrested before the applicants could be entitled to bring an application of this nature.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

16.2.3.3 The basis of the attack against the policy amendments really is not much of what the applicants can provide to the first respondent regarding possible prosecution of particular persons. The applicants are not asking for prosecution of certain people, that is not part of their prayers. In any event, I do not think that they have to furnish evidence as suggested in paragraph 2.2 of the respondents' supplementary heads of argument. Crimes are not investigated by victims. It is the responsibility of the police and prosecution authority to ensure that cases are properly investigated and prosecuted. Victims of crimes rely on these institutions for investigation and prosecution. As I said, the essence of the complaint is that the policy amendments allow the first respondent not to prosecute even in circumstances where there is a prima facie case seen in the light of paragraphs C 2 and C 3 of the policy amendments.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

16.2.3.4 The respondents did not have to take a decision not to prosecute, to grant indemnity, and or immunity to anyone, before the applicants could bring the application. (See paragraph 2.3 of the respondents' supplementary heads of argument). Lastly, the applicants did not have to show any concrete facts which meet the factors cited in paragraph C 3. of the policy amendments as suggested in paragraph 2.4 of the respondents' supplementary heads of argument. At the risk of repeating myself, paragraphs C 2. and C 3 state or suggest that the first respondent may still not prosecute, despite adequate evidence against a particular individual having committed an offence referred to in C 1. Alternatively paragraphs C 2 and C 3 broadly interpreted confer such a power to the prosecution, contrary to its constitutional obligation. This is a real threat to the applicants' constitutional rights. This threat cannot be side stepped by an undertaking that it will not happen. For as long as the first respondent insist that it will enforce the policy amendments, the applicants should be entitled to have the policy amendments impugned on the ground that it is unconstitutional.

COSTS

17. The first to the fifth applicants have direct interest in the institution of the present proceedings. They should therefore be entitled to costs. The first five applicants having decided to institute the present proceedings, I do not think that it was necessary for the other applicants to join forces.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

CONCLUSION

18. Consequently I make the order as follows:

18.1 The policy amendments to the National Prosecution Policy dated the 1 December 2005 is hereby declared to be inconsistent with the Constitution of the Republic of South Africa and unlawful and invalid.

18.2 The first respondent to pay the costs of the application for the first to fifth applicants.

M F LEGODI
JUDGE OF THE HIGH COURT

For the Applicants
LEGAL RESOURCES CENTRE
C/O VORSTER DU PLESSIS ATTORNEYS
520 Spuy Street
SUNNYSIDE, PRETORIA
TEL: 012 344 2040

For the 1st and 2nd Respondents
THE STATE ATTORNEY
8th Floor, Bothongo Heights,
167 Andries Street
PRETORIA
012 309 1564

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

E.

I.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

BEFORE THE SPECIAL AMNESTY COMMITTEE OF THE TRUTH AND RECONCILIATION COMMISSION

[HELD AT PORT ELIZABETH]

In the applications of :

NICOLAAS JACOBUS JANSE VAN RENSBURG	FIRST APPLICANT
GIDEON JOHANNES NIEWOUDT	SECOND APPLICANT
WYBRAND ANDREAS LODEWICUS DU TOIT	THIRD APPLICANT
MARTHINUS DAVID RAS	FOURTH APPLICANT

In re:

THE MOTHERWELL INCIDENT ON 14 DECEMBER 1989

DECISION

These are unusual proceedings involving applications for amnesty and launched in terms of the Promotion of National Unity and Reconciliation Act No. 34 of 1995 as amended ("the Act"). This is a special sitting of the Amnesty Committee which falls under the Truth and Reconciliation Commission established under the Act.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

The operation of the provisions related to amnesty ceased during December 2000 or January 2001 after being extended a few times prior to that.

During the operation of the Act, the Applicants and others made application for amnesty in respect of the murders of Sergeant Amos Temba Faku, Warrant Officer Mbala Glen Mgoduka, Sergeant Desmond Daliwonga Mapipa and Xolile Shepherd Sakati, alias Charles Jack ("the deceased") on or about 14 December 1989. The applications were refused.

The Applicants were charged together with others for the murders of the deceased and convicted accordingly in the South Eastern Cape Local Division of the High Court during June 1996. The first three deceased were members of the Security Branch of the South African Police in Port Elizabeth and the latter was an informer who was a converted ANC operative. All four Applicants were also members of the Security Branch in the South African Police.

The decisions of the original amnesty committee to refuse amnesty to these applicants were taken on review to the Cape of Good Hope Provincial Division of the High Court of South Africa. The decisions to refuse amnesty to the Third and Fourth Applicants were unanimously set aside and the majority of that court also set aside the decision to refuse amnesty to the Second Applicant.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

The court consequently ordered that the Minister of Justice establish an Amnesty Committee (presumably in terms of the Act) which would consider applications for amnesty by the Second, Third and Fourth Applicants (in respect of the same incident) afresh.

Consequently this committee was established in terms of the Act and the four applicants brought these applications before it. The applications are opposed by the families of the deceased. The family of Sakati were only represented later in the hearing.

Amongst the applications, there was one by Nicholaas Jacobus Janse Van Rensburg who was cited as the First Applicant. The committee was informed that his application was included in anticipation of review proceedings being brought in the Cape of Good Hope Provincial Division of the High Court seeking relief that would allow him to make a fresh application for amnesty as the Second, Third and Fourth Applicants had been allowed to do in terms of the aforementioned court order.

No such order was placed before this committee and it seems that no review proceedings were ever launched by or on behalf of the First

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Applicant in the Cape of Good Hope Provincial Division of the High Court. Consequently the application for amnesty on behalf of the First Applicant is not properly, if at all, before this committee. The contents of Van Rensburg's application can therefore not be taken into consideration, especially because it was never tested, even in deciding the applications of the other applicants. However for the sake of convenience, the other Applicants will be referred to in this decision as cited in the papers and in the heading hereof.

When the proceedings commenced, Mr Ntsebeza, counsel for Mrs Faku, Mrs Mgoduka and Mrs Mapipa, wives of the first three deceased, applied for a postponement so that the families of the deceased would have an opportunity to obtain the services of other counsel. He explained that his withdrawal was voluntary and based on a possible perception that he had a conflict of interest in appearing for the families when in fact he was an erstwhile member of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission established in terms of Section 2 of the Act. The postponement was granted.

Upon resumption, Mr Naidoo appeared for the families of Faku, Mgoduka and Mapipa. Later in the course of the proceedings, Mr Naidoo informed the committee that at that stage, he was also representing the family of deceased, Sakati, having been briefed shortly before then. There were no objections in this regard and Mr

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Naidoo continued to represent the families of all the deceased for the remainder of the hearing.

There are one or two aspects which need mention at this juncture.

Firstly, during the course of the evidence, there was a suggestion that Mr Carl Edwards, who was a colleague of Mr Niewoudt, knew of the plan to kill the deceased and had had prior knowledge that he would be hosting some of those involved in the plan to do so and/or its implementation. On account of the possibility that he might therefore be implicated in the killings in one way or another, proceedings were adjourned so that he could be informed of the situation as required by law.

Mr Mpshe, the evidence leader, was directed to inform Mr Edwards of the situation and that he should attend the hearing the next morning at 09H30 in order to indicate what his attitude was and in particular to request time to employ representation if he wished to do so.

The next morning, the committee was informed by Mr Mpshe that he had communicated with Mr Edwards as directed and had handed him a written résumé of the situation. Mr Mpshe told the committee that Mr Edwards signed a copy of the written résumé which was handed to him and indicated that he had no interest in the proceedings and did not wish to attend the hearing. Mr Edwards had no objection to it proceeding without him. The proceedings continued accordingly.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Before any oral evidence was tendered, counsel for the three Applicants sought to amend their applications for amnesty. Written amendments were submitted on behalf of Third and Fourth Applicants and read as follows:

> "Ek doen hiermee aansoek om amnesties (sic) vir moord, sameswering tot die pleging van moord, medepligtigheid tot moord, beginstiging, opsetlike saakbeskadiging, as ook enige ander misdryf en/of delik wat voortspruit of afgelei word uit die voorval waartydens Adjudant-Offisier Glen Mogoduka, Sersant Amos Faku, Sersant Desmond Mapipa en Xolile Sheperd (sic) Sakati (ook bekend as Charles Jack) gedood is te Motherwell".

It must be pointed out that while not specifically referred to, the amendment was clearly intended to include any offence incidental to the commission of the murders and any offence by any of the Applicants in keeping secret the manner in which the deceased were murdered and the identity of those involved in the commission thereof. The Second Applicant made the same application.

There was no objection to the amendment(s) and the applications, including that of the Second Applicant. It follows in any event that should amnesty be granted in respect of the murders which are the focal offences, then amnesty for any other offence incidental to the commission or concealment thereof should also be granted. The converse of this also applies.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

We were informed that the parties had agreed that the committee would not be presented with certain relevant records or portions thereof. These included the record of the criminal trial related to this incident and the record of the previous amnesty application. Despite them being informed that the committee did not consider itself bound by their agreement, the committee did not refer to any of these records in considering these applications.

It is common cause that the deceased were all killed while travelling in a motor vehicle in which explosives were installed by Third Applicant and others. The Second Applicant was the source of information in terms of which the decision to kill the deceased was made and he activated the explosives which caused the deaths of the deceased. The Fourth Applicant was party to the said operation and attended in order to put into operation an alternative operation should the death of any of them not have ensued in the first instance.

The Third and Fourth Applicants merely acted on the instructions of their superiors in this regard.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

The Second Applicant's written application is contained in two–hundred and eleven pages. Much of the written part of his application deals with his personal circumstances, and his connection with the Security Police of the time. He proceeded with his oral evidence and confirmed, in very general terms, the correctness thereof.

His written application also contained an attached document entitled "Submission to the Truth and Reconciliation Commission", dated 21 October 1996 and authored by General J. van der Merwe. Attached thereto is a document titled "The role of the South African Police in the conflict of the past" and authored by Generals Geldenhuys, Coetzee, De Wit and van der Merwe, all of whom were Commissioners of the South African Police at various times in the past.

The Second Applicant also associated himself with the contents of both documents and sought them to be read into his application and within the context thereof.

He explained that he became a member of the Security Branch of the Police on 1 April 1975. He was stationed at Port Elizabeth. Previously he was a member of the South African Police stationed at Johannesburg and Transkei before being transferred to the Security Branch in Port Elizabeth where he was always stationed until he left the force.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

His application also contained a general background of his experiences and evaluation of circumstances which led to this specific incident. He broadly confirmed the allegations in this regard as contained in his written application.

While the written application was broadly referred to, he was specifically led by his counsel on the material aspects related to the relevant incident(s).

The committee was informed that while he would not be led on all the details save for what he and his representatives considered important, he was nonetheless also willing to answer specific questions about the allegations contained in his written application. Counsel was informed that the application should be placed before the committee as Second Applicant and his representatives thought fit.

In dealing with the events, the Second Applicant explained that from 1983 he was in charge of the Intelligence Component of operations within the Port Elizabeth Security Branch. In 1986, during the State of Emergency, he was transferred to the investigation unit and in 1989 he became the Head of the Regional Intelligence Component of the Security Police in the region.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

He testified that during 1989, Brigadier Gilbert was Head of the Security Police in Port Elizabeth and Colonel Isaac Nel was second in command. Under them, the hierarchy consisted of the administrative component, the black component, the white component, and the coloured and Asiatic component. He explained that these components were administrative sections of the Security Police all of which investigated what was termed 'black organisations'.

The Second Applicant explained that part of his duties in the intelligence component during 1989 was to establish covert intelligence capacity. This included the assessment of the political climate of the time, the development of an effective database in regard to organisations and individuals, groups and institutions who were responsible for what he referred to as the anarchy of the time. This clearly referred to organisations, individuals, groups and institutions that opposed the system of apartheid. This information was used for inter alia counter espionage operations.

The Second Applicant then proceeded to testify about the deceased. He testified that Warrant Officer Mgoduka joined the Security Branch in 1977, when he shared an office with the Second Applicant in the aforementioned black component.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Sergeant Amos Faku joined the Security Branch in 1980 also as part of the black component. Sergeant Desmond Mapipa was transferred to the Security Police in 1986 and attached to the investigation component which was part of the black component.

He described the deceased Xolile Shepperd (sic) Sakati alias Charles Jack as a 'trained terrorist' who was arrested in 1983, and later testified on behalf of the state in criminal prosecutions against those accused of subversive activities. Ultimately he was placed within the black component. He also provided information to the Security Police.

The Second Applicant stated that on one occasion he was interrogating a 'trained terrorist' in the company of the four deceased. He explained that because of the situation prevailing at the time, he used the opportunity to enhance his employment goals broadening the network and database. In pursuance thereof he managed to get the interrogatee to write a letter for him and wherein he (the interrogatee) requested from an ANC operative in Swaziland, weapons and the establishment of a Dead Letter Box (DLB) within South Africa. He explained that a DLB is a safe place where weapons within South Africa could be kept.

The letter was sent to Swaziland with an agent who was incarcerated a short while later at Quattro Camp, a detention camp in Angola, where people who were suspected of being untrustworthy were held by the ANC.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

The Second Applicant then went on to testify about the killing of a person in Lesotho. It was clearly not the agent with whom the aforementioned letter was sent but everything points to the fact that it was one Toto Mbali.

It is quite apparent from the evidence of the Second Applicant that only he and Warrant Officer Mgoduka knew Toto Mbali had been recruited by the Security Branch. This piece of evidence was obviously intended to demonstrate that Warrant Officer Mgoduka was the source of this information to the ANC. No other evidence was tendered in this regard.

The Second Applicant proceeded to explain that he then suspected the four deceased, in particular Warrant Officer Mgoduka, of being the source (s) of the leaking of confidential information to the ANC. He gave no details of the 'confidential information' he referred to and allegedly leaked by all of the deceased.

He testified that as a result thereof, he discussed the issue with Brigadier Gilbert as a matter of urgency because the whole information/ intelligence system was at risk and the names of Security Police and their agents and certain important addresses where some of the agents and Security Police resided could be revealed to the ANC. This could result in attacks on Security Police and agents as a result of which they could be killed.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

He however testified that the late Mr Sakati was only involved in the incident of acquiring the letter sent to Swaziland and that it was only to that extent that he was a potential threat to the system which the second Applicant sought to protect. This was over and above the identity of persons he (Sakati) had got to know over the time he spent with the Security Police.

The Second Applicant however did not believe that the deceased had knowledge of the identity and addresses of all the Security Police agents but certainly some important information in that regard and other important information.

The Second Applicant stated that he told Brigadier Gilbert of the situation in this regard during July 1989. As a result, Gilbert then ordered him to initiate a discreet investigation into the source(s) of the leaks and the role of the four deceased therein.

In pursuance of this order, he arranged the installation of a listening device in the tea room at the offices of the Security Police at Port

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Elizabeth. He also intercepted mail. He explained that he arranged with members of the technical division who used to fetch the mail from the post office to intercept certain mail, open it and read it. The operation also included monitoring telephone conversations and following and monitoring the four persons in question.

The Second Applicant said that during the investigation, he discovered that Warrant Officer Mgoduka had registered a post box under a false name at the Korsten Post Office, Port Elizabeth. He stated that this was established from the intercepted mail and the aforementioned observations. The Second Applicant personally established that the false name of 'Thandoxolo' was used. He checked the official form at the Post Office and discovered that it had been completed in Warrant Officer Mgoduka's handwriting, which he recognised. The Second Applicant then arranged for the mail received in that post box to be intercepted and monitored.

According to the Second Applicant the monitoring of the mail revealed that communication in this regard was by means of codified language. Consequently this raised further questions and strengthened the suspicion that Warrant Officer Mgoduka was in contact with the ANC. The foreign addresses were of places such as Lesotho, London and Canada and were known to the Security Branch. This fact ultimately confirmed to the Second Applicant that Warrant Officer Mgoduka had contact with the ANC.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

The Second Applicant also testified that when the four deceased were talking in the tea room, he detected that they had already made contact with an overseas ANC aligned relative of Warrant Officer Mgoduka, Christopher Mgoduka. He also concluded from what he overheard that they had changed allegiance and also that they felt used in protecting the white government and keeping it in power. He interpreted their position as one in which they were dissatisfied with the government and the way they were being treated.

Finally, he referred to a letter sent from a Korsten address to Mr Isaac who, according to the Second Applicant, was known to the Security Police in Port Elizabeth as 'Roje Skenjana', an ANC commander in Lesotho. The content of the letter was encoded, as was customary and referred to as pending wedding. The Second Applicant stated that he recognised the handwriting therein as being that of Warrant Officer Mgoduka. As had become practice, the letters were steamed open, copied, resealed and sent on to its intended destination.

The Second Applicant later testified that this letter was typed and he identified the type as that of the manual typewriter used in Warrant Officer Mgoduka's office.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Second Applicant explained that he was aware of a request by Mr Skenjana for Mr Mgoduka to identify a motor vehicle for the purposes of placing a limpet mine in it.

As a result of all this information, he was convinced that the four deceased, in particular Warrant Officer Mgoduka, were a serious security risk.

The Second Applicant then reported the situation to Brigadier Gilbert during the first half of December 1989. He testified that the options of how to deal with the matter were discussed between them and they arrived at the conclusion that all the deceased should be killed.

While he did not volunteer details of these options, upon being questioned, he explained that amongst the options was that they should be subjected to criminal prosecution. He could not remember why this option was rejected but he was wary that his whole network could have been exposed and that it was not clear to him at the time how criminal charges could be proffered against them.

Nonetheless, he and Brigadier Gilbert parted, and about two days later, Brigadier Gilbert spoke to him directly and gave him an order to go and see General van Rensburg in Pretoria at the Security Police Head Office about this situation. Brigadier Gilbert gave him a ticket to travel to Johannesburg by air and then on to Pretoria. According to the Second Applicant, he had Head Office authority to carry out the said covert operation.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Second Applicant also testified that Brigadier Gilbert mentioned at that time that Brigadier Strydom, head of detectives in Port Elizabeth, had informed him that Warrant Officer Mgoduka and Shepperd Sakati were suspects in a scam involving the defrauding of what was termed 'anti-government organisations and workers' unions'. This aspect further complicated matters and had the potential of embarrassing the Security Police and exposing the role of the Security Police in serving the political ends of the government of the day, because the two were also involved in other hitherto undisclosed covert criminal offences committed by the Security Police. According to the Second Applicant, though he did not know much about this, he was told that they had threatened to disclose the role of the Security Police in Port Elizabeth in the 'Cradock Four' killings as it is known. He further stated that they were using their knowledge of the Cradock Four incident to negotiate a position for themselves in terms of which they would avoid the risk of being charged for fraud. He, however, did not pay much attention to this. All he was interested in was the plan to kill them.

The Second Applicant then left for Pretoria on 12 December 1989, with instructions to meet General Van Rensburg at his home early the next morning. He knew General Van Rensburg, who had previously been stationed within the Security Branch at Port Elizabeth.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

He met Van Rensburg as arranged and the latter was clearly not fully briefed about the situation. Second Applicant stated that he then tendered further information to Van Rensburg.

He explained that Colonel De Kock later joined them at the invitation of Van Rensburg. He briefly told De Kock what the situation was. He could not remember everything he told De Kock, but stated that he told him that some of the deceased had already made contact with the ANC.

He testified that because Brigadier Gilbert was senior to Van Rensburg and De Kock, neither could change a decision to kill the four deceased. He explained that the purpose of going to Pretoria was to fill in the details and reasons for the proposed elimination of the four deceased so that the logistics in connection with the implementation thereof, could be arranged accordingly. This explanation was tendered after he was constrained to concede that Van Rensburg had the authority to direct that the operation be aborted. I will refer to this aspect presently.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

After he had explained to De Kock why the operation had to take place, Van Rensburg instructed De Kock to arrange the technical requirements to ensure the success of the operation. According to Second Applicant, he left Van Rensburg's home with De Kock and they proceeded to the Third Applicant's office where they were introduced to each other. He testified that he briefly explained the situation to the Third Applicant. In particular, he explained that the four deceased had made contact with an anti-apartheid organisation and that the effects of the proposed operation should be made to look like the work of the ANC. He could not remember if he had told the Third Applicant that authority had been obtained to do what was being prepared for. Again he explained that he tendered this brief explanation to the Third Applicant in order to help him understand what was logistically required.

Thereafter De Kock and Second Applicant went to Vlakplaas where they contacted the Fourth Applicant, amongst others. Later the Second and Fourth Applicants and two others, Snyman and Vermeulen, drove to Port Elizabeth in two motor vehicles. Fourth Applicant was not informed of anything by the Second Applicant who seemed to suggest that it must have been De Kock who tendered the details to him, if any.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Second Applicant, without going into any detail, testified that during their journey he explained everything to them including the motivation for what was obviously going to occur.

The Second Applicant then explained that he took the other passenger of the motor vehicle he was travelling in to a safe place in Port Elizabeth and thereafter went home to rest. He had left the others with one of his local colleagues.

He received the expected telephone call from Third Applicant early in the morning. He collected him in a suburb known as Summerstrand and took him to a secret place where they met the other Vlakplaas operatives.

The Second Applicant then left that place to look for a motor vehicle in which explosives would be installed. He succeeded in obtaining a motor vehicle and delivered it to the place where the others were waiting in the area of Greenbushes near Rocklands. The bomb was then installed in the motor vehicle as was planned.

He stated that he was given instructions as to how to detonate the bomb by means of a remote controlled device. He explained that in the late afternoon, they went to a place identified as the Monument Crossing in the Motherwell suburb. He showed Third and Fourth

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Applicants and Vermeulen where he intended the said motor vehicle to be when he activated the planted explosives, so that they could ensure that they were out of danger when it happened.

He further confirmed the contents of his written application in respect of the actual detonation and what occurred immediately before then. He explained that he held the relevant motor vehicle in safe keeping at Louis le Grange Square and at about 20H00 that night, he consulted an informant from whom he allegedly received information about a freedom fighter hiding in Motherwell and who intended to commit an offence by installing explosives in a police vehicle on 16 December 1989 and then blowing it up. He used this opportunity to put his plan into operation and at the same time, enhance the impression that it was the work of the ANC because it coincided with its alleged plan to blow up a police vehicle.

He then arranged for the four deceased to come to where he was and explained that they should use a motor vehicle which was not known to be that of the Security Police in order to facilitate the observation and possible arrest and interrogation of the alleged freedom fighter.

Eventually the four deceased boarded the motor vehicle, which was brought to the rendezvous point in Motherwell by Warrant Officer Lotz.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

The four deceased then left en route to Hintsa Street where the freedom fighter was allegedly hiding.

The remote control was in the possession of the Second Applicant who had insisted that he be the one to activate the explosives when it was opportune to do so. The Vlakplaas members, including Third and Fourth Applicants, were hiding a distance away.

When the motor vehicle had travelled a short distance but still within view, the Second Applicant detonated the explosives in that motor vehicle by means of the remote control. The resultant blast killed all four of the deceased instantly.

The Second Applicant testified that he then went to the scene of the blast and planted a detonator, the use of which was at the time associated with the ANC. This ploy was obviously employed to fortify the impression that the blast was committed by members of the ANC in terms of its offensive against the police and other institutions regarded as supportive or protective of apartheid and in line with its planned attack scheduled for 16 December.

He confirmed that the political aims of his actions, as set out in the written section of his application, were to protect the government of the day.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

In summary, this included compliance with his obligation of ensuring the safety of South Africa, protecting the country, protecting the government of the day and the National Party from attack by liberation armies and movements. It was also intended to protect the integrity of South Africa, the government and the National Party as well as its continued existence and control of government. In particular, it was intended to avoid sensitive information related to the aforementioned aims from being divulged to the opposition, in order to protect the lives and property of members of the South African Police, agents, informants and colleagues within the Security Police and to protect the earlier successes in attaining those aims, especially in the light of the trouble it would involve in replacing the system under threat.

The Second Applicant testified that he was unable to say whether all the information he sought to protect had been revealed to the opposition or to what extent this had been done over the period of approximately five months prior to the killing and during which the alleged communication between the deceased and the ANC had continued.

The Second Applicant also conceded that after the blast, he did not follow up the situation in respect of the freedom fighter allegedly hiding in Hintsa Street, Motherwell. He stated that he mentioned the matter to another section of the Security Police, Port Elizabeth because, as he was in the Intelligence Section, it was not within his formal competency. He was unable to say if anything was done in respect thereof even from an intelligence perspective.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Eugene Alexander De Kock ("De Kock ") was called by the Evidence Leader of the Amnesty Committee, Mr Mpshe, to testify about the events and the subsequent killing of the deceased.

De Kock joined the Uniformed Branch of the police force during January 1968 and was stationed in the East Rand. He stayed there until he was transferred to the then South West Africa and stationed within the Security Unit at Oshakati during 1983. He was a founder member of the Combat Unit known as 'Koevoet' akin to the Selous Scouts, which countered revolutionaries in the mid-African area. Through infiltration they neutralised South West African Peoples Organisation and other opposing structures in South West Africa within two years of formation. Koevoet existed until the end of 1989 / 1990 when there were peace negotiations for Namibia.

In 1983 he was transferred back to South Africa. He became the commander of Vlakplaas on 1 July 1985 and was placed in charge of Section C-1, which was under Brigadier Schoon. Section C-1was entrusted with combating terrorism, and specifically the activities of the

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

ANC and Pan-Africanist Congress. Members of both organisations who infiltrated the country were either killed or recruited and converted into members known as “Askaris”. The Askaris were a group of converted members of liberation armies used by the Security Police to identify insurgents and generally provide information about their former revolutionary organisations.

De Kock obtained his orders from Brigadier Schoon as to how the ANC and PAC insurgents were to be killed. When attacking the “enemy” and in the field of operation, he had a wide discretion to deal with situations as they unfolded in any given operation. These operations were inside the country as well as outside the borders of South Africa, e.g. Lesotho and Swaziland. Some of the members of the ANC and PAC were identified by Askaris through photographs. These Askaris would also give information about safe places of either the ANC or PAC members inside and outside South Africa.

De Kock is currently serving a sentence of life imprisonment imposed in October 1996.

He stated that he testified in the criminal trial in respect of this incident against the Applicants and others.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

He testified that during December 1989 he was instructed by General Van Rensburg, who was then his chief, to consult with him at his Security Branch offices. He was informed that the Second Applicant, of the Port Elizabeth Security Branch, would be arriving the next day and that he should accompany the Second Applicant to Van Rensburg's house, which was situated in a complex for police officials. De Kock was living in the same complex.

At 06H00 Second Applicant came to De Kock. They walked to General Van Rensburg's house. Van Rensburg invited Second Applicant to tell De Kock the purpose of his visit. Second Applicant explained that two Security Branch members and an Askari, a former member of the ANC, were involved in fraud. They intercepted cheques in the post which were destined for the unions, liberation movements and the South African Council of Churches. They exchanged these cheques and utilised the money for their own purposes. The exposure of this scam would put the integrity of the Security Branch in Port Elizabeth at risk. This led one of the members to threaten that should they be charged, he would expose some of the other crimes, such as motor vehicle theft, committed by the Security Branch in Port Elizabeth. He did not identify this person.

A short discussion ensued between the three. General Van Rensburg told De Kock to render assistance to Second Applicant so that these members should be prevented from making such disclosures. They had to be 'silenced'. This was a euphemism used in the Security Branch for killing people. Thereafter the discussion focused on the methodology of how the deceased should be blown up and killed.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

This would also make it appear as if it was an operation carried out by the ANC and that no suspicion could be cast on the Security Branch in that regard. No personnel from Port Elizabeth should be involved, lest for unforeseen reasons they may be recognised.

De Kock would deploy members from Vlakplaas. He would arrange for the Third and Fourth Applicants, together with some other members, to ensure the successful execution of the operation.

This was at the time when the Harms Commission had been appointed to investigate the alleged atrocities perpetrated by Vlakplaas members. De Kock was then on compulsory leave in order to assist General Engelbrecht to cover up the operations of Vlakplaas. De Kock would then not be suspected of any involvement in Vlakplaas operations.

Whilst walking back to his house with Second Applicant, he became concerned about the reasons for the intended killings. He said he questioned why people who worked on the same side with them and had meted out untold harm on the ANC should be killed for reasons of hiding fraud.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

When he reached home he drove to General van Rensburg's office. He does not know what happened to Second Applicant but assumed that he arrived by a motor vehicle since he had flown from Port Elizabeth to Johannesburg and must have left the same way.

His feeling was that if it was only to conceal the fraud, the Port Elizabeth members should themselves kill the deceased as this was not foreign to Second Applicant and his colleagues. All of them had in the past killed without hesitation. The situation here was different. He was prepared to help but not kill for something so minor. The fraud(s) could have been covered up or alternatively they would have been removed from the machinery of the law or in some illegal way, as had often been previously done.

At his office, Van Rensburg, in response to De Kock's query about the reason for the intended killing of the deceased, explained that the members would even disclose the Goniwe killings and other details of the activities of the Security Branch, their safe houses, details of the modus operandi and so forth. This was sensitive since it touched on the security of the country. The Cradock Four incident concerned General Van Rensburg and De Kock because they were also involved in it. This convinced De Kock that they should then be killed since it would reveal the political agenda of the government and the lengths that the security forces would go in order to protect themselves and the Nationalist Party.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

According to De Kock, when they were briefed by Second Applicant the discussion did not concern the Cradock Four or the PEPCO three (3) murders or any other murders which were perpetrated by the Security Police members in Port Elizabeth. The discussion only centred around the fraud. The revelation would have put pressure on the state structures. The image of the state would have suffered irreparable harm and it would have involved senior personnel as well as the generals who had always denied their involvement in such atrocities. What had to be borne in mind was that these incidents were secretive and committed to protect the State from these “insurgents”.

De Kock despatched his personnel under the command of the Fourth Applicant. The Third Applicant and others were deployed only in case it became necessary to implement an alternative plan. On his return to Pretoria, the Fourth Applicant reported to him that the operation was successful.

Under cross-examination he stated that it seemed that the decision to kill the deceased had already been taken prior to the discussion between Van Rensburg, Second Applicant and himself. Second Applicant was sent to Pretoria to elicit expert assistance on how the plan to blow up the deceased should be implemented. De Kock was adamant that this was however not discussed but he conceded that it might have been. He was emphatic though, that when Van Rensburg arranged the meeting, his impression was that Second Applicant was to apprise them of the situation and how to prevent the deceased from making any of these disclosures.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

He was resolute that Second Applicant spoke of two members and one Askari. The meeting was called for Second Applicant to inform him of the situation in Port Elizabeth. He was only told of fraud. He used strong language that Second Applicant lied to him about the reason. He believed that he should kill and fraud was not a good enough motivation for such drastic action nor was anything said about the deceased wanting to defect to the ANC. He said the Third and Fourth Applicants were involved because he instructed them to carry out the elimination. Had it not been his instructions, they would not have participated.

Lionel Snyman testified on behalf of the Second Applicant and stated that he had joined the police force in 1971. He subsequently joined the Section C-1 under De Kock. At the time of the incident, he was a Warrant Officer.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

During December 1989 Vermeulen, Fourth Applicant and himself were called by De Kock and instructed to accompany Second Applicant to Port Elizabeth. He testified that it was explained that there was a problem because some members within the Security Branch in Port Elizabeth and an Askari wanted to defect to the ANC. They had received information about that from the Security Branch in Port Elizabeth. He was however, not sure who disclosed this information. He was also informed that members from Vlakplaas would have to arrange for the killing of those troublesome persons.

He said that at some stage he also heard about fraud but was not sure from whom. He was furthermore, not sure how many people were to be killed.

After the operation he returned to Pretoria.

Under cross-examination it became quite apparent that Snyman had no independent recollection of whatever happened in regard to this incident either before, during or after it occurred. He said that he only heard of the Cradock Four incident after this operation had been completed. He admitted that his evidence consisted of what he had heard, reconstruction and guesswork. His evidence could not be relied upon to assist the committee in any way.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Third Applicant testified that he prepared his application without any legal assistance.

At the time of the incident he was the Officer Commanding of the Technical Division of the Mechanical Section of the South African Police. He rendered service to the Security Branch and also to the Vlakplaas component.

He further testified that on the morning of 13 December 1989 he was visited by Colonel De Kock and the Second Applicant. They informed him that there were problems in which members of the Port Elizabeth Security Branch were involved. De Kock did most of the talking although he could not remember "who said what".

At a later stage he was told that these people were also involved in fraud. It was also mentioned to him that these people were about to defect to the ANC with all the information regarding networks of the Security Branch which they had at their disposal.

He said that he was informed that the operation to kill these people had been decided upon at Head Office, more particularly by Brigadier Van Rensburg, that it was urgent and that it was necessary for the Technical Division to assist with the execution of the decision. He was not in a position to check the information conveyed to him and he accepted the version and orders as conveyed to him by De Kock in a bona fide manner as correct and properly authorised.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

He was further informed that it was decided at Head Office that explosives should be used. He was not involved in the identification of the victims, the planning of the operation or in the decision-making. He was told that the operation was to be conducted in such a way that it should appear that the ANC or a similar organisation was responsible for it.

He immediately proceeded to task Kobus Kock, a member of his staff, to pack all the tools, explosives and radio apparatus needed for the operation.

De Kock had made a vehicle available to him and Kock, who was to accompany him to Port Elizabeth. Since the Technical Division only had marked vehicles, none of them could be used for such a covert operation. He was given a key to an unmarked motor vehicle and an envelope which contained money to cover their expenses. They left for Port Elizabeth that evening.

He testified that they arrived in Port Elizabeth early the next morning, where they were met by Second Applicant and taken to a house where they found Vermeulen and Snyman. He could not remember whether the Fourth Applicant was present or not.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

The Commanding Officer of the Security Branch in Port Elizabeth, Brigadier Gilbert, arrived later and outlined the situation to them. Gilbert told them that the persons were in the process of defecting to the ANC with sensitive information regarding the information networks and other secret operations that were conducted by the Security Branch in the Eastern Cape. He could not remember whether Niewoudt (Second Applicant) was present at the safe house at the time.

He stated that Second Applicant thereafter met up with them in a white Volkswagen Jetta motor vehicle. It was then taken to an uninhabited area where it was equipped with explosives. The explosives were placed under each of the seats of the motor vehicle in such a way that it could be detonated by a remote control, the operation of which was demonstrated to Second Applicant.

After the vehicle had been so prepared, he returned to Pretoria. He had not gained any benefit from the operation and did not harbour any personal feelings of malice or resentment towards any of the victims. He did not know any of the deceased, how many victims there were to be killed and did not have any problem with any of them.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Fourth Applicant testified that he was a former member of the operational group “Koevoet” and later became a member of the Vlakplaas group. Acts committed by him were acts as a member of the South African Police in the execution of his duties. He was intent on protecting the government of the day. He testified that he supported the system of apartheid, but that he did not have any problem with black people as such. For him the real issue was terrorism against the country.

He met De Kock at Head Office on 13 December 1989 and accompanied him to the office of Brigadier Van Rensburg. De Kock told Van Rensburg that he would be sending him (Ras), Snyman and Vermeulen to Port Elizabeth whereupon Van Rensburg wished him good luck. He then left and De Kock remained behind.

Later on that day he again met up with De Kock at Vlakplaas, where he was given the order to assist the Second Applicant in the operation. He was told that he would fall under the Second Applicant’s command during the trip to and during his stay in Port Elizabeth. He could not remember the details of the discussion with the Second Applicant whilst travelling to Port Elizabeth, but he did remember a conversation with the Second Applicant about the persons who wanted to defect to the ANC and the dangers thereof.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

He did not see the Third Applicant at the safe house the next morning and remembered that he had been out to the shop. On his return, the Third Applicant was not there. They all later departed to the area where the motor vehicle was equipped with explosives and whereafter the Third Applicant and Kock returned to Pretoria. He and his colleagues from Vlakplaas assisted in the installation of the explosives and devices in the said motor vehicle.

They were then taken to the proposed scene of the explosion during the afternoon in order to familiarise themselves with the terrain so that they could keep safe at the time of the explosion. The rest of the afternoon was spent at the beach and at a braai at the home of Security Branch policeman, Carl Edwards. He testified that during this period, Edwards mentioned to him that two of the members were involved in fraud, in that they appropriated money intended for banned organisations for their own benefit. It was explained to him that on the instructions of former State President P W Botha, the said money was meant to be intercepted by the Security Branch. Such intercepted money had to be paid into a secret fund, but there were instances when it was retained by members and not paid into the secret fund.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Later that evening, he and his colleagues, including the Second Applicant, gathered at the scene of the planned explosion and attended to the activation of the ignition device. He and Snyman then hid in the bushes but were unable to observe who arrived or how many persons arrived. He was in any event not in a position to have aborted (even if he wanted to) the operation at that late stage since the Second Applicant was in charge of the operation.

He explained that the primary reason for travelling to Port Elizabeth was that if the main operation did not succeed, he and the other members from Vlakplaas could assist in an alternative operation to kill the deceased.

He testified that the deceased arrived in what is referred to as a 'combi' motor vehicle and, as previously arranged by the Second Applicant, switched vehicles. They drove off in the Jetta motor vehicle. Shortly thereafter, the Second Applicant detonated the explosives in the motor vehicle and as a result, the vehicle exploded and all of the deceased were killed. They then went to the scene where he took the remote control from the Second Applicant, then left for Pretoria with the other Vlakplaas members. He later returned the device to De Kock at Vlakplaas.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

In regard to what De Kock told him, he testified that he was told that the intended victims were about to defect to the ANC and that they wanted to disclose Security Branch involvement in the Cradock Four killings.

During the Second Applicant's evidence in chief, an application for postponement was made and granted. It seemed that his representative thought it wise for him to attend a psychiatrist. The postponement was for a substantial period.

On resumption, it turned out that the Second Applicant was indeed seen by Dr Crafford, a qualified psychiatrist who was called to testify before the Second Applicant resumed his evidence. Dr Crafford's qualifications were not challenged and consequently, this need not be dealt with.

Dr Crafford's evidence relates to two distinct aspects of the Second Applicant's case. The first involves the question of the Second Applicant's mental health and secondly, the impact thereof on the testimony he gave during the period prior to seeing Dr Crafford in April 2004, when the hearing was postponed.

It is important to bear in mind that, according to his evidence, Dr Crafford's initial contact with the Second Applicant was in 1995 when the latter was referred to him by the Old Mutual Insurance Company for an opinion regarding disability. Dr Crafford had then diagnosed that the Second Applicant suffered from post-traumatic stress disorder. There is no reason to doubt that diagnosis as was suggested by counsel for the families, who initially clearly stated that he did not challenge the diagnosis.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

However, the more important aspect of Dr Crafford's evidence relates to his opinion of the effect the Second Applicant's state of mind had on that part of his evidence tendered prior to the postponement. He stated inter alia, that in cases of post-traumatic stress disorder, "... there is often a problem with concentration and this had become very bad with Mr Niewoudt when he last went to see me in April. People with post-traumatic stress disorder ... lose track of conversations of what they are saying ... or they might lose track of what is being said to them in a conversation – this was the case with Niewoudt in April 2004. He is certainly a lot better now."

The import of his evidence is that he saw the Second Applicant in April 2004, after the application for postponement was granted and his opinion was based on the assumption that the Second Application was again suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder. He stated that the Second Applicant has since improved sufficiently and was capable of resuming his testimony free from any negative effect of his condition.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Under cross-examination, however, it turned out that Dr Crafford had not tested the Second Applicant's information by applying any of the customary psychiatric tests which investigates the possibility of feigning symptoms and so forth. He explained that he could confirm his diagnosis as genuine by just looking at the Second Applicant. He could not say how he could make this diagnosis about the mental condition of the Second Applicant during April 2004 in this manner.

In challenging the objectivity of Dr Crafford's report, Mr Naidoo put it to Dr Crafford that he was biased in favour of the Second Applicant and queried his conclusion "... that prior to the said postponement, the Second Applicant was having difficulty in following what was going on in court, he was having difficulty in getting his thoughts together and answering questions clearly." Dr Crafford conceded that apart from speaking to his counsel he relied on the Second Applicant for that deduction.

In the light of the above, Dr Crafford's evidence in regard to the impact the Second Applicant's state of mind had on his initial evidence, must be approached with a great deal of circumspection. The lack of any scientific support for his conclusion makes it extremely difficult to accept the evidence of Dr Crafford as reliable, especially in relation to the effect of the Second Applicant's state of mind on his initial evidence. Clearly, Dr Crafford had not properly established the Second Applicant's mental condition at the material time.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

In the circumstances, Dr Crafford's evidence with regard to his conclusion of the Second Applicant's mental condition is tainted, especially, by the lack of objectivity. Dr Crafford's testimony with regard to any negative effect the Second Applicant's mental state might have had on his evidence in this hearing prior to the postponement, can therefore not be relied upon.

George Andre Johannes Steenkamp was called to testify on behalf of the families. He was at the material time a Superintendent in the South African Police Services.

Steenkamp's evidence revolved around a docket that he handed to Colonel Eric Strydom, a former Head of the Murder and Robbery Unit of the Police in Port Elizabeth. He stated that Colonel Strydom had said to him that the Security Branch should sort out their problems. Steenkamp did not elaborate on this.

Steenkamp further testified about an alleged invitation by the Second Applicant to have tea at his office. He stated that the Second Applicant had a criminal docket with him.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Counsel for the Second Applicant then objected to this evidence on the ground that it had not been put to the Second Applicant when he testified.

Counsel for the families conceded that this was an oversight on his part and he subsequently requested that Steenkamp's evidence be disregarded. In the circumstances, it will be disregarded.

It might be well to point out that the process as established by the Act is sui generis. As it developed during its relatively short life span, the Act and in particular decisions as to amnesty applications were not subject to the system of precedent. Indeed it could not have been so because, by the very nature of the commission, there was no time to develop precedents. In any event, panels were dealing with Applications at the same time and hence they could not have been subject to any precedent in doing so. There is no reason to deal with these applications differently.

All that is required in terms section 20 (1), is that the [sitting] Committee be satisfied (own emphasis) that the requirements as set out therein have been complied with.

It would be convenient to deal with the applications of the Third and Fourth Applicants first and then with that of the Second Applicant.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Section 20 of the Act is of application and the relevant portions of subsections (1) and (2) provide that:

"(1) If the Committee, after considering an application for amnesty, is satisfied that –

(a) the application complies with the requirements of the Act;

(b) the act, omission or offence to which the application relates is an act associated with a political objective committed in the course of the conflicts of the past in accordance with the provisions of subsections (2) and (3); and

(c) the applicant has made a full disclosure of all relevant facts, it shall grant amnesty in respect of that act, omission or offence."

In assessing whether section 20 (1) and in particular subsection (1) (c) has been complied with, it must be noted that human frailties such as forgetfulness can have an impact on the evidence. With the passage of time it is possible to forget details pertaining to certain fundamental aspects. Applicants should not be penalised for forgetting certain details as long as the relevant fundamental aspect(s) are covered in the evidence.

If the relevant fundamental aspects are indeed covered by the evidence, then, I would think that section 20 (1) (c) would have been substantially, and therefore satisfactorily complied with. If these aspects are not properly and acceptably testified to, then section 20

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

(1) (c) cannot be said to have been complied with, substantially or otherwise.

Section 20 (2) provides that :-

> "(2) In this Act, unless the context otherwise indicates, 'act associated with a political objective' means any act or omission which constitutes an offence or delict which, according to the criteria in subsection (3), is associated with a political objective, and which was advised, planned, directed, commanded, ordered or committed within or outside the Republic during the period 1 March 1960 to the cut-off date by –
>
> (a) any member ... ;
>
> (b) any employee of the State or any former state or any member of the security forces of the State or any former state in the course and scope of his or her duties and within the scope of his or her express or implied authority directed against a publicly known political organisation or liberation movement engaged in a political struggle against the State or a former state or against any members or supporters of such organisation or movement, and which was committed bona fide with the objective of countering or otherwise resisting the said struggle;
>
> (c) any employee ...;
>
> (d) any employee ...;
>
> (e) any person ...;
>
> (f) any person ...;
>
> (g) any person ..."

The Second, Third and Fourth Applicants clearly fall within the category of persons referred to in section 20 (2) (b).

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

The Third and Fourth Applicants became involved in the killing of the deceased when they were instructed to provide logistical assistance to the Second Applicant by their commander, Colonel De Kock. In the light of such directives emanating from a senior officer, both assumed that proper approval had been secured for the intended operation and hence their participation as members of the Vlakplaas Unit. In the case of the Fourth Applicant, such bona fide belief was fortified by a visit to Brigadier Van Rensburg, who had wished him luck on his trip to participate in the operation.

They were both employees of the State and members of the South African Police Services, attached to a unit attending to the security of the country. They both had express authority to act within the course and scope of their duties as such against, as they believed, supporters and intended members of liberation movements engaged in a political struggle against the State and who were about to divulge sensitive information to the self same movement.

Each had the bona fide belief that they were acting in the interests of the State and were countering and resisting an attack(s) on the government of the day. The explanation and motivation provided to both were broad and scant. Even on their way to Port Elizabeth, they were merely advised about the broad reasons for the operation. Both accepted what they were told and relied thereon. Neither of them were furnished with any details which led to the conclusion that the deceased were such threats to the State that they had to be killed.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Viewed in the context that they were given instructions by Colonel De Kock (supplemented by Van Rensburg's good wishes), it is not too difficult to understand that they accepted that their superiors would have sanctioned the operation after having satisfied themselves (superiors) about the appropriateness thereof.

It is understandable therefore, that they did not bother themselves with the underlying details by which the decision to kill the deceased was arrived at.

Their conduct clearly demonstrates that they acted in terms of instructions and did not go further than that. Both did not know any of the deceased and clearly did not participate in the operation for personal gain. There is also no suggestion that either of them acted out of personal malice, ill-will or spite directed at any of the deceased. Given their positions and what they were told and understood, they believed that this operation was urgent and the only solution.

In the circumstances, it is clear that their applications comply with the requirements of the Act, that their specific roles were associated with a political objective and committed within the course of the conflicts as envisaged in section 20 (1) (b), read with section 20 (3) of the Act. We are satisfied that both have also made a full disclosure of all the relevant facts in so far as they were affected in this regard. Consequently, their applications for amnesty as applied for herein, must be granted.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

It is now necessary to deal with the application of the Second Applicant.

The Second Applicant was involved from the beginning of the series of events which culminated in the deaths of the deceased.

It seems that Van Rensburg, as ultimately conceded by the Second Applicant, had the power to veto any planned operation sanctioned by Brigadier Gilbert and/or the Second Applicant. This then acquired much importance in the leading of evidence and so much so that the dispute between De Kock and the Second Applicant as to what the latter told Van Rensburg was focused on for a substantial time during the hearing and in argument.

This is understandable because of the nature of the dispute with regard to this aspect. If the Second Applicant had told Van Rensburg, as testified to by De Kock, that the deceased were to be killed to prevent them from disclosing the common law crimes of fraud, then the deaths could not be considered to be politically motivated, as required by the Act and amnesty could not then be granted. The application would fail at that point and on that ground alone.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

If he did tell Van Rensburg, as he testified, that the planned killings were motivated by the necessity to protect the image of the government, the security network of agents, members of the force and their addresses then the operation would clearly fall within the definition of 'political motivation' and then further enquiry into the application would follow.

Colonel De Kock testified broadly on the secret operation of his unit.

He testified about the conversation between Van Rensburg and the Second Applicant in his presence. It is in this respect that there is a dispute between his evidence and that of the Second Applicant.

However, towards the end of his testimony, De Kock stated that the Second Applicant had lied about the motives for killing the deceased. It is not absolutely clear in what context he alleged that the Second Applicant had lied. It is possible that he referred to the evidence of the Second Applicant in this hearing or he could have been referring to the conversation between the Second Applicant and Van Rensburg.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

In this event, such a 'lie' would give rise to a number of interpretations on the import of his evidence.

It is too dangerous to speculate or even second guess De Kock's evidence in this regard. There are a number of other criticisms levelled at Colonel De Kock's evidence and in particular, reference was made to his emotional state and attitude towards his erstwhile superiors and his feeling that he had been betrayed by them. His evidence should therefore be approached with even greater care before accepting it and relying on it.

The argument that he might have a score to settle with certain people who were then his superiors and that, his evidence might therefore be tainted, does not hold water. There is no evidence to support this line of reasoning and is at best, speculative.

It is, however, not necessary to deal with all the other criticisms levelled against him because of the ultimate approach adopted towards his evidence.

In view of the uncertainty of the context in which he stated that the Second Applicant had lied, it would, without making any finding on his credibility, be safer to ignore the evidence of Colonel De Kock in determining the application of the Second Applicant. This approach would in any event satisfy the argument that his evidence was untrue and unreliable.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Having adopted that approach, the application will then have to be decided on the evidence of the Second Applicant and the other acceptable evidence in so far as it is relevant to his application.

The Second Applicant was the sole source of the relevant information and having provided the information to the authority upon which he relies in his application, it is imperative to examine his evidence as to the reasons for the ultimate decision to kill the deceased in order to establish whether section 20 of the Act has been satisfactorily complied with. Furthermore, other evidence, especially that of the other applicants cannot serve to support the Second Applicant's version since he was the source of the information they were given in this regard. Hence, on the fundamental information, he stands alone.

Section 20 (1) (a) seems to have been complied with, if it is to be interpreted as 'formalities' that had to be complied with. The subsection could not have been intended to refer to requirements of the Act, as there are so many requirements to be found in the Act, many of which would not be of any application in this type of application. e.g. procedures related to certain types of applications by victims of apartheid.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

It is subsections 20 (1) (b) and (c) which are of particular relevance in the application of the Second Applicant.

It is necessary to deal with the evidence of the Second Applicant. It must be pointed out that aspects such as demeanour do not play any role in assessing his evidence because of the possibility of his unsound mental state during the first part of his evidence in chief. It must be noted that there is no intention to create any precedent in this approach to his evidence.

Nonetheless, although he carries no onus to provide evidence himself, (such evidence can be received from another source), it so happens that the only person who had first hand information about the events and factors relied upon to arrive at the decision to kill the deceased, is the Second Applicant himself. It is against this backdrop that the success or otherwise of the application must be based.

In examining the evidence of the Second Applicant, there are a number of fundamental and material aspects which must be dealt with.

It must be pointed out that, at this stage, the scrutiny of his evidence is not directed at the wisdom and/or the merits of the decision to kill the deceased, but at whether section 20 (1) (c) of the Act has been complied with or not.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

The Second Applicant relied mostly on the authority of his superiors as the basis to explain the murders. In this regard he referred to his superiors viz Gilbert and Van Rensburg. While he relied on this authority, combined or otherwise, it is clear that he was the only source of the information which was relied upon to make this decision and to execute it. The others, particularly the Third and Fourth Applicants, relied on what they were told.

His evidence on the very authority he relies on is unsatisfactory. At first he maintained that it was the authority of Gilbert which was irreversible and upon which he relied. Yet, later in his evidence, he conceded that if Van Rensburg was not satisfied with the reasons for the planned murders, he was able to give instructions that the plans, though authorized by Gilbert, be aborted. The Second Applicant would then have gone back to Gilbert to deal with the issue further. However, he stated that Van Rensburg in fact approved of the proposed killings.

As his evidence proceeded, it became apparent that he began to rely more and more on the hierarchy and rank of his superiors in making the decision to kill the deceased. For example, initially he stated that he fed the information to Gilbert and that they discussed the situation with one another. It is clear that the Second Applicant did not play an insignificant role in the decision making process and indeed rejected certain less drastic suggestions made by Gilbert. At some stage in his evidence he said that they took the decision together. Yet, later in his evidence he placed such responsibility squarely on the shoulders of Gilbert. While technically this is correct, he clearly tried to minimise his role in the decision towards the latter part of his evidence.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

This raises doubt as to what he disclosed to Gilbert and to Van Rensburg for that matter, in order for them to grant authority for the murders.

This in turn raises questions as to what his actual role in the developments really was.

During his evidence it seems that divulging information of Security Police complicity in the Cradock Four incident played a role in the decision making process. As far as the Second Applicant is concerned, and on his own evidence, this did not play a role, as the decision to kill the deceased had already been made by the time mention of the Cradock Four was made.

He furthermore explained that he used the opportunity of the alleged presence of a trained ANC member to lure the deceased into the motor vehicle which was subsequently blown up. Yet, especially in the light of his position as Head of Intelligence, he did not follow up on what had happened to this ANC member after the incident. He testified that he mentioned it to another section for steps to be taken in that regard. However, he did not find out what transpired in that regard thereafter, and if this person was found and arrested, whether anything important was disclosed during any interrogation. This raises serious doubt as to whether this person, and indeed the circumstances of his presence, ever existed. The Second Applicant's inability to explain why he did not follow this issue to its logical conclusion exacerbates the situation.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

When he went to collect his travel documents prior to going to Pretoria, Gilbert told him about the threat by some of the deceased to divulge information regarding offences committed by members of the Port Elizabeth Security Police if charges regarding fraud were not withdrawn or in some way made to disappear. It is strange that Gilbert seemed to mention this almost by chance when the Second Applicant collected his air-ticket. It is to be expected that the threat of such disclosures, which would have had a similar effect of passing on information to the ANC, would specifically and pointedly have been reported to the Second Applicant who was personally dealing with the situation and indeed the future of this group of would-be turn-coats. Such information would be cardinal to the material considerations at the time.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

In the circumstances, the almost casual allusion to the fraud, as referred to by the Second Applicant, is illogical and far fetched. Moreover, the Second Applicant's virtual disinterest in it is similarly unbelievable and indeed improbable.

It is also significant that he did not provide details of the information he obtained through the scheme of intercepting mail allegedly belonging to Warrant Officer Mgoduka.

He alleged that such information gleaned from the intercepted mail played an important role in assessing the situation and in arriving at the conclusion that at least Warrant Officer Mgoduka was in the process or about to cross over to the ANC. Such details would in all probability have been unusual and not experienced on an everyday basis. This operation of eavesdropping on and intercepting mail of colleagues was indeed, by all accounts very unusual in itself. The details of who did the interception, when it was done and why no action was taken to counter the plans contained in the correspondence, cannot be easily forgotten and the failure to testify in regard thereto is significant. Indeed, the alleged information provided sufficient grounds to arrest

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Warrant Officer Mgoduka and possibly charge him in terms of the security laws. The failure to do so remains unexplained.

The information the Second Applicant alleges that he had, was markedly different to that which he said pertained to Warrant Officer Mgoduka and that which he stated pertained to the rest. The information that he testified to in relation to the rest was meagre to say the least. This raises the question as to whether he really had any or sufficient information to base a decision on or, more importantly, whether the situation he attributed to them indeed existed at all.

He testified that he thought that one or some if not all of the deceased were leaking information to the ANC. He explained that he discovered that the agent he sent out of the country after being briefed in the presence of all four of the deceased, had been arrested by the ANC. He concluded that it had to be one or more of the deceased who had betrayed the agent to the ANC. At the time he had no other information against any of the deceased. When he went to Gilbert, he intended to obtain formal authority from his superior to kill all the deceased. His intention to kill them was clearly based on suspicion and indeed could not, in the circumstances, have been directed at a specific person or persons. It is difficult to believe that such drastic conduct would be resorted to on such flimsy grounds. This begs the question as to what information, if anything at all, remotely suggested that any of them had, at the time, links with the ANC, let alone that any of them had intentions to divulge sensitive information and in doing so, cross to the ANC, so as to justify killing them.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

As it turns out, probably in an attempt to justify the ultimate decision to murder, he testified that the courier of the letter elicited from an ANC member had been betrayed and as a result, had been killed.

When it was pointed out to him that this could not be so, he stated that the person who had been killed was one Toto Mbali. From the context of his initial evidence, it is clear that the courier was not Toto Mbali. The Second Applicant did not explain this contradiction. It is furthermore noteworthy that the name of Toto Mbali did not feature prior to that, either in his testimony or his written submission. In any event he gave no detail as to the role Toto Mbali or his alleged killing played in the killing of the four deceased germane to this application.

In regard to the evidence of the Second Applicant, the aforementioned are, inter alia, material issues which give rise to concern. Each on its own present sufficient disquiet so as to cast doubt on the veracity of his evidence. Most of the issues defy logic, while others are either improbable or are self-contradictory. What is more, their importance is fortified by the fact that each is alleged to have played a significant role in arriving at the conclusion that all the deceased were in contact with the ANC and consequently, because they were each a risk, had to be murdered.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

The globular effect of these criticisms enhance the reservations in respect of his evidence, in particular, those relating to the reasons for these murders. On the conspectus of the relevant evidence, it is still not clear what was taken into consideration in deciding to murder the deceased either as a suggested solution or in terms of granting authority to commit these murders.

In the circumstances it is extremely doubtful as to whether the Second Applicant has fully disclosed all the relevant facts pertaining to why and how the decision to kill all the deceased was arrived at. From the evidence, it cannot be said that the Act has been sufficiently complied with in this regard.

In the circumstances therefore, the Second Applicant has not, even substantially, complied with section 20 (1) (c). We are not satisfied that the Second Applicant has substantially made full disclosure in regard to this application.

Furthermore, even if the version of the Second Applicant were to have been regarded as a full disclosure, which we do not find, there is also another aspect in this application that needs to be dealt with. In considering section 20 (1) (b), the committee must have regard to section 20 (3) of the Act.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Section 20 (3) reads as follows:-

"Whether a particular act, omission or offence contemplated in subsection (2) is an act associated with a political objective, shall be decided with reference to the following criteria:

(a) the motive of the person who committed the act, omission or offence;

(b) the context in which the act, omission or offence took place, and in particular whether the act, omission or offence was committed in the course of or as part of a political uprising, disturbance or event, or in reaction thereto;

(c) the legal and factual nature of the act, omission or offence, including the gravity of the act, omission or offence;

(d) the object or objective of the act, omission or offence, and in particular whether the act, omission or offence was primarily directed at a political opponent or State property or personnel or against private property or individuals;

(e) whether the act, omission or offence was committed in the execution of an order of, or on behalf of, or with the approval of, the organisation, institution, liberation movement or body of which the person who committed the act was a member, an agent or a supporter; and

(f) the relationship between the act, omission or offence and the political objective pursued, and in particular the directness and proximity of the relationship and the proportionality of the act, omission or offence to the objectively pursued, but does not include any act, omission or offence committed by any person referred to in subsection (2) who acted –

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

(i) for personal gain: Provided that an act, omission or offence by any person who acted and received money or anything of value as an informer of the State or a former state, political organisation or liberation movement, shall not be excluded only on the grounds of that person having received money or anything of value for his or her information; or

(ii) out of personal malice, ill-will or spite, directed against the victim of the acts committed."

Section 20 (3) of the Act directs that in establishing whether section 20 (1) (b) has been complied with, reference to the criteria listed therein must be had. While it has been argued that this list of criteria is an exhaustive one, the approach of the amnesty committee in the form of the panels which presided in similar hearings always regarded the list as not exhaustive. There does not seem to be any reason to adopt any other approach in this hearing.

In any event, the facts of this application do not seem to require consideration of criteria which fall outside the list. Indeed none were suggested. Of importance in this list, are inter alia, subsections (c) and (f).

The gravity of the acts in question is most important because the deceased were killed. Not much importance can be placed on the manner in which they were killed as this was intended to be made to look like the work of the ANC. However, in the context of the situation as described by the Second Applicant, the gravity of his actions is not insignificant.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

According to the Second Applicant, the political objective sought to be achieved by his actions, was to protect his network of operation within the area of his duties as Head of the Intelligence Section of the Security Police in Port Elizabeth. He suspected all of the deceased of having contact, in varying degrees, with the ANC over the previous approximately five to six months.

At the time, there were various pieces of legislation available to the Security Forces of the country to use in order to curtail or deal with persons considered a threat to the safety of the citizens of the country, the government of the time and the erstwhile ruling party.

Specifically, the Internal Security Act No. 74 of 1982 was in operation at the material time. That Act contained clear provisions for the arrest and/or detention of persons suspected of being a threat to the Internal Security of South Africa.

Indeed, history records that many people were arrested and detained for long periods of time in terms of that Act and without a hearing and/or trial. The provisions also included detention designed to obtain information to the satisfaction of the interrogator. This was regularly used by the Security Forces of the time.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Then there was also the common law crime of treason available and with which people were charged from time to time.

In applying these criteria to the version of the Second Applicant, the conduct of the applicant must be measured in terms of the directness and proximity of his conduct in relation to what was sought to be achieved thereby and indeed the proportionality of the conduct in relation to what was being sought to be achieved, so as to place his conduct into proper perspective and context in order to determine whether the act, omission or offence in question falls within the provisions of the Act.

Second Applicant stated that in discussing the options with his superior, Gilbert, all the alternatives, including less drastic actions, were considered. These were discussed between them and killing the deceased was regarded as the only option in the circumstances. Save for stating that other lesser options were not appropriate, he did not venture any explanation as to why those options were regarded as inappropriate. The argument that he might have been wrong in making the ultimate choice raises the question of whether, in considering notions such as proportionality, the conduct in question must be measured objectively or subjectively.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

In applying the directives of the Act, it is clear from section 20 (3) that the conduct under scrutiny must have been proportionate to the purpose of the objective of the conduct. This must be measured objectively. In testing the severity and deleterious effects of the conduct, the standards set by society in general in determining the justification must be used as the social barometer to do so. It is this social yardstick that places the exercise within the boundaries of objectivity.

Placed within an objective context, the killing of the deceased must be measured against the interests sought to be protected, which must of necessity fall within the political objective pursued. In examining the proportionality between the consequences of the Second Applicant's conduct and the political objective sought to be achieved, it is clear that the conduct cannot be justified if the purpose it was intended to serve was either non-existent or objectively of insufficient importance or if it would clearly not achieve its intended purpose.

The more severe the deleterious consequences of the conduct, the more important the achievement of the objective must be if the conduct is to be objectively regarded as reasonable and justified in the circumstances.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

See : R v Oakes [1986] 1 SLR 103 – CANADA

There must also be proportionality between the conduct and the intended beneficial consequences of that conduct.

The conduct must be proportionate to the ultimate benefit sought.

See : Dagnenais v Canadian Broadcasting Corporation [1994] 3 SLR 835 - CANADA

While these decisions serve to assist in gaining insight into the objective approach required to deal with this aspect of proportionality, the enquiry must be put into the South African context.

The benefit sought by the Second Applicant in this case was the protection of the identities and addresses of his colleagues and security police agents and hence the government of the day and its image.

The victim in the Johnson application, Mrs Hanabe, was a school principal and a member of the Klipplaat Municipal Council. During

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

1991, the local ANC Youth League, of which Johnson, the applicant in that matter, was an executive member, decided to pressurise the councillors to resign from council in order to render that tier of government ineffective. The strategy seemed to be very important to the youth league and its members took it very seriously. Mrs Hanabe refused to do so and after her house was set on fire, she fled to Uitenhage.

In February 1991, the Executive Committee of the local ANC Youth League discussed the matter and decided that Mrs Hanabe should be killed. Later that month, Johnson and some of his fellow members followed Mrs Hanabe to church and waited for her. When she came out, Johnson shot at her in an attempt to kill her in pursuance of the decision. She did not die but sustained serious injuries as a result of which she was rendered disabled. Accepting that the campaign to end the system of apartheid entailed, inter alia, strategies such as non-collaboration with such a system, the amnesty committee accepted that the strategy fell within and complied with the provisions of the Act in so far as it was based on political considerations and pursued with a political objective.

However, it reasoned that in considering section 20 (1) it had to refer to section 20 (3) of the Act. It reasoned further that the aim to render to municipality ineffective had in any event been achieved when Mr

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Hanabe fled Klipplaat. The political objective had therefore been achieved in that regard. It followed therefore, that the subsequent attempt to kill her was not proportional to achieving what it sought to achieve because despite her not resigning, she had been rendered ineffectual in that regard. The attempt to kill Mrs Hanabe was consequently found not to be proportional vis-à-vis the objective so pursued, and as a result the offence for which amnesty was applied for was not an act associated with a political objective. The application was thus refused.

The reasoning in the decision of Ntsikelelo Don Johnson, clearly illustrates the approach adopted in the Second Applicant's present application. Reference to this decision is made for illustrative purposes only, and nothing else.

It has been argued in regard to proportionality, that other policemen were granted amnesty for similar crimes and therefore the Second Applicant should benefit in the same way. Without wanting to embark on a debate on this aspect and bearing in mind that the process is not based on precedent, it is necessary to point out that this application is unique.

The murders of members of liberation movement by members of the State Security Staff was based on the necessity to avoid international focus and political embarrassment which would arise during such political trials of members of liberation movement. It therefore became a norm for the Security Forces to resort to covert means to deal with certain members of liberation movements in such a manner in order to avoid unwanted focus.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Charging members of the Security Forces would attract far less international (and indeed local sympathy) and attention that would be the case when charging members of liberation movements. Within this context, the murdering of members of the Security Force would therefore be far less objectionable than would be the case in the killing of members of liberation movement. (It must however be emphasised that in neither event are the murders condoned). It would consequently attract far less attention.

Furthermore, in order to be accepted into the ranks of the ANC, it is common knowledge that the deceased would have had to prove their bona fides and prove their loyalty to the organisation. It is also improbable that after five months of communication with the ANC, the deceased would not have divulged the key information which the Second Applicant sought to protect. In the circumstances it is probable that the information had already been communicated to the ANC. There was therefore nothing to protect and the deaths of the deceased would not, in the circumstances, have served any political objective as envisaged by the Act.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

The Second Applicant's application must therefore fail on this ground also.

The failure of a family member of any of the deceased to testify and deny that any of the deceased were connected to the ANC, was raised as a matter which should enhance the application of the Second Applicant. It does not follow that the failure of any of the deceased's family members to testify would have assisted the committee any way. None of them were privy to the planning or commission of the murders. Neither does it follow that such failure would attract any inference which dilutes their opposition to the application. The fact of the matter is that this process is conducted under the umbrella of a commission, the decision (of which) must be based on the evidence placed before it. Consequently the absence of evidence on behalf of the families of the deceased does not enhance the application of the Second Applicant.

We have therefore not been satisfied that the Second Applicant has complied with Section 20 (1) of the Act.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

In the circumstances, the Second Applicant's application falls to be dismissed.

In the result,

1. Second Applicant's application for amnesty is refused;
2. Third Applicant's application for amnesty is granted;
3. Fourth Applicant's application for amnesty is granted;
4. In the light of the next of kin of the deceased already having been declared victims for the purposes of the Act and were referred to the Committee on Reparation and Rehabilitation for consideration in terms of section 26 of the Act, it is not necessary to deal with their status in this regard again.

Dated at _____ on this _____ day of _____ 2005

_____
R PILLAY
JUDGE OF THE HIGH COURT

_____
N J MOTATA
JUDGE OF THE HIGH COURT

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

E.

II.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

BEFORE THE SPECIAL AMNESTY COMMITTEE OF THE TRUTH AND RECONCILIATION COMMISSION

(HELD AT PORT ELIZABETH)

In the applications of:

NICOLAAS JACOBUS JANSE VAN RENSBURG	FIRST APPLICANT
GIDEON JOHANNES NIEUWOUDT	SECOND APPLICANT
WYBRAND ANDREAS LODEWICUS DU TOIT	THIRD APPLICANT
MARTHINUS DAVID RAS	FOURTH APPLICANT

In re:

THE MOTHERWELL INCIDENT ON 14 December 1989

MINORITY DECISION

I have read the decision of Pillay and Motata JJ.

I do not agree with the decision in so far as it concerns the refusal of amnesty in the application of the Second Applicant, Gideon Johannes Nieuwoudt. My reasons for disagreeing are set out below.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

The Second Applicant's application for amnesty was refused by Pillay and Motata JJ on the grounds: (a) that they "were not satisfied that the Second Applicant has substantially made full disclosure in regard to his application" and (b) that even if the version of the Second Applicant were to be regarded as a full disclosure "the deaths of the deceased would not in the circumstances, have served any political objective as envisaged by the Act."

The facts relating to the incident and the evidence presented at the hearing have been adequately summarised in the majority decision. I shall, however, in dealing with Second Applicant's application highlight some differences in my approach to and my understanding and assessment of his evidence.

Furthermore, I generally agree with the majority's assessment of the evidence tendered by the other applicants and by witnesses who testified at the hearing.

In so far as the Second Applicant's application is concerned, it is common cause that he has complied with all the formal requirements of the Act.

I also agree that the Second Applicant falls within the category of persons referred to in section 22(2)(b) of the Act. He was an employee of the state and a member of the South African Police Services attached to a unit attending to the security of the country. He had express authority to act within the course and scope of his duties as such, against, as he believed, supporters and intended members of a liberation movement engaged in a political struggle against the State and who were about to disclose sensitive information to that organisation. He had the bona fide belief that he was acting in the interest of the state with the objective of countering or resisting the said struggle.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Although the Second Applicant knew all the deceased and most probably their families well, there was no evidence or even a suggestion that he acted out of personal malice, ill-will or spite directed at the deceased. Like the applicants, Du Toit and Ras, he acted upon the orders of a superior, in his case, Brigadier Gilbert, and to some extent Van Rensburg, the latter having given the order in regard to the logistical support to be rendered to Second Applicant to effect the killings.

Admittedly, the Second Applicant's position differs from that of the other two applicants in that he had set in motion a series of discussions and events when he first reported to Gilbert his suspicions in regard to the deceased. He also participated in discussions, even pressing for a decision that the suspects should be eliminated. However, he did not have any independent decision-making authority, nor did he have the authority to order the killing of the deceased. Indeed, he obeyed the instructions of his superior when he was told to first monitor the activities of the deceased and later to kill them. The fact that he was a more than willing participant in the execution of the order that the deceased be killed does not make him the author of the ultimate decision.

The Second Applicant did not deny that other factors, such as the threat of the disclosure of the Goniwe murders, had entered into the picture at the time that Gilbert ordered him to go to Pretoria. At this stage, the names of the perpetrators of the Goniwe incident were not within his knowledge. All he knew was that the threat of prosecution for fraud had caused the deceased or at least two of the deceased to threaten that they would disclose other misdeeds ("wandade") of the

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Security Police to the ANC. The issue of the fraud, according to the Second Applicant, was not the reason for the decision to kill because the decision that they should be eliminated had already been taken. It was, as he put it "the catalyst" for the order issued by Gilbert. It is perhaps understandable that the Second Applicant was not particularly perturbed by the threat of disclosure of the Goniwe incident because a decision had already been taken to kill them and he had no personal interest in the Goniwe matter. Van Rensburg and De Kock would have been the persons to feel perturbed since they had participated in the murder of Goniwe and this probably account for their willingness to have readily lent logistical support in the killings.

Admittedly, the Second Applicant's evidence is not without any difficulties and there were certain inconsistencies as well as certain instances where his evidence differed from that of the other applicants. Thus, for example, Du Toit was under the impression that the number of persons to be killed was three while Ras testified that he did not know the exact number. Taking into account the time period that has lapsed between the date of the incident and the hearing, as well as the agitated mental state of the Second Applicant, which in my view was clearly evident during the hearing, it cannot be said that these differences and inconsistencies render the Second Applicant's evidence so flawed that it justifies a finding that he had not made a full disclosure of all relevant facts.

The only real challenge to the Second Applicant's evidence was the evidence of De Kock which was tendered to show that the deceased were killed as a result of their participation in acts of fraud. As stated in the majority decision, De Kock's evidence should be approached with great care and I fully agree "that it is safer to ignore the evidence of De Kock in determining the application of the Second Applicant". I therefore accept Second Applicant's testimony that the fraud issue arose after the decision to kill had been taken.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

There is one common thread that runs through the evidence placed before the Committee and that is that the prime reason for the killing of the deceased was the fact that they were about to defect to the ANC. Especially Ras, the Fourth Applicant, was emphatic in his evidence that he had been told by both De Kock and Second Applicant that the deceased were about to defect to the ANC. He added that Second Applicant, on their way to Port Elizabeth to carry out the order to kill the deceased, had also told him that they had already disclosed some information to the ANC. Having regard to the fact that the Fourth Applicant's application was prepared independently of that of the Second Applicant and that he was presented by a different lawyer, there is little reason to doubt the veracity of his evidence. His evidence in my opinion clearly militates against any conclusion that the Second Applicant's evidence on why the deceased were killed is not true or is a mere fabrication.

In regard to what De Kock told him the Third Applicant testified:

> "Mnr Kock (sic) het my meegedeel dat daar 'n probleem in die Oos Kaap was waar lede van die Mag betrokke was, wat onder andere betrokke was by koverte operasies en dat hulle, hierdie mense, by bedrog betrokke was en het hulle my dit eers later meegedeel Voorsitter die bedrog, maar dit is aan my genoem, maar hierdie mense het op die punt gestaan om oor te loop na die ANC met al die inligting waaroor hulle beskik het in terme van die inligting strukture van die Oos-Kaap."

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Although later in cross-examination Du Toit conceded that he was not sure who had said what to him, it is not without significance that he too, believed that the deceased were about to defect to the ANC.

I shall now deal more fully with some of the more detailed reasons for the refusal of amnesty to the Second Applicant on the ground of not having made a full disclosure of relevant facts, dealt with in the decision of Pillay and Motata JJ.

In the majority decision it is stated that: "[as] the evidence proceeded, it became apparent that he [Second Applicant] began to rely more and more on the hierarchy and rank of his superiors in making the decision to kill the deceased."

In my reading and assessment of the Second Applicant's evidence he never tried to steer away from the fact that the decision to kill was taken on the information supplied by him. He never changed his evidence that he regarded the elimination of the deceased as the only solution or that he was more than a willing participant in all the activities that finally led to the killing of the deceased. What he emphasised throughout his evidence was that he operated within a very strict hierarchy of powers and that he did not have any independent decision-making powers in regard to the killing of the deceased, neither was he competent to give an order that they be killed.

The picture that emerged of the Second Applicant, on his own evidence, was that of a ruthless security policeman, but one who would only have acted within the structures, strictures and hierarchy of powers that prevailed at that time. Had he not disclosed the fact that the decision-making powers lay with his superiors and that they had issued the final order, it could certainly have been construed as him not having made a full disclosure in order to protect his superiors. His uncertainty or even contradiction as to whether Van Rensburg could have reversed Gilbert's order cannot in my view be regarded as material. Only Gilbert and Van Rensburg, both dead now, could have clarified what transpired between them. It is of significance, however, that in his written application Van Rensburg application states that the order was given by Gilbert and approved by a member or members at Head Office.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

The fact that the Second Applicant did not follow up on what became of the trained ANC member whose presence he had used to lure the deceased into the vehicle in which they were killed certainly presents a difficulty in regard to credibility and he was extensively questioned on this. His testimony that his instructions to the deceased in regard to the ANC cadre was just a ploy to get them into the vehicle and his explanation that the arrest of the ANC cadre was a matter to be dealt with by the investigation unit who had been fully appraised of his presence do not make his evidence in this regard so improbable as to reject it as false. He testified that the presence of the suspected cadre was generally known amongst the security police and that "die swart lede reeds aan diens geplaas was om patrollies uit te voer." Had his instructions to the four deceased been intended to be carried out by him, the inference sought to be drawn in the majority decision would have been a fair one.

I also find myself in disagreement with the statement in the majority decision that the Second Applicant did not provide details of the information he obtained through the scheme of intercepting mail. There was clear evidence by the Second Applicant of an encoded letter from the deceased Mgoduka addressed to one Mr Isaac (identified by the Second Applicant as Roje Skenyana, a commanding officer of the ANC in Lesotho) mentioning a forthcoming "wedding". This letter was later decoded by him (Second Applicant). He also testified where letters came from and from whom.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

There is no onus on the victims to give evidence at a hearing. However, in a matter such as this, one would have expected the families of the deceased to have assisted the Committee were they able to do so. Surely, if the families truly believed that the deceased had no contact with the ANC, they must have had some factual basis for this belief which could have assisted the Committee. Where the loyalties of the deceased lay, especially in the politically charged atmosphere at the time of the incident, must surely have been within the knowledge of their immediate family members who also had to suffer the consequences in their own communities as a result of their husbands' activities as members of the Security Branch.

The fact that no member/s of the families testified at the hearing, for example, precluded Counsel for the Second Applicant perhaps to have obtained some clarification on the question as to how it came about that it was stated by Counsel for the families at the inquest proceedings regarding their death, that the reason for the killing of the deceased was their contact with the ANC. The argument put forward by Counsel for the Families that it would have been embarrassing for the families to testify at the hearing as a result of the deceased's involvement with the security forces of the time is not convincing

The issue of proportionality was also raised.

In this respect too, I do not agree with my fellow committee members. Even if it were to be accepted that Second Applicant, Nieuwoudt, was the co-author of the actual decision to kill the deceased, the issue of proportionality should not be allowed to stand in the way of granting him amnesty. I do not agree with the argument that as a result of the five months that had lapsed between the time that the deceased were first suspected of leaking information to the ANC and their killing, "the deceased would not have divulged the key information which the Second Applicant sought to protect". Admittedly some information may have slipped through the net, but, according to the Second Applicant, they were at all times under surveillance, their mail was being monitored and security measures been tightened.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Proportionality was always a difficult issue to deal with in amnesty applications and although the precedent system does not apply in amnesty applications, a committee should at least strive towards some degree of consistency in applying the various provisions of the Act. Amnesty was granted in a number of applications where persons who were only suspected of having been collaborators of the Apartheid Regime were necklaced in a most brutal way. In the case of the murder of Amy Biehl, who was a foreigner and an innocent outsider, and in the case of the St James Massacre, innocent churchgoers were killed. In all these case the issue of proportionality did not prevent amnesty being granted.

It is true that on Second Applicant's own evidence the possibility of transferring the deceased and other steps were mentioned and discussed when he first reported the situation around the deceased to Gilbert. However, the situation had become more problematical as time progressed. It must also be borne in mind that at this time the leaking of information to the liberation movements had become a real threat to the Government of the day as a result of the disclosures made by Dirk Coetzee and other former security policemen. Surely, proportionality must be judged within the context of prevailing thought and circumstances at the time.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Furthermore, if proportionality were to be an obstacle in the application of Second Applicant it is hard to understand how amnesty could have been granted in any of the applications of security policemen. In all those instances, other options available in terms of the law were also available.

In the result, I am of the opinion that amnesty should also be granted to the Second Applicant, Gideon Johannes Nieuwoudt, for the murder of the deceased in Motherwell on 14 December 1989.

F J Bosman
Member of the Special Amnesty Committee

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

F.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA
(CAPE OF GOOD HOPE PROVINCIAL DIVISION)

CASE NO: 3626/98
3859/98
3729/98

Before the Honourable Mr Justice Conradie
Before the Honourable Mr Justice Foxcroft
CAPE TOWN: Friday 8th May 1998

In the matter between:

THE NATIONAL PARTY OF SOUTH AFRICA	1st APPLICANT
JAMES MARREN SIMPSON	2nd APPLICANT
AND
THE CHAIRPERSON, COMMITTEE ON AMNESTY OF THE TRUTH AND RECONCILIATION COMMISSION	1st RESPONDENT
THE TRUTH AND RECONCILIATION COMMISSION	2nd RESPONDENT
JANUARY BOY MASILELA	3rd RESPONDENT
DUMISANI HENRY MAKHAYE	4th RESPONDENT
LORD WILFRED HENDRICK MATSANE	5th RESPONDENT
COLIN CECIL COLEMAN	6th RESPONDENT
CHARLES NQAKULA	7th RESPONDENT
BARRY PHILIP GILDER	8th RESPONDENT
ABDULAH MOHAMED OMAR	9th RESPONDENT
BASIL KENYON DUMISANI MAFU	10th RESPONDENT
MONGANE WALLY SEROTE	11th RESPONDENT
BALEKA MMAKOTA MBETE-KGOSITSILE	12th RESPONDENT
PETER RAMOSHOANE MOKABA	13th RESPONDENT
NOSIVIWE NOLUTHANDO MAPISA	14th RESPONDENT
THABO MVUYELWA MBEKI	15th RESPONDENT
SATHY ANDRANATH R. MAHARAJ	16th RESPONDENT
JACOB GEDLEYIHLEKISA ZUMA	17th RESPONDENT
JOHN KGOANA NKADIMENG	18th RESPONDENT
P.R.F. MDLULI-SEDIBE	19th RESPONDENT

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

LAMBERT LEHLOHONOLO MOLOI	20th RESPONDENT
BILLY LESEDI MASETLHA	21st RESPONDENT
RUTH SEGOMOTSI MOMPATI	22nd RESPONDENT
JACOB SELLO SELEBI	23rd RESPONDENT
ZWELEDINGA PALLO JORDAN	24th RESPONDENT
GARTH RICHARD STRACHAN	25th RESPONDENT
ESSOP GOOLAM PAHAD	26th RESPONDENT
NAKEDI MATHEWS PHOSA	27th RESPONDENT
PRAVIN JAMNADAS GORDHAN	28th RESPONDENT
SIPHO SIDNEY MAKANA	29th RESPONDENT
ALFRED NZO	30th RESPONDENT
JOE JOHANNES MODISE	31st RESPONDENT
ANDREW MANDLA LEKOTO MASONDO	32nd RESPONDENT
LINCOLN VUMILE NGCULU	33rd RESPONDENT
SNUKI JOSEPH ZIKALALA	34th RESPONDENT
KEITH MATILA MOKOAPE	35th RESPONDENT
JOSEPH MBUKU NHLANHLA	36th RESPONDENT
BIKI SAMUEL VICTOR MINYUKU	37th RESPONDENT
MTIKENI PATRICK SIBANDE	38th RESPONDENT
JOHANNES MUDIMU	39th RESPONDENT

Having heard Counsel for the APPLICANTS and having read the documents filed of record;

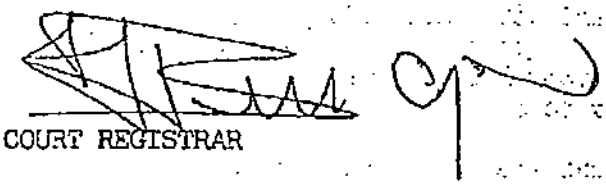
IT IS ORDERED THAT:

1. In Case No 3626/98, the decisions made by the Committee on Amnesty (First Respondent) at Cape Town on 28 November 1997, to grant amnesty to the Third to Thirty-Ninth Respondents under the provisions of the Promotion of National Unity and Reconciliation Act, 34 of 1995, are reviewed and set aside.

2. The Committee of Amnesty is to consider afresh the applications for amnesty of the Third to Thirty-Ninth Respondents, including the issue of whether such applications properly comply with the relevant requirements of the Promotion of National Unity and Reconciliation Act. 34 of 1995.

../2

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009



3. In consolidation application, Second Respondent in Case No 3626/98 (The Truth and Reconciliation Commission) is ordered to pay to Applicants in Case No 3626/98 the costs of one counsel taxed at the senior rate.

4. In the main application under Case No 3626/98, Second Respondent (the 'TRC') is ordered to pay to the applicants in that application their costs on an unopposed footing which are to include the costs of two counsel and the costs of today.

5. In the application for substituted service (Case No 3859/98) the Second Respondent ('TRC') is ordered to pay to Applicants (the National Party and Mr Jmaes Warren Simpson) 50% of their costs which are to include the costs of two counsel.

6. In regard to the intervention application (brought under Case No 3729/98) the Truth and Reconciliation Commission is to pay the wasted costs of the National Party and Mr James Warren Simpson on the footing that the costs of two counsel are allowed.

BY ORDER OF THE COURT

COURT REGISTRAR

Haarhoff Fourie & Butler per: Willem Lodewikus Fourie
9th Floor Room 926
Groote Kerk Building
23 Parliament Street
CAPE TOWN
8000

/mg

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

G.

NPA decides not to re-charge Wouter Basson

The National Prosecuting Authority of SA (NPA) has concluded that a fresh prosecution of Dr. Wouter Basson on the charges originally quashed by the Pretoria High Court is in law not permissible.

This follows the NPA's thorough consideration of the judgment by the Constitutional Court passed several weeks ago, and all the relevant principles relating to the doctrine of double jeopardy.

Dr. Basson was originally prosecuted in the Pretoria High Court on charges ranging from conspiracies to assassinate members of the liberation movements, misappropriation of State funds and dealing in drugs.

The trial court quashed charges relating to conspiracies to murder persons outside the borders of the Republic on the basis that the South African courts lacked jurisdiction to try such offences. The trial court later granted the accused discharge on other charges and ultimately acquitted him on the remainder of the charges.

The State sought to appeal to the Supreme Court of Appeal on legal grounds. The trial Court only granted the State leave to appeal on limited and conditional grounds. The State petitioned the Chief Justice in respect of the other grounds where leave to appeal was refused.

The Supreme Court of Appeal found that the State was only entitled to appeal on grounds of law and in that regard, was bound further by its earlier ruling. The Court found that all the grounds relied on by the State were factual and consequently, no appeal could result therefrom, even if such findings were incorrect. The Court also implied that the State had no right to a fair trial and that the Constitution protected only the rights of an accused. Consequently, the State was denied leave to appeal.

The NPA took the decision of the SCA to the Constitutional Court. The appeal was based on three grounds, namely:

* Bias on the part of the Trial Court
* The exclusion of the bail record as evidence in the main trial; and
* The quashing of the conspiracy charges

At a preliminary hearing in November 2003, the Constitutional Court found that the State was entitled to the protection of the Constitution in the prosecution of the criminals and that the above grounds were in fact constitutional matters in respect of which the State could appeal.

The leave to appeal was argued in February 2005 and the judgment was handed down in September 2005. On the issue of bias the Constitutional Court found that although the State was entitled to appeal on this ground, it had failed to establish that the judge was in fact biased, although it accepted that the judge had made a number of incorrect findings in law and on facts and found that the version of the accused on the commercial charges was improbable. On the second issue, the Constitutional Court likewise found that the State was entitled to appeal against the exclusion of the bail record, but it failed to prove that the judge's ruling was incorrect. In respect of both these grounds, the appeal was dismissed.

On the third ground, the Constitutional Court found that both the Trial Court and the SCA had erred in finding that a South African Court could not try the conspiracy charges. It set aside the order quashing the charges and indicated that the State could now, at its discretion, re-institute these charges, provided that it could overcome the obstacle of double jeopardy. It decided that the issue of double jeopardy had to be adjudicated by the Trial Court if a fresh prosecution was instituted.

It is an intrinsic principle of South African law that an accused cannot be tried twice on the same offence or on substantially the same offence irrespective of whether he was convicted or acquitted in the first trial.

In this matter, the State had originally formulated six individual charges of conspiring to kill persons outside the boarders of the Republic as well as other charges relating to conspiracy to kill persons inside the boarders. The State also added an additional charge, namely count 63, which incorporated all the conspiracies which had been charged as individual counts, in essence therefore, count 63 was an exact duplication of the individuals counts.

The Trial Court quashed the individual counts relating to external conspiracies on the basis that it lacked jurisdiction to try them, but allowed the State to lead evidence on the self same charges for the purposes of count 63. In its final judgment on count 63, the Trial Court analyzed the evidence presented by the State on these charges, found that the evidence failed to established the guilt of the accused and acquitted him.

The NPA's view is that had the trial court been consistent, it would have refused to make a finding on the external conspiracies referred to in count 63 as it had earlier ruled that it lacked jurisdiction on such charges. The upshot of this is that Dr. Basson has in fact already been acquitted on the quashed charges.

Issued by Makhosini Nkosi, NPA Spokesman. Tel: 012 845 6760 or 082 824 2576. E-mail: media@npa.gov.za.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

H.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

G.P.-S. 12/01

LÊER • FILE No.

Z 20
(81/30381)

VOL.

81/30381

LÊER • FILE No.

ONDERWERP • SUBJECT

APPENDICE "B" HANDED IN BY

GENL. K'NOBEL

VERWYSING • REFERENCE	TYDPERK • PERIOD TOT • TO	BESKIKKING • DISPOSAL

KANTOOR • OFFICE

DEPARTEMENT • DEPARTMENT

LÊER • FILE No.

VOL.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

DECLASSIFIED
TOP SECRET

B

STAFF PAPER PREPARED FOR THE STEYN COMMISSION ON ALLEGED DANGEROUS ACTIVITIES OF SADF COMPONENTS

DECEMBER 1992

A van der Merwe
SANDF

DECLASSIFIED
TOP SECRET

General Knobel
Sanjen Genl.
Copy 5 of 5 Copies.

MF KENNEDY
GENERAL MANAGER
COUNTER-ESPIONAGE
25/2/93

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

DECLASSIFIED

STAFF PAPER PREPARED FOR THE STEYN COMMISSION ON ALLEGED DANGEROUS ACTIVITIES OF SADF COMPONENTS

INTRODUCTION

1. Background. Annexure A (attached) was compiled from various sources of information, and the document has already been handed to Lt-Gen Steyn. Based on the allegations contained in the document, the following has surfaced:

   a. Some members, contractual workers and co-workers of certain SADF components were involved. In some instances they are still involved in illegal and unauthorised activities that are detrimental to the safety, interests and welfare of the state.

   b. To a great extent some members of the senior command structure are trapped in the momentum of activities of the past, activities which are being subjected to prominent negative publicity at present. However, it cannot be ruled out that other members might be furthering an own agenda.

2. The conclusion reached after an all-inclusive examination of the information picture reflected in Annexure A, is that a revolutionary intervention will be required to eradicate all identified corrupt practices at once.

3. Instruction. Chief Director CI has instructed that the above information as well as other relevant information/intelligence be evaluated with a view to submit meaningful recommendations to the Steyn Commission.

4. Aspects that will affect the execution of the assignment

   a. Unverified information. The greater part of the information available is unverified allegations that need to be substantiated/refuted before proper evaluation is possible. However, indications and weight of allegations were of such a nature that the all-inclusive information picture, as reflected by the allegations, could serve as point of departure in the argument.

DECLASSIFIED

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

DECLASSIFIED
TOP SECRET

b. Period. The short period allowed for a very comprehensive assignment might have a negative effect on the quality and evaluation.

c. Manpower. The sensitive nature of the matter has required that only one person could handle the matter.

OBJECTIVE

5. The purpose of the document is to make recommendations for action in respect of alleged precarious activities of components/individuals in the SADF on the basis of an evaluation of available information.

AREA

6. The report is structured as follows:

a. Evaluation/summary of/comment on information of precarious activities as contained in Annexure A. Details appear in Annexure B.

b. Evaluation/summary of/comment on information of individuals mentioned in Annexure A and detailed in Annexure C.

c. Summary of other relevant information/intelligence at the disposal of Division Intelligence (SDCI) that has been submitted to the Steyn Commission, and of which particulars are contained in Annexure D, E and F.

d. List of general conclusions.

e. Comment on possible actions.

f. Recommendations.

EVALUATION/SUMMARY OF/COMMENT ON INFORMATION OF PRECARIOUS ACTIVITIES OF SADF COMPONENTS

7. Annexure A is a complete base document containing precarious activities of SADF

DECLASSIFIED
TOP SECRET

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

DECLASSIFIED

components, compiled from source reports. Further details of the events appear in Annexure B.

8. Essential aspects regarding the SADF components can be summarised as follows:

a. Directorate Reconnaissance (Special Forces)

i. It would appear that Project Pastoor had served as a peg for nearly all official operations/activities of Directorate Reconnaissance. In terms of the Project's objectives, it would appear that the Project had come into being in view of the conventional threat. However, the Project is still running. At the same time, it would appear that individuals are abusing Project Pastoor for activities not in line with Government policy, e.g. alleged weapons caches in Portugal for utilisation during an internal uprising, weapons caches in the RSA and Southern Africa, and clandestine transport of weapons by means of a modified aeroplane; alleged instruction to murder two Portuguese operators in detention; alleged training provided to resistance movements of other countries; alleged involvement in violence on the East Rand and alleged involvement in train murders in cooperation with Transnet's communications network.

ii. Even if the initial objective of Project Pastoor would have been kosher and would remain needful, it apparently developed and/or had been distorted to such a degree that even unauthorised and self-initiated actions of individuals are regarded as having been authorised by those concerned themselves.

iii. Conclusion. Project Pastoor and all other related projects/operations must be investigated in detail in terms of :

(1) Desirability to continue with the project in this point of time.

(2) Possible deviations from the original objective, with special reference to possible self-initiated actions under official pretext.

DECLASSIFIED

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

DECLASSIFIED

b. Allegation regarding DCC

i. Allegedly, especially members of the Terrorism Section are involved in destabilisation actions against the ANC on own initiative and in cooperation with Brig Ferdie Van Wyk of GS2, Col Mielie Prinsloo of Directorate Reconnaissance (Special Forces) and Col Eugene De Kock of the SAP. A specific group of persons is said to include individuals whose agenda includes the discrediting of the AN; instigation of violence; facilitation for the failure of negotiations with the Government, etc. Alternatively, previous approved projects/actions are continued in a self-perpetuating manner or extended on own initiative to maintain an official slant.

ii. A proper evaluation of alleged activities on the basis of a "miscalculation table" ("verrekeningblad ???") with a view to come to a meaningful conclusion, is not feasible without further investigations and knowledge of normal duties of those involved. Whether additional alleged activities have been officially sanctioned or not (including instructing PAC members to murder AN members in Transkei; involvement to overthrow Holomisa; the training and arming of IFP members and involvement in SAP Col Eugene De Kock's Askaris), they are not in line with the Government's political objectives. This could create a serious credibility problem for the SADF and the Government.

iii. Allegedly various DCC members are involved in corruption or criminal activities, which likewise might lead to serious embarrassment for the SADF and the Government. It would appear that individuals involved in the above agendas integrate them in such a way with activities of an official nature that not only court-related evidence is being hampered, but those concerned might also implicate the SADF as "partner" (which is not the case).

iv. Conclusions

(1) An incisive investigation of the mandate and objectives of Section Terrorism is required. Other official instructions to individuals (such as an alleged assignment to Col At Nel to render intelligence support for discrediting actions), as well as their activities in this regard also require incisive investigation.

DECLASSIFIED

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

DECLASSIFIED

(2) All allegations of corruption and criminal activities by members of DCC must be referred to the SAP or Directorate Provoos for investigation.

c. Army Intelligence (GS2)

i. Allegations mainly pertains to BEVKOM's involvement in discrediting campaigns against the ANC and a possible misrepresentation by the Bevkom component of the nature and extent of the threat in reports compiled by Brig Van Wyk. Should this be the case (which an evaluation of his reports might prove), it would indicate that Brig Van Wyk has his own agenda and that he uses Bevkom's existing mandate (whatever it is), for that purpose.

ii. Once again it would appear that authorised and official matters have been integrated with self-initiated objectives that high-hierarchy decision-makers had lost track of the initial objectives and real mandate. However, an investigation is required to confirm or refute these conclusions.

iii. Other alleged GS2 activities focuses on the allegation of intelligence support to VR's pseudo-capability in actions against the internal structures of the ANC and the PAC. These operations, whether they have been authorised or not, are also not in line with the Government's current political policy.

iv. It is also being alleged that Lt-Genl Miring gave instruction that Directorate Reconnaissance should not collect information on the right wing or on right-wing organisations, and that he wants to be informed of who stands where in Directorate Reconnaissance. In this regard Lt-Gen Miring's instruction would probably be in line with particular contingency planning. Directorate Reconnaissance plays an important role in this matter, and the conclusion arrived at is that Lt-Gen Miring wanted to make sure what the position was with regard to the authority (mandate) for the utilisation of power. This conclusion also corresponds with other information that Lt-Gen Miring is an avowed realist concerning reform initiatives in the RSA, as well as a supporter of these initiatives. Furthermore, one should guard against the wrong interpretation of his remark concerning the execution of a possible coup, should it be necessary. The remark was probably intended to refer to

DECLASSIFIED

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

DECLASSIFIED
TOP SECRET

official emergency action in case of an attempted coup d'etat from either the left or the right wing.

v. Conclusion

(1) All aspects of Bevkom's mandate and instruction must be subjected to incisive investigation, and their desirability or not must be deliberated in view of the Government's political policy.

(2) Monthly reports and motivations for Bevkom's activities must be investigated to determine whether they do not serve as basis to obtain official approval for a self-initiated programme.

d. 7 Med Bn Gp

i. The core aspects in respect of alleged activities of 7 Med Bn Gp centre on the privatisation of the chemical and biological warfare programme. The fact that the programme is still in the process of privatisation allegedly involves great risks for the SADF and the Government.

ii. Furthermore, information pertaining to activities of Brig (Dr) Wouter Basson in respect of an alleged chemical attack on Frelimo soldiers in Mozambique, an alleged poison disrepute action against the ANC, alleged execution of SADF elimination instructions and that he lives beyond the means linked to his rank.

iii. If these allegations are true, it is unlikely that these actions have been authorised because they are against the spirit of the current political process. Had these allegations been false, they would have the potential to cause unprecedented damage to the SADF and the Government because:

(1) Brig (Dr) Basson is indeed involved in chemical research: (And what is more, he is said to be related to Gen Lothar Neethling).

(2) The public would find it hard to accept the opposite in the light of previous official denials of other events (such as Ferdi Barnard's attachment to the SADF), linked to Brig (Dr) Basson's and the SADF's real involvement in chemical and biological research.

DECLASSIFIED
TOP SECRET

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

DECLASSIFIED
TOP SECRET

iv. Without considering other facts, on the surface it would appear that Brig (Dr) Basson had adapted and developed an initial Project with pure objectives to a stage that self-initiated actions are the order of the day, which could only lead to embarrassment of a serious nature.

v. Conclusions

(1) Although aspects of Brig (Dr) Basson's project is being investigated by the Auditor-General, an incisive investigation regarding the desirability of the Programme in its totality, including cover firms, is required if it had not been done by this time.

(2) Instructions and mandates to Brig (Dr) Basson must be investigated and evaluated against alleged activities as to identify double agendas.

9. General Conclusion. The assignments, mandates, objectives, projects and submissions for activities of Directorate DCC (mainly Section Terrorism), Directorate Reconnaissance, Bevkom and 7 Med Bn Gp (which must include Brig (Dr) Basson), must be subjected to incisive investigation.

EVALUATION/SUMMARY/COMMENT OF/ON INFORMATION REGARDING INDIVIDUALS

10. Annexure A, which is a summary of allegations concerning risk activities of SADF components, contains names of various SADF members that require further explanation. Annexure C contains the explanation. Summarised, these individuals can be divided in three categories, i.e.

a. Individuals in positions of command who wear an albatross of the past round the neck as an inescapable burden.
   i. Gen Kat Liebenberg
   ii. Lt-Gen C.P. Van der Westhuizen
   iii. Individuals who can be discredited for activities by subordinates by virtue of their command positions. Individuals in this regard are:
   iv. Lt-Gen G. Meiring
   v. Gen-Maj H.J. Roux

DECLASSIFIED
TOP SECRET

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

vi. Brig J.C. Swart
vii. Brig Tolletjie Botha

b. Individuals involved in apparent self-initiated activities against the interests of the state (not necessarily consciously). Individuals in this regard are:

i. Brig Ferdi Van Wyk
ii. Brig (Dr) Wouter Basson
iii. Brig Oos Van der Merwe
iv. Col At Nel
v. Col H.A.P. Potgieter
vi. Col Mielie Prinsloo
vii. Col Bert Sachse
viii. Col Hannes Venter
ix. Comdt Anton Nieuwoudt
x. Comdt Henry Van der Westhuizen

11. If the allegations (mainly unsubstantiated information) of SADF components' activities (Annexure B) are judged in general, the impression (no substance) is gained that:

a. there is a possibility that certain general staff and senior officers had lost sight of the initial mandate and approved objectives of projects, and that they approve/accept/initiate actions that in actual fact involve additional unauthorised objectives and do not necessarily serve the interests of the State;

b. projects afford members the opportunity to follow a self-initiated agenda under an official cover.

12. Significantly, the individuals involved in the alleged activities are the same persons who have been mentioned in most of the alleged risk activities described in Annexure A and B.

13. General Conclusion

a. SADF components that must be subjected to incisive investigation (as indicated in the previous conclusion), must be investigated by an independent SADF working group to attain true refinement of mandate, assignments, objectives and to re-establish credibility.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

DECLASSIFIED
TOP SECRET

b. It is unlikely that mandate refining itself would bring about credibility in "the SADF and future continuous "clean" SADF actions". A ridding of incumbents from SADF components may also be required. In this regard, those individuals referred to in the three categories mentioned in Par 10, would be affected. The three categories are :

i. Individuals in positions of command who wear an albatross of the past round the neck as an inescapable burden.

ii. Individuals who could be discredited by virtue of their positions of command, for actions by their subordinates.

iii. Individuals involved in apparent self-initiated activities against the interests of the state (not necessarily consciously).

c. In addition to the cleansing of posts, further investigation into the alleged activities/possible double agendas of individuals whose names appear in Annexure B, is required.

INFORMATION/INTELLIGENCE MADE AVAILABLE TO LT-GEN STEYN

14. For the sake of completeness, documents concerning OP CRUSEN and OP WIDOW, which have been made available to Lt-Gen Steyn, are attached as Annexure D and E (Crusen) and F (Widow). The purpose of their inclusion is

a. to have a consolidated document at command;

b. to utilise it as reference when necessary.

15. To sum up, the following information is contained in the documents:

a. Annexure D (Op Crusen) : Individuals allegedly employed by or having contact with Division Intelligence and who act suspiciously, whether in connection with violence or criminal actions. (The documents contain recommendations regarding action.)

DECLASSIFIED
TOP SECRET

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

DECLASSIFIED

b. Annexure E. Individuals not in direct contact with the SADF with potential concealed agendas and/or possibly involved in activities that can relate to acts of violence. (Recommendations for action have been proposed.)

c. Annexure F. Former BSB and SADF members (of whom some serve in the DCC), who might be involved directly or indirectly in activities that could have a bearing on acts of violence. (Recommendations for action have not been made.)

LIST OF CONCLUSIONS

16. Project Pastoor and all other related projects/operations must be investigated in detail in terms of:

    a. Desirability to continue with the project in the present dispensation.

    b. Possible deviations from the initial objective, with specific reference to possible self-initiated actions under official cover.

17. The mandate and objectives of Section Terrorism must be investigated incisively. Other official instructions to individuals (such as an alleged instruction to Col At Nel to render intelligence support for discrediting actions), and their activities in this respect, must also be investigated incisively.

18. All allegations of corruption and criminal activities by DCC members must be referred to the SAP and / or D Provoos for investigation.

19. All aspects of Bevkom's mandate and instruction must be investigated incisively, and its desirability, whether or not, must be deliberated in the light of the Government's political policy.

20. Monthly reports and motivations for Bevkom actions must be investigated to determine whether official approval for a self-initiated programme had not been sought.

21. Although aspects of Brig (Dr) Basson's Project has already been investigated, an incisive investigation is also required if it has not been done as yet, concerning the desirability for the continuation of the Programme in its entirety, including cover firms.

DECLASSIFIED

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

DECLASSIFIED

22. Instructions and mandates to Brig (Dr) Basson must be investigated and matched against alleged activities to identify double agendas.

23. General conclusions

a. SADF components to be subjected to incisive investigation must be investigated by an independent SADF working group to attain a true refinement of mandate, assignments, objectives and re-establishment of credibility.

b. It is unlikely that mandate refining by itself would bring about credibility "in the SADF and future "clean" SADF actions". A ridding of incumbents form SADF components might also be required. In this regard, those individuals referred to in the three categories mentioned in Par. 10, would be affected. The three categories are:

i. Individuals in positions of command who wear an albatross of the past round the neck as an inescapable burden.

ii. Individuals who could be discredited by virtue of their positions of command, for actions by their subordinates.

iii. Individuals involved in apparent self-initiated activities against the interests of the State (not necessarily consciously).

c. In addition to the cleansing of posts, further investigation into the alleged activities / possible double agendas of individuals whose names appear in Annexure B, is required.

REACTION ON POSSIBLE DRASTIC ACTION

24. It is unlikely that a few adjustments would clean the record, in the light of the current credibility crisis of the Defence Force and the balance of allegations (albeit unconfirmed), regarding SADF components who apparently act outside their mandate, individuals attached to components who apparently exceed their mandate and / or pursue own agendas under official pretext, along with individuals in positions of command who have lost pace with true objectives. The only alternative would be drastic intervention.

DECLASSIFIED

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

DECLASSIFIED
TOP SECRET

25. It is expected that the reaction of various groups with regard to drastic intervention in the SADF, would be experienced differently. Intervention may include refining of mandate, objectives and role; curtailment / cancellation of assignments; rationalisation of functions; large scale post transformations and retrenchments.

26. General. The timing for such measures and the manner the issue is to be approached, are regarded as crucial factors in determining the eventual reaction. Factors such as the general security situation, the Government's position with regard to moral high ground, the progress of the process of transition and the economic prospects will have to be considered in the timing. It is anticipated therefore, that the general reaction would coincide with the positive and / or negative general mood in the country.

27. Anticipated reactions

a. Individuals who would be affected as a result of albatrosses of the past or possible discrediting due to activities of subordinates. The most important factors that would affect their reaction are anticipated to be the manner in which it is to be performed and the acceptability of the motivation for the action. Individuals in these categories are regarded as realists who probably would accept the situation if it is handled correctly.

b. Individuals involved in double agendas. Among these individuals are two categories who would react differently:

i. Those involved in alleged criminal activities. No matter the circumstances, they would probably find fault with the dispensation, and would probably join particularly opposing right-wing groups.

ii. Those who pursue self-initiated objectives under official pretext. They probably believe that they act within their mandate and would feel aggrieved. The majority would probably join opposing right-wing groups.

Remark: Both categories would probably threaten to expose actions of the past, and might even proceed to expose them. However, that would be counterproductive because that would not only incriminate them, but would prompt the need for intervention for that very reason.

DECLASSIFIED
TOP SECRET

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

DECLASSIFIED

c. SADF components affected (including Division Intelligence). Members of SADF components who might be affected by intervention, could react according to their political affiliation. The reaction would probably be less intense than that of members whose components might be closed down or drastically scaled down or be accommodated elsewhere in the SADF. Since the majority of SADF members are being regarded as apolitical and are professional soldiers, a realism prevails that the SADF should regain its credibility one way or the other. Should a drastic intervention be motivated as a solution, it would probably be accepted.

d. The broad population. The three respective categories that might react differently.

i. Leftist grouping. There will definitely be a propagandistic exploitation of the situation. The degree would be determined by the level of the transitional process. It can be expected that the more intense the reaction, the more negative the general reaction would be.

ii. Right-wing grouping. Intense reaction is expected, which would increase the right-wing threat potential for future violent actions. This will reinforce their ranks.

iii. Central grouping. It is expected that although the reaction would be negative, the intervention may be accepted with the correct motivation and the manner in which it to be executed and the timing.

28. Procedure. It is anticipated that :

a. In the light of the current negative mood, a sudden drastic intervention would harm stability.

b. An appropriate peg, such as the results of the Steyn investigation, would be the most acceptable action within a positive climate.

RECOMMENDATIONS

29. In the light of the above, it is recommended that :

a. Para. 16 to 22, which serve as conclusions, be implemented as recommendations.

DECLASSIFIED

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

TOP SECRET DECLASSIFIED

b. A drastic intervention, as recommended by the Counterintelligence Community and supported in the conclusions contained in the document, be considered. (Vide par. 24).

c. Should the proposed intervention be accepted as desirable, that it be performed in such a manner that it would have the least effect on stability. Individuals who would be affected for the time being are mentioned in Annexure C.

d. Actions as indicated in Annexure B be performed. Included are the allegations that require further internal investigation and / or committal to the Goldstone Commission, the SAP and D Provoos.

DECLASSIFIED

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

TOP SECRET DECLASSIFIED

ANNEXURE A STAFF PAPER
DD DECEMBER 1992

RISK ACTIVITIES OF SADF COMPONENTS

This document represents source information and conclusions that have been made available to Lt-Gen Steyn. In addition to other information available, the intelligence picture has been used as basis for the Staff Paper.

1. An analysis of information available indicate that some members, contractual members and co-workers of the SADF were involved, and in some instances are still involved in illegal and unauthorised activities that harm the security, interests and welfare of the State. The spectrum of these activities includes murders, deeds of terrorism, disruption and influencing activities, destabilisation activities abroad, corruption, promotion of factional party political objectives and blatant disregard of Government policy.

2. The motives of individuals involved are diverse and vary from personal gain, reprisal, personal political agendas and pursuit of strategic and tactical objectives in conflict with Government policy. However, some role players are caught up in activities of the past that are unacceptable in this era.

3. Evidence at the disposal of the Counterintelligence Community on which the above statements rest, are based on facts, both confirmed and unconfirmed information from reliable sources, and indications are that these are true. The information is also based on evidence submitted in court and at other investigation forums.

4. A cursory examination of the information indicates that the above activities were mainly centralised at certain Defence components, i.e. the Directorate Covert Collection (DCC) of Division Intelligence, Army Foundation (GS2), and certain components of Special Forces and 7 Medical Battalion.

DECLASSIFIED TOP SECRET

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

TOP SECRET DECLASSIFIED

5. Summarised the intelligence picture pertaining to the above Defence components is as follows:

a. Directorate Covert Collection (DCC)

i. Destabilisation of the internal political situation by means of planning and executing coups in self-governing territories and manipulation of important political role players.

ii. The instigation of unrest through murder, providing political factions with arms and executing intimidation activities.

iii. Members' involvement in planning to ruin the Government's reform initiatives through the escalation of violence.

iv. Corruption among members by means of illegal trading in weapons.

v. Involvement in planning and committing murders with major political consequences (e.g. FLORES case).

b. Army Intelligence (GS2)

i. Discrediting activities against the ANC and other political opponents.

ii. Influencing activities and perception creation in the mass media as well as in the SADF.

iii. Intelligence support for destabilisation operations.

iv. Members' participation in coup-related planning.

v. The dissemination of disinformation.

c. Special Forces

DECLASSIFIED

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

TOP SECRET DECLASSIFIED

i. Participation in destabilisation operations in black townships.

ii. Creation of arms caches and the development of operational launching positions in neighbouring countries.

iii. Training of military wings of internal political groups (e.g. Inkatha), as well as training to resistance movements in other African countries, including RENAMO.

d. 7 Medical Battalion

i. Involvement in the SADF's chemical and biological warfare programmes.

ii. Involvemnt in the so-called "Poison murders".

iii. Involvement of some members in corruption vir personal gain.

iv. Involvement in Chemical attack on Frelimo.

v. Handling of drugs for operational utilisation.

6. When analysing the intelligence picture, it would appear that the senior command structure of the above Defence Force components are controlled by Lts-Genl G Meiring and C.P. Van der Westhuizen, who in turn are under the command of the Head of the SADF, Gen Kat Liebenberg. To a high degree, Generals Liebenberg and Van der Westhuizen are caught up in the momentum of activities of the past, which at present, receive prominent negative publicity, whilst Gen Meiring promotes a personal agenda against the interests of the State.

7. At executive level and in varying degrees, the following senior officers are linked to the above activities as a result of their positions of command or their personal involvement in the said activities.

a. Brig Jake Swart
b. Gen H Roux

TOP SECRET DECLASSIFIED

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

DECLASSIFIED

c. Gen Chris Thirion
d. Brig Ferdi Van Wyk (GS2)
e. Brig Tolletjie Botha (DCC) - Directorate Covert Collection
f. Col At Nel (DCC)
g. Brig Wouter Basson (7 Med) - 7 Medical Batallion
h. Col H.A.P. Potgieter (Special Forces)
i. Brig Oos Van der Merwe
j. Col Mielie Prinsloo (GS2)
k. Col Anton Nieuwoudt (DCC)
l. Col Bert Sachse (5VR) - 5 Reconnaissance Regiment/Commando
m. Col Hannes Venter (4VR) - 4 Reconnaissance Regiment/Commando
n. Comdt Henry Van der Westhuizen (DCC)

8. Strong interaction exist between the above four Defence Force components, which results in the major role players being relatively restricted.

9. The availability of secret funds, virtually unchecked delegated authority and the Total Onslaught Syndrome has led to a situation where these Defence Force components has become self-generating and self-perpetuating. New entry into the ranks of these components have soon declined in the pattern that have been brought about by their predecessors. The leadership and the unique milieu has afforded individuals of one mind the opportunity to move upward in the hierarchy order. This in turn, has resulted in these components having been caught up in particular value systems and ways of thinking.

10. With analysis of the information it has become apparent that an informal structure has been created, of which the major role players pursue the same agenda, which harm the State's interests.

11. It has also become evident that controlling officers of the said SADF components were either involved in malpractices at executive level or were aware of these practices. On the other hand, if they had performed their duty, they had to be aware of these malpractices.

12. It will not be feasible to mould this information into a suitable product that can be utilised in court-related actions, other legal proceedings or disciplinary hearings because

DECLASSIFIED

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

DECLASSIFIED

a. Evidence has already been destroyed and is still being destroyed on large-scale.

b. Existing evidence has been acquired in an extremely sensitive manner and would expose agents to retaliation.

c. The powers of the members and groups involved are such that the life of a witness would have no value.

d. The role players protect eac other.

13. The security situation and the delicate stage negotiations for a new constitutional dispensation has reached, compel a revolutionary intervention to eradicate the malpractices that have been identified forthwith. This will not exclude court-directed or other administrative proceedings.

DECLASSIFIED

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

DECLASSIFIED

ANNEXURE B of Staff Paper
dd December 1992

Ser No	Alleged activities	Individuals involved	Information supplied by sources	Evaluation	Nature of Information/Intelligence				Further action
					Vague allegation	Strong allegation	Probably true	Confirmed
	a	b	c	d	e	f	g	h	i
1	Special Forces: 1. Establishment of arms caches and development of operational launching positions in neighbouring countries	Serving members: Gen Kat Liebenberg Lt-Gen G Meiring Brig JC Swart Col Mielie Prinsloo Brig (Dr) W Basson Brig Tolletjie Botha (Documentary)	DCC maintains close ties with Project Pastoor. There are joint projects, such as arms caching in Portugal that are being linked to arms caches for internal uprisings when required (so-called Palmeira Project). DCC and Pastoor share cover offices in Malawi (Documentary as well as sources)	Apparently Brig JC Swart is in command of Operation Pastoor (previously Operation Phantom), under the control of the SADF and Army. The operation is being staffed by members of Special Forces and old BSB members. Objectives are: i. Conducting warfare on an irregular basis ii. Establishing bases in Africa as launching positions for future operations. iii. Establishing arms caches abroad. iv. Development of Malawi as support country into the rest of Africa (Documentary)			X		Internal investigation into desirability of Project
			Arms caching is managed from and into the RSA. One of Pastoor's aircraft has been modified to stow weapons (Reliable sources).	It would be a deviation from its imitial objective if arms caching into the RSA takes place under Operation Pastoor			X		Internal investigation

DECLASSIFIED

TOP SECRET

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Ser No	Alleged activities	Individuals involved	Information supplied by sources	Evaluation	Nature of Information/Intelligence
					Vague allegation	Strong allegation	Probably true	Confirmed
		Brig (Dr) W Basson	Two Portuguese operators of Pastoor have recently been exposed and arrested. Brig (Dr) W Basson instructed that the persons detained were to be mrudered if they could not be relieved. (Reliable source, confirmed by another source.) Fronts of Operation Pastoor are in Kenia, Zambia and Mauritius, mainly in the nature reservearea. Strong contact with the British SAS exists. (Documentary)	Allegedly Brig Basson travelled overseas for this purpose. If this was the case, actions probably were self-initiated beyond Project Pastoor's domain and mandate.			X X		Internal investigation Internal investigation into Pastoor
	ii. Training of military wings of internal political groups (e.g. Inkatha), as well as training to resistance movements in other African countries, inter alia Renamo.	Col Bert Sachse Shaun Gullen Rod Rodrigues Roelie Roelofse Sergeant Americo	Members of 1 Recoon Reg and 5 Reconn Reg (RR) present training to resistance movements in 8 countries. (Various agents). Individuals involved in training are Gavin Christie, Col Bert Sachse, Shaun Gullen, Rod Rodrigues, Roelie Roelofse & Serg America of 4RR & 5RR (Various sources)	Probably true. The question is whether this was or was not an authorised project. Further investigation is required.			X		Internal investigation
	iii. Participation in destabilisation operations in black townships		Operation Pastoor is involved in violence on the East Rand. (Technical collection). Concrete facts not available, but concluded from teleph conversations, evacuations & transfers	If this was the case, actions are beyond Operation Pastoor's domain. Further investigation is required.		X			Internal investigation

DECLASSIFIED

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Ser No	Alleged activities	Individuals involved	Information supplied by sources	Evaluation	Nature of Information/Intelligence				Further action
					Vague allegation	Strong allegation	Probably true	Confirmed
			A discredition action was directed at the ANC to link the ANC to the use of poison. The young interrogators who had questioned the ANC member, were transferred to Pastoor to maintain control over them. This is a clear indication of the mutual relation between GS2, DCC and Pastoor (Allegations by agent)	Reporting of this case is obscure. However, if this was the case, actions are beyond Operation Pastoor's domain.		X			Internal investigation
		Serving member: Col Mielie Prinsloo Former members: Brig Archie Moore Col Daan Kershoff Nick Liebenberg Nick Basson Maj Buks Buys	Spoornet's intelligence network comprised former members of special Forces, i.e. Buks Buys, Nick Liebenberg, Nick Basson or Bosman, Archie Moore and Daan Kershoff, with the object to instigste violence by means of train murders. Buys, Liebenberg, Bosman resigned and established their own business. Nick Liebenberg often (the last time in March 1992) reported beforehand to Col Mielie Prinsloo where and when train murders were to take place, and implied that Special Forces are involved. (Source reports and another Intelligence Service.)	If the allegation was the truth, it probably was self-initiated. This is definitely not part of the Government's political policy. According to other information, it would appear that the ANC is in possession of similar information, but for one or otehr reason does not utilise it.. However, the allegations have the potential of serious embarrassment for the SADF and the State.			X		Goldstone

TOP SECRET

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

DECLASSIFIED

Ser No	Alleged activities	Individuals involved	Information supplied by sources	Evaluation	Nature of Information/Intelligence				Further action
					Vague allegation	Strong allegation	Probably true	Confirmed
2.	DCC i. Destabilisation of the internal political situation through planning and execution of coups in self-governong territories, and manipulation of major political tole players.	Planners are: Brig F van Wyk Col At Nel Col Mielie Prisloo Tinus Hamman Comdt Henry van der Westhuizen (Reliable source) Possibly also Capt Pamela du Randt (Reliable source) Executive at operational level are: Comdt Anton Nieuwoudt Col Eugene de Kock (SAP) Comdt Henry van der Westhuizen (Reliable source) Probable co-workers at operational level: Brian Davis (London) Van Greunen Verne Lange Jimmy Nieuwoudt (Various sources)	Individuals involved in suspicious activities are members of Section Terrorism. The agenda of this group of individuals is: i. Discrediting of the ANC. ii. Instigation of public violence. iii. The failure of talks with the Government. iv. Increase in violence. v. De facto coup by the SADF to restore order. vi. Establishment/development and armament of Inkatha , and the creation of alternative right-wing political alliances. (Allegations and reliable source) The planning group meet clandestinely at a lodge (West stadium) at Loftus. Pamela du Randt is present often. (Source reports and technical collection)	Should this be the case, these allegations would be an indication of an own agenda that may have the potential of serious implications. This matter requires further urgent investigation. Further collection is essential.			X X		Internal investigation thereupon Goldstone Internal investigation

DECLASSIFIED

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

DECLASSIFIED

Ser No	Alleged activities	Individuals involved	Information supplied by sources	Evaluation	Nature of Information/Intelligence				Further action
					Vague allegation	Strong allegation	Probably true	Confirmed
		Col At Nel Comdt Anton Nieuwoudt AO2 Clive Brink	The Ciskei Intelligence Service, controlled by Comdt Anton Nieuwoudt and AO2 Clive Brink. The coup and murder of Sebe was a planned action by Col At Nel and Comdt Anton Nieuwoudt (Reliable source)	Although Nieuwoudt controlled the Ciskei Intelligence Service, it has not been confirmed that he had planned Sebe's murder. However, according to a recent report, he is concerned about the fact that a judicial commission in the Ciskei is attmpting to "hang" the murder on Sebe round his neck (implicate him?)			X		Goldstone
			DCC is involved in Mozambique through agents Craig Williamson, Sakkie van Zyl and Celeste who are strongly linked to Renamo armament (Various sources)	A number of DCC members maintain contact with Craig Williamson, who, according to some reports, is involved in smuggling activities.			X		Goldstone
			DCC continues with planning to overthrow Holomisa and to substitute him with pawns. (Various agents and technical collection.) Individuals involved allegedly are Col At Nel and Comdt Anton Nieuwoudt.	According to another report, Nieuwoudt handles Col Duli of the TDF, and he along with Eugene De Kock and Chris Nel (alias Derek Louw) had planned to carry out a coup d'etat. Thus, the allegations have been confirmed and clearly point to self-initiated efforts to work against the policy of the Government.				X	Goldstone

DECLASSIFIED

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Ser No	Alleged activities	Individuals involved	Information supplied by sources	Evaluation	Nature of Information/Intelligence				Further action
					Vague allegation	Strong allegation	Probably true	Confirmed
	ii. Participation of members in planning to ruin the Government's reform initiatives through the escalation of violence.	JC Prinsloo (DCC in Durban)	DCC agents are involved in the training of IFP members, whereupon they are placed at security firms (ubder IFP and SADF control), fully armed. Ex-Rhodesians wit Right-wing radical viewpoints control the security firms COIN, Shield and Hullets. (Allegations by independent sources.)	Allegedly, JP Prinsloo of the DCC's Durban office may be responsible for liaison wrt the training. If this proves to be true, it would probably be in pursuance of a self-initiated agenda.		X			Goldstone
			DCC has full control over the Zulu faction's participation in talks with the Government. Allegedly the infrastructure is such that 24 000 Zulus can be armed in the PWV area within 24 hours. Various independent sources.)	Further collection is essential for meaningful evaluation.		X			Goldstone
		Col De Kock Leon Flores Steve Bosch Col At Nel	The former 8-member "hit squad" of Vlakplaas was under the command of Col Eugene de Kock, Leon Flores and Steve Bosch, of whom the latter two became DCC members. Col de Kock maintains close ties with Col At Nel. (Source reports and Technical collection)	There were various accounts of contact between Col de Kock (SAP) and certain DCC members. From the veiled use of words, it could be concluded that the combination was involved in activities that harmed the interests of the State.				X	Goldstone

DECLASSIFIED

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Ser No	Alleged activities	Individuals involved	Information supplied by sources	Evaluation	Nature of Information/Intelligence				Further action
					Vague allegation	Strong allegation	Probably true	Confirmed
	iii. Instigation of unrest through murder, armament of political factions and execution of intimidation activities. iv. Involvement in planning and committing of murders with serious political consequences (eg the Flores incident)	Col Eugene de Kock Leon Flores Col At Nel Steve Bosch HenryvdWesthuizen Rich Verster	12 former Vlakplaas askaris of Col Eugene de Kock (SAP) are still involved in operations and are handled by De Kock. All of them are fully equipped with weapons and supplied with arms caches, ammunition and supplies. Some of the askaris are hidden on DCC's holding (Olymus 73). (Confirmed by various agents.) Until recently Flores assisted the handling of askaris. His own weapons are cached on the holding of Tryon alias Trix alias Leonard. (Reliable source)	As mentioned above, the contact between Col De Kock (SAP) and DCC members is disturbing, and it would appear that a combination of individuals are pursuing an own self-initiated agenda.			X		Goldstone
		Brig (Dr) Basson Brig F van Wyk & probably Col At Nel	DCC in conjunction with Brig Ferdi vanWyk turned an ANC member to give evidence that the ANC uses chemical weapons ni Mozambique. (This was just after the chemical attack on the Frelimo group in Mozambique, vide section on 7 Med Bt Gp) (Allegations by reliable source)	Although the reporting is not clear, it would appear that an operation involving chemical weapons was launched in Mozambique, and that Col At Nel, Brig F Van Wyk & Brig (Dr) Basson were involved. The British organisation Chemical & Biological Defence Establishments investigated the area, and found that chemical weapons had definitely been used. It would appear that there were attempts to lay the blame on the ANC.		X			Internal investigation

DECLASSIFIED
THE SECRET

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Ser No	Alleged activities	Individuals involved	Information supplied by sources	Evaluation	Nature of Information/Intelligence				Further action
					Vague allegation	Strong allegation	Probably true	Confirmed
			The caching of terrorist weapons in Swaziland are being planned by Cols Eugene de Kock and At Nel, and pointed out to the Swazi police, whereupon discredition takes place. (Technical collection & reliable source)	Apparently this is being done in pursuance of a self-initiated agenda or an existing assignment is conducted on own initiative but beyond limits.				X	Internal investigation
		Col At Nel & probably also Comdt Anton Nieuwoudt	DCC members handle elements of the PAC leadership in Transkei. Col At Nel instructed that the PAC had to proceed with murders on ANC members in the Transkei. (Technical collection)	These allegations, linked to the allegations mentioned elsewhere in this document, which maintain that DCC members continue to plan a coup d'etat in Transkei, once again are indicative of a self-initiated agenda conducted by certain DCC members.			X		Goldstone

DECLASSIFIED

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

TOP SECRET

Ser No	Alleged activities	Individuals involved	Information supplied by sources	Evaluation	Nature of Information/Intelligence				Further action
					Vague allegation	Strong allegation	Probably true	Confirmed
	v. Corruption among DCC members by means of illegal weapons trade.	Col At Nel Comdt Anton Nieuwoudt Comdt Henry wdWesthuizen Rich Verster Jeff Price Col Eugene de Kock (SAP) Piet Botha (SAP) Willie Nortje (SAP) Chappies Klopper (SAP)	The delivery of arms to the SAP located by so-called sources. Funds go to fictitious sources. (Allegations) The GS2 remuneration fund of the Army that handles arms located abroad, pays without asking questions, and a great number of fictitious sources are remunerated. (Allegations.) Anton Nieuwoudt keeps weapons at Plot 73, Olympus and in a container at a rented farm at Irene.	According to additional reporting, Col At Nel does not register internal sources anymore, and rpesumably they are remunerated from funds obtained form the delivery of weapons. It has also been alleged that munition depots are declared only partially. Allegedly, the remainder is hidden elswhere. Consequently, there is a possibility that other activities too might be funded. This is also an example of how as official responsibility, such as covert collection could be misused for own profit or for pursuance of a self-initiated agenda under official banner.				X	Investigation by D Provoos, whereupon investigation by Goldstone
3	GS2 Discrediting actions against ANC and other political opponents	Brig F Van Wyk Col At Nel	Disclosure concerning Winnie Mandela's disappearance of funds was a Ferdi Van Wyk/Col At Nel project. (Allegations by source)	If it was an official project in line with the State's political programme, it would be bona fide different. However, if it was self-initiated, then it would have a high-risk potential for embarrassment.			X		Internal investigation

TOP SECRET

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

DECLASSIFIED
TOP SECRET

Ser No	Alleged activities	Individuals involved	Information supplied by sources	Evaluation	Nature of Information/Intelligence				Further action
					Vague allegation	Strong allegation	Probably true	Confirmed
		Brig F Van Wyk	The discrediting of the ANC and other political opponents against the Government is managed from the office of the Command. (Various sources)	On the basis of various reports, it would appear that official authorisation did exist. However, it would appear that Brig Van Wyk pursues more objectives that are self-initiated or that he attempts to convince his superiors to approve activities that are not always in the interest of the State. This will have to be investigated though.			X		Internal investigation
	ii. Influencing activities and creation of perceptions at the mass media and the SADF	BrigFvWyk	The emphasis on violence in BrigvWyk's report in a certain manner may establish misperceptions. (Reliable source)	It would appear that motivations for actions might be intensified to guarantee action. However, this is only a conclusion and needs to be investigated further.			X		Internal investigation

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

TOP SECRET

Ser No	Alleged activities	Individuals involved	Information supplied by sources	Evaluation	Nature of Information/Intelligence				Further action
					Vague allegation	Strong allegation	Probably true	Confirmed
	iii. Intelligence support to destabilisation operations		The pseudo capability of 5Reconnaissance Regiment receives intelligence support from GS2 to be applied to the ANC's and PAC's internal structures. (Source reports and Technical collection). According to report received on 14Dec1992, an ANC member was to give evidence at the Goldstone Commission to the effect that members of 5ReconReg 1ReconnReg were to perform operations in KwaZulu. The vehicle registrations to be used for this purpose were checked by OATI. These can be trailed to 5ReconnReg. (SAP)	If this was the case, activities would not be in line with Government policy, and this might lead to serious embarrassment. This matter requires urgent investigation.			X		Goldstone ?
		ColHerman van Niekerk (leader) TinusVStaden (OpsOffic) JimLaferty - ex-Rhodesian MikeKennedy - ex-Rhodesian MarkVDMerwe - ex-Rodesian	Rumours are that a pseudo group of 5ReconnReg are involved in train murders along with members of the Rhodesian Selous Scouts under HermanVNiekerk (Allegations)	This is probably the same group who were, ito the above allegation, involved in speudo operations in KwaZulu. The allegations require further urgent investigation.					Goldstone

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Ser No	Alleged activities	Individuals involved	Information supplied by sources	Evaluation	Nature of Information/Intelligence				Further action
					Vague allegation	Strong allegation	Probably true	Confirmed
	iv. Paticipation of members in coup-related planning	Lt-Gen G Meiring	Gen Meiring instructed SpecialForces to determine which members of the present DefenceForce, the previous DefenceForce and the BSB are on "his" side, to enable him to know whom he could call up when it was necessary. He furthermore instructed that SpecForces was not allowed to collect information on right-wingers and rightwing organisations (Reliable source)	Since SpecForces would play an important role in countering a coup d'etat, it seems probable that GenMeiring would have wanted to know who were apolitical for utilisation. His behaviour is therefore evaluated as normal ito contingency planning.					None
		ColMiellePrinsloo	The selective leakage of information from ColMielie Prinsloo's group to Rightwing groups, especially early warnings against possible actions (Confirmed by various independent sources)	The evaluation was that Col Prinsloo is sympathetically disposed towards the Right Wing. This fact may endorse the other allegations contained in the document of his possible involvement in an own agenda directed against the ANC. This requires further investigation.				X	Internal investigation

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

DECLASSIFIED

Ser No	Alleged activities	Individuals involved	Information supplied by sources	Evaluation	Nature of Information/Intelligence				Further action
					Vague allegation	Strong allegation	Probably true	Confirmed
4	7MED BN GP i. Involvement in the chemical and biological warfare programme of the SADF	BrigWouterBasson	There are several chemical firms that operate as private institutions in support of the chemical and biological warfare programme of the SADF. The privatisation of these firms is transparent, which might become serious risks for the SADF and the State in future. The firms are Roodeplaat Research Laboratory, Roodeplaat Tile firm, Delta-G, Protechnics, Ecotex. The activity is headed by Brig(Dr)WouterBasson. (Documentary)	The programme is performed under Project Jota. Privatisation does indeed take place. However, the allegation that the privatisation is transparent and might hold serious risks for the SADF and the State requires further investigation.			X		Internal investigation

DECLASSIFIED

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Ser No	Alleged activities	Individuals involved	Information supplied by sources	Evaluation	Nature of Information/Intelligence				Further action
					Vague allegation	Strong allegation	Probably true	Confirmed
	ii. Involvement in chemical attack on Frelimo	Brig W Basson Brig Van Wyk Col At Nel	Allegedly the chemical attack on Frelimo soldiers in Mozambique (vide ser no 3.iv) was a practical training session. An small unmanned reconnaissance bomber was located shortly before the attack on Komatipoort. The toxic substance used in the attack was manufactured and stored by Petrotechnics. (Confirmed, and individuals involved are known)	Allegedly, the aircraft was tested shortly before the attack on Komatipoort. As stated, a British team of scientists established that chemical weapons were used in the attack on the Frelimo soldiers (finding - January 1992). Accor-ding to this and other information in this respect, DCC and GS2 members as well as Brig Basson directed a discrediting campaign against the ANC implicating the ANC as having a chemical warfare capability, is indicative of an attempted cover-up of either an own agenda or an authorised operation which had failed. However, this requires further investigation.				X	Internal investigation
	iii. Involvement in so-called poison murders	Brig W Basson Gen LotharNeethling	Members of Charl Naude's old group (SpesForces/BSB)formed a group under leadership of Brig W Basson responsible for all SADF elimination instruc-tions. Gen Lothar Neethling was intimately involved. (Evidence of members involved can be obtained) Johan Theron (4VR - Reconn. Regim.) And Johan Truter - financial manager (RN Lab), was also involved with the above. At Nel and Johan Theron have close	Vide all the info in the previous column. The allegation prompt-many questions that first need to be answered befor a meaningful evaluation can be made. Conside-ring the weight of allegations, it would appear that some of them might be true. According to reports received in Dec 1992, there was rummaging among certain DCC members at the time of Goldstone's visit to their offices because some beer tins had been "doctored" with poison. This has been confirmed.		X

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Ser No	Alleged activities	Individuals involved	Information supplied by sources	Evaluation	Nature of Information/Intelligence				Further action
					Vague allegation	Strong allegation	Probably true	Confirmed
		GenKatLiebenberg	GenKatLiebenberg has been kept posted during the course of events. Allegedly, until 1989 he himself was also involved in the planning. (Evidence can be obtained from a person who was involved.)	Recently it has also been reported that D Verk/Recoinn??(Spec Forces)had received toxic substances from 7 Med BnGp, which might be utilised for operational purposes, inter alia a poisonous substance which is a "new product" that can be administered in nearly any manner. Allegedly, Brig Basson made it available. However, a meaningful evaluation is not possible before affidavits are obtained and further investigations are completed.		X
		Name can be obtained	A BSB operator was involved in elimination activities, and disposes of information which directly implicates GenLieben-berg in the murders. (Member has already prepared an affidavit.)			X
		Allegedly Col AtNel CmdtAntonNieuwou dt CmdtHenryvdWest-huizen are involved	Recently there was an attempt to bring the person under the control of the "generals" by offering a contract to supply poisoned beer to Zulus in Transkei. Wouter Basson furthermore offered him 100 000 tablets per month for one year. (Allegations)				X

DECLASSIFIED

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Ser No	Alleged activities	Individuals involved	Information supplied by sources	Evaluation	Nature of Information/Intelligence				Further action
					Vague allegation	Strong allegation	Probably true	Confirmed
			The above person is a key figure and is part of the group BSB members who instituted legal proceedings against the SADF. (Sworn affidavit can be obtained)				X
			The death of one Holtzhausen who was involved in the SADF's ivory/wood/diamond smuggling trade with Angola might point to this group.(Allegation)				X
			It is known that Wouter Basson's direct supervisor had no control over him and that he pursued his own agenda. (Technical sources of conversation with subordinates who made arrangements.)				X

TOP SECRET

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Ser No	Alleged activities	Individuals involved	Information supplied by sources	Evaluation	Nature of Information/Intelligence				Further action
					Vague allegation	Strong allegation	Probably true	Confirmed
	iv. Some members' involvement in corruption for personal gain		Corruption - Brig Wouter Basson has free access to the Lear Jet of Special Forces for private flights to rugby matches and buying sprees in foreign countries (Allegation - various sources)	Various reports have been received in respect of Brig Basson's misuse of official resources and the fact that that he lives exceptionally extravagant. Aspects are being investigated by the AG (Auditor-General/Attorney-General ??)				X	AG
			- Brig Basson invites others along and makes use of the most expensive accommodation. He has recently bought a house in France as well as corporate membership at a gholf club in France (Allegation by reliable source)					X	AG

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

TOP SECRET DECLASSIFIED

Only Copy

ANNEXURE C OF STAFF REPORT
DD DECEMBER 1992

INDIVIDUALS MENTIONED IN ANNEXURE A

Serial no	Individual	Allegations & circumstances wrt indivuals, supplied by individuals	Remarks	Conclusion
	a	b	c	d
1	Brig Jake Botha	- Supervises Reconn (Special Forces) - Entangled in the past & its momentum - Will not be able to detach himself from the past	It cannot be ruled out that he might be discredited in future due to alleged activities of subordinates	Ought to be included in the intervention
2	Gen-Maj HJ Roux	- Controls Project Pastoor - Supervises Reconnaiss Regiments - Ought to be aware of activities that might lead to embarrassment	Might be caught up in the momentum of activities that were acceptable in the past	Ought to be included in the intervention
3	Gen-Maj Chris Thirion	- In his current post he should be aware of DEC activities that might lead to embarrassment - Should be aware of possible misuse of Operation Pastoor for possible unauthorised activities	After having followed up allegations/ circumstances supplied by sources they were found to be based on wrong conclusions. It was concluded that he (Thirion) had taken over Gen Joubert's association with Project Pastoor when he had succeeded the latter.	NOT affected by possible intervention

TOP SECRET
DECLASSIFIED

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

4	Brig Ferdi V Wyk	- Commands Bev Com (?) - Was aware of Flores' assignment - Arranged clandestine visit of a foreign journalist via RSA to discredit ANC, but referred him to Gen-Maj Tienie Groenewald - Involved in discrediting activities iro political opponents	May be subjected to serious discrediting actions in future	Ought to be included in intervention
5	Brig Tolletje Botha	- Have direct command over DCC - Was aware of Flores' double agenda	Was discredited	Ought to be included in intervention
6	Col At Nel	- Took initiative in various activities that might have led to embarrassment, such as: i. Discrediting campaigns ii. Attacks by PAC members on ANC members in Transkei	Was discredited and allegedly involved in several other activitiess that may lead to embarrassment	Ought to be included in intervention
7	Brig Wouter Basson	- Involved on poison murders - Involved in chemical attack on Frelimo - A founder of the underground organisation "Binnekring" ("Inner Circle")	His alleged activities are of such a nature that they might lead to serious embarrassment. They also have the potential to seriously harm the State	Ought to be included in intervention
8	Col HAP Potgieter	- Involved in destabilisation activities (probably unauthorised)	May be discredited. Allegedly pursuing own agenda.	Ought to be included in intervention

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

TOP SECRET

9	Brig Oos VD Merwe	- Laid down intelligence requirements regarding the guard system at the SP's residence. - Said that he might be prepared to launch a coup to restore order.	May be discredited. Is to retire. Works against Government policy.	Ought to be included in intervention.
10	Col Mielie Prinsloo	- Involved in destabilisation operations on own initiative - Provides intelligence support, of which the official nature is being queried - Involved in coup-related planning/statements	May be seriously discredited. Allegedly pursues personal agenda or twists existing mandate for self-initiated objectives	Ought to be included in intervention
11	Comdt Anton Nieuwoudt	- Was involved in Ciskei coup and Sebe murder - Controls Askaris (probably unauthorised) - Involved in destabilisation activities (probably own initiative) - Involved in coup planning/statements	Was discredited and may still be discredited. May involve the SADF in his own alleged double agenda, which may lead to serious embarrassment (whether true or not)	Ought to be included in intervention
12	Col Bert Sachse	- Involved in training of resistence movements in neighbouring countries - Allegations of smuggling of rhino horns	May be discredited. Probably pursuing a personal agenda	Ought to be included in intervention
13	Col Hannes Venter	- Involved in destabilisation operations (probably own initiative)	May be seriously discredited and may involve the SADF	Ought to be included in intervention

TOP SECRET

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

14	Comdt Henry VD Westhuizen	- Involved in destabilisation activities (probably own initiative) - Handles agents with questionable backgrounds	Allegedly pursues a personal agenda and allegedly entwined his official duties with his personal agenda	Ought to be included in intervention
15	Gen Kat Liebenberg	- In full command of SADF - Exposed to blackmail as result of previous involvement in unauthorised BSB activities - Allegedly involved in ivory smuggling (confirmed by independent sources) - Direct superior of Brig Wouter Basson, therefore he ought to know of the latter's probable unauthorised activities (Allegations by independent sources)	Probably caught up in albatrosses of the past that can result in him being discredited	Ought to be included in intervention

DECLASSIFIED

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

16	Lt-Gen G Meiring	- Full command of GS2 and Special Forces - Authorised Flores' visit and itinerary abroad - Gave instruction iro efforts to determine Rightwing support within Special Forces in order ro ensure selective summons when required - Forbade collection by Special Forces on rightwingers or rightwing organisations - Told an inner circle that he was prepared to launch a coup if necessary (Reliable source)	May be discredited due to the Flores case. Wrt the allegation iro Rightwing, his activities are evaluated as part of contingency planning. Since he has full command of the Army, he might not be able to escape the responsibility , should it be found that that the existing mandate/assignments were developed for other objectives	Ought to be included in intervention
17	Lt-Gen CP VD Westhuizen	- In view of his position as commander of the DI and DCC he had to be aware of malpractices at these offices. - He has albatrosses round his neck from which he cannot espcape, e.g. i. Goniwe ii. Hammer Forces iii. Train murders caused by members under his command	Probably caught up in albatrosses of the past that are inescapable	Ought to be included in intervention

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Annexure D of Staff report
dd December 1992

INDIVIDUALS ALLEGEDLY ATTACHED TO OR IN CONTACT WITH DIVISION INTELLIGENCE

Serial No	Individual	Affiliation	Activities	Status				Remarks
				Uncertain	Above suspision	Criminal activities	Goldstone Commission
	a	b	c	d	e	f	g	h
1	JF Verster (Rich) i. ID no [redacted] ii. Alias iii. [redacted]	Member of Company	Allegedly individual is involved in : i. The smuggling of (1) drugs (2) ivory (3) gem stones (4) weapons (5) foreign currency (6) counterfeit money ii. Car and lorry theft			X X		Information regarding the smuggling & vehicle theft has been handed to the SAP (MID) for further investigation
2	JA Nieuwoudt (Comdt) i. J Nel; J Buitendag	SADF ex-Ciskeian Intelligence Service	i. Allegedly the individual is involved in cycad smuggling ii. Allegedly the individual is involved in organising an underground structure to serve as an alternative structure should the negotiation process fail	X X		X		The origin of the information is extremely sensitive and might compromise a total source network. Utilisation of the information must be cleared with the handler

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

3	H VD WESTHUIZEN i. [redacted]	Member of Company ex-SADF (DI)	i. Allegedly the individual is involved in the smuggling of (1) cycads (2) gem-stones (3) counterfeit money ii. Allegedly the individual is involved in activities probably related to violence			X X X	X	information to confirm the allegations could not be obtained. In view of the nature of his position he was concerned with collection on MK
4	G Janse Van Rensburg i. [redacted] ii. Alias: Steven van Lill iii. [redacted] Str	Member of Company ex-NI	Allegedly the person is involved in the smuggling of drugs and Red Mercury	X		X		To date confirmation for allegations could not be obtained

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

5	Tony Oosthuizen i. *Aliases (1) Tobie Esterhuizen (2) Michael O'Kelly (3) MJ Olivier ii. [redacted]	Member of Company ex-NI	Alleged agent for MI6			X		There were inve...ions in this regard. The allegations could not be confirmed.
6	AM VD Berg (Maj) i. [redacted] ii. [redacted]	SADF	Allegedly the said person misused official contacts for personal gain, and he is involved in an extramarital relationship	X				The allegations regarding the misuse of official contacts are being investigated by an RVO (??). Substantiation could not be obtained.
7	GD Price i. ID No [redacted] ii. Alias: A Wiltshire iii [redacted]	Member of Company ex-Rhodesian	Alleged agent for MI6			X		To date allegations have not been substantiated

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

8	RI Wishart	Member of Company ex-Rhodesian	Alleged agent for MI6	X		X		Allegation not sub...ntiated
9	HJM Widdowson (Cmdr) i. Force No [redacted] ii. Address [redacted]	SADF	Allegedly involved in theft of an R4 as well as espionage on behalf of a foreign intelligence service	X		X		Allegation not substantiated to date
10	HD Terblanche (Maj) i. Force No [redacted] ii. Address [redacted]	SADF	Allegedly involved in smuggling of gem-stones			X		There are good indications that the individual is indeed involved in smuggling of diamonds
11	Stefan Snyders (Comdt)	SADF	Allegedly involved in smuggling of diamonds and emeralds			X		Snyders maintains very close contact with Henry VD Westhuizen
12	Vernon Lange ii. Alias P Page	Member of Company ex-BSB	Allegedly involved in smuggling activities	X		X		Nature and extent of activities not known

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

13	JG Nieuwoudt i. Alias Neuman	ex-BSB Member of Company	Allegedly involved in extramaritsl relationship	X				No further negative information is known
14	JP Du Preez i. Alias J Du Plooy	ex-BSB Member of Company	Allegedly the said person has or had in his possession a number of unlicensed weapons of one Owen, ex-BSB member	X		X		No further negative information is known
15	LA MAREE (Chappies) i. ID No [redacted]	ex-BSB Member of Company	This person still has regular contact with former BSB members. No furhter information is known regarding his activities	X				The only negative information available about this person is speculation regarding the Webster murder
16	FL Smit (Maj)	SADF	Allegedly he is involved in i. the smuggling of weapons; and ii. the smuggling of Red Mercury	X		X	X	Not enough information available to substantiate the allegations. His involvement in arms transactions might be a result of his official duties

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

17	DH Fourie i. ID No [redacted] ii. Address [redacted]	Company member ex-BSB	Allegations regarding this person are the following: i. He was retrenched by the SADF, and he threatens to go to court. ii. He is involved in the training of people in Ciskei, inter alia in VIP protection. iii. He maintains regular contact with former BSB members. iv. He made contact with one Chris VD Merwe in Windhoek with a view to the possibility to establish a cover firm in Windhoek that can be utilised by Fourie to import arms and ammunition to the RSA.	X			X	Although there are indications, the information is inadequate to substantiate allegations wrt any BSB type of activities. It is possible that the cover firm can be used to evade existing sanctions against the RSA. Allegedly Fourie was the operational manager of the BSB and had to approve all tasks.

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

18	DF du T. Burger (Staal)	Member of Company ex-BSB	Allegations regarding Burger are as follows: i. He was dismissed by the DCC but he refuses to accept his dismissal and threatens with a court case. ii. He is involved in an extramarital relationship. iii. Involved in the smuggling of drugs, red Mercury, gold and diamonds. iv. Involved in suspicious special projects. However, the nature and extent are unknown. v. Maintains regular contact with former BSB members.	X		X	X	Existing information is inadequate to substantiate allegations
19	WJ Basson i. ID No [redacted] ii. Aliases (1) WJ Bester (2) M Barnard (3) M Reyneke (4) Christo Brits	Member of Company ex-BSB	No negative information wrt Basson has been obtained through monitoring actions. However, it clearly appears that he maintains contact with former BSB members and that he closely follows the investigations concerning the Webster murder	X

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

20	Mrs S De Beer ii. ID No [redacted]	Member of Company ex-BSB		X				No negative information is known regarding the activities of this person
21	Calla Botha	ex-BSB	He had contact with Rich Verster (a DCC member)	X				Nature and extent of activities not known at present
22	Ferdi Barnard i. Alias Lanco Heins	ex-BSB	i. He was utilised as a source by the DCC, but was dismissed in December 1991. However, he still maintains contact with members of the DCC, including Rich Verster, Wally Wilsenach, Frans Smit and Geoff Price ii. Allegedly he is involved in the smuggling of diamonds, Red Mercury and ivory			X		It is not known if the contact is official or not. However, it would appear that the contact might pertain to criminal activities

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

23	Leon Flores	Former company member	i. Flores has regular contact with BSB members, inter alia with Col Eugene de Kock (Vlakplaas) ii Reports indicate that Flores might be involved in smuggling activities, possibly drugs (an amount of R120 000 for 60 gm was mentioned) iii. Allegedly he still operates from Vlakplaas offices iv. Flores maintains good contact with Henry VD Westhuizen v. Flores allegedly made available information to the press			X X	X	As a result of an i...ident in Britain, Flores was dismissed from the SADF. His continued contact with Eugene De Kock is suspicious

DECLASSIFIED

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

Only Copy
ANNEXURE E
OF STAFF REPORT
DD DECEMBER 1992

Ser No	Individual	Affiliation	Activities	Status				Remarks
				Uncertain	Above suspision	Criminal activities	Goldstone Commission
	a	b	c	d	e	f	g	h
1	Anthony James Christopher White (Ant) i. ID No [redacted] ii. Aliases (1)Anthony Greenstone (2) Anthony Greenwood (3) Anthony Greenway (4) James White (5) Abe White	Alleged ex-BSB	i. Allegedly, White, in cooperation with Mac Calloway and George Mitchell, smuggled arms (AK47s and AKMs) from Mozambique to Kwazulu where they were sold. Allegedly, SAO members were also involved in the matter ii. White also had contact with Craig Williamson iii. Allegedly White was also involved in ivory and rhenoceris-horn smuggling				X

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

2	Mike Drummond	Alleged ex-BSB	i. Drummond allegedly assists Ant White and Mac Calloway in the smuggling of weapons. Amongst other things he delivered weapons to Naas Van Zyl (Mossgas) ii. Drummond was also involved in insurance fraud by reporting a vehicle as stolen to have the insurance amount paid out iii. Allegedly Drummond is also involved in the smuggling of gold and shrimps			X X	X	Drummond owns an aircraft that is used for special assignments
3	Joe Verster i. Address [redacted]	ex-BSB ex-SADF	i. During July 1992, Verster allegedly recruited individuals in the Johannesburg area. Remark: It is not known for what purpose recruiting was done ii. Verster maintains contact with Eugene De Kock iii. Verster has access to large sums of money and is orgaanising an unknown action. There is talk of an amount of R100 million iv. Verster allegedly maintains contact with "Terror" Lekota of the ANC v. Verster has established a business which is concerned with a security firm as well as a firm which transports goods to the so-called Frontline States	X			X	Although the information that is available does not point to Verster being involved in incongruities, there are clear indications that he is busy with a type of "BSB" action. He was managing director of the former BSB

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

4	Glen Gorman	Alleged ex-BSB	Statements by Gorman indicate that he is involved in an organisation that may be involved in violence. Gorman maintains contact with inter alia Pieter Van Zyl, Rocky Van Blerk and Dr Vernon Joynt. The said individuals all have BSB connections				X	Gorman has not been positively identified to date
5	Eugene De Kock	SAP	i. Allegedly, De Kock was to leave the SAP at the end of 1992 to join an organisation of Joe Verster. (Remark: The nature of the organisation is not known.) Allegedly, various former SAP colleagues of De Kock and Leon Flores were to join the organisation. It was alleged that De Kock would have brought with him to the organisation a large number of weapons cached in and outside the RSA. According to Ferdi Barnard, De Kock did not leave the SAP but was to take over underground structures of the SAP's D Section. ii. Allegedly De Kock is involved in smuggling trade, including Ferdi Barnard's alleged smuggling activities iii. De Kock has close contact with Henry VD Westhuizen, Ferdi Barnard and Leon Flores				X
6	Col Jan Breytenbach	ex-SADF	Allegedly Breytenbach is engaged in recruitment for/creation of a resistence structure. Current as well as former members of the Security Forces allegedly are involved in the organisation	X			X	No further information regarding the resistence structure is available

DECLASSIFIED

Ole Bubenzer-"Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa"-Martinus Nijhoff Publishers-2009

EXCLUSIVELY TOP SECRET

7	AB Stander (Riaan) i. Employed at Intercol Pty Ltd. Directors of this company are Craig Williamson, Stander And Ant White	Alleged ex-BSB	i. Stander maintains contact with Staal Burger. The nature of the contact is unknown. ii. Allegedly, Stander is involved in discrediting activities directed against the RSA Government iii. Allegedly, Stander is involved in currency fraud iv. During a recent search at his house/business concern (Kastech - Eastech ??), a large number of arms and ammunition was found. v. His business concern, Kastech - Eastech??? may have connections with the CIA			X X X		Stander's activities are investigated by the SAP

DECLASSIFIED

IN THE COMMISSION OF INQUIRY INTO STOPPED TRC INVESTIGATIONS AND/OR PROSECUTIONS

AFFIDAVIT OF OLE BUBENZER

I, the undersigned

OLE BUBENZER

state under oath as follows:

1. I am an adult male, employed as a Senior Legal Counsel in the European Central Bank, and presently resident in Frankfurt, Germany.

2. I am the author of the book Post TRC prosecutions in South Africa: Accountability for political crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's amnesty process (the book) that was published in 2009 by BRILL.

3. The facts stated herein are within my own personal knowledge unless the context indicates otherwise and are to the best of my knowledge true and correct.

4. I confirm the contents of the founding affidavit of Lukhanyo Calata dated 17 January 2025 filed in Calata & Others v Government of South Africa & Others (Gauteng Division, Case No. 2025-005245), insofar as it pertains to me. A certified copy of this affidavit was supplied by Webber Wentzel attorneys to the Commission on 10 October 2025 in the Calata and Others Volume at bundle 7.

5. The research that I conducted for the book was largely conducted during a four-month trip to South Africa in 2006. I sourced information from court documents, written materials and interviews. I conducted more than 20 interviews with persons who were knowledgeable with the subject of post-TRC prosecutions.

_____

OLE BUBENZER

The Deponent has acknowledged that the Deponent knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was signed and sworn to or solemnly affirmed before me at _____ on _____ 2025, the regulations contained in Government Notice No. R1258 of 21 July 1972, as amended, and Government Notice No. R1648 of 19 August 1977, as amended, having been complied with.

_____

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

Full names:

Business address:

Designation:

Capacity:

Divider 8

Affidavit of Michael Schmidt

Calata and Others // Government of the Republic of South Africa and Others

Gauteng Division of the High Court, Pretoria, Case No: 2025/5245

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

CASE NO: _____

In the matter between:

LUKHANYO BRUCE MATTHEWS CALATA	1st Applicant
ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA	2nd Applicant
BONAKELE JACOBS	3rd Applicant
FATIEMA HARON-MASOET	4th Applicant
TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE	5th Applicant
KARL ANDREW WEBER	6th Applicant
KIM TURNER	7th Applicant
LYNDENE PAGE	8th Applicant
MBUSO KHOZA	9th Applicant
NEVILLE BELING	10th Applicant
NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI	11th Applicant
SARAH BIBI LALL	12th Applicant
SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE	13th Applicant
SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO	14th Applicant
STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE	15th Applicant

Date: 17/01/2025
Certified a True Copy
of the Original
Nicola Irving
Nicola Grace Irving

22/11/2024 LC NG

THULI KUBHEKA	16th Applicant
HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO	17th Applicant
TSHIDISO MOTASI	18th Applicant
NOMALI RITA GALELA	19th Applicant
PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE	20th Applicant
MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI	21st Applicant
MOGAPI SOLOMON TLHAPI	22nd Applicant
FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS	23rd Applicant

and

GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	1st Respondent
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	2nd Respondent
MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT	3rd Respondent
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	4th Respondent
MINISTER OF POLICE	5th Respondent
NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE	6th Respondent

22/11/2024

LC

NG

I, the undersigned,

MICHAEL SCHMIDT

do hereby make oath and state that:

1. I am an adult male investigative journalist and author of the book Death Flight. Apartheid's Secret Doctrine of Disappearance ("Death Flight")

2. The facts stated herein are within my own personal knowledge unless the context indicates otherwise and are to the best of my knowledge true and correct.

3. I have read the notice of motion and a substantially complete version of the founding affidavit of Lukhanyo Bruce Matthews Calata and confirm the contents in so far as they relate to me and the content of Death Flight.

MICHAEL SCHMIDT

The Deponent has acknowledged that he knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was signed and sworn to or solemnly affirmed before me at _____ on this the ____ day of _____ 20____

22/11/2024

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

Full Names: GRAHAM SANDERSON
Designation: PROFESSIONAL ACCOUNTANT (SA)
Address: 4 FINSBURY AVE, AUCKLAND PARK, JOHANNESBURG

22/11/2024

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS (RSA)
Graham Sanderson PA(SA)
Member No.: 34379
4 Finsbury Avenue, Auckland Park
Johannesburg

LC
NG

Michael Schmidt

DEATH FLIGHT

Apartheid's secret doctrine of disappearance

TAFELBERG

Tafelberg
An imprint of NB Publishers, a Division of Media24 Boeke (Pty) Ltd 40 Heerengracht, Cape Town www.tafelberg.com

Text © Michael Schmidt (2020)
Photo section © Michael Schmidt (2020)

All rights reserved.
No part of this book may be reproduced or transmitted in any form or by any electronic or mechanical means, including photocopying and recording, or by any information storage or retrieval system, without written permission from the publisher.

Cover design: Nudge Studio
Book design: Nazli Jacobs
Editing: Albert Weideman
Proofreading: Alfred LeMaitre and Angela Voges
Index: Sanet le Roux

Printed and bound by CTP Printers, Cape Town

First edition, first impression 2020

ISBN: 978-0-624-08860-8
Epub: 978-0-624-088861-5
Mobi: 978-0-624-08862-2

To the families of the hundreds of men – and one woman – who were 'disappeared'
under Operation Dual from 12 July 1979 to 12 December 1987

Contents

List of abbreviations 1
Foreword by Nkosinathi Biko 5
Prologue 9

PART I: The Rhodesian roots of SA's dirty war 13
1. A youth in the shadow of an insurgent war 15
2. From Pretoria bar to Rhodesian bush 25
3. Behold a pale horse: Rhodesia's biochemical warfare 29
4. Horrors and honours 39
5. Neo-Nazis and mercenaries enter the fray 46
6. 'The doctored bodies are in the back' 50

PART II: A secret killing machine takes shape 61
7. Black-ops boon for South Africa 63
8. Recruiting a few hard men 73
9. Rhodesia's revenge 82
10. Mobilising against the 'Total Onslaught' 90
11. The 'hunter-killers' of Koevoet 95
12. South Africa's small-team recce pioneer 102
13. 'Ex-Rhodesians became cannon fodder' 108
14. Delta 40 embraces the 'Dark Side' 113
15. The first death flight 121
16. 'I never counted the bodies' 126
17. A death flight victim fights back 134
18. An old Recce gets blooded 139

PART III: The shackles come off: From Delta 40 to Barnacle 145
19. A mandate to kill 147
20. A war crime at Lanseria 152
21. Two hammers: Barnacle kills its own 158
22. The founding chief's last flights 161
23. Barnacle in its prime 166
24. 'Like a James Bond movie' 171
25. A changing of the guard 177
26. Barnacle's role in the Maseru raid 183
27. Small-teams success 187
28. Trained, betrayed, murdered 192
29. The Wonder Air death flight 198
30. A death flight over the Indian Ocean 205
31. Barnacle's final small-teams mission 208

PART IV: Dramatic expansion under the CCB 217
32. 'The Organisation' takes shape 219
33. Parallel pseudo-ops teams 227
34. The CCB's Inner Circle 230
35. The Cessna Caravan death flight 235
36. Resistance by Speskop's new Air Ops chief 238
37. The end of Operation Dual 241

PART V: Aftermath: Our Pact of Forgetting 245
38. The end of the Border War 247
39. The CCB shuts down 252
40. Shadow boxing: The Trial of the Generals 259
41. Half-truths at the Truth Commission 269
42. Dual exposed: the Wouter Basson trial 275
43. (Re)disappearing the disappeared 281
44. Quietus: The founding chief's exit 292

Acknowledgements 295
Endnotes 299
Index 319
About the author 326

Style Note: Translations from the original French, Afrikaans, Portuguese, or other language sources are by the author. I have attempted to accurately reflect characters' correct ranks at the relevant periods under discussion and to indicate where these changed as they were promoted; I have, however, continued using the ranks of pseudo-operators after they went 'civilian' so as to indicate their hierarchy. Lastly, contemporary geographic names are used throughout. For example, South West Africa and Rhodesia only become Namibia and Zimbabwe, respectively, after independence. This may conflict with current Namibian and Zimbabwean sensibilities but is historically accurate. The airfield codes in South West Africa (which all changed on independence) are cited as per the pilots' logbooks.

List of abbreviations

ANC	African National Congress
AZAPO	Azanian People's Organisation
BOSS	Bureau of State Security
BSAP	British South Africa Police
CBW	chemical and biological warfare
CCB	Civil Cooperation Bureau
CIA	Central Intelligence Agency
CIC	Coordinating Intelligence Committee
CIO	Central Intelligence Organisation
ConCourt	Constitutional Court
CSI	Chief of Staff Intelligence
D40	Delta 40
DST	Directorate of Special Tasks
EMLC	Elektroniese, Meganiese, Landboukundige en Chemiese Ingenieursvaardighede
EO	Executive Outcomes
FAF	forward airfields
FAPLA	People's Armed Forces of Liberation of Angola

FBI	Federal Bureau of Investigation
FNLA	National Front for the Liberation of Angola
FPLM	People's Forces of Liberation of Mozambique
FRELIMO	Mozambique Liberation Front
IFP	Inkatha Freedom Party
IWB	Irregular Warfare Branch
JMCs	Joint Management Centres
KIK	Co-ordinating Intelligence Committee
MI	Military Intelligence
MK	uMkhonto we Sizwe
MPLA	People's Movement for the Liberation of Angola
NIS	National Intelligence Service
NPA	National Prosecuting Authority
NSMS	National Security Management System
PAC	Pan Africanist Congress
PCLU	Priority Crimes Litigation Unit
PLAN	Peoples' Liberation Army of Namibia
RAR	Rhodesian African Rifles
RENAMO	Mozambican National Resistance
RLI	Rhodesian Light Infantry
SAAF	South African Air Force
SACP	South African Communist Party
SADF	South African Defence Force

SANDF	South African National Defence Force
SAP	South African Police
SAS	Special Air Service
SB	Special Branch
SF	Special Forces
SPO	Section of Pseudo-Operations
SSC	State Security Council
SWAPO	South West African People's Organisation
SWAPOL	South West African Police
SWATF	South West Africa Territorial Force
TRC	Truth and Reconciliation Commission
TREWITS	Teen-Rewolusionêre Inligtingstaakspan
UANC	United African National Council
UDF	United Democratic Front
UN	United Nations
UNITA	National Union for the Total Independence of Angola
US	United States
ZANLA	Zimbabwe African National Liberation Army
ZANU	Zimbabwean African National Union
ZAPU	Zimbabwe African People's Union
ZCIO	Zimbabwean Central Intelligence Organisation
ZIPRA	Zimbabwe People's Revolutionary Army
ZSOU	Zimbabwe Special Operations Unit

Foreword by Nkosinathi Biko

This book will make your stomach turn. Do not avert your eyes.

Our efforts to understand and document exactly how wide the footprint of apartheid's atrocities stretched, how far its violence travelled within and beyond our borders, have not gone far enough. Death Flight shines a much-needed light on some of the darkest corners of a regime waging a desperate and dirty fight against the inevitable. It is the first detailed exploration of the horrendous practice of flinging murdered prisoners into the depths of the Atlantic Ocean.

By following the thread of apartheid's violence into Namibia, Mozambique, Zimbabwe, Lesotho, Angola, Swaziland, and Zambia, Death Flight elucidates the transnational nature of this crime against humanity. In so doing, it raises fascinating questions about the role of international law in the attainment of hitherto evasive justice.

The general callousness with which apartheid's henchmen treated human life is an assault on one's senses. In the process, the book demolishes the supremacist argument central to apartheid, that at its core lay a desire to bring enlightenment to a 'backward' people.

I found it disturbing that most of the death flight victims in the book could not be identified because the interviewees chose 'not to remember' details. It is unimaginable that a system ostensibly operating on the basis of security intelligence would have disposed of people without knowledge of the risk (real or imagined) that they presented and, most importantly, without knowing their identities – the basic construct of the world of intelligence.

One hopes that the names that did make it into the book will bring some closure to many a family who, to date, may have had little idea of what happened to their beloved.

And for those whose identities remain unverified, one hopes that, by turning the light on this hitherto 'concealed' class of victims, Death Flight will invite further scholarship and activism probing this issue. It appears that this important task escaped even the TRC.

Adding to the contemporary relevance of the book is the disturbing revelation of a covert, post-TRC process of exemption for perpetrators, as well as an inexplicable (if not unconstitutional) change to the policy of the National Prosecuting Authority. One hopes that this may provide impetus for the wheels of justice to once again start turning.

This part of the book resonates with the recent progressive judgment handed down in the Ahmed Timol matter by Judge Billy Mothle. The case has re-energised the efforts of many families in South Africa seeking justice for the unresolved political killings of their loved ones. The court proceedings, aimed at ensuring that João Rodrigues is held accountable for the murder of Timol, have exposed the conniving role played by some structures of the democratic government in protecting the perpetrators of apartheid.

The recent denial by former president FW de Klerk that apartheid was a crime against humanity triggered an outcry and a national debate about our past. The contents of this book make an irrefutable case confirming the commission – in the most brutal of ways – of such a crime. Furthermore, it raises serious questions about the role of members of the State Security Council, which at one stage included De Klerk himself, along with a broad network of other senior members of government.

Death Flight is a daring mission to salvage the ghosts of those who were thought to have been eternally dissolved, by apartheid Special Forces, deep in the oceanic waters off our shores. It is destined to become an invaluable tool, connecting the dots in the quest to ensure that no victim of the deadly hand of apartheid is left unaccounted for.

Nkosinathi Biko
May 2020

PART V

Aftermath: Our Pact of Forgetting

38

The end of the Border War

The settlement that ended the Border War and led to the independence of South West Africa laid the groundwork for a complex set of manoeuvres by the apartheid military chiefs to ensure that the dirty warriors of D40, Barnacle, and the CCB escaped prosecution.

The war had escalated as it reached its end. In particular, a series of large-scale SADF and SWATF incursions into southern Angola attempted to block the Angolan armed forces and their Cuban, Eastern Bloc, and South West African allies from rolling over UNITA and changing the balance of power in the country.

Notably, Operation Moduler peaked with the Battle of the Lomba River (9 to 30 September 1987), the largest armoured clash on the African continent since the Battle of El Alamein in 1942. It resulted in victory for the SADF/SWATF and UNITA, which drove FAPLA and its allies back to Cuito Cuanavale. FAPLA lost 525 fighters in the battle – compared to the seventeen of the SADF – and its 47 Brigade was annihilated.

Despite the victory at the Lomba River, the SADF/SWATF was unable to achieve its tactical and strategic goals in subsequent battles. The resulting stalemate allowed for the initiation of peace talks on 3 and 4 May 1988 in London. On 22 December, the Tripartite Accords between South Africa, Cuba, and Angola, backed by the United States and the Soviet Union (SWAPO and UNITA were not signatories), were ratified by the United Nations in New York, officially ending the Border War. The agreement led to the withdrawal of all foreign troops – Cuban, Eastern Bloc and South African – from Angola, and triggered the implementation of UN Resolution 435 on the independence of South West Africa, to become known as Namibia.

It was a stunning end to a 23-year conflict that had left some 2 500 South Africans dead, along with 12 300 Namibians, perhaps 5 000 Cubans – and countless Angolans.

Pretoria had fought the Soviet-backed Luanda to a standstill, but the changing geopolitical climate, partly brought about by Mikhail Gorbachev's policies of glasnost and perestroika in the Soviet Union, meant that South Africa was now prepared to agree to Namibian independence as a kind of test case for how peace might be achieved in South Africa itself. It was a tentative policy direction that became irreversible with the fall of the Berlin Wall on 9 November 1989.

Though the CCB continued its pseudo-operations in this period, these were increasingly marked by failure. For example, on 11 January 1988, the ZSOU's Team Juliet in Zimbabwe, consisting of Kit Bawden, Barry Bawden, Guy Bawden, Michael Smith, Senior Superintendent Kevin Woods, and Transkei-born Special Branch Sergeant Phillip Conjwayo, was broken when Woods, Smith and Conjwayo were arrested following a car bombing in Bulawayo that killed six ANC operatives and a civilian Zambian driver.

'According to information given to the [Truth and Reconciliation] Commission by one of those involved in the operation, this was a CCB project. The orders were given by a member of the CCB's inner circle, a senior Special Forces operator who did not applied [sic] for amnesty and so cannot be named. The orders were passed on to the Zimbabwean agents via Mr Gray Branfield and Mr Alan Trowsdale.'[1]

The mention of Branfield is incorrect because we know he resigned from Barnacle in early 1986, probably just before it was reorganised as the CCB, handing over to Trowsdale. Woods, Conjwayo, and Smith would all be sentenced to death, but their sentences were commuted to life five years in, and they were released eighteen years later.

An earlier mission by the CCB to free the men had been bungled. According to Peter Stiff the would-be rescue team included Dennis 'Sammy' Beahan, a former British Army soldier who had traversed the SAS, McGuinness's Special Branch at the Bindura fort, and 6 Recce. After serving in 6 Recce, he returned to Zimbabwe for a short stint in the Zimbabwe National Army, before winding up as the security manager at the Sandton Sun Hotel from whence he was recruited. Other members included 'Big Jim' McGuire, who had a similar career, and John 'Aussie' McLoud who was believed to be ex-Australian Army, with experience in Africa, and two black 5 Recce askaris.[2]

Stiff records 'Brian' (Gray Branfield), who Woods said had been temporarily brought back in to try and oversee the escape attempt of his former double agents,[3] as being distinctly unimpressed with the quality of these pseudo-operators.

Back at Speskop, Colonel Johan Theron was sent on a year-long staff course spanning 1988 and 1989 before being posted to Military Intelligence as SSO Project Security, giving him oversight over all secret SADF projects, including Project Coast.

Meanwhile, South West Africa moved rapidly towards independence. On 7 June 1989, Administrator-General Louis Pienaar decreed a blanket amnesty to all PLAN and MK guerrillas: 'No criminal procedures shall be instituted or continued following the date of this proclamation in any law court against any person . . . in respect of a [politically motivated] crime committed by such person at any time prior to the date mentioned, in the territory or elsewhere.'[4]

This blanket amnesty would later be extended by Pienaar to all SADF, SWATF, SAP, SWAPOL, and other government officials who had operated in South West Africa and beyond. This protective measure was issued on the very eve of Namibian independence on 21 March 1990 and has been narrowly interpreted as meaning that those responsible for Operation Dual's several hundred disappearances off the coast – whether by the D40/Barnacle/CCB killers themselves, or the Koevoet, SWAPOL, SAP, and Recce suppliers of their victims – are immune from prosecution for the death flights. As with other Namibian innovations, Pienaar's amnesty decree would also set a precedent for the looming transition to democracy in South Africa itself.

In September 1989, Chief of the SADF General Jannie Geldenhuys, apparently unnerved by public revelations of CCB involvement in the assassination, on the 12th of that month, of SWAPO advocate Anton Lubowski, ordered the CCB to shut down. It would take approximately a year, however, to account for its assets – to the extent that this was possible, given its chaotic and cavalier bookkeeping by Theunis Kruger – to wind it up, and properly to privatise its front companies. As the CCB was unbundled, one of the key results was the formation by the CCB's International Manager, Commandant Eeben Barlow, of Executive Outcomes (EO), a private military contracting company that would provide a home for many other former CCB pseudo-operatives, such as Region 5's Major Lafras Luitingh.

Among Executive Outcomes' most sterling recruits was Colonel Bert Sachse, who retired as 5 Recce OC in 1993. He would go on to run EO's successful operation in Sierra Leone against the rebel Revolutionary United Front (RUF) from March 1995 to November 1996 as a de facto 'brigadier' and later served as a private military contractor in Afghanistan.[5]

At least one former CCB operative did not survive the transition: former Swaziland and Mozambique Manager Corrie Meerholz, who had reverted to regular Special Forces in January 1989 as the OC of 5 Recce, was killed in a mysterious car crash on 24 November 1989. The straightness of the road, and the unusually high temperatures at which his car burned out (the fillings in Meerholz's teeth melted and he was only identifiable by his Rolex), leads Peter Stiff to speculate that his car had been rigged with an incendiary bomb because he knew too much and was too independently minded. 'In retrospect, now that Operation Dual has finally been brought out into the cold, clear light of day, it becomes a matter of conjecture whether or not Corrie had become "a package that needed to be put into the system".'[6]

39

The CCB shuts down

The existence of the SAP death squad C1 and its base at Vlakplaas became public knowledge when a death-row prisoner, Almond Nofomela, made a last-minute, bombshell confession.

Sentenced to hang for the purely criminal murder of white farmer Johannes Lourens, Nofomela, who was born in 1957, spilled the beans on politically motivated killings he had been involved in as a member of a hitherto-secret Security Branch death squad.

Nofomela named C1 as the unit, Vlakplaas as its primary base, and Captain Dirk Coetzee as his former commander at the farm from the time when Nofomela had joined the unit in 1980. He had served under Coetzee until 1982, when the latter had been replaced by Captain Jan Coetzee, and then until the end of the 1983–1985 tenure of Lieutenant-Colonel Jack Cronjé.[1]

Nofomela was granted a stay of execution, and Coetzee dramatically confirmed his claims in the independent Afrikaans weekly Vrye Weekblad.

Pandora's box had been opened, and other police and military officers – no doubt with a weather eye to warding off potential future prosecutions – also started talking to journalists and to their more honest colleagues about apartheid's dirty war. In the wake of the damaging Nofomela–Coetzee revelations about the police death squad, the military black-ops men, realising that their own actions might be next to be exposed, began to cover their tracks.

Stiff writes that in January 1990, CCB boss Joe Verster was informed by General Jannie Geldenhuys that President FW de Klerk, South Africa's reform-minded new leader, had assured him that there would be no witch-hunt against the CCB. Nonetheless, in mid-January, Verster and the new GOC Special Forces Major-General Eddie Webb, who had taken over on the first of the month, appear to have arranged for the 'disappearance' of the bulk of the CCB's financial and operational records from storage in a strong room at Speskop.[2] Verster later claimed in a letter to De Klerk that this had been done under pressure from four generals, including Geldenhuys's predecessor, General Kat Liebenberg.

The tide of history began to flow at a rate that proved alarming for apartheid's hit men. On 2 February 1990, De Klerk made his watershed announcement in Parliament that the ANC's Nelson Mandela and all political prisoners would be freed, that a moratorium on judicial executions was in place, and that all the liberation movements – including the ANC, SACP, PAC, and AZAPO – were henceforth unbanned.

On the same day, De Klerk appointed the Judicial Inquiry into Certain Alleged Murders under Judge Louis Harms, to be known as the Harms Commission, to examine Vlakplaas and the CCB. On 21 March, South West Africa gained independence as Namibia under Sam Nujoma's SWAPO. The SADF soon admitted in a public statement that the CCB had been the covert arm of Special Forces. Seeing the writing on the wall, Colonel Johan Theron, the longest-serving operative involved in the Operation Dual death flights, resigned his commission and took early retirement from the SADF.

On 2 March, Joe Verster was arrested, but was shortly released on ministerial orders, allegedly so that he could testify before the Harms Commission. But the Commission proved to be unequal to the task: with Harms, who was openly hostile to allegations against the security establishment, as the sole commissioner, it was easily led astray by Verster.

An SAP/Harms Commission investigations team that seized CCB documents from both Theunis Kruger's smallholding and the old Renosterspruit D40/Barnacle HQ later simply returned the documents to the CCB without sharing relevant files as promised with fellow policemen investigating the assassinations of Anton Lubowski and another CCB victim, Wits academic Dr David Webster.

Anthony Turton notes: 'The proud record of SADF SF operations is now reduced to comedy as the extent of the criminalisation of the internal component of SF becomes known to the public. This unfairly stigmatises all members of the SADF SF in the future.'[3]

That is an understatement: by this stage, it was patently obvious that the remarkable achievements of Special Forces long-range reconnaissance and other legitimate covert activities conducted by Recce operatives during the Border War had been indelibly besmirched by association with the grotesque war crimes committed by the Speskop-directed pseudo-operatives of the D40/Barnacle/CCB line. Still, commanders like Charl Naudé insisted that the blame for any criminal CCB activities be laid at the feet of its Security Branch component, and that the conduct of its SADF component was unimpeachable.[4]

On 31 July, Geldenhuys announced that the CCB had ceased operations. Former GOC Special Forces Major-General Kat Liebenberg justified the CCB and its pseudo-ops history in a letter to the newspapers, reproduced by Paul Els: 'Special Forces: what countries in the world have had the good fortune to have Special Forces like ours? A land, sea and air, as well as a pseudo capacity with everything under one command, giving us the capability of being extremely flexible in the application of these forces . . . The Civil Cooperation Bureau (CCB) has been denigrated and will probably be denigrated even more in future, but I think that it is time that their excellent contribution to the security of South Africa is recognised. If the media reports are correct that members made mistakes and are now applying for amnesty, it is not for me to comment and perhaps influence the judicial process.'[5] de Kock had merely been cosmetically renamed C10 in January 1991 and, in April of that year, with the shutting down of the Security Branch, it was transferred to the Crime Intelligence Service under the command of Lieutenant-General Krappies Engelbrecht. But although technically remandated to fight organised crime – and in defiance of the now widespread public knowledge of its true function – C10 continued to sow death and destruction.

However, on the Security Branch side, C1 under Colonel Eugene

C-Section and its operational bases such as Vlakplaas were in fact only shut down in April 1993,[6] while some former CCB and C10 pseudo-operators recombined with some former Military Intelligence spooks to form the so-called Badger Unit, as noted by the Independent Board of Inquiry for December 1992 to January 1993: 'In late January [1993] the Saturday Star reported that some of South Africa's most benighted security force members past and present have banded together in a secret well-trained and well-armed unit to protect their own interests. The group has called itself the Badger Unit. Its membership includes former CCB members like Ferdi Barnard, MI operatives, security policemen, and former Rhodesian special forces members. There are at least 17 members, of which 12 are known. At least seven were until recently employed by the DCC [Directorate of Covert Collection].[7]

'Apart from Barnard, other members include – the former commander of the Vlakplaas unit Lt-Colonel [sic] Eugene de Kock, former CCB [South Africa] regional manager Staal Burger, former CCB co-ordinator Chappies Maree, MI operatives Leon Flores, Anton Niewoudt, Eugene Reilly and [Zimbabwean CIO and NIS double agent] Geoff Price and Vlakplaas policemen Paul van Dyk, "Snor" Vermeulen,[8] Charlie Chiatt, and Willie Nortje. Various Badger members have been implicated in atrocities ranging from sabotage to murder.'[9]

The purpose of the unit was described in the following blunt terms to the Saturday Star: 'Concerned security force operatives have formed a self-defence unit to protect themselves and their fellow members from any form of prosecution and retribution or revenge. If any government present or future dare to touch us, we will respond. If they take one of us, we will take 10 of them.'

In this period, with the SACP's Operation Vula possibly exposed as a plot to stage a national insurrection,[10] with the ANC and the Zulu nationalist Inkatha locked in a slaughterhouse war in Zululand and in the hostels of the Reef, and with the PAC and ultra-right cells committing blatant terror attacks, the SADF's dirty war actually escalated. It secretly initiated what would soon be described as 'Third Force' violence across the country – shadowy killings that could not be directly attributed to either the state and its allies such as Inkatha, or to the liberation movements.

On 18 December 1993, the Steyn Commission – chaired by SADF Chief of Staff Lieutenant-General Pierre Steyn – reported to De Klerk on its investigation into the maelstrom of allegations of Third Force terrorism and destabilisation activities and other rampant criminality in the SADF. It made very uncomfortable reading for De Klerk.

The TRC's Research Department later summed up the documents used to brief the President: 'These documents suggest that based on a variety of sources . . . it was evident that members, contract workers, and co-workers of the SADF were involved in unlawful, unauthorised action including: assassinations, deeds of terror, destabilisation of neighbouring states, corruption, encouraging factional politics within parties, [and] flagrant disregard for state policy.'

In particular, the Steyn Commission accused Special Forces of, in the researchers' words, 'destabilisation actions in black townships, stockpiling arms and developing operational springboards in neighbouring countries, [and] training military wings of internal as well as external movements, e.g., Inkatha, Renamo', while Brigadier Wouter Basson's 7th Medical Battalion was accused, among other things, of 'involvement in poison murders'.

Although 'concrete evidence was not available, monitoring of conversations, movements and transport suggested that, under cover of Operation Pastoor, elements of Special Forces were involved in East Rand violence; that Recce Regiments 1 & 5 were active in KwaZulu [Zululand], raising the possibility that they may be involved in activities there.'

Curiously, the TRC Research Department's summary of the Steyn report noted the possible continuity of the old CCB 'elimination' function, several years after the CCB was officially dissolved – and connected it directly to Basson: 'An elimination group, under Dr/Brig Wouter Basson was said to exist comprising ex-members of a group that Charl Naudé (CCB/Special Forces) had previously run. This group was said to be in charge of all SADF elimination actions. It was believed that Genl Kat Liebenberg had been fully aware, and possibly until 1989 personally involved in the planning, of this group's activities. Others said to be connected included Genl Lothar Neethling of the SAP's forensic division, Johan Theron of 4 RR, Johan Truter, financial manager of Roodeplaats Navorsingslaboratorium[11] (connected to the CBW programme), and Col At Nel. There are also references to an ex-CCB group known as the "Binnekring" [Inner Circle] who were monitoring black radicals. (Is this possibly the same group?).'

Thus, after decades in the shadows, Colonel Johan Theron's name finally broke through into the light of presidential, if not public, scrutiny, correctly linking him to the Recces (if incorrectly to 4 Recce Regiment), the chemical and biological warfare programme, and Charl Naudé's old 'elimination group'.

Still, the evidence presented to De Klerk included suggestions that there had been an attempt in about 1992 'to get permission [from the SADF] to get a CCB-type organisation going again. It would appear that after permission was not forthcoming, it was decided to go ahead with a private initiative. Names mentioned include: Glen Gorman (ex-CCB), AO1 Pieta van Zyl, Rocky van Blerk (ex-CCB), Dr Vernon Joynt (linked to one of the CBW front companies).'

Rocky van Blerk is no doubt the ex-Recce sniper Sergeant Rocky van Blerk, who had become a D40/Barnacle intelligence operative under Major Gray Branfield, one of the few Rhodesian survivors of the initial crew. 'Joe Verster was known to have been on a recruiting drive in the Johannesburg area in July 1992,' the TRC researchers wrote.

'It was said that this was connected to him establishing a security and transport company that would transport goods to the Frontline States. However, he also appeared to have access to vast quantities of money (R800 000 was mentioned in connection with an unknown purpose); he had good contact with a general in the SADF; it was rumoured that Eugene de Kock was leaving SAP and going to join him at the end of September . . . Verster was said by ex-CCB members to have R19 million available; funding from criminal activities. A great deal of socialising/contact was being maintained by ex-CCB members. Favourite hangouts included: La Fragola Restaurant at Sunnyside, Eagle's Nest at Valhalla, Oyster Bar at Lynnwood,' all in Pretoria.

The TRC Research Department's Steyn summary noted that the CCB successor's stay-behind network in Zimbabwe was strangely still operational:[12] 'A Sergeant Mazaruva Tapera Nickedimus of 5 RR was questioned by the ZCIO (Zimbabwe Intelligence) during a visit to Zimbabwe and stated that Robson Mugadza, Josphat Dube, Charles Mutanda, Kenneth Dube, and Jim Reeves (SA), were members of the Zimbabwe CCB, were still operational and targeting activists.'

This suggests a remarkable longevity for a clandestine intelligence, sabotage, and assassination cell, probably of the old ZSOU – several years after its parent CCB had been officially dissolved.

But the tale was still one of smoke and mirrors, of garbled allegations, half-understood intelligence, tangled timelines, harum-scarum tales, and disinformation – no doubt leavened with a good dose of backstabbing as former pseudo-operators attempted to cover their tracks and strike out on their own.

40

Shadow boxing: The Trial of the Generals

While Neil Kriel had been able to put his death flight past behind him – meeting only once with Johan Theron in 1993 or 1994 for a quick cup of coffee[1] and nevermore communicating with his former fellow dirty warriors in Delta 40 such as Trevor Floyd – the former securocrat chiefs who had been in charge of apartheid's Total Strategy were facing the challenge of what to do with the deluge of information spewing out about their past shady activities.

In 1992, Project Coast had been renamed Project Jota and Brigadier Wouter Basson had been replaced as director by Colonel Ben Steyn. The writing was on the wall for the old dirty warriors, and in the same year, on 31 March, Special Forces was downgraded from being an independent arm of service falling directly under the Chief of the Defence Force to yet another military unit, renamed Directorate Reconnaissance Regiments, falling under the Chief of the Army instead.

Its status was further downgraded with its GOC SF being required to be a mere colonel instead of a major-general, and former 4 Recce founder Colonel Malcolm Kinghorn was installed in that post. The new Directorate also lost its well-equipped HQ at Speskop, with the staff relocating to Army HQ in Pretoria.

On 29 January 1993, South Africa announced internationally that it had destroyed its chemical and biological warfare stocks, and on 24 March President FW de Klerk revealed in Parliament that South Africa had once operated, but had now successfully dismantled under International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) supervision, its six deliverable nuclear weapons and its viable nuclear weapons programme.

The apartheid state's key Cold War programmes were being shut down: on 31 March 1993, Wouter Basson retired from the SADF, but was immediately re-employed as a civilian for twelve months to tie up the loose ends of Project Jota, particularly regarding its overseas entities.

On the very eve of the first democratic, all-race election on 27 April 1994, which swept Nelson Mandela and the ANC into the Union Buildings at the head of an interim power-sharing Government of National Unity, De Klerk granted amnesty by fiat to some 4 000 military officers; the military was insistent that its perpetrators be protected.

On 13 September 1995, South Africa signed the Chemical Weapons Convention, and in the following year the remnants of both Project Jota and of the second-generation CCB were finally, quietly wound up.[2]

But the former apartheid military chiefs were still at risk of criminal investigation by the new democratic state, and it all came to a head in 1996 with the 'Trial of the Generals' in which former Minister of Defence General Magnus Malan, former GOC Special Forces Major-General Kat Liebenberg and eighteen others faced thirteen counts of murder and one of conspiracy to commit murder.

The charges related to a single massacre on 21 January 1987 in which seven adults and six children under ten were slaughtered by gunmen wielding AK-47s at the home of the Inkatha-supporting father of Bheki Ntuli, a supporter of the ANC-affiliated United Democratic Front, at KwaMakhutha, south of Durban. The trial revealed DST1's covert support for Inkatha via the training by 5 Recce and others of an impi of some 200 Inkatha members in the Caprivi Strip under Operation Marion,[3] and the prosecution was based on a paper trail of documents seized from Military Intelligence headquarters that showed a clear chain of command between Malan, who reported directly to PW Botha, and the killers on the ground in KwaMakhutha.

Security Branch chief Lieutenant-General Basie Smit – who had oversight of C10 in the 1990s[4] – was implicated in trying to ensure that members of the Caprivi death-squad function never endured prosecution. And yet it all fell apart: on 11 October, Judge Jan Hugo found that, while the state had paid Inkatha vigilantes, he did not accept that the kill order came from Malan, and so acquitted Malan and the other accused.

The trial had provided proof positive that the generals had used Special Forces to train and arm civilians as pseudo-ops death-squad entities, so the judgment sent shockwaves through the international anti-apartheid movement, and there were strong suspicions that the State's case had been sabotaged under higher orders in order to allow the generals and their underlings to walk free.

A critical opportunity had been irrevocably lost. Never again would an apartheid military chief of General Malan's rank face the courts for the crimes of apartheid, and Malan, the most likely importer into the SADF of the secret doctrine of disappearance, would die peacefully in his bed on 18 July 2011 aged 81.

Only nineteen days after the generals were set free, following a marathon trial, former C10 commander Colonel Eugene de Kock, dubbed 'Prime Evil' by the media, was jailed for two life terms for murder, conspiracy to murder, attempted murder, assault, kidnapping, illegal possession of firearms, and fraud, plus 212 years for crimes against humanity. It needs to be stressed that De Kock remains the highest-ranking officer jailed for the crimes of apartheid – and that he was a policeman, not a military officer.

The crimes of C10's military opposite unit, D40, would have to wait several more years to be exposed. Even then, the formidable Truth and Reconciliation Commission was unable to do more than scratch the surface, from its first public hearing on 15 April 1996 until the delivery of its Final Report to President Thabo Mbeki on 21 March 2003.[5]

And yet something truly earth-shattering was also under way in late 1996 – the watershed year in which the CCB and Project Jota were shut down, the generals were freed, De Kock was put away for life, and the TRC began its work. A hitherto undisclosed process of secret negotiations began between the SADF military chiefs of the old regime and the top Cabinet ministers of the new dispensation.

Major-General Dirk R Marais, Deputy Chief of the Army, and the Convenor of the SADF Contact Bureau, a co-ordinating body which, during the TRC's working period, acted as a focal point for serving and former military officers, co-ordinating their response to the commission, told this author: 'I was the last convenor of the South African Defence Force. My counterpart on the ANC (government) side was Mr Jürgen Kögl. The deliberations were initiated by the ANC on initiative of Mr [President] Mandela who was represented by [Deputy President] Mr [Thabo] Mbeki and later succeeded by [Deputy President] Mr [Jacob] Zuma.'[6]

Asked to confirm who initiated the talks, Marais stated: 'I think General [Constand] Viljoen said Mandela approached him and then he discussed it with us [the SADF Contact Bureau] and then we said "OK, we can discuss it," then Mandela appointed Deputy President [Thabo] Mbeki . . . he approached Constand Viljoen. General Viljoen then discussed the matter with the other former Chiefs of the Defence Force and I was adopted as Convenor, and then he [Viljoen] replied to the request of the ANC, [of] Mbeki, he said "OK, we are prepared to talk to you".'[7]

The deliberations in question would last seven years and constitute one of the most dramatic hidden processes of the democratic transition – with far-reaching consequences: negotiations towards implementing what in a previous book this author has termed a 'Pact of Forgetting', borrowing from the example of post-Francoist Spain.[8]

There, a political agreement in the mid-1970s between the newly unbanned leftist parties and the former ruling rightist parties, which still had deep ties to the armed forces, ensured that no prosecutions would take place for gross human rights violations committed during the Spanish Civil War (1936–1939) and the rule of Francisco Franco (1939–1975). In Spain, the Pact of Forgetting was seen by both sides as a way of preventing 'vengeance' against the killers on both sides, and so ensuring the stability of the democratic transition. The pact was codified and institutionalised in the Amnesty Law of 1977, which provided wide-ranging immunity from prosecution for perpetrators of war crimes prior to the coming of democracy.

Marais told this author: 'I had no agenda – up till now – on what they [the ANC] wanted to achieve. I think they wanted to keep the former Chiefs of the Defence Force involved in discussions so as to prevent them organising anything they might have – [but] there was no such idea from our side.'

And in fact by this stage, the right-wing militia forces had been rendered a laughing stock by the military defeat of the neo-fascist Afrikaner Weerstandsbeweging (AWB) in Bophuthatswana on 11 March 1994. Meanwhile, a mooted insurrection by Citizen Force reservists and rural Commandos to establish a white separatist state had been nipped in the bud by General Constand Viljoen's formation of the right-wing Freedom Front political party to contest the elections, and the new South African National Defence Force (SANDF) under General Georg Meiring had demonstrated its loyalty to the government of the day. Yet the new ANC government – the National Party having withdrawn from the Government of National Unity on 30 June 1996 – was clearly still insecure about any threat the old generals might pose.

Basing his version on interviews with Viljoen and Kögl in particular, researcher Ole Bubenzer states that the ANC leadership's reason for making the approach to the generals was sixfold. Firstly, there was 'the still very volatile political situation in KwaZulu-Natal, which was due to prolonged political tensions between the ANC and IFP during the 1990s';[9] Jacob Zuma was trying to broker a peace between the parties and it was feared that prosecutions resulting from the TRC would stir up the hornets' nest in the run-up to the second democratic elections on 2 June 1999.

'The initial intention was, thus, to create an amnesty scheme which would specifically cover the political crimes that happened between the ANC and IFP supporters in KwaZulu-Natal [but the] generals . . . categorically refused to support a regionally confined amnesty process.'

Secondly, 'According to Kögl, one reason for the government's initiative was the SADF's, and therefore the generals', alleged [Third Force] involvement in the KwaZulu-Natal [and Highveld] conflicts between the IFP and ANC', and so government leaders 'were wary that the generals could still possess knowledge of . . . hidden and unknown weapons caches, established during the late 1980s and early 1990s', which could be used to inflame the conflict. Thirdly, the ANC 'also considered that the TRC process suffered from a lack of sufficient findings on SADF activities . . .' largely because the Contact Bureau had ensured a low level of TRC amnesty applications by SADF members, especially regarding CCB/Third Force destabilisation during the negotiations period, and other 'still uncovered secret SADF activities'. Operation Dual was among such unknowns at the time.

Fourthly, there was 'the government's fear that South Africa could be exposed to claims for reparation and damages by countries which had been attacked by the apartheid state'; neighbouring countries had indeed discussed the possibility of such reparations, so the 'government . . . tried not to fuel such discussions by prosecuting SADF members for the atrocities caused in other countries. In this regard, the aim was to make sure that full-scale criminal trials did not go ahead.'

Fifthly, the government was wary that a purge of the new SANDF would undermine its military effectiveness – and possibly create 'legal uncertainty' over some SANDF actions in peacekeeping operations in Africa. Lastly, Bubenzer states: 'The consultations generally have shown that the government is not at all keen to promote post-TRC prosecutions. Rather it has indicated its desire to leave the apartheid past behind as quickly as possible, in order to move forward towards a stable and reconciled nation and to avoid thwarting the project of nation-building by costly and extensive trials, which constantly bring up the atrocities and injustices of the past.'

But there was another crucial impetus for the ANC's initiating what became a seven-year secret negotiations process: from the outset, President Mandela's objective, as expressed via his team leaders – Thabo Mbeki in his capacities both as Deputy President of the country and ANC president (from 1997 onwards), and Jürgen Kögl, the ANC's/Government's Convenor – was explicitly a quid pro quo. In Marais' words: 'They don't want us to be charged – and they don't want them to be charged'[10] – or, as Marais later claimed were Mbeki's words: 'I don't want my President to be charged in court.' He explained, however, that Mbeki had not meant this in the specific, as in President Nelson Mandela, but rather in the generic, in that he did not want to see any ANC State President facing charges.

It is a curious aspect of the negotiations that Marais' opposite number, businessman Jürgen Kögl, hailed from South West Africa, the territory in which South Africa's armed forces had spilled the most blood, and in which Operation Dual had performed the bulk of its grisly disposal work. When Mbeki returned from exile, he stayed in Kögl's apartment.[11]

A letter written by Marais to then Deputy President Jacob Zuma in early 2004, for the signature of the former Chiefs of the SADF,[12] recalled the initiation of the lengthy series of secret, high-level talks: 'A process of communicating between the ANC initially and the government lately with the former chiefs of the SA Defence Force was initiated by the Deputy President of South Africa Mr T Mbeki when he approached General CL Viljoen in [late 1996?].

General Viljoen after consultation with the former Chiefs of the Defence Force within the structure of the SADF Contact Bureau conveyed our preparedness to communicate with Mr Mbeki in his capacity as Deputy President and President of the NEC of the ANC. A convenor, Mr J Kögl, apparently empowered by Mr Mbeki, arranged for a meeting at his house in Johannesburg [in early 1997?].

'That meeting was in the form of discussions followed by a dinner hosted by Mr Kögl. It was attended by Mr Mbeki and various of his ministers as well as the Premier of Mpumalanga Mr M [Mathews] Phosa,' leader of an ANC lobby arguing that its members be protected from prosecution, 'and by us the former Chiefs of the SADF. There was enthusiastic agreement that the commenced communication should be continued and that more meetings should follow. We, the former Chiefs of the SADF, being aware of the Deputy President's tight work schedule, suggested that he appoint one of his ministers to represent the ANC in future deliberations. Mr Mbeki expressed, however, the opinion that the process of communication that was mutually agreed to was so important to him that he preferred to remain the prime representative of the ANC in further deliberations.'

Bubenzer claims that the talks were initiated later, in 1998, at the same time as a separate series of negotiations with representatives of the police hierarchy began.[13] He further claims that Constand Viljoen was initially approached not by Mandela but by Jacob Zuma, then a KwaZulu-Natal provincial cabinet minister, though Zuma could only have been authorised at the very highest level, 'with the aim of consulting over questions of criminal accountability in the wake of the TRC. Viljoen, however, considered that such matters were better discussed with the group of former SADF generals who had established the support network for former soldiers and the Kontak Buro [the SADF Contact Bureau convened by Marais] who were, thus, already working intensely on amnesty issues and prosecutions. He immediately referred Zuma to the network of generals around [Jannie] Geldenhuys.'[14]

Bubenzer writes that Geldenhuys and Zuma proceeded to meet, both sides flanked by legal advisors: 'The consultations were, like the security police consultations, generally aimed at finding a mutual solution as to how to avoid trials after the TRC through new indemnity mechanisms . . . All meetings took place strictly separated from the meetings with the police, which was in the interest of the generals.'[15]

This compartmentalisation by the ANC of talks between the SADF and SAP may have been a divide-and-rule strategy for the ANC, but, as the apex predators of the apartheid state, it likewise suited the military to separate its cause from that of their less powerful and looser-lipped police colleagues.

Marais said[16] that on his side at the talks were former Defence Minister General Magnus Malan, former Chiefs of the Defence Force Generals Constand Viljoen and Jannie Geldenhuys, and former Chief of the Army General Kat Liebenberg – although sometimes they brought in other generals, such as former Surgeon-General Niël Knobel, or one of the former Chiefs of the Air Force, as required.

Although Marais said that no specific offences were ever discussed, Kat Liebenberg's continuous presence suggests that he was monitoring any potential references to Special Forces' black ops such as Operation Dual – though it was totally unknown by their ANC opposites at the time – while Knobel's intermittent presence suggests he was monitoring the ANC's limited knowledge of the Project Coast chemical and biological warfare programme.

On the ANC/government side, Marais said Mbeki's team at the talks usually consisted of the 'security cluster': this would make it, initially under Mandela's Cabinet, Minister of Defence Joe Modise, Minister of Safety and Security (Police) Sydney Mufamadi, and Minister of Justice Dullah Omar.

'Many deliberations followed and mutual agreements were reached,' the letter read. Marais said that the discussions towards formulating a 'Pact of Forgetting' (this author's term, not Marais') took place once every few months, 'a few times at Kögl's house, a few times at the Presidency, once in Mbeki's house, and once in Durban with Zuma' – and were 'very social'.

41

Half-truths at the Truth Commission

Despite the intensity and probity of its investigators' tireless work in describing crimes against humanity committed by all sides between 1 March 1960 and 26 April 1994, public knowledge of Delta 40 would remain an ephemeral flicker in the peripheral vision of TRC investigators.

It is not necessary to detail the extent to which the TRC assessed the SADF's sweeping guilt in conducting a dirty war against the civilian populations of South Africa and neighbouring countries, other than to note its controversial finding that 'while some acts of regional destabilisation may have been a defence against Communism, the purpose of the war was also to preserve white minority rule in South Africa and was, therefore, a race war'. We will focus on what the TRC revealed about the military's death-squad functions specifically – or rather, how the military managed to obscure the existence and operations of such entities, while allowing the police death-squad elements to bear the brunt of scrutiny.

Along the lines of their secret 'Pact of Forgetting' negotiations with the ANC, the military chiefs attempted in fact more stridently to demand that a blanket amnesty – similar to that applied in South West Africa in 1989 and 1990 – be applied to cover all apartheid-era crimes committed by whatever force.

On 14 July 1998, nineteen years after the first Operation Dual death flight, former Defence Minister General Magnus Malan and former SADF Chiefs General Constand Viljoen and General Jannie Geldenhuys made their suggestion public to the TRC.

They had submitted a similar demand the previous month to Minister of Justice Dullah Omar – who had ironically been targeted by the CCB for assassination. Yet the TRC's Deputy Chairperson, Dr Alex Boraine, responded that it could not make legislative recommendations on a general amnesty. Although they were unable to succeed with the TRC, which completed its work within a few months of their appeal, behind the scenes the secret 'Pact of Forgetting' talks with the ANC Cabinet ministers continued. According to Marais' letter to Zuma: 'When Mr Mbeki could not attend [the talks], he authorised someone, usually a minister, and later on when he became president in 1999, you [Deputy President Jacob Zuma] represented him. In execution of mutual decisions, much effort was put in by the Contact Bureau and some of your ministers to prepare papers and submissions for acceptance by the Deputy president and later on the President.'[1]

Ole Bubenzer names only Zuma, Penuell Maduna, Mathews Phosa, Charles Nqakula, and Sydney Mufamadi as being part of the talks, adding: 'On various occasions Thabo Mbeki was also present, as Vice [sic] President and later in his capacity as the President.'[2] Former Presidents Mbeki and Zuma did not respond to queries by the time of going to press, and neither did Maduna and Nqakula.[3] But Mufamadi responded that although he had indeed participated in talks, they were not with the SADF but the parallel set with the SAP led by Security Branch chief General Johan van der Merwe, and were, he said, aimed at the 'difficult' task of 'convincing them to co-operate with the TRC.'[4] Phosa in turn flatly stated he was 'not part' of such negotiations as claimed by Bubenzer (who had cited Kögl) - but Phosa added that he had passed this author's emails on to Kögl who said 'he refuses to be interviewed about this at all.'[5]

Meanwhile, the TRC investigators prepared to consolidate their immense work. At the heart of the TRC's seven volumes, handed to President Nelson Mandela on 29 October 1998 as the TRC Interim Report and updated with the TRC Final Report of over 4 500 pages handed to President Thabo Mbeki on 21 March 2003, is the list of 21 748 victims identified by the Commission in its hearings. And yet, in the entire list there are only two SWAPO victims named: SWAPO lawyer Anton Lubowski, assassinated by the CCB in 1989; and 22-year-old Tshikani Nkuna, who was 'assaulted by members of the SAP at John Vorster Square, Johannesburg, in 1983. Mr Nkuna was interrogated and forced to admit to being a SWAPO member.'[6]

It is obviously untrue that in its bloody 23-year war against SWAPO, the apartheid authorities only accounted for two SWAPO victims. In echo of this blind spot in the record, Marjorie Jobson, co-ordinator of the Khulumani Support Group, a lobby group acting for victims of apartheid, confirmed that, while 'we have 169 cases on our disappearances database', none of them were SWAPO members.[7] The Final Report stressed that, while the police had proven a valuable source of information, the Commission 'received notably fewer amnesty applications from members of the former South African Defence Force (SADF), notwithstanding the fact that the SADF was involved in a series of regional conflicts over a period of more than fifteen years. Many of these conflicts transgressed the "laws of war" as laid down in international protocols.'[8]

And in fact, the TRC's Final Report admits to what can only be described as a fatal limitation of its scope: 'While few statements were received from deponents and victims outside South Africa, it has been argued that the majority of victims of gross violations of human rights were in fact residing outside the country's borders at the time the violations were committed.'

Nevertheless, in the chapter entitled 'The State Outside South Africa (1960–1990)', the TRC noted that evidence had been gathered of 'violations committed by South African security forces or their agents and/or surrogates in nine regional states: Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland, Angola, Mozambique, Zimbabwe, Zambia, Tanzania, and the Seychelles – and in Western Europe: in the United Kingdom, France, Belgium, the Netherlands, and Scandinavia.'[9]

Although no South West Africans were judicially executed during the occupation, out of fear of an international backlash, the TRC found that detentions for indefinite periods under emergency proclamations were widespread – as was the torture of detainees.

'In 1983, the SADF revealed that it had detained a total of 2 883 people during the 1977–83 period, while the security police disclosed that they had detained 2 624 people during the same period. Mass detentions in the "operational areas" were common. Many detainees were held secretly and without access to lawyers or relatives for long periods, sometimes years. Such conditions provided opportunities for prolonged abuse and torture.'

This period covers the formative phase of Delta 40/Barnacle – and gives an indication of the size of the detainee population that so worried Colonel Johan Theron that he came up with his own 'final solution'. As the report states: 'There is considerable evidence that the process of "turning" was accompanied by torture and that the price of non-compliance was summary execution. Once "turned", these askaris and other Koevoet members are said to have carried out atrocities while disguised as SWAPO fighters in order to discredit the liberation movement, as the Selous Scouts had done during the Rhodesian war . . .'

Finally, D40/Barnacle did make a named, albeit brief, appearance in the Truth Commission's Final Report, but its true nature, composition, and mandate was confused by the investigators and commissioners, who wrapped it up within a general description of the Recce Regiments: 'The four Recce regiments were numbered 1, 2, 4, and 5. For a brief period there was also a 3 Recce but that name seems to have given way to Delta 40 or D40. This unit was formed in response to the independence of Zimbabwe and the large numbers of experienced Rhodesian counterinsurgency personnel who were recruited into the South African security network through Operation Winter.'

As will be readily appreciated, here the ex-Selous Scouts unit 3 Recce, a formal if covert military Special Forces commando, was conflated with Delta 40, a secret 'civilian' pseudo-ops unit, even if they both reported to Speskop.

The Truth Commission's confusion, and slender knowledge of the staffing, functions, and operations of Delta 40 and its immediate successor, Barnacle, is excusable as its investigators and commissioners appear to have been deliberately misled, or at the very least grossly underinformed by the generals, in a TRC special hearing in Cape Town on 8 October 1997 at which former SADF chief General Constand Viljoen testified, as did the former GOC Special Forces, Major-General Joep Joubert, but at which D40 initiator Major-General Fritz Loots was strangely absent.

General Viljoen stated: 'There was an increasing requirement for clandestine and covert operations of a new kind in 1986. A small group known as D40 was originally organised for this purpose. D40 developed into Barnacle which later was transformed in the CCB. The CCB was a covert military organisation managed by a managing director under supervision of a senior officer Special Forces.'[10]

So Viljoen compressed the entire unit history of D40/Barnacle over 1979 to 1986 into two sentences – and naturally completely omitted to mention the Operation Dual death flights, as these were totally unknown to TRC investigators. Also, the way he stated it makes it seem as if D40 was founded in 1986, though by that time – the unit's transformation into the CCB – it had already been an operational unit for almost seven years.

In his amnesty application,[11] former GOC Special Forces Major-General Joep Joubert was a little more frank, yet still concealed more than he displayed: the functions of the CCB were 'a) that ANC leaders and people who substantially contributed to the struggle would be eliminated; b) that ANC facilities and support services would be destroyed; c) activists, sympathisers, fighters, and people who supported them would also be eliminated . . .'[12]

In his testimony in support of his application, he explained: 'Before I took over command, the Special Forces started executing clandestine operations outside the borders against ANC bases but its operations were for a long time restricted to intelligence-gathering operations overseas. Special Forces consisted of reconnaissance units and a small group known as D40 which eventually became Barnacle and then the CCB. Under my command their task was generally expanded . . . to support the SA Police in its internal covert operations. The members of Barnacle were all in civilian garb . . .'

Again, no D40/Barnacle personnel or specific operations, missions, or actions were identified, and there was not a whisper of Operation Dual's many dolorous death flights – which had continued for at least a year under his command as GOC Special Forces between 1 November 1985 and the last presumed death flight on 12 December 1987. In fact, Joubert's testimony grossly undercounts the death toll of the CCB: asked by TRC Commissioner Ilan Lax to estimate how many persons he was aware of that Special Forces (as a whole, including the CCB) had killed in operations in support of the SAP – that is, in its internal application to the South African domestic situation – Joubert replied that 'it must be around 12 persons'.[13]

42

Dual exposed: the Wouter Basson trial

Operation Dual finally became public knowledge with the indictment against former Project Coast director Brigadier Wouter Basson on 23 March 1999.

The full-bearded Basson, who had glided apparently untouchably through his TRC testimony only the previous year, cheekily sporting a colourful African-style embroidered, open-necked shirt, now appeared to have been run to ground. He faced a litany of 24 fraud and theft charges relating to a web of intrigue and secret slush-fund money that spanned the globe, six drugs charges, eleven murder, sixteen conspiracy-to-murder, and two attempted murder charges, plus a handful of lesser counts.

What was most startling to observers was that, at the heart of the murder-related charges which together accounted for roughly 229 deaths, was Charge 31, conspiracy to 'murder a) members of South West African People's Organisation . . . who were in custody and posed a security risk; and b) own powers that had created a security risk, either committing and/or assisting in the commission of the crime and/or effecting it'. The indictment claimed that the conspiracy took place during 'the period from 1979 to Dec 1987 and at or near Special Forces . . . Headquarters, in the district of Pretoria in the jurisdiction of the Transvaal Provincial Division. It allegedly involved the following: Basson himself; former GOC Special Forces Major-General Fritz Loots; Speskop SSO Counter-Intelligence Colonel Johan Theron; Theron's SO2 Counter-Intelligence Major Eric Kennelly; Speskop SO3 Counter-Intelligence

Captain Danie Phaal; a former 5 Recce sergeant-major as well as a former Military Intelligence interrogator at Fort Rev (who both cannot be named as they refused to testify in the Basson trial); Speskop SSO Air Ops Colonel Matie van der Linde and his successor Colonel Hap Potgieter; D40/Barnacle adjutant Sergeant-Major Trevor Floyd; Basson's former staff officer at Speskop Dr Kobus Bothma; D40 founding OC Major Neil Kriel; D40 Urban Intel chief Major Gray Branfield; 'and other persons unknown to the State'.

But on 12 October 1999, just over a week into the trial, presiding Judge Willie Hartzenberg upheld South West African Administrator-General Louis Pienaar's blanket amnesty for crimes committed by security forces in the territory, and further ruled that other crimes alleged to have been committed by Basson and his associates outside of the border of South Africa were beyond his jurisdictional reach. This effectively saw the hundreds of murders related to Operation Dual dropped.

Given prosecutor Advocate Torie Pretorius's very explicit location of the origination of these war crimes and criminal conspiracies at Speskop, south of Pretoria, Hartzenberg was playing fast and loose with the legal truth.

Fortunately, for the purposes of this study, the men responsible for the Operation Dual death flights and those drawn into its web were still required to testify from 2 May to 24 November 2000 regarding Basson's alleged provision of drugs and poisons to them – or knowledge of the death flights, like their unnumbered victims, would have languished in benighted obscurity. It will be readily appreciated that their self-incriminating testimony – and the key confirmatory interviews with this author – form the backbone of this study.

When it all went down to the wire, however, Hartzenberg discounted the results of prosecution investigator Henry Bruwer's seven-year forensic audit of Basson's WPW/Wisdom Group of companies, finding that Bruwer 'failed' to prove that Basson was the beneficial owner of the Group.

Instead, the judge accepted Basson's bald statements that he had merely been following orders in moving tranches of up to tens of millions of rands around the globe. Frustrated prosecutor Anton Ackermann had attempted in February 2000 to have what he perceived as an obviously biased Hartzenberg recuse himself, but failed, and in June 2001 Hartzenberg dismissed another fifteen out of the remaining 61 charges to which Basson pled not guilty.

By the time Basson himself took the stand in June 2002 for nine weeks of showboating testimony, he was bursting with confidence and charm, and had the court eating out of his hand.

On 11 April 2002, Hartzenberg read out his judgment, and, as recorded by observers Marlene Burger and Chandré Gould: 'The court accepted without reservation that the "gruesome" murders described had been committed [under Operation Dual], but found that Basson was not involved in them, and that the meeting with General Fritz Loots at which he allegedly agreed to supply Theron with drugs, never took place. Theron was "a decidedly strange man", said the judge, who had taken a scientific approach to Operation Dual; he said that the idea of placing poisoned beer at taxi ranks in the Eastern Cape at random [evidence of which had been led] was a plan so bizarre that it could "only have been thought up by the same man who devised Operation Dual and singlehandedly executed that plan". According to the judgement, Basson was an "excellent" witness while Trevor Floyd and Danie Phaal were poor witnesses.'[1]

Despite Hartzenberg's careful severance of Basson's ties to Operation Dual, the importance of his official acceptance of the fundamental truth of the Operation Dual crimes against humanity and war crimes is that they can without a shred of doubt be said to have indeed occurred as Neil Kriel, Johan Theron, Trevor Floyd, Matie van der Linde, and their cohorts testified.

The two observers opined: 'There could be no doubt that a conspiracy existed within the SA Defence Force's Special Forces unit to eliminate selected targets, or that poison was one of the assassination weapons available to ensure that the murders could not be traced back to the SADF . . . considerable care is taken to carry out covert operations in such manner that they can be plausibly denied, and so it was within the Civil Cooperation Bureau and its forerunner, [D40/]Barnacle . . . all operations were carried out on a strictly enforced need-to-know basis. Because of these safeguards, none of the witnesses called by the State had been able to provide the court with a full or complete picture, but the cumulative effect of all the evidence provided all the proof needed.'

Yet, in the biggest reversal since the failure of the Trial of the Generals, Brigadier Wouter Basson was acquitted on all remaining 46 charges – the news sending shockwaves through the country, with much angst wrung out in newspaper opinion pieces. The evidence of 153 state witnesses, buttressed by up to 50 supporting affidavits that had been teased out over some 300 trial days, producing 33 000 pages of court transcript, had astoundingly been found wanting by Hartzenberg.

Burger and Gould reported: 'As the judge pronounced Basson not guilty on all charges, there was applause from a group of about 30 supporters, including five former SADF generals – retired Defence Minister Magnus Malan, erstwhile SADF chief Constand Viljoen, former surgeon-general Niël Knobel, who was the Project Coast manager and Basson's immediate superior, Joep Joubert, former commander of the SADF's Special Forces to whom the head of the CCB reported, and Dirk Marais, co-ordinator of the SADF's largely successful campaign to dissuade soldiers involved in the Angolan and Namibian conflict during the 1980s from applying for amnesty from the Truth and Reconciliation Commission.'[2]

The adulatory response of these men is a powerful indicator that Basson's role was to stand in the breach in lieu of the higher chain-of-command generalship responsible for the war crimes of Operation Dual and other SADF criminality; he would not, however, be sacrificed as a scapegoat as the SAP had done with Eugene de Kock; the leading apartheid military echelons could at last sleep soundly at night.

On 3 May, as Burger and Gould recount, 'Hartzenberg granted indemnity from prosecution to 24 of the 30 state witnesses who testified':[3] they included Colonel Matie van der Linde and Major Eric Kennelly, but indemnity was not granted to Colonel Johan Theron, Major Neil Kriel, Captain Danie Phaal, Sergeant-Major Trevor Floyd, and Dr Kobus Bothma.

Thus, the founding OC of Delta 40, his intimate death flight sidekicks, and at least one of their providers of drugs and poisons were left entirely vulnerable to war crimes prosecutions – an exposure underlined by Hartzenberg's ruling that Operation Dual had indeed been real.

The month before Basson's acquittal, the TRC Amnesty Committee had appeared to offer hope of a better outcome when it finalised its own report – separate to that of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's report – in which it recommended about 300 prosecutions of apartheid-era perpetrators of gross human rights violations. Then, on 21 March 2003, a year after Basson waltzed free, the TRC Final Report was publicly released, recommending a 'bold prosecution policy' in those cases where amnesty had not been applied for so as 'to avoid any suggestion of impunity or of South Africa contravening its obligations in terms of international law'.

As we have seen, remarkably only two SWAPO dead made it onto the list of victims identified by the Commission, but the Final Report's recommendation of a stern prosecutions approach grounded in international law appeared to strengthen the hand of the National Prosecuting Authority (NPA).

Yet, on 3 June 2003, the Supreme Court of Appeal (SCA) in Bloemfontein, to which the NPA had applied to overturn Judge Hartzenberg's 12 October 1999 quashing of the six extraterritorial charges against Basson – including the conspiracy to murder the hundreds of victims of Operation Dual[4] – ruled in favour of Basson, thus upholding the dismissal of the Operation Dual conspiracy. So, the State advocates of the NPA appealed to the court of last resort, the democratic state's new highest judicial body, the Constitutional Court in Johannesburg.

43

(Re)disappearing the disappeared

While the Wouter Basson case was wending its way through the courts, progress had been made by the old military chiefs and the ANC leaders in the seven-year negotiations on a legal framework for a post-TRC amnesty process.

Major-General Dirk Marais, the Convenor of the SADF Contact Bureau, recalled: 'Eventually there was an agreement that they would prepare legislation to grant a sort of amnesty-in-general . . . and they had a writer, a law writer in Cape Town and when it was time they invited us to Cape Town at state expense.'[1]

The date was 17 February 2003, and a delegation of generals, led by former Chief of the SADF General Jannie Geldenhuys, met with Minister of Justice and Constitutional Development Penuell Maduna and Minister of Safety and Security Charles Nqakula.

'They were very nice,' Marais said. 'We gathered at seven in the morning because it was [Jacob] Zuma's speech at the Parliament that day . . . they called their writer [a state official in the Department of Justice] and he read to us the proposed legislation.

'When he finished, we said, "But that's got nothing to do with us" . . . because they [said] they will grant amnesty to everyone who will make a full statement of his [crimes committed] . . . so General Geldenhuys said "No, we don't need that. All our people who wanted to make statements and ask for forgiveness already went to the TRC. Our other people . . . don't have to do that, so this means nothing to us" . . . The whole thing collapsed there.'

The differences between the sides were now irreconcilable: the military chiefs wanted a new law granting a blanket amnesty with no disclosure required, but the ministers wanted a new law granting amnesty on a case-by-case basis only after full disclosure.

Marais claimed that it was the ANC and not the SADF that stood to gain the most from a general amnesty – and had the most to fear from any legal requirement that amnesty was dependent upon full disclosure, because they were in power and the stability of their rule would be threatened by prosecutions.

Geldenhuys's delegation then met with Zuma in his office, as Zuma had expressed a desire to meet with them. According to Marais, they merely shared 'a few niceties and then he greeted us and then we asked [Jürgen] Kögl to book us [a flight] directly back . . . That was the last getting together.'

The attempt at establishing a mutually agreed 'Pact of Forgetting' had collapsed. (Ole Bubenzer claims that a few meetings took place until 2004 but 'only as a matter of courtesy').[2] However, it would be secretly and dramatically revived by the ANC government – on its own, very different, terms.

Advocate Howard Varney, who had been consulted by the TRC, wrote: 'In March 2003, the National Prosecuting Authority established the Priority Crimes Litigation Unit (PCLU) to pursue, amongst other cases, matters emanating from the TRC process. Following an audit of the 300 cases [recommended for prosecution by the TRC Amnesty Committee], the PCLU indicated that just over half of these cases could not be prosecuted but that twenty-one cases, with some further investigation, were ripe for immediate prosecution.'

However, the unit, under Advocate Anton Ackermann, 'was rendered impotent' because the government failed to assign it any investigators, Varney said.

'Less than a handful of prosecutions were taken forward between 2002 and 2004. The only significant prosecution, that of three security police officers who were denied amnesty for the murder of three activists, has stalled.'

The three – former Security Branch Colonel (later Major-General) Chris Smith, Captain Gert Otto, and Captain Manie van Staden – had not applied for amnesty at the TRC, but almost the entirety of their involvement in the CCB plot to kill the ANC's Reverend Frank Chikane by poisoning his underwear had emerged during the Wouter Basson trial.

It turns out that this stalling of prosecutions and the under-resourcing of the PCLU was the result of a deliberate – yet not uncontested – process that most probably has its origins in the 1996–2003 secret talks towards formulating a legal 'Pact of Forgetting'. As we have seen, the talks had allegedly been initiated by Nelson Mandela and were pursued further by Thabo Mbeki and Jacob Zuma in consultation with the four apartheid military chiefs who had previously demanded a blanket amnesty: Geldenhuys, Magnus Malan, Constand Viljoen, and Kat Liebenberg.

It appears as if the ANC's continued interest in pursuing some kind of post-TRC amnesty process was driven by their fear of the consequences for certain leading ANC figures following the PCLU's recommendations that 21 cases against perpetrators across the political spectrum be pursued.

On 23 February 2004, Cheryl Gillwald, the Director-General of the Department of Justice and Constitutional Development under Penuell Maduna, convened a forum of her peers, which appointed an Amnesty Task Team. It was chaired by the department's Deon Rudman and consisted of Yvonne Mabule and Vincent Mogotloane of the National Intelligence Agency (NIA), Advocates Gerrie Nel and Lungisa Dyosi of the NPA, Joy Rathebe of the Department of Defence, and Commissioner Ray Lalla of the South African Police Service.

The Task Team's mandate – as detailed in a report marked 'Secret'[3] – was given as: '1. Consideration of the nature of the "arrangements that are standard in the normal execution of justice, and which are accommodated in our legislation" that the NPA and intelligence agencies may come up with in assisting persons who divulge information relating to offences committed during the conflicts of the past. 2. Consideration of a process of amnesty on the basis of full disclosure of the offence committed during the conflicts of the past. 3. Bearing the above-mentioned in mind, whether legislative enactments are required.'

The secret report notes that the Amnesty Task Team met for the first time on 26 February, then again on 1 March 2004. By its own rather restrained account, these meetings were stormy as the Task Team's considerations proved to be a lightning-rod for contestations that lay at the heart of the TRC's reconciliation process. The report highlighted a series of concerns, including that the story behind 'persons who have disappeared' might not be revealed; here, Operation Dual's victims have a ghostly presence.

The report later mentions that, although the Criminal Procedure Act allows both for the granting of indemnity from prosecution to perpetrators who testify honestly for the state in court, and for crimes older than twenty years not to be prosecuted, the Task Team specifically excluded war crimes from the latter provision.

The report nevertheless concludes that 'The Task Team is of the view that the only way to address [its] concerns adequately would be to provide for a further amnesty process similar to that of the TRC process. This possibility elicited much debate within the Task Team.'

This fiery argument was between those who rejected a supplementary amnesty process out of hand, feeling that this amounted to gross disrespect for the victims on all sides, and those who believed a further process could resolve the problem of so few perpetrators' having applied for amnesty via the TRC[4] – as well as reveal what had happened to the disappeared.

The caveat raised by some of those in favour, however, was that (in echo of the generals' position) such a supplementary process had to be legislated by Parliament as a statutory follow-on process to the TRC Amnesty Committee's concluded work.

Unfortunately, the minutes do not reveal who among the participants adopted what stance in this debate. At about this time, Marais wrote a letter to Zuma complaining about the lack of information about any progress: 'You are requested to inform us of the desirability from your point of view to keep the door open for further co-operation.'[5] But the old military chiefs were now apparently considered irrelevant to the process and Zuma did not respond, slamming that door.

In response to a 31 January 2004 letter from Kögl suggesting that the defunct talks be properly wound up, Marais drafted a letter on behalf of the SADF Contact Bureau,[6] thanking Kögl for his 'diligent efforts' through the years. 'It is however considered inappropriate that the process, initiated by Mr T Mbeki in his former capacity as Deputy President, should stagnate or be concluded without any communication in this regard by the person who initiated it.'

The letter said the generals were separately appealing to President Mbeki in this regard, but asked Kögl 'as the ideally positioned player during the years of deliberations, to compile a review of the entire process which would serve as a trustworthy neutral record . . .'. The appeals went unanswered: the generals were out in the cold.[7]

Meanwhile, the Amnesty Task Team went ahead and established an expanded Departmental Task Team under the Department of Justice to advise Mbeki on the granting of pardons under section 84(1)(k) of the Constitution and to advise the Commissioner of Correctional Services regarding the possible parole or correctional supervision of perpetrators who were already jailed. Ultimate responsibility for decisions about prosecutions, however, rested with the NPA, which 'is an independent constitutional institution'.

The new Task Team consisted of the NPA, the Department of Justice, the intelligence agencies – the internal NIA, the external South African Security Service, Defence Intelligence, and Crime Intelligence – plus the Defence Force, Police Service, Correctional Services, and the Office of the President. The Task Team suggested a 'Draft Indemnity Bill' that could be submitted to Parliament to authorise its processes.

In reality, the independence of the NPA was not respected – in fact, it was allegedly interfered with by Justice Minister Brigitte Mabandla, several of her Cabinet colleagues, and Police Commissioner Jackie Selebi. No Indemnity Bill was submitted to Parliament, nor was reconciliation incorporated into the process, which proceeded secretly to absolve perpetrators, without the envisaged input from victims.

On 1 December 2005, the NPA effected an amendment to its prosecution policy, which, in Varney's words, 'allowed for the granting of an effective immunity from prosecution even in cases where there was sufficient evidence to obtain a conviction; the crime in question is serious; the victim was in favor of a prosecution; and the applicant did not apply for or was not granted amnesty at the TRC. Moreover, the amended policy did not allow victims to see the "truth" disclosed by perpetrators as the whole process was to occur behind closed doors.'

In the interim, in February 2005, Advocate Wim Trengove, SC, had taken the NPA's appeal against the SCA ruling upholding the quashing of the extraterritorial charges against Basson to the highest court in the land, the Constitutional Court (ConCourt) in Johannesburg.

Trengove argued that the blanket amnesty granted in 1990 by Louis Pienaar to all security forces that had operated in South West Africa did not in fact apply to Basson and his accused co-conspirators at Speskop, the EMLC, 5 Recce, and D40/Barnacle/CCB because the 'amnesty merely indemnified those guilty of crimes committed in the course of the performance of their duties and functions in Namibia from prosecution in that country. It meant that if the conspiracies to which the accused is alleged to have been a party were implemented in Namibia, those responsible for its implementation were rendered immune from prosecution in Namibia.

'The accused is charged in this case with the crime of conspiracy committed in Pretoria and not the crime of murder committed in Namibia. It is immaterial for purposes of the charges against the accused whether the target offences at which the conspiracies were directed were ever committed at all. If they were committed [and Judge Hartzenberg had ruled that Operation Dual had truly been carried out], the fact that those responsible might subsequently have received immunity from prosecution in Namibia cannot in any way affect the accused's criminal liability in South Africa.'[8]

Trengove additionally argued that the common law crime of murder in South Africa had applied to South West Africa since 1919, while the Riotous Assemblies Act of 1976, which outlawed conspiracy to murder within the territory of South Africa, was also extended to South West Africa from 1981 to 1989.

Trengove noted that the SADF Military Discipline Code also had extraterritorial reach beyond South Africa's borders and covered all crimes that would normally be prosecutable as such by the civilian courts.

Finally, the crimes of Operation Dual also fell under international criminal law. Trengove, referring to the 1998 arrest of former Chilean dictator General Augusto Pinochet in Britain and his indictment in absentia in Spain in 2000, said that every state had 'universal jurisdiction' over international crimes committed beyond its borders and, in such prosecutions, acts as the agent of the international community. 'The murders that the accused [Basson] and his co-conspirators [Fritz Loots, Johan Theron, Neil Kriel, Trevor Floyd, Matie van der Linde, and the rest] conspired to commit were crimes under customary international law. They constituted crimes against humanity, war crimes, and the crime of apartheid.'

He argued further: 'There is . . . abundant proof that the status of the crime was already established in the period between 1979 to 1989 – the period during which the accused conspired to commit the crimes that constituted crimes against humanity.'

Trengove said that Operation Dual and five other transnational conspiracies to murder fulfilled all the requirements for a crime against humanity: widespread, systematic attacks committed against civilians with state approval or as part of an 'organisational policy', regardless of whether they occurred in wartime or peacetime.

In turn, war crimes were identified as relevant as they included the cruel mistreatment and extrajudicial execution of POWs and of civilians detained by an occupying power. With regards to the 'crime of apartheid', Trengove argued that Basson and his co-accused fulfilled the requirements of conspiring to murder 'members of a racial group' either because they were opposed to apartheid or viewed as enemies of the racist regime.

On 19 April, during the ConCourt's deliberations, the universal jurisdiction principle was ably demonstrated when former Argentine ESMA pilot Corvette Captain Adolfo Scilingo was sentenced in Spain to 640 years' imprisonment for, among other crimes, the death flight disappearances of 30 people during Argentina's Dirty War.

Some of Trengove's arguments proved compelling, and on 9 September 2005, the ConCourt judges overturned the quashing of the conspiracy-to-murder charge against Basson for the Operation Dual murders, as well as five other transnational conspiracy-to-murder charges. These included a plot to assassinate two ANC leaders in exile, Pallo Jordan and Ronnie Kasrils, in London in 1988. The planned murder weapon was a poison-tipped umbrella, which had been handed to Trevor Floyd. The assassinations – to be executed by 'a Portuguese team' – were eventually abandoned, so Floyd tossed the umbrella in the River Thames.[9]

The ConCourt, 'having regard to certain provisions of the Riotous Assemblies Act and the Defence Act – to which Dr Basson as a member of the then South African Defence Force was subject' – found that there was a 'real and substantial connection' between South Africa and the crimes to be committed in Namibia and elsewhere.[10]

'As such, the conspiracies were triable in South Africa, and the trial court [Judge Hartzenberg] was wrong to conclude that the charges disclosed no offence.'

Consequently, the order of the High Court quashing the six charges was set aside. 'This means that it would be open to the prosecution, if it chose, to proceed with the charges relating to conspiracy to commit murder in Namibia, Swaziland, Mozambique, and the United Kingdom.'

And yet, despite the ConCourt's watershed ruling, which not only opened the way for the NPA to reopen the Operation Dual case against Basson and his alleged death flight co-conspirators, but which arguably also set a supreme legal precedent affecting all the prosecutions recommended by the TRC Amnesty Committee and endorsed by the PCLU, the NPA was prevented from pursuing any such cases.

This became apparent when former apartheid Law and Order Minister Adriaan Vlok and former Security Branch Chief General Johan van der Merwe approached the NPA, admitted to having ordered the murder of the Reverend Frank Chikane and applied for amnesty alongside Major-General Smith, Captain Otto, and Captain van Staden under the secret amnesty process.

Even though Advocate Vusi Pikoli, the National Director of Public Prosecutions, had decided that Vlok and Van der Merwe's confessions were incomplete and that they did not qualify for amnesty under the 2005 prosecution policy, he claims he was forced – by the interference in his decision-making autonomy by Mabandla and several Cabinet colleagues[11] – to accept that the leaders would not be tried. Instead, they were offered a plea bargain under which they received ten years in prison suspended for five years, while the three Security Branch men received five-year prison sentences, suspended for five years.

On 24 September 2007, Pikoli was suspended by Mbeki, who cited an 'irretrievable' breakdown in the relationship between Pikoli and the Minister of Justice – but widely believed to be for refusing to obey an order not to prosecute Selebi.[12] The TRC cases were removed from Ackermann – on the apparently mistaken assumption that he intended prosecuting ANC leaders – and transferred to Selebi's prosecutions-hostile South African Police Service.

In a later court affidavit regarding Vlok and Van der Merwe, Pikoli stated: 'They declined to disclose detailed information in relation to the compiling of the hit list and who was behind such compilation. They did not reveal the other names on the list; the modus operandi of the other hits or the identities of the other masterminds and perpetrators.'[13]

Pikoli is here referring to the CCB death list of apartheid opponents drawn up in secret by elements of the securocrat elite.

Pikoli continued: 'A full prosecution in the Chikane case would have produced greater truth and accountability. However, there was strong political resistance to this prosecution and the pursuit of the other political cases. It was clear to me that the government, and in particular the then Minister of Justice, did not want the NPA to prosecute those implicated in the Chikane case. This was due to their fear of opening the door to prosecutions of ANC members, including government officials. Moreover, I could not rely on the police to investigate this case, and the other political cases, thoroughly.'

Other than Selebi and Mbeki, Pikoli implicated Nqakula, Minister of Defence Mosiuoa Lekota, Minister of National Intelligence Services Ronnie Kasrils – ironically, once also a CCB target[14] – Minister of Social Development Zola Skweyiya, Acting Minister of Justice and Constitutional Development Thoko Didiza, Director-General of Justice Menzi Simelane, Director-General of National Intelligence Manala Manzini, as well as the chief of The Presidency and the CCB's one-time target himself, Frank Chikane, in questioning his attempt at pursuing prosecutions arising from the TRC. Over the following decade, the secret moratorium on prosecuting apartheid-era perpetrators of all sides held tight.

South Africa's 'Pact of Forgetting' only started to unravel with the inquest ruling on 12 October 2017 that anti-apartheid activist Ahmed Timol had been murdered in Security Branch custody on 27 October 1971. The ruling has sparked public demand for apartheid-era political crimes to be prosecuted. On 5 February 2019, former TRC Chairman Archbishop Desmond Tutu, former TRC Amnesty Committee Chairman Dumisa Ntsebeza, and nine other 'deeply outraged' former TRC commissioners demanded that President Cyril Ramaphosa institute a commission of inquiry into the suppression of TRC prosecutions.

Finally, on 26 April 2019, the tide appeared to turn when Minister of Justice and Correctional Services Michael Masutha announced that apartheid's political crimes would be prosecuted: 'Our democratic government has been magnanimous enough to give the perpetrators an opportunity to tell the truth and receive amnesty for the crimes that they have committed in the name of the evil apartheid regime. They chose to sit back and not say anything. Perhaps they hoped that their crimes would be forgotten. We, as government, owe it to the families of activists . . . to get to the bottom of the circumstances under which they died as well as to ensure that their killers have their day in court.'

It needs to be stressed that this statement exclusively targets apartheid regime perpetrators – and not perpetrators associated with their opponents. In favour of the possibility of pursuing criminal charges against even those perpetrators is that Advocate Shamila Batohi, South Africa's prosecutions boss at the time of writing, has recently returned from serving as senior legal advisor of the International Criminal Court.

But perhaps the final judgement on the actions of those involved in the eight and a half years of disappearances under Operation Dual – the cumulative implications, impact, and aftermath of those dark deeds – should come from the unit's founding Officer Commanding, Major Neil Kriel.

44

Quietus: The founding chief's exit

Neil Kriel's movements over the four and a half years following his resignation from Barnacle in August 1982 are unknown. He resurfaced, a true civilian at last, in May 1987 as the marketing director and a shareholder of the firm Unilec Industries (Pty) Ltd, which marketed electrical products to Eskom.

He worked there for four years and nine months before starting his own company in February 1992, Microfence SA (Pty) Ltd, which, according to his LinkedIn profile, manufactured a 'lethal electrified fence system for export to the USA'.[1]

In February 2008, he became a manager of Panda Bamboo in Honeydew, west of Johannesburg, then in March 2014 he became the co-owner, alongside Joe Texeira, a Mozambican, of MOA Bamboo (Pty) Ltd. His choice of name indicates he had never quite left his halcyon days in the military behind, as MOA stands for Military Operational Area.

Still imposingly tall, but shrunken from his prime, white-bearded with some dark-grey still shot through his hair, his cheeks lightly liver-spotted, and with a gentle 'English' demeanour, a love for rugby and Bouvier dogs, Kriel would post rare Facebook entries expressing conservative, even right-wing concerns – for example, circulating a petition for Australia to accept white South African 'refugees', or to impeach US President Barack Obama.

He had a reputation for being 'eloquent, charming, funny, smart, and fastidious as a workman' – though with a hot temper, well reined in.[2]

Although he eschewed the company of retired Recce Colonel Johan Theron, who in retirement had become a Christian pastor with a Master of Ministry degree from a United States institution, and Sergeant-Major Trevor Floyd, who had kept his hand in as an Old Bull, the chairman of a MOTH Shellhole,[3] he remained friends with ex-Selous Scout Sergeant-Major Andy Balaam[4]. He was part of an informal Rhodesian email network with a few of his old D40/Barnacle comrades, notably Intelligence Officer Major Pete Stanton (recently deceased) and Operation Departure chief Major Winston Hart,[5] who still works as an irregular warfare instructor, as well as former ZSOU pseudo-operative Captain Darrell Watt, plus a handful of more prominent old Rhodesians such as former Selous Scouts OC Lieutenant-Colonel Pat Armstrong, former Rhodesian SAS OC Major Brian Robinson,[6] and Kriel's fellow Selous Scouts cofounder Major Jerry Strong.[7]

Thus, in most respects, Kriel appeared to be very proud of his military past. And yet there was something in his later-life activities that indicated a man grappling with his conscience, as he appeared to do back in 1982 in deciding to leave his black-ops past behind.

The Johannesburg Holocaust & Genocide Centre is an austerely yet appropriately beautiful building on Jan Smuts Avenue on the northern rain-shadow foothills of the city's Parktown Ridge, designed by architect Lewis Levin in consultation with survivors of the Rwandan Genocide and the Nazi Holocaust, drawing on a motif that echoes trees in the Rwandan forest and Auschwitz railway tracks in the snow.

Inside its airy atrium, the physical railway tracks set in the outside wall of grey-stone rubble disappear, leaving upward-piercing shafts of golden light in their place. Introduced to the Centre's planners by Levin, Neil Kriel and Joe Texeira's MOA Bamboo offered to provide its facilities with cabinetry, which they did at a discount, according to Centre Director Tali Nates.[8]

It is tempting to speculate that Kriel did this discounted work as a way, secretly in his own heart at least, to try to make amends for his direct involvement in the early death flights of Operation Dual. But, if so, such attempts at atonement would prove insufficient to assuage his sense of guilt.

It had been a mildly chilly Highveld winter's night, but an ill wind blew over the western suburbs of Johannesburg, tugging rags of cloud over a skull-like full moon. In the early hours of Monday 30 July 2018, Major Neil Kriel, retired dirty warrior, drew his still-large bulk into his car and, running the engine, gassed himself to death.[9]

What went through his mind as he did so will never be known. Was he tormented by the death of his first wife, Joan, some six years previously, by the financial difficulties he had found himself in as a pensioner still having to work for a living, or by the creeping decrepitude of his 70 years? Did he view his post-military career as 'a failure' because he was a better soldier than businessman, as suggested by Colonel Charl Naudé,[10] or was he feeling ostracised by being 'bad-mouthed' by others who did not understand his unique Special Forces career, as suggested by his second wife, Colleen Carter?[11]

Finally, was he tormented by the nagging spectres of the many helpless people he had helped to cast into oblivion in the endless night of the ocean depths? Fully 39 years and 18 days after the first death flight off Meob Bay on 12 July 1979, Operation Dual had claimed perhaps its final victim.

Acknowledgements

I owe a debt of gratitude to all those who encouraged me to pursue the mystery behind the so-called disappearance of several hundred people in the unforgiving depths of the Atlantic and Indian Oceans, a grim process that was not revealed by the remarkable Truth and Reconciliation Commission, despite the probity of its immense work in describing the gross human rights violations committed by both sides in the apartheid era.

In particular, I owe a debt to researcher Chandré Gould, whose 2002 book Project Coast: Apartheid's Chemical and Biological Warfare Programme, cowritten with Peter Folb, was the first to sketch the outline of Operation Dual, and to Gould's collaborator in compiling succinct daily reports of the Wouter Basson trial, the late journalist Marlene Burger, who was always willing to assist a greener colleague.

My profound thanks to Recce icon, Delta 40 cofounder and the unit's longest-serving member, Warrant Officer 1st Class Trevor Floyd, who trusted me sufficiently to confirm and clarify the personnel and evolution of this most secret of SADF Special Forces units.

Thank you also to Colonel Charl Naudé, cofounder of 5 Reconnaissance Commando and later Barnacle's second Officer Commanding, for explaining the difference between 5 Recce's and Barnacle's very different types of pseudo-operations.

I am also grateful for the help of Senior Superintendent Kevin Woods, who spent five years on death row and another thirteen behind the high walls of Chikurubi Prison, for detailing the structure and functions of D40/Barnacle sister organisation, the Zimbabwe Special Operations Unit, and to Colonel Frans Fourie, 4 Reconnaissance Regiment's second-in-command and later Officer Commanding 1 Reconnaissance Regiment, for laying out the rationale behind, and methodology of, 4 Recce's pseudo-operations.

Their old-world hospitality towards me underlines the sincerity with which they fought their Cold War states' black-ops war against communist-backed insurgency.

My sincere thanks also to Brigadier-General Bert Sachse, former Selous Scouts 2 Group chief turned 5 Reconnaissance Regiment Officer Commanding, for explaining Rhodesian pseudo-ops and for commenting on the key 'Buffalo Range Incident', and to Speskop Senior Staff Officer Counter-Intelligence and D40/Barnacle/CCB advisor Colonel Johan Theron, for confirming the complex labyrinth of Special Forces, Military Intelligence, and other organisations surrounding and supporting D40. He spoke frankly about his initiation of the practice that I term 'the secret doctrine of disappearance' and about how D40/Barnacle/CCB practised it over eight and a half years.

For their invaluable assistance, I would like to commend Maggie Davey, whose provision of court documentation was crucial; Howard Varney, for his assiduous work on the 'Pact of Forgetting'; and Major-General Dirk Marais, for his kind sharing of documents and memories regarding the pact. I also thank Dr Anthony Turton, whose timeline in 'How Many Bones do You Have to Bury Before You Can Call Yourself an African?' buttressed and gave structure to my own timeline and who gave me an overview of the National Intelligence Service's pseudo-ops units in the Frontline States; Military Intelligence veteran Brigadier-General As Kleynhans; Army Intelligence veteran turned private investigator Chad Thomas; former CCB Europe and International Manager Lieutenant-Colonel Eeben Barlow; and Recce historical specialists Lieutenant Michael Huxtable and Corporal Matthew Kalkwarf, for assisting me with corrections and confirmations, and for providing me with introductions to the right people.

Former Chief of Army Intelligence Major-General Hennie Roux, Section Officer GV 'Tom' Thomas (Chairman of the Selous Scouts Regimental Association), Colonel Danie 'Div' de Villiers, Colonel Tony Smit, Lieutenant-Colonel Danie Crowther, Wing Commander Bruce Harrison, Sergio Paes-Mamede, Hennie van Vuuren, Tania de Jong, Liana Mongetane-Petersen, Madi Ramsamy, Hilgard du Plessis, Tali Nates, Lewis Levin, Mark Seftel, Joe Texeira, Colleen Carter, Jean Fremigacci, John Grobler, Ruan Visser, Marjorie Jobson, Miriam Lewin, Madeleine Fullard, John Dovey, the late Nigel Morgan, the former South West African Security Branch policeman, and the medic who spoke on condition of anonymity, all provided assistance, meaningful insight, or encouragement at key points of my journey. Their assistance in no way implies their endorsement of my final text.

Photographic reproduction permission was most generously and freely granted by Peter Stiff's widow, Francis Stiff, Jonathan Pittaway, Captain Jacobus Johannes 'Koos' Stadler, Liza Key, Rietjie van Blerk, widow of Colonel André 'Diedies' Diedericks, and Erna da Costa, widow of Staff Sergeant Mourão da Costa, as well as by Colonel Johan Theron and Sergeant-Major Trevor Floyd themselves.

Lastly, my publisher at Tafelberg, Maryna Lamprecht, is remarkably knowledgeable on the era under discussion, and I thank her for her rigour in critiquing my manuscript, while editor Albert Weideman had the unenviable task of smoothing out the complexities of my text. Cameraman Byron Kennedy beautifully photographed my interview subjects, and Esté de Klerk, an accomplished investigative journalist in her own right, did the heavy lifting of transcribing interview recordings.

The field research component of this book, particularly regarding travel to Cape Town, Durban, Pretoria, and elsewhere to conduct interviews, was facilitated by a grant from Trine Skymoen, the Royal Norwegian Ambassador to South Africa, via the Academic and Non-Fiction Authors' Association of South Africa (ANFASA), for which I am deeply grateful.

Endnotes

PROLOGUE

1 Jean Fremigacci, 'La vérité sur la grande révolte de Madagascar', L'Histoire, 318, March 2007, online at: http://aefe-madagascar.histegeo.org/IMG/pdf/article_revolte_1947.pdf.
2 Author correspondence with Jean Fremigacci, 2019. Lt Hervéou's first name is not recorded.
3 André Beaufre, Introduction à la Stratégie, Librairie Armand Colin, Paris, 1963. Published in English as Introduction to Strategy, Frederick A Praeger, New York, 1966.
4 The junta's death toll remains contested, but in July 1978, Intelligence Battalion 601 – the leading unit tasked with death-squad killings – boasted in an internal cable that 'the tally of those killed and disappeared from 1975 up to date is 22 000'.

PART I

1: A youth in the shadow of an insurgent war

1 Telephonic author interview with Mark Seftel, a fellow son of Klaasvoogds and later business associate of Neil Kriel, 19 December 2019.
2 A History of Umtali Girls' and Boys' High Schools 1896–1968, The Borderer, Jubilee Edition, 2010, online at http://umtaliborderers.blogspot.com/2010/09/borderer-jubilee-edition.html.
3 Lawrence E Cline, Pseudo Operations and Counter-Insurgency: Lessons from Other Countries, Strategic Studies Institute, US Army War College, Carlisle, Pennsylvania, 2005.
4 Jim Parker, Assignment Selous Scouts: Inside Story of a Rhodesian Special Branch Officer, Galago Books, Alberton, 2015.
5 Winston Hart, 'Early Days', in Jonathan Pittaway, Selous Scouts: The Men Speak, Dandy Agencies, Durban, 2017.
6 See also David Anderson, Histories of the Hanged: Britain's Dirty War in Kenya and the End of Empire, Weidenfeld & Nicholson, London, 2005; and Caroline Elkins, Britain's Gulag: The Brutal End of Empire in Kenya, Jonathan Cape, London, 2005.
7 Paul Matthysen, Matthew Kalkwarf and Mike Huxtable, 'Recce': A Collector's

Guide to the History of the South African Special Forces, South Publishers, Johannesburg, South Africa, 2010.
8 Peter Stiff, The Silent War: South African Recce Operations 1969–1994, Galago, Alberton, 1999.
9 Winston Hart in Jonathan Pittaway (2017).
10 A floor plan of the Selous Scouts' fort at Buffalo Range is available in Jim Parker (2015), while a floor plan of the Mount Darwin fort is available in Glenn Cross, Dirty War: Rhodesia and Chemical Biological Warfare 1975–1980, Helion, Solihull, 2017.
11 Wings Wilson, 'Mapai', in Jonathan Pittaway (2017).
12 Noel Robey, 'Selous Scouts XV vs Army XV', in Jonathan Pittaway (2017).

2: From Pretoria bar to Rhodesian bush

1 His first name is sometimes given as Christopher and his nickname as Chris.
2 Dave Scales, 'Recce Group', in Jonathan Pittaway (2017).
3 Jonathan Pittaway (2017).
4 Jonathan Pittaway (2017).
5 Jonathan Pittaway (2017).
6 Jonathan Pittaway (2017).
7 Jonathan Pittaway (2017).
8 André Diedericks, Journey Without Boundaries: The Operational Life and Experiences of a SA Special Forces Small Teams Operator, Just Done Publications, Durban, 2007.

3: Behold a pale horse: Rhodesia's chemical warfare

1 One of the Four Horsemen of the biblical Apocalypse rides a pale horse, which in most interpretations represents Death.
2 Chandré Gould and Peter Folb, Project Coast: Apartheid's Chemical and Biological Warfare Programme, United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research, Geneva, and Centre for Conflict Resolution, Cape Town, 2002.
3 Electronic, Mechanical, Agriculturalist and Chemical engineering skills in English.
4 Paul Mattysen, Matthew Kalkwarf and Michael Huxtable (2010), who state that Armscor's DSA was run from its foundation in 1976 by a Mr TG Schaeffer.
5 Peter Stiff, See You in November, Galago, Alberton, 1985.
6 Glenn Cross (2017).
7 Peter Stiff (1985).
8 This could refer to either Military Intelligence (MI) or to the civilian National Intelligence Service (NIS).
9 US$460 at the 1977 free rate after the Rhodesian dollar was devalued against the US dollar. A similar death bonus system would later be employed by the South African Police's counterinsurgency unit Koevoet.
10 Barbecues, or open-fire grills.

11 See 'Mass graves discovered in Zimbabwe', Independent Online, 7 July 2004, online at https://www.iol.co.za/news/africa/mass-graves-discovered-in-zimbabwe-216620.

4: Horrors and honours

1 According to Paul l Moorcraft and Peter McLaughlin, The Rhodesian War: A Military History, Pen and Sword Books, Barnsley, 1982.
2 Jonathan Pittaway (2017).
3 Jonathan Pittaway (2017).
4 Jonathan Pittaway (2017).
5 Jonathan Pittaway (2017).
6 Jonathan Pittaway (2017).
7 Jonathan Pittaway (2017).
8 Jonathan Pittaway (2017). 'Boet' is Afrikaans for 'brother'.
9 Paul Matthysen, Matthew Kalkwarf and Michael Huxtable (2010).
10 'Dirty Dozen' veteran WO1 Koos Moorcroft, 'SADF Recces and the Scouts', in Jonathan Pittaway (2017).
11 André Diedericks (2007).

5. Neo-Nazis and mercenaries enter the fray

1 Ironically, Lamprecht's 22-year-old son, Vincent, fled to South Africa to avoid conscription.
2 Stuart Christie, Stefano delle Chiaie: Portrait of a Black Terrorist, Refract, London, 1984.
3 Peter Baxter, Hugh Bomford, and Gerry van Tonder, Rhodesia Regiment, 1899–1981, 30° South Publishers, Johannesburg, 2014.
4 Jon Lee Anderson, Inside the League, Dodd Mead, New York, 1986.
5 Jim Hoagl, 'US Policy on Rhodesia on the Line', The Washington Post, 21 December 1978, online at https://www.washingtonpost.com/archive/politics/1978/12/21/us-policy-on-rhodesia-on-the-line/ffdc0b45-fcd4-45b8-88a8-258e0465814d/?utm_term=.8a6584dad0c1.
6 Gerald Horne, From the Barrel of a Gun: the United States and the War Against Zimbabwe, 1965–1980, University of North Carolina Press, Chapel Hill, 2015.

6. 'The doctored bodies are in the back'

1 Based on a new review of a taped interview I conducted with Pessarra in October 1999, this appears to be the most accurate date.
2 Historical weather information used throughout this text is derived from the excellent Wolfram Alpha online search tool: https://www.wolframalpha.com/.
3 Pessarra did not recall the civilian pilot's name and did not at that time have access to his logbooks, which he had stored in a safety-deposit box in Arizona. The pilot lived in Salisbury opposite Moore's unofficial 'US Consulate'. Carlos da Silveira is named four times in Preller Geldenhuys, Rhodesian Air Force Operations, PeySoft Publishing, Durban, 2016, as being on air crews for airstrikes during Operation Hurricane in 1977. He later flew for the South African Air Force. I have been unable to trace Da Silveira, however.

4 Kevin Mulligan, Dakota Tales, Rhodesian Services Association Incorporated Newsletter, Tauranga, May 2008, online at http://www.rhodesianservices.org/user/image/publication05-2008.pdf.
5 Telephonic author interview with Bert Sachse (2020).
6 See 'Wouter Basson: from Eminent Scientist to Murder Accused', Sapa-AFP, 6 October 1999, online at http://www.justice.gov.za/trc/media/1999/9910/p991006c.htm: 'The son of a police colonel, Basson joined the military in 1975 …' The Truth and Reconciliation Commission transcript is online at http://www.justice.gov.za/trc/special/cbw/cbw21.htm.
7 Chandré Gould and Peter Folb (2002).
8 Glenn Cross (2017).
9 Neil Kriel evidence, Wouter Basson trial transcript (2000).
10 Requests for comment on the Buffalo Range incident sent to Basson's counsel in October 1999 for the Sunday Times, and again in preparation for this book emailed directly to Basson twice in March 2020, went unanswered.
11 Up until this point, the South African Medical Corps (SAMC) had been part of the South African Army; this changed in July 1979, when the South African Medical Service (SAMS) was established as a service arm of the SADF in its own right, alongside the Army, Air Force, and Navy.
12 'Mr C' evidence, Wouter Basson trial transcript (2000).
13 Telephonic author interview with Bert Sachse (2020).
14 The Douglas C-47 Dakota military transport normally has a cruising speed of 333 km/h, which would suggest that a flight from Buffalo Range to Mapai and back (360 km as the crow flies) would have taken just over an hour at cruising speed, excluding any circling the aircraft might have done over the drop zone.
15 The operation was of course most likely planned at the Selous Scouts' HQ.

PART II: A SECRET KILLING MACHING TAKES SHAPE

7. Black-ops boon for South Africa

1 I will hereafter refer to this contingent as the Rhodesians, despite the transformation of their old country into Zimbabwe in April 1980, in order to emphasise their loyalty to and nostalgia for their homeland, their opposition to the very notion of Zimbabwe, and their differentiation from post-independence Zimbabweans.
2 Telephonic author interview with Bert Sachse (2020).
3 Pat Armstrong, 'The Last Throw of the Dice', in Jonathan Pittaway (2017).
4 Jonathan Pittaway (2017).
5 Jim Parker (2015).

6 Neil Kriel evidence, State v Wouter Basson, 1999 (Transvaal Provincial Division case number CC32/99).
7 According to a table in Glenn Cross (2017).
8 Judge Willie Hartzenberg's judgment, Wouter Basson trial transcript (2002).
9 The wait-and-see attitude of most Scouts contrasts strongly with that of the Rhodesian SAS, which had been renamed 1 (Rhodesia) Special Air Service Regt, with a strength of about 250 paratroopers in June 1978, most of whom left Zimbabwe-Rhodesia, a significant group attesting at 1 Recce.
10 Cmdt Bert Sachse became an Elder of the United Church of the Conqueror, according to Paul Els (2000).
11 Pat Armstrong, 'The Last Throw of the Dice', in Jonathan Pittaway (2017).
12 Charlie Bland, 'Selous Scouts, Plan B, 1980', in Jonathan Pittaway (2017).
13 Ian Scott, 'The Move South', in Jonathan Pittaway (2017).
14 Described as a mountain of a man, Cecil J van den Bergh had joined the Scouts as a lance-corporal, but by this time had got his wings and risen to junior sergeant-major: Warrant Officer 2nd Class (WO2).
15 Peter Stiff (1999).
16 TRC Final Report, Volume 2 (2003).
17 Commandant was an SADF rank equivalent to Barrett's SAS rank of lieutenant-colonel.
18 Barbara Cole, The Elite: The Story of the Rhodesian Special Air Service, Three Knights, Durban, 1984.
19 Peter Stiff (1999) gives the very first 6 Recce OC as Commandant Jake Swart. This appears to have been a temporary appointment covering the unit's construction, as Swart was soon replaced by Barrett.
20 Paul Els, We Fear Naught But God: The Story of the South African Special Forces, 'The Recces', Covos-Day Books, Roodepoort, 2000.
21 Peter Stiff (1999).
22 This is likely a misunderstanding by the interview transcriber: Schofield probably meant the rank of colour sergeant – rather than a racial designation (the Scouts, after all, had both black and white colour sergeants).
23 Peter Schofield interviewed by Mike Cadman, Reconnaissance Regiment, Project Missing Voices, 2007, online at: http://www.historicalpapers.wits.ac.za/inventories/inv_pdfo/A3079/A3079-D1-001-jpeg.pdf.

8. Recruiting a few hard men

1 Neil Kriel testimony, Wouter Basson trial transcript (2000).
2 TRC Final Report, Volume 2, Chapter 1, National Overview (2003).
3 Author interview with Johan Theron, location undisclosed, 19 November 2019.
4 Chandré Gould and Peter Folb (2002).
5 Paul Els (2000).
6 Neil Kriel evidence, Wouter Basson trial transcript (2000).
7 Author interview with Trevor Floyd, Bergvliet, 20 October 2019.

8 Peter Stiff, Warfare by Other Means, Galago, Alberton, 2001.
9 Paul Matthysen, Matthew Kalkwarf and Michael Huxtable (2010).
10 Author interview with Trevor Floyd (2019).
11 Peter Stiff (1999).
12 Lieutenant Edward Piringondo was killed in action in Rhodesia in February 1980.
13 Jonathan Pittaway (2017).
14 Author interviews with Trevor Floyd (2019) and Johan Theron (2019).
15 Trevor Floyd evidence, Wouter Basson trial transcript (2000).
16 Exhibit 31B, Annexure A [AR 11955], 'Organisational Structure', in State v Wouter Basson (1999).
17 Author interview with Johan Theron (2019).
18 The 'Organisational Structure' diagram (Exhibit 31B) shows six white operators and eight black operators, while 'Organisation Inquiry into Project Barnacle' (Exhibit 31C) lists six and ten respectively. The difference means that, on paper, D40 either totalled 29 or 31 men by December 1980.
19 Jan Breytenbach, The Buffalo Soldiers: The Story of South Africa's 32 Battalion 1975-1993, Galago, Alberton, 1999.
20 Telephonic author interview with Johan Theron, location undisclosed, 19 January 2020.
21 32 Battalion Recce Wing interviews, Historical Papers. Wits University, Recce Group A3079/B.13, online at http://www.historicalpapers.wits.ac.za/inventories/inv_pdfo/A3079/A3079-B1-13-001-jpeg.pdf. According to this source, Kelly later joined Executive Outcomes as a sergeant-major.
22 Born Warriors Blog at http://theywerebornwarriors.blogspot.com/search/label/Flechas.
23 Author interview with Trevor Floyd (2019).
24 Author interviews with Trevor Floyd (2019) and Johan Theron (2019).
25 Rautenbach's name is given by Major-General Fritz Loots in his 9 January 1981 top secret instructions to Major Neil Kriel as 'LJ Rautenbach', so Ben is probably a nickname.
26 Chandré Gould and Marlene Burger, Daily Reports About the Trial of Dr Wouter Basson: 4 October 1999–11 April 2002, Centre for Conflict Resolution, online on the old Institute for Security Studies site at: https://oldsite.issafrica.org/uploads/Wouter_Basson_Trail_Summary.pdf.
27 Senior Staff Officer (SSO) was commensurate with the rank of colonel, while Staff Officer 1 (SO1) came with the rank of commandant, Staff Officer 2 (SO2) with the rank of major, and Staff Officer 3 (SO3) a captain or a lieutenant.
28 Author interview with Johan Theron (2019).

9. Rhodesia's revenge

1 Peter Stiff (2001).
2 Peter Stiff (2001).

3 Outpost, BSAP Regimental Association, UK Branch, Issue 57, Summer 2004.
4 Jeffrey M Bale, The Darkest Side of Politics II: State Terrorism, 'Weapons of Mass Destruction', Religious Extremism and Organized Crime, Routledge, London, 2017.
5 Rocky van Blerk was not available to testify in the Basson trial. The details of his Zambian recce are given in André Diedericks (2007).
6 Peter Stiff (2001).
7 TRC Final Report, Volume 2 (2003).
8 Peter Stiff (2001).
9 Author interview with Kevin Woods, Durban, 16 November 2019.
10 Author interview with Kevin Woods (2019).
11 Peter Stiff (1999).
12 Preller Geldenhuys (2016).
13 Peter Stiff (2001).
14 Askari is a Swahili word meaning simply 'soldier', and was applied by various colonial governments to local tribesmen recruited or drafted into military service. However, in South Africa the term was applied solely to turned guerrillas; the Rhodesians in contrast used the term 'TTs', for Turned Terrorists.
15 TRC Final Report, Volume 2 (2003).
16 Jacques Pauw, In the Heart of the Whore: The Story of Apartheid's Death Squads, Jonathan Ball, Cape Town, 1991.
17 His surname is spelled 'Wishart' – a more common spelling – on the Selous Scouts' Nominal Roll in Jonathan Pittaway (2017).
18 Major Winston Hart did not respond to an emailed request for an interview.
19 Parker is here naming the former SB detectives by their militarised ranks upon joining the SADF.
20 Butch was former BSAP troop commander Garth 'Butch' von Horsten, who later went into the SAP. Other than denying that Winston Hart had commanded Project Departure, Von Horsten declined an interview request during a telephonic conversation with the author on 20 January 2020.
21 Peter Stiff (2001).
22 Author interview with Trevor Floyd (2019).
23 Author interview with Kevin Woods (2019).
24 Peter Stiff (2001).
25 Author interview with Trevor Floyd (2019).
26 Author correspondence with Anthony Turton, 25 November 2019.
27 He is referring to the ANC-allied South African Communist Party (SACP), and the Pan Africanist Congress (PAC), which had split from the ANC in 1959.
28 My diagram of the chain of command for Delta 40 is reproduced in this book's photo section, drawing on information gleaned primarily from Peter Stiff (1999, 2001), Chandré Gould and Peter Folb (2002), Anthony Turton (2012), Jim Parker (2015), and Exhibit 31B [AR 11 955], 'Organisational Structure', in State v Wouter Basson (1999) – confirmed by Trevor Floyd (2019) and Johan Theron (2019).

10. Mobilising against the 'Total Onslaught'

1 Author interview with Johan Theron (2019).
2 According to Peter Stiff (2001), Möller was a fellow Special Forces operator, but he left D40 within a few months.
3 Company registration number 79/02263/07.
4 Memorandum, GOC SF to C SADF, 'Purchase of Fixed Property', 20 January 1979, Exhibit 31B, State v Wouter Basson (1999).
5 Peter Stiff (2001).
6 Author interview with Johan Theron (2019).
7 Neil Kriel testimony, Wouter Basson trial transcript (2000).
8 That is, four metres high and half a metre thick.
9 Johan Theron (2019) said the wall was set back from the perimeter and could not be seen from the gate of the fenced property on the Lanseria–Broederstroom road. The farmhouses were situated outside the wall.
10 Preller Geldenhuys (2016).
11 Major-General JJ Viktor retired in 1989 as the SAP Divisional Commissioner for Soweto.
12 Sam Sole, 'The Hammer Unit and the Goniwe Murders', in Anthony Minnaar, Ian Liebenberg and Charl Schutte (eds), The Hidden Hand: Covert Operations in South Africa, Human Sciences Research Council, Pretoria, 1994, archived at: http://www.oocities.org/odjobman/hammer.htm.
13 Rautenbach's front company had no other ties to D40; in a telephonic interview, even Theron said he had never met him.

11. The 'hunter-killers' of Koevoet

1 'Sterk' is the Afrikaans word for strong.
2 Glenn Cross (2017).
3 Jim Hooper, Beneath the Visiting Moon: Images of Combat in Southern Africa, Lexington Books, Lexington, 1990.
4 'Bushman' is the term mostly used by the community to describe themselves, so it is the one I will use here.
5 TRC Final Report, Volume 2, Chapter 2 (2003). A Casspir is a mine-resistant armoured personnel carrier, mostly used by the police.
6 Its doctrinal influences and evolution from intel unit to counterinsurgency battalion are sketched in an interview with Major-General Hans Dreyer, Koevoet Documentary, online at: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=GEArr4RhWX8.
7 Johan Theron said in a telephonic interview with the author (2020) that the fort commander tended to be the most senior officer running ops from there at any given time, so they changed fairly frequently.
8 Koos Stadler, Recce: Small Team Missions Behind Enemy Lines, Tafelberg, Cape Town, 2015.
9 Peter Stiff (2001).
10 Author interview with Charl Naudé, Pretoria, 14 January 2020.

12. South Africa's small-team recce pioneer

1 Anthony Turton (2012).
2 Paul Els (2000).
3 André Diedericks (2007).
4 Paul Els (2000).
5 Neil Kriel's logbook.
6 Author interview with Trevor Floyd (2019).
7 Neil Kriel's logbook for 1980 does not mention Fort Rev as a destination, nor André Diedericks and Neves Matias as passengers, so Kriel likely flew another aircraft for Operation Interrupt, which would make sense, given that two units needed to be transported with all of their bulky gear, clearly too large a load for the Seneca II.
8 André Diedericks (2007) has a rare photograph of the two D40 Primary Ops teams of Diedericks and Matias, and Callow and Dobe, at Marienfluss after Operation Interrupt, grubby and wild-haired, standing next to a Puma helicopter.
9 Paul Els (2000).
10 Walter Volker, Signal Units of the South African Corps of Signals and Related Signal Services, Veritas Books, Pretoria, 2010.

13. 'Ex-Rhodesians became cannon fodder'

1 Septinus Serfontein statement, State v Wouter Basson (1999).
2 Author interview with Johan Theron (2019).
3 Peter Schofield, in Mike Cadman (2007).
4 Eeben Barlow, comment on this text, 8 April 2020.
5 Exhibit 31C, 'Organisasie-Ondersoek na Projek Barnacle', in State v Wouter Basson (1999).
6 Neil Kriel testimony, Wouter Basson trial transcript (2000).

14. Delta 40 embraces the 'Dark Side'

1 Author interview with Johan Theron (2019).
2 Iain Guest, Behind the Disappearances: Argentina's Dirty War against Human Rights and the United Nations, University of Pennsylvania Press, Philadelphia, 1990. Chamorro retired in Pretoria after the junta fell in 1983, but died in a naval hospital in Buenos Aires in 1986 awaiting trial for his oversight of ESMA and the death flights.
3 Koos Stadler (2015).
4 Author interview with Johan Theron (2019).
5 Author inspection of Piper Seneca II ZS-KFG aeroplane, Springs Airfield, 4 November 2019.
6 With the independence of South West Africa to become Namibia in 1990, all of its airport codes changed.
7 There appears not to have been an airstrip at Oshivelo at the time, so they would have landed on a roadway.

8 Floyd's wife and daughters only joined him at his house in Verwoerdburg (now Centurion) in February 1980.

15. The first death flight

1 Jan Coetzee evidence, Wouter Basson trial transcript (2000).
2 Exhibit 47A, State v Wouter Basson (1999).
3 This section, Sperrgebiet 2, is now part of the Namib-Naukluft National Park. Only the southern Sperrgebiet 1 remains a restricted area. Meob Bay was no doubt initially chosen precisely because it was in the forbidden zone where the likelihood of being observed was near zero, but the flight there from Kamanjab must have taken almost an hour, so in future the D40 killers tended to choose final stops on the Skeleton Coast further north and closer to the detention facilities of Koevoet, 5 Recce, and the SAP.
4 Theron testified that they would later tie the door in the rear of the aircraft, as they sometimes did not return to the same coastal airstrip from which they had departed. It is most likely, based on my inspection of KS-KFG (Springs Airfield, 4 November 2019), that it was the main cabin door and not the rear storage door that was removed, because the rear doorway is too small through which to easily manhandle a corpse.
5 Author interview with Johan Theron (2019) and Theron's testimony in the Wouter Basson trial.
6 Kriel, in his own testimony, was confused about the date of the first D40 death flight, giving it as 13 July 1979, but his logbook confirms 12 July 1979 as the correct date.

16. 'I never counted the bodies'

1 Author interview with Johan Theron (2019).
2 Johan Theron said, 'I'm the expert and he's the operator and the two of us worked very nice together' in his interview for this book.
3 If this average rate was maintained over the entire 443-week duration of Operation Dual, that would give a statistically possible total of 74 death flights. If they averaged two to four victims per flight, which is more likely than one per flight for cost-saving purposes, the total number of disappearances might range between 148 – more than the 120 killed by death flights in Chile under Pinochet – and 296, the latter of which accords well with Theron's 'hundreds' estimate. This rate was not necessarily maintained after Kriel resigned from the unit in August 1982; it may have increased, decreased, or, far more likely, fluctuated as the situation demanded.
4 Kriel's estimated rate of 'disposals' would put the number of potential death flights during his own tenure alone at about 30 (with Theron also a qualified pilot, Kriel need not have participated in all of them), but I do not have the logbooks to support this.
5 TRC Final Report, Volume 2 (2003).

6 Author interview with Johan Theron (2019): 'He was actually a good pilot; he was better than me.'
7 Trevor Floyd, email to this author, 7 November 2019. Chris Schulenberg did not respond to an emailed request for an interview.

17. A death flight victim fights back

1 The emotional impact on the killers themselves of an intimate, bloody method of mass-killing detainees was noted by the Nazi Einsatzgruppen, who were required to shoot Jews in Eastern Europe. Protecting the killers' sensitivities was a key rationale behind the Nazis' shift from shootings to gassings, a supposedly more 'humane and clean' method of extermination that allowed the killers to maintain a clinical emotional detachment.
2 Author interview with Johan Theron (2019).

18. An old Recce gets blooded

1 Johan Theron evidence, Wouter Basson trial transcript (2000).
2 André Diedericks (2007).
3 Floyd's handwriting initially slants aggressively forwards, but is chaotic, mixing cursive and printed letters. It degenerates as the statement progresses, switching erratically from a forward to a backward slant, often in the space of a single word. This may signal the stress he experienced in writing the statement.
4 Terrace Bay is just a short distance north of Torra Bay, so both Floyd and the logbook may be correct, in that the destination may have been somewhere between the two bays.
5 Author interview with Trevor Floyd (2019).
6 Koos Stadler (2015).

PART III: THE SHACKLES COME OFF FROM DELTA 40 TO BARNACLE

19. A mandate to kill

1 'Verdere Implementering van Barnacle' (Further Implementation of Barnacle), [AR 11 967] in the Wouter Basson trial transcript (2000).
2 The front company's directors were Major Neil Kriel as CEO and Colonel Ben Rautenbach as CFO.
3 Preller Geldenhuys (2016). Operation Gericke was the Barnacle bombing of the Inkomo Barracks by Captain Peter Gericke.
4 Peter Stiff (2001).
5 Anthony Turton (2012).
6 Peter Stiff (1999). Again, Stiff blurs the line between Branfield's ZSOU network and the Barnacle unit; in his accounts, 'Barnacle' refers to both units working in concert.
7 The Sasol 2 attack was part of a series of sabotage attacks on 2 June 1980 against the state's strategic oil-from-coal plants and refineries. It caused damage estimated to be as high as R70 million.

20. A war crime at Lanseria

1 5 Recce was in the process of being restructured from a commando to a regiment with the integration of the former 3 Recce.
2 Eric Kennelly evidence, Wouter Basson trial transcript (2000).
3 Either the airfield at the Uis Mine on the plain near the foothills of the Brandberg, or the Brandberg West Mine closer to Toscanini.

21. Two hammers: Barnacle kills its own

1 Author interview with Johan Theron (2019).

22. The founding chief's last flights

1 Peter Stiff (2001).
2 Afrikaans for HQ Special Forces.
3 André Diedericks (2007).

23. Barnacle in its prime

1 Peter Stiff (1999), TRC Final Report, Volume 2 Chapter 1 (2003), and Howard Barrell, 'Conscripts to their Age: African National Congress Operational Strategy 1976–1986', DPhil thesis, Oxford University, 1993, online at https://www.sahistory.org.za/sites/default/files/field/archiveimages/howard_barrell_2.png.
2 Preller Geldenhuys (2016).
3 Stephen Ellis, External Mission: The ANC in Exile 1960–1990, Oxford University Press, Oxford, 2013.
4 Jacques Pauw (1991).
5 Author interview with Johan Theron (2019).
6 Geldenhuys had deep experience of the South West African/Angolan field of operations, having previously been the General Officer Commanding SWATF.
7 TRC Final Report, Volume 2, Chapter 2 (2003).
8 Jacques Pauw (1991).
9 Preller Geldenhuys (2016).

24. 'Like a James Bond movie'

1 Author interview with Kevin Woods (2019).
2 Author interview with Johan Theron (2019).
3 Author interview with Kevin Woods (2019). Strangely, their brand-new AK-47s were all clandestinely purchased from Soviet-bloc Romania, according to Johan Theron (interview, 19 November 2019).
4 Peter Stiff (2001).
5 Author interview with Kevin Woods (2019).
6 Preller Geldenhuys (2016). Operation Gericke was the Barnacle bombing of the Inkomo Barracks by Captain Peter Gericke.
7 Jacques Pauw (1991).

25. A changing of the guard

1 Author interview with Trevor Floyd (2019).
2 Author interview with Charl Naudé (2020). Naudé said Kriel thought nothing of swearing at senior officers, while Johan Theron (2019) said: 'He used to swear a helluva lot; whoah, the F-word was his vocabulary.'
3 Telephonic author interview with Colleen Carter, Johannesburg, 7 January 2020.
4 Jean-Michel Desblé joined the police in the Transkei. In 1987, he was expelled from South Africa after participating in a Transkei raid against the Ciskei. He is reported to have died in Maputo in Mozambique in November 2001 (http://www.orbspatrianostra.com/in-memoriam.html).
5 Tim Bax, 'The Final Deployment', in Jonathan Pittaway (2017).
6 André Diedericks (2007).
7 Anthony Turton (2012).
8 Peter Stiff (2001).
9 Author interview with Charl Naudé (2020).
10 André Diedericks (2007).
11 Author interview with Charl Naudé (2020).

26. Barnacle's role in the Maseru raid

1 Peter Stiff (1999).
2 Author correspondence with Trevor Floyd, 14 November 2019.
3 Author interview with Charl Naudé (2020).
4 Author interview with Charl Naudé (2020).
5 'BG' is the Afrikaans initials for 'Bevelvoerende Generaal' (Commanding General).
6 Anthony Turton (2012).

27. Small-teams success

1 Chandré Gould and Peter Folb (2002).
2 Author interview with Johan Theron (2019).
3 Johan Theron evidence, Wouter Basson trial transcript (2000). Johan Theron said in a telephonic interview (2020) that the Fort Rev commander rotated depending on which Recce op was being run out of there, while the police commander was in fact a Koevoet colonel.
4 Johan Theron evidence, Wouter Basson trial transcript (2000).
5 Author interview with Johan Theron (2019).
6 SWAPOL had been given operational independence from the SAP in 1981.
7 Author interview with Security Branch policeman, Namibia, 23 January 2020.
8 Paul Els (2000).

28. Trained, betrayed, murdered

1 Danie Phaal evidence, Wouter Basson trial transcript (2000). Phaal is deceased, according to Trevor Floyd.

2 Danie Phaal evidence, Wouter Basson trial transcript (2000).
3 Author interview with Charl Naudé (2020).
4 Telephonic author interview with Johan Theron, 22 January 2020.
5 Danie Phaal evidence, Wouter Basson trial transcript (2000). Phaal's use of the term 'soldier', rather than 'terrorist' or 'guerrilla', is telling.
6 The Afrikaans for 'pick-up truck', or 'utility vehicle'.
7 Tupperware, a brand of resealable plastic food containers.
8 Johan Theron evidence, Wouter Basson trial transcript (2000).
9 Matie van der Linde evidence, Wouter Basson trial transcript (2000).

29. The Wonder Air death flight

1 TRC Final Report, Volume 2 (2003).
2 Cor van Niekerk evidence, Wouter Basson trial transcript (2000).
3 Officially, the SAP 'investigated' the murder, but closed the docket as unsolved in an attempt to distance the regime publicly from RENAMO, while secretly a proper MI investigation got under way.
4 Charge 36, Indictment, in State v Wouter Basson (1999).
5 Liebenberg replaced Loots as GOC Special Forces in April 1982.
6 Charge 36, Indictment, in State v Wouter Basson (1999).
7 Fred Frayne affidavit, 37G, read into the record, Wouter Basson trial transcript (2000).
8 'Mr S' affidavit, 36F2, read into the record, Wouter Basson trial transcript (2000).

30. A death flight over the Indian Ocean

1 Kobus Bothma evidence, Wouter Basson trial transcript (2000).
2 Peter Godwin, 'Whose Kith and Kin Now?', Sunday Times Magazine, Johannesburg, 25 March 1984.

31. Barnacle's final small-teams mission

1 André Diedericks (2007).
2 Neve Matias did not respond to several SMS requests for an interview.
3 Koos Stadler (2015).
4 Peter Stiff (1999).
5 Operation Plexi is sometimes rendered as Operation Plecksy.
6 Anthony Turton (2012).
7 Author correspondence with Trevor Floyd, 14 November 2019.
8 Author interview with Charl Naudé (2020). Tim Callow did not respond to an emailed request for an interview.
9 Peter Stiff (2001).
10 Noted in This Day in History, SA History Online, at https://www.sahistory.org.za/dated-event/citizen-reports-alleged-member-sadf-isaiah-moyo-was-convicted-lusaka-zambia-three-counts.
11 See Rev Peter Hammond, 'Serving the Persecuted', Frontline Fellowship,

Cape Town, 2017: https://www.frontlinemissionsa.org/news/serving-the-persecuted. Peter Stiff (2001) notes that Hammond had met Moyo while himself being detained for 'subversive' missionary activities.
12 TRC Final Report, Volume 2, Chapter 2 (2003).
13 Peter Stiff (2001).
14 TRC Final Report, Volume 2, Chapter 2 (2003)

PART IV: DRAMATIC EXPANSION UNDER THE CCB

32. 'The Organisation' takes shape

1 Major-General Jac Büchner was succeeded as the chairman of TREWITS in 1987 by Major-General Bob Beukes, and thereafter by Brigadier CJA Viktor.
2 According to Peter Stiff (2001), the front company's budget for the financial year 1988/1989 was R22 093 000 and for 1989/1990 it was R28 717 000.
3 When Meerholz left to head 5 Recce Regt in 1988, serving as OC until killed in a suspicious 'car accident' on 24 November 1989, Regions 1 and 4 (Botswana, Angola, Zambia, and Tanzania) were combined under Dawid Fourie (who also managed Region 3, Lesotho), while Captain Pieter Botes took over Region 2 (Mozambique and Swaziland), and a Region 6 (South Africa) was established under Col Staal Burger (his nickname, 'Staal', means steel in Afrikaans).
4 Author interview with Kevin Woods (2019).
5 Peter Stiff (2001).
6 The CCB acquired at least one ship for covert use, the fishing vessel Margit Rye, purchased under Operation Crawler from Denmark for R2,5 million in February 1988 by a front company .
7 Author interview with Charl Naudé (2020).
8 Eeben Barlow comment on this text, 8 April 2020.
9 TRC Final Report, Volume 2, Chapter 2 (2003). Major Pete Stanton died in 2018: author interview with Trevor Floyd (2019).
10 TRC Final Report, Volume 2, Chapter 2 (2003).
11 Peter Stiff (2001).
12 TRC Final Report, Volume 2, Chapter 2 (2003).

33. Parallel pseudo-ops teams

1 Author interview with Frans Fourie, Bela Bela, South Africa, 8 January 2020.
2 After Staff Sergeant Blue Kelly's transfer to D40, its methods were refined by former SAS paratrooper Captain Willem Rätte, according to Jan Breytenbach (1999).
3 Author interview with Charl Naudé (2020).

34. The CCB's Inner Circle

1 Danie Phaal testimony, Wouter Basson trial transcript (2000).
2 Johan Theron testimony, Wouter Basson trial transcript (2000).

3 The bent teaspoon was handed in as evidence in the Basson trial.
4 Antony Turton (2012).
5 PSO stands for Personal Staff Officer, in other words the CSADF's aide-de-camp.
6 Peter Stiff (2001).
7 Turton writes that Lesia was released on 26 July 1990 and notes: 'This entire operation is not a legitimate act of war and amounts to criminal activities masquerading as military action. Acts like this serve to stigmatise members of the Security Forces who operate with integrity for decades to come.' Peter Stiff (2001) notes that Lesia was a shady art dealer with a long string of petty criminal convictions.

35. The Cessna Caravan death flight

1 Author interview with Johan Theron (2019).
2 Matie van der Linde testimony, Wouter Basson trial transcript (2000).
3 Van der Linde mentioned the following death flight penultimate destinations in his testimony: Zeerust, Windhoek, Oshivelo, and Brandberg West.
4 Hap Potgieter testified to only two aircraft on his Speskop Air Ops books, the Piper Seneca and the Écureuil helicopter, suggesting the Cessna Caravan was rather operated by the CCB proper. Peter Stiff (2001) is probably incorrect in claiming that the Caravan replaced the Seneca. Johan Theron said the Caravan had been purchased in about 1986: author interview with Johan Theron (2019).
5 He was nicknamed by his initials, 'Hap' meaning 'bite' in Afrikaans.

36. Resistance by Speskop's new Air Ops chief

1 Hap Potgieter testimony, Wouter Basson trial transcript (2000).
2 However, with the expansion of the CCB, its pseudo-operators acquired other aircraft and pilots and so it is possible that Operation Dual, whether under that name or another, in fact continued, despite Potgieter's refusal and without his knowledge, until the CCB was wound up over September 1989 to July 1990. Mitigating against this possibility is Theron's assertion that the last death flight was indeed on 12 December 1987.

37. The end of Operation Dual

1 Author interview with Johan Theron (2019).
2 Author interview with Johan Theron (2019).

PART V: AFTERMATH: OUR PACT OF FORGETTING

38. The end of the Border War

1 TRC Final Report, Volume 2, Chapter 2 (2003).
2 Peter Stiff (2001).

3 Author interview with Kevin Woods (2019).
4 Official Gazette No. 5725 of 7 June 1989, cited in Chandré Gould and Marlene Burger (2002).
5 Telephonic author interview with Bert Sachse (2020). Eeben Barlow tells his version of the organisation's activities in Executive Outcomes: Against All Odds, 30 Degrees South, Pinetown, 2018.
6 Peter Stiff (2001).

39. The CCB shuts down

1 Lieutenant-Colonel (later Brigadier) Jack Cronjé was in turn succeeded by the unit's longest-serving commander, former Koevoet policeman Lieutenant-Colonel Eugene de Kock, who ran the shadowy enterprise from 1985 to 1993.
2 In the D40/Barnacle era, the unit's documents – including any on Operation Dual – were kept by Colonel Johan Theron in his personal safe at Speskop.
3 Anthony Turton (2012).
4 Author interview with Charl Naudé (2020).
5 Paul Els (2000).
6 After taking early retirement, Colonel Eugene de Kock engaged in private Third Force activities, selling arms to Inkatha.
7 The DCC was the SADF's covert intelligence-gathering directorate, reporting directly to the Chief of Staff Intelligence, and had set up several 'civilian' front companies, including Longreach.
8 His nickname, Snor, means 'moustache' in Afrikaans.
9 Report of the Independent Board of Inquiry for the period December 1992 to January 1993, Johannesburg, South Africa, 1993, online at http://www.historicalpapers.wits.ac.za/inventories/inv_pdfo/AG2543/AG2543-2-2-31-01-jpeg.pdf.
10 I detail secret revelations by the US Embassy in Pretoria regarding Operation Vula in Drinking with Ghosts (2014).
11 Project Coast's Roodeplaat Research Laboratories in Afrikaans.
12 It was unaware at this stage, that this was the likely remnant of the ZSOU network established by Major Gray Branfield in support of D40, headquartered at Daisy farm next to Vlakplaas, in 1979–1980.

40. Shadow boxing: The Trial of the Generals

1 Kriel testified: 'Mr Theron I saw in about 1994, 1993–1994 and that is the only time that I see him, and I went in, we had a cup of coffee and walked out. That was basically it. I never saw him again' (Wouter Basson trial transcript, 2000).
2 After completing his shutdown of Project Jota, Brigadier Wouter Basson was rehired as a cardiac surgeon at 1 Military Hospital.
3 Even though Inkatha's area of operations lay in the east of the country, their impi's training in Caprivi put them under DST1 and not DST2 tutelage.
4 As a result, Basie Smit gained a fearsome reputation as the 'Third Force General'.
5 Held in Pretoria's C-Max maximum-security prison, De Kock proved himself very useful, sharing his knowledge with TRC investigators, prosecutors, and investigative journalists exploring apartheid depredations. After serving nineteen years, he was released on parole in January 2015, a broken man, embittered by his experience as the scapegoat, the sole mid-level officer to do time for apartheid crimes.

6 Major-General Dirk Marais email to this author, 10 November 2019.
7 Author interview with Dirk Marais, Hartebeespoort, 21 December 2019.
8 Michael Schmidt, Drinking with Ghosts (2014).
9 Ole Bubenzer, Post-TRC Prosecutions in South Africa: Accountability for Political Crimes after the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Amnesty Process, Martinus Nijhoff Publishers, Leiden, 2009.
10 Author interview with Dirk Marais (2019).
11 Jürgen Kögl did not respond to a telephonic message request by this author for an interview and could not be traced in person. Thabo Mbeki did not respond to questions on these negotiations emailed to him via a close associate.
12 Letter sent by Dirk Marais to Jacob Zuma, undated, early 2004, copy in the author's possession.
13 Ole Bubenzer (2009) bases his assertion of separate strictly confidential talks between the ANC/Government and the Security Branch in particular on his interview with former Security Branch chief General Johan van der Merwe.
14 Ole Bubenzer (2009).
15 Ole Bubenzer (2009) claims that the Security Branch and other state employees were championed in negotiations by former President FW de Klerk – who 'often consulted directly with President Mbeki or with other high-ranking members of the government' – and a lobby group, the Foundation for Equality Before the Law.
16 Author interview with Dirk Marais (2019).

41. Half-truths at the Truth Commission

1 Draft letter sent by Dirk Marais to Jacob Zuma (2004).
2 Ole Bubenzer (2009).
3 Author emails addressed to Mbeki's and Zuma's spokespeople, to the Ministry of Defence for Nqakula, and to Maduna personally, May-June 2020.
4 Sydney Mufamadi, telephonic call to the author, 31 May 2020.
5 Mathews Phosa, telephonic call to the author, 1 June 2020.
6 Victims' List, TRC Final Report (2003).
7 Author SMS communication with Marjorie Jobson, 17 January 2020.
8 TRC Final Report, Volume 2, Chapter 1 (2003).
9 TRC Final Report, Volume 2, Chapter 2 (2003).
10 Constand Viljoen, TRC testimony, Cape Town, 8 October 1997.
11 A key – and very controversial – formulation of the TRC was the offer of amnesty to perpetrators in exchange for a full and truthful confession; these confessions were heard by a separate TRC arm, the Amnesty Committee.

12 Joep Joubert TRC amnesty application AM3799/96.
13 Joep Joubert TRC testimony, Cape Town, 8 October 1997.

42. Dual exposed: the Wouter Basson trial

1 Chandré Gould and Marlene Burger (2002).
2 Chandré Gould and Marlene Burger (2002).
3 Chandré Gould and Marlene Burger (2002).
4 The State had also applied to the SCA for a ruling against Judge Hartzenberg's refusal on 15 November 1999 to allow the record of Basson's bail hearing into the record before the accused had even been asked to plead, and against Hartzenberg's having refused, on 16 February 2000, to recuse himself on the grounds of bias; the SCA ruled against the State in these instances too.

43. (Re)disappearing the disappeared

1 Author interview with Dirk Marais (2019).
2 Ole Bubenzer (2009).
3 The 'Report: Amnesty Task Team' was disclosed during the matter of *Nkadimeng & Others v The National Director of Public Prosecutions & Others (*Transvaal Provincial Division case number 32709/07).
4 A total of 7 111 amnesty applications were received, of which 5 392 were refused and 849 granted. The TRC noted with regret that there was little overlap between amnesty applications and victims seeking restitution.
5 Letter sent by Dirk Marais to Jacob Zuma, undated, early 2004, copy in the author's possession.
6 Letter sent by Dirk Marais to Jürgen Kögl, undated, early 2004, copy in the author's possession.
7 At about the same time, ANC/Government negotiations with the former Security Branch chiefs also came to an end, according to Ole Bubenzer (2009).
8 State v Wouter Basson, Constitutional Court Case CCT30/03.
9 Trevor Floyd, sworn statement, State v Wouter Basson (1999).
10 State v Wouter Basson, Media Summary, 9 September 2005, online at http://www.saflii.org/za/cases/ZACC/2005/10media.pdf.
11 Vusi Pikoli affidavit in Nkadimeng & Others v The National Director of Public Prosecutions & Others (2007).
12 Jackie Selebi, who at one stage held the post of President of Interpol, was later convicted and sentenced to fifteen years for corruption for his relationship to drug lord Glenn Agliotti. See: 'The Desperate Bid to Shield Selebi', Mail & Guardian, 5 October 2007.
13 Vusi Pikoli affidavit in Nkadimeng & Others v The National Director of Public Prosecutions & Others (2007).
14 Ronnie Kasrils said (email to the author, 6 May 2020) that he was merely 'present in a meeting' – and indeed it was Selebi who held the floor at the 23 August 2007 meeting at which, Pikoli states, Selebi said 'he was "declaring war" on me'.

44. Quietus: The founding chief's exit

1 Telephonic author interview with former Kriel business associate Mark Seftel, Johannesburg, 19 December 2019. Kriel apparently installed several of these lethal fences in US prisons, according to Seftel.
2 Telephonic author interview with Mark Seftel (2019).
3 The Memorable Order of Tin Hats (MOTH) is a military veterans' charity founded in South Africa in 1927 that is organised around branches called Shellholes.
4 Telephonic author interview with Joe Texeira, Johannesburg, 19 December 2019.
5 Winston Hart did not respond to an emailed request for an interview on the influence of Rhodesian pseudo-ops doctrine on South African Special Forces.
6 Email correspondence by Pete Stanton to Neil Kriel, the men named, and several others, 16 March 2018.
7 Email correspondence by Neil Kriel to Jerry Strong, the men named, and several others, 17 March 2018.
8 Author interview with Tali Nates, Johannesburg Holocaust & Genocide Centre, 11 October 2019.
9 Telephonic author interview with Joe Texeira (2019).
10 Author interview with Charl Naudé (2020).
11 Telephonic author interview with Colleen Carter (2020).

Index

1 Reconnaissance Commando 21, 43–44, 64, 72–73, 75, 97, 147, 183, 257
1 Reconnaissance Regiment 147
3 Reconnaissance Commando 70–71, 72, 85–86, 98, 147, 272
4 Reconnaissance Commando 97, 164, 186, 228–229
5 Reconnaissance Commando 23, 28, 43–45, 76, 97–101, 114, 147
5 Reconnaissance Regiment 98, 106, 147, 151, 154, 164, 183, 209–211, 227, 241, 257, 260
6 Reconnaissance Commando 70, 72, 86, 147, 150–151
7 Medical Battalion 54, 256
7 Reconnaissance Commando 70–71
32 Battalion 21, 44, 97, 98, 100, 227–228

Ackermann, Anton 277, 282, 290
African National Congress (ANC) 74, 77, 130, 166–167, 174, 183–186, 210–213, 219, 225–226, 228–229, 248, 253, 256, 262–270, 281–283 aircraft 23, 26, 50–51, 91, 118–120, 131, 163, 170, 235–237
Algeria 10–11, 113–114
Allum, Peter Kevin 32
Alpha Operational Test Group 21
'ambush' vs 'elimination' 128–129 amnesty 249–250, 260, 264, 269–270, 276, 279, 286–287
Amnesty Task Team 283–286
Anderson, Fernando 'Mack' 242–243
André Rabie Barracks 22, 169–170
Angola 34, 97, 182, 247–248
anthrax 30–31, 36–37
Argentina 10, 12, 114, 124, 167, 288
Armscor 30, 92, 94
Armstrong, Pat 64–65, 67–69, 293
askaris see 'turned' guerrillas assassinations see 'eliminations'
Atkinson, Geoff 69, 71
Auditor-General 232
Aussaresses, Paul 11
Azanian People's Organisation (AZAPO) 130, 253

Badenhorst, Rudolph 'Witkop' 137–138
Badger Unit 255–256
Balaam, Andy 293
Barlow, Eeben 109, 222, 223, 250
Barnacle 10, 88–89, 108–109, 148–150, 152, 158, 162–163, 166, 170, 177–181, 186, 188, 192–193, 208–209, 220
Barnard, Ferdi 226, 255
Barrett, Garth 17, 70, 71, 72, 150
Basson, Wouter 31–32, 53–56, 67, 126, 137, 154, 184, 188–189, 193, 225, 256–257, 259–260, 275–280, 286–289
Basson, Wouter Jacobus 221, 224
Basson trial 110, 113, 122, 126, 137, 153–154, 158, 193, 205, 275–280, 283
Batohi, Shamila 291
Battle of Ebo 107
Bawden, Barry 83–84, 248
Bawden, Christopher "Kit" 83–84, 248
Bawden, Guy T 83, 248
Bax, Tim 20, 71, 77, 180
Beahan, Dennis 'Sammy' 249
Beaufre, André 11–12, 90
Berry, Jack 18
Bindura fort 22, 34–35, 66
Birch, Johnny de Gray 67, 87, 139, 162
Blaauw, Hennie M 147
black pseudo-operators 77–79, 92
Bomba, Boaventura 199–203
Booysen, Joop 224
Boraine, Alex 270
Border War, South African 19, 63, 147, 247–251
Botha, Pik 167, 173
Botha, PW 68, 88, 90, 149–150, 168–169, 174, 219, 221, 260
Bothma, Kobus 205–207, 276, 279
Botswana 16, 43, 209–211
Bradley, JE 117
Brandberg Mountains 159–160
Branfield, Gray
  background of 82–83

Basson trial 126, 276
D40/Barnacle 77, 82–86, 88–89, 107, 140, 148–149, 158–159, 161, 167–168, 171, 173–175, 181, 183, 210–212
death of 158–159
resignation of 214–215, 248–249
Breytenbach, Jan 21, 44
Brickhill, Jeremy 234
Britain 18, 49, 65
British South Africa Police (BSAP) 17, 18, 69, 71, 169
Bruni, Roger 47
Bruwer, Henry 276
Bubenzer, Ole 263–267, 270, 282
Büchner, Jac 220
Buffalo Range Forward Airfield 23, 50–60
Bureau of State Security (BOSS) 129
Burger, Marlene 80, 277, 278–279
Burger, Staal 223, 255

C1 87, 92–95, 227, 252, 253, 255
C10 255
Callow, Timothy J 25–27, 77, 102–103, 105–106, 179, 181, 189–190, 211
Calloway, Matthew 'Matt' 86
Carter, Colleen 179, 294 casualties 37, 66, 126–128, 132, 238, 248, 274 cell structure 171–173, 224
Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) 35, 48–49, 52
Central Intelligence Organisation (CIO) 18, 32, 34–35, 65, 70, 198 chain of command see lines of reporting
Chamorro, Rubén 114
Charles, Commandant 184 chemical and biological agents 29–38, 57, 59–60, 111, 122–123, 131, 135–137, 141, 154–156, 187, 189, 194–196, 203–206, 231, 235–236, 277–278, 283, 288 chemical and biological warfare (CBW) programme 31–38, 57, 60, 66, 225, 259–260, 267
Chief of Staff Intelligence (CSI) 86–87, 89, 167, 232
Chikane, Frank 226, 283, 289–290
Chikondo, Martin 26–27, 41–42
Chikurubi prison 29
Chilisi, Tsitsi 234
cholera 30, 36
Christie, Stuart 46
Christopher (Barnacle member) 194–197
Church, John 105, 184–185
Cilliers, Jaap 54–55
Citizen, The 213
Civil Cooperation Bureau (CCB) 10, 93, 220–226, 230–234, 240, 243, 248–250, 253–254, 257, 260, 278 civilian covers 11–12, 79, 87, 110, 152, 224 civilians 30, 37, 66, 185, 186, 211, 234
Cline, Lawrence 16, 18–19, 22, 40
Coetzee, Dirk 93, 252
Coetzee, Jan 30, 31, 122–123, 252
Coetzee, Johann 185–186, 200 communications 104, 223
communism 18, 64, 86, 90 compartmentalisation 111–112, 171, 194, 222, 224, 227–229
Conjwayo, Phillip 248–249
Constitutional Court (ConCourt) 286–289
Contact Bureau (SADF) 262, 264, 266, 285
Co-ordinating Intelligence Committee (CIC or KIK) 167, 220
Counter-Revolutionary Information Task Team (TREWITS) 220 crematorium 29
Criminal Procedure Act 284
Cristina, Orlando 198–204
Cronjé, Jack 252
Cross, Glenn 30–38, 54, 66, 95
Cuba 34, 63, 247–248 cultural dissonance 71–72, 109
Curtin, Mike 69, 107

Da Costa, Almerindo Mourão 78–79, 132
Daisy farm (base) 83, 85–86, 158, 161
Da Silveira, Carlos 50–52
'death bonuses' 35, 37
'death squad', origin of term 11
De Beer, Dewald L 103
De Fonseca, Victor M 230–231
De Fontanges, Guillaume 9, 10–11
De Klerk, FW 6, 253, 256, 259–260
De Kock, Eugene 95–96, 255, 258, 261, 279
De l'Assomption, Roland 47
Delta 40 (D40) 10, 60, 77–81, 88–89, 91–92, 94, 108–112, 118–120, 127–129, 148, 181, 272–280
Delta Operational Test Group 21
Denard, Bob 46–48
Desblé, Jean-Michel 47–48, 51–52, 56–58, 71, 180 detainees 22–23, 29, 37, 98, 113–120, 126, 188, 272
Dhlakama, Afonso 199, 201
Diedericks, André 'Diedies' 28, 44–45, 83, 102–107, 140, 149, 164–165, 179–182, 189–190, 208–209
Directorate of Military Intelligence see Military Intelligence Directorate of Special Tasks (DST) 88, 171–172, 203, 220–221, 260 disguises 116
Dobe, Paul 'Americo' 102, 105–106, 181, 189–190, 209

Drew, Dave 116, 141–142, 194, 241–243
Dreyer, Johannes G 'Sterk Hans' 95–96
Dube, John (aka 'Boy' Mvemve) 128–129

elections 67, 82
Elektroniese, Meganiese, Landboukundige en Chemiese Ingenieursvaardighede (EMLC) 30–31, 34, 79, 94, 111, 122–123, 136, 169, 172, 175, 224
'eliminations' 109–111, 128–129, 148, 152–157, 166, 187–189, 193–197, 200, 220, 225, 229, 232–233
Ellert, Henrik 35
Ellis, Stephen 168
Els, Paul 71, 102, 103, 106, 190, 254
Emily Hobhouse, SAS 77
Engelbrecht, Krappies 255
Evans, Colin 86, 168
executions 29
Executive Outcomes (EO) 250

Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) 35
Flechas (Arrows) 96–97
Flower, Ken 32, 35
Floyd, Trevor
  background of 74–75
  Basson trial 126, 276–277, 279, 288
  D40/Barnacle 79–80, 84, 87–89, 92, 104, 119–120, 133, 139–143, 148, 154–156, 158–161, 178–179, 193, 195–197, 211, 221
  later career 293
  SPO 72, 74–77
Folb, Peter 29–32, 53, 74–75, 91, 108–109, 187, 220, 224–225
Fort Foot 182
Fort Namutoni 119
Fort Rev 98–101, 104, 114–115, 121, 188–189
forward airfields (FAF) 23
Fourie, Frans 227–229
France 9–12, 113–114
Frayne, Fred 201–203
front companies 74, 91, 152, 201, 221–225, 228, 250 funds 34–36, 91, 118

Gartner, M John 143
Geldenhuys, Jannie 169–170, 221, 232–234, 250, 253, 254, 267, 269–270, 281–282
Geldenhuys, Preller 85, 92, 167, 174–175
Geneva Conventions 113, 130
Gericke, Patrick 170
German Soldiers' Combat League 46
Gillwald, Cheryl 283
Godwin, Peter 207
Gould, Chandré 29–32, 53, 74–75, 80, 91, 108–109, 187, 220, 224–225, 277–279
Gqabi, Joe Nzingo 166–168, 174
Groenewald, Tienie 192
Guma, Mduduzi 151
Hall, Piet 93
Hammer Unit 93, 227
Hani, Chris 185
Harms Commission 253–254
Hart, Winston 19–22, 24, 27, 87–89, 149, 181, 293
Hartlebury, Philip 86, 168
Hartzenberg, Willie 56, 67, 276–279
Henderson, Ian 20
Hickman, John 20, 32
Hills, James 209
Horne, Gerald 49
Hugo, Jan 261
Hunter, Roland 204

Indian Ocean, death flights over 205–207, 237
Inkatha Freedom Party (IFP) 256, 260–261, 263–264
Irregular Warfare Branch (IWB) 21

Jobson, Marjorie 271
Johannesburg Holocaust & Genocide Centre 293–294
Joint Management Centres (JMCs) 233–234
Jordan, Pallo 226, 288
Joubert, Joep 106, 211–212, 221, 232–233, 241, 273–274, 278
Joynt, Vernon 257

Kalafong Hospital 107
Kalimbwe, Timothy 214
Kapembe (tracker) 103
Kasrils, Ronnie 226, 270, 288, 290
Kelly, Kenneth John 'Blue' 78, 140, 227
Kennelly, Eric Ingles 154–155, 275, 279
Ketalar 139, 195, 206, 243
Khulumani Support Group 271
Kinghorn, Malcolm 44, 97, 259
Knobel, Niël 267, 278
Koevoet 95–98, 114–115, 136, 188
Kögl, Jürgen 262, 263–266, 285
Kriel, Joan 92, 178, 179
Kriel, Neil (Cornelius Ignatius Johannes)
  background of 15–18
  Basson trial 54–55, 276–277, 279
  D40/Barnacle 9–10, 85, 88–89, 91–92, 94, 103–105, 108, 110–113, 115–116, 118–137, 139–143, 148–149, 152–159, 161–163, 166, 193, 220, 291
  death of 294
  later career 292–294
  resignation of 177–179, 259, 292–293
  Selous Scouts 20, 23–24, 27–28, 42–43, 66
  SPO 73–77

Kruger, Theunis Erasmus 221, 224, 226, 250
Lamprecht, Nicholas 46
Lancaster House Agreement 65
Latin America 114
Lekota, Mosiuoa 270, 290
Lesia, Leslie 234
Lesotho 161, 183–186, 208–209
Lewis, Joe 24
Liebenberg, Kat 84–85, 173, 177, 179–181, 185, 190–191, 194, 200, 209, 211, 221, 253–254, 257, 260, 267 lines of reporting 32, 88, 111–112, 129, 222–223
Loots, Fritz
  Basson trial 126, 275, 277
  D40/Barnacle 9–10, 80, 84–85, 91, 94, 103, 108–109, 111–113, 121, 127, 137, 148–150, 152–153, 158, 169–170
  retirement of 178
  Selous Scouts 21, 68
  SPO 73–74, 76
  TRC 273
Louw, Willem 21
Lubowski, Anton 250, 254, 271
Luitingh, Lafras 221, 224, 250
Lusaka Accords 212

Mabandla, Brigitte 270, 286, 289
Madagascar 9
Maduna, Penuell 270, 281
Makakola, John 199–203
Makoanyane military base 208–209
Malan, Magnus 12, 35, 73–74, 90–91, 112, 114, 167, 169, 221, 260–261, 267, 269–270, 278
Mambo Press 132
Mandela, Nelson 12, 262, 265
Manzini, Manala 290
Marais, Dirk R 262–263, 265, 267–268, 270, 278, 281–282, 285
Maseru raid 183–186
Masire, Quett 209–210
Masutha, Michael 291
Mathyssen, Paul 76
Matias, Neves Thomas 'Balthazar' 44–45, 97, 103–107, 164, 179, 181, 189–190, 208–209
Matola raid 150–151
Mau Mau uprising 20
Mavengere, Stanlake 19
Mbeki, Thabo 166, 229, 262, 265–268, 270, 289–290
McGuinness, Michael 'Mac' 18, 21, 27, 31–35, 60, 86, 89, 95
McLoud, John 'Aussie' 249 medals 40–45, 102–103, 106, 132, 150 medical care 22–23, 91
Meerholz, Corrie 151, 221, 224–225, 232, 250–251 mercenaries 46–49, 159
Meyer, Roelf 233
militarisation of society 18, 90, 220
Military Intelligence (MI) 64, 88, 198–201, 220–221
MOA Bamboo (Pty) Ltd 292, 293
Modise, Joe 166, 168, 267
Mokgabudi, Motso 'Obadi' 150
Mooiplaas farm (base) 93
Moore, Charles Robert 48–49
Morgan, Nigel 70
Morgan, Phil 28, 30, 79, 94, 104, 111, 175, 179, 224
Morogoro base 229
Moto 132
Mount Darwin fort 22, 37, 66
Moyo, Isaiah 173–174, 212–214
Mozambican National Resistance (RENAMO) 80, 164–165, 198–200, 203–204
Mozambique 16, 23–24, 36–37, 39–40, 43, 97, 150, 164–165
Mozambique Liberation Front (FRELIMO) 39, 40, 43, 57, 198
Mpofu, Stephen 26–27, 40–41
'Mr S' 201–203
'Mr Z' 82–83
Mufamadi, Sydney 267, 270
Mugabe, Robert 65–67, 84, 86, 168–169
Mulligan, Kevin 50–51
Murray, Hamish 18
Mushala, Adamson 214
Muzorewa, Abel 63, 65, 67

Namibia see South West Africa
Nates, Tali 293
National Front for the Liberation of Angola (FNLA) 44–45, 96, 97
National Intelligence Service (NIS) 88–89, 129, 220, 227
National Prosecuting Authority (NPA) 279, 282–283, 285–286, 289–290
National Security Management System (NSMS) 90–91
National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA) 44, 100, 181–182, 189, 241, 247
Naudé, Charl 88, 97–101, 177–186, 193–194, 211, 221, 223–225, 229, 254, 294
Neethling, Lothar 31, 257
Nel, Christoffel 224–225
neo-Nazis 46–49
Nickedimus, Mazaruva Tapera 258
Niemoller, Johan 222
NKJM Eiendomme 91, 118, 152
NKTF Security Consultants 152
Nkuna, Tshikani 271
Noble, Vic 33, 34, 38

Nofomela, Almond 252
Nqakula, Charles 270, 281, 290
Ntsebeza, Dumisa 291
Ntuli, Bheki 260
nuclear weapons 260
Nujoma, Sam 105
Nyadzonya, training base at 39–40
Nyati, Moses Morrison 39, 69

Oberholzer, Andrew 15–16
Ocean Tech 221–225
Olckers, Ewald 147
Omar, Dullah 226, 267, 270
Operational Experimental Team 21
Operation Askari 212
Operation Barrage 189–191
Operation Beanbag 150–151
Operation Concept 67
Operation Drama 201
Operation Dual 115–116, 126–128, 150, 152, 163, 243, 250, 264, 275–280, 287–289
Operation Eland 39–40
Operation Force 164–165
Operation Gericke 149, 174
Operation Hurricane 19
Operation Interrupt 103–105, 189
Operation Kropduif 179
Operation Lebanta 183–186
Operation Marion 260
Operation Mincemeat 59
Operation Mixer 167–168
Operation Moduler 247
Operation Pastoor 257
Operation Plexi 210–211
Operation Quartz 66–67
Operation Reindeer 113, 185
Operation Savannah 44, 102
Operation Splinter 43
Operation Vodka 65
Operation Vula 256
Operation Winter 69, 107, 272
Opperman, Vic 20, 87, 134
organogram of D40 78–81, 89, 108, 148 organophosphates 30, 36
Otto, Gert 283, 289

'Pact of Forgetting' 262–270, 281–286, 290–291
Palmeira Import & Export 228
Pan Africanist Congress (PAC) 110, 130, 253, 256 parachute training 43, 71, 101, 107, 193
Parker, Jim 65–67, 82, 84, 86–88
Parks, Ian 150–151
Pauw, Jacques 86, 168, 170, 174–175
People's Armed Forces of Liberation of Angola (FAPLA) 63, 97, 113, 247
People's Forces of Liberation of Mozambique (FPLM) 39, 58
Peoples' Liberation Army of Namibia (PLAN) 63, 96, 98–101, 103, 116–117, 122, 129, 249
People's Movement for the Liberation of Angola (MPLA) 44, 78–79, 99–101 perfidy, war crime of 11
Perkins, David 34
Pessarra, Chris 48–49, 50–58, 60
Phaal, Danie 192–197, 230–231, 235–236, 276, 277, 279
Phosa, Mathews 266, 270
Pienaar, Louis 249
Pikoli, Vusi 289–290
Pinochet, Augusto 287
Pittaway, Jonathan 96
poisons see chemical and biological agents
Potgieter, Hendrik Andreas Petrus 'Hap' 237–243, 276
President Security Consultants 152
Pretorius, Torie 276
Price, Geoffrey Burton 86, 88, 175, 255
Priority Crimes Litigation Unit (PCLU) 282–283
prisoners see detainees
Project Coast 53–54, 187, 259, 267
Project Departure 87–89, 181
Project Jota 259–260 pseudo-gangs, use of 11, 18–21, 76, 229

racism 78, 182
radios 30, 33
railway lines, sabotage of 41, 189–191
Rautenbach, Ben 80, 94, 152
Recce Group 77
Recce Troop 25–28, 42, 77, 104
Reconnaissance Commandos 35, 66, 82, 93, 108 referendum of 1983 206–207
Reid-Daly, Ron 19–20, 22, 24–25, 27, 31–33, 40, 180
Renosterspruit farm 91–92
Resister 187
Rhodesia 17, 36
Rhodesia Herald, The 49
Rhodesian African Rifles (RAR) 20, 68, 71, 95
Rhodesian Bush War 15–18, 65
Rhodesian Light Infantry (RLI) 18, 23, 65, 66
Rhodesians' relocation to and from SA 66–72, 109, 147, 179–180, 224 right-wing forces 263
Riotous Assemblies Act 287, 288
Robey, Noel 24, 71, 99
Robinson, Brian 25, 293
rugby 15–18, 24
Rusiki, Corporal 182
Russia see Soviet Union

Sachse, Bert 17–18, 42, 48, 52, 56, 58–60, 64, 250 salaries 84, 92, 225
Saturday Star 255–256
Saudi Arabia 35
Scales, Dave 25–27, 79, 104, 140, 164, 179, 182, 190, 209
Schiettocht base 68
Schofield, Peter 71–72, 109, 137–138
Schulenburg, Chris 'Schulie' 25–28, 40–41, 77–78, 88–89, 102, 131–133, 179, 228
Scilingo, Adolfo 288
Scoline 139, 189, 206, 236, 243
Scott, Ian 68–71
secret negotiations between SADF chiefs and ANC ministers 262–270, 281–286, 290–291
Section of Pseudo-Operations (SPO) 73–77, 82
Security Services Transkei (Pty) Ltd 180
Selebi, Jackie 286, 289–290
Selous Scouts 10, 19–27, 30–31, 34–35, 39–45, 48, 51–52, 56–60, 64–71, 93, 96, 98–99
September, Dulcie 226
Serfontein, Chris 228
Serfontein, Septinus 108–109 shooting of death flight victims 135
Slatter, Hugh 176
Slovo, Joe 151, 166
Smit, Basie 261
Smith, Chris 283, 289
Smith, Ian 32, 35, 63, 68
Smith, Michael 83–84, 248–249
Soames, Lord Christopher 65
Sole, Sam 93
South African Air Force (SAAF) 67, 105, 118, 134–135, 185–186, 192, 199
South African Communist Party (SACP) 225–226, 253, 256
South African Council of Churches 220
South African Defence Force (SADF) 36, 43–44, 90–91, 109, 225, 233, 249, 253, 256, 262–272, 281–286
'South African Intelligence' 34–36
South African National Defence Force (SANDF) 263, 264
South African Police (SAP) 17, 34, 90, 122, 130, 167, 188, 249–250
South West Africa 29, 63, 95, 121, 247–249, 253
South West African People's Organisation (SWAPO) 10, 63, 74, 97–98, 113–117, 122, 126, 129, 141–142, 154, 241, 270–271, 279
South West African Police (SWAPOL) 188, 249–250
South West Africa Territorial Force (SWATF) 70, 98, 247, 249
Soviet Union 16, 63, 247–248
Spain 262–263
Special Air Service (SAS) 17–18, 23, 25, 30–31, 43–45, 64–68, 70–72, 95, 97
Special Branch (SB) (BSAP) 18, 20–21, 23, 30–31, 33, 35, 67, 69, 85–88, 169
'special courts' 29
Special Forces (SF) 67–69, 94, 106, 108–109, 111, 118, 129, 147–149, 162–163, 167, 256–257, 259
Speskop 53, 80–81, 94, 98, 102, 114, 129, 130, 142, 152, 154, 162, 163, 175, 177–179, 185, 192, 193, 198, 204–209, 240, 243, 249, 253, 254, 259, 272, 275, 276, 288, 296
Stadler, Koos 98, 116, 142, 209
Stannard, Richard 150, 184–185
Stanton, Pete 'Stroppy' 20, 79–80, 87, 89, 104, 111, 134, 161, 179, 181, 183, 224, 293
State Security Council (SSC) 6, 74, 91, 173
Steyn, Ben 259
Steyn, Danie 79, 89, 92, 104, 179, 181
Steyn Commission 256–258
Stiff, Peter
  CCB 222, 225, 232–233, 249–253
  chemical and biological agents 30–31, 33, 38
  D40/Barnacle 83–85, 87–88, 92, 98, 149–150, 152, 161, 166, 173–174, 180–181, 183–186, 209–213
  Selous Scouts 68–69, 71–72
  SPO 75–76
strangulation 136–137, 139
Strong, Jerry 20, 293
Sunday Times 55
Suttill, Jim 150
Swart, Jakes 102
Swart, Mattheus J 'Boet' 43, 64, 69, 71, 98, 180–182, 190, 209
Symington, Robert 31–35, 38

Tambo, Oliver 166, 226
'Tambuti Lodge' pub 25, 27
Teen-Rewolusionêre Inligtingstaakspan (TREWITS) 220 thallium 31, 36, 231
Theron, Johan
  Basson trial 275, 277, 279
  CCB 221, 231, 235–243, 249, 257
  D40/Barnacle 10, 77–81, 84, 91–92, 94, 108, 113–120, 122–139, 141–143, 148, 154–158, 161–162, 168–169, 179, 184, 187–189, 193–196, 203–207, 272
  retirement of 293
  SPO 74
'Third Force' 225, 256, 264
Timol, Ahmed 6, 291
Tippet, Dave 164, 234
Tiro, Abraham Onkgopotse 129
torture 11–12, 96–97, 99, 116, 212–215, 272

'total strategy' 11–12, 90–91, 234, 259 training 21–22, 43, 71, 93–94, 107, 260
Transkei 132–133, 180
Trengove, Wim 286–288
'Trial of the Generals' 260–261
Trowsdale, Alan 'Trousers' 86, 168, 214, 222, 224, 248
Truter, Johan 257
Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC) 53–54, 69–70, 83, 86, 96, 128, 170, 175–176, 198–199, 213–214, 225, 256–258, 261, 264, 269–275, 278–279, 282
Tubarine 139, 189, 206, 236, 243
'turned' guerrillas 21–24, 29, 40, 85–86, 96–101, 142, 272
Turton, Anthony 88–89, 102, 107, 153, 169, 175, 181, 183, 186, 210–211, 226, 231–232, 234, 254
Tutu, Desmond 291
two-man teams 25–26, 28, 74, 78, 102

uMkhonto we Sizwe (MK) 17, 85, 150, 166–167, 183–186, 209–211, 225–226, 249
United African National Council (UANC) 63, 65, 67
United Democratic Front (UDF) 219, 220
United Nations (UN) 40, 247–248
United States (US) 18, 48–49, 247–248

Van Blerk, Rocky 83, 257–258
Van den Bergh, Cecil 'Vise Grips' 69, 79, 147
Van der Byl, PK 32
Van der Linde, Martin 'Matie' 162–164, 178, 184–185, 193–194, 196, 206–207, 221, 236–239, 276–277, 279
Van der Merwe, Johan 94, 289–290
Van der Riet, Piet 71, 180
Van der Riet, Willie 93
Van der Spuy, Sybie 117, 224
Van der Westhuizen, Joffel 93
Van Heerden, Roelf 224
Van Niekerk, Cor 198–202, 204
Van Staden, Manie 283, 289
Van Tonder, Neels 'Smiley' 202
Varkevisser, Fred 170
Varney, Howard 282, 286
Verster, Joe 97, 221, 232–233, 252–253, 258
Videla, Jorge Rafael 12
Viktor, JJ 92–93, 95
Viljoen, Constand 112, 169, 185, 211, 262–263, 265–267, 269–270, 273, 278
Vlakplaas base 93, 252, 253
Vlok, Adriaan 289–290
Von Horsten, Butch 161
Vrye Weekblad 252

Walls, Peter 32, 65
Warfarin 36, 194
Warraker, Robert 26, 27, 39–40
Washington Post, The 49
Watt, Darrell 293
weaponry 20, 27–28, 48, 69, 75–76, 94, 104, 110–111, 117, 132, 147, 169–170, 172, 182
Webb, Eddie 253
West, Alec 86, 87, 88, 168
Wilson, Rob 'Wings' 23–24 witnesses 123, 130–131, 196
Wolhuter, Henry 34, 37–38, 86 women and children 137–138, 185, 186, 211
Wonder Air 198–204
Woods, Kevin 84, 88, 171–174, 215, 222, 248–249
World War II 59

Younghusband, Peter 183

Zambia 17, 18, 65, 174, 213–215
Zimbabwe African National Liberation Army (ZANLA) 16, 57–58, 64–66, 69, 161
Zimbabwe African People's Union (ZAPU) 16, 18, 43, 63, 65–67
Zimbabwean African National Union (ZANU) 16, 40, 63, 65–67, 69, 82, 174–175
Zimbabwean Air Force 175–176
Zimbabwean Central Intelligence Organisation (ZCIO) 234, 258
Zimbabwe People's Revolutionary Army (ZIPRA) 16–17, 64–66, 85, 161, 174
Zimbabwe-Rhodesia 63–65
Zimbabwe Special Operations Unit (ZSOU) 83–86, 88–89, 128, 149–151, 158, 161, 168, 171–176, 181, 212, 248–249
Zuma, Jacob 262, 263–268, 270, 282, 285

About the author

MICHAEL SCHMIDT is a bestselling non-fiction author and investigative journalist with more than three decades' experience in the field, having worked in 47 countries across six continents. An ordinary conscripted SADF soldier during the Border War in the mid-1980s, he went on to operate as a defence correspondent in a variety of conflict and post-conflict societies, including South Africa during its transition to democracy, Guatemala during the Civil War, Lebanon during the Summer War, Chiapas, Darfur, the Democratic Republic of Congo, Rwanda, Lesotho, and Sri Lanka. His experiences led him to found The Ulu Club for Southern African Conflict Journalists, and enabled him to conduct courses on conflict in transitional societies in Mexico, the United States, South Africa, Egypt, and Tunisia in the wake of the Arab Spring, and Bangladesh during the Rohingya refugee crisis. He covered parts of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission in South Africa, consulted briefly to the Commission Dialogue, Vérité et Reconciliation of Côte d'Ivoire, and trained journalists and commissioners of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission in the Solomon Islands. This book arose from his abiding interest in insurgency and counterinsurgency doctrines. He lives in Johannesburg.

IN THE COMMISSION OF INQUIRY INTO STOPPED TRC INVESTIGATIONS AND/ OR PROSECUTIONS

AFFIDAVIT OF MICHAEL SCHMIDT

I, the undersigned,

MICHAEL SCHMIDT

do hereby make oath and state:

1. I am an adult male investigative journalist and author based in Johannesburg.

2. I authored the book Death Flight: Apartheid's Secret Doctrine of Disappearance, published by Tafelberg in 2020 ("Death Flight").

3. Save where appears from the context, the facts contained in this affidavit are within my personal knowledge and are to the best of my knowledge and belief both true and correct.

4. I depose to this affidavit to assist the Judicial Commission of Inquiry into stopped TRC Investigations and/or Prosecutions ("the Commission") to address paragraphs 1 to 1.3.2 of its terms of reference.

5. I confirm the contents of the founding affidavit of Lukhanyo Calata dated 17 January 2025 filed in Calata & Others v Government of South Africa & Others (Gauteng Division, Case No. 2025-005245), insofar as it pertains to me ("the Calata affidavit"). A certified copy of this affidavit was supplied by Webber Wentzel attorneys to the Commission on 10 October 2025 in bundle 1 at paginated pages 1 - 842.

6. A certified copy of my original confirmatory affidavit dated 22 November 2024 filed in the abovenamed matter was supplied by Webber Wentzel attorneys to the Commission on 10 October 2025 in bundle 8 at paginated pages 1915 to 1917, together with extracts from Death Flight at paginated pages 1918 to 2017.

7. Further, I refer to the statement of Dr. Nakedi Mathews Phosa ("Phosa") dated 18 October 2025 as submitted to the Commission. Phosa denies ever having received a phone call from me in 2020, or even knowing who I am. I refute Phosa's denials.

8. I attach, as "MS1", a WhatsApp exchange I had with Phosa's personal secretary, Debbie Burnett ("Burnett"), on 31 May 2020. At 15h13 that afternoon, I informed Burnett that I was trying to get hold of Dr Phosa for comment on my book.

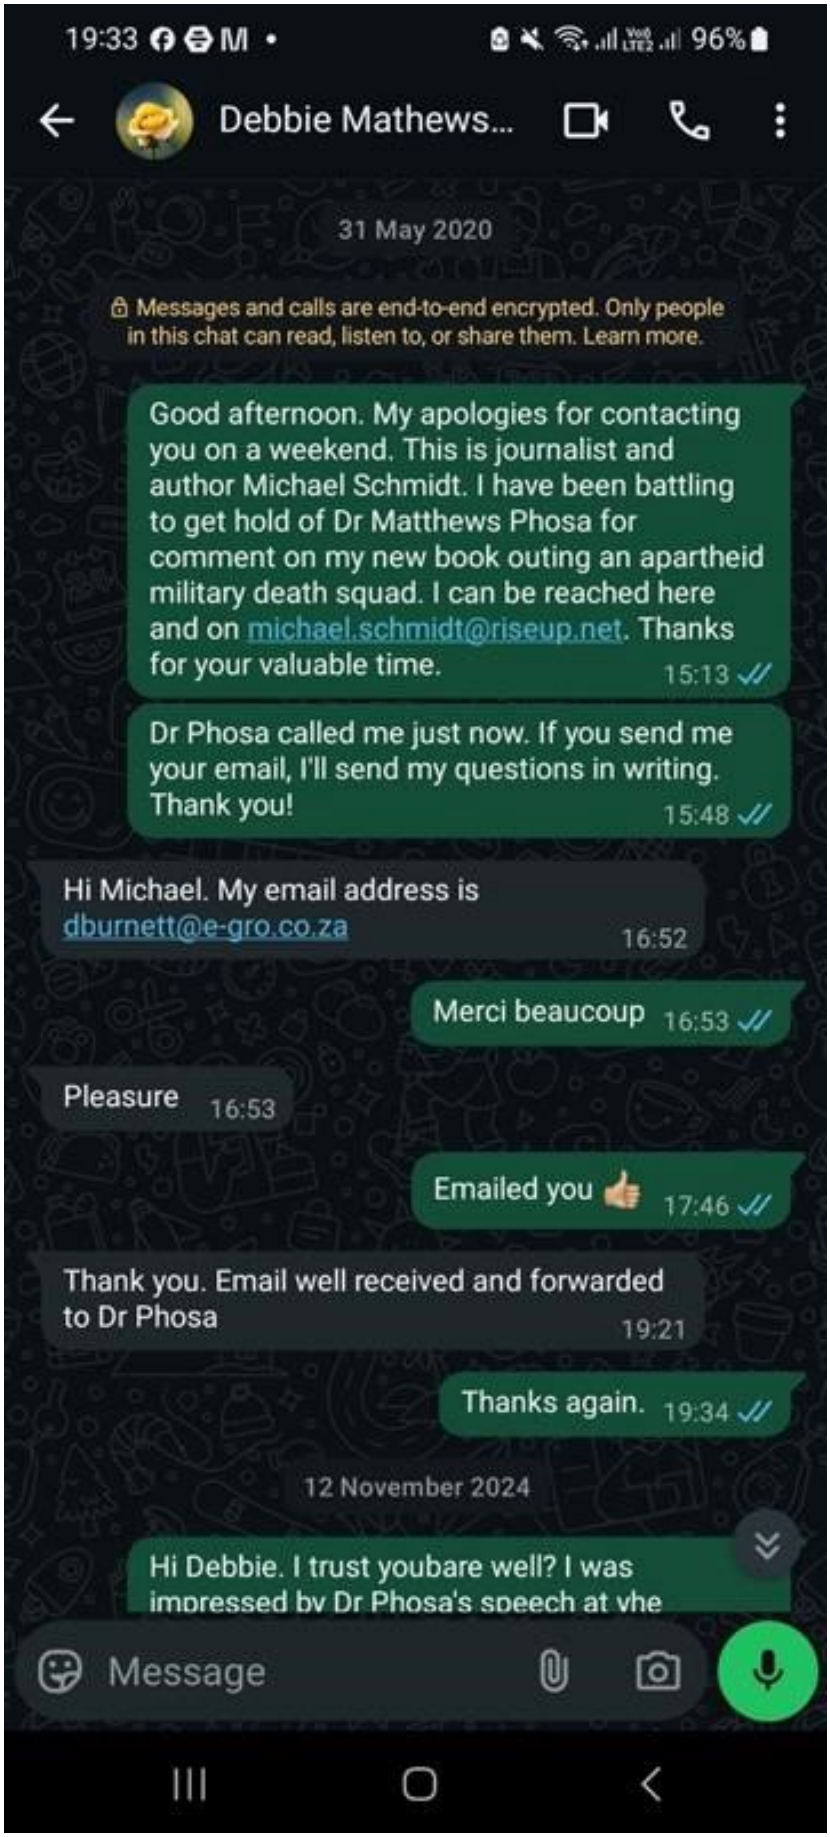
9. In the second message I sent to her at 15h48, I confirmed that Phosa had just called me, and that I would email my questions to him through Burnett. At 17h41 on 31 May 2020 I sent a list of questions to Burnett for Phosa's response. The email delivery receipt is attached as "MS2". The questions included an allegation of his involvement in an ANC lobby negotiating protection from prosecution of crimes committed during apartheid.

10. On page 270 of Death Flight (at footnote 5), I recorded that Phosa called me on 1 June 2020 flatly stating that he was not part of the alleged negotiations. He added that he had passed my email on to Jurgen Kögl, the mediator and facilitator of the negotiations, who in turn said that he refused to be interviewed.

11. I stand by the information that is recorded in Death Flight.

_____

MICHAEL SCHMIDT



Signed and sworn to before me at _____ on this the ____ day of _____ 2025, the deponent having acknowledged in my presence that he knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, the provisions of Government Gazette R1478 of 11 July 1980 as amended by Government Gazette R774 of 20 April 1982, concerning the taking of the oath, having been complied with.

_____

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

FULL NAMES:
PHYSICAL ADDRESS:
DESIGNATION:

"MS1"

19:33
96%
Debbie Mathews...
31 May 2020
Messages and calls are end-to-end encrypted. Only people in this chat can read, listen to, or share them. Learn more.
Good afternoon. My apologies for contacting you on a weekend. This is journalist and author Michael Schmidt. I have been battling to get hold of Dr Matthews Phosa for comment on my new book outing an apartheid military death squad. I can be reached here and on michael.schmidt@riseup.net. Thanks for your valuable time. 15:13
Dr Phosa called me just now. If you send me your email, I'll send my questions in writing. Thank you! 15:48
Hi Michael. My email address is dburnett@e-gro.co.za 16:52
Merci beaucoup 16:53
Pleasure 16:53
Emailed you 17:46
Thank you. Email well received and forwarded to Dr Phosa 19:21
Thanks again. 19:34
12 November 2024
Hi Debbie. I trust youbare well? I was impressed by Dr Phosa's speech at vhe Message

"MS2"

From: Mail Delivery System <MAILER-DAEMON@mx1.riseup.net>
To: dburnett@e-gro.co.za
Sent: 31 May 2020 17:41
Subject: Relayed: Death Flight

This is the mail system at host https://url.za.m.mimecastprotect.com/s/5KfTCy8AO5IE7nVxiZf6uxh-10?domain=mx1.riseup.net.

Your message was successfully delivered to the destination(s) listed below. If the message was delivered to mailbox you will receive no further notifications. Otherwise you may still receive notifications of mail delivery errors from other systems.

The mail system

<dburnett@e-gro.co.za>: delivery via corpmx.worldonline.co.za[196.35.198.130]:25: 250 OK id=1jfQ5P-000k70-BB

Divider 9

Supporting Affidavits

Calata and Others // Government of the Republic of South Africa and Others

Gauteng Division of the High Court, Pretoria, Case No: 2025/5245

INDEX TO SUPPORTING AFFIDAVITS

NO	DESCRIPTION OF SUPPORTING AFFIDAVIT	PAGES
1.	ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA - 2ND APPLICANT	937-949
2.	BONAKELE JACOBS – 3RD APPLICANT	950-956
3.	FATIEMA HARON-MASOET - 4TH APPLICANT	957-965
4.	TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE - 5TH APPLICANT	966-973
5.	KARL ANDREW WEBER - 6TH APPLICANT	974-981
6.	KIM TURNER - 7TH APPLICANT	982-994
7.	LYNDENE PAGE - 8TH APPLICANT	995-1000
8.	MBUSO KHOZA - 9TH APPLICANT	1001-1022
9.	NEVILLE BELING - 10TH APPLICANT	1023-1030
10.	NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI - 11TH APPLICANT	1031-1040
11.	SARAH BIBI LALL - 12TH APPLICANT	1041-1053
12.	SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE - 13TH APPLICANT	1054-1059
13.	SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO - 14TH APPLICANT	1060-1064
14.	STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE - 15TH APPLICANT	1065-1074
15.	THULI KUBHEKA - 16TH APPLICANT	1075-1081
16.	HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO - 17TH APPLICANT	1082-1095
17.	TSHIDISO MOTASI - 18TH APPLICANT	1096-1103
18.	NOMALI RITA GALELA - 19TH APPLICANT	1104-1115
19.	PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE - 20TH APPLICANT	1116-1121
20.	MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI - 21ST APPLICANT	1122-1127
21.	MOGAPI SOLOMON TLHAPI - 22ND APPLICANT	1128-1144
22.	DR ZAHEED KIMMIE – FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS	1145-1166
23.	ODETTE HELENA GELDENHUYS – WEBBER WENTZEL	1167-1174

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

CASE NO: _____

In the matter between:

LUKHANYO BRUCE MATTHEWS CALATA	1st Applicant
ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA	2nd Applicant
BONAKELE JACOBS	3rd Applicant
FATIEMA HARON-MASOET	4th Applicant
TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE	5th Applicant
KARL ANDREW WEBER	6th Applicant
KIM TURNER	7th Applicant
LYNDENE PAGE	8th Applicant
MBUSO KHOZA	9th Applicant
NEVILLE BELING	10th Applicant
NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI	11th Applicant
SARAH BIBI LALL	12th Applicant
SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE	13th Applicant
SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO	14th Applicant

TAYLA ILSLEY
BA Law (UP) – LLB (UP)
Commissioner of Oaths
Ex Officio / Practising Attorney R.S.A
THE LEONARDO
75 Maude Street, Office Level 12,
Sandown, SANDTON, 2196
(011) 784-3310
Mobile: +27 (0) 72 839 9229
Email: tayla@ianlevitt.co.za

CERTIFIED A TRUE COPY OF THE ORIGINAL
18/01/2025.

AKV ASM

STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE	15th Applicant
THULI KUBHEKA	16th Applicant
HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO	17th Applicant
TSHIDISO MOTASI	18th Applicant
NOMALI RITA GALELA	19th Applicant
PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE	20th Applicant
MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI	21st Applicant
FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS	22nd Applicant

and

GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	1st Respondent
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	2nd Respondent
MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT	3rd Respondent
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	4th Respondent
MINISTER OF POLICE	5th Respondent
NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE	6th Respondent
SOUTH AFRICAN HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION	7th Respondent

AKN ASM

SUPPORTING AFFIDAVIT – ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA

I, the undersigned,

ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA

do hereby make oath and state as follows:

Introduction

1. I am an adult female pensioner resident in Springs, Gauteng. I am the eldest sister of the late Caiphus Nyoka ("Caiphus").

2. I am the second Applicant in this application.

3. I am duly authorised to make this statement on behalf of the Nyoka family.

4. The facts contained in this affidavit are both true and correct.

Caiphus

5. Caiphus was born to Saroma and Moses Nyoka on 9 February 1964 in Daveyton, Benoni. He was the fourth born of my parents' seven children.

6. Caiphus was a talented, courageous, and altruistic son, brother, and patriot in the community of Daveyton. He was a likeable individual and well-respected by those who encountered him. Caiphus stood for equality for all and gave up his life for the cause of the struggle for freedom and justice for a democratic, non-racial, and non-sexist society in South Africa.

AKN ASM

7. During the 1980s, Caiphus was a student leader in the East Rand and the then Transvaal Province. He was a member of the Congress of South African Students ("COSAS"), the South African Youth Congress ("SAYCO"), Organiser of the Transvaal Students Congress ("TRASCO") in the East Rand, and President of the Student Representative Council ("SRC") at Mabuya High School in Daveyton, Benoni. COSAS and SAYCO were affiliates of the United Democratic Front ("UDF").

8. He opposed the apartheid government and mobilised masses of people and communities to protest against the apartheid regime and its discriminatory policies. Caiphus was not a violent person. He used his voice to express his socio-economic views.

9. Caiphus' opposition to the apartheid regime made our family home a target of the notorious Special Branch of the then South African Police ("the SAP"). Caiphus was arrested and detained on several occasions for offences that he did not commit. He was acquitted, at every turn whenever he was arrested, on every charge that was ever brought against him. Our home was frequently raided by the police at all hours of day and night.

Caiphus' murder

10. During the early hours of Monday 24 August 1987, Caiphus and three young men (Exodus Gugulethu Nyakane, Excellent Mthembu, and Elson Mnyakeni) were asleep in his room which was situated at the back of our family home. Caiphus and the three young men attended the funeral of one of our neighbours the previous day and socialised into the late hours of the night before they returned

AKN ASM

11. At or about 02:30 am, the police raided our family home. A large contingent of uniformed and casually dressed police officers entered our property; some took position in front of the main house and others made their way to Caiphus' room. Three police officers, Sergeants Marais, Stander and Engelbrecht, barged down the door to the room with their guns drawn. Engelbrecht removed the three young men from the room, except Caiphus who remained behind seated in his bed, in the presence of Marais and Stander. At no stage did Caiphus refuse or resist to cooperate with the police officers that were in his room.

12. Nine gunshots were fired by Marais and Stander moments after Engelbrecht, and the three young men left the room. Caiphus died at the scene. The fatal shot, presumably the one through Caiphus' forehead, was fired by Marais. The police whisked Caiphus' body from his room, without informing my father about the death of his son and the circumstances under which he was murdered. They detained and tortured the three young men and released them days later without bringing any criminal charges against them.

13. At daybreak, my father instructed me to go to the Daveyton Police Station to enquire about what had happened to Caiphus. I was referred to Major van Den Berg who was stationed at the Police Station at Harpur Square, Benoni ("Harpur Square").

14. Two days later, on 26 August 1987, my father was summoned to Harpur Square where Van Den Berg informed him that Caiphus was killed during an operation that was executed by a police unit that dealt with terrorists. Our father was only allowed to view Caiphus' body on 3 September 1987, some 10 days after his murder.

FKN' AGM

15. We later found out that the three young men, who were with Caiphus just before he was murdered, were taken to the Daveyton Police Station where a police officer had inscribed the following chilling message on a chalk board: 999 LEMBA STREET, CAIPHUS NYOKA EXECUTED, SIX SHOTS, HANDS OF DEATH.

The botched inquest

16. Between 1988 and 1989, an inquest was held before the Benoni Magistrates' Court to determine the cause and identify of those responsible for Caiphus' death.

17. Marais, Stander and Engelbrecht testified that the police planned and executed an operation to arrest Caiphus because he had allegedly supplied hand grenades and limpet mines to two fellow activists, Daniel Ntsoseng ("Daniel") and Moses Mahlangu ("Moses"), who were arrested and detained hours before Caiphus was killed. Upon their arrest, Daniel and Moses informed the police that the explosives were supplied by Caiphus.

18. Marais and Stander testified that Caiphus allegedly reached for a knife moments after Engelbrecht removed the three young men from the room, and this caused them to fire nine rounds at him in self-defence. Marais fired four shots and Stander five. An autopsy conducted by the family pathologist revealed that there were twelve bullet wounds on Caiphus' body.

19. Our family presented evidence to show that Caiphus was executed by the police; he did not present any danger when he was seated in his bed before the shooting took place; and that the bullet inflicted wounds located at the back of Caiphus' right hand demonstrated that he had endeavoured to shield himself from the volley of bullets piercing his body. In all probability, the weapon that was allegedly found in Caiphus' left hand was planted by the police after their calculated, callous, and murderous deed.

AKN ASM

20. As was common practice at the time, the inquest Magistrate, Mr JP Myburgh, rejected our family's evidence and sided with the version presented by the police. The Magistrate determined that the police officers justifiably acted in self-defence, and found that no one could be held responsible for Caiphus' death.

The effect of Caiphus' death on our family

21. Caiphus' death and the inquest outcome was a blow to our family. The continued pain and suffering that followed the inquest findings broke our parents, both physically and emotionally.

22. Our father never stopped pursuing the truth and dedicated the remainder of his life to finding out why his son had been brutally killed by the police. He believed that he failed his son because he could not keep him safe in his own home – and this rendered him helpless and distressed.

23. Our parents withdrew from the community and relatives who had turned their backs against them out of fear for their own safety from the brutality and harassment by the apartheid state and their agents. The finding of the inquest court, which we knew was baseless and without merit, did nothing to ease the pain and suffering that our parents endured.

24. Both our parents fell ill as a result of the death of their beloved son. They both developed hypertension and other health conditions. My father experienced severe body pains, and my mother suffered from clot formation complications.

AKN ASM

25. My father developed a lump, and he succumbed to kidney cancer in October 1992. The pursuit of the truth cost my father his life. My mother had her leg amputated after she was diagnosed with gangrene in 2006. She would later die in June 2010, after suffering a cerebral haemorrhage.

26. Caiphus' death caused severe pain and trauma to both our parents who died without any knowledge of the reasons behind the murder of their son by the police.

27. Four of my siblings, my two daughters and I have endured immense trauma and depression given the cruelty of the death of our brother and uncle, respectively. The psychological and emotional scars have been engraved into our beings as we battled in the past 37 years to come to terms with the brutality of Caiphus' death.

28. The fact that the truth behind Caiphus' murder has not been disclosed continues to haunt our family, to this day. We hold onto the hope that one day the truth will come out and that justice will not only be done, but also seen to done.

The Truth and Reconciliation Process

29. In 1995, the Centre for the Study of Violence and Reconciliation ("the Centre") started to mobilise and encourage victims of the apartheid state to speak out against its atrocities. The Centre afforded us a platform to express our pain in a setting with others who shared similar experiences. The Centre introduced me to the Khulumani Support Group, under the leadership of Maggie Friedman, which I joined during 1995. The Support Group played a critical role in assisting victims of the apartheid regime to share their stories.

30. In 1996, and with the support of the Support Group, I submitted a statement to the Truth and Reconciliation Commission ("the TRC") to share Caiphus' story. The TRC invited the Nyoka family to present our story orally before the Human Rights Violation Committee ("the Committee"), which presentation I made, on 5 February 1997, with my mother by my side. None of the police officers involved in Caiphus' killing applied for amnesty.

31. At the conclusion of the TRC process, the Committee recognised Caiphus and I as victims of gross human rights violations. The Committee found that the Minister of Law and Order, the Commissioner of Police and the Apartheid State were responsible for Caiphus' death. This solace was short lived because the reason for Caiphus' death still remained a mystery.

32. As a family we used the statement of the Committee to advocate for accountability for Caiphus' death as we believed that Caiphus' death was a political act and conspiracy that was orchestrated and executed by, among others, Van Den Berg, Engelbrecht, Marais and Stander. We had hoped that the TRC would uncover the truth which the inquest failed to do.

33. We expected the democratic government, to act upon the recommendations of the TRC, to assist the victims of the apartheid state. We had great expectations that truth and justice would triumph over evil, and that the perpetrators of the diabolical apartheid crimes, like Marais, Stander, Engelbrecht, and Van Den Berg, would be held to account for the pain and suffering that their actions caused us and many other families.

34. We believed that the government would do its utmost best to pursue justice for those who lost their lives in South Africa's freedom struggle. We trusted that the policing and justice authorities would do what was necessary to ensure that these cases were brought to finality. This turned out not to be the case and for decades there has been no movement on the investigation into Caiphus' murder.

AKN ASM

35. We genuinely believed that the policing and justice authorities would take the TRC cases forward. Unfortunately for us, our trust in the government and the policing and justice authorities was misplaced.

36. We never received any feedback from the policing and justice authorities after the TRC concluded its work.

Marais' confession in 2019

37. In October 2019, Marais confessed to a Rapport journalist that he murdered Caiphus on 24 August 1987.

38. Marais admitted that the version that the police presented under oath during the inquest in 1988 and 1989 was a lie. He stated that he was instructed to execute Caiphus, and that he was assured that the scene would be staged to make it look as if there was a struggle in the room that night to ensure that he would be protected from any repercussions.

39. The Foundation for Human Rights ("the Foundation") started investigating Caiphus' murder shortly after Marais made his confession. The Foundation did so on behalf, and at the behest, of the Nyoka family.

40. During March 2020, Colonel Hadebe of the Vaal Branch of the Directorate for Priority Crimes Investigation (DPCI) visited my house in Springs to obtain information. Unfortunately, his investigation did not progress, even though he submitted progress reports to the Director of Public Prosecutions in Pretoria.

AKN ASM

41. Colonel Hadebe was replaced by Lieutenant Colonel Beukman of the DPCI Germiston branch. To my understanding Lieutenant Colonel Beukman started the investigation afresh and he made great progress in locating Marais, Engelbrecht and Van Den Berg. His investigation led to Marais, Engelbrecht and Van Den Berg being indicted in August 2022. Stander was similarly indicted in April 2024. The criminal trial is set to commence in November 2024.

Conclusion

42. Whilst we are pleased that Marais, Stander, Engelbrecht and Van Den Berg will stand trial for Caiphus' murder, we are saddened by the fact that it took more than three decades to issue indictments against the perpetrators. This inordinately lengthy delay has taken its toll on our family, and it has broken our trust in the criminal justice system.

43. At the conclusion of the TRC process, we expected the imminent resolution of TRC related cases which were referred to National Prosecuting Authority ("NPA") for further investigation and prosecution of the crimes against humanity committed by the apartheid state and its agents.

44. Learning, via Nokuthula Simelane's and Ahmed Timol's cases, that officials at the highest level of the democratic government had taken measures to frustrate any investigations and prosecutions for TRC cases referred to the NPA was disheartening and a low point in our lives.

45. The prosecution of officials of the apartheid regime who made an attempt on Reverend Frank Chikane's life (former Director General and Cabinet Secretary in President Thabo Mbeki's administration) was one of the cases that presented the government with the horns of dilemma on its policy for the treatment of TRC cases referred to the NPA for investigation and prosecution.

AKN ASM

46. Co-incidentally, Reverend Chikane (then General Secretary of the South African Council of Churches) had officiated and delivered a sermon at Caiphus' funeral service, in September 1987, held at the Free Methodist Church, Daveyton, Benoni.

47. Caiphus and many others sacrificed their lives for our democracy. Their sacrifices secured our freedom from bondage, oppression, and subjugation. We have a right to know why the deaths of our loved ones mattered so little to the government. The truth must come out and our constitutional rights must be upheld.

48. We wholeheartedly support the claim for constitutional damages to vindicate our deeply violated rights, to assist us to celebrate the lives of our loved ones and to continue with the struggle for human rights and social justice. We also support the order sought for the appointment of a commission of inquiry to uncover the truth behind the suppression of the TRC matters. We need to know what happened to avoid a recurrence of the same or similar human rights abuses and transgressions in our beloved country.

AKN ASM

ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA

ASM

The Deponent has acknowledged that she knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was signed and sworn to or solemnly affirmed before me at Johannesburg on this the 11 day of Oct 2024.

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

Full Names: Ahmed Shasir Mayet

Business Address:

Designation:

A. S. MAYET
Commissioner of Oaths
Practising Attorney
401 Elizabeth House
18 Pritchard Street
Johannesburg
11/10/2024

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

CASE NO: _____

In the matter between:

LUKHANYO BRUCE MATTHEWS CALATA	1st Applicant
ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA	2nd Applicant
BONAKELE JACOBS	3rd Applicant
FATIEMA HARON-MASOET	4th Applicant
TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE	5th Applicant
KARL ANDREW WEBER	6th Applicant
KIM TURNER	7th Applicant
LYNDENE PAGE	8th Applicant
MBUSO KHOZA	9th Applicant
NEVILLE BELING	10th Applicant
NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI	11th Applicant
SARAH BIBI LALL	12th Applicant
SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE	13th Applicant
SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO	14th Applicant

TAYLA ILSLEY
BA Law (UP) – LLB (UP)
Commissioner of Oaths
Ex Officio / Practising Attorney R.S.A
THE LEONARDO
75 Maude Street, Office Level 12,
Sandown, SANDTON, 2196
(011) 784-3310
Mobile: +27 (0) 72 839 9229
Email: tayla@lanlevitt.co.za

CERTIFIED A TRUE COPY
OF THE ORIGINAL
18/01/2025.

BB ASM

STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE	15th Applicant
THULI KUBHEKA	16th Applicant
HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO	17th Applicant
TSHIDISO MOTASI	18th Applicant
NOMALI RITA GALELA	19th Applicant
PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE	20th Applicant
MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI	21st Applicant
FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS	22nd Applicant

and

GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	1st Respondent
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	2nd Respondent
MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT	3rd Respondent
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	4th Respondent
MINISTER OF POLICE	5th Respondent
NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE	6th Respondent

ASM

BB

COURT OF SUPPORTING AFFIDAVIT – BONAKELE JACOBS

I, the undersigned,

BONAKELE JACOBS

do hereby make oath and state as follows:

1. I am an adult male, born on 19 June 1969. In making this affidavit I represent the Jacobs family.

2. I am the third Applicant in this application.

3. Save where appears from the context, the facts contained in this affidavit are within my own personal knowledge and are to the best of my knowledge and belief both true and correct.

4 My brother, Mxolisi 'Dicky' Jacobs ("Dicky"), was born on 6 August 1966. We were both born in Upington. On 12 June 1986, my brother and I were detained under a state of emergency. After 129 days in detention, my brother was found dead in his prison cell. He was 20 years old when he died, I was only 17 years old at the time.

5. We were brought up by our grandparents. We attended primary school in Upington and high school in Fort Beaufort in the Eastern Cape. Our mother was working in Cape Town and later in Kimberley

6 My brother's activism started in the Eastern Cape in the early 1980s. His activism was sparked by the lack of electricity and basic services in Paballelo Township in Upington where we grew up. We were greatly influenced by the Black

ASM

BJ

Consciousness Movement. We all joined drama clubs where we expressed our activism and distain for the political climate.

7. My brother was the founder of the Upington Youth Congress and a leader of the Upington Student Congress. I did not belong to these groups but I supported his activism. My brother was instrumental in the United Democratic Front's One million signatures campaign and the launching of the United Democratic Front. Dicky travelled frequently to Cape Town and brought back banned reading material for us to read. We would listen to Radio Freedom together and learn about the banned African National Congress. Dicky's strength was mobilising people. He would go to church groups and appeal to farm workers to join the movement.

8. On 12 June 1986, members of the Upington Security Branch picked us up at 10pm at our home in Paballelo Township and were taken to the Upington Police Station. We were told that we were the first activists who were detained under the state emergency, which was to be declared at midnight. At midnight we were formally arrested in terms of the state of emergency. Dicky was taken to Groblershoop Police Station and I was taken to Upington Prison.

9. About a month into our detention, Dicky was transferred from Groblershoop to Upington Prison. We were both kept in solitary confinement in two cells next to each other. We could not see each other but we could speak to one another.

10. Dicky died on 22 October 1986 at the Upington Prison while he was in solidarity confinement. I was released on 17 November 1986, after Dicky's funeral which was held on 1 November 1986. I applied to attend the funeral but my application was rejected by the authorities.

ASM

BB

11. After I was released, the Security Branch told me that I must leave Upington because they did not want me in Upington. I relocated to Kimberley where my mother lived.

12 On 23 October 1986, my family was told that Dicky had committed suicide by hanging. My family was only allowed to see his body on the day of his funeral.

13. In May 1987, an inquest was held in the Upington Magistrates' Court to determine the circumstances surrounding Dicky's death. The testimony of the police and correctional services officers who were on duty the night my brother died was extremely inconsistent. They were unable to explain why they could not get into my brother's cell that night after they realised that he was apparently hanging himself. The police claimed that the only person who had the master key to Dicky's cell was not on duty. That same night I was told my brother hanged himself with his navy blue polo neck shirt, but there was no evidence of this in the inquest.

14. I remember vividly that my brother was high spirited the whole day. I cannot believe that he would then commit suicide in the evening. Dicky would have been looking forward to his release at some point in the near future because two of his comrades were released two days before his death.

15 In October 1996, my mother, grandfather and two aunts made statements to the Truth and Reconciliation ("TRC"). No one applied for amnesty for Dicky's death. The TRC recognised Dicky as a victim of gross human rights violations and my mother received a meagre R30,000 once-off payment. I never went to the TRC because I did not believe that anything would come from the process.

A.S.M

BB

16. Our family never stopped pursuing justice for Dicky. My grandfather, who was a veteran of the ANC, wrote several letters over the years to President Zuma and President Mbeki to tell them about Dickey's case. President Mbeki made promises that the authorities would look into the case, regrettably this never realised. During the early to mid 2000s, I approached the Scorpions to request assistance. At that stage I still had faith in the authorities, but this too faded with time as Dicky's case went nowhere.

17. My family has been negatively affected because of the refusal of the post-apartheid state to take up Dicky's case timeously. My grandfather died in 2015 without closure. My mother is presently 74 four years old and sickly. She too might never get closure for the death of her son.

18. When we heard about the political interference in the TRC cases, it opened our eyes as to why there was never any progress in Dicky's case. We are appalled and shocked that the government we supported closed down the investigations into our cases.

19. We want answers not just for us but also for all the other victims of apartheid-era crimes who have been denied closure. We want answers and the state must be forced to answer for their part in closing down the truth.

20. I agree that the State must be required to pay constitutional damages. Our rights to justice and truth, which have been seriously violated, must be vindicated. We must be supported to investigate Dicky's murder ourselves and to commemorate his life. Generations to come should hear the truth.

ASM

BB

21. We support the call for an independent and open commission of inquiry into the suppression of the post-TRC cases. This commission must have the necessary powers to compel testimony and the production of evidence. We want commissioners who are truly independent.

22. The ANC government and the presidency must take responsibility for their inaction. Those who suppressed our cases must be held to account. They trashed the rule of law, and the promise of a new South Africa based on equality and human dignity for all.

BONAKELE JACOBS

The Deponent has acknowledged that he knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was signed and sworn to or solemnly affirmed before me at Johannesburg on this the 11th day of Oct / 2024.

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

Full Names: Ahmed Sabir Mayet

Business Address:

Designation:

A. S. MAYET
Commissioner of Oaths
Practising Attorney
401 Elizabeth House
18 Pritchard Street
Johannesburg
11/10/2024

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

CASE NO: _____

In the matter between:

LUKHANYO BRUCE MATTHEWS CALATA	1st Applicant
ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA	2nd Applicant
BONAKELE JACOBS	3rd Applicant
FATIEMA HARON-MASOET	4th Applicant
TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE	5th Applicant
KARL ANDREW WEBER	6th Applicant
KIM TURNER	7th Applicant
LYNDENE PAGE	8th Applicant
MBUSO KHOZA	9th Applicant
NEVILLE BELING	10th Applicant
NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI	11th Applicant
SARAH BIBI LALL	12th Applicant
SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE	13th Applicant
SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO	14th Applicant

CERTIFIED A TRUE COPY OF THE ORIGINAL

TAYLA ILSLEY
BA Law (UP) – LLB (UP)
Commissioner of Oaths
Ex Officio / Practising Attorney R.S.A
THE LEONARDO
75 Maude Street, Office Level 12.
Sandown, SANDTON, 2196
(011) 784-3310
Mobile: +27 (0) 72 839 9229
Email: tayla@lanlevitt.co.za

18/01/2025

STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE	15th Applicant
THULI KUBHEKA	16th Applicant
HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO	17th Applicant
TSHIDISO MOTASI	18th Applicant
NOMALI RITA GALELA	19th Applicant
PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE	20th Applicant
MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI	21st Applicant
FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS	22nd Applicant

and

GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	1st Respondent
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	2nd Respondent
MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT	3rd Respondent
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	4th Respondent
MINISTER OF POLICE	5th Respondent
NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE	6th Respondent

SUPPORTING AFFIDAVIT – FATIEMA HARON-MASOET

I, the undersigned,

FATIEMA HARON-MASOET

do hereby make oath and state as follows:

1. I am an adult female and the youngest daughter of the late Imam Abdullah Haron ("the Imam" or "my father") and Galiema Haron ("my mother").

2. I am the fourth Applicant in this application.

3. The facts contained in this affidavit are within my personal knowledge and are, to the best of my belief, true and correct.

4. I make this affidavit on behalf of my brother, Muhammed Haron, and the extended Haron family. My elder sister, Shamela Shamis, died on ~~10~~ 4 January 2024.

5. My father was born in Claremont, Cape Town, on 8 February 1924. At the time of his death in 1969, he was the Imam (prayer leader) of the Masjid Al-Jaamia in Claremont. He was also the first editor of the Muslim News newspaper and a sales representative for Wilson Rowntree.

6. The Imam was a prominent leader in the Muslim community, committed to social justice and equality during the dark days of apartheid. He was not a political leader, but he associated with the leaders of the African National Congress and the Pan Africanist Congress in their struggle against the suppression of the black majority.

7. On 28 May 1969, the Imam was arrested by the Security Branch under the Terrorism Act. He was detained without trial and incarcerated initially at the Caledon Square Police Station and later at the Maitland Police Station. In detention he was subjected to severe interrogation and brutal torture by the security police. This endured up to his death on 27 September 1969, 123 days after his arrest. At the time, the Security Branch told us that the Imam died of his injuries arising from an accidental fall down a flight of stairs at the Maitland Police Station.

8. In 1970, an inquest was held in the Cape Town Magistrates' Court. The purpose of the inquest was to establish the circumstances surrounding my father's death. The inquest, like many other apartheid inquests, was a travesty of justice. The investigations that were done were a total farce, and the findings were preposterous. Despite being presented with evidence that my father was severely tortured, the Magistrate failed to critically question how he was killed. He found that my father's death came about as a result of trauma that was caused by an accidental fall down a flight of stairs. He concluded that no one was to blame for my father's death.

9. Our family, especially my mother who lost her husband and support system, was severely affected by my father's death. We were disturbed psychologically and unsettled by his untimely death. Most painful was that we never really knew what transpired whilst my father was detained. We could only imagine what he had to endure from stories of those who interacted with our father during his time in detention. The bruises, lesions and gashes that were discovered on his body at the ritual cleansing before his burial revealed the extent of the suffering at the hands of the Security Branch.

10. Shortly after my father's death, we were forced to move from our family home in Repulse Street in Crawford to live with my grandmother in her one-bedroom home. I vividly remember my mother telling me that "we lost the house" as we stood outside our home for the very last time, her eyes were filled with tears and sorrow. That moment marked the beginning of a new life for my dear mother and our family.

11. For the remainder of our upbringing, my mother fulfilled a motherly and fatherly role in the lives of each of her three children. It was an extremely difficult journey for her, one that I am still trying to fully appreciate.

12. With the turn of the democracy, which my father contributed significantly to, and the establishment of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission ("TRC"), we consciously decided not to participate in the TRC. In any event, none of the perpetrators involved in my father's killing applied for amnesty. The TRC, in considering deaths in police detention in the Western Cape, concluded that my father's death was "undoubtedly a gross violation of human rights, and his death was caused directly or indirectly by his experiences at the hands of the security police". The finding of the TRC came with a promise that the democratic government would pursue truth and justice for apartheid crimes that were not amnestied.

13. We remained hopeful that one day the highly problematic and unquestionably inaccurate findings of the 1970 inquest would be reversed and that the real truth behind my father's death in detention would be revealed. This hope remained but a dream for the first two decades of democracy.

14. On 4 December 2019, more than fifty years since my father's death and nearly three months after my mother passed away, our family, with the assistance of our pro bono lawyers and the Foundation for Human Rights, made detailed representations and provided new evidence to the National Director of Public Prosecutions ("NDPP"). We did so with the intention to reopen the 1970 inquest.

15. Nearly two and a half years after we approached the NDPP, the Minister of Justice, on 31 May 2022, finally requested the Judge President of the Western Cape High Court to designate a Judge to reopen the inquest. The reopened inquest was heard in November 2022 and April 2023. This was the fourth reopened inquest of an apartheid killing in South Africa's democratic dispensation.

16. On 9 October 2023, Judge Thulare of the Western Cape High Court delivered his judgment, overturning the findings of the 1970 inquest. Judge Thulare emphatically found that the Imam's cause of death was attributable to the cumulative effect of the injuries that he suffered under torture. In particular, the death was attributable to a combination of severe systemic physiological stresses, which included crush injury syndrome precipitated by complications of blunt soft tissue injury. The finding that my father died of his injuries following an accidental fall down some stairs, was something of the past.

17. The Judge held the Security Branch responsible for my father's death, and identified the following officers as the primary Security Branch members who were responsible for my father's torture:

17.1 Lieutenant Colonel Carel Johannes Freysen Pienaar, officer in charge of the Cape Town Security Branch since August 1969. Pienaar died on 5 July 1990.

17.2 Major Dirk Kotze Genis, who was in charge of the Imam's investigation. Genis died on 1 February 2003.

17.3 Major Kotze, a member of the Security Branch who interrogated the Imam. Kotze is deceased.

17.4 Captain Ebanis Jogiemus Johannes Geldenhuys. Geldenhuys died on 24 December 2012.

17.5 Sergeant Johannes Petrus Francois 'Spyker' van Wyk, the lead interrogator and investigator. Van Wyk died on 12 November 1990.

17.6 Sergeant Andries van Wyk, who participated in the interrogation. Van Wyk is deceased.

18. Only one of the junior officers, former Constable Johannes Hendrik Hanekom Burger, remains alive. We decided not to seek a prosecution against him.

19. The reopened inquest opened up our eyes to insights that we had no knowledge of and understandings that we lacked. It reignited our trust in truth and justice and finally changed the narrative surrounding the Imam's death.

20. The reopened inquest marked the completion of our family's quest for justice for our father, something that we yearned for decades. Our family inched our way towards some form of closure as a result of this process. Sadly, my late mother passed away before the reopened inquest commenced but we are certain that she would have been pleased with the outcome.

21. As thankful as we are for the reopened inquest, we are saddened by the decades that it took for the democratic authorities to seek truth and justice. It is heartbreaking to learn that political interference, perpetrated by officials in high office, was the cause of the delay in investigating and prosecuting apartheid atrocities.

22. However, when compared to many other families of victims of apartheid atrocities, we must recognise that our family has been privileged in this truth-seeking process. We think of many other activists who were killed by the apartheid regime, whose families, such as those who are joined in this application, have not found truth, justice or closure in the decades following the deaths of their loved ones. We feel their pain and suffering and we remain hopeful that one day they too will see the wrongs that were done to them put right.

23. I support the relief claimed in this application, and I too call for constitutional damages to be paid and for a commission of inquiry to be established to determine the truth regarding the political suppression of the TRC cases.

F. Haron-Masoet

FATIEMA HARON-MASOET

The Deponent has acknowledged that she knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was signed and sworn to or solemnly affirmed before me at CLAREMONT on this the 21 day of OCTOBER 2024.

SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE
PROVINCIAL DETECTIVES
COLD CASE INVESTIGATION UNIT
21 OCT 2024
ORGANISED CRIME INVESTIGATIONS
WESTERN CAPE
INKONZO YAMAPOLISA OMZANTSI AFRIKA

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

Full Names: 0622737-6
D.D. PETERSEN

Business Address: 69 Imam Haron Street

Designation: Lieutenant Colonel

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

CASE NO: _____

In the matter between:

LUKHANYO BRUCE MATTHEWS CALATA	1st Applicant
ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA	2nd Applicant
BONAKELE JACOBS	3rd Applicant
FATIEMA HARON-MASOET	4th Applicant
TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE	5th Applicant
KARL ANDREW WEBER	6th Applicant
KIM TURNER	7th Applicant
LYNDENE PAGE	8th Applicant
MBUSO KHOZA	9th Applicant
NEVILLE BELING	10th Applicant
NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI	11th Applicant
SARAH BIBI LALL	12th Applicant
SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE	13th Applicant
SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO	14th Applicant

CERTIFIED A TRUE COPY
OF THE ORIGINAL

TAYLA ILSLEY
BA Law (UP) – LLB (UP)
Commissioner of Oaths
Ex Officio / Practising Attorney R.S.A
THE LEONARDO
75 Maude Street, Office Level 12,
Sandown, SANDTON, 2196
(011) 784-3310
Mobile: +27 (0) 72 839 9229
Email: tayla@lanlevitt.co.za

18/01/2025

T.H.M
ASM

STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE	15th Applicant
THULI KUBHEKA	16th Applicant
HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO	17th Applicant
TSHIDISO MOTASI	18th Applicant
NOMALI RITA GALELA	19th Applicant
PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE	20th Applicant
MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI	21st Applicant
FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS	22nd Applicant

and

GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	1st Respondent
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	2nd Respondent
MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT	3rd Respondent
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	4th Respondent
MINISTER OF POLICE	5th Respondent
NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE	6th Respondent
SOUTH AFRICAN HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION	7th Respondent

T.N.M
ASM

SUPPORTING AFFIDAVIT – COSAS 4 FAMILIES

I, the undersigned,

TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE

do hereby make oath and state as follows:

Introduction

1. I am an adult pensioner, resident in Kagiso, Gauteng. I am the eldest sister of the late Zandisile Musi ("Zandisile").

2. I am the fifth Applicant in this application.

3. The facts deposed to in this affidavit are within my knowledge, and unless otherwise stated or indicated by the context, are true and correct to the best of my knowledge. Where I make legal submissions, I do so on the advice of my legal representatives, which advice I believe to be correct.

4. I depose to this affidavit on behalf of my family, and on behalf of the families of the late Eustace Madikela ("Bimbo"), Peter Matabane ("Ntshingo") and Fanyana Nhlapo ("Fanyana").

5. Zandisile, Bimbo, Ntshingo and Fanyana have come to be known as the COSAS 4, which nomenclature I will also use in this affidavit. Bimbo, Ntshingo and Fanyana were brutally killed by the Security Branch on 15 February 1982. Zandisile survived the attacked but sadly passed away on 28 June 2021.

TN.M
ASM

The COSAS 4

6. The COSAS 4 were all born and raised in Kagiso. At the time of their killing and maiming, they were teenagers with ambitions of joining the liberation struggle against apartheid

7. The COSAS 4 were members of the Congress of South African Students ("COSAS"), which was established in the wake of the 1976 June student uprisings and was intended to represent the interests of Black students.

8. As intimated above, the COSAS 4 intended to join the liberation struggle. To this end, the COSAS 4 became acquainted with one Tlhomedi Ephraim Mfalapitsa ("Mfalapitsa"). Mfalapitsa, together with my other brother, Mbulelo Musi, received training in exile from the African National Congress' (the "ANC") military wing uMkhonto weSizwe (the "MK"), and it is for this reason that the COSAS 4 trusted Mfalapitsa.

9. Unbeknown to the COSAS 4, Mfalapitsa was no longer an ANC member and MK operative. Instead, Mfalapitsa had become a Security Branch informant. At the time, informants were known as askaris. Askaris would feed information to the Security Branch regarding anti-apartheid activities and anti-apartheid activists. Askaris were also deployed to commit heinous crimes against their former comrades.

10. As far as we know, Mfalapitsa agreed to train the COSAS 4, particularly in weaponry. To this end, Mfalapitsa lured the COSAS 4 to a disused pumphouse at a mine near Krugersdorp on 15 February 1982.

T.N.M
ASM

11. When the COSAS 4 got to the pumphouse with Mfalapitsa, he showed them hand grenades and excused himself, supposedly to fetch more grenades. Shortly after Mfalapitsa excused him, there was an explosion in the pumphouse. Eustace, Ntshingo and Fanyana all died from the explosion. Zandisile survived the explosion but was seriously maimed. Zandisile lost his hearing, he had burn wounds to his face and back, and with time he slowly lost his mobility and required assistance with daily tasks. While Zandisile was seemingly unaffected mentally, the explosion greatly affected him emotionally.

The aftermath of the killing

12 After the explosion, Zandisile was located by the police, who took him to Leratong Hospital for treatment. Thereafter, Zandisile was taken to a field and was interrogated and tortured, whereafter he was kept in detention without charge for about six weeks.

13. The police, however, told our families that Zandisile was the one behind the explosion. The police informed the families that Zandisile lured the COSAS 4 to the mine with the intention of killing them. Noting that the COSAS 4 were friends, the fabrications by the police caused deep resentment by the other families towards our family.

14 In the aftermath of the explosion, Zandisile could not speak to anyone about what had happened. It was only in 1996, at the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (the "TRC"), that Zandisile first spoke about the incident. It is only at the TRC that the other families actually met Zandisile and learned the truth of what happened to the COSAS 4

T.N.M
ASM

The TRC

15. After Zandisile had told his story in 1996, the police officers involved in the explosion applied for amnesty at the TRC. They included Mfalapitsa, Jan Carel Coetzee, Abraham Grobbelaar, Christiaan Siebert Rorich and Willem Schoon. Rorich was the explosives' expert who rigged the pumphouse.

16. Ultimately, the TRC refused the applications for amnesty. The Amnesty Committee found that the murderous conduct of the amnesty applicants was wholly disproportional to the political objective pursued, especially since there were other means to prevent the COSAS 4 from joining the armed struggle.

Post the TRC

17. It was the promise of the TRC that those who were refused amnesty would be referred for prosecution. As such, it was our hope that the National Prosecuting Authority (the "NPA") would undertake this task without delay.

18. Instead of timeously prosecuting Mfalapitsa, Coetzee, Grobbelaar, Rorich and Schoon after the TRC, what followed was deafening silence from the NPA and the state. The killers of the COSAS 4 were allowed to roam free with impunity. Mfalapitsa, who led the COSAS 4 to their deaths, carried on with his life and assumed the role of a pastor

19. Encouraged by the success of the reopened inquests, we approached the Foundation for Human Rights in 2019 who arranged pro bono legal support for the families. In September 2019 our lawyers requested the NPA and the Directorate for Priority Crime Investigation ("DPCI") to investigate the case. After a year of perceived inaction, we decided to take matters into our own hands and on 2 September 2020 we filed an application with the Krugersdorp Magistrate's Court seeking an order for the disinterment and forensic examination of the bodies. This prompted the NPA and DPCI to take action.

TNM
ASM

20. As a result of the NPA's inaction over decades, only Mfalapitsa and Rorich are still alive. In August 2021 the NPA belatedly took the decision to prosecute them for the kidnapping and murder of Bimbo, Ntshingo and Fanyana and the attempted murder of Zandisile. Our lawyers urged the NPA to include crimes against humanity charges, including apartheid as a crime against humanity, against the accused. We are very happy that the NPA has taken this important step, which is the very first time that crimes against humanity charges have been pursued in South Africa.

21 It bears mention that Mfalapitsa and Rorich are both elderly and further delays will undermine the interests of justice, as they could pass away at any time.

22 The prosecution has been plagued by delays. Most notable was the South African Police Services' ("SAPS") refusal to fund Rorich's legal defence. An application to intervene under High Court case no SS70/2021 was even brought before the above Honourable Court, sitting in Johannesburg, in an attempt to ensure that the SAPS would fund Rorich's defence. The Court ordered the SAPS to pay the legal costs. However, the trial remains pending as the defence legal teams have successfully employed Stalingrad tactics to delay the trial by launching parallel civil applications.

23. The long delay in the NPA and SAPS acting against the killers of the COSAS 4 has been deeply painful for our families. After the TRC we lost all hope that justice would ever be served. We became despondent and are deeply angered by the long delay.

T.H.M
ASM

24. It has therefore come as a deeply hurtful shock to us all, to learn that the TRC prosecutions have been politically supressed, for reasons unknown to us. It was always Zandisile's hope to live to see those responsible face justice. He was robbed of seeing justice done as he died on 28 July 2021 at the age of fifty-seven.

Conclusion

25. We heartily support the application for constitutional damages and an order compelling the President to establish an independent commission of inquiry into the suppression of the TRC cases.

Mokgatle

TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE

The Deponent has acknowledged that she knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was signed and sworn to or solemnly affirmed before me at Johannesburg on this the 11th day of Oct 2024.

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

Full Names: A. S. MAYET
Business Address: Commissioner of Oaths
Designation: Practising Attorney
401 Elizabeth House
18 Pritchard Street
Johannesburg

Ahmed Shabir Mayet
11/10/2024

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

CASE NO: _____

In the matter between:

LUKHANYO BRUCE MATTHEWS CALATA	1st Applicant
ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA	2nd Applicant
BONAKELE JACOBS	3rd Applicant
FATIEMA HARON-MASOET	4th Applicant
TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE	5th Applicant
KARL ANDREW WEBER	6th Applicant
KIM TURNER	7th Applicant
LYNDENE PAGE	8th Applicant
MBUSO KHOZA	9th Applicant
NEVILLE BELING	10th Applicant
NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI	11th Applicant
SARAH BIBI LALL	12th Applicant
SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE	13th Applicant
SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO	14th Applicant

CERTIFIED A TRUE COPY OF THE ORIGINAL

TAYLA ILSLEY
BA Law (UP) – LLB (UP)
Commissioner of Oaths
Ex Officio / Practising Attorney R.S.A
THE LEONARDO
75 Maude Street, Office Level 12,
Sandown, SANDTON, 2196
(011) 784-3310
Mobile: +27 (0) 72 839 9229
Email: tayla@ianlevitt.co.za

18/01/2025.

KAW. ASM

STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE	15th Applicant
THULI KUBHEKA	16th Applicant
HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO	17th Applicant
TSHIDISO MOTASI	18th Applicant
NOMALI RITA GALELA	19th Applicant
PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE	20th Applicant
MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI	21st Applicant
FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS	22nd Applicant

and

GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	1st Respondent
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	2nd Respondent
MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT	3rd Respondent
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	4th Respondent
MINISTER OF POLICE	5th Respondent
NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE	6th Respondent
SOUTH AFRICAN HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION	7th Respondent

K.A.W.
ASM

SUPPORTING AFFIDAVIT – KARL ANDREW WEBER

I, the undersigned,

KARL ANDREW WEBER

do hereby make oath and state as follows:

1. I am an adult male salesperson living in Gonubie, East London.

2. I am the sixth Applicant in this application.

3. The facts stated herein are within my own personal knowledge unless the context indicates otherwise and are to the best of my knowledge true and correct.

4. I was born in Kalk Bay on 19 May 1956 and later my parents moved to Fort Beaufort in the Eastern Cape. My parents, my three sisters and I, had an unremarkable family life.

5. I am a victim and survivor of the Highgate Massacre which took place on 1 May 1993 at the Highgate Hotel in East London. At the time, I was employed by the SPCA in East London as a Senior Inspector.

6. The night of the massacre, I was asked to collect a colleague, Dougie Gates, at the airport in East London. Dougie was in town to do business. Two of my colleagues, Doreen Rousseau and Megan Boucher, accompanied me to collect Dougie and take him to his place of accommodation at the Dolphin Hotel in Nahoon. I was also asked to take Dougie for a social drink. We decided to take him to the bar at the Highgate Hotel.

K.A.W ASM

7. We arrived at the Highgate Hotel at around 21:30 and found a table near the entrance of the ladies bar seating four people. I approached the bar lady to order a round of drinks. As I returned to our table, the lights in the ladies bar went out. A man who was standing in the doorway started shooting randomly at the patrons in the ladies bar. Having knowledge from the military service (I completed compulsory military service in 1979), I immediately fell flat on the floor and turned my head towards the doorway to observe the gunman who was shooting wildly with an AK-47. I noted that the gunman was wearing a ski-balaclava and what looked like blue police issued combat boots. I judged him to be a professional shooter.

8. In those split seconds, I did not realise that I had been shot as my attention was on the shooter in the doorway, not knowing what was to happen next. While still in the same position on the floor, I heard something rolling towards me. I assumed that it might be a hand-grenade but this turned out to be a teargas cannister. At this stage, I closed my eyes and prayed for my life to be spared as I had a young daughter to care for. Little did I know that my life would change forever.

9. I was taken to Frere Hospital in East London where immediate surgery was performed. It was 72 hours after the massacre that I was informed that I had been shot through both arms at the elbows. The bullet penetrated at the right elbow, shattering it to pieces. It was then that I learned the devastating news that my left arm had been amputated above the elbow as it was beyond repair. My right arm was also shattered but thanks to the orthopedic surgeon they managed to save my right arm so that I might have a certain amount of use or movement going forward. Much painful reconstructive surgery over months had to be performed, which included bone grafts taken from my hip, inserting titanium plates and screws in my elbow. On top of this, I was unable to use my fingers. The tendons on my fingers were later rerouted but this left me unable to use the pinkie and ring finger. This was an extremely dark time in my life. The massacre rendered me invalid and totally dependent on the help of others to assist me with my daily living needs.

RAG.
ASM

10. For years, we had been under the impression that the Azanian People's Liberation Army ("APLA") which was the military wing of the Pan Africanist Congress ("PAC"), had been behind the attack. This is what the police had told us when the massacre was investigated.

11. In 1996, I testified at the Truth and Reconciliation Commission ("TRC") hoping that the truth of what really happened and who was responsible for the massacre would be revealed. At the time, we were told that APLA members had applied for amnesty, but we later learned that their applications were for a different attack on the Highgate Hotel. No one applied for amnesty for the massacre. The TRC concluded that APLA was responsible for the attack but this left us with more questions than answers.

12. I received a once-off payment of R30,000 from the TRC but nothing further. I had thought that the TRC would assist me in getting a bionic arm as there had been several discussions about this kind of assistance. However, after the TRC proceedings, I was not contacted again about this kind of medical assistance.

KAW

ASM

13. To date, there has never been an inquest into our case. We received no further information from the TRC or the National Prosecuting Authority ("NPA"). We still believed it was APLA who had conducted the attacks.

14. In 2005, I learned that Neville Beling, a fellow survivor of the Highgate Hotel massacre, attended a mediation with Letlapa Mphahlele, the former APLA commander. Letlapa Mphahlele assisted us to try and make sense of what had happened that night.

15. Neville Beling informed us that Mphahlele told him about all the APLA attacks and their modus operandi. He explained that the massacre was not authorised by APLA. He also investigated with some of APLA's renegade groups to determine if the massacre was part of a rogue operation, but APLA did not have any knowledge of the massacre.

16. In 2006, we contacted Mthunzi Mhaga, an official at the NPA. We were told that the investigation into the massacre was reopened. Since then, the case has been passed on to various investigating officers with no results. We have been advised that over the years dockets and documents have gone missing. We have made little progress and have been frustrated with the lack of information that has been provided. We went as far as appointing two private investigators to look into the case because the authorities were not making any progress.

17. We feel that the authorities have blatantly disregarded our case. The NPA has never shown commitment or urgency to find the truth behind the massacre.

R.A-L.

ASM

18. If we had known that no investigations would emerge from the TRC process, we would have approached human rights lawyers immediately after the TRC wound up to assist us in our pursuit for truth and justice.

19. I strongly support the relief sought in this application. We were deeply saddened to hear that the TRC cases had been closed down by political interference following the closure of the TRC. We support the call for a commission of inquiry into the suppression of the post-TRC cases. We want answers as to why our case has suffered such gross neglect.

20. We want to see clear and decisive action being taken. We want an independent, transparent and open investigation with the proper powers to get to the truth. Those who obstructed our cases from going forward must be held to account.

21. We also want to know how it was that institutions meant to uphold the rule of law so easily succumbed to political pressure. This must never be allowed to happen again in South Africa.

22. I also ask that the state be required to provide constitutional damages to vindicate our rights that have been deeply violated by the suppression of our cases. These amounts can be used to further our struggle for justice, truth and closure and it can help us to commemorate the lives of those lost in the Highgate Massacre.

KARL ANDREW WEBBER

ASM

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

CASE NO: _____

In the matter between:

LUKHANYO BRUCE MATTHEWS CALATA	1st Applicant
ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA	2nd Applicant
BONAKELE JACOBS	3rd Applicant
FATIEMA HARON-MASOET	4th Applicant
TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE	5th Applicant
KARL ANDREW WEBER	6th Applicant
KIM TURNER	7th Applicant
LYNDENE PAGE	8th Applicant
MBUSO KHOZA	9th Applicant
NEVILLE BELING	10th Applicant
NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI	11th Applicant
SARAH BIBI LALL	12th Applicant
SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE	13th Applicant
SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO	14th Applicant

CERTIFIED A TRUE COPY
OF THE ORIGINAL

TAYLA ILSLEY
BA Law (UP) – LLB (UP)
Commissioner of Oaths
Ex Officio / Practising Attorney R.S.A
THE LEONARDO
75 Maude Street, Office Level 12,
Sandown, SANDTON, 2196
(011) 784-3310
Mobile: +27 (0) 72 839 9229
Email: tayla@ianlevitt.co.za

18/01/2025

SOUTH AFRICAN CONSULATE GENERAL
21 OCT 2024
LOS ANGELES

RAYMOND SMITH
Vice-Consul

STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE	15th Applicant
THULI KUBHEKA	16th Applicant
HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO	17th Applicant
TSHIDISO MOTASI	18th Applicant
NOMALI RITA GALELA	19th Applicant
PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE	20th Applicant
MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI	21st Applicant
FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS	22nd Applicant
and
GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	1st Respondent
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	2nd Respondent
MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT	3rd Respondent
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	4th Respondent
MINISTER OF POLICE	5th Respondent
NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE	6th Respondent

RAYHANA SALIE
Vice-Consul

SOUTH AFRICAN CONSULATE GENERAL
21 OCT 2024
LOS ANGELES

SUPPORTING AFFIDAVIT – KIM TURNER

I, the undersigned,

KIM TURNER

do hereby make oath and state as follows:

Introduction

1. I am an adult female, resident in California, United States of America. I am the daughter of the late Dr Richard Albert David 'Rick' Turner, who was murdered at his Durban home in 1978. He was 36 years old.

2. I am the seventh Applicant in this application.

3. The facts deposed to in this affidavit are within my knowledge, unless otherwise stated or indicated by the context, and are true and correct to the best of my knowledge.

4. I depose to this affidavit on behalf of my sister, Jann Turner and my late father's wife, Foszia Turner-Stylianou.

The life of Richard Turner

5. Richard Turner, to whom I will refer to as "my father" or "Rick", was born in Cape Town on 25 September 1941. He was the only child of Jane and Owen Turner. My father was raised by his mother in the Stellenbosch area and attended school at the St George's Grammar School in Cape Town.

RAYHANA SALIE
Vice-Consul

SOUTH AFRICAN CONSULATE GENERAL
21 OCT 2024
LOS ANGELES

6. In 1962, my father graduated with a Bachelor of Arts degree from the University of Cape Town. He completed his Honours degree in 1963 and departed for Sorbonne University in Paris to further his studies. In 1966, he obtained a PhD in Philosophy (tres honorable mentionne) and returned to South Africa to work temporarily on his mother's farm.

7. My father was a career academic with a passion for philosophy, politics and worker's rights. He lectured Logic and Political Science at the Universities of Cape Town, Stellenbosch and Rhodes between 1967 and 1969 before joining the Department of Political Science at the University of Natal in 1971. He occupied a prominent role in the academic space, with students flocking to his lectures. He is still widely recognised as one of the most significant South African political philosophers and theorists for his teachings on the radical existentialist perspective and bottom-up popular democracy.

8. Shortly after arriving in Durban, my father met Steve Biko, the Black Consciousness leader, who was a medical student at Natal University's Medical School, which at the time was reserved for "Non-Europeans". In 1968, Biko had broken away from the National Union of South African Students ("NUSAS") to form the South African Student Organisation ("SASO"), the first organisation to espouse Black Consciousness, and which coalesced into the Black Consciousness Movement ("BCM"). My father's receptiveness to the BCM enabled him to act as a mediator between SASO's black students and the white students from NUSAS.

RAYHANA SALIE
Vice-Consul

SOUTH AFRICAN CONSULATE GENERAL
21 OCT 2024
LOS ANGELES

9. My father's collaboration with Steve Biko triggered the "Durban Moment" which mobilised students and workers, as well as wider resistance against apartheid and the exploitation of working people.

10. My father was a guiding hand in the development of South Africa's trade union movement. He actively mobilised students to get involved in the unionisation of black workers, and this spurred the formation of various workers unions and labour groups such as the NUSAS Wages Commission, the Institute for Industrial Education and the South African Labour Bulletin.

11. Rick's teachings, his pragmatic approach to life, his ability to connect and engage people from different backgrounds and contexts, and his advocacy for a fair and just South Africa was unorthodox during the apartheid era. In 1972 he published his seminal book "The Eye of the Needle" which spoke of the 'necessity of utopian thinking' and articulated a vision of an 'ideally possible society.'

12. He had no political affiliation, but he took seriously the task of not only understanding the world but changing it. His knack for gentle persuasion, his profound effect on people, his ideals of a decentralised socialist society, and his vision for an equal South Africa made him a sworn enemy of the apartheid regime.

13. In March 1973, Rick and several other intellectuals and leaders from NUSAS and the BCM were placed under five-year banning orders by the apartheid state. The banning order made it unlawful for him to teach, hold meetings, publish or leave Durban. Despite these limitations and living under constant surveillance by the Bureau of State Security ("BOSS") and the Security Branch of the South African Police ("SB"), he continued to advocate for an equal and just South Africa for all.

RAYHANA SALIE
Vice-Consul

SOUTH AFRICAN CONSULATE GENERAL
21 OCT 2024
LOS ANGELES

Rick Turner's assassination by the apartheid state

14. My sister Jann and I visited our father during the December holiday in 1978. His banning order was still in place. I was 9 years old at the time, and Jann was 13 years old. We were alone with him at his home at 32 Dalton Avenue, Bellair, Durban on the fateful night of 8 January 1978 when he was killed.

15. Jann and I were asleep in our bedroom which was at the front of the house. Just after midnight, Jann was woken by the sound of my father walking in the hallway adjacent to our room. The house was dark. He repeatedly asked at the front door "who is it?". There was no reply.

16. He walked into our room and went over to the bay window that faced out onto the stoep. From there he would have been able to see who was at the front door. This was a long-standing habit of his given the threats and surveillance from the authorities over the years.

17. Jann watched as our father pulled the curtain aside to see who was outside. For a brief moment, surprise registered on his face before a deafening gunshot went off. He was hit. As he fell to the floor, he let out a muffled scream, writhing in pain. He managed to pick himself up and tried to move towards the back door. He lost consciousness and collapsed face down under the archway between the living room and the kitchen. He died in Jann's arms fifteen to twenty minutes after he was shot.

The botched investigations into Rick Turner's killing

18. The Durban Murder and Robbery Unit, which had a good record for solving crime during the 1970s and 1980s, launched an investigation into the murder. The

RAYHANA SALIE
Vice-Consul

SOUTH AFRICAN CONSULATE GENERAL
21 OCT 2024
LOS ANGELES

investigation was led by Captain Christiaan Earle ("Earle"). The Durban branch of the SB also played a role in the murder investigation.

19. Earle's investigation revealed the extent to which BOSS and the SB monitored and disrupted our father's life. During February 1978, the investigation pointed to the involvement of the state security forces. Earle identified former BOSS operative Martin Dolincheck ("Dolincheck") as a suspect. Shortly after Earle identified Dolincheck as a suspect, his commanding officer, Maj Chris Groenewald ("Groenewald"), was summoned to Pretoria to attend a meeting with the National Police Commissioner. In November 1978, after the meeting in Pretoria, Groenewald closed the docket as inconclusive.

20. Thereafter an informal inquest into my father's death was held. No hearings were held. Magistrate Delport simply perused the docket and issued a finding dated 23 June 1978, in which he concluded that the cause of death was attributable to a bullet wound to the chest and that my father was killed by a "person unknown". In other words, nobody could be held responsible for the murder.

21. In November 1996, Earle revealed during an inquiry convened under section 29 of the TRC Act that Groenewald was instructed to close the murder docket because a BOSS operative was being investigated. Earle conceded that the interference and premature closure of the docket prevented him from properly investigating the murder. It seems that the investigation was purposely botched because the security forces were involved in the hit on our father.

22. Following the closure of the TRC, the transcripts of the section 29 hearings of Earle, Groenewald, Dolincheck and Captain Jimmy Taylor were concealed by the Department of Justice ("DOJ"). The South African History Archives fought an

SOUTH AFRICAN CONSULATE GENERAL
21 OCT 2024
LOS ANGELES

11-year battle with the DOJ for the release of the transcripts, which were eventually released in a court settlement in 2015. Despite this, we knew for years that the Durban Murder and Robbery Unit was deliberately blocked from further investigating the murder of our father. We assume that this was in order to protect the responsible elements within the security forces from scrutiny and exposure.

The Truth and Reconciliation Commission

23. On 24 October 1996 our mother, Barbara Follett (née Hubbard), Foszia Turner-Stylianou, Jann and I appeared before the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Human Rights Violations Committee to tell our father's story.

24. We hoped that the TRC would launch a proper investigation into his killing, and finally reveal the identities of the killers. We hoped that someone would come forward to tell the truth, even though we were aware that those who disclosed the truth could escape justice through the amnesty process. However, nobody applied to the TRC for amnesty for Rick's killing.

25. As stated above, the TRC subpoenaed former BOSS, SAP and SB members under section 29 of the TRC Act as part of their promise to pursue the truth. Earle, Groenewald, Dolincheck and Taylor gave evidence in camera at the section 29 inquiries. The evidence, which we only learned of in 2015, pointed to the killers being members of the security forces. The identity of the killer was not revealed. My father's murder was one of the cases referred by the TRC to the NPA for further investigation at the conclusion of the TRC's work in 2002.

RAYHANA SALIE
Vice-Consul

SOUTH AFRICAN CONSULATE GENERAL
21 OCT 2024
LOS ANGELES

26. In addition to the promise of truth, the TRC assured us, and many other victims, that reconciliation and restitution would follow the process. Our father was recognised on the TRC's list of victims of gross human rights violations, but unfortunately, nothing further transpired.

The post-TRC delays

27. Our family's pursuit for the truth never stopped. With the turn of democracy, we hoped and believed that the policing and prosecuting authorities under the democratic dispensation would revive the investigation into Rick's murder. But as far as we know this never happened and no investigation commenced after the TRC concluded.

28. Like many other TRC victims, justice remained out of reach as TRC cases remained cold cases. The failure to investigate and prosecute TRC cases constitutes a terrible injustice to the families.

29. For years there was no movement on the case, until August 2021 when the inquest into the 1977 death at Brighton Police Station of the late anti-apartheid activist Dr Hoosen Haffejee was reopened before the Pietermaritzburg High Court. On 16 September 2021, the Court heard evidence from Mohun Deva Gopal, a former SB officer from the Durban branch ("Gopal"). During his evidence, Gopal spoke of his role in the surveillance of our father.

30. The inquest transcripts reveal that Gopal testified that he was instructed to monitor Rick's movements in and around our Bellair home in December 1977, approximately two weeks before the killing. He carried out observations with his immediate superior, Lt VR Naidoo. Others involved in the surveillance included

SOUTH AFRICAN CONSULATE GENERAL
21 OCT 2024
LOS ANGELES

Capt. Van Sittert and Lt Raju. On 7 January 1977, the day before the killing, Gopal was abruptly ordered by Maj Joseph Benjamin ("Benjamin") of the Durban SB to break off his surveillance.

31. He learned the following day that the subject of his surveillance had been murdered. Gopal mentioned that his surveillance notes were passed onto Captain James 'Jimmy' Taylor. He suspected that his surveillance records were used to help plan the murder. Gopal enquired from Benjamin what had happened and Benjamin advised him that they operated on a "need to know basis".

32. When probed under cross-examination by counsel for the Haffejee family as to who was behind the killing, Gopal indicated that it was likely done by an "internal killing squad" under Captain Jimmy Taylor. When asked about others who might have been involved, Gopal mentioned the following names: Andy Taylor, an operative by the name of Nel, Captains Louis Botha and Hentie Botha. He also mentioned the names of two Indian members who were involved in the gathering of intelligence, Sergeants Dan Pillay and Archery. As far as I am aware most or all of these persons of interest have passed on.

33. Counsel for the Haffejee family requested the Hawks officials who were present at court to take a statement from Gopal for purposes of a fresh investigation into Rick Turner's death. We learned about Gopal's revelations when it was published by the Mail and Guardian days after his testimony concluded.

34. Following Gopal's testimony in 2021, with the assistance of our legal representatives and the Foundation for Human Rights, we learned that the NPA was going to reopen the investigation into our father's killing. We were extremely

RAYHANA SALIE
Vice-Consul

SOUTH AFRICAN CONSULATE GENERAL
21 OCT 2024
LOS ANGELES

happy as it was the first time in nearly 28 years that work was apparently being done by the authorities to investigate the murder.

35. Our initial optimism about the reopened investigation was short lived. Since 2021, the NPA and Hawks have worked at a snail's pace. To this day, after several meetings, it is still not clear to us what the authorities have actually done in this case. It seems that the meetings the NPA held with us were largely for public relations purposes. There appears to be little or no supervision or quality control over their work. Sadly, there seems to be no institutional will or interest to deal with this case properly and to give it the urgency that it requires.

36. The ongoing delays have severely affected our lives. It has been 46 years since our father was killed and we are no closer to truth and closure. We have been denied the opportunity to close this most painful chapter of our lives in peace. The failure by the post-apartheid dispensation to investigate and prosecute apartheid atrocities is a deep injustice that only the families of the victims can comprehend. The institutions that are constitutionally obliged to respect, protect and promote our fundamental rights have treated us with utter contempt.

37. The state's conduct gives the impression that our father's life, and that of many other men and women murdered by the apartheid regime, does not matter. We do not matter. We are mere pawns in their political game, to be tossed about, in the service of unknown agendas.

RAYHANA SALIE
Vice-Consul

SOUTH AFRICAN CONSULATE GENERAL
21 OCT 2024
LOS ANGELES

Conclusion

38. We have learned in recent years that our father's case, together with hundreds of others, were suppressed by various political machinations that began as soon as the TRC concluded its work.

39. We support the relief that is sought in this application. We have a right to know who was behind the conspiracy to kill off our cases. Since nobody is taking responsibility, we need an open and independent commission of inquiry to make official findings of responsibility. We have a right to see those who blocked the cases into the murders of our loved ones being held to account. We need to know why the fight for truth and justice was stopped. We will continue to pursue the truth until there is nothing left to pursue. We also endorse the claim for constitutional damages to vindicate the egregious violation of our fundamental rights. These damages will assist us to commemorate the lives of our loved ones and to pursue truth and justice, where this is still possible.

KIM TURNER

RAYHANA SALIE
Vice-Consul

SOUTH AFRICAN CONSULATE GENERAL
21 OCT 2024
LOS ANGELES

The Deponent has acknowledged that she knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was signed and sworn to or solemnly affirmed before me at SACG, LOS ANGELES on this the 21 day of Oct 20 24.

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

Full Names:

Business Address:

Designation:

SOUTH AFRICAN CONSULATE GENERAL
21 OCT 2024
LOS ANGELES

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

CASE NO: _____

In the matter between:

LUKHANYO BRUCE MATTHEWS CALATA	1st Applicant
ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA	2nd Applicant
BONAKELE JACOBS	3rd Applicant
FATIEMA HARON-MASOET	4th Applicant
TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE	5th Applicant
KARL ANDREW WEBER	6th Applicant
KIM TURNER	7th Applicant
LYNDENE PAGE	8th Applicant
MBUSO KHOZA	9th Applicant
NEVILLE BELING	10th Applicant
NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI	11th Applicant
SARAH BIBI LALL	12th Applicant
SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE	13th Applicant
SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO	14th Applicant

TAYLA ILSLEY
BA Law (UP) – LLB (UP)
Commissioner of Oaths
Ex Officio / Practising Attorney R.S.A
THE LEONARDO
75 Maude Street, Office Level 12,
Sandown, SANDTON, 2196
(011) 784-3310
Mobile: +27 (0) 72 839 9229
Email: tayla@lanlevitt.co.za

CERTIFIED A TRUE COPY
OF THE ORIGINAL
18/01/2025

STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE	15th Applicant
THULI KUBHEKA	16th Applicant
HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO	17th Applicant
TSHIDISO MOTASI	18th Applicant
NOMALI RITA GALELA	19th Applicant
PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE	20th Applicant
MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI	21st Applicant
FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS	22nd Applicant

and

GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	1st Respondent
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	2nd Respondent
MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT	3rd Respondent
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	4th Respondent
MINISTER OF POLICE	5th Respondent
NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE	6th Respondent

SUPPORTING AFFIDAVIT – LYNDENE PAGE

I, the undersigned,

LYNDENE PAGE

do hereby make oath and state as follows:

1. I am an adult female, currently employed as a Bookkeeper and living in Amalinda, East London. I was born on 3 November 1967 in East London.

1. I am the eighth Applicant in this application.

2. The facts stated in this affidavit are within my own personal knowledge unless the context indicates otherwise and are to the best of my knowledge true and correct.

3. My brother was Deon Harris, who was killed in the Highgate Hotel massacre on 1 May 1993. My brother and I were only 18 months apart and we were very close growing up. We had a normal, happy childhood together. We were not involved in politics when we were growing up.

4. My brother was a keen fisherman, and he also enjoyed camping. At the time of his death, he had just bought our grandparents' house and was completing a management course at the Mercedes Benz factory, where he was working.

5 On the day of the attack at the Highgate Hotel, my brother was 26 years old and in the prime of my life. He had gone to watch a rugby match and had then gone to the hotel for a drink.

6 The Highgate Hotel was a neighbourhood hotel. It had two bars, the men's bar for men only and the ladies bar, at which my brother sat that evening.

7. I learned after the massacre that around 22:00, a man entered the ladies' bar wearing a balaclava over his head and opened fire on the patrons with an AK-47.

8. My brother was shot only once. The fatal bullet entered the right side of his chest and went through both his lungs.

9. At the time of the attack, I was pregnant with my first child and about to give birth. My brother was so excited about becoming an uncle.

10. I never had the opportunity to properly grieve the death of my brother, as I had to focus on giving birth and ensuring the health of my newborn baby. I felt so conflicted as I mourned the death of my brother while celebrating the birth of my baby.

11. The death of my brother severely affected my parents who long searched for answers as to what had happened. They have since both passed away without learning who was responsible for my brother's killing.

12. Over the years I have stayed in regular contact with the survivors of the attack. I wanted to know the truth about what had happened to my brother.

13. For years we believed that the Azanian People's Liberation Army ("APLA"), the military wing of the Pan Africanist Congress ("PAC"), was responsible for the attack, because this is what the police had told us.

14. Neither I nor anyone from my family went to testify at the Truth and Reconciliation Commission ("TRC"). We did not believe that it would bring us any closure and my parents did not believe that the TRC would provide any assistance to our family. Knowing what I know now, I am glad we never went to the TRC, as the truth never came out of that inquiry.

15. We were told that APLA members applied for amnesty for the attack on the Highgate Hotel but we later learned that the amnesty applications were for a different attack on the Highgate Hotel – a drive-by attack on 24 March 1994. No one came forward to apply for amnesty for the attack that killed my brother, but the TRC still ruled that APLA was behind the attack.

16. To date, there has never been an inquest into the case. During 2023 the NPA agreed to hold an inquest, but we still do not have any dates for the hearing, even though our attorneys proposed hearing dates for early 2025.

17. In relation to efforts to secure justice in the Highgate Hotel Massacre case I refer to the affidavit of Karl Webber, which I have read and endorse.

18. I support the relief claimed in this application. I was deeply upset to hear that the TRC cases, including the Highgate case, had been shut down by political interference following the closure of the TRC. I want a thorough, independent and open commission of inquiry into the suppression of the TRC cases. I also support the call for the state to pay constitutional damages to vindicate our rights that have been seriously violated by the suppression of our cases. These damages will help us to seek truth and justice, and such funds will help us to preserve the memory of those who lost their lives in the Highgate Massacre.

LYNDENE PAGE

The Deponent has acknowledged that she knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was signed and sworn to or solemnly affirmed before me at East London on this the 16th day of October 2024

6

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

Full Names: Paige Riddin

Business Address: Commissioner of Oaths Ex Officio
Practising Attorney RSA
Drake Flemmer & Orsmond (EL) Inc
Quenera Park, Quenera Drive, Beacon Bay
East London

Designation:

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

CASE NO: _____

In the matter between:

LUKHANYO BRUCE MATTHEWS CALATA	1st Applicant
ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA	2nd Applicant
BONAKELE JACOBS	3rd Applicant
FATIEMA HARON-MASOET	4th Applicant
TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE	5th Applicant
KARL ANDREW WEBER	6th Applicant
KIM TURNER	7th Applicant
LYNDENE PAGE	8th Applicant
MBUSO KHOZA	9th Applicant
NEVILLE BELING	10th Applicant
NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI	11th Applicant
SARAH BIBI LALL	12th Applicant
SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE	13th Applicant
SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO	14th Applicant

CERTIFIED A TRUE COPY
OF THE ORIGINAL

TAYLA ILSLEY
BA Law (UP) - LLB (UP)
Commissioner of Oaths
Ex Officio / Practising Attorney R.S.A
THE LEONARDO
75 Maude Street, Office Level 12,
Sandown, SANDTON, 2196
(011) 784-3310
Mobile: +27 (0) 72 839 9229
Email: tayla@lanlevitt.co.za

18/01/ 2025

MK
ASM

STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE	15th Applicant
THULI KUBHEKA	16th Applicant
HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO	17th Applicant
TSHIDISO MOTASI	18th Applicant
NOMALI RITA GALELA	19th Applicant
PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE	20th Applicant
MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI	21st Applicant
FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS	22nd Applicant

and

GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	1st Respondent
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	2nd Respondent
MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT	3rd Respondent
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	4th Respondent
MINISTER OF POLICE	5th Respondent
NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE	6th Respondent
SOUTH AFRICAN HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION	7th Respondent

SUPPORTING AFFIDAVIT – MBUSO KHOZA

I, the undersigned

MBUSO KHOZA

do hereby make oath and state as follows:

Introduction

1. I am an adult male Safety Inspector at the Amanzimtoti Fire Station, KwaZulu Natal. I am the son of the late Musawakhe 'Sbho' Phewa (hereinafter referred to as "Sbho" or "my father").

2. I am the ninth Applicant in this application.

3. The facts stated in this affidavit are within my own personal knowledge unless the context indicates otherwise and are to the best of my knowledge true and correct.

4. In making this affidavit in support of the first applicant, Lukhanyo Bruce Matthews Calata, I act on behalf of my family, in particular my mother, Faith Mama Mntungwa, grandmother, Pali Getrude Phewa, and uncle, Vusi Samson Gama.

Musawakhe "Sbho" Phewa

5. My father was born on 18 January 1967 in Lamontville, KwaZulu Natal. During the mid-1980s my father was an active member of the United Democratic Front ("UDF"), the ANC in Lamontville and an underground uMkhonto we Sizwe ("MK") operative. He was closely associated with the likes of Nhlanhla Samuel 'Zimba'

MK

ASM

Gumede, Bheki Cele, and Mvusi Simakade Ngubo who were all youth activists and members of the Masibonisane Lamontville Youth Organisation ("MALAYO") in the early 1980s.

6. My father also had ties to Ntombikayise Priscilla Kubheka ("Ntombi") who ran the ANC Cell in KwaMashu, KwaZulu Natal. Ntombi was abducted, tortured and murdered by the Port Natal Security Branch shortly after my father disappeared on 19 May 1987.

7. During 1987, three Askaris (former ANC members who were recruited to work for the Security Branch ("SB")) Xola Frank "Jimmy" Mbane ("Mbane"), Simon Radebe ("Radebe"), and Nicholas Dube ("Dube"), infiltrated the ANC Cell at the instruction of the notorious officer and head of the Terrorist Section of the Durban SB, Andrew Russel Cavill "Andy" Taylor ("Taylor"). The Durban SB worked with the SB's C1 unit that was based at Vlakplaas to identify and arrest trained members of the liberation movements. The Askaris gained Ntombi's trust and in the process, they were introduced to several MK operatives, including my father and Zimba Gumede.

8. On 19 May 1987, my father disappeared. He was apparently abducted by Mbane, Dube and Radebe and handed over to the SB at their base in Winkelspruit. My father was never seen again.

9. Days after my father disappeared, Mbane, Dube and Radebe lured Ntombi into a trap. She was abducted at Battery Beach by several members of the SB in an operation executed by Hendrik Johannes Petrus Botha ("Botha"), Salmon Johannes Gerhardus du Preez ("Du Preez"), Casper Adriaan van der Westhuizen, Roelof Brand Visagie ("Visagie"), JHA "Joe" Coetzer ("Coetzer"), and "Bossie" Basson ("Basson").

MK

ASM

10. Ntombi was taken to the Railways and Harbours Police shooting range near Winkelspruit where she was tortured by Taylor, Botha, Lawrence Gerald Wasserman ("Wasserman"), Van der Westhuizen, Coetzer and Basson. Following her interrogation and torture, Ntombi was shot and her body was dumped near the Bhambayi informal settlement by Du Preez and Wasserman. Her body was recovered in 1997 when the Truth and Reconciliation Commission ("the TRC") launched an investigation into her death.

The Truth and Reconciliation Commission

11. Botha, du Preez, Van der Westhuizen, Wasserman, Visagie, Radebe and senior Vlakplaas officer Adrian David Baker ("Baker") applied to the TRC for amnesty for Ntombi's abduction, torture and murder. Radebe was granted amnesty for Ntombi's abduction and Baker received amnesty for defeating the ends of justice in relation to Ntombi's abduction and death as well as the disposal of her body.

12. My father's disappearance, as described above, was mentioned by Mbane in his testimony against the amnesty applicants in Ntombi's case which was presented to the TRC in 2000. The applicants denied having any knowledge about my father's disappearance and Mbane did not apply for amnesty for abducting my father.

13. The TRC investigators reached out to my mother to obtain information relating to my father's disappearance. The investigators informed us that Mbane disclosed the information about my father's disappearance to the TRC.

MK

ASM

14. We were hopeful that the truth behind my father's disappearance would be revealed and that the perpetrators would be held to account. Unfortunately, no one applied for amnesty for my father's disappearance, but we believe that the perpetrators who were responsible for Ntombi's abduction, torture and killing were also involved in his disappearance.

15. The TRC Human Rights Violations Committee recognised my father as a victim of gross human rights violations. I received the reparations that were paid by the TRC. We expected that my father's disappearance would be investigated by the policing and prosecuting authorities under the democratic government.

Post the Truth and Reconciliation Commission

16. In 2002, my aunt, Zama Phewa, submitted an application on my behalf to the Department of Finance so that I could benefit from my father's special pension. My aunt had to submit supporting documents, which included my father's certificate of service, and a biography that was authored by my father's close ally, Bheki Cele.

17. In the biography, Cele stated that he made enquires after my father disappeared and he heard that my father left for exile in Uganda or Nigeria.

18. This depiction never sat well with our family. We knew that my father never had any intention to go into exile. We were highly suspicious of this claim.

19. We suspect that Cele knows more about my father's disappearance, but he is not disclosing this information.

MK ASM

20. Given the fact that my father was closely involved with comrades who climbed the ranks within the ANC, like Bheki Cele, Mvusi Ngubo and Zimba Gumede, we remained hopeful that the when the ANC government came to power, time and resources would be allocated to find out what happened to my father. This turned out not to be the case.

21. Between 2003 and 2008, our family heard nothing from the SAPS or the NPA regarding my father's disappearance. We waited patiently hoping that justice would prevail for my father.

Our family's attempts to uncover the truth

22. In the late 2000s, my uncle, Vusi Gama, started to make enquiries about the investigation into my father's disappearance. My uncle had a close relationship with my father before his disappearance in 1987, and he always fulfilled a fatherly role during my upbringing.

23. On 13 August 2008, my uncle wrote to Bheki Cele, who was the MEC for Transport in KwaZulu Natal at the time, to request his assistance in establishing the truth about my father's disappearance. A copy of my uncle's email to Cele is attached as "MHK1".

24. My uncle was under the impression that Bheki Cele would come to the family's aid because of the close relationship that he had with my father. Cele had political influence and we were hopeful that he would use his high standing in the government and the ANC to help us get to the truth.

25. Cele never responded to my uncle's email, and we took this to mean that he did not have any interest in solving my father's disappearance.

MK

ASM

26. After my uncle's failed attempt to approach Cele, he reached out to a contact who was formerly employed by the Directorate of Special Operations ("the Scorpions") before its disbandment in January 2009. The contact referred my uncle to the National Prosecuting Authority's Missing Persons Task's Team (MPTT). The MPTT assists families to trace and recover the remains of loved ones who disappeared during apartheid.

26.1 My uncle had several engagements with the MPTT between February 2009 and June 2014 about their investigation into my father's disappearance. In an email dated 23 February 2009, Madeleine Fullard of the MPTT informed my uncle that my father's disappearance was on the MPTT's "lists of cases of missing persons to address" and assured him that the matter was "a priority case". Pule Zwane, a colleague of Fullard who was assisting her with KwaZulu Natal cases confirmed a meeting with my uncle to provide our family with an update on the progress of the investigation into my father's case. The email exchanges between my uncle and the MPTT on are attached as "MHK2".

26.2 The MPTT met with our family on 17 and 18 March 2009 and explained to us the progress that has been made in their investigation. After the meetings with the MPTT my uncle did not hear back from them despite several telephonic follow ups that my uncle tried to make.

26.3 On 8 October 2009, my uncle sent an email to Zwane and Fullard requesting feedback on progress since the meetings in March 2009. Zwane responded to my uncle on 11 and 12 October 2009, indicating that the MPTT experienced difficulties with the investigation, but he ensured that he would "communicate the details with [him] in due course". Zwane also indicated that my father's case was previously investigated by the former Gauteng Attorney-General, Dr Oliviera, and that the MPTT was trying to locate that docket. The email exchanges of 8, 11 and 12 October 2009 are attached as "MHK3".

MK
ASM

26.4 Zwane met with our family again on a couple of occasions between November 2009 and August 2010. He informed us that a former Askari by the name of 'Myeza' was apparently willing to provide more information into my father's disappearance and death in exchange for deal with the prosecution. Zwane stopped communicating with us shortly after he informed us that Myeza wanted a deal with the state in exchange for the truth.

26.5 My uncle continued to communicate with Fullard and up to today, the MPTT has continuously been involved in the search for my father's remains, but results have not been forthcoming. In June 2014, Fullard acknowledged our frustration occasioned by the delays in locating my father's remains. She intimated to my uncle that the 500 other families that the MPTT was assisting also experienced the same frustration.

26.6 In the process of seeking the truth and frustrated by the decades long delay in getting to the bottom of my father's disappearance, my uncle also sought intervention from the offices of the Minister of Justice, Jeff Radebe, in August 2010, President Jacob Zuma in June 2011, and the National Director of Public Prosecutions, Mxolisi Nxasana, in June 2014. The Department of Justice's Deputy Director: Victim Support Services TRC Unit referred my uncle's requests for intervention to the Minister and NDPP to Fullard of the MPTT.

MK

ASM

26.7 A copy of my uncle' affidavit to confirm the aforesaid is attached as "MHK4".

27. Around 2018 or 2019, I attempted to make contact with Mvusi Ngubo to establish whether he had information that could shed light on my father's disappearance. Mvusi, who was a close friend of my father, told me that he did not want to get involved in my father's case.

28. As a family we did not sit on our hands after Mbane made his statement about my father's disappearance to the TRC in 2000. We followed up and engaged with the authorities and those who were closely associated with my father before his disappearance to determine what had happened to my father in 1987. To our dismay, our attempts did not yield the desired results and till today my father's disappearance remains a mystery.

The current investigation

29. The Directorate for Priority Crime Investigation ("the Hawks") started to investigate my father's disappearance in 2021.

30. Col Masimetsa Johannes Mothle was appointed as the Investigating Officer, and he took various statements from our family and my father's friends who had information about his disappearance. He also took a statement from Mbane. For reasons unknown to us Col Mothle, who was extremely passionate about my father's case, was removed from the investigation in 2023.

MK
ASM

31. In October 2022, we were informed that the NPA was going to open an inquest into my father's disappearance. We questioned this decision because my father has not been declared dead, and we do not have a death certificate for him.

32. In December 2023, the NPA decided not to proceed with an inquest but to criminally charge former SB members who kidnapped and murdered my father. To date no one has been indicted. We have not been provided with any information on how the NPA reached the decision to launch a prosecution in my father's case. The NPA has failed to communicate effectively with our family regarding the inquest and subsequent criminal prosecution that has apparently been instituted.

The delay and the effect on our family

33. For 36 years our family has been waiting for the truth behind my father's disappearance to be told. My grandmother, Pali Getrude Phewa, turns 80 this year. She has been carrying my father's disappearance with her for the greatest part of her adult life. She does not know whether my father is still alive or if he is in fact deceased. She cries whenever she thinks of her son.

34. I grew up without a father present in my life, and my mother had to raise me as a single parent. This caused a grave disturbance in both our lives, but more so in mine because of my father's absence.

35. The delay on the part of the NPA and the SAPS to uncover the truth behind my father's disappearance and death has led to a situation where we have lost all trust in the criminal justice system.

MK
AS M

36. Learning about the political suppression of the TRC cases, which we always believed was the reason behind the lack in progress in my father's case, confirms that the government has no intention to pursue justice for our fallen comrades who sacrificed their lives for our freedom and democracy.

37. Unfortunately, we do not how or why the cases of our fallen heroes were suppressed. We demand to know the reasons and we demand to hear from those responsible.

38. The suffering that our family, and many other families of TRC victims, had to endure at the hands of the government that deliberately instructed the NPA and the SAPS not to pursue the TRC cases, is beyond reproach. We deserve truth, justice and accountability.

Conclusion

39. I support the relief sought in this application. We need an independent, strong and fully open commission of inquiry to get to the truth behind the suppression of our cases. My family and I also firmly agree that the state must pay constitutional damages to vindicate our rights which have been egregiously violated over so many years.

MBUSO KHOZA

The Deponent has acknowledged that he knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was signed and sworn to or solemnly affirmed before me at Johannesburg on this the 11th day of Oct 2024.

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

Full Names: Ahmed Shabir Mayet

Business Address:

Designation:

A. S. MAYET
Commissioner of Oaths
Practising Attorney
401 Elizabeth House
18 Pritchard Street
Johannesburg
11/10/2024

"MHK2"

FW: The late Sbho Musa Phewa from Lamontville

Vusi Gama <Vusi.Gama@Kzntransport.gov.za>
12/12/2023 at 10:54:00

From: Vusi Gama <Vusi.Gama@Kzntransport.gov.za>
Sent: 12/12/2023 at 10:54:00
To: jos.venter@webberwentzel.com , nkosinathi.thema@webberwentzel.com
Cc: nicola.irving@nortonrosefulbright.com , mkhozer@gmail.com

From: Vusi Gama
Sent: 13 August 2008 15:12
To: Bheki Cele <Bheki.Cele@Kzntransport.gov.za>
Cc: Sharon Gaehler <Sharon.Gaehler@Kzntransport.gov.za>
Subject: The late Sbho Musa Phewa from Lamontville

Dear honorable MEC Cele

1. Today I unintentionally went through the Truth & Reconciliation Commission of South Africa Report.
2. The name of Sbho Musa Phewa from Lamontville is written amongst the list of the victims.
3. Sbho is a father to my only nephew Mbuso.
4. When Sbho decided to exile Mbuso was still in his mother's womb.
5. The mysterious circumstances under which Sbho died are a painful story that has turned Mbuso into a victim.
6. Mbuso is a victim because he does not know how & where his father died.
7. Zama, a sister to Sbho & my sister have tried to find closure to the matter but lately they are running out of steam.
8. It is because there seems to be no progress regarding the investigation.
9. I therefore humbly appeal to the MEC for assistance to discover what happened to my brother-in-law.
10. Seemingly time is not on our side.
11. Each time Sbho's son asks for financial assistance from me I always wish his father was here.
12. He is even battling to get funds so that he can further his education at a tertiary level.
13. South Africa is a free country today but some sons & daughters of the people who struggled & sacrificed with their lives are feeling the pain of growing fatherless & suffering from financial muscle. Therefore pain & tears is their story.
14. I am requesting for assistance from the MEC because of your will to assist where you can.
15. May Sbho rest in peace.

Regards,

Vusi Gama

Policy & Planning

033-3558747

MK
AS/M

"MHKZ"

From: Madeleine M. Fullard [mailto:mfullard@npa.gov.za]
Sent: 23 February 2009 02:39 PM
To: Vusi Gama
Cc: dqueen@npa.gov.za; Deborah Quin; Tshiamo Moela; pule@phakwe.co.za
Subject: RE: Missing MK soldier-Sbho Phewa

Hi Vusi

Thank you for your email. The case of Sbho Phewa is on our TRC lists of cases of missing persons to address [redacted] a priority case and also a very painful case, as you say.

However, it is also a difficult case because we are probably dependent on getting information from the perpetrators.

We are hoping that Deborah Quin will be able to transfer from the Scorpions to assist the Missing Persons Task Team in our KwaZulu Natal cases in April this year. We have had a lack of capacity in the KZN region as we are just a small Task Team of 3 people in Pretoria at present.

Deborah previously worked for the TRC and is well versed about Sbho's case and cases involving the Security Police in that region.

If you email your contact details and telephone numbers, I will call you to discuss it. Please feel free to call me on 012 – 845 6694 or my cell 082 576 9220 to discuss this. Or you can speak to my colleague Mr Pule Zwane on 084 5020 490. He will also be assisting with KZN cases.

Note that Deborah's surname is actually spelt Quin and so her email is dquin@npa.gov.za

I hope to speak to you soon. Are you part of the Phewa family?

Kind regards

Madeleine Fullard
Missing Persons Task Team NPA
Tel: 012 – 845 6694
Fax: 012 - 845 6337
Cell: 082 576 9220
Email: mfullard@npa.gov.za

From: Vusi Gama [mailto:Vusi.Gama@Kzntransport.gov.za]
Sent: 23 February 2009 01:04 PM
To: Madeleine M. Fullard
Cc: dqueen@npa.gov.za
Subject: Missing MK soldier-Sbho Phewa

Hi Madeline

1. On the 04th February 2009 I spoke to Debra about Sbho Phewa who is a missing MK soldier.
2. On the 23rd of February 2009 I spoke to Debra Queen again regarding the developments about Sbho's case.
3. Queen informed me that her hands are tied down because of the disbandment of the Scorpions.
4. I am concerned about service delivery in this regard.
5. It is more than 20 years since Sbho allegedly died.
6. His story is so painful.
7. Last thing that a citizen like me could expect is an answer from government stating that we can't help you now try us later.
8. I therefore deserve an answer as to why we can't get service delivery in the case of Sbho?

Dissatisfied family member
Vusi Gama

"MHK3"

Jos Venter

From: Vusi Gama <Vusi.Gama@Kzntransport.gov.za>
Sent: 02 September 2024 10:38
To: Jos Venter
Cc: mkhozer@gmail.com
Subject: FW: Missing MK soldier-Sbho Phewa

From: Vusi Gama
Sent: 11 November 2009 09:06
To: Sikhumbuzo Mdlalose <Sikhumbuzo.Mdlalose@Kzntransport.gov.za>; Siyabonga Mshengu <Siyabonga.Mshengu@Kzntransport.gov.za>
Subject: FW: Missing MK soldier-Sbho Phewa

From: Pule Zwane [mailto:pule@phakwe.co.za]
Sent: 10 November 2009 09:06 PM
To: Vusi Gama
Subject: RE: Missing MK soldier-Sbho Phewa

Mr Gama,

Thanks for the information. Clearly, we need to meet next week and discuss the case. The only person who mentioned Sbho Phewa during the TRC was Xolani Frank Mbane (Jimmy). I will confirm the date for our meeting. I need to give you some detailed brief report on the above case.

Regards

From: Vusi Gama [mailto:Vusi.Gama@Kzntransport.gov.za]
Sent: 10 November 2009 09:38 AM
To: pule@phakwe.co.za
Subject: FW: Missing MK soldier-Sbho Phewa

Hi Pule

1. The document herewith attached refers.
2. Your email below dated 12 October 2009 refers
3. I would like to bring this matter to your attention.
    a. There is contradiction between your email and the letter from the Department of Justice and Constitutional Development
        i. The letter dated 20 July 2004 herewith attached, from Department of Justice states that one of the perpetrators applied for amnesty
        ii. Your email below dated 12 October 2009 states that the perpetrators did not apply for amnesty.
4. There are two versions of the story. Which one is the correct side to the story?
5. I must bring it to your attention that:
    a. There was commitment from your side to point out where Sbho remains were scattered or buried
    b. There have been delays regarding the identification of the alleged crime scene
    c. There are different versions to the story
    d. Hearsays and rumours could be flying around.
6. Through evidence the picture is becoming clearer
7. Hope to speak to you soon.

MK
ASM

Vusi

From: Vusi Gama
Sent: 14 October 2009 10:21 AM
To: 'Pule Zwane'
Subject: RE: Missing MK soldier-Sbho Phewa

Hi Pule

Your disappearance left a vacuum that could be filled by serious hearsays. Those hearsays could be true or not. There is something that you need to comprehend. My nephew is now more than 20 years old. We need to also consider sensitivity on his part. His father disappeared when her mother was still 9 months pregnant. Pule lot of people have been hurt here

Sbho has a family that is deeply affected by this situation

Anyway Pule I am not interfering with your job. Talk to you later. You must know that SBHO's story really HURTS.

Vusi

From: Pule Zwane [mailto:pule@phakwe.co.za]
Sent: 12 October 2009 05:00 PM
To: Vusi Gama
Subject: RE: Missing MK soldier-Sbho Phewa

Vusi,

There is something you need to comprehend. This case is very sensitive. Perpetrators did not apply for amnesty from the TRC. This means that they are exposed to possible criminal prosecutions should we find the remains of Sbho. The former Gauteng Attorney General, Dr Oliviera, investigated this case. I am still trying to locate that docket. The docket will tell us who are the perpetrators, what they did they disclose about the site where Sbho was murdered and buried. The reason why I am not communicating this to you is precisely because of its sensitivity

Please do understand the nature of this case. It is not like other cases where perpetrators approached the TRC and got amnesty.

Regards

From: Vusi Gama [mailto:Vusi.Gama@Kzntransport.gov.za]
Sent: 08 October 2009 03:50 PM
To: Pule Zwane; Madeleine M. Fullard
Cc: Tshiamo Moela
Subject: RE: Missing MK soldier-Sbho Phewa

Hi Pule & Madeleine

1. Pule you have disappointed me and Sbho's family.
2. Pule I cannot reach you on the phone.
3. Madeleine I have been leaving voice messages on your phone and on your colleagues as well but up to now you have not responded.
4. This situation makes mockery to service delivery
5. Were you guys employed to perform disappearing acts?
6. I am now going to refer this matter to the Presidential hotline.

Vusi

MK
ASM

From: Pule Zwane [mailto:pule@phakwe.co.za]
Sent: 24 February 2009 10:16 AM
To: Vusi Gama; 'Madeleine M. Fullard'
Cc: dqueen@npa.gov.za; 'Deborah Quin'; 'Tshiamo Moela'
Subject: RE: Missing MK soldier-Sbho Phewa

Vusi,

This is to confirm our telephonic communication earlier on today. I confirm that I will be travelling to Durban in the next two weeks to meet with yourself and family members and give you some briefing on this particular case. I will also discuss the status of this case with yourself.

I will confirm the exact date and possible venue for the said meeting.

Regards

Pule

From: Vusi Gama [mailto:Vusi.Gama@Kzntransport.gov.za]
Sent: 24 February 2009 09:15 AM
To: Madeleine M. Fullard
Cc: dqueen@npa.gov.za; Deborah Quin; Tshiamo Moela; pule@phakwe.co.za
Subject: RE: Missing MK soldier-Sbho Phewa

Hi Madeleine

1. Thanks for your response
2. I grew up with Sbho in Stanger (currently called Kwa-Dukuza) in the 1980's up to the late 80's when he disappeared.
3. He dated my sister called Mama Khoza whom he subsequently impregnated.
4. When he disappeared in 1987 Mama was due for labour.
5. Mama gave birth to a baby boy called Mbuso in the middle of May 1987.
6. I have learnt from the TRC documents that May 1987 is also the time when Lindiwe Kubheka was murdered who was later buried in a pauper's grave in Groutville. Her grave was dug up in 1997.
7. Therefore Sbho was my brother-in-law
8. Mbuso Khoza, Sbho's son who has never seen his father let alone to know the circumstances of his death & where he died in21 years, (0794473667) is my nephew & Zama Phewa (0836176971) is a sister to Sbho
9. I would like to emphasise how the dragging of this investigation has badly affected my nephew in every formation.
10. His spirit & emotion have indelible scars.
11. Zama has told me that Jimmy Mbane from Cape Town who is alleged to be an Askari, who was also present during the TRC was willing to talk.
12. John who was a TRC investigating officer knows Jimmy Mbane.
13. Have you spoken to Jimmy & what did he said.
14. Give us the names of the perpetrators we will talk to them.
15. After 21 years Sbho disappeared the last thing I could expect from officials is an excuse.
16. Guys Sbho case is so painful beyond imagination while your salaries are guaranteed every month.
17. You are not employed to look for excuses, passing the bark or put people on a run-around.
18. Madeleine your response is insensitive & lacks urgency
19. People are dying & case risk going cold
20. I have tried to make contact with Madeleine on the 24th of February 2009 in vain.
21. If you are under-resourced, please refer me to an official who is senior.

Extremely dissatisfied family member
Vusi Gama
0825515808

MK
ASK

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

CASE NO: _____

In the matter between:

LUKHANYO BRUCE MATTHEWS CALATA	1st Applicant
ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA	2nd Applicant
BONAKELE JACOBS	3rd Applicant
FATIEMA HARON-MASOET	4th Applicant
TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE	5th Applicant
KARL ANDREW WEBER	6th Applicant
KIM TURNER	7th Applicant
LYNDENE PAGE	8th Applicant
MBUSO KHOZA	9th Applicant
NEVILLE BELING	10th Applicant
NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI	11th Applicant
SARAH BIBI LALL	12th Applicant
SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE	13th Applicant
SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO	14th Applicant
STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE	15th Applicant

MK

VSG ASM

THULI KUBHEKA	16th Applicant
HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO	17th Applicant
TSHIDISO MOTASI	18th Applicant
NOMALI RITA GALELA	19th Applicant
PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE	20th Applicant
GODOLOZI MKHONTOWESIZWE	21st Applicant
FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS	22nd Applicant

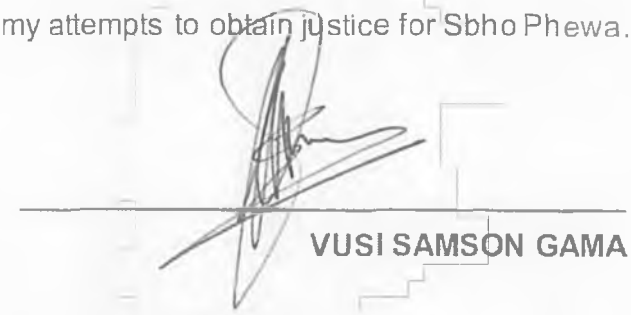
and

GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	1st Respondent
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	2nd Respondent
MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT	3rd Respondent
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	4th Respondent
MINISTER OF POLICE	5th Respondent
NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE	6th Respondent
SOUTH AFRICAN HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION	7th Respondentt

CONFIRMATORY AFFIDAVIT – VUSI SAMSON GAMA

MK ASM JSG

I, the undersigned,



VUSI SAMSON GAMA

do hereby make oath and state that:

1. I am an adult male and the uncle of Mbuso Khoza, the ninth Applicant in this application.

2. The facts stated herein are within my own personal knowledge unless the context indicates otherwise and are to the best of my knowledge true and correct.

3. I have read Mbuso's supporting affidavit and confirm that its contents are true insofar as they pertain to me and my attempts to obtain justice for Sbho Phewa.

VUSI SAMSON GAMA

The Deponent has acknowledged that he knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was sworn to before me and the deponent's signature was placed thereon in my presence at Pietermaritzburg on this the 16 day of October 2024, the regulations contained in Government Notice No R1258 of 21 July 1972, as amended, and Government Notice No R1648 of 19 August 1977, as amended, having been complied with.

VSG MK ASM

SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE
COMMUNITY SERVICE CENTRE
2024-10-16
ALEXANDRA ROAD
KWAZULU-NATAL

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

FULL NAMES: BHEKUMUZI MCHUNU
DESIGNATION: CAPT
ADDRESS: 101 ALEXANDRA RD

MK

JSG

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

CASE NO: _____

In the matter between:

LUKHANYO BRUCE MATTHEWS CALATA	1st Applicant
ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA	2nd Applicant
BONAKELE JACOBS	3rd Applicant
FATIEMA HARON-MASOET	4th Applicant
TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE	5th Applicant
KARL ANDREW WEBER	6th Applicant
KIM TURNER	7th Applicant
LYNDENE PAGE	8th Applicant
MBUSO KHOZA	9th Applicant
NEVILLE BELING	10th Applicant
NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI	11th Applicant
SARAH BIBI LALL	12th Applicant
SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE	13th Applicant
SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO	14th Applicant
STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE	15th Applicant

CERTIFIED A TRUE COPY OF THE ORIGINAL

TAYLA ILSLEY
BA Law (UP) – LLB (UP)
Commissioner of Oaths
Ex Officio / Practising Attorney R.S.A
THE LEONARDO
75 Maude Street, Office Level 12,
Sandown, SANDTON, 2196
(011) 784-3310
Mobile: +27 (0) 72 839 9229
Email: tayla@ianlevitt.co.za

18/01/2023

NJB ASM

STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE	15th Applicant
THULI KUBHEKA	16th Applicant
HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO	17th Applicant
TSHIDISO MOTASI	18th Applicant
NOMALI RITA GALELA	19th Applicant
PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE	20th Applicant
MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI	21st Applicant
FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS	22nd Applicant

and

GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	1st Respondent
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	2nd Respondent
MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT	3rd Respondent
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	4th Respondent
MINISTER OF POLICE	5th Respondent
NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE	6th Respondent
SOUTH AFRICAN HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION	7th Respondent

NJB ASM

SUPPORTING AFFIDAVIT – NEVILLE BELING

I, the undersigned,

NEVILLE BELING

do hereby make oath and state as follows:

1. I am an adult male, currently unemployed and living in East London.

2. I am the 10th Applicant in this application.

3. The facts stated in this affidavit are within my own personal knowledge unless the context indicates otherwise and are to the best of my knowledge true and correct.

4. I was born on 30 November 1972 in East London. I was close with my sister and had a good childhood.

5. I completed my standard 8 at a practical school, after which I managed to get a job as a forklift operator at Da Gama Textiles and started doing courses, such as beginner safety courses applicable to that line of work, through my employer. After this, I was training to become a clerk in the tape sizing department. My manager wanted me to eventually go into a management position. I upskilled myself with that in mind.

6. On the day of the attack at the Highgate Hotel on 1 May 1993, I was 20 years old and in the prime of my life.

7. At that time, the Highgate Hotel was a neighbourhood hotel, with most of the clientele being working class men and a regular group of police officers. The

NB ASM

Highgate Hotel had two bars, the men's bar for men only and the ladies bar for women and men, which was a smaller space than the men's bar. I was in the men's bar that evening with my cousin, Roland Parker.

8. After I had been at the bar for approximately ten minutes, a man entered the men's bar wearing a balaclava over his head. He threw a hand grenade and a teargas cannister before opening fire on the inhabitants with an AK-47. I had been hit with bullets multiple times. I could not see anything through the teargas, and I could not move. I thought the gunman was going to return to shoot me in the head, but he quickly departed.

9. The bullets from the AK-47 shattered my bones, and I was in intense pain after being shot and while lying on the floor. It felt like a very long time that I lay there. My eyes were burning from the teargas, and I was struggling to breath. My white shirt was drenched in blood.

10. Two men who had been at a nearby house having braai, Mark Bush and Steven Good, had heard the gunshots, and were the first on the scene. They dragged me out of the bar by my feet. I had serious injuries to my hip and legs and they struggled to drag me out.

11. My youth was robbed from me. I spent the rest of my twenties in and out of hospitals, and that has continued for the rest of my life. I have had close to 50 major surgeries, all related to the severe injuries I sustained during the attack.

12. At one point in my life, I was taking over 600 tablets a month. I have been to so many psychologists and psychiatrists. In the end I had to help myself because I was so dependent on medication.

NB

ASM

13. Since the day of the attack, I have not been able to work again. I have been fortunate enough to stay on my Discovery medical aid, which I had been on while working for Da Gama Textiles. If it had not been for my medical aid, I would never have been able to afford the surgeries and medication I received over the years. Since the attack, I have been living on a disability pension.

14. The attack forever changed my relationship with my family. My mom would work during the day and then come sleep by my bedside at night while I was in the hospital. I had so many drains and tubes attached to me that needed to be constantly monitored and she was concerned that the nurses might forget to change the tubes. She was my caretaker for many years as I still needed further assistance after all the surgeries and hospital stays. I have struggled with mobility issues throughout my life as a result of the attack and I am dependent on walking aids to help me move. At one point, I weighed over 200 kilograms because of the medication that I was on and my restricted mobility. I live in constant pain.

15. The attack emotionally drained my mother which contributed to her death in 2017. My father also took severe strain and suffered multiple strokes, before his death in 2016.

16. I have never married nor had any children. I now live entirely on my own and am struggling to look after myself. I would love to move to Cape Town to be closer to my specialist, but I cannot afford it.

17. For years, we had been under the impression that the Azanian People's Liberation Army ("APLA") which was the military wing of the Pan Africanist Congress ("PAC"), had been behind the attack. This is what the police had told us after the attack, and we had no further evidence to prove anything else.

NB
ASM

18. In 1997, I presented a statement to the Truth and Reconciliation Commission ("TRC") because I expected that we would learn the truth about what really happened and who had attacked us. I thought the men who had attacked us would come forward for amnesty so that we would at least know who they were.

19. We had been told that APLA members had applied for amnesty, and we were eager to learn the truth. However, we later learned that the APLA members had applied for amnesty for a different attack on the Highgate Hotel – a drive-by attack on 24 March 1994, and not for our attack. No one came forward to apply for amnesty for our attack, but the TRC still ruled that APLA had been behind the attack. We left the TRC with more questions than answers.

20. The TRC listed me as a victim of gross human rights violations. I received a once-off payment of R30,000 from the TRC and nothing further.

21. Following the attack, we received no further information from the TRC or the National Prosecuting Authority ("NPA"). We took it upon ourselves to investigate the attack on the premise that APLA was responsible.

22. In 2005, I attended a mediation with Letlapa Mphahlele, the former APLA commander. He assisted us to try and make sense of what had happened that night. He told me about the former APLA attacks and their modus operandi. Letlapa explained that the attack on the Highgate Hotel was not one that they had authorised. He also enquired with some of APLA's renegade members to see if the attack had been part of a rogue operation, but no one had any knowledge of the attack.

23. In 2006, I contacted Mthunzi Mhaga, an official at the NPA, and the investigation was apparently reopened.

NB

ASM

24. Since 2006, the case has been passed on to various police investigating officers. We have made little progress and have been frustrated with the lack of information that has been gathered. We are most upset to hear from the police that over the years many of our dockets and documents have gone missing. We feel immensely dissatisfied with the level of consideration our case has received from the police and the NPA. Our dissatisfaction with the police and the NPA led us to hire two private investigators to investigate the case on our behalf.

25. We feel that there has been a blatant disregard for our case. The authorities have never demonstrated any commitment to the Highgate Massacre or any urgency to get to the truth.

26. To date, there has never been an inquest into our case. During 2023 the NPA, at our urging, eventually agreed to hold an inquest. We still do not have any dates for the hearing, even though our attorneys proposed hearing dates for early 2025.

27. I was shocked and angry to learn of the political interference that blocked the investigation and prosecution of the TRC Cases, including my case. I want to know who was behind the interference as well as their motivations. Their actions have denied me closure over so many years.

28. I accordingly support the relief sought in this application. The President must be compelled to establish a commission of inquiry. However, the commission must be independent and public and have the powers to investigate decisively.

29. If we had known that the politicians would stop the post-TRC investigations of our cases, we would have approached our lawyers immediately after the TRC to take action on our behalf. However, we had faith in the post-apartheid order to do the right thing. This faith was misplaced. We have been horribly betrayed.

NB

ASM

30. In the circumstances, I also support the claim for constitutional damages to vindicate our rights to human dignity, equality and the rule of law, which have been deeply violated. An award for constitutional damages will help us to reach the truth behind the Highgate Massacre, since we can no longer rely on the institutions of state. Such damages will also assist us to commemorate those who tragically lost their lives on 1 May 1993 in the Highgate Hotel.

NBeling

NEVILLE BELING

The Deponent has acknowledged that he knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was signed and sworn to or solemnly affirmed before me at Johannesburg on this the 11th day of OCT 2024.

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

Full Names: Ahmed Shabir Mayet

Business Address:

Designation:

A. S. MAYET
Commissioner of Oaths
Practising Attorney
401 Elizabeth House
18 Pritchard Street
Johannesburg

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

CASE NO: _____

In the matter between:

LUKHANYO BRUCE MATTHEWS CALATA	1st Applicant
ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA	2nd Applicant
BONAKELE JACOBS	3rd Applicant
FATIEMA HARON-MASOET	4th Applicant
TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE	5th Applicant
KARL ANDREW WEBER	6th Applicant
KIM TURNER	7th Applicant
LYNDENE PAGE	8th Applicant
MBUSO KHOZA	9th Applicant
NEVILLE BELING	10th Applicant
NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI	11th Applicant
SARAH BIBI LALL	12th Applicant
SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE	13th Applicant
SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO	14th Applicant

CERTIFIED A TRUE COPY OF THE ORIGINAL

TAYLA ILSLEY
BA Law (UP) - LLB (UP)
Commissioner of Oaths
Ex Officio / Practising Attorney R.S.A
THE LEONARDO
75 Maude Street, Office Level 12,
Sandown, SANDTON, 2196
(011) 784-3310
Mobile: +27 (0) 72 839 9229
Email: tayla@lanlevitt.co.za

18/01/2025

NM ASM

STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE	15th Applicant
THULI KUBHEKA	16th Applicant
HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO	17th Applicant
TSHIDISO MOTASI	18th Applicant
NOMALI RITA GALELA	19th Applicant
PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE	20th Applicant
MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI	21st Applicant
FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS	22nd Applicant

and

GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	1st Respondent
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	2nd Respondent
MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT	3rd Respondent
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	4th Respondent
MINISTER OF POLICE	5th Respondent
NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE	6th Respondent
SOUTH AFRICAN HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION	7th Respondent

NM ASM

SUPPORTING AFFIDAVIT – NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI

I, the undersigned,

NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI

do hereby make oath and state as follows:

1. I am an adult female, currently retired and living in Claremont, Cape Town

2. I am the 11th Applicant in this application.

3. The facts deposed to in this affidavit are within my personal knowledge, unless otherwise stated or indicated by the context, and are true and correct to the best of my knowledge.

4 My husband was Sicelo Mhlauli. He, together with Mathew Goniwe, Sparrow Mkonto and Fort Calata were abducted and murdered by Security Branch of the former South African Police on 27 June 1985 when they were on their way back to Cradock from Port Elizabeth after attending a meeting. They became known as the Cradock Four. Days after they had disappeared, their bodies were found, badly burnt with numerous stab wounds.

5. My deceased husband and I have two children, Nolubabalo and Ntsika. I make this affidavit on behalf of myself and my two children.

6 I met my husband when we were both teachers, and our relationship was always very strong. He later became the headmaster of a secondary school in Oudtshoorn, a community leader and an active member of the United Democratic Front ("UDF"). The students were always very close to my husband, and they had much love for him. He taught many of them about politics. His political activities brought him to the attention of the apartheid government.

NM ASM

7 I was involved in the struggle. I was initially too scared to get involved but I wanted to support my husband and our country. I attended the UDF's launch in Cape Town with my husband and went to meetings of the United Women's Congress.

8. When my husband and I lived in Dimbaza, it was hell. We were constantly harassed by the police, and he would often be picked up by the police to be interrogated. It became so bad that whenever there was a knock on the door, I would tell my husband to put on his coat in case they took him away again. It became part of our daily life.

9 The day my husband died still haunts me. Initially, I did not believe it. I thought he had just been picked up to be questioned and even wanted to take him some warm clothes. I had been in Port Elizabeth attending the Vista winter school programme. My husband was going to collect me, but he never arrived. I was told that they were missing but I assumed they had just been arrested and that I needed to find out which police station he was being held at.

10 My brother-in-law and his friend then came to collect me, and only when I got to Cradock, was I informed about what had happened to him. I immediately fainted when I heard that my husband was dead. When we buried him, his body was so mutilated and we had to bury him without his hand, which had been cut off. His whole face and body were disfigured. My father-in-law went to view the body, but I decided not to look at it after seeing my father-in-law's reaction. My father-in-law never recovered from seeing his son in that condition.

NM ASM

11 I have been retired now for 8 years. Before I retired, I worked many jobs to ensure my children were looked after. I started as a teacher on a very low salary, and also worked for a few non-profit organisations. There were also periods where I was unemployed, and we struggled to make ends meet.

12. I worked at the Bellville's Teacher's College, Juta & Company, the South African Heritage Resources Agency and Jubilee South Africa. Most of the jobs I had paid low salaries, and I did not receive benefits and a pension from some of them.

13. While I was at the South African Heritage Resources Agency, I worked with victims of human rights violations. I was encouraging communities to make peace with each other and erect monuments to commemorate those who had died. I travelled across South Africa, Zimbabwe, Tanzania and Mozambique meeting with organisations dealing withvictims and their families. I eventually had to leave this work because it was becoming too dangerous and if anything had to happen to me, my children would have lost both their parents.

14. My final job before retirement was with the South African Social Security Agency. I stayed with them until I reached the retirement age of 65, so that I could build up a little pension. It was not much, but it was all I had.

15 My children were very young when my husband died. I struggled financially and emotionally to raise them, and I am still struggling. Our family lost our primary breadwinner, and my children lost the benefit of growing up with their loving father. My husband was a good father, and he always gave the family good

JVM ASM

16. I never remarried after losing my husband. We were supposed to grow old and retire together. Instead, I have been on my own for nearly 40 years. I had to look after myself and my children.

17. After years of struggle and non-responsiveness from the National Prosecuting Authority ("NPA"), the reopened inquest in the Cradock Four case was meant to start on 2 September 2024. However, because the NPA did not do its preparatory work on time it has been postponed for another 9 months to June 2025. We have been pushing for truth and closure for decades and we are deeply frustrated at the ongoing delays.

18. There were two previous inquests into the deaths of the Cradock Four, which left us with more questions than answers. The first one was held in 1987 before Magistrate De Beer and the second one was held in 1993 before Judge Zietsman. Neither of the inquests identified the murderers of the deceased.

19. However, Judge Zietsman found that the notorious "permanent removal from society" signal was a recommendation to murder. He also found that it has been established prima facie that the murderers were members of the security forces; and that a case of suspicion has been made out against SAP officers Colonels Harold Snyman and Eric Winter and against SADF members Brigadier Joffel van der Westhuizen, Colonel Lourens du Plessis and Major General Nicolaas Janse van Rensburg. Notwithstanding these findings, no steps were taken against these members.

20. We were all so excited when Nelson Mandela became president because we thought that change was coming, and that justice was imminent.

NM ASM

21. I went to testify at the Truth and Reconciliation Commission ("TRC") because I wanted to know what happened to my husband. I wanted justice for his death, but I never received any justice. I received R30,000 from the TRC, which was not enough to support my family or begin to fill the hole left by my husband's absence. I believe it is now time for a new approach.

22. In April 1996, at the TRC proceedings in East London, my daughter Nolubabalo testified and said that we want to forgive, but we do not know who to forgive, we do not know the killers of her father. She said that her father's murder has been a big loss because I had to play two roles, a mother role and a father role. After my daughter testified, Archbishop Desmond Tutu told me that he was proud of my daughter for her testimony.

23. Eight former Security Branch ("SB") police officers applied for amnesty before the TRC in the Cradock Four case. They were Harold Snyman, Eric Alexandra Taylor, Gerhardus Johannes Lotz, Nicolaas Janse van Rensburg, Johan van Zyl, Hermanus Barend du Plessis, Eugene de Kock and Jaap van Jaarsveld. Only Eugene de Kock and Jaap van Jaarsveld received amnesty for their role in the Cradock Four case.

24. The six SB officers who did not receive amnesty were never brought to justice for their role in my husband's death. They have all subsequently passed away and will never be held accountable for their crimes.

25. We have been waging a long struggle for justice. When the state sought to provide a backdoor amnesty for apartheid-era perpetrators we fought it. Together with the other widows of the Cradock Four, and Thembi Nkadimeng, the sister of Nokuthula Simelane, the young freedom fighter murdered by the SB in 1983, I went to court to challenge the NPA's prosecution policy in the matter of Nkadimeng & Others v The National Director of Public Prosecutions & Others (TPD case no 32709/07) (the Nkadimeng case). In 2008 the Pretoria High Court struck down the backdoor amnesty provisions that were contained in the policy, declaring it to be absurd and unconstitutional. Sadly, this victory did not open the door to justice.

NM KSM

26. In 2019, we asked the Foundation for Human Rights and Cliffe Dekker Hofmeyr attorneys to take up the Cradock Four case. It soon became apparent that the authorities were not taking our case seriously. Indeed, it appeared that the investigation docket had gone missing from the offices of the NPA in Pretoria and had to be reconstructed. After two years with little progress, our attorneys applied to court to compel the NPA and the Directorate of Priority Crimes Investigation to finalize the missing docket investigation and take a decision on the murder case. This application was launched on 20 July 2021, the 36th anniversary of the burial of the Cradock Four. After an exchange of papers, the application was held in abeyance when the authorities agreed to expedite the investigations. Sadly, the suspects against whom there was a prima facie case all died, forcing us in August 2023 to accept a third inquest.

27. We now know why there has been such long delays in advancing our cases. Post the TRC, political interference suppressed the cases and shut the doors of justice in our faces. I see our politicians becoming rich and powerful, but we, who were the victims of apartheid and continue to suffer from the long-standing effects, are ignored and made to feel insignificant.

28. I want the truth to come out and I want it to be heard. The African National Congress and the government must account for their disinterest in our case and our families. The Cradock Four laid down their lives for our democracy. It feels like their legacies have been discarded.

NM ASM

29. We thought we were going to get monthly stipends from the TRC or educational support for our children. But none of that materalised. Had I known that nothing more would come from the TRC process, I would not have put myself through the trauma of testifying. It feels like it was all wasted energy.

30. The Mhlauli family supports the relief sought in the application. The President must be compelled to appoint an open and transparent commission of inquiry into the suppression of the TRC cases. We want answers as to why there has been such a lack of progress with our case. We want to see clear and decisive action being taken. We have questions for those who decided behind closed doors to obliterate justice in our cases. Only an independent commission of inquiry can get to the bottom of the suppression and publicly hold those responsible to account.

31. We also support the claim for constitutional damages to vindicate our deeply violated rights. This will enable us to properly memorialise our loved ones who sacrificed everything for our freedom. It will also enable us to pursue truth, justice and closure in those cases where this is still possible. Finally, it will help us to monitor the conduct of the responsible departments.

32. Even today we have no faith in the authorities acting in our interests. We must take this struggle forward ourselves.

NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI

The Deponent has acknowledged that she knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was signed and sworn to or solemnly affirmed before me at Johannesburg on this the 11th day of Oct 2024.

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

Full Names: Ahmed Shabir Mayet

Business Address:

Designation:

A. S. MAYET
Commissioner of Oaths
Practising Attorney
401 Elizabeth House
18 Pritchard Street
Johannesburg
11/10/2024

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

CASE NO: _____

In the matter between:

LUKHANYO BRUCE MATTHEWS CALATA	1st Applicant
ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA	2nd Applicant
BONAKELE JACOBS	3rd Applicant
FATIEMA HARON-MASOET	4th Applicant
TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE	5th Applicant
KARL ANDREW WEBER	6th Applicant
KIM TURNER	7th Applicant
LYNDENE PAGE	8th Applicant
MBUSO KHOZA	9th Applicant
NEVILLE BELING	10th Applicant
NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI	11th Applicant
SARAH BIBI LALL	12th Applicant
SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE	13th Applicant
SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO	14th Applicant

TAYLA ILSLEY
BA Law (UP) - LLB (UP)
Commissioner of Oaths
Ex Officio / Practising Attorney R.S.A
THE LEONARDO
75 Maude Street, Office Level 12,
Sandown, SANDTON, 2196
(011) 784-3310
Mobile: +27 (0) 72 839 9229
Email: tayla@ianlevitt.co.za

CERTIFIED A TRUE COPY
OF THE ORIGINAL
18/01/2025

STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE	15th Applicant
THULI KUBHEKA	16th Applicant
HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO	17th Applicant
TSHIDISO MOTASI	18th Applicant
NOMALI RITA GALELA	19th Applicant
PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE	20th Applicant
MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI	21st Applicant
FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS	22nd Applicant

and

GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	1st Respondent
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	2nd Respondent
MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT	3rd Respondent
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	4th Respondent
MINISTER OF POLICE	5th Respondent
NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE	6th Respondent

SUPPORTING AFFIDAVIT – SARAH BIBI LALL

I, the undersigned,

SARAH BIBI LALL

do hereby make oath and state as follows:

1. I am an adult female and the sister of the late Dr Hoosen Mia Haffejee (hereafter referred to as "Hoosen" or "my brother").

2. I am the 12th Applicant in this application.

3. Save where appears from the context, the facts contained in this affidavit are within my own personal knowledge and are to the best of my knowledge and belief both true and correct.

4. My brother died at the hands of the Durban Security Branch of the former South African Police on 3 August 1977. He was 26 years old.

5. I make this affidavit on behalf of the surviving members of the extended Haffejee family.

Brief background of Hoosen Haffejee

6. Hoosen was born in Pietermaritzburg on 6 November 1950. He was the youngest of four siblings in a close-knit family. Our parents, Mohammed Essack Haffejee and Fathima Bibi Rahim, were married in Durban and resided in Pietermaritzburg. My two elder brothers were Yusuf and Ismail Haffejee. Ismail and I are the only siblings who are still alive.

7. Hoosen completed his schooling in Pietermaritzburg. My father borrowed money to send him to medical school in Nagpur, India. All our family members contributed financially towards Hoosen's education as we paid the money that my father had borrowed back in instalments. My father's belief was that by educating his youngest son, Hoosen would have paid it back by educating other members our family. We were not financially well off.

8. In 1968, at the age of 17, Hoosen left South Africa to study dentistry in Andheri, India. Because of the quota system that was imposed by the apartheid government, there were limited opportunities for non-white students to study at South African universities.

9. Hoosen remained in India for seven years, and upon his graduation in 1976 he returned to South Africa. He struggled to obtain employment after he returned because the South African government refused to recognise his 'foreign' qualification. After some time, he was employed at the King George V Hospital in Durban. As part of his duties, he also visited Tongaat and surrounding areas. He rented a flat at Antelope place in Overport, Durban which he occupied during the week. He returned to our parental home in Pietermaritzburg every weekend without fail.

10. The Saturday before my brother passed was away, I went to our parental home with my husband and children. Hoosen was happy and in good spirit a usual. Before I left on the Sunday, I prepared his favourite meals that he would take with him when he returned to Durban for the work week on Monday morning. I bade Hoosen goodbye before I left our parental home that Sunday, expecting to see him again the following Friday.

Hoosen's mysterious death

11. I was at work on 3 August 1977 when I was told of Hoosen's death. I became hysterical and started screaming. I was so overcome with grief that at a stage, someone slapped me to bring me out of the hysteria. I remember telling my brother that the person who had told me of Hoosen's death joked badly with me. My brother simply responded by saying that it was not a joke but the truth.

12. My father was not present when my mother was told of Hoosen's death. He was in Transvaal collecting money for the Mosque and to send to the poor in India. My mother was a strong woman and so too was my father a strong man. They managed to stay calm when the news of their son's death broke.

13. We were told that Hoosen committed suicide, but we did not believe it. In our culture, suicide is not permissible. This was known to Hoosen. If one commits suicide, in Islam, it is a sin, and you are not permitted to be buried in the same section of the cemetery. There is a section reserved for those that commit suicide. Hoosen was buried inside the designated area, that is not outside the cemetery, after his body was bathed (Ghusi) as is required in our culture.

14. Hoosen's friend, Amena Motala, who identified his body at the government mortuary in Gale Street, Durban observed that Hoosen's face was severely swollen, he had many bruises on his body and head and burn marks underneath the soles of his feet. At the time we did not know that Hoosen was arrested and tortured by the Security Branch. The injuries to Hoosen's body and the presence of the Security Branch raised questions about the circumstances in which he died.

15. I remember shortly after Hoosen's death, the Security Branch raided our parental home one evening around midnight. They searched my mother's room and Hoosen's room. Yusuf, my eldest brother, refused to let them search his room. According to me, Hoosen was never involved in politics. I could not understand the Security Branch's interest in Hoosen and their involvement in his death.

The 1978 inquest

16. In 1977 and 1978 an inquest was held to ascertain the facts surrounding Hoosen's death ("the 1978 inquest"). Our family's lawyers made the case that Hoosen was severely and deliberately tortured. We argued that he died as a result of the torture because we did not believe that he committed suicide.

17. The version of the Security Branch was that Hoosen suffered the terrible injuries to his body because he resisted his arrest. They refuted the claims that he was tortured. They said that Hoosen was found hanging from the door of his cell at the Brighton Beach Police Station and that he had committed suicide.

18. The inquest court agreed with the Security Branch and concluded that Hoosen committed suicide. It found that nobody was responsible for his death. There was no justice for my brother.

The Truth and Reconciliation Commission

19. In 1997 my mother appealed to the Truth and Reconciliation Commission ("TRC") to investigate and establish the truth behind Hoosen's death because she did not believe that he committed suicide.

20. None of the Security Branch members who were involved in Hoosen's arrest, detention, torture or death applied for amnesty to the TRC. But in another matter, the killing of Dr Richard Turner, former Security Branch policeman, Mohun Deva Gopal, stated that he was present when Hoosen was interrogated, assaulted and tortured.

21. The TRC concluded that it was likely that Hoosen died in detention as a result of the assaults and torture that he endured. It found that his death was a gross violation of human rights.

22. The TRC legislation held the promise that police officers who committed crimes during apartheid, such as assault, torture and murder, that were not amnestied would be investigated and prosecuted. This should have applied to the Security Branch members who were responsible for Hoosen's death because they did not apply for amnesty for the crimes that they committed.

The impact of Hoosen's death on our family

23. Hoosen's death had a huge impact on our family. our family suffered tremendously.

24. Yusuf's focal point in life became the search for the truth behind Hoosen's death. Yusuf would hang photos of the Security Branch officials, Captain Petrus Lodewikus du Toit ("Du Toit") and Lieutenant James Brough Taylor ("Taylor") outside our shop window with a caption which read "Who killed Hoosen?". Du Toit and Taylor were involved in Hoosen's arrest, and they advanced the false narrative in the 1978 inquest that Hoosen committed suicide in detention.

25. Yusuf sued the Minister of Police on behalf of our family. The amount that was paid out was distributed to all those that assisted the family financially after my brother's death. The Professional Fund refused to pay out because the inquest court found that Hoosen committed suicide.

26. Yusuf changed completely as time passed. He became involved in politics but withdrew from society and his family. He made it his duty to investigate Hoosen's death. He explored every avenue that he could find. Sadly, he passed away in September 2009 without obtaining justice for Hoosen.

27. My father was a fit man before Hoosen's death. Everything changed when he lost his son. He died with a broken heart in May 1986 without knowing why his son was killed.

28. My mother's life changed as well. She became withdrawn and spent a lot of time reading newspapers and searching for articles about Hoosen. She wrote to newspapers editors to tell them about Hoosen. She made her feelings and suspicions about his death known and a series of articles about Hoosen's death was published. My mother passed away in 2011 at the age of 89 years without knowing the truth of how her son died in detention.

The continued pursuit for truth and justice

29. Yusuf led our family's quest to find truth and justice for Hoosen. He pursued this quest tirelessly until his death in 2009. My brother, Ismail, and I had to continue this quest. We owed it to Hoosen, my father, Yusuf and later my mother.

30. Despite the recommendation made by the TRC that apartheid perpetrators who were not amnestied should be held to account, the authorities of the democratic government failed us. Justice has remained out of reach. We attempted for decades to get the authorities to act in Hoosen's case because we knew that the finding of the 1978 inquest was a farce. In 2016 we submitted joint representations with the family of the late Dr Neil Aggett to the National Director of Public Prosecutions to have the inquests into Neil and Hoosen's deaths in detention reopened.

31. In October 2017, the National Prosecuting Authority ("NPA"), led by Adv Shubnum Singh, began an investigation into Hoosen's death. Adv Singh located several key witnesses, and with the help of an expert, conducted technical tests in the cell where Hoosen had died to determine if there was sufficient evidence to request the Minister of Justice to reopen the inquest.

32. The reopening of the inquest was approved on 18 September 2018 but the process was delayed and in August 2019, on the eve of the 42nd anniversary of Hoosen's death, the NPA informed our family that the inquest would not be reopened because it was in the process of conducting further investigations. Our lawyers had to threaten the the Minister of Justice NPA with litigation to have the inquest reopened. Families should not have had to take drastic steps like this.

33. On 16 August 2019 the Minister of Justice released a press statement announcing that the inquests into the deaths of Hoosen and Dr Neil Aggett would be reopened. James Taylor, the last surviving lead interrogator and torturer of Hoosen died 3 days later on 19 August 2019.

34. Indeed, none of the leading role players behind the torture and murder of Hoosen lived long enough to appear before the reopened inquest. This was the terrible cost of delay.

35. The re-opened inquest commenced in the Pietermaritzburg High Court on 16 August 2021 and judgment was delivered by Judge ZP Nkosi on 23 September 2023.

36. Judge Nkosi overturned the findings of the 1978 inquest. The Judge found that:

36.1 Hoosen's death could be attributed to two possibilities. The first was that he died from a cardiac incident that occurred while he was tortured by the Security Branch members. The second was that he died from a cardiac incident that was caused by ligature constriction applied by the Security Branch members either while he was less conscious, unconscious or debilitated.

36.2 The police officers primarily responsible for the torture and murder of Hoosen were Du Toit and Taylor (the two members who convinced the 1978 inquest that Hoosen died by suicide).

36.3 The Security Branch members who were involved in the interrogation, torture and cover-up of Hoosen's death were Brigadier Steenkamp, Commander of the Durban Security Branch, Colonel Ignatius Gerhard Coetzee, second in command of the Durban Security Branch; Major Joseph Benjamin; Lieutenant Vic MacPherson; Warrant Officer Shunmugam (Schrewds) Govender; Sergeant Veera Ragalulu Naidoo (VR Naidoo), and Mohan Deva Gopal (who made the statement to the TRC).

36.4 The members of the South African Police Uniform Branch at Brighton Beach Police Station who turned a blind eye and helped to facilitate the cover-up of Hoosen's death were Constables Johannes Nicolaas Meyer, Derek Hugh Naude and Shadrack Madlala.

37. Du Toit died on 15 April 2008; Benjamin died on 16 December 2010; MacPherson died on 20 April 2017; and Taylor died on 19 August 2019. Except for Naidoo and Gopal all the other Security Branch members have either died or could not be traced.

38. The Judge recommended that Gopal and Naidoo should be prosecuted for their role in Hoosen's murder and that charges of perjury should be proffered against Naude, Meyer and Matheevathinee Benjamin who handed Hoosen over to the Security Branch in 1977.

Conclusion

39. I support the relief that is sought in this application.

40. If the authorities had investigated Hoosen's murder at the conclusion for the TRC or any time shortly thereafter, as they were required to do by law, we could have seen justice done in his case. My mother and brother could have gone to their graves in peace knowing who was responsible for Hoosen's murder. They were all denied this closure.

41. We could also have heard from the perpetrators who could have faced justice in their lifetimes. It is heart breaking to know that our family lived with the pain of Hoosen death engraved in our hearts while those responsible for the murder of a 26-year-old, who had his whole life left to live, spent the remainder of their lives living freely and without the slightest concern about their past crimes

42. We now know that the TRC cases were deliberately suppressed. The political interference by South Africa's post-apartheid government caused grave harm to our family and many other families. It is truly unacceptable that those in high office could deprive us of truth and justice. We demand to know why this abomination of justice happened.

43. We accordingly support the relief sought against the President compelling him to appoint an independent and open independent commission of inquiry, with all the necessary powers, to get to the bottom of the political suppression of the TRC cases.

44. We also support the claim for constitutional damages to vindicate the violations of our rights to human dignity, equality under law and the rule of law. These damages will help us to memorialise our loved ones who died at the hands of the apartheid regime. Constitutional damages will also assist other families to seek justice, truth and closure.

SARAH BIBI LALL

The Deponent has acknowledged that she knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was signed and sworn to or solemnly affirmed before me at Pietermaritzburg on this the 15th day of October 2024.

Chetty Lt Col

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

Lt Colonel

S CHETTY

SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE
MAGISTRATE COURT
2024 -10- 15
PIETERMARITZBURG
KWAZULU-NATAL

Full Names: SURAYA CHETTY

Business Address: Pietermaritzburg Court

Designation: Lt Colonel

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

CASE NO: _____

In the matter between:

LUKHANYO BRUCE MATTHEWS CALATA	1st Applicant
ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA	2nd Applicant
BONAKELE JACOBS	3rd Applicant
FATIEMA HARON-MASOET	4th Applicant
TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE	5th Applicant
KARL ANDREW WEBER	6th Applicant
KIM TURNER	7th Applicant
LYNDENE PAGE	8th Applicant
MBUSO KHOZA	9th Applicant
NEVILLE BELING	10th Applicant
NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI	11th Applicant
SARAH BIBI LALL	12th Applicant
SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE	13th Applicant
SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO	14th Applicant

CERTIFIED A TRUE COPY OF THE ORIGINAL

TAYLA ILSLEY
BA Law (UP) - LLB (UP)
Commissioner of Oaths
Ex Officio / Practising Attorney R.S.A
THE LEONARDO
75 Maude Street, Office Level 12,
Sandown, SANDTON, 2196
(011) 784-3310
Mobile: +27 (0) 72 839 9229
Email: tayla@ianlevitt.co.za

18/01/2025

E.J.S

K.C

STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE	15th Applicant
THULI KUBHEKA	16th Applicant
HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO	17th Applicant
TSHIDISO MOTASI	18th Applicant
NOMALI RITA GALELA	19th Applicant
PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE	20th Applicant
MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI	21st Applicant
MOGAPI SOLOMON TLHAPI	22nd Applicant
FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS	23rd Applicant

and

GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	1st Respondent
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	2nd Respondent
MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT	3rd Respondent
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	4th Respondent
MINISTER OF POLICE	5th Respondent
NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE	6th Respondent

SES
A.C

SUPPORTING AFFIDAVIT – SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE

I, the undersigned,

SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE

do hereby make oath and state as follows:

1. I am an adult female pensioner and the mother of the late Nokuthula Aurelia Simelane.

2. I am the 13th Applicant in this application.

3. Nokuthula was my first child. I gave birth to her when I was 19 years old. I am now 84 years old. Nokuthula's father and my husband, Tiny Matthew Simelane, died in March 2001. He never found out what happened to our daughter. We still don't know what happened to her. We have endured daily agony since her disappearance in 1983.

4. Nokuthula operated as a courier for Umkhonto we Sizwe, the military wing of the African National Congress, between South Africa and Swaziland. In September 1983, she was abducted and brutally tortured by members of the Security Branch of the former South African Police. Nokuthula was never seen again.

5. We have not been able to bury Nokuthula's remains with the dignity and respect that she deserves. I desperately want to do this before I die. Until we can do this, we will have no closure.

6. We know that Nokuthula refused to collaborate with the apartheid security forces. We know they tortured her brutally. They ultimately murdered her and secretly disposed of her remains. We know that it was routine practice for the Security Branch to murder their captives if they refused to collaborate. They often concealed their remains in a manner that made discovery unlikely, if not impossible.

S.E.S
K.C

7. We feel deeply betrayed. Nokuthula was betrayed by one of her own cadres. The TRC's Amnesty Committee ("AC") granted the white officers amnesty for kidnapping even though they found that these same individuals had lied about what they did to her during her captivity, and they made false claims that Nokuthula was cooperating with them. This was an inexplicable betrayal of the full disclosure principle on the part of the AC.

8. We then expected the various post-apartheid governments to pursue justice in Nokuthula's case. They turned their backs on us. Prosecutors even refused to investigate those police officers who did not apply for amnesty for the kidnapping of Nokuthula. This included the Commander of Security Branch C1 Section, former Brigadier Willem Schoon, who authorised the crimes committed against Nokuthula. He has since died.

9. We expected that with liberation a new post-apartheid government would stand with us, and they would hold the perpetrators to account. We were wrong. Rather than standing with the victims, successive post-apartheid governments found ways to shield apartheid-era perpetrators from justice. This betrayal cut the deepest.

10. Our pleas since the mid-1990s for a proper investigation fell on deaf ears. When we gave up on a prosecution of the known suspects and sought an inquest in 2013 this was refused. The refusal forced us to launch an application to court in 2015 to force the prosecutors to make a decision in Nokuthula's case.

S.E.S
X.C

11. Only when we launched this case, did the NPA act which resulted in indictments being issued in early 2016. Since then, two of the four accused have died and another claims he is mentally unfit to stand trial. Eight years later we are still waiting for the trial to begin. We fear that by the time trial starts, there will be nobody alive, or mentally fit, to stand trial.

12. I have suffered emotionally, psychologically and physically as a result of my daughter's disappearance. This suffering has been heightened by the duplicitous conduct of the police and prosecutors who ought to have upheld the rule of law, but, acting at the behest of politicians, deliberately blocked Nokhuthula's case from going forward, as well as other cases from the past.

13. I support the relief claimed in this application. Constitutional damages will help us commemorate Nokuthula and her sacrifices and will help other families reach truth and closure. I also support the relief requiring an independent and public commission of inquiry to be established to determine the truth regarding the political suppression of the TRC cases.

SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE

X.C

The Deponent has acknowledged that she knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was signed and sworn to or solemnly affirmed before me at Ermelo on this the 23 day of December 2024.

SUID-AFRIKAANSE POLISIEDIENS
GEMEENSKAPDIENSSENTRUM
2024 -12- 23
COMMUNITY SERVICE CENTRE
ERMELO
SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

Full Names: Lubuchi Xaba
Business Address: 24 Jan van Riebeeck
Designation: Sergeant

S.E.S
X.C

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

CASE NO: _____

In the matter between:

LUKHANYO BRUCE MATTHEWS CALATA	1st Applicant
ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA	2nd Applicant
BONAKELE JACOBS	3rd Applicant
FATIEMA HARON-MASOET	4th Applicant
TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE	5th Applicant
KARL ANDREW WEBER	6th Applicant
KIM TURNER	7th Applicant
LYNDENE PAGE	8th Applicant
MBUSO KHOZA	9th Applicant
NEVILLE BELING	10th Applicant
NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI	11th Applicant
SARAH BIBI LALL	12th Applicant
SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE	13th Applicant
SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO	14th Applicant

CERTIFIED A TRUE COPY
OF THE ORIGINAL

TAYLA ILSLEY
BA Law (UP) – LLB (UP)
Commissioner of Oaths
Ex Officio / Practising Attorney R.S.A
THE LEONARDO
75 Maude Street, Office Level 12,
Sandown, SANDTON, 2196
(011) 784-3310
Mobile: +27 (0) 72 839 9229
Email: tayla@ianlevitt.co.za

18/01/2025

STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE	15th Applicant
THULI KUBHEKA	16th Applicant
HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO	17th Applicant
TSHIDISO MOTASI	18th Applicant
NOMALI RITA GALELA	19th Applicant
PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE	20th Applicant
MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI	21st Applicant
FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS	22nd Applicant
and
GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	1st Respondent
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	2nd Respondent
MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT	3rd Respondent
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	4th Respondent
MINISTER OF POLICE	5th Respondent
NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE	6th Respondent

SUPPORTING AFFIDAVIT – SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO

I, the undersigned,

SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO

do hereby make oath and state as follows:

1. I am an adult female pensioner currently residing in Cradock in the Eastern Cape. I was born on 1 September 1955. My husband is the late Sparrow Mkonto (hereinafter referred to as "Sparrow" or "my husband").

2. I am the 14th Applicant in this application.

3. Save where appears from the context, the facts contained in this affidavit are within my own personal knowledge and are to the best of my knowledge and belief both true and correct.

4. I depose to this affidavit on behalf of myself and my son, Lonwabo Mkonto.

5. On 27 June 1985, Sparrow, Matthew Goniwe, Sicelo Mhlauli and Fort Calata were abducted and murdered by members of the Security Branch of the former South African Police. Days after they had disappeared, their bodies were found, badly burnt with numerous gunshot and stab wounds. Sparrow, Matthew, Sicelo and Fort became known as the Cradock Four.

6. The story of the Cradock Four and our attempts to pursue justice in their case is dealt with extensively in the founding affidavit deposed to by Lukhanyo Calata. founding affidavit. I confirm the contents of his affidavit in so far as they relate to the Cradock Four, my husband and our decades long pursuit for justice. To avoid repetition, I will not repeat the story of the Cradock Four in this affidavit.

7. On 16 April 1996, I presented a plea for justice to the Human Rights Violations Committee of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission ("TRC"). I was supported by the other widows of the Cradock Four and they too presented statements on the same day.

8. In my statement, I told the Committee that my husband was everything to me. He did everything for me and my son. His murder rendered me a widow and left my son without a father. The impact that Sparrow's murder had on our lives is incomprehensible.

9. I requested that a thorough investigation into the Cradock Four case be conducted so that justice could be done. I asked the TRC to assist me with my son's education.

10. The TRC recognised Sparrow as a victim of gross human rights violations, and I received reparations in the meagre amount of R30 000.00. The reparations were wholly inadequate, and it failed dismally to elevate us from our suffering.

11. The pain, suffering and violation that we suffered in 1985 was not relieved with the passage of time. The turn of democracy brought with it the hope that our suffering, pain and violation would be vindicated. We expected that the truth would be pursued by the government, that those who murdered our husbands would be held accountable, and that justice would prevail. Sadly, justice remained out of reach for the Cradock Four in the thirty years of democracy.

12. We support the relief sought in this application. It was heartbreaking to learn that high ranking government officials were responsible for the suppression of TRC cases. We deserve to know why these officials thought that they could deny us justice. We demand to know how this happened. We also support the claim for constitutional damages to vindicate our deeply violated rights.

SE Mkonto

SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO

The Deponent has acknowledged that she knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was signed and sworn to or solemnly affirmed before me at CRADOCK SAPS on this the 22 day of OCT 2024.

SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE
VISIBLE POLICING
2024 -10- 22
CRADOCK
EASTERN CAPE

0534806-4
[illegible] 18/0

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

Full Names: MONCIO SIZWE

Business Address: SIKHULU STR CRADOCK SAP

Designation: WARRANT OFFICER

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

CASE NO: _____

In the matter between:

LUKHANYO BRUCE MATTHEWS CALATA	1st Applicant
ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA	2nd Applicant
BONAKELE JACOBS	3rd Applicant
FATIEMA HARON-MASOET	4th Applicant
TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE	5th Applicant
KARL ANDREW WEBER	6th Applicant
KIM TURNER	7th Applicant
LYNDENE PAGE	8th Applicant
MBUSO KHOZA	9th Applicant
NEVILLE BELING	10th Applicant
NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI	11th Applicant
SARAH BIBI LALL	12th Applicant
SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE	13th Applicant
SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO	14th Applicant
STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE	15th Applicant

CERTIFIED A TRUE COPY
OF THE ORIGINAL

TAYLA ILSLEY
BA Law (UP) – LLB (UP)
Commissioner of Oaths
Ex Officio / Practising Attorney R.S.A
THE LEONARDO
75 Maude Street, Office Level 12,
Sandown, SANDTON, 2196
(011) 784-3310
Mobile: +27 (0) 72 839 9229
Email: tayla@lanlevitt.co.za

18/01/2025

MSM

M.R

THULI KUBHEKA	16th Applicant
HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO	17th Applicant
TSHIDISO MOTASI	18th Applicant
NOMALI RITA GALELA	19th Applicant
PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE	20th Applicant
MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI	21st Applicant
MOGAPI SOLOMON TLHAPI	22nd Applicant
FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS	23rd Applicant

and

GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	1st Respondent
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	2nd Respondent
MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT	3rd Respondent
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	4th Respondent
MINISTER OF POLICE	5th Respondent
NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE	6th Respondent

SUPPORTING AFFIDAVIT - STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE

I, the undersigned,

STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE

do hereby make oath and state as follows:

Introduction

1. I am an adult male born on 5 April 1957. I am the brother of the late Matthews Mabelane ("Matthews" or "my brother") and the 15th Applicant in this application.

2. Matthews died in detention on 15 February 1977, whilst under interrogation by the notorious Security Branch ("SB"), at the John Vorster Square police station ("JVS"). He was only 22 years old at the time of his death.

3. The facts deposed to in this affidavit are within my knowledge, unless otherwise stated or indicated by the context, and are true and correct to the best of my knowledge.

4. I depose to this affidavit on behalf of the surviving members of the Mabelane family.

The life of Matthews Mabelane

5. Matthews was born in 1954 in Soweto. He was the third born of six children. In 1958, our family was forcefully removed from our home in Sophiatown under the Natives Resettlement Act of 1954. The apartheid government relocated our family to Zone 1, Meadowlands where Matthews grew up.

MSM

6. Matthews attended Madibane High School in Diepkloof, Soweto and it was during his high school career that he became politically active. Together with other students from Soweto, Matthews vehemently opposed the apartheid regime and the policies that affected the daily living of black people in South Africa.

7. Matthews joined the Soweto Students Representative Council ("SSRC"). The SSRC then was led by Mr Tsietsi Mashinini who died many years later in exile under mysterious circumstances. The SSRC comprised of students from different schools in Soweto. At first, it was formed as an Action Committee of the South African Students Movement. The SSRC led the 16 June 1976 mass student demonstration in Soweto to which the apartheid government responded with brutal violence.

8. During the 1976 student uprisings in Soweto, Matthews and several other students from Madibane High School mobilised against the adoption of Afrikaans as compulsory medium of instruction in terms of the Bantu Education Act of 1953. On 13 June 1976, scores of students gathered at the Orlando Donaldson Community Hall in Soweto to discuss the imposition of the Bantu Education system. The students decided to protest peacefully on 16 June 1976. Over the ensuring days, hundreds of protesting students were gunned down by the South African Police ("SAP").

9. After the 16 June 1976 demonstrations, the apartheid police apparatus went into full swing in search of student leaders of the SSRC. Out of fear of arrest, Matthews went into hiding.

10. In late 1976, Matthews joined uMkhonto we Sizwe ("MK"), the armed wing of the ANC. He left Meadowlands for Botswana in October 1976 to undergo military training. Matthews intended to join the liberation struggle to fight the apartheid government in a more direct and militant manner.

Matthew's death in detention

11. On 21 January 1977, my brother was apprehended by the police near Zeerust while crossing back into South Africa from Botswana. He was detained in terms of section 6(1) of the Terrorism Act. This was after the Minister of Police, Jimmy Kruger, announced that amnesty would be granted to children who left South Africa to join liberation movements.

12. After a few days which cannot be accounted for, Matthews was booked into JVS on 27 January 1977. No explanation has been provided by the police as to what they did with him between 21 and 27 January 1977. He was never charged with any criminal offence. Given the modus operandi of the SB, it is likely that Matthews was subjected to torture prior to his detention at JVS.

13. Matthews was detained, interrogated, and most likely tortured for 19 days before he fell to his death from the infamous 10th floor of JVS on 15 February 1977. According to statements made by SB members at the subsequent inquest, on 15 February 1977 at approximately 08h40, Matthews arrived at the interrogation room on the 10th floor for questioning. There were three officers in the room at the time, namely Warrant Officers Leana Viljoen and Petrus Daniel Jordaan and Sergeant Jacobus Johannes Cilliers.

14. Shortly after the commencement of the interrogation, the questioning was interrupted as Warrant Officer Jordaan was apparently summoned to the lifts by a telephone call. According to Jordaan's statement, he claimed that he told Matthews that he expected his father to be waiting for him at the lift, and that he "was going to quickly get his father".

M S M
M. D

15. Whilst the interrogation was adjourned, the police members alleged that Matthews tried to escape from police custody. They claimed that he dashed for the window, exited the window and began walking along a ledge on the outer wall when he lost his balance and fell. The police allege that the two police officials present in the office were unable to stop him. According to the police, Matthews fell and cleared the roof of the garage and landed on the bonnet of a vehicle in the car park some six meters away from the edge of the building.

16. When our family retrieved Matthews' body from the government mortuary, my father discovered a disturbing message on the lining of his trousers which Matthews had written for our brother, Lasch Mabelane. The message read: "Brother Lasch, tell mother and my other brothers that the police will push me from the tenth floor. I bid you farewell."

Questions surrounding Matthews' death

17. An inquest into Matthews' death was held at the Johannesburg Magistrates Court on 30 May 1977, under inquest number 287/77. The inquest was presided over by Magistrate WP Dormehl. The prosecutor in the inquest was Mr NJ van Vuren. Evidence by the State comprised entirely of evidence from the police officials who participated in Matthews' arrest, detention and/or interrogation.

18. As the family, we were not afforded an opportunity to lead evidence during the inquest and the process was concluded within a day without any medical information being presented, aside from the state's post-mortem report. No cross-examination of the witnesses was conducted.

MSM

19. The Court accepted without question the version of events provided by the police. Accordingly, Magistrate WP Dormehl found that Matthews died of multiple injuries which he sustained after he accidentally fell to his death from a ledge on the 10th floor of JVS. He concluded that there was nobody to blame for the death.

20. Our family, in particular our father, never accepted the police version or the finding of the inquest. The manner in which Matthews passed away was similar to the deaths of other activists during detention under the Terrorism Act.

21. On 20 February 1979, the United Nations Special Committee against Apartheid reported on Matthews' death. The Special Committee rejected the inquest finding remarking that "it would be absurd to suggest that [Matthews] attempted to escape through a window of the tenth floor of a building".

The Truth and Reconciliation Commission

22. When the TRC commenced its work in 1996, we were hopeful that the police officers who were implicated in Matthews' death would apply for amnesty so that the truth could be revealed and that we could have justice for Matthews. This did not happen.

23. My father, Phillip Mabelane, presented his story before the TRC's Human Rights Violations Committee on 23 July 1996. My father testified that on 16 February 1977, two police officers, one white and one black, came to our home and instructed him to accompany them to JVS because, as they explained in Afrikaans, Matthews had misbehaved. My father testified that:

> "We went to the tenth floor where they told me that my child was there and was interrogated and jumped through the window and fell down from the tenth floor. I asked how did he come through because he was in your hands. No, we just saw him, suddenly we saw him going through the window.

"After that they told me that ... I do not have the right to take any steps regarding this matter, according to the law. All I could do is for them to release the corpse to me that I should bury it myself. Truly, I did that, I buried my son."

24. The TRC, at volume 3, chapter 6 of its final report, found "the former state, the minister of police and the commissioner of police at the time responsible for the death in custody of Mr Matthews Mabelane and for the gross violation of human rights."

The Family's Truth-Seeking Process

25. We do not believe the inquest finding that nobody was to blame for the death of Matthews, and we have been pushing to reopen the inquest for several years, without success. We were greatly encouraged by the historic reopening of the inquest into the death in detention of Ahmed Timol. My brother, Lasch, attended much of the hearing and asked the lawyers representing the Timol family to take up the case of Matthews.

26. Our struggle for truth and justice was spearheaded by my father, Philip Mabelane and Lasch. My father died on 9 May 2018, while Lasch died on 6 August 2020, without reaching closure.

27. We had hoped that after all these years those responsible for my brother's death would come forward with the truth. It is clear that unless they are forced to talk about what happened they will remain silent. Only a reopened inquest can do this, but time is running out. Some of those involved have already died and those still alive are now elderly.

28. Our lawyers have submitted formal submissions for the reopening of the inquest. For several years they have been applying pressure on the NPA and DPCI to finalise their investigations and to make a decision in my brother's case. However, some 47 years after my brother's death in detention there is still no decision. We see little urgency being applied to our case by the authorities. Indeed, we have the unfortunate impression that the investigations are being dragged out for as long as possible.

Conclusion

29. We were appalled and shocked to hear that political interference following the closure of the TRC suppressed hundreds of apartheid-era cases, including my brother's case. We want to know how such an abomination of justice could take place in the new democratic South Africa. We feel utterly betrayed.

30. If the death of Matthews had been investigated promptly after the closing of the TRC we could have received closure. More suspects and witnesses would have been alive, and leads could have been followed. There must be a reckoning for the deliberate decisions that have denied us truth and justice.

31. We accordingly endorse the application for an independent commission of inquiry with the necessary powers to get to the bottom of the suppression of the TRC cases. It seems clear that the government is deeply embarrassed about its role in closing down our cases, hence the refusal to establish an inquiry. If the President persists in refusing to help us get to the truth, he must be forced to do so.

NDSM

32. We also support the claim for constitutional damages to vindicate our human rights which have been deeply violated by the suppression of our cases. Since the policing and justice authorities have proven themselves incapable or unwilling to pursue justice, we will use such funds to pursue truth and justice ourselves. We will also be able to properly commemorate the memory of our loved ones.

STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE

The Deponent has acknowledged that he knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was signed and sworn to or solemnly affirmed before me at JHB Central on this the 24 day of 10 2024.

SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE
CLIENT SERVICE CENTRE
2024 -10- 24
JOHANNESBURG CENTRAL
SUID-AFRIKAANSE POLISIEDIENS

7248128S
Cst Madebe

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

Full Names: Mbongiseni Madebe

Business Address: 1 Commissioner Street

Designation: JHB Central

NTSM

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

CASE NO: _____

In the matter between:

LUKHANYO BRUCE MATTHEWS CALATA	1st Applicant
ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA	2nd Applicant
BONAKELE JACOBS	3rd Applicant
FATIEMA HARON-MASOET	4th Applicant
TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE	5th Applicant
KARL ANDREW WEBER	6th Applicant
KIM TURNER	7th Applicant
LYNDENE PAGE	8th Applicant
MBUSO KHOZA	9th Applicant
NEVILLE BELING	10th Applicant
NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI	11th Applicant
SARAH BIBI LALL	12th Applicant
SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE	13th Applicant
SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO	14th Applicant

CERTIFIED A TRUE COPY
OF THE ORIGINAL

TAYLA ILSLEY
BA Law (UP) – LLB (UP)
Commissioner of Oaths
Ex Officio / Practising Attorney R.S.A
THE LEONARDO
75 Maude Street, Office Level 12,
Sandown, SANDTON, 2196
(011) 784-3310
Mobile: +27 (0) 72 839 9229
Email: tayla@lanlevitt.co.za

18/01/2025

TK ASM

STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE	15th Applicant
THULI KUBHEKA	16th Applicant
HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO	17th Applicant
TSHIDISO MOTASI	18th Applicant
NOMALI RITA GALELA	19th Applicant
PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE	20th Applicant
MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI	21st Applicant
FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS	22nd Applicant

and

GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	1st Respondent
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	2nd Respondent
MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT	3rd Respondent
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	4th Respondent
MINISTER OF POLICE	5th Respondent
NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE	6th Respondent
SOUTH AFRICAN HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION	7th Respondent

T.K ASM

SUPPORTING AFFIDAVIT – THULI KUBHEKA

I, the undersigned,

THULI KUBHEKA

do hereby make oath and state as follows:

Introduction

1. I am an adult woman, resident in KwaZulu-Natal. I am the only remaining child of Ntombikayise Kubheka ("Ntombi" or my "mother").

2. I am the 16th Applicant in this application.

3. Unless the context indicates otherwise, the facts contained in this affidavit are within my personal knowledge and are, to the best of my belief, both true and correct.

4. I depose to this affidavit on behalf of myself and generally on behalf of my family.

Ntombikayise Kubheka

5. My mother was born and raised in KwaMashu, Durban, KwaZulu Natal. She was politically active and believed greatly in the vision of democracy that compelled many to take up the fight against the apartheid regime. Ntombi was an operative for the African National Congress' armed wing, uMkhonto weSizwe.

6. Ntombi's activities aroused the suspicions of the Security Branch ("SB") of the then South African Police. In particular, the notorious Vlakplaas unit of the SB

T K ASM

(also known as "C1") sought to obtain information on Ntombi's activities involving MK operatives in and outside of South Africa.

7. Together with the Natal branch of the SB, askaris from Vlakplaas, were instructed to infiltrate Ntombi's networks in an effort to get her to divulge information regarding the liberation movement.

8. Ntombi's network was infiltrated by Xola Frank Mbane ("Mbane"), Nicholas Dube ("Dube") and Spyker Myeza. They were askaris based at Vlakplaas under the command of the infamous Eugene De Kock.

9. TRC documents record that Ntombi sought the assistance of the askaris to assist Musawakhe 'Sbho' Phewa ("Phewa") with the collection of firearms from Transkei. Unbeknownst to Ntombi, her plea for assistance would lead Phewa to his death.

10. Ntombi never saw nor heard back from Phewa. The TRC records show that Ntombi grew increasingly suspicious of Mbane and Dube. This presented a problem for the SB and they sought to murder Ntombi.

11. During May 1987 Ntombi was abducted. The operation was handled by Mbane operating with Dube, and other SB operatives who included Hentie Botha ("Botha"), Laurie Wasserman ("Wasserman"), Cassie van der Westhuizen ("Van der Westhuizen"), Joe Coetzee, Warrant Officer Basson, Salmon du Preez ("Du Preez"), Roelof Baker and Andy Taylor ("Taylor").

T. K
ASM

The TRC

12. At the TRC, there were differing accounts as to what exactly happened after Ntombi was abducted. It appeared that after Ntombi was abducted at Battery Beach in Durban, and she was driven to an abandoned shooting range in Winkelspruit, on the South Coast.

13. At Winkelspruit, Ntombi was handed over to Taylor who then "interrogated" her along with his colleagues. I say "interrogated," because that is what is noted in the TRC records. It is, however, likely that Ntombi was tortured by Taylor and his colleagues for soon thereafter, she allegedly passed from an apparent heart attack.

14. In the TRC records, it is alleged that Du Preez and Wasserman were instructed to dump Ntombi's body in an area close to KwaMashu where she would be easily identified by passersby.

15. Ntombi's body was later buried in a paupers' grave for it was never identified. The TRC investigation unit exhumed Ntombi's remains, and forensic analysis revealed that the remains were indeed those of Ntombi.

16. Ntombi's skull was positively identified. In a twist from what was claimed by the SB, it was discovered that Ntombi's skull had a bullet wound. She had been fatally shot.

17. Ultimately, Botha, Du Preez, Wasserman and Van der Westhuizen were denied amnesty by the TRC.

T. R

Post the TRC

18. It was the promise of the TRC that those who were refused amnesty would be referred for prosecution. Indeed, my mother's case and hundreds of other cases were referred by the TRC to National Prosecuting Authority ("NPA"). As such, it was our collective hope that the NPA would undertake this task without delay.

19. What followed the TRC, however, was a deafening silence and an all-consuming lethargy on the part of the NPA. There was no movement in the matter until 24 October 2022 when the NPA announced that it would open an inquest into the death of Ntombi. In November 2023 the Director of Public Prosecutions in KwaZulu-Natal decided to prosecute 5 persons in relation to the murder of my mother. As of August 2024, they had still not been formally indicted.

20. The inquest or prosecution of those perpetrators who are still alive is yet to commence. It has now been 37 years since Ntombi was brutally murdered and discarded like an animal.

Conclusion

21. I support the relief sought in this application.

22. I demand an independent and open commission of inquiry to get to the bottom of why my mother's case was suppressed post the TRC. I want to know why those behind the suppression saw fit to denigrate the memory of my mother who gave her life for South Africa's democracy.

23. I want to know why they treated the families who lost loved ones as second-class citizens not worthy of respect under the Constitution.

T. K ASM.

24. I also support the call for constitutional damages to be paid to vindicate our deeply violated rights and, at long last, to properly commemorate my mother and her contribution to our freedom. We also need these damages to fight for truth, justice and closure because we do not trust the state to do so. The post-apartheid state has betrayed us.

TPubheka

THULI KUBHEKA

The Deponent has acknowledged that she knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was signed and sworn to or solemnly affirmed before me at Johannesburg on this the 11th day of OCT 2024.

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

Full Names: Ahmed Shabir Mayet

Business Address:

Designation:

A. S. MAYET
Commissioner of Oaths
Practising Attorney
401 Elizabeth House
18 Pritchard Street
Johannesburg
11/10/2024

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

CASE NO: _____

In the matter between:

LUKHANYO BRUCE MATTHEWS CALATA	1st Applicant
ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA	2nd Applicant
BONAKELE JACOBS	3rd Applicant
FATIEMA HARON-MASOET	4th Applicant
TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE	5th Applicant
KARL ANDREW WEBER	6th Applicant
KIM TURNER	7th Applicant
LYNDENE PAGE	8th Applicant
MBUSO KHOZA	9th Applicant
NEVILLE BELING	10th Applicant
NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI	11th Applicant
SARAH BIBI LALL	12th Applicant
SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE	13th Applicant
SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO	14th Applicant

CERTIFIED A TRUE COPY OF THE ORIGINAL

TAYLA ILSLEY
BA Law (UP) – LLB (UP)
Commissioner of Oaths
Ex Officio / Practising Attorney R.S.A
THE LEONARDO
75 Maude Street, Office Level 12,
Sandown, SANDTON, 2196
(011) 784-3310
Mobile: +27 (0) 72 839 9229
Email: tayla@ianlevitt.co.za

18/01/2025

x2

STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE	15th Applicant
THULI KUBHEKA	16th Applicant
HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO	17th Applicant
TSHIDISO MOTASI	18th Applicant
NOMALI RITA GALELA	19th Applicant
PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE	20th Applicant
MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI	21st Applicant
MOGAPI SOLOMON TLHAPI	22nd Applicant
FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS	23rd Applicant

and

GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	1st Respondent
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	2nd Respondent
MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT	3rd Respondent
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	4th Respondent
MINISTER OF POLICE	5th Respondent
NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE	6th Respondent

x2

SUPPORTING AFFIDAVIT – HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO

I, the undersigned,

HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO

do hereby make oath and state as follows:

Introduction

1. I am a pensioner and the sister of Ignatius 'Iggy' Mthebule. I am also the 17th Applicant in this application.

2. The facts deposed to in this affidavit are within my knowledge, and unless otherwise stated or indicated by the context, are true and correct to the best of my knowledge. Where I make legal submissions, I do so on the advice of my legal representatives, which advice I believe to be correct.

3. I also depose to this affidavit on behalf of my family.

Ignatius Mthebule

4. As I will explain in this affidavit, I do not know whether my brother is dead or alive; and if he is dead, where his remains are.

5. Ignatius Mthebule, or Iggy as he was known and as I will refer to him in this affidavit, was born and primarily grew up in Tzaneen in Limpopo where he did both his primary and secondary schooling.

6. In the year 1974, Iggy enrolled at the University of the North, as it then was, where he read for a Bachelor of Commerce degree. The University of the North was at that time one of few higher education institutions established exclusively for Black people.

HEH

x2

7. It was during his time at the University of the North that Iggy became a student activist and one of the founding members of the Azanian Students Organisation ("AZASO"), which I understand was aligned to the African National Congress ("ANC"). In 1977, Iggy became formally involved in the underground operations of the ANC. He was eventually expelled from the university, whereafter he relocated to Johannesburg to live with me in or around 1979. At the time, Iggy worked full time for AZASO, and he had interactions with comrades who were exiled in Swaziland and Mozambique.

8. In June 1981 Iggy left for Mozambique. He was supposed to return from this trip, but he did not realise that within his AZASO office someone was passing information about his activities to a journalist, Willie Bokala. Shortly after Iggy's departure, the Sowetan newspaper published an article which revealed that Iggy had skipped the country. We learned from the Sowetan Newspaper that Iggy had gone into exile.

9. The public report about Iggy's departure from the country prevented him from returning. At the time, we did not know exactly where he was, until we received two unaddressed letters indicating that he was still alive. Through the ANC, we were able to clandestinely meet with Iggy and became privy to his activities. He underwent military training for the ANC and its armed wing, uMkhonto weSizwe ("MK") in Swaziland, Mozambique and Czechoslovakia.

10. Despite being prevented from returning to South Africa, Iggy continued to secretly enter and exit South Africa. Everything pertaining to his movements and whereabouts was on a need-to-know basis. As such, we never questioned his whereabouts or activities.

HBZ
X2

11. We understand that around 1983, under the instructions of the ANC, Iggy established an underground unit known as the "Transvaal Urban Unit," code named the "Grace Unit," which was based in the East Rand of the then Transvaal (the "Unit"). The Unit consisted of about 15 members who were mostly trainees of the MK. Some surviving members of the Unit under Iggy's command are Peter Mangwane, JZ Cheela, Totsie Busisiwe Memela Khambula (current CEO of the South African Social Security Agency), retired South African National Defence Force Major General Ntshiki Memela-Motumi and current ANC and South African Deputy President Paul Mashatile.

12. The Unit reported to Sue Rabkin ("Rabkin"), a member of the ANC Regional Politico-Military Committee ("RPMC"), who in turn reported to former South African President Jacob Zuma ("Zuma") who was then the ANC's chief representative in Mozambique, based in Maputo.

13. Our understanding is that one Joy Harnden ("Harnden"), a former state security branch ("SB") agent under the command of one Alfred Oosthuizen ("Oosthuizen"), established connections with one Sheila Weinberg ("Weinberg"), the daughter of Eli and Violet Weinberg, both of whom were members of the ANC and the South African Communist Party. At the time, Weinberg was an executive member of the Transvaal Rural Action Committee of the Black Sash and she was banned. Oblivious to Harnden's SB connections, Sheila invited Harnden on a visit to see her ailing mother in Mozambique. The

HZ

XZ

SB saw this as an opportunity to infiltrate the ANC in Mozambique because of Harnden's proximity to the then banned ANC.

14. In Mozambique and under the instructions of Zuma, Harnden was introduced by Weinberg as an activist and member of the Black Sash, and was linked to the Unit with the understanding that she will assist the Unit with much needed resources in its operations.

15. Iggy was one of the anti-apartheid activists who Harnden had been introduced to in Mozambique, and about six months later, around 1986, Iggy re-connected with Harnden in Johannesburg.[9] They met a few times, but Iggy failed to turn up for what would be his last pre-arranged meeting with Harnden.

Iggy's disappearance

16. Post the unbanning of the ANC, Iggy did not return along with the other political exiles. He was unaccounted for, and we enquired with the ANC's national, regional and provincial structures to establish details about his whereabouts.

17. In 1991 we secured a meeting with Zuma, Ngoako Ramatlhodi and Rabkin at the ANC's headquarters, then located at Shell House in Johannesburg. It was during this meeting that Zuma informed us of Iggy's interactions with Harnden. He told us that around February 1987, Iggy and Harnden arranged to meet at a bookshop in Hillbrow, Johannesburg. Iggy never arrived for the meeting and was not seen again.

18. In his book Betrayal: The Secret Lives of Apartheid Spies, author Johnathan Ancer writes that Harnden, who was in fact a Lieutenant in the SB and worked as a spy for the SB, revealed to him that she had enquired with her handler,

x2

Oosthuizen, about Iggy's whereabouts after his failure to arrive for their meeting in Hillbrow. Oosthuizen told Harnden that she did not "have to worry about him, and that he won't contact [her] again." Harnden understood that the SB had eliminated Iggy.

19. Zuma promised us that the ANC would investigate Iggy's whereabouts, and failing which the whereabouts of his remains. We never heard back from Zuma or the ANC despite following up again after the democratic elections in 1994.

20. In 1991, my brother Samuel Mthebule ("Samuel") decided to break the news about Iggy's disappearance and probable death to our mother. We held a memorialisation ceremony with the ANC in February 1992 to celebrate Iggy's life.

21. In 1994, and on the advice of the then Minister of Safety and Security, Sydney Mufamadi, we reported Iggy's disappearance at the Protea Police Station in Soweto and a missing person's case was opened. Nothing has come of that investigation.

The Truth and Reconciliation Commission

22. On 10 April 1997 Samuel presented a statement regarding Iggy's disappearance to the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's ("TRC") Human Rights Violations Committee. No one applied for amnesty for Iggy's disappearance.

23. Samuel told the Committee about Iggy's background, his role in the struggle for freedom, the facts that we had uncovered about his disappearance and our efforts to engage with various persons in the ANC government for assistance in locating Iggy's whereabouts.

x2

24. Samuel also lamented the family's pain of having to live on without having even had sight of Iggy's remains, or the location of his remains (assuming his demise). At the time of the hearings, our mother was over the age of 80. She has since passed without having had any closure on the whereabouts of her son. Samuel requested the Committee to make further investigations to at least locate Iggy's remains and bring them home to us to finally close that chapter of our lives.

25. The ANC also made brief reference to Iggy in its submission to the TRC, however, the submission (which was only one paragraph) did not contain any significant detail about Iggy's disappearance.

26. The TRC recognised Iggy as a victim of gross human rights violations. I received reparations in the amount of R30 000.00 which was divided equally between Iggy's two minor children at the time.

Post-TRC

27. It was certainly our expectation that Iggy's case would have been investigated when the TRC completed its work in 1998. This was, however, not to be the case and to date Iggy's case has not been concluded and his remains have not been found.

28. Around 2020, my nephew, Danny Mtebule, started his own investigation into Iggy's disappearance. He wrote to the Missing Person's Task Team ("MPTT") of the National Prosecuting Authority ("NPA") to enquire whether they were investigating Iggy's case but did not receive substantive feedback. Danny's confirmatory affidavit accompanies this affidavit.

29. In 2021, Danny reached out to the Foundation for Human Rights to request assistance from the Unfinished Business of the TRC programme. Pro bono lawyers were appointed to assist us in taking the Iggy's case forward. Since then, the MPTT collected DNA samples from Iggy's family members, including myself. We were hopeful at the time that results would be forthcoming, but the progress has been extremely slow.

30. Iggy's matter is presently being investigated by the Directorate for Priority Crime Investigation ("DPCI") and the NPA with the view to open an inquest. We are told that the investigation reached a dead end because the members of the ANC with knowledge of Iggy's disappearance are not willing to cooperate.

Conclusion

31. The lack of progress in Iggy's matter, and the ANC's apparent refusal to provide information about Iggy's disappearance has left us with feelings of frustration, disappointment, anger, betrayal and defeat. The government and the authorities responsible for the investigation and prosecution of TRC case have not kept true to the promise of the TRC. Not only was Iggy violated by the apartheid regime, but we too have been violated by our democratic government.

32. For the reasons detailed above, I support the relief claimed in this application. Constitutional damages will help us to undertake further investigations so as to establish whether Iggy is indeed deceased; and if so, how he died, who was responsible for his death, and where his remains are. I also support the relief requiring an independent and public commission of inquiry to be appointed to determine the truth surrounding the political suppression of the TRC cases.

X2

HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO

The Deponent has acknowledged that she knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was signed and sworn to or solemnly affirmed before me at Mondeor on this the 16 day of JANUARY 2025.

724806-3

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE
SUPPLY CHAIN MANAGEMENT
2025 -01- 16
MONDEOR SAPS
SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE

Full Names: Xolani
Business Address: 263 Royal Park dr
Designation: constable

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

CASE NO: _____

In the matter between:

LUKHANYO BRUCE MATTHEWS CALATA	1st Applicant
ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA	2nd Applicant
BONAKELE JACOBS	3rd Applicant
FATIEMA HARON-MASOET	4th Applicant
TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE	5th Applicant
KARL ANDREW WEBER	6th Applicant
KIM TURNER	7th Applicant
LYNDENE PAGE	8th Applicant
MBUSO KHOZA	9th Applicant
NEVILLE BELING	10th Applicant
NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI	11th Applicant
SARAH BIBI LALL	12th Applicant
SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE	13th Applicant
SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO	14th Applicant

STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE	15th Applicant
THULI KUBHEKA	16th Applicant
HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO	17th Applicant
TSHIDISO MOTASI	18th Applicant
NOMALI RITA GALELA	19th Applicant
PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE	20th Applicant
MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI	21st Applicant
MOGAPI SOLOMON TLHAPI	22nd Applicant
FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS	23rd Applicant

and

GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	1st Respondent
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	2nd Respondent
MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT	3rd Respondent
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	4th Respondent
MINISTER OF POLICE	5th Respondent
NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE	6th Respondent

CONFIRMATORY AFFIDAVIT – DANNY DANIEL MTEBULE

I, the undersigned,

DANNY DANIEL MTEBULE

do hereby make oath and state as follows:

1. I am an adult man, and I am the nephew of Ignatius 'Iggy' Mthebule and the seventeenth (17th) applicant in this matter.

2. The facts contained in this affidavit are to the best of my belief both true and correct. They fall within my personal knowledge or are apparent from documentation under my control, except where the context indicates otherwise.

3. I have read the seventeenth (17th) applicant's supporting affidavit, and I associate myself therewith and confirm the contents thereof insofar as they relate to me.

4. For the reasons set out in the supporting affidavit of the seventeenth (17th) applicant and the other papers filed herein, I support the relief sought in the notice of motion.

DANNY DANIEL MTEBULE

The Deponent has acknowledged that he knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was signed and sworn to or solemnly affirmed before me at PRETORIA on this the 16th day of JANUARY 2025.

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS
HLANGANANI MUSHWANA
COMMISSIONER OF OATHS
PRACTISING ATTORNEY
MUSHWANA INCORPORATED RSA
CHURCH SQUARE, 23 BUREAU LANE
SUITE 220 CENTENARY BLD PRETORIA
TEL: (012) 323 1898 FAX: (012) 326 6165

Full Names:

Business Address:

Designation:

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

CASE NO: _____

In the matter between:

LUKHANYO BRUCE MATTHEWS CALATA	1st Applicant
ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA	2nd Applicant
BONAKELE JACOBS	3rd Applicant
FATIEMA HARON-MASOET	4th Applicant
TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE	5th Applicant
KARL ANDREW WEBER	6th Applicant
KIM TURNER	7th Applicant
LYNDENE PAGE	8th Applicant
MBUSO KHOZA	9th Applicant
NEVILLE BELING	10th Applicant
NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI	11th Applicant
SARAH BIBI LALL	12th Applicant
SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE	13th Applicant
SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO	14th Applicant

CERTIFIED A TRUE COPY
OF THE ORIGINAL

TAYLA ILSLEY
BA Law (UP) - LLB (UP)
Commissioner of Oaths
Ex Officio / Practising Attorney R.S.A
THE LEONARDO
75 Maude Street, Office Level 12,
Sandown, SANDTON, 2196
(011) 784-3310
Mobile: +27 (0) 72 839 9229
Email: tayla@ianlevitt.co.za

18/01/2025

T.M ASM

STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE	15th Applicant
THULI KUBHEKA	16th Applicant
HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO	17th Applicant
TSHIDISO MOTASI	18th Applicant
NOMALI RITA GALELA	19th Applicant
PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE	20th Applicant
MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI	21st Applicant
FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS	22nd Applicant

and

GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	1st Respondent
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	2nd Respondent
MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT	3rd Respondent
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	4th Respondent
MINISTER OF POLICE	5th Respondent
NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE	6th Respondent
SOUTH AFRICAN HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION	7th Respondent

T.M ASM

SUPPORTING AFFIDAVIT – THE FAMILY OF IRENE AND RICHARD MOTASI

I, the undersigned,

TSHIDISO MOTASI

do hereby make oath and state as follows:

Introduction

1. I am an adult male, resident in Jabulani, Soweto, Gauteng. I am the only child of Tumelo Richard Motasi and Irene Busisiwe Motasi ("my Parents").

2. I am the 18th Applicant in this application.

3. The facts deposed to in this affidavit are within my knowledge, unless otherwise stated or indicated by the context, and to the best of my knowledge are both true and correct.

4. I depose to this affidavit on behalf of my family and, in particular, my grandmother, Sibongile Gloria Hlabangane, the mother of the late Irene Motasi.

5. My parents were shot dead in my presence at our home in Hammanskraal on 1 December 1987 by the Security Branch (SB) of the erstwhile South African Police (the "SAP"). I was five years old at the time.

Irene and Richard Motasi

6. My father, Richard, was a police officer and my mother, Irene, was a nurse. They were both stationed in Hammanskraal, Pretoria, and they lived there. From what we know, my parents were not involved in the political struggle against apartheid, despite the accusation that my parents were communicating with the ANC in Zimbabwe. As far as we know, my parents were living quite a normal life, and they had no political affiliations.

T.M ASM

7. My mother was Zimbabwean by descent and had family ties in Zimbabwe. As such, the family travelled between South Africa and Zimbabwe for familial reasons not political reasons.

8. My father was based at the Police College at Hammanskraal. During August 1986 my father had been assaulted by his superior, Colonel Van Zyl, leaving him with a burst eardrum and other injuries. With the assistance of Savage Jooste & Adams, my father instituted a personal injury claim against Constable Vreugdenburg, Sergeant Raath and Warrant Officer Le Grange, which triggered a slew of abuse and torment at his workplace, and ultimately led to his suspension from the SAP. Unsuccessful efforts were made to pressure my father to withdraw the damages claim. It is likely that my father's refusal to drop the claim led to his murder.

9. According to the TRC Report, around this time the Northern Transvaal Security Branch ("SB") compiled a file on my father which falsely claimed that he was an ANC operative who was handing over sensitive information over to the ANC in Zimbabwe and Johannesburg. According to evidence led at the TRC, Brigadier Jacob Gabrielle Stemmet – the Divisional Commissioner of the Northern Transvaal Division – General Marthinus Dawid Ras, Brigadier Jack Cronje and Colonel Koos Kloppers decided that my father should be eliminated as he posed a threat to national security. This order was given to Captain Philipus Johannes Corenelius Loots, Captain Jacque Hechter and Warrant Officer Paul van Vuuren.

T.A.
ASM

10. According to the Amnesty Committee decision (AM5462/97), on the morning of 1 December 1987, Loots, Hechter and Van Vuuren met to plan the murder. They put together a team, which included the notorious askari from Vlakplaas, Joe Mamasela.

11. On the evening of 1 December 1987, our house was invaded, and my parents were shot and killed. As I was an infant at the time, and given the massive trauma I suffered, I am not able to recall the events of that tragic night.

12. My grandmother testified at the TRC that while she was in mourning, a police officer visited her demanding my father's police uniform. The manner in which my grandmother was approached caused her much hurt and torment. She was threatened with a gun, and she was intimidated. The week leading up to the burial of a loved one is a deeply solemn time in our culture. It is a time of ritual, remembrance and familial comfort. By bringing in an element of violence into that space, by intimidating my grandmother, and by bringing weapons, the police officers showed utter contempt for my grandmother and our family.

The TRC

13. Loots, Hechter, General Ras and Brigadier Cronje applied for amnesty. Ras and Loots were granted amnesty for both murders.

14. Joe Mamasela, Colonel Kloppers, Commissioner Stemmet and Mr Danny Selahle, who drove the perpetrators to our home, did not apply for amnesty.

T.M ASM

Hechter and Van Vuuren were granted amnesty for my father's murder, but not my mother's murder.

15. Following the TRC, we received reparations of about R30,000.00 (thirty thousand Rands), and my children received bursaries from the Presidential Fund, but this has not done little to heal the emotional wounds we bear as a family.

Post the TRC

16. It was our expectation that after the TRC, prosecutions would follow. We expected, in particular, that Commissioner Stemmet, Joe Mamasela, Colonel Kloppers and Danny Selahle would be prosecuted as they did not apply for amnesty. We expected Hechter and Van Vuuren to be prosecuted for the murder of my mother, as they were denied amnesty for her killing.

17. The political suppression of the cases has ensured that most of the suspects were allowed to go to their graves without facing justice. As far as we are aware, only Stemmet, Ras, Loots, Kloppers and Mamasela remain alive today. The authorities could have taken legal steps against Stemmet, Kloppers and Mamasela, as they did not apply for amnesty, but they have failed or declined to do so.

18. Instead, what followed was a long period of silence. It was only in 2018 that the Hawks approached us and informed us that they were now investigating the matter. This followed prompting by the Foundation Human Rights in early 2018, which urged the NPA and DPCI to investigate approximately 20 emblematic cases from our past, which included the murder of my parents. Unfortunately, nothing much has happened pursuant to this investigation, which is apparently ongoing. The investigation officers have been changed repeatedly.

T.M
ASM

19. It has been nearly 37 years since my parents were murdered. The inexcusable delay in the investigation and prosecution of this matter has been deeply hurtful for us. My grandmother who is now 92 years old has waited all these years for justice and truth. She has been denied closure, even in the twilight of her life. I too have also been deeply emotionally scarred by the murder of my parents. The subsequent failure to hold those responsible accountable has added insult to injury and exacerbated our trauma.

20. Living without parents, over all these years, has been extremely painful for me. My mental health has substantially deteriorated and I have even received treatment for depression and anxiety.

21. We now feel betrayed by the government for deliberately blocking justice that was due to us. The conduct of the post-apartheid state has been disgraceful and unforgiveable. They have treated the victims of apartheid-era crimes with contempt and disdain. There must be a reckoning.

Conclusion

22. We support the relief sought in this application. An independent and open commission of inquiry is necessary to get to the bottom of the political interference. We need answers and we have a right to know who was behind the mass denial of justice to us. We also support the claim for constitutional damages to address the deep violation of our constitutional rights to human dignity, equality and the rule of law.

T.M ASM

TSHIDISO MOTASI

The Deponent has acknowledged that he knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was signed and sworn to or solemnly affirmed before me at Johannesburg on this the 11th day of OCT 2024.

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

Full Names: Ahmed Shabir Mayet

Business Address:

Designation:

A. S. MAYET
Commissioner of Oaths
Practising Attorney
401 Elizabeth House
18 Pritchard Street
Johannesburg
11/10/2024

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

CASE NO: _____

In the matter between:

LUKHANYO BRUCE MATTHEWS CALATA	1st Applicant
ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA	2nd Applicant
BONAKELE JACOBS	3rd Applicant
FATIEMA HARON-MASOET	4th Applicant
TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE	5th Applicant
KARL ANDREW WEBER	6th Applicant
KIM TURNER	7th Applicant
LYNDENE PAGE	8th Applicant
MBUSO KHOZA	9th Applicant
NEVILLE BELING	10th Applicant
NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI	11th Applicant
SARAH BIBI LALL	12th Applicant
SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE	13th Applicant
SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO	14th Applicant

CERTIFIED A TRUE COPY OF THE ORIGINAL

TAYLA ILSLEY
BA Law (UP) – LLB (UP)
Commissioner of Oaths
Ex Officio / Practising Attorney R.S.A
THE LEONARDO
75 Maude Street, Office Level 12,
Sandown, SANDTON, 2196
(011) 784-3310
Mobile: +27 (0) 72 839 9229
Email: tayla@ianlevitt.co.za

18/01/2025

STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE	15th Applicant
THULI KUBHEKA	16th Applicant
HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO	17th Applicant
TSHIDISO MOTASI	18th Applicant
NOMALI RITA GALELA	19th Applicant
PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE	20th Applicant
MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI	21st Applicant
MOGAPI SOLOMON TLHAPI	22nd Applicant
FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS	23rd Applicant

and

GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	1st Respondent
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	2nd Respondent
MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT	3rd Respondent
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	4th Respondent
MINISTER OF POLICE	5th Respondent
NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE	6th Respondent

SUPPORTING AFFIDAVIT – NOMALI RITA GALELA

I, the undersigned,

NOMALI RITA GALELA

do hereby make oath and state as follows:

Introduction

1. I am an adult female pensioner resident in Gqeberha in the Eastern Cape. I am the wife of the late Twasile Champion Galela ("Champion" or "my husband").

2. I am the 19th Applicant in this application.

3. The facts contained in this affidavit are within my knowledge, and unless otherwise stated or indicated by the context, are true and correct to the best of my knowledge.

4. I depose to this affidavit on behalf of my family, and on behalf and with the support of the families of the late Sipho Hashe ("Sipho") and Qaqawuli Godolozi ("Qaqawuli"). The supporting affidavits of the Hashe family and the Godolozi family are attached hereto, marked as "NRG1" and "NRG2". The deponents to NRG1 and NRG2 are Phumeza Mandisa Hashe and Mkhontowesizwe Godolozi, the 20th and 21st Applicants in this application.

5. Champion, Sipho and Qaqawuli were members of the Port Elizabeth Black Civic Organisation ("PEBCO"), an affiliate body of the then United Democratic Front ("UDF") which was aligned to the African National Congress ("ANC"). They were kidnapped by the Port Elizabeth Security Branch ("the PE SB") of the former apartheid state on 8 May 1985. They were murdered a day or two after their kidnapping and their bodies were burnt and disposed. Champion, Sipho and Qaqawuli became widely known as the PEBCO 3.

Champion Galela

6. Champion was born on 24 October 1947 in Korsten, Port Elizabeth. His family relocated to KwaZakhele, a township in Port Elizabeth, in 1957 where he continued his education at Ebhongweni Primary School and Zikweni Primary School before he completed his schooling at KwaZakhele High School.

7. Champion and I married in 1975. Two sons, Tebogo Galela and Lehlohonolo Galela were born of our marriage. My children were two and five years of age when Champion disappeared in 1985.

8. During the late 1970s, Champion worked as a salesperson at Town Talk Furniture in Port Elizabeth. He was also a passionate photographer who took photographs at social events, and a sports fanatic who especially loved martial arts (he had a black belt in karate).

9. Champion was active in the struggle against the apartheid regime. Whilst employed at Town Talk Furniture, he was a member of the General Workers Union of South Africa. In 1894, he was co-opted to the PEBCO. He became the Organising Secretary under Qaqawuli Godolozi, the President of PEBCO since 1980, and he also worked closely with Sipho Hashe, the fourth General Secretary of the PEBCO. The PEBCO 3 played a prominent role in organising and coordinating resistance activities in the Port Elizabeth area such as consumer and bus boycotts, stay aways and protest marches. These activities were so effective that they forced the Port Elizabeth Chamber of Commerce to negotiate with the PEBCO leadership. Their demands included better housing and affordable rent for black residents of Port Elizabeth, better living conditions, better working conditions and wages, transport, education, schools, medical care and the abolishment of the bucket system. Some describe that the activities of PEBCO rendered the Eastern Cape in general and particularly Port Elizabeth ungovernable for the apartheid state.

10. The activities of PEBCO placed Champion on the radar of the PE SB. He was subject to constant harassment by the security forces, he was arrested, detained on several occasions and our family home was constantly raided.

The kidnapping and murders of the PEBCO 3

11. Some days before the murders, Sipho made telephone contact with Tozamile Botha, a co-founder and former member of the PEBCO who was exiled in Lusaka, Zambia. Sipho requested Botha to organise funding for the PEBCO, and Botha in return indicated that he would ascertain the possibility of obtaining funding from the British Embassy. The conversation between Sipho and Botha was intercepted by Colonel Gideon Nieuwoudt ("Nieuwoudt"), a notorious member of the PE SB who was monitoring Sipho's movements and activities.

12. On 8 May 1985, the PE SB lured the PEBCO 3 to the then Hendrik Verwoerd Airport in Port Elizabeth under the impression that they were to meet an official from the British Embassy who would give them funding for their political activities. When the PEBCO 3 arrived at the airport, they were swiftly kidnapped by the PE SB and a Security Branch unit from Vlakplaas that was deployed to the Eastern Cape. The members of the PE SB unit who participated in the operation to kidnap the PEBCO 3 were Nieuwoudt, Captain Johannes Martin 'Sakkie' Van Zyl ("Van Zyl"), Sergeant Gerhardus Jacobus Lotz ("Lotz"), Colonel Hermanus Barend Du Plessis ("Du Plessis"), and Colonel Harold Snyman ("Snyman"). The Vlakplaas unit was deployed by Colonel Jan Hattingh 'Jack' Cronje ("Cronje") and consisted of Colonel Roelof Jacobus Venter ("Venter"), Warrant Officer Gerhardus Cornelius Beeslaar ("Beeslaar"), Sergeant Joseph Tshepo 'Joe' Mamasela ("Mamasela"), Warrant Officer Johannes Koole ("Koole"), and Askari Kimani Peter Mogoai ("Mogoai"). The security forces planned to kill the PEBCO 3 to weaken the PEBCO in its mass mobilisation campaigns.

13. The Security Branch transported the PEBCO 3 to the old disused Post Chalmers Police Station near Cradock where they were held. They were interrogated and tortured for extended periods before they were executed after on or about 9 and/ or 10 May 1985. The weapon that was used to execute the PEBCO 3 was Van Zyl's private unlicensed .22 calibre firearm. Van Zyl confessed to the Truth and Reconciliation ("TRC") that he executed Sipho. Champion was executed by Lotz and Qaqawuli by Nieuwoudt.

14. The executions took place after Du Plessis signalled to the Security Branch at Post Chalmers Police Station that "the coast was clear", meaning that the security forces had not been seen by anyone when they kidnapped the PEBCO 3 at the airport the previous day. The bodies of the PEBCO 3 were placed on a pile of wood and burnt with diesel.

15. Weeks after Champion disappeared, I was guarded by the Amabutho detachment who were comrades that had undergone military training. The Amabutho detachment guarded me because my house was under constant threat and harassment from the PE SB. Collaborators of the SB would throw bricks through my windows because they thought that I knew my husband's whereabouts. Unbeknownst to me, my house was also used to store hand grenades. In June 1985, the security police raised my home and found the hand grenades in my roof. I was arrested, detained and interrogated over a period of a couple of days.

16. In 1990 a criminal case of kidnapping and murder in respect of the PEBCO 3 was registered as 'HF Verwoerd Airport CR 17/07 1990'.

The TRC process

17. On 11 November 1997, Nieuwoudt applied to the TRC for amnesty for the kidnapping and murder of the PEBCO 3. He implicated several members from the PE SB and the Vlakplaas unit. Nieuwoudt's amnesty application was followed by the applications of Du Plessis, Snyman, Van Zyl, Lotz, Beeslaar, Mogoai, Koole and Venter.

18. The brief facts surrounding the kidnapping, interrogation, assault, torture and murder of the PEBCO that I have outlined above is based on the information that was revealed during the amnesty hearings. Mamasela also testified about his involvement in the kidnapping and murders of the PEBCO 3, but he did not apply for amnesty.

19. The TRC refused the amnesty applications of Nieuwoudt, Van Zyl, Lotz, Du Plessis, Venter, Beeslaar and Koole. Snyman and Mogoai were the only SB members who were granted amnesty because the TRC found that they made full and frank disclosures about their roles in the kidnapping and murders of the PEBCO 3.

20. The TRC held the promise that those whose crimes were not amnestied would be investigated and prosecuted by the policing and prosecuting authorities of the democratic government ("the TRC cases").

The failed prosecution of Nieuwoudt, Van Zyl, and Koole and the discovery of the remains of the PEBCO 3

21. During March 2003, the Priority Crimes Litigation Unit ("PCLU") was set up within the National Prosecuting Authority ("NPA") to investigate cases that were identified by the TRC and recommended for possible prosecution. The PEBCO 3 case was one of the identified cases.

22. On 11 February 2004, Nieuwoudt, Van Zyl and Koole were charged with the kidnapping and murders of the PEBCO 3. This was the first case that the PCLU brought in respect of perpetrators who had been denied amnesty by the TRC. Shortly after their bail hearings, Nieuwoudt and Van Zyl applied to the High Court to review the decisions of the TRC to refuse them amnesty. Nieuwoudt died in August 2005 before the review application was finalised.

23. The review was delayed for nearly five years because the Department of Justice failed to file answering papers. Eventually, in 2009 the High Court order the Department reconvene an Amnesty Committee to hear Van Zyl's amnesty application. The charges against Nieuwoudt, Van Zyl and Koole were provisionally withdrawn in 2009 because the NPA took the view that the prosecution could not proceed while there was an amnesty application pending.

The Department of Justice never reconvened the Amnesty Committee and the charges against Van Zyl and Koole were never reinstated. Koole is deceased and Van Zyl died in August 2011.

24. Around August 2007, the remains of 5 persons were discovered by the NPA's Missing Persons Task Team at Post Chalmers. The remains were excavated from a shallow fire pit that measured roughly 2m x 3m with a depth of approximately 20cm. On 12 September 2009, the Minister of Justice handed over the remains to our families.

25. Between 2011 and 2019 the PEBCO 3 docket was held by the PCLU at NPA's Head Office, under the control of Adv Chris Macadam. To our knowledge, no further work was done to investigate or prosecute the remainder of those who were refused and/or did not apply to the TRC for amnesty. These officers included Lotz, Du Plessis, Venter, Beeslaar, and Mamasela. Lotz died in March 2016 at the age of 56.

26. In August 2019, the PEBCO 3 families approached the Foundation for Human Rights (FHR) for assistance. In November 2019, the Foundation's investigator, Retired Brigadier Marion, provided the Directorate for Priority Crime Investigation of the South African Police Services ("DPCI") and the NPA with a suggested investigative task list with the intention to reopen the investigation into the kidnapping and murders of the PEBCO 3. We subsequently appointed pro bono attorneys who have been providing considerable support to the DPCI and the NPA.

27. Unfortunately, in the five years that the Foundation and our attorneys have been pressing the DPCI and the NPA to take the PEBCO 3 case forward, very little progress has been made. On 16 May 2023 Du Plessis died. This was some 3 years and 8 months after we had asked the DPCI and the NPA to reopen the PEBCO 3 case.

28. On 1 December 2023 our legal team handed over a detailed 147 page analysis of the evidence to the NPA, which called for criminal charges to be preferred against the last three suspects who remained alive, former Vlakplaas members: Venter (aged 75), Beeslaar (aged 85) and Mamasela (aged 70). Our lawyers implored the NPA to act expeditiously given the advanced ages of the suspects. They asked for a meeting with the NPA to discuss the evidence.

29. The NPA offered to do a 'meet and greet' meeting with the families in early 2024 but said they would not respond to the analysis or talk about the substance of our case. We refused to meet with them if it was just going to be a courtesy call. Our lawyers suggested that they take another 4 weeks to consider the evidence and then meet with us. They did not respond to this proposal. Notwithstanding multiple follow up communications, we were only able to meet with the NPA on 3 December 2024. To the dismay of the families, the prosecutors said they were not ready to respond to the recommendations of our lawyers, even after being in possession of our lawyer's analysis for more than a year. They claimed that their hands had been tied by the NPA head office, which only gave them decision making powers in the case in September 2024.

30. Shortly before this meeting we learned that Venter died of "natural causes" on 28 July 2024. There are now only two surviving suspects, Mamasela and Beeslaar, who will soon be 87 years old. We are bitterly disappointed with the cavalier approach of the NPA to the PEBCO 3 case. We get the impression that they have little or no interest in pursuing justice in this matter. We are left with the unfortunate view that the NPA, through design or negligence, delays cases like the PEBCO 3 to the point where suspects either die or can no longer stand trial.

Conclusion

31. At the conclusion of the TRC, we expected that the policing and prosecuting authorities would imminently investigate and prosecute the heinous crimes that were committed against the PEBCO 3 and many others who died during apartheid.

32. My children and I suffered greatly after Champion died, we relied heavily on the generosity of the church and welfare organisations to survive. The situation was dire, and poverty was at my door. I hoped that the democratic dispensation would ensure that justice would prevail for the PEBCO 3, but this turned out not to be the case. My sons, Tebogo and Lehlohonolo, passed away in 1996 and 2011, adding to the suffering that I endured after my husband's disappearance and death. I am taking care of Lehlohonolo's daughter who is almost in matric.

33. Learning that the TRC cases were deliberately suppressed by officials at the highest level of the democratic government was heartbreaking. We now know that the lives of the PEBCO 3 and many other activists who fought for freedom against the oppressive apartheid state never really mattered to the democratic government. The idea that justice will prevail does not apply to families of victims of apartheid-era crimes.

34. We wholeheartedly support the relief that is sought in this application. The claim for constitutional damages is necessary to vindicate our violated rights, to assist us to celebrate our loved ones and to continue with the quest for justice. We also deserve to know why the TRC cases were deliberately suppressed. The truth must prevail.

NR Galela

NOMALI RITA GALELA

The Deponent has acknowledged that she knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was signed and sworn to or solemnly affirmed before me at KWAZAKHELE SAPS on this the 13 day of 12 / 2024.

Ndabula
7201066

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

Full Names: ZOLILE NDABULA
Business Address: MBILINI ROAD KWAZAKHELE
Designation: CONSTABLE

SUID-AFRIKAANSE POLISIEDIENS
KWAZAKELE
2024 -12- 13

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

CASE NO: _____

In the matter between:

LUKHANYO BRUCE MATTHEWS CALATA	1st Applicant
ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA	2nd Applicant
BONAKELE JACOBS	3rd Applicant
FATIEMA HARON-MASOET	4th Applicant
TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE	5th Applicant
KARL ANDREW WEBER	6th Applicant
KIM TURNER	7th Applicant
LYNDENE PAGE	8th Applicant
MBUSO KHOZA	9th Applicant
NEVILLE BELING	10th Applicant
NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI	11th Applicant
SARAH BIBI LALL	12th Applicant
SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE	13th Applicant
SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO	14th Applicant

CERTIFIED A TRUE COPY
OF THE ORIGINAL

TAYLA ILSLEY
BA Law (UP) - LLB (UP)
Commissioner of Oaths
Ex Officio / Practising Attorney R.S.A
THE LEONARDO
75 Maude Street, Office Level 12,
Sandown, SANDTON, 2196
(011) 764-3310
Mobile: +27 (0) 72 839 9229
Email: tayla@ianlevitt.co.za
18/01/2025

STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE	15th Applicant
THULI KUBHEKA	16th Applicant
HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO	17th Applicant
TSHIDISO MOTASI	18th Applicant
NOMALI RITA GALELA	19th Applicant
PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE	20th Applicant
MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI	21st Applicant
MOGAPI SOLOMON TLHAPI	22nd Applicant
FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS	23rd Applicant

and

GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	1st Respondent
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	2nd Respondent
MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT	3rd Respondent
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	4th Respondent
MINISTER OF POLICE	5th Respondent
NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE	6th Respondent

SUPPORTING AFFIDAVIT – PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE

I, the undersigned,

PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE

do hereby make oath and state as follows:

1. I am an adult female resident in Gqeberha in the Eastern Cape. I am the eldest daughter the late Sipho Samuel Charles Hashe ("Sipho" or "my father"). My father is one of the PEBCO 3.

2. I am the 20th Applicant in this application.

3. The facts contained in this affidavit are within my knowledge, and unless otherwise stated or indicated by the context, are true and correct to the best of my knowledge.

4. I have read the supporting affidavit of Nomali Rita Galela. I confirm the content thereof in so far as it relates to the kidnapping and murders of the PEBCO 3, the Truth and Reconciliation ("TRC") process, the failed prosecution of Gideon Nieuwoudt, Johannes Martin 'Sakkie' Van Zyl, and Johannes Koole, and the discovery of the remains of the PEBCO 3. I will not rehash those facts in this affidavit.

5. I depose to this affidavit on behalf of the Hashe family, in particular my sister Nontuthuzelo Hashe, my brother Malixole Charles and my brother Vusumzi Charles.

6. My father was born in 1934 near Middledrift in the Eastern Cape in a village called Ngcabasa. He left the village during the 1950s to look for greener pastures in Port Elizabeth. My father established himself in a location called Korsten, which was populated by both the Black and the Coloured communities, where he had met my mother Nondyebo (Nothobile) Elizabeth Ningiza. My mother was originally from a village called Hewu which was located near Queenstown. My parents married in 1955.

7. My parents were relocated under the Group Areas Act (the apartheid government's influx control legislation that designated certain geographic areas for use by a single race) to KwaZakhele township where they were allocated a four-roomed house. At that time, my father identified as Samuel Charles to avoid being sent back to Ngcabasa by the apartheid government.

8. My father's involvement in political activities started during the early 1960s. He was a member of the member of the African National Congress ("ANC") and Umkhonto weSizwe ("MK"), the military wing of the ANC. When the ANC was banned in 1961, he operated underground. He was arrested in 1962, charged with sabotage and sentenced to imprisonment on Robben Island where he remained for ten years.

9. In October 1973, my father was released from Robben Island and placed under a banning order for five years. He was restricted to our home in KwaZakhele and prohibited from being in the company of more than two people at a time. Being under house arrest did not deter my father my father from working underground to further the struggle against apartheid. When my father's banning order lapsed, he played a critical role in the formation of PEBCO in 1979. He was the organisation's fourth General Secretary when he was kidnapped and murdered by the Security Branch in May 1985.

10. My father was a considerate person who had a good heart and wanted to support all those who were suffering during apartheid. He was a visionary man who stood for non-racialism and equality for all.

11. My father's disappearance in May 1985 had a devastating effect on my mother. She was totally shattered because this was the second time that she lost her husband (the first was when my father was incarcerated for ten years on Robben Island in 1962). My mother was financially dependent on my father. After his death she had to feed, raise, school, cloth and to provide a roof over the heads of her six children. She was strong woman, but she suffered emotionally and physically.

12. For years my mother struggled to come to terms with my father's murder. She lived hoping that one day he will come home and be reunited with his loved ones. As the years passed by, her hope diminished, and her health started deteriorating drastically. She developed multiple underlying health problems including a heart condition that led to her death on 11 March 2003. She died not knowing what had happened to my father, and without having the opportunity to bury his remains.

13. When the remains of the PEBCO 3 were found in 2007 and handed over to our families in 2009, we expected that the investigation into the murders would progress. We were hopeful that the police officers who were refused amnesty by the TRC would be prosecuted for kidnapping and killing of the PEBCO 3, and that this process would lead to the entire truth behind crimes being revealed.

Unfortunately, SAPS and the NPA did not pursue the case. Justice for the PEBCO 3 remained out of reach. To this day this position remains.

14. Our family is bitter about the treatment we received from the democratic government and the authorities responsible for the investigation and the prosecution of TRC cases. The very same government that my father sacrificed his life for has dismally failed us.

15. The Hashe family supports the relief that is sought in this application. Constitutional damages are necessary to vindicate our rights. The damages will enable us to commemorate the PEBCO 3 and pursue justice. The President must appoint an independent commission of the inquiry to investigate the suppression of TRC cases. We deserve to know who is responsible and why they believed that we do not deserve justice for our loved ones.

PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE

The Deponent has acknowledged that she knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was signed and sworn to or solemnly affirmed before me at KwaZakhele Police station on this the 23rd day of December 2024.

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

SUID-AFRIKAANSE POLISIEDIENS
KWAZAKELE
VISPOL
2024 -12- 23
KWAZAKELE
SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

CASE NO: _____

In the matter between:

LUKHANYO BRUCE MATTHEWS CALATA	1st Applicant
ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA	2nd Applicant
BONAKELE JACOBS	3rd Applicant
FATIEMA HARON-MASOET	4th Applicant
TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE	5th Applicant
KARL ANDREW WEBER	6th Applicant
KIM TURNER	7th Applicant
LYNDENE PAGE	8th Applicant
MBUSO KHOZA	9th Applicant
NEVILLE BELING	10th Applicant
NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI	11th Applicant
SARAH BIBI LALL	12th Applicant
SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE	13th Applicant
SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO	14th Applicant

CERTIFIED A TRUE COPY OF THE ORIGINAL

TAYLA ILSLEY
BA Law (UP) - LLB (UP)
Commissioner of Oaths
ex Officio / Practising Attorney R.S.A
THE LEONARDO
75 Maude Street, Office Level 12,
Sandown, SANDTON, 2196
(011) 784-3310
Mobile: +27 (0) 72 839 9229
Email: tayla@ianlevitt.co.za

18/01/2025

STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE	15th Applicant
THULI KUBHEKA	16th Applicant
HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO	17th Applicant
TSHIDISO MOTASI	18th Applicant
NOMALI RITA GALELA	19th Applicant
PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE	20th Applicant
MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI	21st Applicant
MOGAPI SOLOMON TLHAPI	22nd Applicant
FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS	23rd Applicant

and

GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	1st Respondent
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	2nd Respondent
MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT	3rd Respondent
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	4th Respondent
MINISTER OF POLICE	5th Respondent
NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE	6th Respondent

SUPPORTING AFFIDAVIT – MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI

I, the undersigned,

MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI

do hereby make oath and state as follows:

Introduction

1. I am an adult male resident in Gqeberha in the Eastern Cape. I am the son of the late Qaqawuli Godolozi ("Qaqawuli" or "my father"). My father is one of the PEBCO 3.

2. I am the 21st Applicant in this application.

3. The facts contained in this affidavit are within my knowledge, and unless otherwise stated or indicated by the context, are true and correct to the best of my knowledge. I depose to this affidavit on behalf of the Godolozi family, in particular my mother, Buyelwa Monica Godolozi, and my sister, Nombeko Edith Godolozi.

4. I have read the supporting affidavit of Nomali Rita Galela. I confirm the content thereof in so far as it depicts the facts relating to the kidnapping and murders of the PEBCO 3, the Truth and Reconciliation ("TRC") process, the failed prosecution of Gideon Nieuwoudt, Johannes Martin 'Sakkie' Van Zyl, and Johannes Koole, and the discovery of the remains of the PEBCO 3. For the sake of brevity, I will not repeat those facts in this affidavit. In this affidavit I pay tribute to my father by elaborating on his role in the struggle for our freedom and I describe the pain and suffering that our family had to endure because of my father's murder and the delay in investigating and prosecuting those security police members who perpetrated the crimes against the PEBCO 3.

M. G .00

Qaqawuli Godolozi

5. My father was born in Durban on the 26 July 1955 to Mbuyiselo Godolozi and Nobubele Jafta. His family relocated to Peddie in the Eastern Cape where he grew up and spent his teenage life. He received his primary education at Hotorn Higher Primary School where he passed his standard six and then proceeded to Healdtown Boarding School where he matriculated.

6. After my father completed his schooling, he relocated to Port Elizabeth and began to work as a clerk at a construction company. He then joined the Port Elizabeth Black Civic Organization (PEBCO). PEBCO was an affiliate of the United Democratic Front (UDF). In 1980 and 1984 he was elected as the President of PEBCO. My father, Sipho Hashe and Champion Galela played a prominent role in organising and coordinating resistance activities such as consumer and bus boycotts, stay aways and protest marches. These activities were so effective that they forced the Port Elizabeth Chamber of Commerce to negotiate with the PEBCO. These activities led to my father's continued harassment by the security police.

7. On 8 May 1985, the PEBCO 3 were kidnapped by the Security Branch at the then Hendrik Verwoerd Airport, in Port Elizabeth. They were taken to Post Chalmers, an abandoned police post near Cradock in the Eastern Cape, where they were severely tortured and murdered. Their bodies were burnt, and their remains were disposed of.

M. G

The effect that my father's murder and the delay to investigate and prosecute had on our lives

8. Our family learned of my father's gruesome murder during the Truth and Reconciliation Commission ("TRC") process. Shortly after my father's murder was disclosed before the TRC, my mother experienced a severe psychiatric disorder which led to her losing her employment. She was later diagnosed with chronic depression, and she takes chronic medication for her mental illness. My mother still suffers from constant psychological episodes and has lost all hope for enjoyment of amenities of life, her social appetite deteriorated and her emotional state is also unstable.

9. Summarily, my sister and I, as well as our children, suffered severe psychological, emotional and financial prejudice as a result of our father's loss. It was only in 2002 that our mother received a social grant which we all lived on. The social grant was insufficient to maintain all my mother's dependents. My sister had no choice but to drop out of school to hustle to maintain herself and to support our family.

10. We are very unhappy with the undue delay and/or failure to by the authorities to timeously investigate and prosecute the perpetrators who were involved in the kidnapping, torture and murder of the PEBCO 3. In addition to the violation and suffering that that the apartheid system caused to our family, we have been deprived of justice and fairness by the democratic state. Our fundamental rights to life and dignity have been violated. We are merely sojourning through the maze of life but without any meaningful living. The Godolozi family still endures the pain occasioned by the loss of our father and the impossibility of justice worsens our lives' misfortunes. We are the victims of unfair and unjust treatment by the government and the policing and prosecuting authorities.

M. G

Conclusion

11. The Godolozi family supports the relief that is sought in this application. Constitutional damages are necessary to vindicate our rights that have been violated by the deliberate suppression of TRC cases. The damages will enable us to celebrate the PEBCO 3 and to continue with our quest for justice. The President must be compelled to appoint an independent commission of the inquiry to establish why and by whom the TRC cases were deliberately suppressed. We deserve to know the truth.

MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI

The Deponent has acknowledged that he knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was signed and sworn to or solemnly affirmed before me at KARIEGA on this the 18TH day of DECEMBER 2024.

SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE
VISPOL
18 DEC 2024
STATION COMMANDER
KARIEGA
SUID-AFRIKAANSE POLISIEDIENS

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

Full Names: SHANTALL DOLLELIS
Business Address: 10 CHURCH STR, CENTRAL, KARIEGA
Designation: SGT. SA POLICE SERVICE

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

CASE NO: _____

In the matter between:

LUKHANYO BRUCE MATTHEWS CALATA	1st Applicant
ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA	2nd Applicant
BONAKELE JACOBS	3rd Applicant
FATIEMA HARON-MASOET	4th Applicant
TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE	5th Applicant
KARL ANDREW WEBER	6th Applicant
KIM TURNER	7th Applicant
LYNDENE PAGE	8th Applicant
MBUSO KHOZA	9th Applicant
NEVILLE BELING	10th Applicant
NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI	11th Applicant
SARAH BIBI LALL	12th Applicant
SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE	13th Applicant
SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO	14th Applicant

CERTIFIED A TRUE COPY OF THE ORIGINAL

TAYLA ILSLEY
BA Law (UP) – LLB (UP)
Commissioner of Oaths
Ex Officio / Practising Attorney R.S.A
THE LEONARDO
75 Maude Street, Office Level 12,
Sandown, SANDTON, 2196
(011) 784-3310
Mobile: +27 (0) 72 839 9229
Email: tayla@lanlevitt.co.za

18/01/2025

STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE	15th Applicant
THULI KUBHEKA	16th Applicant
HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO	17th Applicant
TSHIDISO MOTASI	18th Applicant
NOMALI RITA GALELA	19th Applicant
PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE	20th Applicant
MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI	21st Applicant
MOGAPI SOLOMON TLHAPI	22nd Applicant
FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS	23rd Applicant

and

GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	1st Respondent
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	2nd Respondent
MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT	3rd Respondent
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	4th Respondent
MINISTER OF POLICE	5th Respondent
NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE	6th Respondent

SUPPORTING AFFIDAVIT – MOGAPI SOLOMON TLHAPI

I, the undersigned,

MOGAPI SOLOMON TLHAPI

do hereby make oath and state as follows:

1. I am an adult male resident in Ikageng, Potchefstroom. I am the brother of Nicholas Ramatua 'Boiki' Tlhapi. Boiki forcefully disappeared at the hands of the Security Police in March 1986. He was 26 years old at the time of his disappearance.

2. I am the 22nd Applicant in this application.

3. The facts contained in this affidavit are both true and correct.

4. I depose to this affidavit on behalf of my mother, Thalitha Makgomo Tlhapi and my four siblings Theledi Jacob Tlhapi, Motlagomang Selinah Magau, Raseiso Jacobus Tlhapi and Mathibane Dorothy Tlhapi. Boiki's children, Kamogelo, Oukat, Tshenolo, Tsholofelo and Mathapelo are also recognised in this affidavit.

Boiki Tlhapi

5. Boiki was born to Barileng James Tlhapi and Thalitha Makgomo Tlhapi on 22 January 1960 in Ikageng Township, Potchefstroom. He was the eldest of six children. Boiki was schooled in Nanogeng Primary School, Keagile Higher Primary and Tlokwe Secondary School. He left school when he completed form 3, the equivalent of grade 10.

6. Boiki was a loving, caring and intelligent son and brother who was well known and respected in Ikageng. He cared deeply for his family and his community and wanted to see them free from the oppression of the apartheid regime.

7. We knew that Boiki was an activist, but we never participated in his political involvement. Our father was conscious of the threat that political activism posed to our safety and security, and he tried to shield us from potential harm. Boiki became a member of the ANC Youth League. He was resolute in his fight against the apartheid government. His political involvement placed him on the radar of the security police. He was arrested on several occasions but never charged.

8. On 20 March 1986, Boiki and a number of his friends left Ikageng for Klerksdorp to attend the funeral of various comrades of the Jouberton Youth Congress who were killed by the police during unrest. On their way to Klerksdorp, the kombi that the group was travelling in was stopped at a roadblock by the police. Boiki and several other members of the group were arrested in Jouberton and subsequently detained at the Joubert and Stilfontein Police Stations. Boiki never returned home.

9. Boiki's comrade, George Mangoeyane, who was also arrested on 20 March 1986 but released shortly thereafter, informed our father of Boiki's arrest. George told my father that Boiki was viciously assaulted by the police. He saw Boiki lying motionless on the floor in the passage at the Stilfontein Police Station, bleeding from his mouth and nose.

10. My father investigated Boiki's disappearance with the assistance of my mother's employer, a white man from Potchefstroom who we knew as Mr Strauss. They went to the Stilfontein Police Station to make enquiries about, but it came to nought. My father was told that the police had no record of Boiki being detained at Stilfontein Police Station, however, the police later conceded that Boiki had been arrested on 20 March 1986 but that he was released the following day.

The 1994 inquest

11. In 1993, a former police officer who was stationed at the Stilfontein Police Station, Constable George Mbathu, deposed an affidavit in which he revealed that he had knowledge of Boiki's disappearance. Mbathu stated under oath that Warrant Officer Willem Petrus Viljoen, Sergeant Itumeleng Moses Matiti and Constables Tseladimitlwa, April Tswaedi, Majaja and Tsetsi John Mano had been involved in the arrest, interrogation and torture of Boiki and his friends. He also alleged that Boiki was killed by the police and that his body had been dumped down a mine shaft near Stilfontein. Mbathu later pointed out the infamous James Shaft, which had been abandoned at the time. The James Shaft has since been closed with a large concrete seal.

12. Lawyers for Human Rights, our family's lawyers at the time, accompanied the South African Police and the Independent Board of Inquiry to James Shaft in 1993. The police lowered a camera down the shaft to establish whether there were bodies dumped in the shaft. At the time, the same police officers who were responsible for Boiki's arrest and disappearance were the ones who conducted the investigation at the shaft. The video footage revealed a number of shadows but there was no conclusive proof that Boiki's body had been dumped there.

13. Our lawyers demanded a further investigation and in 1994 an inquest docket was registered (GO 49/94) at the Klerksdorp Magistrates' Court. Despite obtaining several statements from Boiki's friends and the police officers who were stationed at the Stilfontein Police Station on the night of Boiki's arrest, the Inquest Magistrate returned a finding that it could not conclude that Boiki was deceased. It took nearly a year for the Magistrate to deliver the ruling.

The Truth and Reconciliation Commission

14. Our father continued to pursue Boiki's disappearance. On 29 September 1996, my father presented a plea for justice to the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's ("TRC") Human Rights Violations Committee. During my father's testimony, my mother continuously wept and ultimately collapsed and was rushed to hospital as my father related what he had gone through in search of Boiki.

15. None of the police officers who made statements during the inquest applied for amnesty for Boiki's disappearance. On the strength of my father's statement, the Human Rights Violations Committee declared Boiki a victim of gross human rights violations. The Committee found that Viljoen, Makiti, Tseladimitlwa, Tshwaedi, Majaja and Mano assaulted and tortured Boiki. It also found the Jouberton Security Branch, together with the Commissioner of Police, the Head of the Security Branch and the Minister of Law and Order responsible for Boiki's disappearance.

16. Our family, and in particular my father, expected that the police and prosecuting authorities under the democratic government would continue the search for Boiki. My father hoped that an investigation would lead to the arrest of those responsible for Boiki's forceful disappearance and he wished that his son's remains would ultimately be returned to our family so that we could hold a proper burial for Boiki.

The toll on our family

17. My father never stopped pursuing Boiki's disappearance. He dedicated the rest of his life to searching for his missing son and this affected him greatly. He was never really the same again after Boiki disappeared. In some way one could say that a part of our father left us when Boike disappeared.

18. In March 2017, 30 years after Boiki's disappearance, my father, in response to a question from a journalist said:

> "How can I sleep at night knowing my son's body, which was last seen battered and bloodied in some office at a police station, is possibly lying at the bottom of a disused mine shaft for the past 30 years?"

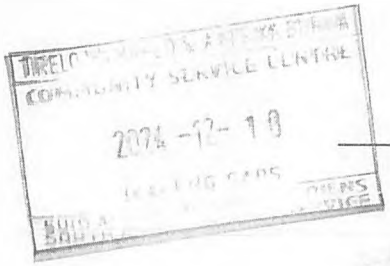
My father carried the pain of Boiki's disappearance with him to his grave when sadly he passed away in September 2020 at the age of 80, without knowing what happened to his son. The City Press article titled "'I must bury my son's bones before I die': Activist's parents plead for closure" in which my father is quoted is attached as annexure "MST1".

19. My mother also suffered severely from Boiki disappearance. She is now 82 years old and struggles with her hearing. The pain and hurt that she suffered when Boiki disappeared 38 years ago is still extremely raw. Her biggest fear is that she will depart this earth without knowing what happened to her son and without giving him a proper burial. This is a pain that no mother deserves to endure, let alone for a continuous period of 38 years.

20. My siblings and I, and Boiki's children, were also affected by his disappearance. We miss our brother dearly and we do not have closure. We were deprived of a life with Boiki, who we believe would have had a bright future. He could have taken care of us, but because of the horrendous acts of the apartheid police and the regime, we were left to fend for ourselves and to take care of Boiki's children.

Conclusion

21. The police are currently investigating Boiki's case with a view to reopen the 1994 inquest into his disappearance. This investigation has been ongoing since November 2022 and has been conducted at snail's pace. Without the assistance of the Foundation for Human Rights and our pro bono lawyers we do not believe that the case would have progressed to this stage. We recently learned that the Minister of Justice is considering a request to re-open the inquest into Boiki's death.



22. The harsh reality for our family, and so many others whose loved ones were killed or disappeared under apartheid, is that the democratic government has failed us over the past three decades. The politicians and government officials who suppressed TRC cases know why they decided to deprive us of truth, justice and closure. This truth has not been forthcoming, and the time has come for it to be told - the government must do what is right. Our rights to human dignity have been deeply violated. We deserve to know why our cases were neglected for decades after the conclusion of the TRC in 1998. The truth must prevail, and justice must be done.

23. I support the relief claimed in this application. Constitutional damages will help us to commemorate Boiki's life and to continue pursuing truth and justice. An independent and public commission of inquiry must be established to investigate the political suppression of the TRC cases.

MOGAPI SOLOMON TLHAPI

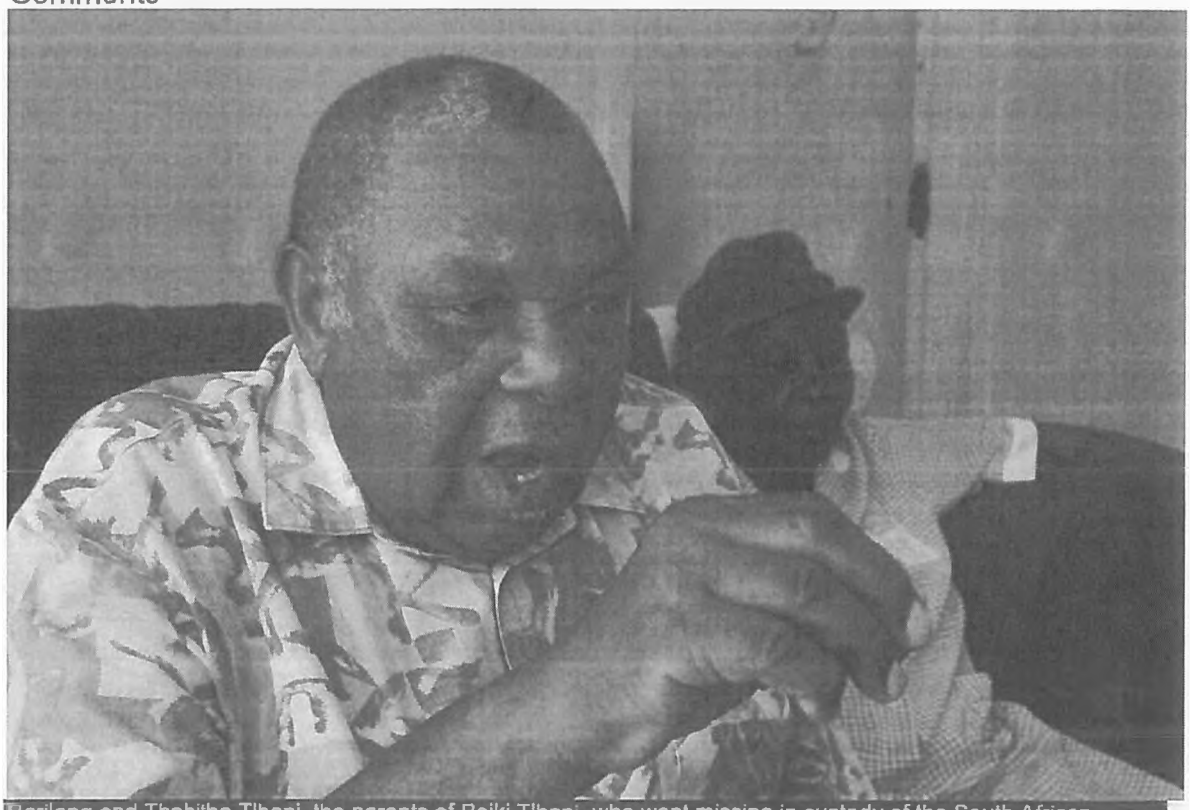
The Deponent has acknowledged that she knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, which was signed and sworn to or solemnly affirmed before me at Klerksdorp on this the 10 day of 12 2024.

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

Full Names: R.U Mayeke
Business Address: 3335 Jotlhole
Designation: Warrant Officer

"MST1"

15 Mar 2017



Share

'I must bury my son's bones before I die': Activist's parents plead for closure

City Press

Poloko Tau

Comments

Barileng and Thabitha Tlhapi, the parents of Boiki Tlhapi, who went missing in custody of the South African Police in the1980s. Picture: Tebogo Letsie

The family of struggle activist Ramatha Tlhapi say they have been let down by the National Prosecuting Authority's missing persons task team, which has not recovered his remains believed to be at the bottom of a disused mine shaft for the past 30 years.

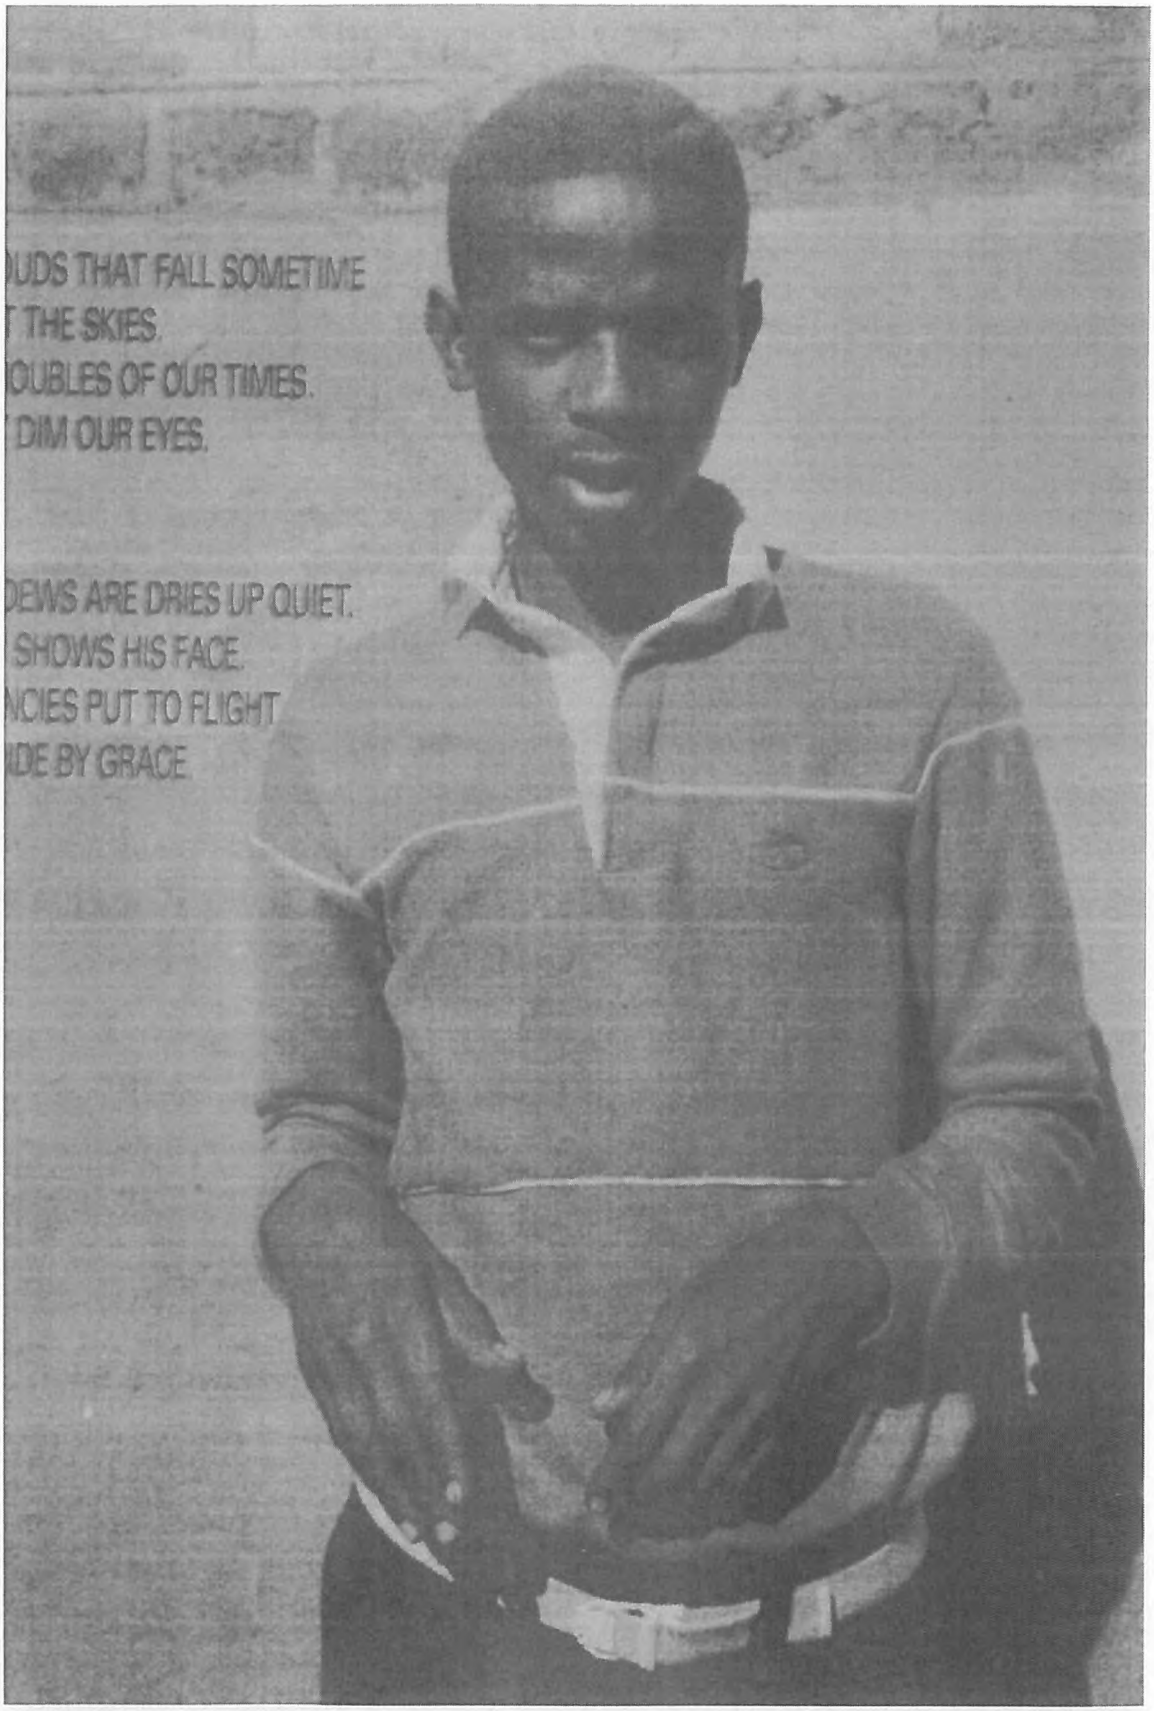
"How can I sleep at night knowing my son's body, which was last seen battered and bloodied in some office at a police station, is possibly lying at the bottom of a disused mine shaft for the past 30 years?" said Barileng Tlhapi, the father of Ramatha.

Affectionately known as Boikie, Tlhapi's son was a struggle activist who never made it back home after he was arrested with several others while on their way from Potchefstroom to a night vigil of a fellow activist in Klerksdorp, North West, on March 20 1986.

On Monday March 20, it will be exactly 30 years since Tlhapi saw his son alive. The family's last hope of finding his remains relies on claims made by a former apartheid policeman, George Mbathu, that he saw a badly injured Boikie at Stilfontein police station where he worked at the time. He also claimed that Boikie's body was later loaded into a police van and dumped in the infamous James Shaft – an abandoned mine shaft nearby.

The Tlhapi family have been hoping that someone in the NPA would at least give Mbathu's statement some attention and the benefit of the doubt by going down the shaft to Boikie's body and that of other activists that disappeared in the small town.

Not convinced



The authorities, however, do not seem convinced. They have not rushed to explore the shaft in search of the bodies despite the information coming from Mbathu.

The missing persons task team told City Press they were aware of Boikie's disappearance and claims around what happened to his body. The task team's head, Madeleine Fullard, said Mbathu's statement was only "hearsay" and that "something concrete" was needed to trigger such enormous work at the shaft, believed to be more than 2 000 metres deep.

"We need conclusive facts and not just hearsay but we have been working on the case and our investigation continues. I am not saying we will never go search the shaft," Fullard said.

Her statement has given the family some hope even though they have ran out of patience with authorities.

Desperate for closure

Boikie Tlhapi, who went missing in custody of the South African Police in the 1980s. Picture: Tebogo Letsie

Back in Ikageng township in Potchefstroom, the Tlhapi family is desperate for closure. The mood was sombre inside the family lounge where Boikie's framed picture is still hanging on the wall.

"We're desperate for closure. Who in our shoes would not believe Mbathu?" Tlhapi senior said.

If he could, he said, he would go down the shaft himself and retrieve his son's remains. But this is a dangerous mission that requires experts with specialised equipment, he lamented.

Boikie's 75-year-old mother Thalitha remained silent during the interview. Her face shiny, with sunken eyes, she often nodded in agreement with her husband as she shared the heart-rending tale of her family's three decades of torment and endless questions about what could have happened to their child.

Thalitha was rushed to hospital 20 years ago after she fainted at the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC) hearings while her husband was giving testimony on the disappearance of their son. No police officer applied for amnesty or confessed to killing or disposing of Boikie's body.

Tlhapi told the TRC: "The people involved are Viljoen and April [two police officers] and this other one who witnessed the electrocution of my son. I would appreciate it if they come to tell exactly what they did to him. If my child is alive, please bring him back. If he is dead, it is still okay; bring him back and I will bury him."

Key man dead

City Press has since learnt that April Tshwaedi – who has been named by Tlhapi and Mbathu as one of those who last saw Boikie – died earlier this year possibly taking the secret to the grave with him.

The Hawks spokesperson Brigadier Hangwani Mulaudzi told City Press they found out that the "central person who knew about the allegations was Tshwaedi, who unfortunately allegedly committed suicide".

Fullard said her task team has tried to make contact with Tshwaedi but said he had been "evasive". It was not clear where the other policeman last seen with Boikie, "Viljoen", was.

"Around 2007 or 2008 our team unsuccessfully tried to interview an implicated former police officer Tshwaedi. We then interviewed Mbathu in 2013 and also made some inquiries on the shaft looking for details like owners, its depth and so on," Fullard said.

"The challenge is we don't have anything from any of the alleged perpetrators. Going down the shaft would be a huge and dangerous operation that we would like to do [if we had] conclusive facts. We appeal to anyone with information to come forward even if it means doing so anonymously to ourselves," she said.

Dad's visits

Nothing will make Tlhapi, now 77, happier than dying knowing he gave his missing son a decent burial.

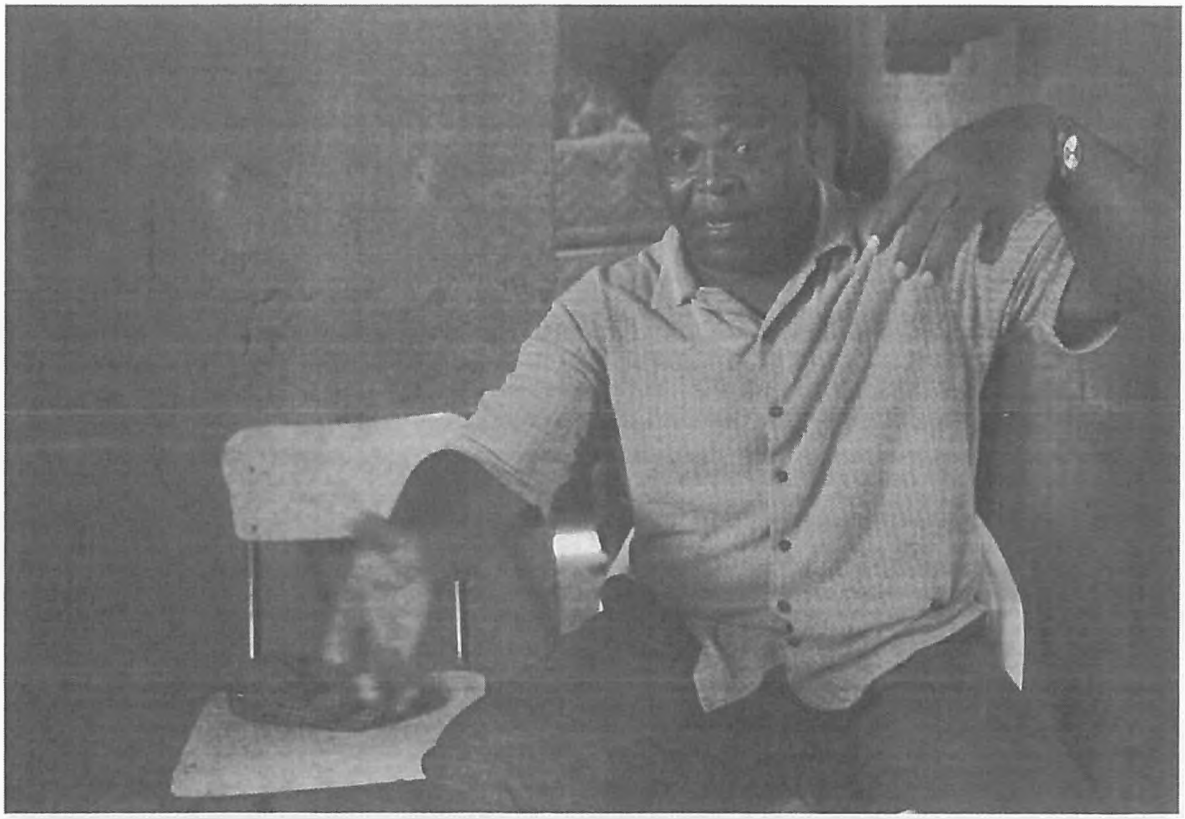
"We're about to die having not seen our son's bones. We are hugely disappointed. But we still hope that someone in government somewhere would move to our side and help us find closure.

"Individuals within the police service have failed us by not telling the truth and not applying for amnesty. Some of them have taken it to the grave and thus denied us justice and closure," he said.

Tlhapi said he had twice been to James Shaft where divers went on a "search for about four minutes and came back empty handed".

"When we went back few months later, I think in the early 90s, surprisingly the shaft was covered with concrete. A remote-controlled camera was lowered into the shaft and we watched on a monitor from the surface. I saw some black things and lots of water," Tlhapi said.

"Later a white man came to me and said: 'Are you satisfied now. There are no bodies down there.' He threw his hands in the air and walked away when I said to him, I saw black things and we're told bodies were covered in black plastic bags before they were thrown in there."



Tlhapi said he was not satisfied with these efforts. "Technology has now advanced and I ask myself why police come to take statements from us almost every year but nothing is happening. Mbathu has provided information ... why can't they act on it and retrieve my son's body?" he asked.

Fullard noted work done by the Lawyers for Human Rights on Boikie's case in the late 80s and 90s.

"It went as far as inquest, which I think was inconclusive. We also did not get any report or footage from the time when a camera was lowered into the shaft," she said.

Charge me if I lied

Mbathu remains unyielding in his belief that the bodies are down the shaft. He has put his head on the block saying: "Please charge me if you go there and return empty-handed. I am saying Boikie Thapi's body was thrown down James Shaft and many other bodies have ended up in there."

George Mbathu a former police officer in the 1970's untill early 1990s, says he knows where polictical activists' bodies were discarded during the apartheid struggle in Klerksdorp and Potchefstroom. Picture: Tebogo Letsie

He told City Press he had an office not far from the one Boikie was kept.

"I went to that office on March 21 1986 and when I could not open the door I walked around and through the window, I saw Boikie lying there covered in blood which was also coming out his mouth and nose ... he had been badly beaten."

"There were two officers, April Tshwaedi and Viljoen, in the office and the next day records showed that Boikie was released and I ask myself how they released him when he did not look like he was alive," he said.

He said he also saw officers loading a black plastic bag in the bakkie and I knew very well that was Boikie's body. One officer later came to me and said: "We're done with those people. You will sleep in peace; that boy has been thrown in the shaft".

Mbathu said the "sleeping in peace" referred to him not having to worry about his house in the township being stoned or torched after it had happened several times before.

Meanwhile, Fullard said her team was also aware of claims made by Mbathu that the body of another struggle activist, Nokuthula Simelane, ended down the same shaft. She said a probe into Simelane's disappearance was also continuing.

Simelane, an uMkhonto weSizwe member, was abducted in 1983 at the age of 23 and the TRC heard of how she was beaten and tortured by the security police. There were contradicting statements of her body buried somewhere around Rustenburg while others claimed the body was last seen in Potchefstroom.

Mbathu claimed to have seen her body at Stilfontein police station where he worked – which is about 35km away from Potchefstroom. Simelane's body was never found and her sister, who is now the mayor of Polokwane in Limpopo, Thembi Nkadimeng, said the "search continues".

Meanwhile, a friend of Boikie, George Magwejane, corroborated Mbathu's version, suggesting they saw Tlhapi's son lying injured on the floor at the police station.

George Magwejane a friend of Boikie Tlhapi, who went missing in custody of the South African Police in 1980s. Picture: Tebogo Letsie

"We were arrested together and the following day I was being led to another office for my turn to be tortured when I saw him lying motionless on the floor. I can't say if he was alive or not but I noticed blood coming out of his mouth, ears and nose," Magwejane said.

"I was severely beaten and tortured but my injuries were nothing compared to what Boikie looked like." He said.

The missing persons task team has unearthed the remains of apartheid victims from all over the country and beyond borders. It remained unclear whether the "notorious" shaft is ever going to be searched for any possible human remains.

The Hawks said they were dealing with separate TRC matters. They referred City Press to North West provincial detective offices.

The provincial police spokesperson, Brigadier Sabata Mokgwabone, did not respond to City Press enquiries.

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

CASE NO: _____

In the matter between:

LUKHANYO BRUCE MATTHEWS CALATA	1st Applicant
ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA	2nd Applicant
BONAKELE JACOBS	3rd Applicant
FATIEMA HARON-MASOET	4th Applicant
TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE	5th Applicant
KARL ANDREW WEBER	6th Applicant
KIM TURNER	7th Applicant
LYNDENE PAGE	8th Applicant
MBUSO KHOZA	9th Applicant
NEVILLE BELING	10th Applicant
NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI	11th Applicant
SARAH BIBI LALL	12th Applicant
SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE	13th Applicant
SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO	14th Applicant
STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE	15th Applicant

CERTIFIED A TRUE COPY
OF THE ORIGINAL

TAYLA ILSLEY
BA Law (UP) - LLB (UP)
Commissioner of Oaths
Ex Officio / Practising Attorney R.S.A
THE LEONARDO
75 Maude Street, Office Level 12,
Sandown, SANDTON, 2196
(011) 784-3310
Mobile: +27 (0) 72 839 9229
Email: tayla@lanlevitt.co.za

18/01/2025

NGI

THULI KUBHEKA	16th Applicant
HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO	17th Applicant
TSHIDISO MOTASI	18th Applicant
NOMALI RITA GALELA	19th Applicant
PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE	20th Applicant
MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI	21st Applicant
MOGAPI SOLOMON TLHAPI	22nd Applicant
FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS	23rd Applicant

and

GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	1st Respondent
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	2nd Respondent
MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT	3rd Respondent
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	4th Respondent
MINISTER OF POLICE	5th Respondent
NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE	6th Respondent

---

SUPPORTING AFFIDAVIT – DR ZAHEED KIMMIE

M

NGI

I, the undersigned,

DR ZAHEED KIMMIE

do hereby make oath and state as follows:

1. I am an adult male and the Executive Director of the Foundation for Human Rights ("FHR" or "the Foundation"), registered as a non-profit company, situated at the 7th Floor, Metal Box Building, 25 Owl Street, Braamfontein, Johannesburg.

2. I have a PhD in Mathematics from the University of Cape Town and a Master's in Public Health from Harvard University. Prior to joining the FHR I was a Senior Statistician and Group Manager for Planning with the Council for Scientific and Industrial Research.

3. I am duly authorised to depose to this affidavit on behalf of the FHR.

4. Save where appears from the context, the facts contained in this affidavit are within my own personal knowledge and are to the best of my knowledge and belief both true and correct.

5. I have read the notice of motion, the founding affidavit of Lukhanyo Calata and the supporting affidavit of Yasmin Sooka. I confirm the contents thereof insofar as they relate to the FHR.

6. In amplification thereof, and in what follows, I set out:

6.1 a brief history of the FHR's involvement in seeking justice for victims and families of victims of apartheid-era gross human rights violations;

6.2 the need for this application.

NGI

About the Foundation for Human Rights

7. The FHR is a non-profit human rights organisation based in Johannesburg working to protect and promote human rights and the values and commitments enshrined in South Africa's Constitution. One of the FHR's flagship programmes has been the "Unfinished Business of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission Programme", which works towards criminal accountability for apartheid-era crimes, in particular for gross human rights violations where amnesty was refused by the Truth and Reconciliation Commission ("TRC") or not applied for.

8. The FHR was established in 1996 by the European Union and the Government of South Africa to address the historical legacy of apartheid, to promote and advance transformation in the country, and to build a human rights culture based upon the principles of the new Constitution.

9. Over the past two decades, the Foundation has consistently pursued the unfinished business of the TRC using a variety of intervention strategies. FHR has played a leading role in promoting the rights of victims of apartheid-era crimes by supporting the recommendations of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, particularly those related to accountability for gross violations of human rights, reparations for victims, and public access to the records of the TRC currently with the state archives.

10. After the winding up of the TRC, the FHR helped to establish a new government unit to trace the remains of activists who were disappeared or murdered by apartheid security forces – the Missing Persons Task Team located within the National Prosecuting Authority ("NPA"), through the provision of seed funding. The grant enabled the unit to recruit its first staff members and begin work. The work of the unit has led to the discovery, recovery, and reburial of the remains of former activities killed by the apartheid regime.

11. The Foundation has a long history of advocating for criminal accountability for the TRC cases and supporting the efforts of victims seeking justice. The TRC cases involve gross human rights violations such as killings, torture, kidnappings and enforced disappearances. Many of these violations are likely to amount to serious international crimes such as crimes against of humanity under customary international law.

12. In 2002, the FHR assisted the Khulumani Support Group to bring a court application against 20 large corporations in the USA under the Alien Tort Claims Act seeking compensation for the companies' role in aiding and abetting the oppressive and criminal system of apartheid.

13. The FHR supported the court applications opposing the 2005 amendments to the NPA's Prosecution Policy and President Mbeki's 2007 Special Dispensation on Political Pardons, which were aimed at introducing "backdoor amnesties" for apartheid-era gross human rights violations, and which were successfully stopped in the courts.

14. The Foundation commissioned an analysis of all the amnesty cases that came before the TRC in order to identify which cases ought to be investigated further with a view towards future prosecutions. The TRC recommended investigations into several hundred cases arising out of the amnesty process.

15. The FHR engaged the services of a human rights investigator, the late Frank Dutton, the former police detective who investigated notable cases such as the Trust Feeds and KwaMakutha massacres and who conducted investigations for the Goldstone Commission. Dutton reviewed all of the amnesty cases, which included 76 deaths in detention, and identified priority cases for further investigation and prosecution by the NPA.

ZK NGI

16. One of the Foundation's most important objectives is to ensure that cases against alleged perpetrators who were denied amnesty or who did not apply for amnesty, are prosecuted to the fullest extent under the law. To this end, the FHR has established a dedicated programme, known as the Unfinished Business of the TRC ("UBTRC"), which is aimed at ensuring criminal accountability for apartheid-era crimes through:

16.1 supporting victims' families to pursue their matters through the courts,

16.2 advocacy efforts on behalf of these families as well as in the public interest.

17. The FHR works in close collaboration with the South African Coalition for Transitional Justice, an umbrella body of organisations and individuals working to advance the rights of victims of apartheid era gross human rights violations and to hold the South African government accountable to its obligations. The Coalition focusses on issues that impact the rights of victims including pardons, prosecutions, reparations, and torture and disappearances.

18. Between 2015 and September 2024, the FHR has spent a total of R8 482 232 on direct support to the TRC cases including on investigations, legal fees and expert fees. See Table 1 attached to the memorandum titled "Estimated Costs" annexed hereto marked "ZK". If requested by this Honourable Court we can supply the invoice analysis, methodology employed and underlying documentation.

NGI

19. This amount includes disbursements such as transport, accommodation, lunches, refreshments, printing and other incidental costs incurred by victims' families, investigator and counsel. However, this amount excludes the cost of FHR staff, as well as associated administrative, communication, logistical support costs, and other disbursements incurred on behalf of the FHR.

20. This amount also does not include the time contributed by the lead counsel on the TRC cases, who between 2005 and 2023 worked on all cases pro bono, which included more than 100 days in court, not counting time spent in preparation. Some of the technical experts who provided expert reports and testified in the reopened inquests also worked without charge or on the basis of discounted fee.

Supporting victims' families to pursue their matters through the courts

21. For the past twenty years, the FHR has advocated for the completion of the unfinished business of the TRC. The FHR supports many of the families who went through the TRC process who are still seeking truth, justice and closure.

22. Victims of human rights violations and their families are at the heart of the UBTRC. They are the key drivers behind the pursuit of justice and the quest for truth behind long standing apartheid era crimes.

23. A primary focus of the FHR has been to assist families in their engagements with the Directorate of Priority Crime Investigations ("DPCI") and the NPA to take their cases forward.

24. In 2005, the FHR was first approached by Thembi Simelane to assist with the case into the disappearance and murder of her sister, Nokuthula Simelane, as described in the Founding Affidavit, and the supporting affidavit of Ernestina Simelane.

25. In 2017, the historic reopened inquest into the death in detention of Ahmed Timol took place. It culminated in Judge Mothle's judgment, which found that Ahmed Timol was tortured and murdered by the Security Branch of the South African Police. The FHR supported the efforts of the Timol family in their endeavours to seek truth and closure. Encouraged by the success of the Timol inquest, other families approached FHR for assistance.

26. Subsequently, other inquests into the deaths in detention of Dr Neil Aggett, Ernest Dipale, Dr Hoosen Haffejee and Imam Haron were reopened. In the Aggett judgment delivered in March 2022, the court overturned the suicide findings of the 1982 Inquest Court. It rejected the finding of "suicide", and ruled that Dr Aggett was tortured and murdered by the Security Branch of the South African Police. In 2023, courts delivered judgments in the reopened inquests into the deaths in detention of Dr Hoosen Haffejee and Imam Haron, also overturning the initial findings of suicide and implicating Security Branch members in their deaths.

27. In January 2024, the Minister of Justice announced the reopening of a third inquest into the murders of the Cradock Four activists. However, the commencement of the inquest was further postponed to June 2, 2025. The collapse of the inquest occurred notwithstanding strenuous efforts made on behalf of the families to ensure a timely start. Legal representatives of the former SAP and SADF witnesses complained that they were notified too late to prepare for the inquest and have not been able to secure state funding for their legal costs.

NGI

28. In 2023, FHR has also been informed that inquests into the 1993 Highgate Massacre and murder of Dr Rick Turner would be reopened. The Highgate Massacre inquest has been set down for hearing on 27 January – 7 February at the High Court in East London. Unfortunately, despite the efforts to push the matter forward, the Turner inquest is yet to be set down for hearing at the Durban High Court.

29. In October 2022, the NPA opened inquests into four other matters, namely the murders and enforced disappearances of the ANC activists and MK operatives in Kwa-Zulu Natal: Ntombikayise "Ntombi" Kubheka, Musawakhe "Sbho" Phewa, Zamukwenzani Bright Mlobeli/Sokhulu, and Jameson Ngoloyi Mngomezulu. The Kubheka and Phewa families have since instructed the FHR to assist with their matters. The inquests into these matters are now held in abeyance, pending criminal prosecutions of the alleged perpetrators, which appear to have stalled.

30. The FHR and its legal teams are also supporting families in the few cases that are subject to prosecution, including the murders of anti-apartheid activists Nokuthula Simelane and the COSAS Four. As at the time of writing these cases, regrettably, remain stalled. However, on a positive note, Johan Marais, one of the four former police officers accused in the 1987 murder of anti-apartheid activist Caiphus Nyoka, pleaded guilty to the murder charge in the Pretoria High Court on 12 November 2024.

31. In November 2024, the NPA confirmed in writing that the Minister of Justice has formally reopened an inquest into disappearance of Ramatua Nicholas Tlhapi and requested the Judge President of the Hight Court to appoint a judge to preside over the inquest.

NGI

32. All the cases described above have progressed largely due to consistent pressure from the families, legal representatives and the FHR. In virtually all the TRC cases before the courts today, the victims' families, supported by FHR and their legal teams, had to litigate or threaten litigation to force the NPA and the DPCI to act.

33. The FHR currently provides active assistance to victims' and victims' families in 24 TRC cases.

FHR's advocacy efforts

34. In addition to pursuing justice on behalf of victims' families, the FHR has attempted to address the systemic challenges within the NPA by focusing on concentrated strategic interventions. The FHR has also established a website on the Unfinished Business of the TRC, which monitors all key developments.

35. A key intervention has centred on advocacy to set up dedicated capacity to deal with the TRC cases within the NPA and the DPCI. In order to address the lacklustre delivery in respect of the TRC cases the FHR since 2019 has been pressing the state to introduce a specialist capacity to investigate and prosecute crimes from the apartheid era. This included providing an opinion on how this could be done within existing legal frameworks, such as establishing an investigating directorate. These efforts led to the establishment of the TRC Components within the NPA and DPCI in 2021, with their operationalisation following in 2022. However, the powers, functions, and composition of these bodies fall significantly short of the recommendations made by the FHR.

36. In addition, the FHR has made proposals around the need to set up a liaison structure between the NPA and interested parties (i.e., FHR, victims' groups etc.) to create a permanent communication channel for regular progress reporting and information sharing about the TRC cases. To date, these efforts have not been successful with no regular liaison, and only occasional meetings with the NPA's TRC Component, typically only once a year.

NGI

37. Since 2005, the FHR and legal teams representing the families of anti-apartheid activists, have had numerous interactions with the NPA aimed at convincing them to include serious international crimes under customary international law as per section 232 of the Constitution in the indictments of accused. With the exception of the COSAS Four case these attempts have been unsuccessful.

38. The FHR first raised the issue of international criminal charges with the NPA in 2005 and revisited the matter following the indictment issued in the Nokuthula Simelane case in 2016. In total the FHR has submitted 6 legal opinions and memoranda on this issue.

39. Since 2022 the FHR has been advocating for the creation of dedicated courts (like the Sexual Offences Court and the Special Commercial Crime Courts) to deal expeditiously with the TRC cases.

40. The Foundation has also supported the civil society call to the President to set up an independent and public commission of inquiry with the necessary powers under the Commissions Act 8 of 1947 to investigate the suppression of the TRC cases and the political interference in the work of the NPA and the police.

41. The FHR continues to advocate for:

41.1 Closure, truth and healing for victims and victims' families;

NGI

41.2 Access to state information and archives related to apartheid era human rights violations;

41.3 Successful prosecutions through new independent and specialist investigations;

41.4 Effective and capable state law enforcement agencies to pursue these crimes;

41.5 Meaningful reparations as recommended by the TRC under the Promotion of National Unity and Reconciliation Act, No. 34 of 1995, 41.6 Greater public awareness about the TRC and post-TRC processes and developments.

The need for this application and the court's intervention

42. Prosecution of perpetrators is a necessary legal step in line with the Constitution and envisaged in the Promotion of National Unity and Reconciliation Act 34 of 1995 ("the TRC Act") and recommended in the Final Report of the TRC published in 2003.

43. The persistent, long-term failure of the South African government to complete the unfinished business of the TRC has led to a whole series of consequences at different levels.

44. At the level of victims and their families, there has been a lack of justice, truth and accountability for human rights violations of the past. At the level of the perpetrators of these crimes, there has been impunity for the commission of gross violations of human rights. At a wider societal level, this has contributed to a culture of impunity for committing serious crimes and a diminution in respect for the rule of law in post-apartheid South Africa. The finalisation of these cases remains extremely urgent.

JM
NGI

45. Given the wholescale suppression of the TRC cases over some two decades, and the dire failure of the state to purse its constitutional obligations, the FHR endorses the orders sought compelling the President to establish an independent commission of inquiry, as well as the payment of constitutional damages to the families to vindicate their deeply violated rights.

46. The FHR has provided guidance to the legal team in determining the quantum sought under the constitutional damages claim. This process has been informed by decades of experience working on TRC cases. A detailed narrative substantiating the amounts requested under the "Advance Truth, Justice, and Closure" component of constitutional damages is attached to this affidavit marked as annex "ZK".

47. I further confirm that the amounts listed under the head of constitutional damages titled "Memorialisation, commemoration and public education" in the founding affidavit are consistent with the amounts that FHR has granted for similar or equivalent projects over the years.

48. Accordingly, the Foundation is in strong support of the relief sought in the Notice of Motion and prays for the granting of these remedies to the families. We wish to place on record that should a fund to support the legal and other costs of families of victims be established as a result of this action, the Foundation will not access any monies from that fund for its own staffing or administrative costs.

ZM

NGI

DR ZAHEED KIMMIE

Signed and sworn to before me at SANDTON on this the 17 day of JANUARY 2025, the deponent having acknowledged in my presence that he knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, the provisions of Government Gazette R1478 of 11 July 1980 as amended by Government Gazette R774 of 20 April 1982, concerning the taking of the oath, having been complied with.

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

Full Names: Nicola Grace Irving

Business Address: 15 Alice Lane, Sandton

Designation: Commissioner of Oaths Ex Officio

Capacity: Practising Attorney, Republic of South Africa

Annex "ZK"

Estimated costs of investigations, inquests and prosecutions

Purpose of the document

The document has been prepared by the Foundation for Human Rights and provides estimations of costs needed to cover three sets of cases:

- A typical inquest
- A typical prosecution
- A case that has advanced neither to an inquest nor to prosecution (an investigative case).

This document has been prepared to substantiate the amounts requested under the "Advance Truth, Justice, and Closure" component of constitutional damages.

General comments about the estimates

1. The figures below draw on the actual expenditure for the TRC cases incurred by the Foundation for Human Rights and Webber Wentzel, as well as their experience supporting the TRC cases. However, they represent estimated costs for 'a typical inquest', 'a typical prosecution' and 'a typical investigative' case.

2. The administrative costs have been calculated based on what would be a reasonable fee for managing the case. They do not reflect the level of support provided by FHR's staff for the TRC cases, which at times included an enhanced level of assistance that will not always be required in the administration of such cases.

3. The estimated costs below do not include media & communication costs, which the FHR would typically incur as part of its mobilisation, advocacy and raising awareness work but which are not necessary to successfully conduct an inquest.

4. For the purposes of these estimates and this document, "investigation" encompasses all investigation-related activities, including but not limited to investigator fees, tracings, background checks and research or analysis of evidence.

A typical inquest

Inquest's length

5. The inquest days range from 8 days in Haron, to 16 days in Timol, 18 days in Haffejee and 44 days in Aggett [See Table 1 annexed]. We have estimated that a typical inquest would therefore run for 15 days (3 weeks) for the purpose of the calculations below.

NGI

Investigation

6. We have considered the costs incurred by the FHR in the previous inquests (particularly in Timol, Haffejee and Aggett) and have established that investigations in a typical inquest would cost approximately R400,000.

Legal costs

7. Our experience shows that a typical inquest would require one lead counsel, two junior counsel and three attorneys.

8. In addition to 15 days in court, we have calculated two additional days per court day to estimate the time that would be typically required by attorneys and counsel to prepare for an inquest. We have used 45 days as a baseline for a typical inquest.

9. Counsel and attorneys' fees:

    10.1. We have used a daily tariff (Scale A) of R11,500 as prescribed by the High Court Rules. We have used the lowest rate, which seems the most reasonable in our case.

    10.2. We have used an FHR-reduced rate of R6,000/day to calculate the costs of junior counsel for a typical inquest [See Table 2 annexed]. The R6,000/day is the FHR's highest daily rate for a junior counsel with 2-10 years of experience in the bar.

    10.3. We have used an FHR-reduced rate of R12,000/day to calculate the costs of senior or experienced counsel for a typical inquest [See Table 2 annexed].

Expert fees

11. Our experience shows that a typical inquest would require experts' reports (e.g., forensic pathology, ballistic, architectural and/ or aeronautical engineering). Based on the FHR's actual expenditure and experience, we have estimated a cost of R60,000 per expert report.

Disbursements

12. These include all inquest-related disbursements e.g., transport and accommodation for the legal team, accommodation and transport for witnesses and families, lunches, refreshments, printing, etc.

13. The cost of disbursements depends on various factors, such as whether the legal team and the families are based in the location where the inquest takes place. As a result, the level of disbursements will vary from one inquest to another, making it difficult to estimate accurately.

14. Drawing on the expenditure incurred by the FHR and Webber Wentzel on disbursements, we have estimated approximately R400,000 for these costs.

NGI

Administrative costs

15. These costs include all administrative, financial, logistical and coordination support of conducting a successful inquest.

16. We have adopted an approach of estimating these costs based on reasonableness, proposing that 15% of the total costs be allocated to administrative expenses.

A typical prosecution

General observations:

17. The role of victims and their lawyers in the criminal process is more limited than a typical inquest. However, given the numerous legal and practical challenges involved in prosecuting historical crimes, as well as the defence's potential use of delay tactics, the legal support required by victims and their families may demand significant resources.

18. It is very difficult to outline a typical prosecutorial case, as various factors—such as the length of proceedings and the presence or absence of interlocutory matters—can greatly affect the nature of the case.

19. None of the TRC-related trials in which the FHR and Webber Wentzel have been involved have reached a conclusion yet.

Investigations

20. A private investigator conducted initial investigations in both the Simelane and Nyoka cases, supported by FHR and Webber Wentzel, which are now at the trial stage. Similarly, the private investigator carried out an initial investigation in the COSAS 4 case, another FHR-supported matter. Based on the expenditure incurred in the Simelane case, we have estimated R200,000 for investigations.

Legal costs

21. Our experience indicates that a typical prosecutorial case requires two attorneys and a lead counsel. Additionally, in some instances, the case may require the support of a junior counsel, particularly when interlocutory proceedings are initiated.

22. The length of trials will vary. Since 2015 and 2019, respectively, the attorneys from Webber Wentzel spent approximately 153 days working on the Simelane matter and approximately 66 days on the Nyoka matter.[1] Hence, we estimate that attorneys will spend approximately 70 days on a trial case.

23. Lead and junior counsel typically become involved if interlocutory or associated civil proceedings are initiated, such as presumption of death proceedings,

---

[1] These have been back calculated using the Webber Wentzel numbers. The calculation is for a 8-hour day.

NGI

amicus briefs, legal costs litigation, or reviews of amnesty decisions. Assuming one interlocutory proceeding per case, we have estimated the counsel's time spent on the trial as follows:

23.1. Lead counsel: 10 days
23.2. Junior counsel: 15 days
23.3. Counsel and attorneys' fees: We have used the same fees as for the inquests.

Disbursements

24. Webber Wentzel has incurred R221,839 in disbursements in the Simelane matter, and R24 747 in the Nyoka matter. The FHR expenditure towards the disbursements in the cases at the trial level have not been significant. Hence, we have estimated R200,000 towards disbursements in relation to cases at the trial level.

Administrative costs

25. These costs include all administrative, financial, logistical and coordination support of conducting a successful inquest.

26. We have adopted an approach of estimating these costs based on reasonableness, proposing that 15% of the total costs be allocated to administrative expenses.

A private prosecution

27. For the purposes of the funding affidavit, we assume that private prosecutions require twice the funding of typical prosecutions to account for the need to put up security for costs.

A typical case that has advanced neither to an inquest nor to prosecution

General observations

28. In some instances, a case has prospects of success but there is no decision regarding a potential inquest or prosecution, or at some point, the NPA declines to prosecute. Such cases will require largely 'investigative' and expert support, and some minimal level of support from the counsel.

Investigations

29. We estimate that an investigative case will require the same level of funding as a trial case, and therefore, project the cost to be R200,000.

Legal costs

30. Our experience indicates that a typical case requires two attorneys and, in some circumstances, (see below), a counsel or an expert.

NGI

31. We estimate that attorneys will spend approximately 35 days on an investigative case, which is half the time for a typical trial case.

32. In some instances, the involvement of an expert or counsel might be required at the investigative stage to provide an analysis of evidence or a legal or expert opinion. Based on our experience, we have estimated two expert/legal reports/opinions per case at R60,000 each. This amount corresponds to 10 days of work of a senior counsel at the FHR's rate of R12,000/day.

Disbursements

33. We estimate non-significant expenditure towards the disbursements in such cases. Hence, we have estimated R100,000 towards disbursements.

Administrative costs

34. These costs include all administrative, financial, logistical and coordination support of conducting a successful inquest.

35. We have adopted an approach of estimating these costs based on reasonableness, proposing that 15% of the total costs be allocated to administrative expenses.

NGI

Table 1: Summary of FHR UBTRC Program expenses: 1 Aug 2015 to 12 Sept 2024

1. Simelane matter	509 233
Investigations	208 517
Legal fees	299 437
General disbursements	1 279
2. Timol inquest	551 568
Investigations	357 885
Legal fees	85 500
General disbursements	108 183
3. Rodrigues	123 103
Legal fees	123 103
General disbursements	0
4. Aggett inquest	1 528 378
Investigations	756 369
Legal fees	635 513
Expert fees	76 902
General disbursements	59 594
5. Haffejee inquest	499 070
Investigations	171 255
Legal fees	230 660
Expert fees	0
General disbursements	97 155
6. Haron inquest	397729
Investigations (carried out by Webber Wentzel)	0
Legal fees	160473
Expert fees	83258
General disbursements	153998
7. Cradock 4	834 935
Investigations	508 861
General disbursements	30 067
Legal fees	206 425
Support to Cradock 4 families to engage with the NPA	89 582
8. TRC Programme - Other cases than above	4 038 216
Legal fees	1 266 884
Investigations	2 197 607
Watching briefs	172 325
Expert fees (other than above)	141 750
General disbursements in support of the TRC cases	259 650
TOTAL	8 482 232

NG1

Table 2: Estimated cost of typical inquest and prosecution

A typical Inquest
	Unit	No. of units	Value of the unit	Total
Investigation	Lump sum	1	400 000	400 000
Legal costs
3 Attorneys' fees	Day	135	11 500	1552500
Junior counsel fees	Day	45	6 000	270000
Senior counsel fees	Day	45	12 000	540000
Expert fees	Report	3	60 000	180000
Disbursements	Lump sum	1	400 000	400000
Administrative costs (15% of all cost)	Percentage	1	501375	501375
			Total	3 843 875

A typical prosecution
	Unit	No. of units	Value of the unit	Total
Investigation	Lump sum	1	200 000	200000
Legal costs
2 Attorneys' fees	Day	70	11 500	805000
Junior counsel fees	Day	15	6 000	90000
Senior counsel fees	Day	10	12 000	120000
Disbursements	Lump sum	1	100 000	100000
Administrative costs (15% of all cost)	Percentage	1	197250	197250
			Total	1512250

A typical case that has advanced neither to an inquest nor to prosecution
	Unit	No. of units	Value of the unit	Total
Investigation	Lump sum	1	200 000	200000
Legal costs
2 Attorneys' fees	Day	35	11 500	402500
A legal/expert opinion	Opinion	2	60 000	120000
Disbursements	Lump sum	1	100 000	100000
Administrative costs (15% of all cost)	Percentage	1	123375	123375
			Total	945875

NGI

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SOUTH AFRICA

GAUTENG DIVISION, PRETORIA

CASE NO: _____

In the matter between:

LUKHANYO BRUCE MATTHEWS CALATA	1st Applicant
ALEGRIA KUTSAKA NYOKA	2nd Applicant
BONAKELE JACOBS	3rd Applicant
FATIEMA HARON-MASOET	4th Applicant
TRYPHINA NOMANDLOVU MOKGATLE	5th Applicant
KARL ANDREW WEBER	6th Applicant
KIM TURNER	7th Applicant
LYNDENE PAGE	8th Applicant
MBUSO KHOZA	9th Applicant
NEVILLE BELING	10th Applicant
NOMBUYISELO MHLAULI	11th Applicant
SARAH BIBI LALL	12th Applicant
SIZAKELE ERNESTINA SIMELANE	13th Applicant
SINDISWA ELIZABETH MKONTO	14th Applicant
STEPHANS MBUTI MABELANE	15th Applicant

THULI KUBHEKA	16th Applicant
HLEKANI EDITH RIKHOTSO	17th Applicant
TSHIDISO MOTASI	18th Applicant
NOMALI RITA GALELA	19th Applicant
PHUMEZA MANDISA HASHE	20th Applicant
MKHONTOWESIZWE GODOLOZI	21st Applicant
MOGAPI SOLOMON TLHAPI	22nd Applicant
FOUNDATION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS	23rd Applicant

CERTIFIED A TRUE COPY
OF THE ORIGINAL

TAYLA ILSLEY
BA Law (UP) - LLB (UP)
Commissioner of Oaths
Ex Officio / Practising Attorney R.S.A.
THE LEONARDO
75 Maude Street, Office Level 12.
Sandown, SANDTON, 2196
(011) 784-3310
Mobile: +27 (0) 72 839 9229
Email: tayla@lanlevitt.co.za

18/01/2025

and

GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	1st Respondent
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA	2nd Respondent
MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT	3rd Respondent
NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	4th Respondent
MINISTER OF POLICE	5th Respondent
NATIONAL COMMISSIONER OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE SERVICE	6th Respondent

---

SUPPORTING AFFIDAVIT

CNP

I, the undersigned,

ODETTE HELENA GELDENHUYS

do hereby make oath and state as follows:

1. I am an adult female attorney and the head of the Webber Wentzel pro bono team ("the pro bono team"), based in Cape Town.

2. The facts contained in this affidavit are within my personal knowledge and are, to the best of my belief, true and correct.

3. I have read the founding affidavit of Lukhanyo Bruce Matthews Calata, and I confirm the content thereof in so far as it relates to the pro bono legal services that the pro team has and continues to provide to families of victims of apartheid-era human rights violations.

4. The purpose of this affidavit is to explain and contextualise the basis of the sum of damages that the applicants are claiming under the first head of the claim for constitutional damages, namely, advancing truth, justice and closure.

The Webber Wentzel pro bono team

5. Webber Wentzel is a corporate law firm that is committed to serving our community and upholding our duties as members of the legal profession. The pro bono team was established in 2003 as a dedicated team within the firm whose mandate it is to provide free legal services to poor and/or vulnerable members of the public.

6. The focus of the pro bono team is to provide pro bono legal assistance on matters that serve to uphold the values set out in the Constitution, particularly related to the enforcement, advancement and protection of rights contained in the Bill of Rights and to protect and advance the rule of law. Over the more than last two decades, our team has worked on many key public interest matters that have positively impacted on the lives of many thousands of people.

7. As part of our commitment to the Constitution and the rule of law, the pro bono team provides legal services to several families of victims of apartheid-era human rights violations. We assist the families in their quests to secure justice for their loved ones and to find closure in the pain, suffering and injustice that they have endured over many decades.

8. Since about 2015, the pro bono team has assisted the families of some key anti-apartheid and pro-democracy individuals who had died at the hands of the apartheid-era security forces, among others: Ahmed Timol, Dr Neil Aggett, Nokuthula Simelane, Imam Abdullah Haron and Caiphus Nyoka.

9. Below we provide a high-level description of the legal assistance that the pro bono team has provided to each of the families, together with the details of hours worked, the commercial monetary value of the attorneys' fees and necessary disbursements incurred, which include counsel fees (but excludes our lead counsel's time, who also worked pro bono on those matters). The purpose hereof is to give this Honourable Court insight into the untaxed legal costs that the families would have incurred to advance the cases of their loved ones had they not been legally assisted by the pro bono team.

10. The details of the hours worked are based on actual time recordings and the value of the fees is based on our commercial rates. We similarly record the disbursements incurred and charges paid in each matter. The disbursements and counsel fees were primarily paid by the Foundation for Human Rights.

Ahmed Timol

11. The pro bono team provided legal assistance to the Timol family from November 2015 to November 2022. During this time, we acted on the family's behalf in:

11.1 the reopened inquest into the 1971 death in detention of Ahmed Timol;

11.2 the Rodrigues stay of prosecution litigation in the High Court, the Supreme Court of Appeal and the Constitutional Court;

11.3 the watching brief in relation to the prosecution of Joao Rodrigues and the process to obtain a prosecutorial decision against Neville Els and Seth Sons following the reopened inquest.

12. In the reopened inquest, the pro bono team worked a total of 1 153.20 hours. This amounts to R2 685 755.00 in attorneys' fees. The time sheets can be made available to the Court on request.

13. In the Rodrigues stay of prosecution litigation, the pro bono team worked a total of 442.60 hours. This amounts to R1 401 245.00 in attorneys' fees. The time sheets can be made available to the Court.

14. In the Timol watching brief, the pro bono team worked a total of 71.40 hours. This amounts to R268 110.00.00 in attorneys' fees. The time sheets can be made available to the Court.

15. The total disbursements and charges incurred in the three matters referred to in paragraph 11 amounted to R360 489.82.

CNP

Dr Neil Aggett

16. The pro bono team provided legal assistance to the Aggett family from March 2017 to January 2023. During this time, we assisted the Aggett family in securing the decision to reopen the inquest into the 1982 death in detention of Dr Aggett and we acted on their behalf in the reopened inquest proceedings.

17. In this process, the pro bono team worked a total of 3 957.30 hours. This amounts to R8 423 235.00 in attorneys' fees. The total disbursements and charges incurred were R735 816.65. The time sheets can be made available to the Court.

Nokuthula Simelane

18. The pro bono team has provided legal assistance to the Simelane family since June 2015. During this time, we acted on behalf of the Simelane family in:

18.1 the process to compel the National Director of Public Prosecutions and the Minister of Justice to open a formal inquest into the 1983 disappearance of Nokuthula Simelane;

18.2 the litigation to compel the Minister of Police to pay the legal fees of the former Security Branch officers who have been indicted for the murder of Nokuthula Simelane;

18.3 the litigation to declare Nokuthula Simelane deceased;

18.4 the prosecution of Msebenzi Timothy Radebe (deceased), Willem Helm Johannes Coetzee, Frederick Barnard Mong (deceased), and Anton Pretorius as a watching brief (the instruction in the watching brief includes a watching brief in the investigation and possible prosecution of the 1991 murder of Adriano Louis Bambo).

19. In the process to compel the opening of a formal inquest, the pro bono team worked a total of 89.70 hours. This amounts to R281 660.00 in attorneys' fees.

20. In the legal fees litigation, the pro bono team worked a total of 249.50 hours, which amounts to R585 210.00 in attorneys' fees.

21. In the presumption of death litigation, the pro bono team worked a total of 190.30 hours. This amounts to R501 435.00 in attorneys' fees.

22. In the watching brief, the pro bono team worked a total of 1 231.03 hours. This amounts to R2 459 992.00 in attorneys' fees. The time sheets can be made available to the Court.

23. In the four matters referred to in paragraph 18, the total disbursements and charges incurred to date is R223 133.51.

Imam Abdullah Haron

24. The pro bono team has been providing legal assistance to the Haron family since April 2019. During this time, we assisted the Haron family in securing the reopened inquest into the 1969 death in detention of Imam Haron and we acted on their behalf in the reopened inquest proceedings.

25. In this process, the pro bono team has worked a total of 1 738.80 hours. This amounts to R6 283 530.00 in attorneys' fees. The total disbursements incurred was R338 029.36. The time sheets can be made available to the Court.

Caiphus Nyoka

26. The pro bono team has been providing legal assistance to the Nyoka family since October 2019. We hold a watching brief on behalf of the family in the murder prosecution of Johan Marais, Leon Louis van den Berg, Abraham Hercules Engelbrecht and Pieter Egbert Stander.

27. To date the pro bono team has worked a total of 530.70 hours. This amounts to R1 604 075.00 in a attorneys' fees. The total disbursements incurred to date is R24 746.66. The time sheets can be made available to the Court.

Conclusion

28. The total number of hours worked by the pro bono team on these cases amounts to 9 654.53 hours, which amounts to a total of R23 233 247.00 in attorney's fees (had such fees been charged).

29. While Webber Wentzel will continue to act on a pro pono basis to assist similarly situated families, we understand that there are law firms that are willing to also represent such families, but that they cannot do so on a pro bono basis.

ODETTE HELENA GELDENHUYS

Signed and sworn to before me at CAPE TOWN on this the 17TH day of JANUARY 2025, the deponent having acknowledged in my presence that she knows and understands the contents of this affidavit, the provisions of Government Gazette R1478 of 11 July 1980 as amended by Government Gazette R774 of 20 April 1982, concerning the taking of the oath, having been complied with.

COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

Full Names:

Business Address:

Designation:

Capacity:

Curwin Pokpas
Commissioner of Oaths
Practising Attorneys, Cape Town
Diale Mogashoa Attorneys
9th Floor, Convention Tower cnr of Heerengracht &
Walter Sisulu Avenue
Foreshore, Cape Town